[z] (N. Y. 1891) Where the return of the justice before whom a cause was tried states that "M. appeared and answered for the plaintiff, and was by me sworn as to his authority to appear," it shows a compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 2890, which provides that the justice shall not allow a person to appear as an attorney, unless such person's authority as attorney is admitted by the adverse party, or is proved by the affidavit of himself or another.—Syracuse Moulding Co. v. Squires, 61 Hun, 48, 15 N. Y. Supp. 321, 21 Civ. Proc. R. 58, reversing judgment 13 N. Y. Supp. 547, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 241.

[zz] (Pa. 1896) In an attachment in justice's court, the defendant being absent, his wife appeared with an attorney, and asked leave to file a plea in abatement, and to be heard. Held, that it was error for the justice to refuse to enter the plea on the ground that there was no power of attorney from the defendant authorizing any one to file a plea or to be heard in his behalf.—Carlisle v. Rankin (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 319, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 246, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 364.

Arrest of witness for nonattendance at criminal prosecution, see "Witnesses," I.

[a] (U. S. 1823) A justice of the peace in Alexandria county, D. C., has no power to issue a capias ad respondendum, or warrant of arrest, for a small debt, before judgment.—Ex parte Minor, Fed. Cas. No. 9,643 [2 Cranch, C. C. 404].

[b] (Ala. 1841) No objection can be taken to a warrant issued by a justice of the peace in the "firm" name of the plaintiffs.—Snow v. Ray, 2 Ala. 344.

[c] (Conn. 1842) A warrant issued by a justice of the peace on the complaint of an executor or administrator, against a person having in his possession and refusing to deliver up effects belonging to the testator's or intestate's estate, may be directed for service to an indifferent person.—Kelsey v. Parmelee, 15 Conn. 260.

[d] (Ind. 1841) A capias ad respondendum was the proper process in suits in a justice's court, under the statute of 1838, where the defendant was not a resident and householder in the county; and the justice could issue such writ, in case of the defendant's nonresidence, without an affidavit of that fact being filed.—McFarlan v. McJinsey, 6 Blackf. 85.

[e] (Ind. 1876) Where the appointment of a special constable to serve a warrant for the arrest of the defendant is noted on the docket of the justice, either before or after the appointment is made, the appointment itself need not be made in writing.—Britton v. State, 54 Ind. 535.

[f] (Ky. 1825) Justices can issue scire facias on recognizances of special bail taken in cases before them, and give judgment for execution.—Peyton v. Moseley, 19 Ky. (3 T. B. Mon.) 77.

[g] (N. J. 1879) Act March 4, 1873 (Laws 1873, p. 275), establishing district courts in Newark, provides that the civil jurisdiction previously exercised by justices of the peace within the city shall be vested in the district courts; and Act March 12, 1879, increasing the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, provides that no justice of the peace in any city having a district court shall have jurisdiction over any cause cognizable in such district court. Held, that a justice of the peace in the city of Newark is without jurisdiction to issue a civil warrant for the arrest of a defendant.—England v. McDermott, 2 N. J. Law J. 238.

[h] (N. Y. 1812) Under St. 31st Sess. 31, c. 204, § 4, for the recovery of debts to the value of $25, a justice cannot issue a warrant against a freeholder or person having a family, on the oath of the plaintiff; but the proof of the defendant's being about to depart, or of the danger of losing the debt, must be by other and legal evidence.—Brown v. Hinchman, 9 Johns. 75.

[i] (N. Y. 1813) Under Acts 32d Sess. c. 186, § 1, a justice of the peace may grant a warrant, on the oath of the plaintiff himself, in the cases provided for by Acts 31st Sess. c. 204, § 4.—Terry v. Fargo, 10 Johns. 114.

[j] (N. Y. 1815) Where, on the return of a summons before a justice, served by copy, the defendant does not appear, the justice may issue a warrant.—Reed v. Gillet, 12 Johns. 296.

[k] (N. Y. 1828) In cases in justices' courts, where summons is the regular process, a warrant without oath is irregular and void. Without the oath, the justice has no jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.—Gold v. Bissell, 1 Wend. 210, 19 Am. Dec. 480.

[l] (N. Y. 1828) Under the $50 act (Acts 47th Sess. c. 238), requiring that, in all cases where a warrant shall issue, the constable shall be commanded to take the defendant and bring him or her forthwith before the justice, etc., to give a justice jurisdiction under the warrant, defendant must be arrested and brought into court before the justice.—Colvin v. Luther, 9 Cow. 61.

[m] (N. Y. 1829) Under the justice's act of 1824, the oath of the party applying for a warrant is proof, within the meaning of the statute, whereon the necessity of issuing a warrant may be determined; and it seems that, under the Revised Statutes, the affidavit of the party would be sufficient.—Bissell v. Hills, 3 Wend. 389.

[n] (N. Y. 1834) Where a suit is brought in a justice's court in the name of two plaintiffs, an affidavit that one of the plaintiffs is a nonresident of the county is not sufficient to authorize the issuing of a warrant.—Linnell v. Sutherland, 11 Wend. 568.

[o] (N. Y. 1834) Where a suit is brought in a justice's court in the name of two plaintiffs, one of whom is a nonresident, and the demands belong to the nonresident plaintiff solely by assignment, the assignment must be shown, in order to authorize the issuance of a warrant.—Linnell v. Sutherland, 11 Wend. 568.

[p] (N. Y. 1835) In a suit before a justice of the peace against joint debtors, a nonresident plaintiff is entitled to proceed by warrant, though one of the defendants is a nonresident of the county in which the process issues.—Dearborn v. Kent, 14 Wend. 183.

[q] (N. Y. 1842) Under the charter of Utica, providing that the first process in an action to recover a penalty imposed by the common council shall be by warrant, the warrant may issue without the preliminary affidavit required by 2 Rev. St. p. 220, § 18; the charter having been granted since the act.—Walker v. Cruikshank, 2 Hill, 296.

[r] (N. Y. 1845) To authorize a justice of the peace to issue a warrant for trespass against a nonresident, the applicant must by affidavit state the facts and circumstances within his knowledge showing the grounds of his application.—Whitney v. Shufelt, 1 Denio, 592.

[s] (N. C. 1835) In debt before a single magistrate for one year's hire, on a covenant to pay $60 annually for two years for the hire of a slave, and also to furnish him with food and drink, the warrant calling for that sum due by bond is supported by the production of the covenant.—Hamilton v. McCarty, 18 N. C. 226.

[t] (N. C. 1835) In a warrant under a penal statute before a single justice, the omission of a reference to the statute will be fatal, even after verdict.—Buncombe Turnpike Co. v. McCarson, 18 N. C. 306.

[u] (N. C. 1837) A warrant from a justice, stating the parties, the sum demanded, and how due, is sufficient, as Act 1794, § 2, requires only that these shall be stated.—Hamilton v. Jervis, 19 N. C. 227.

[v] (N. C. 1845) A warrant from a justice in a civil case must name the proper parties and state a cause of action within a justice's jurisdiction, both as to the nature and amount of the demand.—Duffy v. Averitt, 27 N. C. 455.

[w] (N. C. 1845) A warrant from a justice in a civil case need not on its face be returnable on a certain day or at a certain place, but only within 30 days. The day and place are to be notified by the constable who serves the warrant.—Duffy v. Averitt, 27 N. C. 455.

[x, y] (N. C.) A warrant from a justice in a civil case requires no seal.—(1845) Duffy v. Averitt, 27 N. C. 455; (1847) Parker v. Gilreath, 29 N. C. 400.

[z] (N. C. 1851) In the description of a note in a warrant from a justice of the peace the same strictness is not required as in a description in a declaration in court. It is sufficient if the warrant describes the cause of action so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of a single justice as defined by statute.—Emmit v. McMillan, 35 N. C. 7.

[zz] (Wis. 1862) A warrant, in the form provided in criminal cases, against a party proceeded against for a forfeiture enforceable only by civil action, though irregular and liable to be set aside on motion, is not void, and the error of the justice as to the form of the warrant will not deprive him of jurisdiction.—Carter v. Dow, 16 Wis. 298.

[a] (Minn. 1892) An attachment may be issued in a justice's court in an action on contract in which the damages claimed are unliquidated.—Baumgardner v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co., 50 Minn. 381, 52 N. W. 964.

[b] (Miss. 1857) The provisions of the statute (Hutch. Code, p. 801) giving any creditor an attachment against the estate of a debtor who has removed or is removing out of the state, are applicable to attachments for debts within the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.—Davidson v. Martin, 33 Miss. 530.

[c] (N. Y. 1824) To give a justice jurisdiction of a cause on attachment, it must appear affirmatively that the defendant is concealed in the county, or has departed or is about to depart the county, with the intent mentioned in the act.—Adkins v. Brewer, 3 Cow. 206, 15 Am. Dec. 264.

[d] (N. Y. 1836) The fact that a defendant conceals himself to avoid an arrest in the name of the people, authorized by Sess. Laws 1831, p. 396, § 4, to enable a creditor to collect of a debtor guilty of fraud, is not a ground of attachment, under 2 Rev. St. p. 230, § 26, authorized when defendant conceals himself to avoid the service of civil process.—Lynde v. Montgomery, 15 Wend. 461.

[f] (N. Y. 1871) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to issue an attachment under 27 Rev. St. p. 230, § 26, on affidavits and papers, unless it shall satisfactorily appear to the justice that such debtor has departed or is about to depart from the county where he last resided, with intent to defraud his creditors or to avoid the service of any civil process, or that such debtor keeps himself concealed with the like intent.—Garrison v. Marshall, 44 How. Prac. 193.

[g] (N. Y. 1885) An attachment in a justice court is a provisional remedy, and an error of the justice in regard thereto is not cause for reversal, if the case was properly decided on the merits.—Rosenthal v. Grouse, 1 How. Prac. (N. S.) 447, 7 Civ. Proc. R. 135.

[h] (Pa. 1872) An attachment under section 27 of the act of 1842 cannot issue, except on an affidavit, satisfactory to the alderman or justice, that defendant is about to remove, assign, dispose of, or secrete any of "his property" (or has done so) with intent to defraud his creditors. That he has absconded or secreted himself is no ground for proceeding under this section.—Howard v. Joice, 4 Leg. Gaz. 30.

See post, § 288 [b].

Property subject to execution, see post, § 427.

—— to garnishment, see post, § 295.

[a] (Miss. 1866) An attachment issued by and returnable before a justice of the peace for a sum not exceeding $50 cannot be levied on real estate.—Plummer v. West, 41 Miss. 69.

[b] (Ohio, 1891) A pew in a church is real estate, and hence is not subject to attachment issued by a justice of the peace; he having no jurisdiction over realty.—Deutsch v. Maurice, 11 Ohio Dec. 436.

[c] (Pa. 1859) A constable cannot, under Act July 12, 1842, levy an attachment issuing from a justice of the peace by virtue of that act on any property which is not capable of manual seizure and of manual surrender by the defendant or his bail.—Wolbert v. Fackler, 32 Pa. (8 Casey) 452.

[d] (Pa. 1888) Where there is no statutory provision authorizing an attachment to be issued by a justice against a legacy or other interest in an estate of a decedent, an attachment will not lie against a charge in favor of the debtor on certain lands of which his father died seised, payable on the death of debtor's mother.—Messinger v. Mantz, 13 Atl. 197.

Authority of justice to take affidavit for attachment, in general, see "Attachment," vol. 5, cc. 441, 442, § 227.

[a] (Ala. 1831) Where an attachment is issued by a justice for a sum within his jurisdiction on an insufficient affidavit, the proceedings are not void, but only voidable.—Parmer v. Ballard, 3 Stew. 326.

[b] (Iowa, 1860) A technical defect in an affidavit for an attachment issued by a justice will not invalidate the writ, so as to render an officer serving it liable, as he would be if acting under void process; it not being shown that the justice had no jurisdiction of the principal suit.—State v. Foster, 10 Iowa, 435.

[c] (Mich. 1892) Where the ground of an attachment in the justice court is that defendant is a nonresident, but the affidavit of attachment states that defendant "has resided" in the state for one month before suit, an amendment by the insertion of "not" before "resided" is not authorized by How. Ann. St. § 7631, empowering the court in which any action is pending to amend "any process, pleading, or proceeding in such action, either in form or substance."—Freer v. White, 91 Mich. 74, 51 N. W. 807.

[d] (Minn. 1859) An affidavit setting forth facts which would have authorized a justice of the peace to make an attachment returnable in three days, and also facts authorizing him to make it returnable in six days, the writ having been made returnable in six days, is sufficient to give him jurisdiction.—Curtis v. Moore, 3 Minn. 29 (Gil. 7).

[e] (Minn. 1859) Under Rev. St. art. 4, c. 69, § 94, relating to attachments in the justices' courts, which provides that the affidavit shall state certain facts to entitle the writ to issue, it is not necessary that the evidence of the facts on which the right to the writ depends should appear in the affidavit. It is sufficient if the existence of grounds is averred, in the language of the statute.—Curtis v. Moore, 3 Minn. 29 (Gil. 7).

[f] (Minn. 1859) In the justice's court an affidavit for the attachment is sufficient if it follows the words of the statute, for the statute requires that it "shall state" the enumerated facts, etc., and does not require that they "shall appear" therefrom.—Curtis v. Moore, 3 Minn. 29 (Gil. 7).

[g] (Mo. 1872) In an attachment suit before a justice of the peace, the justice may allow the affidavit for attachment to be so amended after the original levy as to authorize the seizure of property otherwise exempt from attachment, and the amendment will relate back to the date of the original levy.—State v. Lynn, 51 Mo. 114.

[h] (N. Y. 1813) By the "satisfactory proof" required by the statute, in order to authorize a justice of the peace to issue an attachment, is meant legal evidence, and not the creditor's oath; but, if issued on such oath, the proceedings are not void, but only erroneous.—Van Steenbergh v. Kortz, 10 Johns. 167.

[i] (N. Y. 1833) Under 2 Rev. St. p. 230, § 28, requiring the affidavit for attachment in justice court to state the amount due by the defendant to the creditor and the grounds on which the application is founded, and the facts and circumstances to establish which shall also be verified by the affidavits of two disinterested witnesses, plaintiff's affidavit that from reports and information he believed that his debtor kept out of a county to avoid payment of his debts, and of his witnesses that they had been informed that he had departed, and, as his creditors said, for the purpose of defrauding them, are insufficient to authorize an attachment.—Tallman v. Bigelow, 10 Wend. 420.

[j] (N. Y. 1835) The affidavit on which the application for an attachment under the act to abolish imprisonment, etc., is made, before a justice, must state that the acts charged on the defendant were done with the intent to defraud creditors, and the facts and circumstances relied on must be set forth in the affidavit. They cannot be supplied by verbal proof.—Comfort v. Gillespie, 13 Wend. 404.

[k] (N. Y. 1836) A summons or attachment authorized by section 33 of the act to abolish imprisonment may issue from a justice court, without any affidavit whatever, against a defendant residing out of the county in which process is asked.—Clark v. Luce, 15 Wend. 479.

[m] (N. Y. 1850) An affidavit made by a plaintiff, on applying to a justice of the peace to issue an attachment against a defendant, stating that the application "is made on the ground that the defendant has assigned or secreted his property with intent to defraud his creditors," though according to the words of the statute, is insufficient unless the facts and circumstances stated therein warrant a belief that the defendant has assigned or secreted his property with intent to defraud his creditors.—Frost v. Willard, 9 Barb. 440.

[n] (N. Y. 1851) On an application to a justice of the peace for an attachment against a defendant, there must be an affidavit proving the grounds on which the application is founded in all cases, not excepting nonresidents.—Van Kirk v. Wilds, 11 Barb. 520.

[nn] (N. Y. 1851) If an affidavit states that the plaintiff has a debt against the defendant of a specified amount arising upon contract, and that the defendant is a nonresident of the county, it is enough to warrant issuing an attachment by the justice.—Van Kirk v. Wilds, 11 Barb. 520.

[o] (N. Y. 1851) An affidavit before a justice of the peace, which would be sufficient under the nonimprisonment act, is sufficient for an attachment under the Revised Statutes.—Colver v. Van Valen, 6 How. Prac. 102.

[oo] (N. Y. 1852) The jurisdiction of a justice to issue an attachment under the act to abolish imprisonment for debt does not attach until the proof required by the statute is made.—Davis v. Marshall, 14 Barb. 96.

[p] (N. Y. 1853) An application for an attachment on the ground that the debtor had left the county where he last lived to defraud his creditors must be accompanied by an affidavit of the applicant, stating the grounds of it; and he must prove facts and circumstances to sustain such grounds by his own affidavit or that of another or others.—Stewart v. Brown, 16 Barb. 367.

[pp] (N. Y. 1861) An affidavit containing some legal evidence that a debtor has departed with intent to defraud his creditors gives jurisdiction to a justice to issue an attachment, and his judgment thereon is good until directly attacked.—Kissock v. Grant, 34 Barb. 144.

[q] (N. Y. 1864) Where a justice of the peace is sufficiently satisfied of the facts stated in an affidavit for an attachment to issue his warrant, third parties cannot attack it collaterally.—Bascom v. Smith, 31 N. Y. 595.

[qq] (N. Y. 1864) An affidavit for attachment in a justice's court which stated that the debtors were not residents of the county in which the proceedings were brought, but were residents of another county named, sufficiently alleged their nonresidence, so as to sustain the jurisdiction of the justice issuing the attachment.—Bascom v. Smith, 31 N. Y. 595.

[rr] (N. Y. 1872) On an application to a justice of the peace for an attachment, an affidavit showing grounds under the Revised Statutes and also under Laws 1831, p. 300, § 30, will authorize its issue under either.—Reinmiller v. Skidmore, 7 Lans. 161.

[s] (N. Y. 1873) An attachment was issued by a justice of the peace on the ground that defendant had departed from the state with intent to defraud his creditors. The affidavit stated that defendant bought the goods on a credit of 30 days on the false representation that he was in the habit of purchasing for cash, and that his stock was paid for; that before the credit expired he departed; that all of his stock had been purchased on credit, and not paid for. Held sufficient proof of an intent to defraud creditors to give the justice jurisdiction.—Schoonmaker v. Spencer, 54 N. Y. 366.

[ss] (N. Y. 1874) In the affidavit in justice's court for an attachment against an absconding debtor's property, the intent with which defendant removed his property, and the fact that defendant had gone West to reside, may be stated on information and belief.—Ketchum v. Vidvard, 4 Thomp. & C. 138.

[t] (N. Y. 1874) Where an affidavit for an attachment issued by a justice of the peace was such that the justice might so construe it as to give him jurisdiction, held, that the attachment could not be held void in a collateral proceeding.—Ketchum v. Vidvard, 4 Thomp. & C. 138.

[tt] (N. Y. 1877) In an action brought in a justice court against a nonresident by a short attachment, an affidavit reciting that defendant is justly indebted to deponent on a demand arising on contract in a stated sum, and that defendant is not a resident of the county, and no warrant can issue against him, is insufficient, because not stating facts and circumstances which, under the Revised Statutes and the act of 1831 would entitle plaintiff to a long attachment, and because not showing how the demand of plaintiff arose on contract, and not showing that the demand is not one in which a warrant could issue.—Garlock v. James, 55 How. Prac. 306.

[u] (N. Y. 1891) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2906, which provides that plaintiff, to entitle himself to an order of attachment, must show to the satisfaction of the justice that defendant "has departed, or is about to depart, from the county where he last resided, with intent to defraud his creditors or to avoid the service of process, or keeps himself concealed with the like intent," an affidavit by plaintiff that "defendant has disposed of in part and is about to dispose of the balance of all his property, and as deponent is informed and believes, with intent to defraud his creditors; * * * that the grounds of deponent's belief are as follows, viz.: That defendant has shipped out of the county large quantities of hay, * * * and is making preparations to move out of the county with all his property," and has made no efforts or promises to pay any of his debts to plaintiff or to others,—is insufficient.—Bump v. Dehany, 59 Hun, 619, 12 N. Y. Supp. 901.

[uu] (Ohio, 1862) From the fact of an affidavit appearing to have been issued at the commencement of the attachment proceedings, though denominated an "affidavit for proceedings against S., as garnishee," it may be presumed to have contained a legal cause for attachment.—Carper v. Richards, 13 Ohio St. 219.

[v] (Ohio, 1862) Under such affidavit, in the absence of any mention of an undertaking, and a return of the summons "Not found," the nonresidence of the defendant, one of the causes for attachment, will be presumed to have been stated in the affidavit.—Carper v. Richards, 13 Ohio St. 219.

[vv] (Pa. 1881) Under Act May 8, 1874, the affidavit in proceedings by attachment, after a specification of the plaintiff's claim, is restricted to an averment that defendant is a nonresident of the commonwealth.—Pratt v. Mosser, 1 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 178.

[w] (Pa. 1890) Act July 12, 1842, § 27, authorizes the issuing of an attachment against an absconding debtor on proof "to the satisfaction of the justice" by the affidavit of plaintiff or other person. Held, that proof "to the satisfaction of the justice" was not the sole test of the sufficiency of the affidavit.—Curwensville Mfg. Co. v. Bloom (Com. Pl.) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 295.

[xx] (Pa. 1892) An affidavit for an attachment, which alleges that affiant "has good reason to believe" that defendant is about to dispose of his property and leave the county with intent to defraud his creditors, without stating any facts upon which such belief is founded, is not sufficient to give a justice of the peace jurisdiction, under Act July 12, 1842 (Purd. Dig. p. 989) § 27, which provides that he shall issue an attachment "upon proof" by affidavit that defendant is about to remove from the county any of his property, or is about to dispose of it, with intent to defraud his creditors.—Gates v. Bloom, 149 Pa. 107, 24 Atl. 184, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 127.

[z] (Tenn. 1832) In attachments issued by justices of the peace, the debt must be sworn to by the plaintiff before the writ issues, or the proceedings will be void.—Walker v. Wynne, 11 Tenn. (3 Yerg.) 62.

Liabilities on bonds and undertakings, see post, § 293.

[a] (Ark. 1869) No bond need be filed with a justice of the peace before issue of an attachment.—Stewart v. Houston, 25 Ark. 311.

[b] (Md. 1895) A justice of the peace not having power to require plaintiff, before issuing an attachment in a suit against a nonresident, to furnish a bond to prosecute the suit with effect, action cannot be maintained on such a bond.—Snyder v. Gillott, 32 Atl. 245.

[c] (Md. 1895) A justice of the peace has no power to require a plaintiff, before issue of an attachment in a suit against a nonresident, to furnish a bond to prosecute the suit with effect, or, in case of failure thereof, to pay to the nonresident debtor the costs of such suit as may be awarded against him.—Snyder v. Gillott, 32 Atl. 245.

[d] (Mo. 1849) A bond given under the statute in regard to attachments, which does not contain all the statutory conditions, is a good bond as to the conditions which it does contain.—State v. Berry, 12 Mo. 376.

[e, f] (N. Y. 1845) The provision of the act requiring a bond to be executed as one of the conditions to the issuing of an attachment (Laws 1831, p. 404, § 35) is not satisfied by the execution of a covenant to pay $100, or to pay all damages and costs, etc.; and, where only such covenant is executed, the justice does not require any jurisdiction to issue an attachment.—Homan v. Brinckerhoff, 1 Denio, 184.

[h] (N. Y. 1852) The jurisdiction of a justice to issue an attachment under the act to abolish imprisonment for debt does not attach until bond filed.—Davis v. Marshall, 14 Barb. 96.

[i] (N. Y. 1864) Where an attachment bond is taken by a justice of the peace as sufficient for the purpose for which it is given, the approval of the bond by the justice is sufficient, as against third parties, even if he does not expressly certify it was executed in his presence.—Bascom v. Smith, 31 N. Y. 595.

[j] (N. Y. 1875) An instrument without a seal is not sufficient as a bond, under 2 Rev. St. p. 230, § 29, to confer on a justice's court jurisdiction to issue an attachment.—Tiffany v. Lord, 65 N. Y. 310.

[k] (N. Y. 1889) A justice of the peace has authority to allow an amended undertaking in attachment to be filed nunc pro tunc.—Riley v. Skidmore, 53 Hun, 632, 6 N. Y. Supp. 107.

[m] (S. C. 1793) An attachment bond taken by a justice of the peace was by mistake made with condition to prosecute an action in the county for a demand exceeding the jurisdiction of that court. Held, that the bond was void, and demurrer sustained to an action for breach of the condition.—Harville v. Meyers, 1 Brev. 3.

[n] (S. C. 1833) An attachment bond, signed in blank and afterwards filled up by the magistrate, is void.—Perminter v. McDaniel, 1 Hill, 267, 26 Am. Dec. 179.

[a] (Ala. 1839) The statute of 1836, requiring that process issued from the clerk's office of any court shall be directed "To any sheriff of the state," does not embrace attachments issued by justices of the peace.—Alford v. Johnson, 9 Port. 320.

[b] (Ala. 1868) A writ of attachment is not substantially defective for failure to expressly state before whom further proceedings thereon will be had; the inference being that they will be had before the justice who issued the writ.—Bruner v. Kinsel, 42 Ala. 493.

[c] (Ala. 1891) Under Code, § 2956, which provides: "When an attachment is issued by a justice of the peace, if the amount of the debt does not exceed the penalty of the constable's bond, the justice may, by indorsement on the process, direct it to be executed by the constable of the precinct," etc.,—a writ addressed to the sheriff "or constable of beat 3," etc., was sufficiently indorsed by the justice, and the levy by such constable was valid.—Drewry v. Leinkauff, 94 Ala. 486, 10 South. 352.

[e] (Conn. 1832) A writ, purporting on its face to be directed in the usual manner, had on the back of it a certificate of the magistrate who signed the writ, that the plaintiff's agent appeared and made affidavit respecting the writ in the words prescribed by the statute, adding "therefore this writ is directed to U. T., an indifferent person, to serve and return." Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the magistrate administered the oath according to the requirements of the statute, that the writ was directed to an indifferent person and that the name of such person was inserted in the writ, and that he was consequently duly authorized to serve the process.—Kellogg v. Wadhams, 9 Conn. 201.

[f] (Ga. 1879) An attachment is not void because, being returnable to a justice's court, it was improperly directed "To all and singular the sheriffs and constables of the state," instead of merely to "constables."—Buchanan v. Sterling, 63 Ga. 227.

[g] (Ga. 1879) The levy of an attachment by a proper officer is not void because the writ was improperly directed.—Warren v. Purtell, 63 Ga. 428.

[h] (Ky. 1801) An order of attachment which does not show that it was issued by a justice of the peace, and does not contain any charge which justified its issue, cannot be sustained.—McLorty v. Davis, 2 Ky. (Ky. Dec.) 57.

[i] (Ky. 1820) Though an attachment must issue from a justice of the county where defendant was last a resident, such fact need not be set forth in the attachment.—Plumpton v. Cook, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 450.

[j] (Md. 1878) Since the warrant of the justice of the peace to the clerk lies at the foundation of the proceeding in attachment, it cannot be amended.—Halley v. Jackson, 48 Md. 254.

[k] (Mass. 1851) A writ, in a civil action pending before a justice of the peace, which directs the officer "to attach the goods or estate of ——— to the value of $20, and for want thereof to take the body of the said W. D.," may be amended, by leave of the justice, by inserting the defendant's name in the blank space.—McGuire v. Davis, 62 Mass. (8 Cush.) 356.

[l] (Minn. 1859) On one of the grounds stated in the affidavit for an attachment before a justice, the writ could have been made returnable in three days, on the other in six. Held, that either might be rejected as surplusage, and that the writ might be sustained on the other.—Curtis v. Moore, 3 Minn. 29 (Gil. 7).

[m] (Minn. 1881) A writ of attachment issued by a justice of the peace commanded the sheriff to attach goods of defendant to satisfy the sum of $100, "with interest and costs of suit," and also to summon defendant to answer to plaintiff in a civil action, "to his damages $100 or under." Held, that the writ was not to be construed as commanding a levy to satisfy a greater sum than $100, with costs and interest after judgment, as such greater sum would have been beyond the jurisdiction of the justice, and such construction would make the writ illegal on its face.—Hines v. Chambers, 29 Minn. 7, 11 N. W. 129.

[n] (Minn. 1893) A writ of attachment, by which an action is commenced in a justice's court, is sufficient to give jurisdiction if it be in the form prescribed by statute, requiring defendant to be summoned to appear at the office of the justice in a specified county, though the town is not named.—Beseman v. Weber, 53 Minn. 174, 54 N. W. 1053.

[o] (Miss. 1881) An attachment issued by a mayor, who was ex officio a justice of the peace, was not void because returnable within less than five days from the date of its issuance.—Baldwin v. Flash, 58 Miss. 593.

[p] (Miss. 1892) Code 1880, § 2191, provides that the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace shall be coextensive with his county, and he may issue any process to be executed in any part of his county, but every freeholder or householder shall be sued in the district in which he resides, or in the district in which the debt was contracted or the property may be found. Section 2475 provides that a justice may issue attachments returnable before himself or any other justice of any district in which defendant or any of his property may be found. Held, that an attachment issued by a justice against a nonresident, and levied on property in a district other than the one in which such justice resided, and in which there were qualified justices, was properly made returnable before the justice who issued it.—Griggs v. Jesse French Piano & Organ Co., 70 Miss. 211, 14 South. 24.

[r] (N. C. 1844) Attachments from a justice, like other original process, not made returnable on a certain day, are void.—Clark v. Quinn, 27 N. C. 175.

[s] (N. C. 1844) An attachment before a justice of the peace not made, on its face, returnable within 30 days from the issuing thereof, is void, by the express provisions of the act of assembly concerning attachments.—Clark v. Quinn, 27 N. C. 175.

[t] (N. C. 1849) An attachment issued by a justice at chambers, and not made returnable at any time or place, is void.—Houston v. Porter, 32 N. C. 174.

[u] (N. C. 1859) A constable levied an attachment on real estate, and after judgment of condemnation, by a justice having jurisdiction of the amount, the writ was returned to court, where an order of sale was made. Held, that the omission of the magistrate to set out in the writ a day of return, being a mere irregularity, was cured.—McLane v. Moore, 51 N. C. 520.

[v] (Pa. 1895) Under Act 1874, providing that attachments against nonresident debtors shall be made returnable not less than two nor more than four days from the date thereof, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to issue a writ returnable in five days, though the fourth day falls on Sunday.—Protzman v. Wolff (Com. Pl.) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 473.

[w] (S. C. 1839) The oath on which a magistrate issues an attachment, though it need not be in writing, must be recited in the writ.—Devall v. Taylor, 1 Cheves, 5.

[x] (S. C. 1882) An attachment issued by a justice in an action to enforce an agricultural lien cannot be attacked collaterally.—Jones v. Clarkson, 16 S. C. 628.

[z] (Wis. 1880) A warrant of attachment issued by a justice of the peace was issued on an affidavit made by one G. W. K. on behalf of plaintiffs, and required defendant to answer "to G. W. K. on behalf of" the plaintiffs named. Held, that the writ was not, for that reason, invalid, as the words therein "G. W. K. on behalf of" would be treated as having no legal significance, and would be rejected as surplusage.—Marston v. Hurlbut, 49 Wis. 630, 6 N. W. 316; Olsen v. Same, Id.

[a] (Ala. 1877) The levy of an attachment by a person appointed by a justice to act as a special constable is irregular and void.—Peebles v. Weir, 60 Ala. 413.

[b] (Ala. 1892) Code, § 2956, authorizing an attachment issued by a justice for a sum exceeding his jurisdiction, and returnable in the circuit court, to be levied by the constable in whose beat the process issued, provided the amount does not exceed the amount of the constable's bond, refers only to the regular constable; and such a levy by a special deputy is void.—Carter v. Ellis, 90 Ala. 139, 7 South. 531.

[c] (Colo. 1890) Under Act 1878, in relation to attachments before justices of the peace, requiring notices of the levy in certain instances to be posted in three of the most public places within the precinct, evidence showing that one of such notices was posted on the front door of the court house, one on the side of the stairs leading to the justice's office, and one on a certain corral fence, and that "these places were then regarded, and would now be, three about as public places as could be found in the precinct," shows a sufficient compliance with the statute as against a collateral attack upon the proceedings.—Conway v. John, 14 Colo. 30, 23 Pac. 170.

[d] (Ill. 1893) To give a justice's court jurisdiction to render judgment against a corporation in attachment proceedings, service must be had by either leaving a copy of the writ with some of its officers, agents, or employés, or by posting notices, and mailing a copy of such notice addressed to defendant at its place of residence.—Hinman v. Andrews Opera Co., 49 Ill. App. 135.

[e] (Kan. 1890) Where an officer, having a writ of attachment issued by a justice of the peace, goes to a warehouse where the goods of defendant are and appraises the same, but does not take them into his possession, there is no valid levy, under Comp. Laws, c. 81, § 32, requiring the officer, when the goods can be reached, to "take them into his custody, and hold them subject to the order of the justice," and the officer has not such an interest in the goods as will entitle him to replevy them if they are taken away.—Lyeth v. Griffis, 44 Kan. 159, 24 Pac. 59.

[f] (Ky. 1865) A sheriff is legally authorized, under the Civil Code, to levy an attachment from a justice of the peace.—Turners v. Howard, 63 Ky. (2 Duv.) 112.

[g] (Md. 1857) Acts 1795, c. 56, provided that in proceedings in attachment in the circuit court a short note should be filed, and a copy thereof sent with the writ to be set up at the court house door by the sheriff. Held, that under Act 1852, c. 239, providing that all actions of replevin or attachment proceedings before the justice of the peace shall be similar to those in the circuit court, a short note should be filed at the time of issuing the attachment in justice's court, and a copy thereof sent with the writ.—Campbell v. Webb, 11 Md. 471.

[h] (Mich. 1876) Under the statute as to service of writs of attachment from justice's courts, requiring personal service if defendant can be found in the county, and if not, then, as the next best mode, the leaving of certified copies at his last place of residence in the county, and finally, as a last alternative, service on the person found in possession of the property, the officer is bound to use diligence to secure the best service, and may not adopt an inferior one until, after reasonable diligence running through the time given for it, all superior modes are found impracticable. Where service is made by leaving the papers with the person found in possession of the property at a time when there is still another day left available for personal service, or service by leaving a copy at the last place of residence, the justice acquires no jurisdiction of the case.—Town v. Tabor, 34 Mich. 262.

[j] (Mich. 1887) In an attachment before a justice of the peace to enforce a lien for labor on logs, service of the writ on the agent of the owner of the logs, without a return by the officer showing that he could not find the owner in his bailiwick, is insufficient.—Noyes v. Hillier, 65 Mich. 636, 32 N. W. 872.

[k] (Mich. 1888) In attachment before a justice, personal service of the writ is insufficient, unless made after levy, and accompanied by an inventory of the property seized, as provided by How. Ann. St. § 6840.—Langtry v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 68 Mich. 451, 36 N. W. 211, 13 Am. St. Rep. 352.

[m] (Mich. 1896) In attachment before a justice, at which time garnishment proceedings were also commenced, the return of the officer on the writ that "he had the writ in his possession on the 27th day of June; that he carried the writ around for several days after he received it, and that he received it on June 25th; that he could not have served the writ on defendant between June 25th and June 27th, or on either of said days; that the writ was returned to the court after June 27th,"—does not show that the officer retained the writ in his hands and made diligent search for defendant during the time personal service might have been made, and therefore his return of substituted service on June 25th is insufficient to confer jurisdiction under 3 How. Ann. St. § 6841, providing for such service if defendant cannot be found.—Bargh v. L. R. Ermeling & Co., 110 Mich. 164, 67 N. W. 1083.

[n] (N. J. 1857) To justify a justice in appointing a day of trial, some property must be attached.—Lentz v. Callin, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 218.

[o] (N. J. 1880) An attachment out of a court for the trial of small causes must be executed in the presence of a freeholder, who must sign the appraisement.—Dittmar Powder Mfg. Co. v. Leon, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 540.

[p] (N. J. 1895) A justice of the peace issuing an attachment in the court for the trial of small causes cannot deputize a private citizen to execute and return the writ, nor proceed on a writ served by such a person.—Orenstine v. Schaffer, 58 N. J. Law (29 Vroom) 344, 33 Atl. 285.

[q] (N. Y. 1846) Where a writ of attachment against two joint debtors, returnable before a justice of the peace, was returned as served on one only of them, and nothing was said in the return as to the other, the service was held insufficient, and the judgment was reversed.—Cook v. McDoel, 3 Denio, 317.

[r] (N. Y. 1862) Service of a justice's attachment and inventory on a person in charge of the property attached is insufficient unless the defendant has no place of residence within the county.—Marshall v. Canty, 14 Abb. Prac. 237.

[s] (N. Y. 1862) An attachment issued by a justice of the peace against the property of a nonresident, under section 32 of the nonimprisonment act, must be served, together with the inventory, by leaving copies with the person in possession of the goods. An omission of such service will devest the justice of his jurisdiction.—Stone v. Miller, 62 Barb. 430.

[u] (W. Va. 1895) In order that jurisdiction of an attachment be conferred on a justice, the attachment properly issued must be levied on property of defendant.—Colborn v. Booth, 41 W. Va. 289, 23 S. E. 556.

[v] (Wis. 1870) Where the writ, in an attachment suit before a justice, has not been served on the defendant in person, notice to him that the writ has been issued and property attached must be posted or published at least 15 days before judgment can be taken against him.—Champion v. Argall, 25 Wis. 521.

[a] (Ala. 1852) When an attachment issued by, and returnable before, a justice of the peace, is levied by a constable on the defendant's land, and after the rendition of judgment in the suit, an execution issued thereon is levied on the same land, in default of personal property, the lien of the judgment creditor relates back to the date of the levy of the attachment.—Langdon v. Raiford, 20 Ala. 532.

[b] (Cal. 1865) An attachment lien in a suit before a justice of the peace is lost by the dismissal of the suit, and it cannot be restored by the justice's reinstatement of the case and his giving judgment for the plaintiff.—O'Connor v. Blake, 29 Cal. 312.

[c] (La. 1859) When a party has a claim exceeding in amount the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, and bearing a privilege on property attached by another party in a justice's court, his remedy is by a suit in the district court, claiming his privilege, and enjoining the officer having the writ of attachment issued by the justice from proceeding with its execution and paying over the proceeds to the attaching creditor; or by a rule taken on the attaching creditor, to show cause why he should not be paid by preference out of the proceeds of the sale of the property attached.—Shiff v. Carprette, 14 La. Ann. 801.

[d] (Mass. 1856) Rev. St. c. 90, §§ 83, 84, provide that any person claiming any interest by force of a subsequent attachment, or otherwise, in any property that is attached, in a suit between other persons, may dispute the validity of the prior attachment, by petition to "the court in which the first suit is pending, at any time before final judgment therein." Section 94 provides that nothing contained in the preceding sections shall apply to any action commenced before a justice of the peace. Held, that a creditor claiming under an attachment in an action before a justice of the peace cannot, by petition, dispute the validity of a prior attachment in an action in a higher court.—Putnam v. Bixby, 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 528.

[e] (N. Y. 1851) A constable levied on a horse and advertised it for sale. Prior to the day of the sale, an attachment came to his hands by virtue of which he attached the same horse. The property was sold on the first execution, and a sum sufficient to pay that raised, leaving a surplus to pay the amount due in the attachment. Judgment was obtained in the attachment suit, and execution issued thereon to the constable, who levied on this surplus, and applied the avails to satisfy the execution. Held, that the lien of the attachment on the horse, by operation of law, became transferred, after the sale, to the surplus money in the hands of the constable.—Wheeler v. Smith, 11 Barb. 345.

[f] (Vt. 1830) If a creditor take judgment on a justice's writ, by agreement with the debtor, at any other day than that set in his writ, he forfeits his lien to a subsequent attacher.—Murray v. Eldridge, 2 Vt. 388.

[g] (Vt. 1843) Under Rev. St. c. 26, § 12, prohibiting the service of a justice writ more than 60 days before the time therein appointed for trial, an officer seizing personal property under such a writ more than 60 days before such time acquires no rights to the property as against a subsequent attachment, though the defendant made no objection to the seizure.—Nelson v. Denison, 17 Vt. 73.

[h] (W. Va. 1895) An attachment from a justice's court creates a lien on leviable chattels only from its levy.—Poling v. Flanagan, 41 W. Va. 191, 23 S. E. 685.

[a] (Ala. 1857) A justice of the peace who has issued an attachment returnable to a court in his county, which has been levied by the sheriff of another county, on perishable property, has authority to make an order for the sale of such property.—Young v. Davis, 30 Ala. 213.

[aa] (Ill. 1895) Where a forthcoming bond in an attachment suit pending before a justice of the peace provided that if such suit should be decided in favor of plaintiff, and such decision should not be appealed from, the goods should be forthcoming to answer the judgment of the court, it meant that the goods were to be forthcoming on a final adjudication in favor of plaintiff, whether such final adjudication was obtained in the justice court, or in the circuit court on appeal.—Conard v. Ehrman, 61 Ill. App. 128.

[c] (Kan. 1895) A forthcoming bond by a defendant who has failed to secure a discharge of the attachment, to the effect that said defendant shall perform the judgment, is a substantial compliance with the Justice Civ. Code, § 52.—Stow v. Shay, 54 Kan. 574, 38 Pac. 784.

[d] (La. 1868) Several suits were brought by colored laborers of M. against him for their wages, and his property was seized. M. obtained the release of his property by giving bonds, with surety, to the justice before whom the suits were pending conditioned, "that if said M. appear at my office and deliver up to me the articles enumerated herein, on Saturday, Feb. 17, 1866, or pay certain judgments or claims against him in favor of a number of colored men, then this bond to be void," etc. Held, that the bond was a nullity.—Terrail v. Tinney, 20 La. Ann. 444.

[e] (Miss. 1834) A justice of the peace has no authority to order property attached in a case pending before him to be delivered to the plaintiff, and such order is no defense to an action of trover by the defendant.—Welch v. Jamison, 2 Miss. (1 How.) 160.

[f] (Mo. 1891) When a writ of attachment, issued by a justice of the peace, is levied on property afterwards levied on under a writ of attachment issued by a court of record, the cause before the justice must be transferred to the court of record, by order or certiorari of the latter court, before that court will have jurisdiction to apply any of the proceeds of the property to the satisfaction of the claim sued on before the justice. But the cause before the justice may be prosecuted to final judgment before him, and such removal be thus made after rendition of the judgment.—State Bank of St. Louis v. Steinberg, 44 Mo. App. 401.

[g] (Nev. 1890) St. 1881, p. 56, § 8, provides that, in cases of attachment, etc., any miner, mechanic, etc., may serve on the officer executing the same a sworn statement of his claim at any time before the sale, and shall also notify the creditor at whose instance the writ was issued, and the debtor, if he be found in the county where the property is situated, and if he be not found, then service upon the officer shall be sufficient; and unless, within five days after receiving such notice, either the creditor or debtor disputes the claim, the officer shall pay the amount thereof as the first lien on the proceeds of sale. In a suit in a justice's court, the notices were served on the attaching creditor, and on the sheriff who made the levy, the debtor being not found, and, though the claim was not disputed, the sheriff failed to pay it, but applied the proceeds to the satisfaction of the execution. Held, that the justice had jurisdiction, on showing by the claimant, to enter an order requiring the sheriff to pay the amount of the claims.—Alexander v. Archer, 21 Nev. 22, 24 Pac. 373.

[h] (Pa. 1892) Where money of defendant is attached in the hands of an insurance company, it is the duty of the constable, under Act July 12, 1842, § 29, to take the money, or, if that is impracticable, to demand a bond conditioned for its production.—McNamara v. Roderick (Com. Pl.) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 37.

[i] (R. I. 1889) Where it appears from the record in a justice's court that jurisdiction in an attachment suit has lapsed by a failure to return the writ in time, an order of sale made in such suit is void, and is no defense to an action for taking and converting the goods sold thereunder.—Brown v. Carroll, 16 R. I. 604, 18 Atl. 283.

[a] (Ark. 1878) An affidavit for an attachment, in an action before a justice of the peace, stating in substance that plaintiff's claim is for money due for rent of land, that his claim is just and he believes he ought to recover a stated sum, and that defendant has removed certain cotton from the premises without plaintiff's consent, answers the purpose of a complaint or statement of the cause of action, and is a substantial compliance with the statutory requirements.—Tignor v. Bradley, 32 Ark. 781.

[b] (Ga. 1851) Land cannot be levied on and sold under an order of the magistrates in attachments returnable to justices' courts. It must be by virtue of an execution issuing on the judgment in attachment.—Rogers v. McDill, 9 Ga. 506.

[c] (Ga. 1877) No declaration need be filed in an attachment suit in a justice's court.—Smith v. Wilson, 58 Ga. 322.

[d] (Ga. 1890) Where an execution is based solely on an attachment before a justice of the peace, and it is not shown that defendant had notice, as provided by Code, § 3309, or that he replevied the property, or that he appeared and defended, the levy will be dismissed as to property not described in the attachment, and claimed by third persons, though the execution and levy were general.—Reeves v. Chattahoochee Brick Co., 85 Ga. 477, 11 S. E. 837.

[e] (Ill. 1875) In an attachment before a justice of the peace, where there is no personal service upon the defendant, or levy upon his property, and notice, as required by statute, the justice has no jurisdiction, and any judgment rendered is a nullity.—Borders v. Murphy, 78 Ill. 81.

[f] (Ind. 1881) Where defendant in attachment, sued before a justice in a wrong county, is served with process and does not appear to dispute the jurisdiction, the judgment against him on his property cannot be collaterally assailed.—Wilkinson v. Moore, 79 Ind. 397.

[g] (Ind. 1881) Where one is sued before a justice in the wrong county, and no process is served on him, there being merely a levy of attachment, the court has no jurisdiction, and the judgment may be questioned collaterally.—Wilkinson v. Moore, 79 Ind. 397.

ger sum than that demanded in the attachment affidavit, did not render the judgment void.—Gum Elastic Roofing Co. v. Mexico Pub. Co., 140 Ind. 158, 39 N. E. 443, 30 L. R. A. 700.

[i] (Iowa, 1856) The mere statement of the cause of action, without filing a transcript of the judgment whereon it is brought, is sufficient, before a justice, to allow an attachment to issue.—Collins v. Rondolph, 3 G. Greene, 299.

[j] (Md. 1894) Code, art. 52, § 21, providing that where a defendant has been summoned, and fails to appear on the return day, the justice shall fix a subsequent day for trial, not less than 6, nor more than 14, days from the return day, does not apply to attachment proceedings.—Weed v. Lewis, 80 Md. 126, 30 Atl. 610.

[k] (Mich. 1887) A justice of the peace, in an attachment to enforce a lien for labor on logs, cannot, on a service made by the officer of the writ, proceed at once on such day to a trial of the case, especially when the writ is returnable at 10 o'clock.—Noyes v. Hillier, 65 Mich. 636, 32 N. W. 872.

[m] (Mo. 1884) The duty of a justice of the peace in case of death of defendant pending attachment suit, to proceed to final judgment, is not changed by Rev. St. § 2946, requiring certification to the probate court in case of death in "suits before justices," but not specifying attachment suits.—Abernathy v. Moore, 83 Mo. 65.

[n] (Mo. 1891) While Rev. St. 1889, §§ 525, 526, contemplate that in an action by attachment before a justice the affidavit for attachment and the statement of the cause of action shall be separately made and filed, that practice is not essential to the jurisdiction of the justice, and his jurisdiction will attach where the statement of the cause of action is incorporated in the affidavit.—Holman v. Kerr, 44 Mo. App. 481.

[o] (Mo. 1895) Where no plea in abatement was filed, either before the justice, or in the circuit court on appeal, it is a confession of the grounds alleged for attachment.—Rechnitzer v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 60 Mo. App. 409, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 279.

[p] (Mont. 1891) Code Civ. Proc. § 80, provides that in case of attachment without personal service the judgment and execution shall be against the "property attached, as provided by section 73 of this chapter." Section 73 is silent upon the subject, as the part referred to in section 80 was repealed by Act March, 1883 (St. 13th Sess. 51). Section 245 provides that, in case of service by publication and proper proof, judgment may be rendered for plaintiff for the amount due, in cases in the district court. There is no statute in the procedure act requiring that the judgment in case of service by publication shall be against the attached property, and it is provided that the procedure in the district courts shall apply to the justices' courts, as far as applicable. Sections 745, 792, 804–806. Held that, in case of attachment of a nonresident's property and service by publication in an action in a justice court, a general judgment could be rendered for plaintiff.—State v. Eddy, 10 Mont. 311, 25 Pac. 1032.

[q] (Neb. 1883) An attachment was tried by a justice of the peace on September 28th, and the trial concluded on that day, after which the court took the case under advisement until the next morning at "8:30 o'clock sharp," at which time judgment was rendered. Held a sufficient compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1002, which provides with respect to attachments that, "when the trial is by justice, judgment must be entered immediately after the close of the trial."—Huff v. Babbott, 14 Neb. 150, 15 N. W. 230.

[r] (Neb. 1895) A finding by a justice of the peace, in an attachment suit, of the sum due plaintiff, an assessment of his recovery, and an order of sale of the attached property, is a judgment in form against defendant, and, where the only relief sought is to subject the attached property to the payment of the debt, is sufficient as an entry.—Smith v. Johnson, 43 Neb. 754, 62 N. W. 217.

[t] (N. M. 1882) A statement of plaintiff's demand in his affidavit for an attachment is a sufficient declaration, if no objection is made to it, in an action before a justice of the peace. If the demand thus stated is for money had and received, but that proved is of a different nature, as for work and labor, yet the judgment will not be reversed if no objection was made at the trial.—Crolot v. Maloy, 2 N. M. 198.

[u] (Ohio, 1835) A justice of the peace, in an action in attachment, may set aside a judgment, void for want of service of the summons on defendant, and retain the custody of the attached chattels, and issue a new summons in the action, and, on due service thereof, again proceed to judgment.—Wehlen v. Macke, 9 Ohio Dec. 565, 15 Wkly. Law Bul. 125.

[v] (Ohio, 1888) In an action before a justice of the peace, where there is neither actual service nor voluntary appearance, but where jurisdiction is acquired by attachment of property and publication of notice, a justice may render judgment for the full amount of plaintiff's claim, if not in excess of his jurisdiction, but it has no operation beyond the disposition of the property seized.—Chicago & C. Coal Co. v. Manley (Com. Pl.) 10 Ohio Dec. 394, 21 Wkly. Law Bul. 38.

[w] (Tenn. 1871) Under Code, § 3527, making it imperative, in attachment proceedings, on the justice, where the defendant does not appear, to stay final judgment not less than six months, a final judgment, rendered in less than six months after the attachment was levied, is void.—Sorrels v. Wiley, 53 Tenn. (6 Heisk.) 318.

[x] (Tenn. 1872) A judgment of a justice of the peace in an attachment against a nonresident is erroneous where the justice fails to stay the judgment for six months after return of process.—Rumbough v. White, 58 Tenn. (11 Heisk.) 260.

[xx] (Tex. 1881) Under Rev. St. art. 1573, providing that pleadings in justices' courts shall be oral except where otherwise especially provided, a plaintiff need not file any petition for an attachment in an action commenced by attachment.—Henry v. Blasco, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 765.

a suit against a nonresident by attachment on real estate, in accordance with Rev. Civ. St. art. 180a, is not subject to collateral attack on the ground that the citation of publication, otherwise sufficient, makes no mention of the attachment proceedings.—Reid v. Mickles (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 563.

[yy] (Vt. 1858) If a writ of attachment, returnable before a justice in a different county from that in which it is served, be served by attaching property less than 12 days before the return day, and no appearance is made by defendant, and judgment is given by default, the judgment is valid.—Hammond v. Wilder, 25 Vt. 342.

[z] (Wis. 1851) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace in favor of the plaintiff in an attachment suit in which the writ had not been returned, and in which the defendant did not appear, is void.—Selby v. Platts, 3 Chand. 183, 3 Pin. 170.

[zz] (Wis. 1875) In an action in a justice's court commenced by attachment, the affidavit on which the warrant of attachment issued is sufficient as an oral complaint.—Ruthe v. Green Bay & M. R. Co., 37 Wis. 344.

§ 289. —— Process in action and appearance.

Service of writ of attachment, see ante, § 285.

[a] (U. S. 1835) An attachment issued upon a single non est, returned upon a justice's warrant for a small debt, will be quashed; the defendant being a resident of the district. Two non ests are necessary.—Doyle v. Richards, Fed. Cas. No. 4,054 [4 Cranch, C. C. 527].

[b] (Cal. 1863) Where an attachment is regularly issued by a justice at the time of the issuance of the first summons, it is not vitiated by failure to serve the first summons and the issuance of the second one.—Seaver v. Fitzgerald, 23 Cal. 86.

[c] (Ill. 1895) The return of a constable in an attachment against a nonresident before a justice of the peace, that he served the notice of suit by posting three copies thereof at three public places in the neighborhood of the justice, and mailing a copy addressed to defendant at his place of residence, though defective in not stating "the places where he posted and mailed copies," as required by Rev. St. 1893, c. 11, par. 50, § 9, is sufficient to sustain a judgment.—Pomeroy v. Rand, McNally & Co., 157 Ill. 176, 41 N. E. 636.

[d] (Iowa, 1845) Where the transcript of a justice of the peace shows an appearance by attorney on a motion to quash the attachment, it will be regarded as an appearance in general, and defendant will be estopped from a motion to dismiss the cause, when taken to the district court on appeal, for want of personal service.—Deshler v. Foster, Morris, 408.

[e] (Iowa, 1865) A notice of an attachment before a justice, posted under Rev. St. § 3951, need not specify the township in which the action is pending.—Johnson v. Dodge, 19 Iowa, 106.

[f] (Iowa, 1865) A defect in the original notice returned "Not found," in a proceeding in attachment in a justice's court, does not affect the jurisdiction over the property attached.—Johnson v. Dodge, 19 Iowa, 106.

[g] (Mich. 1851) In an attachment suit goods were seized, but no such service was made as to give the court jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. On the return of the writ the justice continued the cause to a future day. The defendant appeared before the justice, prior to the adjourned day, and demanded trial. Held, that such appearance was a waiver of service of process, and that the defendant thereby subjected his person to the jurisdiction.—O'Hara v. McEnny, 2 Mich. N. P. 164.

[h] (Mich. 1869) A special appearance by defendant in attachment who was not served, to object to the jurisdiction, is not such an appearance as will authorize the justice to proceed to judgment before the expiration of 30 days.—Wright v. Russell, 19 Mich. 346.

[i] (Mich. 1878) Return of substituted service will not give a justice jurisdiction to proceed in attachment, if it does not appear that diligent search was made for the defendant until the time allowed by law for making personal service had expired.—Brown v. Williams, 39 Mich. 755.

[j] (Mich. 1881) Where defendant, by his attorney, makes a special appearance in a justice's court for the sole purpose of moving to quash an attachment, such appearance does not authorize the service on the attorney of notice of an amendment of the return of the attachment.—Bushey v. Raths, 45 Mich. 181, 7 N. W. 802.

[k] (Mich. 1890) Where the officer serving a summons in an attachment suit is unable to find defendant, and fails to leave a copy at his last place of residence, as required by How. Ann. St. §§ 6827, 6841, or to return that there was no such last place of residence in the county, the justice before whom the action is brought does not acquire jurisdiction.—Segar v. Muskegon Shingle & Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 344, 45 N. W. 982.

[l] (Mich. 1892) Where, in a case in justice court, a writ of attachment is made returnable at a certain hour, and neither party actually appears within one hour of the time fixed, a written request by plaintiff to the justice to continue the case to a later hour is sufficient appearance to give the justice jurisdiction to act, and to grant the continuance.—Wagner v. Kellogg, 92 Mich. 616, 52 N. W. 1017.

[m] (Mich. 1895) In attachment before a justice where the service was defective, an appearance and consent to an adjournment, "without prejudice," do not waive the defective service.—Tunningly v. Butcher, 106 Mich. 35, 63 N. W. 994.

[n] (Mo. 1870) A constable's return, on an order of publication issued in an attachment proceeding before a justice of the peace, which does not show that the notice was posted at and for the time required by statute, is not sufficient to give the justice jurisdiction.—McCloon v. Beattie, 46 Mo. 391.

[o] (N. J. 1875) The defendant in attachment in a justice's court must file a bond on appearance.—Davis v. Mahany, 38 N. J. Law (9 Vroom) 104.

[p] (N. J. 1893) Under Revision, p. 54, § 65, providing that defendant, in an attachment issued by a justice of the peace, may, on or before the day set for hearing, enter his appearance by filing with the justice a bond to the plaintiff, it is absolutely necessary that defendant, in order to enter his appearance, file a bond.—Hazlitt v. Morrow, 55 N. J. Law (26 Vroom) 547, 26 Atl. 885.

[q] (N. Y. 1869) Laws 1831, c. 300, §§ 37, 38, relating to attachments, provide that, if the attachment be returned personally served on defendant, the justice shall, on the return day, proceed to hear, etc.; that if, at the return day, it appear by the return that property was attached, and that a copy of the inventory and attachment was not personally served, and defendant shall not appear, plaintiff may take out a summons against defendant; and if such summons be returned that defendant cannot be found after diligent inquiry, or that the same has been personally served on defendant, in either case, the justice shall proceed to hear, etc., as upon the summons returned personally served. Held, that by appearance the statute means a general appearance, and, if defendant does not so appear, the only thing the justice has jurisdiction to do is to issue a summons in pursuance of such statute.—Stevens v. Benton, 2 Lans. 156.

[r] (Ohio, 1877) To support an attachment issued by a justice of the peace, on an affidavit showing that the defendant so conceals himself that a summons cannot be served on him, it is not necessary that a summons should be issued in the first instance and returned "Not found."—Mawicke v. Wolf (D. C.) 2 Wkly. Law Bul. 87.

[s] (Ohio, 1878) An appearance before a justice of the peace, to move to discharge an attachment, is not a general appearance for all purposes.—Mawiecke v. Wolf, 7 Ohio Dec. 476, 3 Wkly. Law Bul. 458.

[t] (Pa. 1885) An attachment and summons were issued by an alderman, returnable nine days after date. Held that, though this was irregular, the irregularity was cured by the defendant's appearance.—McGinley v. McDonough, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 202.

[u] (Pa. 1886) Under Act July 12, 1842, § 30, requiring summons in case of attachment, where it is not personally served on the defendant, to be returnable not more than eight nor less than five days after its date, a summons returnable three days from its date is defective.—Roberts v. Wright, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 175.

[v] (Tenn. 1872) A judgment of a justice of the peace, in attachment against a nonresident, is erroneous where the justice fails to make publication for defendant, as required by Code, § 3521.—Rumbough v. White, 58 Tenn. (11 Heisk.) 260.

[w] (Tenn. 1872) Where a constable has no process requiring him to summon defendant, a return on a writ of attachment, that he has summoned the defendant, will not give a justice of the peace jurisdiction, on dismissal of the writ, to enter a judgment against the defendant, though defendant enters a plea in abatement; such plea not being an appearance.—Sherry v. Divine, 58 Tenn. (11 Heisk.) 722.

[x] (Vt. 1853) Where a writ in attachment is returnable before a justice in a different county from that in which it is served, and it is served by attaching property less than 12 days before the return day, if the defendant appears, the defect in service cannot be pleaded in bar of the action.—Hammond v. Wilder, 25 Vt. 342.

[y] (Wis. 1871) Any objection to the jurisdiction of the justice for defects in the return to a writ of attachment by which the action was commenced is waived by a general appearance and demand by the defendant for a bill of particulars.—Baizer v. Lasch, 28 Wis. 268.

§ 290. Quashing, vacating, and dissolution.

Bonds for release of property, see ante, § 287 [aa–d].

Liability of sureties on justice's bond for money paid to procure discharge of attachment, see ante, § 57.

[a] (U. S. 1838) It is not sufficient ground for quashing an attachment issued by the circuit court on a warrant from a justice of the peace, under Act Md. 1795, c. 56, that the clerk by mistake wrote the word "cash," instead of "each," in the copy of the short note sent with the writ; the mistake may be corrected.—Hard v. Stone, Fed. Cas. No. 6,046 [5 Cranch, C. C. 503].

[b] (Cal. 1865) The dismissal of an action by a justice of the peace dissolves an attachment, though the case is subsequently reinstated, and the parties appear and try it, and defendant cannot, by submitting himself anew to the jurisdiction of the court, affect the rights of strangers to the action as to the property attached.—O'Connor v. Blake, 29 Cal. 312.

[c] (Cal. 1888) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 553, providing that, "if the defendant recover judgment against the plaintiff, * * * all the property attached remaining in the sheriff's hands must be delivered to the defendant or his agent, the order of attachment shall be discharged, and the property released therefrom," an attachment of defendant's property in a justice's court is dissolved upon judgment in his favor, though plaintiff appeals.—Loveland v. Alvord C. Q. M. Co., 76 Cal. 562, 18 Pac. 682.

[d] (Md. 1846) It is no reason for quashing an attachment, that the affidavit of the creditor was made before a justice of the peace of a different county, if the warrant to issue the attachment was granted by a justice of the county in which the attachment is issued.—Dickinson v. Barnes, 3 Gill, 485.

[f] (N. H. 1853) An attachment of the real estate of a defendant is not a sufficient service of a writ returnable before a justice of the peace, and may be quashed on motion, when that is the only service.—Farley v. Day, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 527.

[g] (N. Y. 1812) Where the proceedings are regular, the justice cannot supersede the attachment, but must, on the return thereof, proceed to hear the cause, as on any other process.—Field v. McVickar, 9 Johns. 130.

[h] (N. Y. 1889) A judgment for defendant in an action before a justice of the peace, in which an attachment is issued, vacates the warrant of attachment.—Blynn v. Smith, 51 Hun, 643, 4 N. Y. Supp. 306.

[i] (N. Y. 1893) Where the summons is not personally served, and defendant's property is attached, under a warrant on an insufficient affidavit, a justice of the peace cannot enter judgment by default under Code Civ. Proc. § 2918, giving the justice such power, in the absence of personal service, only where property "has been duly attached by virtue of a warrant that has not been vacated"; as it is the justice's duty to vacate the attachment, under section 2916, giving him authority, "on his own motion," to vacate attachment "if he deems the papers on which it was granted insufficient to authorize it."—Kingsford v. Butler, 71 Hun, 598, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1094, 23 Civ. Proc. R. 228.

[j] (Ohio, 1854) A justice of the peace discharged an attachment on motion, but rendered judgment for plaintiff. Plaintiff brought an action on the judgment in the superior court, and sued out a second attachment. Held, that the justice's order discharging the attachment, being a mere collateral matter not affecting the merits of the action, and made on a summary hearing, and not appealable, did not conclude plaintiff as to any questions of fact, and hence he was entitled to a decision on the merits, on a motion to discharge the second attachment.—Brooks v. Todd, 1 Handy, 169.

[k] (Ohio, 1876) A justice of the peace may discharge an attachment made under his order, on the ground that the facts stated in the affidavit on which the order was issued are not true.—Bancroft v. Talbott, 29 Ohio St. 538.

[l] (Ohio, 1877) The rule allowing counter affidavits to be considered on a justice's hearing of a motion to discharge an attachment applies where the property attached is the personal earnings of the debtor, claimed by him to be necessary to the support of his family.—Baer v. Otto, 34 Ohio St. 11.

[m] (Tenn. 1872) Where defendants in attachment in a justice's court are residents, and are summoned to appear, and the court has jurisdiction, or its jurisdiction is not objected to, the case may stand for trial upon its merits, though the attachment be abated.—Kruger v. Stayton, 58 Tenn. (11 Heisk.) 726.

[n] (Tex. 1893) An attachment issued out of justice's court should not be quashed for a variance between the affidavit for the attachment and the affidavit to the itemized account filed by plaintiff, where there is no variance between the statement of plaintiff's cause of action as entered on the justice's docket and the affidavit for attachment.—Brasher v. Cuchia, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 690, 24 S. W. 85.

Jurisdiction of justice, see ante, §§ 177 [s], 189 [bb, d, e, k, l], 217 [c].

[a] (Colo. 1891) Under Gen. St. 1883, § 2011, providing that third persons must assert their rights to property seized under attachment issued by a justice of the peace before the trial of the main action, an appeal by a claimant from an order of the justice dismissing the petition of intervention, because filed after trial in the main action, should be dismissed, as the interveners have no standing in court.—Whalen v. McMahon, 16 Colo. 373, 26 Pac. 583.

[b] (Colo. 1891) The intervener before a justice of the peace, claiming property attached, cannot, by giving a forthcoming bond, become repossessed of property attached pending a determination of the intervention proceeding.—Kinnear v. Flanders, 17 Colo. 11, 28 Pac. 327.

[c] (Colo. 1896) Where, in an action in a justice's court, aided by attachment, a third person claims the attached property, on appeal to the county court by defendant alone the intervener cannot question the correctness of the decision of the justice against his claim.—Winship v. May, 7 Colo. App. 355, 43 Pac. 904.

[d] (Conn. 1874) Gen. St. tit. 1, § 324, providing for a bill in equity on interpleader in foreign attachment, and empowering a court of equity to take entire jurisdiction of the matter pending at law, applies to a foreign attachment before a justice of the peace.—Darrow v. Adams Exp. Co., 41 Conn. 525.

[f] (Ky. 1822) An officer executing an attachment issued by a justice of the peace has no authority to impanel a jury to inquire into the right of property attached.—Dickey v. Evans, 12 Ky. (2 Litt.) 130.

[g] (Mo. 1875) Where a number of horses were attached before a justice, and the jury found for an interpleader "in the sum of $150 for horses," etc., a judgment rendered thereon "for the possession of the property mentioned in the interplea" was unauthorized.—Mills v. Thomson, 61 Mo. 415.

[h] (N. J. 1833) Under Rev. Laws, p. 357, § 14, providing that, if the sheriff or other officer shall attach any goods claimed by a third person as his property, it shall be lawful for such sheriff or officer to summon a jury to try the right of property, the words "or other officer" must be confined in meaning to coroners, or such officers other than sheriffs to whom it appertains to execute process out of the superior courts, and hence a constable has no right to call a jury to try the claim of a third person to property levied on under an attachment issued out of the court for the trial of small causes.—Stryker v. Skillman, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 189.

[i] (N. Y. 1857) Where a bond is given or offered by the claimant of goods which have been attached in double the amount of the demand, it is sufficient to satisfy the statute, though there may have been property attached to a much larger amount than double the value of the debt.—Kamena v. Warner, 15 How. Prac. 5, reversed (1858) 18 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Duer) 698.

[j] (N. Y. 1858) Where a constable, on an attachment issued out of a justice court against one person, seizes and removes property found in the possession of another, and the latter claims to be the owner, and desires to proceed under Rev. St. pt. 3, tit. 4, § 31, to perfect a right to have the property restored to his possession, he must, among other things, give a bond in a penalty equal to double the value of the property attached, though such value greatly exceeds the debt on which it was seized.—Kamena v. Wanner, 13 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Duer) 698, reversing (1857) 15 How. Prac. 5.

[k] (N. C. 1835) The word "appeal," in Act 1794 (Revision, c. 414), § 9, which provides that where property attached is claimed before a justice by any other person, and the intervention of a jury may be necessary to determine the right, the party claiming such property may appeal to the next county court, is not used in its technical sense, and it is not necessary, or regular, for the justice to pass on a claim of a third person to property attached, before such person can take his case to the county court.—Simpson v. Harry, 18 N. C. 202.

[a] (Del. 1850) In attachment from a justice's court, it is not enough for the return of the officer to state that notice was given "according to law"; aliter, if the justice so state.—Johnson v. Layton, 5 Har. 252.

[b] (Mich. 1873) A justice's writ of attachment cannot be returned "Not found" until the last day for serving the same personally has expired: it is the duty of the officer to make personal service when he can, and the jurisdiction to take any subsequent proceedings depends upon a proper return of a diligent attempt to get service.—Withington v. Southworth, 26 Mich. 381.

[c] (Mich. 1879) Where the marshal has no authority to serve process outside of a city, his return to a writ of attachment issued by a justice will not confer jurisdiction to proceed, unless it shows affirmatively that the writ was served within the city.—Alverson v. Dennison, 40 Mich. 179.

[e] (Mich. 1881) Where a constable returns that he has taken property under an attachment issued out of a justice's court, but the return is silent as to the place of seizure, it will be presumed to have been "within the county," as required by Comp. Laws, § 5275.—Bushey v. Raths, 45 Mich. 181, 7 N. W. 802.

[f] (Miss. 1883) The validity of a return on an attachment issued by a justice with the proper indorsement of the receipt and service thereof by the constable is not affected by an indorsement on the writ of its receipt for the constable by a sheriff who was one of the plaintiffs.—Hart v. Forbes, 60 Miss. 745.

[g] (Mo. 1894) A constable's return, though in fact false, that he levied an attachment issued by a justice on defendant's property, and made personal service on the defendant, is conclusive on the parties, and sufficient to give the court jurisdiction.—Shanklin v. Francis, 59 Mo. App. 178, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 15.

[h] (N. J. 1857) To justify a justice in appointing a day of trial, it must clearly appear by the constable's return to an attachment that some property has been attached.—Lentz v. Callin, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 218.

[i] (N. Y. 1851) Where a constable returns on an attachment from a justice that he has delivered to each of the defendants personally a copy of the attachment and inventory, the return is prima facie sufficient, though the officer does not state that the copies served were certified by him.—Van Kirk v. Wilds, 11 Barb. 520.

[j] (N. Y. 1853) The nonimprisonment act requires personal service on the defendant, if he can be found in the county, instead of leaving the copy at his last place of residence. The return to an attachment issued by a justice recited that the officer seized the goods and chattels, etc., and, the defendant not being found in the county, left a copy of the attachment, etc., with B., in whose possession the goods were found, the defendant having no place of residence in the county. Held, that the return was sufficient.—Rosenfield v. Howard, 15 Barb. 546.

[k] (N. Y. 1861) An officer's return to an attachment issued from a justice's court, which stated that "because the defendant could not be found in the city and county of New York, I left a copy of the within attachment and of said inventory, duly certified by me, at the last place of residence of the said defendant," without stating where his last place of residence was, is defective. The officer should have stated the place of residence specifically, but if not specifically, at least that it was within the county of New York.—Egbert v. Watson, 21 How. Prac. 429.

[m] (N. Y. 1862) The fact that the attachment, together with the inventory, was served by leaving copies with the person in possession of the goods, must appear from the officer's return.—Stone v. Miller, 62 Barb. 430.

[n] (N. Y. 1864) 3 Rev. St. (5th Ed.) p. 431, § 28, requiring an officer seizing property under an attachment from a justice's court to leave a copy of the attachment, with an inventory of the property, with the one in whose possession the property is found, if defendant cannot be personally served, is not shown to be complied with by a return showing service on defendant's wife in his absence, without showing that she had possession of the property, or that a copy of the inventory thereof had been served on her.—Barnaman v. Williams, 18 Abb. Prac. 158; Williams v. Barnaman, 28 How. Prac. 59.

[o] (N. Y. 1864) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to proceed with an action in which an attachment has been issued, until the officer has made a return thereof showing service as required by statute.—Barnaman v. Williams, 18 Abb. Prac. 158; Williams v. Barnaman, 28 How. Prac. 59.

[r] (Wis. 1851) In the absence of a return of a writ of attachment at the time fixed therefor, the justice has no authority to proceed with the cause.—Selby v. Platts, 3 Chand. 183, 3 Pin. 170.

Security in general, see ante, § 283.

[a] (Mo. 1863) Where a bond for the forthcoming of the property attached before a justice is taken by the officer, and the property is not produced in obedience to the judgment and order of court, the plaintiff in the attachment has no cause of action upon the bond, either by motion or suit, until the bond is duly assigned to him. Rev. Code 1855, p. 266.—McDowell v. Morgan, 33 Mo. 555.

[b] (N. Y. 1844) If a suit be commenced before a justice on a long process against a nonresident, and the plaintiff fails to appear on the return day, the defendant may recover damages in trespass, or waive the irregularity and take his remedy on the attachment bond.—Bowne v. Mellor, 6 Hill, 496.

[c] (N. Y. 1846) Where a claimant of attached property gives bond, pursuant to the statute, and the plaintiff afterwards brings an action on such bond, the latter need not show that the justice had jurisdiction to issue the attachment.—Whiley v. Sherman, 3 Denio, 185.

[d] (N. Y. 1857) In an action brought under the old practice on a bond given on an application being made to a justice of the peace, for an attachment against property, the defendant may, under the plea of non est factum, prove, in mitigation of damages, that the property was sold by a constable, and a portion of the proceeds applied by him to the payment of an execution issued in another suit.—Bennett v. Brown, 31 Barb. 158.

[e] (N. Y. 1857) Where, on the issuing of an attachment by a justice, a bond is given, conditioned, in case of failure to recover, to pay all damages and costs which the obligee may sustain by reason of the issuing of the attachment, and the applicant recovers a judgment before the justice, which is afterwards reversed by the court of common pleas, the obligee is entitled to recover, as part of his damages, the costs incurred in the court of common pleas.—Bennett v. Brown, 31 Barb. 158, affirmed (1859) 20 N. Y. 99.

[f] (N. Y. 1859) An attachment bond is not discharged by the recovery of a judgment by the obligor in justice's court, which was reversed on appeal.—Bennett v. Brown, 20 N. Y. 99.

—— of officers, see "Sheriffs and Constables," III.

[a] (Ala. 1850) A declaration in case for wrongfully and vexatiously suing out an attachment before a justice of the peace in Mississippi, which does not show that such justice had authority by the laws of that state to issue attachments, and which contains no averment connecting the defendant with the levy thereof, discloses no ground of action, and is bad on demurrer.—Marshall v. Betner, 17 Ala. 832.

[b] (Ill. 1874) A resident of Indiana commenced an attachment suit before a justice of the peace in Illinois, against another resident of Indiana, who was temporarily in Illinois with property which, by the law of Indiana, was exempt from attachment. The attachment writ was levied on that property. It appeared that both plaintiff and defendant lived in the same county in Indiana, and that the defendant could have been easily found in the county and state where both parties resided. It further appeared that the debt sued for was a just debt, and past due. Held, that there was nothing in these facts to justify a finding that the plaintiff was guilty of any abuse of process, or that he had sought the jurisdiction of the courts of Illinois for a fraudulent purpose.—Mitchell v. Shook, 72 Ill. 492.

[c] (Ky. 1838) An attachment issued by a justice having jurisdiction, the recitals of which, and of the bond taken by him, authorize the emanation of the process, and nothing appearing upon the face of the proceedings, or from the proof, to invalidate it, is a good justification in an action of trespass against the plaintiff therein, though it appears that he procured it to be issued and executed without cause, and that it was afterwards discontinued, and the property restored.—Lovier v. Gilpin, 36 Ky. (6 Dana) 321.

[d] (Ky. 1842) Where attachment issues from a justice in a case in which he has jurisdiction, it is a justification, unless causelessly issued to the plaintiff in an action of trespass vi et armis.—Banta v. Reynolds, 42 Ky. (3 B. Mon.) 80.

[f] (N. Y. 1844) Where a party proceeds by a justice's attachment to avoid a sale by a debtor as fraudulent with respect to creditors, and is sued in trespass for the wrongful taking, he must show that the justice had jurisdiction.—Van Etten v. Hurst, 6 Hill, 311, 41 Am. Dec. 748.

[g] (N. Y. 1852) Where a justice of the peace issued an attachment under the act to abolish imprisonment for debt, without the proof required by statute, or bond filed, the party on whose application the attachment issued was answerable as a wrongdoer.—Davis v. Marshall, 14 Barb. 96.

[h] (N. Y. 1866) Attachment proceedings in a justice's court against an absconding debtor must comply strictly with the requirements of the statutes providing therefor, or they will be held void for want of jurisdiction; and the judgment creditor taking property thereunder will be held liable to an action for damages for wrongful taking and conversion of such property.—Kelly v. Archer, 48 Barb. 68.

[i] (N. Y. 1889) Where the complaint does not allege that the property levied on was not afterwards returned, or that damages had been incurred as counsel fees, and there is no proof of any injury to credit caused by the attachment, plaintiff is only entitled to nominal damages.—Blynn v. Smith, 51 Hun, 643, 4 N. Y. Supp. 306.

[j] (N. Y. 1889) The levy of a warrant of an attachment unlawfully issued by a justice entitles defendant to nominal damages, and he need not show that the levy was accompanied by damages.—Blynn v. Smith, 51 Hun, 643, 4 N. Y. Supp. 306.

[k] (Ohio, 1857) In an action to recover damages for the wrongful suing out of an attachment in a justice court, an allegation in the petition that the original action was tried by a jury, a verdict found for the defendant therein, and that a judgment was thereupon rendered by the justice against plaintiff, discharging the attachment, and for costs, is a sufficient allegation of the final termination of the original action and attachment proceedings.—Zigler v. Russell, 2 Ohio Dec. 518.

[l] (Wis. 1851) Where a justice of the peace entered judgment in favor of a plaintiff in an attachment suit in which the writ had not been returned and in which the defendant did not appear, and defendant's property was taken and sold under an execution thereunder, the attachment plaintiff was liable in trespass, or trover, for the value thereof.—Selby v. Platts, 3 Chand. 183, 3 Pin. 170.

[a] (Ark. 1844) A justice of the peace having jurisdiction of an action against a corporation may issue the process of garnishment against a debtor of the corporation.—Woodruff v. Griffith, 5 Ark. (5 Pike) 354.

[b] (Ark. 1877) A creditor filed an account and affidavit, as in case of an attachment, with a justice of the peace, against his debtor, and, without process against the latter, sued out a garnishment against a third person. At the return day of the garnishment a summons was issued against the debtor, and served, and judgment rendered against him by default. Held, that the proceeding was not begun by attachment, and that the garnishment pending the judgment was void.—Littlejohn v. Lewis, 32 Ark. 423.

[c] (Colo. 1894) Under Gen. St. § 2008, limiting the liability of a garnishee in a justice court to debts or property for which he would otherwise be liable to defendant, an agent of defendant's debtor, through whom payment was to be made, cannot be garnished.—Voorhies v. Denver Hardware Co., 4 Colo. App. 428, 36 Pac. 65.

[d] (Ga. 1865) A distress warrant was issued by a justice of the peace in favor of S., against G., returnable to the inferior court. No affidavit of defense was made by G. Held, that process of garnishment could not, by the statute, be based on this proceeding.—Smith v. Green, 34 Ga. 178.

[e] (Ill. 1874) A judgment debtor in the circuit court can be garnished on process issued by a justice of the peace.—Luton v. Hoehn, 72 Ill. 81.

[g] (Ind. 1889) In an action against a justice of the peace, plaintiff alleged that he had been summoned as a garnishee in attachment proceedings before the justice, and that judgment had been rendered against him on a note, the property of defendant therein, which he paid, but that the justice failed to enter the judgment against him, and the evidence thereof was not preserved, and he was compelled to pay the note at the suit of a subsequent holder; that the justice and his sureties had promised to reimburse him on the abandonment of his right of action on the official bond. Rev. St. 1881, § 936, provides that judgment shall not be rendered against a garnishee until the action against the defendant in attachment is determined, and, if plaintiff fails to recover against either defendant or garnishee, the garnishee shall be discharged. Held that, as according to the complaint the judgment rendered against the defendant in attachment was a personal one merely, if a judgment had been rendered against the garnishee it would have been without authority of law, and void.—Emery v. Royal, 117 Ind. 299, 20 N. E. 150.

[h] (Mich.) A judgment recovered before one justice of the peace cannot be garnished in proceedings before another justice of the peace.—(1880) Sievers v. Woodburn Sarven Wheel Co., 43 Mich. 275, 5 N. W. 311; (1882) Noyes v. Foster, 48 Mich. 273, 12 N. W. 221.

[i] (Mich. 1882) A defendant in a suit before a justice of the peace for a debt cannot, pending the suit, be garnished before another justice by a creditor or a plaintiff.—Custer v. White, 49 Mich. 262, 13 N. W. 583.

[j] (Mo. 1870) A judgment, based on the return of a constable to an order of publication, issued in an attachment proceeding before a justice of the peace, showing that the same was executed by posting in four public places, but failing to show that it was posted 20 days before the day when defendant was obliged to appear, as provided by Wag. St. p. 196, § 77, is void, and cannot sustain a judgment against a garnishee.—McCloon v. Beattie, 46 Mo. 391.

[k] (Mo. 1878) Under Wag. St. p. 197, § 84, not allowing evidences of debt to be seized under a justice's attachment, one is not liable as garnishee, on appeal from the justice's judgment, merely for having in his possession a note belonging to the principal debtor.—Osborne v. Schutt, 67 Mo. 712.

[m] (Pa. 1844) Under Act June 16, 1836, § 35, fees due a jury are not the subject of an attachment in execution on a justice's judgment.—Simons v. Whartenaby, 2 Clark, 438.

[n] (Pa. 1846) Money in the hands of a debtor of a decedent is not subject to an attachment in execution at the suit of a creditor, on a justice's judgment recovered against the administrator of such decedent.—Hartshorne v. Henderson, 3 Clark, 511.

[o] (Pa. 1881) Without an execution issued on a judgment remaining unsatisfied, before an alderman or justice of the peace, and return of "No goods" (Act April 15, 1845), such magistrate has no jurisdiction to issue an attachment to satisfy the same.—McGovern v. McTague, 13 Lanc. Bar, 119.

[p] (Pa. 1887) There must be a return of "No goods" before a justice can issue an attachment execution.—Mowry v. Thomas, 1 Wilcox, 106.

[q] (Pa. 1888) Act April 5, 1845, conferring jurisdiction on aldermen in attachment execution in proceedings to levy on stock, debts, and deposits of money, and providing that the wages of laborers, or the salary of any person, shall not be liable to attachment in the hands of the employer, confers no jurisdiction on a justice to levy on wages on an attachment execution.—Baker v. Harding, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 21.

[r] (Pa. 1890) Under Act April 15, 1845 (P. L. 459, § 2), which provides that "any justice of the peace before whom any judgment remains unsatisfied, and an execution has returned no goods, may * * * issue an attachment in the nature of an execution," the issue and return of an execution is a condition precedent to the right to issue such attachment execution.—Snyder v. Miller, 19 Atl. 309.

[s] (Pa. 1893) Act May 8, 1876, does not authorize an attachment against wages, for board, until after judgment.—Thatcher v. Beam (Com. Pl.) 3 Lack. Jur. 177, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 109, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 351.

[t] (Pa. 1895) The provision of Act May 8, 1876, for attachment of wages for board, that "justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction of attachment in case for such purpose," does not authorize attachment as an original process, or otherwise than on a judgment.—McCarty v. Dougherty (Com. Pl.) 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 86, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 267; Dillon v. Treverton (Com. Pl.) 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 89, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 266.

Appearance as curing defects in affidavit, see post, § 297 [y].

[a] (Wis.) An affidavit for garnishment from a justice's court, which omits to state that the money, effects, goods, and credits of the principal debtor in the garnishee's possession are not exempt, is fatally defective.—(1878) Steen v. Norton, 45 Wis. 412; (1879) Rasmussen v. McCabe, 46 Wis. 600, 1 N. W. 196.

[b] (Wis. 1879) The affidavit in garnishment proceedings in a justice court must conform to the statute, or the justice acquires no jurisdiction.—Rasmussen v. McCabe, 46 Wis. 600, 1 N. W. 196.

[c] (Wis. 1881) An affidavit for garnishment in a justice court is not bad because it states that affiant "verily believes," instead of the statutory form, "has good reason to believe"; the former being the stronger form, and perjury being assignable upon it.—Russell v. Ralph, 53 Wis. 328, 10 N. W. 518.

[d] (Wis. 1881) An affidavit for garnishment in justice court, that the garnishee has property, credits, moneys, and effects, is a sufficient statement that he has personal property.—Russell v. Ralph, 53 Wis. 328, 10 N. W. 518.

[e] (Wis. 1881) An affidavit for garnishment in a justice's court is not defective because it uses the disjunctive form, "is indebted to, or has property."—Russell v. Ralph, 53 Wis. 328, 10 N. W. 518.

[f] (Wis. 1886) The amendment of Rev. St. §§ 2753, 2768, by Laws 1881, c. 86, and Laws 1885, c. 286, requiring that, in garnishment proceedings in the circuit court, the affidavit shall state the amount of plaintiff's claim against defendant over and above all offsets, does not, by mere implication, amend Rev. St. § 3716, prescribing the practice in such cases in justices' courts.—Jones v. St. Onge, 67 Wis. 520, 30 N. W. 927.

§ 297. Writ or summons, notice, service and return, and appearance.

Return of nulla bona as condition precedent to issuance of attachment execution, see ante, § 295 [o, p, r].

[a] (Ala. 1827) Where no valid service of summons has been had on the garnishee, in an action against a nonresident defendant based on such garnishment, a judgment rendered on the affidavit of such garnishee is erroneous, and will not support a judgment against the principal defendant.—Lawrence v. Ware, 1 Stew. 33.

[b] (Del. 1835) Where an attachment clause is added to an execution against a garnishee on a justice's judgment, the garnishee must be summoned to appear at the return day of the execution.—McClay v. Houston's Adm'r, 1 Har. 529.

[bb] (Del. 1881) Where a garnishee, attached on an alias fi. fa. issued by a justice of the peace more than three years after the original was returned, appears to it and answers, he thereby waives objection to the process, and cannot reverse it on certiorari.—Carey v. Brinton, 6 Houst. 340.

[c] (Ga. 1884) A garnishee is not bound to answer where summons was served on him only nine days before the justice's court to which it was returned.—Massengale v. McGinty, 73 Ga. 120.

[e] (Ga. 1886) Prior to Const. 1877 (Code, § 5153), providing that justice courts must sit "monthly, and at fixed times and places," there was no fixed time for holding such courts. Code 1882, § 4162, providing that written notice shall be given garnishee by plaintiff of the traverse of his answer, and of the time appointed by the justice of the peace for hearing the issue formed on the same, is copied from Acts 1873, p. 48. By Acts 1880, pp. 56, 57 (Code, § 4161), the garnishee must answer at the term of the justice court at which the garnishment is returnable, except that where the summons is served within the 10 days next previous to such term, the answer goes over to the next term. Held that, the time and place for hearing the issue being fixed by the constitution and the subsequent act, the reason for giving such notice had ceased, and the statutory provision therefor become inoperative.—Mandeville v. Askew, 78 Ga. 18.

[f] (Ind. 1866) In a proceeding in attachment before a justice of the peace against a nonresident, where the writ of attachment is returned "No property found," and a summons in garnishment is served, the record of the justice must show that notice of the pendency of the suit was given by three successive publications, the last of which was 30 days before the day of trial, in order to support a judgment for the plaintiff.—Andrews v. Powell, 27 Ind. 303.

[g] (Ind. 1883) In an attachment before a justice of the peace, where the summons against the principal defendant was returned unserved, and no property had been attached, there can be no valid judgment against the garnishee, until due notice by publication to the principal defendant had been had.—Newman v. Manning, 89 Ind. 422.

[h] (Ind. 1890) Under Rev. St. Mo. § 473, providing that "when the defendant cannot be summoned, and his property and effects shall be attached," the justice may make an order requiring plaintiff to give service to defendant by advertisement, a justice in Missouri acquired no jurisdiction by publication of notice, where the only attachment was by garnishment of wages which were exempt by the laws of Indiana.—Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Baker, 122 Ind. 433, 24 N. E. 83.

[i] (Mich. 1874) Where a garnishee defendant on the return day of the garnishment summons appears and admits his indebtedness to the principal defendant, and authorizes the justice to enter judgment, he thereby waives the want of declaration, second process, and proof, and is estopped from asserting the invalidity of the judgment in a collateral suit.—Bigalow v. Barre, 30 Mich. 1.

[j] (Mich. 1890) A garnishee who appears before the justice and pleads the general issue does not thereby waive objections to defects in the proceedings against the principal defendant, but may raise such objections on appeal to the circuit court.—Segar v. Muskegon Shingle & Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 344, 45 N. W. 982.

[k] (Mo. 1862) The return day of a garnishment, on execution from a justice of the peace, is the next law day of the justice, and not the return day of the execution. Rev. Code 1855, p. 965, § 11.—Wise v. Hull, 32 Mo. 209.

[l, m] (Mo. 1884) A garnishee who appears before a justice of the peace without having been legally garnished, and answers interrogatories without objecting to the jurisdiction, is, nevertheless, not estopped from setting up that objection in the circuit court.—Fletcher v. Wear, 81 Mo. 524.

[n] (Mo. 1884) A justice of the peace has no authority to appoint any one to serve a garnishment attachment.—Fletcher v. Wear, 81 Mo. 524.

[o] (Mo. 1886) Under Rev. St. 1879, § 2862, a garnishment summons cannot be served by a constable specially deputized for that service.—Mangold v. Dooley, 89 Mo. 111, 1 S. W. 126.

[p] (N. H. 1856) In trustee proceedings before a justice of the peace, where plaintiff and principal defendant reside in one county, and the trustee in another, the writ should be directed to the sheriff of any county or his deputy, or to any constable of each of the towns wherein either of the parties is resident.—Brown v. Dudley, 33 N. H. 511.

[t] (Tenn. 1888) The appearance and answer of a garnishee before a justice in response to a summons, reciting therein a judgment and unsatisfied execution, does not waive the necessity of proving such judgment and unsatisfied execution in the action against the garnishee.—Miller v. Wilson, 86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 495, 7 S. W. 638.

[u] (Tenn. 1891) Where the notice in a garnishment proceeding in a justice's court on an unsatisfied execution was defective because it was verbal, instead of in writing, the issuance and service of a scire facias, and the failure of the garnishee to defend, will not cure the defect.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Brooks, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 161, 16 S. W. 77, 25 Am. St. Rep. 673.

[v] (Tenn. 1891) Code, § 3800, provides that the officer in whose hand is an unsatisfied execution may summon in writing any person as garnishee to appear and answer the garnishment. On a petition to quash the execution against the garnishee issued by a justice of the peace, it appeared that the officer read to the garnishee's agent the execution in the case against the principal defendant, and verbally told him to appear and answer. Held, that the notice was not sufficient to warrant a conditional judgment against the garnishee.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Brooks, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 161, 16 S. W. 77, 25 Am. St. Rep. 673.

[w] (Tex. 1895) A justice of the peace of one county has jurisdiction, for all purposes, of a garnishee living in another county, who voluntarily submits to his jurisdiction by filing an answer, though his answer is defective; and this is not changed by Rev. St. art. 195, providing for the issuance of a commission to take the answers of a garnishee residing in another county when he fails to make answer to the writ, and articles 203, 204, providing that if a commission issues, and the garnishee fails to answer fully, the court may render judgment against him.—Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. v. Edwards, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 537, 29 S. W. 418.

[x] (Wis. 1878) In special statutory proceedings of garnishment the justice of the peace acquires jurisdiction only by compliance with statutory provision, and a voluntary appearance by defendant cannot waive the defect.—Steen v. Norton, 45 Wis. 412.

[z] (Wis. 1894) Where a principal defendant who had not been served with summons appeared in a garnishment proceeding in order to claim a fund garnished as exempt, such appearance did not give the court jurisdiction of the defendant in the principal action.—State v. Cordes, 87 Wis. 373, 58 N. W. 771.

[zz] (Wis. 1894) Where, in a garnishment proceeding before a justice of the peace, the defendant was not personally served, and the notice published was that under the statute relating to attachment, and not that relating to garnishments, the justice had no jurisdiction.—State v. Cordes, 87 Wis. 373, 58 N. W. 771.

[a] (Ill. 1895) Judgment against a garnishee in an action brought before a justice under Rev. St. 1893, c. 11, par. 42, § 1, declaring that attachments may be issued by a justice where the demand does not exceed his jurisdiction, and paragraph 47, § 6, directing the constable to summon as garnishees all persons whom plaintiff may direct, should be only for the amount of the liability of defendant to plaintiff.—Pomeroy v. Rand, McNally & Co., 157 Ill. 176, 41 N. E. 636, reversing Rand v. Pomeroy, (1894) 54 Ill. App. 522, and distinguishing Stahl v. Webster (1850) 11 Ill. (1 Peck) 511.

[b] (Ohio, 1881) Where a plaintiff in garnishment before a justice, against a nonresident defendant, fails to have the cause continued for a definite time between 40 and 60 days, as required by Rev. St. § 6496, and does not advertise for service on the defendant, he loses his priority of lien on the fund garnished, though the garnishee did not answer for three months before.—Vorhess v. Fisher (D. C.) 8 Ohio Dec. 184, 6 Wkly. Law Bul. 202.

his failure to respond to a notice to produce books and papers, the garnishee is entitled to appeal to a jury in the same court.—Boozer v. Fuller, 88 Ga. 295, 14 S. E. 615.

[b] (Ill. 1885) Under Garnishment Act (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 62) §§ 1, 4, 6, 8, a garnishee before a justice of the peace, when properly summoned, must appear in person before the justice and submit to an oral examination, under oath, and no one else can perform his duty for him.—Cornell v. Payne, 115 Ill. 63, 3 N. E. 718.

[c] (Ill. 1892) A garnishee in a justice court, if he has a defense of a dilatory character, must present the same before an issue on the merits has been formed and is being tried.—Ellis v. Galesburg Base Ball Ass'n, 45 Ill. App. 279.

[d] (Ind. 1873) Where a defendant in an attachment proceeding is personally present in court, a garnishee is not required to question the jurisdictional legality of the proceedings, or their regularity as to the defendant.—Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Alvey, 43 Ind. 180.

[e] (Mich. 1880) Where a garnishee's disclosure is too ambiguous to show whether an indebtedness exists, or, if so, to whom, it will not sustain a judgment in a justice court, as the garnishee is a witness for plaintiff, who has the burden of making out by him a prima facie case.—Spears v. Chapman, 43 Mich. 541, 5 N. W. 1038.

[f] (Mich. 1880) A garnishee's disclosure in the justice court must be explicit in its admission to warrant judgment.—Weirich v. Scribner, 44 Mich. 73, 6 N. W. 91.

[g] (Minn. 1875) In garnishment proceedings in a justice court, though the garnishee denied the indebtedness, if the facts which he discloses clearly shows that he owes the defendant a debt which is subject to garnishment proceedings, judgment should go against him.—Donnelly v. O'Connor, 22 Minn. 309.

[h] (Mo. 1865) When a garnishee, in a justice's court, answers that he will not be able to state the exact amount due the defendant in money until a future day, inasmuch as he is to pay a part of the debt in another way than in money, the court may afterwards allow him to file an amended answer on which the case may be tried.—Karnes v. Pritchard, 36 Mo. 135.

[i] (N. C. 1849) An attachment issued by a justice in chambers, and not made returnable at any time or place, being void, a garnishee may object such invalidity of the attachment to any judgment being given against himself.—Houston v. Porter, 32 N. C. 174.

[j] (Ohio, 1883) A garnishee summoned to answer in an action before a justice of the peace may interpose any offset or defense he may have.—Secor v. Witter, 39 Ohio St. 218.

[k] (R. I. 1885) Where the judgment in trustee process before a justice of the peace has been rendered against the trustee by default, he may show that he filed his affidavit or defense, and should not have been charged, in an action against him for neglect, to file such sworn statement.—Eddy v. Providence Mach. Co., 15 R. I. 7, 22 Atl. 1116.

[m] (Tenn. 1871) The recital in the judgment of a justice, that a garnishee came before him and admitted the necessary facts to charge him, is not conclusive on the garnishee; unless his examination is in writing, and signed by him, he may attack such recital in a proper case by petition in certiorari.—Pickler v. Rainey, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 335.

[n] (Tenn. 1881) A garnishee cannot claim that the justice's execution on which the garnishment notice was based was issued on an insufficient affidavit.—Cowan v. Lowry, 75 Tenn. (7 Lea) 620.

[o] (Tenn. 1891) A garnishee in a justice's court cannot contest the validity of a judgment against the original defendant on which the garnishment proceedings are based.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Brooks, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 161, 16 S. W. 77, 25 Am. St. Rep. 673.

[p] (Vt. 1858) A trustee in a suit brought by the trustee process before a justice of the peace is not entitled to tax costs for counsel fees before the justice.—Miller v. Williams, 30 Vt. 386.

[q] (Wis. 1851) In a garnishment process commenced before a justice of the peace, the transcript of the justice docket showed a proper judgment against the principal debtor, and the entry of final judgment against the garnishee was as follows, "It is by the court considered and adjudged that the said A. B. stand liable for the amount of this judgment, and that the plaintiff may have execution against the said garnishee." Held, that the judgment was void for irregularity, as the docket should have disclosed the entry of a separate suit and separate proceedings against the garnishee, and a judgment as in ordinary cases.—Atchison v. Rosalip, 4 Chand. 12, 3 Pin. 288.

[r] (Wis. 1886) In garnishment proceedings before a justice of the peace, the defendant in the original action may, under Rev. St. § 3723, appear in the justice court, and on the appeal in the circuit court, and defend the proceedings against the garnishee, on the ground that the indebtedness of the garnishee to him is not liable to attachment.—Jones v. St. Onge, 67 Wis. 520, 30 N. W. 927.

[a] (Ala. 1827) Where an action has been brought in a justice court against a nonresident, based on an attachment against a garnishee in the state, judgment cannot be rendered against the defendant by default, until after judgment shall have been rendered against the garnishee.—Lawrence v. Ware, 1 Stew. 33.

[b] (Ala. 1831) Though one answer of a garnishee in justice court might authorize more than one judgment, it would be irregular, if not erroneous, to render but one judgment on two or more executions returned nulla bona, notwithstanding they might be at the instance of the same plaintiff against the same original defendant.—Witherspoon v. Barber, 3 Stew. 335.

[c] (Ala. 1852) Defendant sold and delivered to plaintiff a slave, in consideration that plaintiff would pay all the debts then owing by defendant. Plaintiff afterwards commenced suit by attachment in justice court against A., to whom, at the time of the sale, defendant was indebted in the amount of a decree previously rendered against him in the court of probate in favor of A., and defendant was summoned as garnishee, and suffered judgment to be rendered against him, on which execution was afterwards issued. Held, that the execution could not be set aside, and satisfaction of the judgment be entered, on proof of this agreement.—Matthews v. Robinson, 20 Ala. 130.

[d] (Ark. 1869) A justice of the peace may set aside a judgment by default and grant a new trial in a garnishment proceeding as in other cases.—Smith v. Parker, 25 Ark. 518.

[e] (Colo. 1893) A justice's judgment entered by default making final, under a writ of scire facias, a conditional judgment entered by default August 1, 1891, against plaintiffs, as garnishees of N., in a writ of garnishment dated and served July 27, 1891, citing plaintiffs to appear July 1, 1891, is void.—Rice v. American Nat. Bank, 3 Colo. App. 81, 31 Pac. 1024.

[f] (Colo. 1893) A justice's conditional judgment entered August 1, 1891, by default, against plaintiffs, as garnishees of N., in a writ of garnishment dated and served July 27, 1891, citing plaintiffs to appear July 1, 1891, is void.—Rice v. American Nat. Bank, 3 Colo. App. 81, 31 Pac. 1024.

[g] (Del. 1845) On an execution attachment from a justice of the peace, judgment cannot be rendered against the garnishee on a day subsequent to the return day of the execution, except by an adjournment for that purpose.—Hamilton's Garnishee v. Allen, 4 Har. 326.

[h] (Ga. 1871) Under Code, § 3228, a final judgment cannot be entered against a garnishee until a term subsequent to that at which he is required to answer, and a judgment entered before such time is illegal.—Scott v. Patrick, 44 Ga. 188.

[i] (Ga. 1881) Where a justice who issued a garnishment told the garnishee that he had until the next term of court to answer, and the garnishee thereby failed to answer within 10 days, such statement was not an excuse for failure to answer, and would not prevent a judgment against him by default.—Farley v. Bloodworth, 66 Ga. 349.

[j] (Kan. 1885) Where a final judgment has been rendered against a garnishee by a justice of the peace, this being beyond his powers, the garnishee may perpetually enjoin its enforcement by execution.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Reid, 34 Kan. 410, 8 Pac. 846.

[k] (Me. 1835) A judgment of a justice of the peace against one summoned as trustee under a process of foreign attachment in a case within his jurisdiction, though erroneous, cannot be avoided collaterally, but may be enforced until reversed on writ of error.—Boynton v. Fly, 12 Me. (3 Fairf.) 17.

[l] (Mo. 1870) A garnishee in execution before a justice is not entitled to an injunction against the plaintiff simply on the ground that the amount seized exceeded the jurisdiction of the justice, or that judgment was entered against him before the return day of the writ. In order to entitle him to such remedy, he must show that it would be against conscience to execute the judgment complained of, that he has not been remiss in his own duties, and that he has been deprived of his right by some fraud or accident.—Davis v. Staples, 45 Mo. 567.

[m] (Mo. 1878) Entry of judgment against a garnishee without the notice promised him by the justice, held to entitle him to an injunction against the execution.—Watkins v. Gray, 5 Mo. App. 592.

[n] (Mo. 1880) A motion to set aside a judgment given by default by a justice must be filed within 10 days, and the fact that the judgment was for money, and rendered against a garnishee without evidence that he was indebted to the defendant, forms no exception to the rule.—Roach v. Montserratt Coal Co., 71 Mo. 398.

[o] (Neb. 1892) In a suit to enjoin a judgment causing an apparent lien on land, rendered in a garnishment proceeding after judgment, where it is alleged and admitted by the pleadings that no summons or notice was served on the garnishee nor examination had, but that, in fraud of his rights, the justice found that there was due him from the debtor a certain sum, and gave judgment therefor, whereas in fact he was not indebted to him, the court will declare the judgment void, and not merely set aside the apparent lien thereof.—Cobbey v. Wright, 34 Neb. 771, 52 N. W. 713.

[p] (Neb. 1892) In a petition to enjoin a judgment rendered in a proceeding in garnishment after judgment, it was alleged that no summons or notice had been served on the garnishee, and that he had not been examined, but that, in fraud of his rights, the justice found that there was due from him to the debtor a certain sum, and rendered judgment accordingly, when in fact he was not indebted to the debtor. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to an injunction.—Cobbey v. Wright, 34 Neb. 771, 52 N. W. 713.

[q] (Tex. 1871) A justice of the peace has no authority, without further proceedings or proof, to render a judgment against a garnishee who has answered that his indebtedness is on a note not yet due.—Kapp v. Leel, 33 Tex. 811.

[r] (Vt. 1849) A trustee in a suit before a justice of the peace, against whom a judgment by default has been rendered, cannot, under Rev. St. c. 33, § 8, maintain a petition in the county court to vacate the judgment against him.—Denison v. True, 22 Vt. 42.

[s] (Wis. 1851) Where on the examination of a garnishee he makes no objection because the judgment against the defendant has been rendered prior thereto, the judgment against the garnishee is valid.—Rector v. Drury, 4 Chand. 24, 3 Pin. 298.

[u] (Wis. 1877) Where a justice finds that a garnishee has property of the principal defendant subject to be delivered to him at a future day, the judgment should first direct a delivery of the property to the court at such future day for plaintiff's benefit, and on the garnishee's failure so to deliver, the judgment should go against him for its value.—Rasmussen v. McCabe, 43 Wis. 471.

[v] (Wis. 1879) A garnishment judgment in a justice court is not fatally defective because the record does not show a judgment against a defendant in the original action, as the two records are to be read together, and it is sufficient if such judgment appears from the whole record.—Bushnell v. Allen, 48 Wis. 460, 4 N. W. 599.

[w] (Wis. 1879) Failure of a justice to enter in his docket an adjournment of garnishment proceedings will not affect a judgment subsequently rendered therein.—Bushnell v. Allen, 48 Wis. 460, 4 N. W. 599.

[x] (Wis. 1893) In garnishment proceedings in the justice court, a judgment was rendered against the garnishee, but on the same day, by agreement of parties, the judgment was opened and the action adjourned. On the adjourned day neither the defendant nor the garnishee appeared, and judgment was rendered against the garnishee for the amount of the judgment in the main action. Held, that the judgment was void, for after the entry of the former judgment, the consent of the garnishee could not give the justice power to reopen the judgment and restore his jurisdiction.—McCormick Harvester Mach. Co. v. James, 54 N. W. 1086.

[a] (Kan. 1889) Property of a debtor, in the possession of a garnishee, and delivered to a justice of the peace, under an order of the justice, must be advertised and sold in the township in which the justice resides and holds his office, and a sale of such property made outside of such township is void.—Beamer v. Winter, 41 Kan. 297, 21 Pac. 251.

[b] (Kan. 1889) As the law requires all personal property sold under any process issued by a justice of the peace to be sold in the township where it is seized, personal property delivered into court by a garnishee, under the order of a justice of the peace, must be sold in the township where the notice is served upon the garnishee, as the property is constructively seized where the notice is served.—Beamer v. Winter, 41 Kan. 596, 21 Pac. 1078.

[c] (Ohio, 1861) A garnishee is required to submit to an examination, and if the justice concludes that the statements made by the garnishee admit indebtedness, he may order the sum admitted to be paid into court; but such an order can be enforced only by an action against the garnishee.—Rice v. Whitney, 12 Ohio St. 358.

[d] (Ohio, 1861) Under the Code the plaintiff in attachment ought not to be allowed a more summary remedy against the debtors of the defendant in attachment than their own creditor has. And the exception created by the amendment of section 200 of the Code, made March 17, 1856, which allows an execution as on a judgment where a garnishee after examination is ordered to pay money into court, does not apply to proceedings before a justice of the peace.—Rice v. Whitney, 12 Ohio St. 358.

Payment of judgment against garnishee as discharge, see post, § 304.

[a] (Mich. 1895) Under How. Ann. St. § 8041, providing that, if plaintiff fails to recover judgment against defendant, it shall be deemed a discontinuance of all proceedings against a garnishee, when construed in connection with sections 8037, 8038, 8040, providing for proceedings against a garnishee after final determination against defendant, a garnishee is not released from plaintiff's claim by a judgment in a justice court in favor of defendant, from which he has appealed.—Erickson v. Duluth, S. S. & A. Ry. Co., 105 Mich. 415, 63 N. W. 420.

[a] (Ga. 1888) In garnishment before a justice, certain claimants, on October 21, 1881, filed bond as required by statute, claiming the property sought to be garnished. The garnishee, on November 21, 1881, made a general denial as to assets or indebtedness. On the 19th of December, 1881, plaintiff traversed the answer. Held that, after going to trial on the merits, and suing out a certiorari to review the decision of the justice, claimants could not have the traverse dismissed because it was not filed within 10 days after the answer was made, as provided in Code, § 4162.—Pedrick v. McCall, 80 Ga. 491, 5 S. E. 633.

[b] (Kan. 1886) The provisions of chapter 137, Sess. Laws 1877 (Comp. Laws 1879, §§ 45a, 45b, of the Code), providing for interpleas where money, effects, or credits are attached, are applicable to money, effects, or credits attached or garnished in actions commenced before a justice of the peace.—Clark v. Wiss, 34 Kan. 553, 9 Pac. 281.

[c] (Minn. 1875) A claimant in garnishment proceedings before a justice, claiming under an indorsement on a policy of insurance, making it payable to him to the extent of his interest, must, to protect his claim to the debt, prove what his interest is.—Donnelly v. O'Connor, 22 Minn. 309.

[d] (Mo. 1857) An appeal will lie from the decision of a justice of the peace on an interplea concerning property garnished by virtue of an execution.—Smith v. Sterritt, 24 Mo. 260.

[b] (Ark. 1877) Where a garnishment issued against a third person pending judgment against the debtor was void, and no writ of garnishment was issued after the judgment, there was no seizure of any debt of effects belonging to the debtor in the garnishee's hands, and a judgment against him could not have had the effect to release him from liability to the defendant.—Littlejohn v. Lewis, 32 Ark. 423.

[c] (Ga. 1885) Where, in garnishment in a justice's court, money exempt as wages has been garnished and paid into court by a garnishee defendant, the principal debtor is not estopped to recover the same from the garnishee, as the judgment against the garnishee is, as to him, res inter alios acta.—Curran v. Fleming, 76 Ga. 98.

[d] (Ga. 1886) Though a writ of garnishment cannot issue on a distress warrant, yet where a writ was so issued by a justice of the peace, and the garnishee answered, admitting indebtedness, and judgment was rendered against him, and the amount paid to plaintiff in the distress warrant, the judgment was merely erroneous; and hence a petition would not lie in favor of the defendant under the distress warrant to compel payment to him of the amount so collected and paid.—Taylor v. Benjamin, 76 Ga. 762.

[e] (Ind. 1861) To an assignee's suit on a note for $200, payable in currency, defendants answered that, before the assignment and notice thereof, judgment had been recovered against one of them as garnishee, in a suit of attachment against the payee, which judgment he (defendant) had paid. The transcript of the proceedings in the attachment suit, being made part of the answer, showed that the garnishee had stated that he had in his hands $800 of uncurrent funds, worth $620, belonging to the attachment defendant. Held, that this defense was bad, as not showing that the demand set forth in the complaint and that passed on in the attachment suit were identical.—Sangster v. Butt, 17 Ind. 354.

[f] (Ind. 1873) A payment by a garnishee to a justice of the peace who has jurisdiction of the subject and of the parties in attachment proceedings is a defense to a suit by the attachment defendant against such garnishee for the same debt, though such proceedings are, as between the creditor and debtor, irregular and reversible.—Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Alvey, 43 Ind. 180.

[g] (Ind. 1890) Rev. St. Mo. § 473, provides that "when the defendant cannot be summoned, and his property and effects shall be attached," the justice may make an order requiring plaintiff to give service to defendant by advertisement. Held, that as a justice in Missouri acquired no jurisdiction by publication of notice where the only attachment was by garnishment of wages, which were exempt by the laws of Indiana and Missouri, judgment suffered by the garnishee was no protection to an action for such wages.—Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Baker, 122 Ind. 433, 24 N. E. 83.

[h] (Iowa, 1882) In the absence of any statutory provision requiring notice of a garnishment proceeding to be served on the judgment debtor, a judgment by a justice of the peace against a garnishee in another county upon his answer is a bar to a suit by the judgment debtor against the garnishee for the same indebtedness, though the justice had no jurisdiction of the debtor.—Smith v. Dickson, 58 Iowa, 444, 10 N. W. 850.

[i] (Kan. 1874) An order of a justice of the peace, in an attachment proceeding, that a garnishee shall pay into court certain money which he owes to the defendant in the action, is not a final determination of plaintiff's right to the money, but is, in effect, merely an assignment of the claim from the debtor to the creditor.—Board of Education v. Scoville, 13 Kan. 17.

[j] (Kan. 1880) In the trial of the truth of a garnishee's answer before a justice of the peace, under Comp. Laws, p. 709, § 44, the justice's decision is not final as to the existence of an indebtedness or as to the ownership of the property.—Fitch v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co., 23 Kan. 366.

[k] (Kan. 1895) An order of the justice of the peace to a garnishee to pay money into court is not a judgment, but simply gives the creditor the same right to enforce the payment of the money that the debtor previously had.—Bank of Le Roy v. Harding, 1 Kan. App. 389, 41 Pac. 680.

[l] (Mich. 1891) How. Ann. St. § 837, provides that the garnishee may pay to the justice before whom examination is had the amount owed by him, and thereupon such justice shall execute and deliver to him a discharge. Held, that payment under the justice's order, directed to plaintiff, who in turn satisfies the judgment on docket, is presumed to have been made in the presence of the justice and with his consent, and is therefore a sufficient compliance with the statute.—Barber v. Howd, 85 Mich. 221, 48 N. W. 539.

[m] (Mich. 1894) Under How. Ann. St. § 8032, which provides that the right to garnish shall not extend to $25 of the sum due the principal defendant for wages where he is a householder, and section 8037, which expressly excepts this labor claim from the indebtedness that may be paid by the garnishee to the justice in advance of the judgment, the garnishee acts at his peril in paying to the justice the amount due the principal defendant for wages, without disclosing whether or not defendant is a householder, or whether it knows this fact; and the householder may recover his exempt wages from the garnishee, notwithstanding such payment, unless he has acted so as to be estopped.—Crisp v. Ft. Wayne & E. Ry. Co., 98 Mich. 648, 57 N. W. 1050, 22 L. R. A. 732.

[n] (Minn. 1870) Under Pub. St. c. 59, §§ 89, 90, authorizing a justice to issue execution at any time on demand, and permitting a garnishee to make payment directly to a justice on demand of plaintiff's attorney, without waiting for execution, such voluntary payment by a garnishee without execution will discharge him, though the judgment on which the garnishment was based was rendered by default on service of summons by publication, and was afterwards opened and set aside on defense made.—Troyer v. Schweizer, 15 Minn. 241 (Gil. 187).

[o] (Mo. 1888) A justice has no jurisdiction to determine the rights of a defendant debtor to exemptions in a garnishment proceeding, and where the debtor has no notice, and is not a party and interposes no claim, his rights are not adjudicated.—State v. Barnett, 96 Mo. 133, 8 S. W. 767.

[p] (Mo. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1879, § 2551, allowing a garnishee in an attachment before a justice of the peace to exonerate himself by paying the money attached to the constable, payment of the money to the justice, who turns it over to the constable, discharges the garnishee, and he is not affected by a subsequent misapplication of the money by the constable.—Melton v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 39 Mo. App. 194.

[a] (Kan. 1888) Where a bond is given in a justice's court to release and discharge garnishment proceedings in that court, and it provides that the obligors shall "pay any judgment which may be rendered against him [the defendant] on final hearing of this case," such bond will bind the obligors to pay any final judgment which may be rendered against the defendant in the district court on an appeal by the plaintiff from the justice's court.—Washer v. Campbell, 19 Pac. 858.

[b] (N. Y. 1845) Where a constable, on an attachment in a justice's court, void because no sufficient bond had been given, seized property which was claimed by a stranger, who procured the same to be given up on executing the bond required in such case by 2 Rev. St. p. 231, § 33, plaintiff, being a trespasser in taking the property, could not maintain an action on such bond.—Homan v. Brinckerhoff, 1 Denio, 184.

[c] (Vt. 1893) Sureties who have voluntarily executed a bond in consideration of the discharge of one summoned as trustee for the principal defendant, and who have by such means procured the discharge, cannot object that the justice who accepted the bond and discharged the trustee had lost jurisdiction of the action by the pendency of an appeal.—Rich v. Sowles, 65 Vt. 135, 26 Atl. 585.

[h] (Iowa, 1854) The Code is directory to a justice of the peace to reduce oral pleadings to writing, and the parties should not be prejudiced by his failure to do so.—Sinnamon v. Melbourne, 4 G. Greene, 309.

[i] (Iowa, 1854) In suits begun before a justice of the peace, substantial compliance with the requisitions of the Code is sufficient, without strict regularity and formality in pleadings.—Burton v. Hill, 4 G. Greene, 379.

[j] (Iowa, 1855) A justice of the peace rendered judgment against the defendant, sued as indorser, because no "demand was made before suit brought." Plaintiff appealed to district court. On motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that no different judgment could be rendered upon the pleadings, it was held that nicety of pleading was unnecessary before a justice, and that the issue should be retried.—Hall v. Monahan, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 554.

[k] (Kan. 1868) It is error for a justice to refuse, on demand of the defendant, to allow pleadings to be filed before the actual commencement of the trial, though after the trial hour.—West v. Rice, 4 Kan. 563.

[l] (Minn. 1863) Under Comp. St. c. 59, § 24, providing that pleadings in a justice's court "must" take place on the return day of the summons, "or at such time thereafter, not exceeding one week," as the justice may appoint, the justice has no power to receive pleadings after one week from the return day.—Holgate v. Broome, 8 Minn. 243 (Gil. 209).

[m] (Minn. 1869) Under a statute prescribing that pleadings in justices' courts shall take place at the time fixed for appearance in the summons, or, by consent of the parties, within one week thereafter (Gen. St. c. 65, § 21), a justice has no power to receive the pleadings at any other time than that appointed for the appearance of the parties, except by their consent; and a consent to an adjournment does not carry with it a consent to plead after the expiration of a week.—Mattice v. Litcherding, 14 Minn. 142 (Gil. 110).

[n] (Minn. 1888) Oral pleadings made before a justice within one week after the return day of the summons, and on the adjourned day, are in time, under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 23.—Rauen v. Burg, 38 Minn. 389, 37 N. W. 946.

[q] (N. Y.) The proceedings of justices of the peace, so far as respects regularity and form, will be reviewed with liberality. Technical nicety and legal precision are not required in the pleadings; but it will be sufficient if there appears to be a good ground of action within his jurisdiction, and that the merits of the cause have been tried.—(1808) McNeil v. Scoffield, 3 Johns. 436; (1813) Pintard v. Tackington, 10 Johns. 104.

[t] (N. Y. 1856) There is no particular mode by which counts or causes of action are to be separated and distinguished from each other in a complaint in a justice's court. Any mode which apprises the defendant of what is intended is sufficient.—Hall v. McKechnie, 22 Barb. 244.

[u] (S. C. 1881) Under Code, § 91, subd. 2, providing that pleadings in trial justices' courts may be either oral or written, either party may plead orally or in writing, without regard to the form of the pleadings on the other side.—Williams v. Irby, 15 S. C. 458.

[x] (Wis. 1851) Although the strictness in pleading required in courts of record is not expected in proceedings before a justice of the peace, yet sufficient regard must be had to form to prevent the substantial rights of the parties from being sacrificed.—Hibbard v. Bell, 3 Chand. 206, 3 Pin. 190.

[zz] (Wis. 1859) In an action in justice's court, where the parties resort to written pleadings, the pleadings must contain all necessary substantial averments.—Fobes v. School District, 10 Wis. 117.

[f] (Iowa, 1875) It is not necessary to the maintenance of an action before a justice of the peace against a railroad company, for double damages for killing stock, that a petition in writing be filed. An oral statement, embodying in substance plaintiff's claim, is sufficient.—Finch v. Central R. R., 42 Iowa, 304.

[g] (Iowa, 1883) The notice of suit before a justice of the peace stated that the plaintiff claimed of defendant $25.50, with interest, for commissioners', sheriffs', appraisers', and publication fees in viewing a county road, and on return day plaintiff filed a written petition, claiming to recover $25.50 and interest upon a bond signed by defendant as surety, for commissioners', sheriffs', appraisers', and publication fees, whereupon the petition was stricken from the files by the justice. Held to be error, as there was no variance between the notice and the petition.—Winneshiek County v. Humpal, 61 Iowa, 172, 16 N. W. 67.

[h, i] (Mo. 1881) The petition in an action before a justice is sufficient, though lacking the completeness requisite in the circuit court.—Razor v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 73 Mo. 471; Key v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 73 Mo. 475.

[j] (Mo. 1881) Where a statement filed before a justice did not in terms refer to a certain statute, but stated facts which brought the action under the statute, held, that the action was properly treated as founded on that statute.—Blewett v. Smith, 74 Mo. 404.

[k] (Mo. 1884) In trespass qu. cl. fr. before a justice, the complaint is sufficiently definite if it lays the place, so as to determine the venue, and the time within a month.—Muckel v. Rose, 15 Mo. App. 393.

[l] (Mo. 1886) The statement, in a justice's court suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, will support a judgment, though inartificially drawn, if it contains the necessary jurisdictional averments.—Schluter v. Wiedenbrocker, 23 Mo. App. 440.

[m] (N. J.) In cases before a justice of the peace, the state of demand need not be drawn up with technical formality. It is sufficient if it is intelligible.—(1806) Lewis v. Albertson, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 101; (1809) McCannan v. Anderson, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 560; (1810) Burgin v. Riggens, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 654.

[n] (N. J. 1807) The state of demand need not be dated, and the justice need not file the same.—Longstreet v. Taylor, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 267.

[o] (N. J. 1808) In actions on the case for tort, the state of demand need not lay a venue.—Moore v. Whitacar, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 460.

[p] (N. J. 1808) Surplusage does not vitiate a state of demand otherwise sufficient, but it will be rejected.—Burt v. Hicks, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 461.

[q] (N. J. 1852) A state of demand in debt, in the court for the trial of small causes, is not vitiated by concluding "to the damage of the plaintiff $100."—Scott v. Beatty, 23 N. J. Law (3 Zab.) 256.

[r] (N. J. 1893) In civil proceedings before a justice of the peace for the violation of an ordinance passed under "An act respecting licenses in incorporated boroughs" (P. L. 1892, p. 293), if the complaint refer to one section of the ordinance, and the summons to another, the court does not obtain jurisdiction to try defendant for violation of either section.—White v. Borough of Neptune City, 56 N. J. Law (27 Vroom) 222, 28 Atl. 378.

[s] (N. Y. 1835) In a justice's court, a declaration must be good in form, as well as in substance, if it be objected to before the justice; and if on demurrer he adjudges it good, when in fact it was defective in form or substance, his judgment will be reversed.—Stone v. Case, 13 Wend. 283.

[t] (N. Y. 1888) Code Civ. Proc. § 1775, requiring a corporation bringing an action to describe itself in its complaint, so that it may be identified, applies to actions brought by a corporation in a justice's court.—Crown Point Iron Co. v. Fitzgerald, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 427.

[u] (Pa. 1888) Under Act May 25, 1887, providing that the statement of demand, in an action before a justice of the peace, should be in the form required by Act 1806, a written statement of demand may be filed in the action.—Godcharles v. Laufer, 3 Del. Co. R. 514.

[v] (Pa. 1893) In an action before a justice for a penalty under a local statute or city ordinance, such statute or ordinance must be pleaded to give the justice jurisdiction.—Pittsburgh v. Madden (Com. Pl.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 120, 24 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 283.

[w] (Tex. 1882) Rev. St. art. 1573, providing that pleadings in justices' courts shall be oral, except where otherwise specially provided, renders it unnecessary for a plaintiff suing a railroad company in such court to allege that defendant "was a corporation duly incorporated," though article 1190 requires such an allegation in such suits in district and county courts.—Texas & P. R. Co. v. Miller, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 262.

[x] (Vt. 1834) If the first count show a case within the jurisdiction of a justice, the others may be regarded as only different modes of declaring for the same cause of action.—Thompson v. Colony, 6 Vt. 91.

§ 309. Statement of cause of action in general.

[a] Any statement of the cause of action sufficient to bar another suit and to apprise the defendant of the nature of the claim is sufficient before a justice of the peace.

(N. J. 1818) Lippencott v. Smith, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 95.

[b] (U. S. 1832) In setting out a cause of action, a substantial compliance with the statute is all that is requisite. Therefore the expression "open account," where the statute says "book account," is not error.—Dillingham v. Skein, Fed. Cas. No. 3,912a [1 Hemp. 181].

[c] (Ind. 1852) Under the statute, the name given to an action in a justice's court is immaterial, and the statement of demand, though very informal, is sufficient.—Taylor v. Webster, 3 Ind. 513.

[d] (Ind. 1858) The rule that any statement, however short or informal it may be, will be a sufficient statement of the cause of action in a justice's court, if enough be shown to bar another action for the same demand and apprise defendant of the nature of the claim, is not changed by the Code of 1852.—Milholland v. Pence, 11 Ind. 203.

[e] (Ind. 1877) A complaint before a justice of the peace must allege facts sufficient to apprise defendant of the nature of the claim against him or it will be deficient, on a motion in arrest of judgment.—Murphy v. Lambert, 59 Ind. 477.

[f] (Iowa, 1872) In a justice's court, a technical setting forth of the cause of action is not demanded. It is sufficient if the notice states the cause of action in general terms sufficient to apprise defendant of the nature of the claim against him.—Fauble v. Stewart, 35 Iowa, 379.

[g] (Mich. 1849) A declaration before a justice of the peace containing a substantial statement of the cause of action will be held sufficient.—Barber v. Taylor, 1 Mich. (Man.) 352.

[gg] (Mo. 1852) No formality in the statement of a cause of action is required before justices of the peace.—Early v. Fleming, 16 Mo. 154.

[h] (Mo. 1891) The statement of a cause of action before a justice of the peace must be a statement of facts, as distinguished from a conclusion of law, must advise the other party with what he is charged, and be sufficiently definite to bar another action; but beyond this no formal precision is requisite.—Dahlgren v. Yocum, 44 Mo. App. 277.

[i] (N. J. 1838) A state of demand, in the court for the trial of small causes, must contain everything, independent of proof, to show that the plaintiff has a legal cause of action.—Meeker v. Garland, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 486.

[j] (N. J. 1857) It is sufficient if the state of demand, in a justice's court, contains in itself a legal cause of action, apprises the defendant of the complaint against him, and so states the case that it may afterwards appear what was decided.—Patten v. Heustis, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 293.

[k] (N. J. 1859) In pleading before a justice, the declaration must set forth all the facts material to show a good cause of action.—Denny v. Quintin, 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 134.

[l] (N. Y. 1803) The declaration in a justice's court should be so far formal as to show the cause of action.—Houghton v. Strong, 1 Caines, 486.

§ 310. Statement of particular causes of action.

[a] (Ala. 1853) "Plaintiff claims $50 for work and materials" is a sufficient statement to sustain a judgment by default and writ of inquiry in a justice's court.—Martin v. Higgins, 23 Ala. 775.

[b] (Ind. 1837) In a justice's court, a contract containing conditions precedent, to be performed by the plaintiff, may be filed as the cause of action, without an averment of performance of the conditions.—Wiley v. Shank, 4 Blackf. 420.

[c] (Ind. 1842) Where a written contract is filed as the cause of action in a justice's court, the want of an averment of extraneous facts connected with the contract, and necessary to be proved on the trial to sustain the action, is not a fatal objection, if enough be stated to bar another suit for the same demand.—Cook v. Hedges, 6 Blackf. 184.

[d] (Ind. 1868) In an action on a note in justice court, a complaint alleging the execution of a note, whereby defendants promised to pay plaintiff "one hundred & $^{50}/_{100}$," is sufficient.—Griffin v. Cox, 30 Ind. 242.

[e] (Minn. 1869) A complaint in a justice's court averred that, by the terms of an express contract between plaintiff and defendant, defendant ordered of plaintiff certain lumber, to be delivered at a place named, and agreed to pay for the same; that plaintiff delivered 400 feet of a specified kind, at $25 per 1,000 feet, with $3.20 for hauling same, amounting to $13.20; that the lumber delivered was that ordered, and the amounts specified were due and unpaid. Held sufficient to sustain a judgment.—Johnson v. Knoblauch, 14 Minn. 16 (Gil. 4).

[f] (Mo. 1860) A statement filed with a justice of the peace in the following form: "A. B. to C. D., Dr. To one horse sold him on the 2d day of November last, $90. St. Louis, February 1, 1858,"—is sufficient.—Quinn v. Stout, 31 Mo. 160.

[g] (Mo. 1870) A writing in the following words: "S. to B. $50. To fifty dollars,"—wholly fails to be a statement of facts constituting a cause of action.—Brashears v. Strock, 46 Mo. 221.

[h] (Mo. 1875) In a suit before a justice on a note given for the purpose of preventing a criminal prosecution, no pleadings being required, it is not necessary to allege that the crime had been committed, and that the payee at the time of taking the note for such consideration knew of the fact of its commission. It is sufficient that these facts appear upon the trial.—Baker v. Farris, 61 Mo. 389.

[i] (Mo. 1875) In a suit before a justice for sums paid on written orders addressed to plaintiff by defendant, on which orders sundry bills of goods were sold to different parties, held, that a statement, filed by plaintiff, setting out separately the several orders, was sufficient. He was not required to insert in the statement an itemized account of the goods so delivered.—Wallace v. Moore, 61 Mo. 472.

[j] (Mo. 1877) 2 Wag. St. p. 814, § 13, provides that in suits on account before a justice of the peace "a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action shall be filed with the justice before any process shall be issued in the suit." Held, that a dated memorandum, "N. Debtor to S. $14," was insufficient as such statement, under the statute.—Swartz v. Nicholson, 65 Mo. 508.

[k] (Mo. 1883) A statement: "A. to H., Dr. To one-half amount of judgment for debt and costs in favor of G. against said H., in case No. 34 August, 1880, before V., J. P., instituted by G. against A. & H. on their joint contract. Total amount, $44.30,—$22.15,"—is a sufficient statement of a cause of action before a justice of the peace.—Strathmann v. Gorla, 14 Mo. App. 1.

[l] (Mo. 1883) A statement before a justice of the peace that "defendant justly indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $162, for money had and received heretofore, to wit, on the ——— day of ———, 1882," is not sufficient, under Rev. St. § 2851, requiring "a statement of the account or of the facts constituting the cause of action upon which the suit is founded."—Rosenburg v. Boyd, 14 Mo. App. 429.

[m] (Mo. 1888) A statement filed before a justice of the peace as follows: "T. J. Nutter, plaintiff, vs. W. T. Houston, defendant. For the service of the season of 1887, two mares, balance $18,"—is insufficient, under Rev. St. 1879, requiring the plaintiff in a suit in a justice's court to file "a statement of the account or of the facts constituting the cause of action upon which the suit is founded."—Nutter v. Houston, 32 Mo. App. 451.

[n] (Mo. 1889) The following statement filed before a justice:

"A., Dr. to I.,

For 1 cow, weight 1,063 lbs., at $2.60 per cwt.	$27 63
May 21, by 11 pounds beef	65
Balance due	$26 98

—is sufficient to advise defendant of the matter with which he is charged, under Rev. St. 1879, §§ 2851, 2852.—Ingalls v. Averitt, 34 Mo. App. 371.

[o] (Mo. 1889) An account filed as a cause of action in a suit before a justice of the peace is sufficient to support a recovery, where it is sufficiently explicit to inform defendant of the nature of the claim against him, and to bar another action for the same cause.—Fleischmann v. Miller, 38 Mo. App. 177; Gregg v. Dunn, Id. 283.

[p] (Mo. 1891) A statement of a cause of action in a justice's court may be sufficient, if drawn in the form of a count for money had and received.—Penninger v. Reilley, 44 Mo. App. 255.

[q] (Mo. 1891) A statement before a justice of the peace as follows: "Pacific Express Company, bought of George Leas, * * * one crank shaft for four by six engine, $18. This shaft was shipped C. O. D., to Frank E. Wells, Eufala, Indian Territory, May 31. Broken by Pacific Company,"—is insufficient, as it does not appear whether it is based on contract or negligence.—Leas v. Pacific Exp. Co., 45 Mo. App. 598.

[qq] (Mo. 1891) A statement filed before a justice of the peace as follows: "Now comes plaintiff, and for cause of action states defendant is indebted to plaintiff for thirty cords of wood, sold and delivered to him, at $1.50, October 20, 1889, per cord, $45; for which he asks judgment, with costs of suit,"—is sufficient.—Strickland v. Quick, 45 Mo. App. 610.

[r] (N. J. 1808) In debt in a justice's court, where, from the whole case stated in the declaration, it appears that the suit is brought for a note of hand and money lent to defendant, it will be held sufficient.—Seely v. Myres, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 364.

[rr] (N. J. 1808) In an action on an account in a justice court, the state of demand must set out the particular items that defendant may be apprised of, the nature of the demand against him. Merely charging defendant with an unsettled balance is too vague and uncertain.—Hagerman v. Titus, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 164.

[s] (N. J. 1818) In an action on an account before a justice, the statement of the demand must contain the dates of items.—Sims v. Smith, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 92; La Rue v. Boughaner, Id. 104.

[ss] (N. J. 1818) A "state of demand," stating the action to be for money paid, etc., in general, referring to a bill of particulars annexed, is sufficient.—Leonard v. Ware, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 150.

[t] (N. J. 1818) Where the state of demand claimed simply a certain sum as a "balance due on settlement," it was held sufficient.—Tichenor v. Colfax, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 153.

[tt] (N. J. 1818) The item in the "state of demand," "to $50 on A.'s account," was held sufficiently certain.—Sykes v. Stokes, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 214.

[u] (N. J. 1822) A count for money paid to and for the use of the defendant, at his request, to A., is good in a justice's court.—Vanderveer v. McMackin, 6 N. J. Law (1 Halst.) 213.

[uu] (N. J. 1828) A general charge in the state of demand "To sundries, as per daybook," if it stood alone would be objectionable; but if, on the same date, there is a credit given the defendants for the same amount, and in the same language, the judgment will not be reversed for the generality of the charge.—Cornelius v. Ivins, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 56.

[v] (N. J. 1830) A state of demand consisting of the following charge: "To amount of goods received,"—is insufficient.—Evans v. McClellan, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 123.

[vv] (N. J. 1830) A state of demand containing this item: "Also, vendue account of principal and interest $32,"—is bad.—South v. Decou, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 125.

[w] (N. J. 1833) In an action of debt in justice court, a statement of demand bearing a date and containing charges: "Order P. W. Emley, accepted; duebill I. Horner, accepted; and due bill I. J. Branson, accepted,"—with the amount of each, does not set forth the liability of the defendant sufficiently.—Stewart v. Patterson, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 141.

[ww] (N. J. 1834) A statement of demand in a justice's court for money had and received, in general terms, is defective.—Hutchinson v. Targee, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 386.

[x] (N. J. 1846) In an action in justice's court, an item in plaintiff's state of demand, charging defendant with a "balance struck by defendant on the plaintiff's pass book," with interest thereon, giving the date, but omitting to state the amount of the balance, and affording no means of ascertaining the same, is bad for uncertainty, and the judgment rendered thereon will be reversed on certiorari.—Carter v. Lackey, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 608.

[y] (N. Y. 1830) A declaration in a justice's court, where the plaintiff declares on a book account generally, and at the same time exhibits a written account of items, is good.—Stolp v. Van Cortland, 3 Wend. 492.

[yy] (N. C. 1896) A complaint, in an action begun before a justice of the peace, alleging that plaintiff was the owner of timber on land sold him by defendant; that defendant sold $160 worth thereof, and got the pay therefor; that by reason thereof defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $160 and interest, which sum defendant in law agreed to pay plaintiff,—should be construed to be on the implied contract, the tort being waived, as a justice has not jurisdiction of torts.—Brittain v. Payne, 118 N. C. 989, 24 S. E. 711.

[z] (Tex. 1859) No formal presentation of the cause of action being requisite in a justice's court, the form in which an account is presented cannot prejudice the case on its merits.—Doyle v. Glasscock, 24 Tex. 200.

[zz] (Wis. 1875) An oral complaint, entered by the justice in a justice's court, reciting that "plaintiff complains for money had and received by the defendant from the plaintiff, and interest thereon, for balance due him to the amount of $230, and asks judgment for $200, with costs of action," is sufficient, under Tayl. St. p. 1362, § 51, subd. 5, which requires the pleading to be "such as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended."—Dehnel v. Komrow, 37 Wis. 336.

[a] (Mo. 1857) A complaint in justice's court was not dismissed for uncertainty, though it stated the demand to have "accrued against the said steamboat on account of the mate, the captain, or the clerk, agents thereof, for work and labor done on board of said steamer as laborer."—Holland v. The R. H. Winslow, 25 Mo. 57.

The said plaintiff asks judgment for seven days' work, at $2 per day, for which the said plaintiff claims $14." Held, that the complaint contained "a statement of the facts constituting a cause of action," within the meaning of the statute.—Armstrong v. Keleher, 71 Mo. 492.

[c] (Mo. 1888) Rev. St. § 2851, provides that "no formal pleadings * * * shall be required in a justice's court, but before any process shall be issued * * * plaintiff shall file with the justice the instrument sued on, or statement of the account, or of the facts constituting the cause of action upon which the suit is founded," etc. Held, that a statement of account: "To services of self and team from April 26th to October 25th, 1886, 157 days, at $2.50 per day, as per agreement, $392.50; credit by cash, $158.00; balance due, $234.50,"—is sufficient.—Sturdy v. St. Charles Land & Cattle Co., 33 Mo. App. 44.

[b] (Minn. 1884) The complaint in an action before a justice of the peace, made orally by plaintiff, alleged, as entered by the justice in his docket, "that the defendant is indebted to him in the sum of $1.50 for services to defendant in looking up title to property in the fall of 1883." Held, that it sufficiently stated a cause of action.—Guthrie v. Santa Barbara Gas Co., 58 Cal. 4.

[b] (Mo. 1869) A lease is an instrument of writing, within the meaning of Gen. St. 1865, p. 701, § 13, requiring the plaintiff in actions before a justice of the peace to file a written statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, where the suit is not "founded on an account or instrument of writing."—Gillihan v. Wren, 44 Mo. 377.

[c] (Mo. 1876) In an action before a justice of the peace for the rent of mineral lands, an allegation that defendant had taken out of the ground 32,000 pounds of ore, and that one-fourth thereof was due plaintiff, sufficiently specifies the amount due.—Cook v. Decker, 63 Mo. 328.

[d] (Mo. 1876) In an action for rent before a justice, the complaint must specify the exact sum or amount or proportion of products claimed to be due.—Cook v. Decker, 63 Mo. 328.

[e] (Mo. 1891) A statement in a suit before a justice "that defendants were tenants under a lease, and as such tenants failed to account to plaintiff for the rent, * * * and as the tenants of the plaintiff defendants owe and are justly indebted to plaintiff for said rent in the sum of $100, and for molasses the sum of $3.-20," while indefinite in not stating the year for which the rent accrued, the land in respect of which it accrued, or the terms of the contract of renting, is sufficient to confer jurisdiction.—Holman v. Kerr, 44 Mo. App. 481.

[f] (N. J. 1830) A state of demand, claiming a certain sum of money "for that the defendant used and occupied a messuage in the township of Woolwich from March 25, 1823, to March 25, 1824," is insufficient.—Folwell v. Ford, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 68.

[g] (N. Y. 1856) In an action for rent in a justice's court, a complaint, "One quarter's rent of crystal in Grand street, May 1st, 1854, with interest, $225," was held to be sufficient.—Hubbell v. Clark, 1 Hilt. 67.

[a] (Ind. 1841) The cause of action filed before a justice of the peace in debt against a constable and his surety was a copy of an instrument of writing, purporting to be executed by the defendants, in the form of a constable's bond, except that it was not sealed, with an assignment of breaches of condition appended to it. Held, that the cause of action under the statute was sufficient.—State v. Mowbray, 6 Blackf. 90.

[b] (N. J. 1811) In an action on a sealed instrument in a justice court, the state of demand should contain an allegation that some one or more of the stipulations made by the defendant in the agreement have been broken by him, and how.—English v. Horner, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 816.

[c] (N. Y. 1849) It is not necessary, in a justice's court, in an action on a sealed instrument, that the declaration should contain an averment that the instrument was signed and sealed by the parties, or either of them. It is enough to declare generally for a breach of contract, referring to the contract or agreement in such terms as to identify it, or to set out the contract according to its legal effect, without averring that it was sealed by the parties.—Smith v. Kerr, 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 144.

[a] (Mo. 1893) In an action before a justice of the peace, a statement which says that the cause of action is based upon an insurance policy filed with the statement, which gives the name of the insured, and the date and number of the policy and its delivery, is sufficient, since it would bar another action on the same policy by the plaintiff.—Wilkinson v. Metropolitan Ins. Co., 54 Mo. App. 661.

[a] (Mich. 1880) A declaration in a justice's court for breach of warranty in the sale of a horse must show the nature of the warranty and state the breach.—Smith v. Hobart, 43 Mich. 465, 5 N. W. 666.

[b] (Mo. 1891) A statement in a justice's court: "To amount paid him in cash, $6, and the value of a silver watch, $10, handed him, all to be the price of a silver watch bought of him, and warranted to be a good timepiece, and which proved to be the contrary, $16.00,"—is sufficiently definite.—Bauer v. Barnett, 46 Mo. App. 654.

§ 318. —— Actions to recover personal property.

[a] (N. Y. 1877) A complaint in a justice court, which simply shows that the action is "for the recovery of personal property valued at $85," does not allege such a wrongful taking or detention of property as will sustain an action of replevin, or any action at all.—Howe Sewing Mach. Co. v. Haupt, 7 Daly, 108.

[b] (N. Y. 1890) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2940, which provides that pleadings in justices' courts shall be sufficient if they enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, a complaint in replevin which alleges ownership of, and right of possession to, the property in plaintiff, and that defendant wrongfully detains it under an execution against a third person, is not defective because of its failure to allege that the taking was wrongful, as the facts averred clearly show this to have been the fact.—Button v. Lusk, 57 Hun, 589, 10 N. Y. Supp. 582, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 111.

[a] (Ind. 1859) A complaint which avers that "the plaintiff purchased of the defendant on," etc., "four head of fat cattle at," etc., "and advanced as part payment thereon $50; that said cattle were to be delivered to the plaintiff at Peru on," etc.; "that the defendant did not deliver them at," etc., "but had failed and refused so to do; nor had he paid or offered to pay said $50," etc.,—is sufficient, before a justice, to entitle the plaintiff to recover the sum advanced and its interest, without an averment that the plaintiff was ready at the time and place to receive and pay for the said cattle.—Desher v. Parks, 13 Ind. 394.

[b] (N. Y. 1887) In justice's court, a complaint alleging that plaintiff's assignor purchased a certain mortgage from defendant on which it was supposed and alleged that there was a certain sum due, when in fact the amount due was less, sufficiently alleges an overpayment by mistake.—First Presbyterian Soc. of Lewiston v. Ayer, 4 N. Y. St. Rep. 388.

[a] (Tex. 1884) In an action brought in a justice court against a railroad company for breach of contract in the detention of goods, the statement of the cause of action, which merely states the whole amount claimed, without itemizing the damages and interest, is sufficient, since pleadings in justice courts are not subject to the rules governing written pleadings.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Wright, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 339.

[a] (Ind. 1843) The statement of demand in a suit by an administrator in a justice's court was substantially that the defendant on, etc., had "swapped" a certain bay horse to A., the intestate, and delivered the horse to him, and that the defendant afterwards took the horse into his possession without the plaintiff's consent, and converted him to his own use, etc., to the plaintiff's damage, etc. Held, that this was a sufficient statement in trover.—Davis v. Davis, 6 Blackf. 394.

[b] (Ind. 1858) In an action before a justice, the cause of action stated thus: "A., Dr., to B., $30, for one gun obtained by fraud,"—dated and signed, was sufficient.—Milholland v. Pence, 11 Ind. 203.

[c] (Ind. 1881) A complaint alleged that plaintiff on a certain date contracted to sell defendant a mare, with foal, of the value of $60, in consideration that defendant would raise the colt and deliver it to plaintiff, but that defendant turned the mare and colt into a lot, by reason of which and the gross negligence of defendant the colt was killed, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $60. Held, that it is shown by reference that the contract of sale was consummated by delivery of the mare, and that a cause of action is sufficiently averred to bar another suit, which is sufficient in actions before a justice of the peace.—Duffy v. Howard, 77 Ind. 182.

[d] (Ind. 1885) Complaints in mayors' and justices' courts are not required to be as full and technical as those filed in the circuit court, but should be liberally construed. So held where the complaint in an action by the owner of stock killed against the railroad company failed to charge, in plain and emphatic language, that defendant was in possession of the railroad, and operated the train.—Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Lash, 103 Ind. 80, 2 N. E. 250.

[e] (Mo. 1860) Under Rev. Code 1855, p. 931, § 13, requiring the plaintiff in all actions before a justice not founded on account to file a statement of the facts constituting his cause of action before process shall issue, a statement in an action of trespass in these words: "E. W. Warne, in acc't Calvin C. Burt, Dr. To damage done to building and premises in block 84 of the city of St. Louis, $50,"—is sufficient.—Burt v. Warne, 31 Mo. 296.

[f] (Mo. 1880) In an action of trover before a justice of the peace, the property is sufficiently described as "certain household goods," especially where objection is not made until after the verdict.—Meyer v. McCabe, 73 Mo. 236.

[g] (Mo. 1881) In an action against a railroad for negligence, brought before a justice of the peace, plaintiff may allege, as the cause of the injury, both failure of defendant in its statutory duty—as, for instance, ringing the bell—and negligence in other ways; and, if either is proved, the action can be maintained.—Lynn v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 75 Mo. 167.

[h] (Mo. 1890) In a suit before a justice of the peace, a statement of the cause of action as follows is sufficient: "St. L. & S. F. R. Co. to T. J. W., Dr. To damages in negligently breaking soda apparatus shipped May 2, 1884, from Oswego, Kansas, to St. Louis, Mo., $200."—Witting v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 101 Mo. 631, 14 S. W. 743, 20 Am. St. Rep. 636, 10 L. R. A. 602.

[i] (Mo. 1891) In an action before a justice of the peace against a railway company for the communication of fire by sparks from an engine, it is not necessary to allege negligence on the part of the company; the rule being that the statement of the cause of action only need advise defendant of what he is sued for, and be sufficiently definite to bar another action for the same subject-matter.—Polhans v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 45 Mo. App. 153.

[k] (Mo. 1894) In an action against a railroad company, in a justice's court, for killing plaintiff's stock, a statement is insufficient which reads that defendant is debtor, "for one cow killed on or about July 26, 1891, valued at $25," and no evidence is admissible under it.—Webster v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 57 Mo. App. 451.

[l] (Mo. 1896) Under Rev. St. § 6138, providing that a statement before a justice shall contain "a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action," a statement that defendant "did kill five head of hogs, the property of the plaintiff, of the value of $25, wherefore the plaintiff asks judgment," is sufficient.—Glenn v. Weary, 66 Mo. App. 75, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1306.

[m] (N. J. 1808) The state of demand in an action before a justice for cutting and removing timber must state the time, place, and circumstances of the alleged cutting.—Dogherty v. Anderson, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 428.

[n] (N. J. 1818) A "state of demand," complaining that the defendant caused the goods of the plaintiff to be seized in Bucks county, in the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, by virtue of an execution fraudulently obtained there for $180, when the sum justly due did not exceed $60, and that he caused the said goods to be removed and detained nine months, was held wholly insufficient.—Beaumont v. Dunn, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 106.

[o] (N. J. 1818) In an action for damages for preventing the execution of process, the state of demand must show the kind of process and the nature of the injury caused by the prevention.—Kline v. Ramsay, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 141.

[p] (N. J. 1818) In an action against a constable for neglect, the statement of the demand must specify the particular neglect of which he has been guilty.—Boyd v. Rose, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 230.

[q] (N. J. 1836) In trespass on the case before a justice of the peace, a state of demand alleging that the defendant broke down and destroyed the pen in which the plaintiff's sow was kept, by which she was wholly lost to the plaintiff, is bad, unless it also state that the pen was on the land of the plaintiff.—Angus v. Flood, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 437.

[r] (N. Y. 1848) A declaration in trover, in a suit before a justice of the peace, which contains a statement of facts such as, if proved, would sustain a technical declaration in that form of action, and which informs the defendant of the precise nature of the plaintiff's claim and of the character of the evidence by which it is to be sustained, is sufficient.—Willard v. Bridge, 4 Barb. 361.

[s] (Tex. 1889) In an action for damages for removal of a fence, originally brought in justice's court, the following account, viz., "To actual damages for removing a certain fence from around a certain growing crop, etc., and to exemplary damages for the wrongful and malicious removal of the aforesaid fence," is sufficient to support a judgment for the value of the fence that was removed.—Long v. Cude, 75 Tex. 225, 12 S. W. 827.

[t] (Wis. 1854) Though in actions before justices of the peace parties are not held to strictness in pleading, yet the substance of an issue must be formed. Where the action is in form ex delicto, the plaintiff should allege in substance that he has sustained some damage by the act or omission of the defendant, and should set out in an intelligible manner the nature of the act of which he complains.—Phillips v. Bridges, 3 Wis. 270.

[a] (N. Y. 1896) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2939, providing for a demurrer in a justice's court "where the complaint is not sufficiently explicit to be understood," defendant's demurrer to a complaint in an action for a penalty for violation of the excise law, which fails to disclose any facts which would apprise him of the nature of his offense, must be sustained.—Village of Cortland v. Howard, 1 App. Div. 131, 37 N. Y. Supp. 843.

[a] (N. Y. 1856) A complaint in the justice's court comprised four counts, purporting to state four distinct causes of action. In the first count it was averred that the defendants were indebted to the plaintiffs, as overseers of the poor, in a certain sum, whereby an action had accrued to them as such overseers, according to the statute, specifying the title and two of the sections, which imposed a penalty for selling liquors without a license, to be recovered by an action in the name of the overseers. Each of the other counts alleged a further indebtedness of a like sum and was in all respects similar to the first. Held, that the complaint was sufficient in substance to authorize a recovery of the penalty for four several violations of the statute; there being no particular mode of separating counts in a justice's court.—Hall v. McKechnie, 22 Barb. 244.

3. PLEA OR ANSWER AND CROSS COMPLAINT.

IN GENERAL, § 324.
DILATORY PLEAS AND MATTER IN ABATEMENT, § 325.
SET-OFF, COUNTERCLAIM, AND CROSS COMPLAINT, § 326.

Necessity for plea in order to raise issue, see post, § 336.
Pleading limitations, see ante, § 246.
—— want of jurisdiction, see ante, § 223.

[a] (Ark. 1884) The failure to file an answer in a justice's court affects no rights on the appeal; the statute not requiring such answer.—Texas & St. L. Ry. v. Hall, 44 Ark. 375.

[b] (Ark. 1886) It is error for a justice of the peace to require a defendant to put in a written or verified answer before being heard.—Carolan v. Carolan, 47 Ark. 511, 2 S. W. 105.

[c] (Cal. 1860) An answer in a justice's court, denying generally the allegations of the complaint, conforms substantially to the requirements of Prac. Act, § 574.—Sullivan v. Cary, 17 Cal. 80.

[d] (Cal. 1862) Under the civil practice act, an answer to a verified complaint in a justice's court is sufficient, if it denies the material allegations, either generally or specifically.—Minturn v. Burr, 20 Cal. 48.

[e] (Ill. 1845) In suits before justices of the peace, the defendant should state his grounds of defense before the trial.—Bates v. Bulkley, 7 Ill. (2 Gilman) 389.

[f] (Ill. 1862) As no written pleadings are required in an action in a justice's court, it is not error to strike a written plea setting up the statute of frauds from the files.—Williams v. Corbet, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 262.

[g] (Iowa, 1859) In a suit before a justice, where the petition, though in writing and sworn to, does not call for a sworn answer, an oral answer is admissible.—Freibertsheyser v. Rischatch, 10 Iowa, 587.

[h] (Minn. 1875) Where, in an action in a justice's court, the complaint is filed on the return day of the summons, and defendant, omitting to plead, consents to an adjournment for more than a week, "the pleadings are closed," within Gen. St. c. 65, § 34, authorizing an adjournment in such case, and defendant's right to answer is gone.—O'Brien v. Pomroy, 22 Minn. 130.

[i] (Minn. 1889) Pleadings in justices' courts are to be construed with great liberality, and, where an answer clearly indicates the defense, it must be considered sufficient.—McGrath v. O'Brien, 42 Minn. 13, 43 N. W. 486.

[j] (Mo. 1887) Defendant, in a suit in a justice's court, refused to elect on which of two inconsistent defenses he would stand. Held, that his offer of evidence was properly rejected.—Sherman v. Rockwood, 26 Mo. App. 403.

[k] (N. H. 1859) A brief statement of defense is not required before a justice.—Colby v. Stevens, 38 N. H. 191.

[l] (N. J. 1806) A written plea is not required in actions before justices, except in cases of set-off.—Bray v. Van Note, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 143.

[m] (N. Y. 1814) Where a summons was personally served, and defendant did not appear on its return, and the justice then adjourned the cause for two days, when defendant appeared, tendered a plea, and demanded a venire, such plea was properly overruled by the justice as too late after a default, and defendant was only entitled to give evidence in mitigation of damages.—Snell v. Loucks, 11 Johns. 69.

[n] (N. Y. 1818) Defendant may plead and make his defense, if he appear before the justice enters on the trial of the merits of the cause.—Sweet v. Coon, 15 Johns. 86.

[o] (N. Y. 1822) On the return of a summons personally served in a justice's court, the defendant did not appear, and his default was entered. The plaintiff, after stating his demand, not being prepared to prove it, asked for an adjournment, which was granted, and at the return day the defendant appeared and offered a plea, which the justice refused. Held, that the plea should have been received.—Bowen v. Bell, 19 Johns. 390.

[p] (N. Y. 1827) Though the defendant do not appear at the return of the summons, yet he may plead at an adjourned day on paying costs of the adjournment and subsequent proceedings.—Lowther v. Crummie, 8 Cow. 87.

[q] (N. Y. 1828) Where there is no appearance on the return of a summons in a justice's court, and the cause is adjourned to a future day, the defendant or the party in interest has a right to interpose a plea on such adjourned day.—Riley v. Seymour, 1 Wend. 143.

[r] (N. Y. 1834) Where plaintiff, in an action before a justice, after waiting an hour and twenty minutes after the time specified in the summons for appearance of defendant, exhibited his declaration, and proceeded to the proof of his demand by examining two witnesses, and then, an hour and a half after the time specified in the summons for appearance, defendant appeared and asked leave to plead, offering to pay all costs, it was error of the justice to refuse such leave.—Pickert v. Dexter, 12 Wend. 150.

[s] (N. Y. 1834) Where defendant, in an action before a justice, appears on the return day of the summons before the cause is adjourned, or after adjournment, if the plaintiff is still present in court, it seems proper to permit him to plead; and, if defendant appears on the return day of the summons before plaintiff has closed his case, he should be permitted to plead.—Pickert v. Dexter, 12 Wend. 150.

[t] (N. Y. 1839) Notwithstanding the forty-seventh section of the act relating to courts held by justices of the peace, a justice may, in his discretion, upon terms, permit a defendant to come in and plead who did not appear on the return of a summons which had been personally served, but subsequently appeared on a day to which the cause had been adjourned at the request of plaintiff.—Jenkins v. Brown, 21 Wend. 454.

[u] (N. Y. 1884) It is an abuse of discretion for a justice of the peace, during the progress of the trial and while plaintiff is examining his witnesses, to refuse to allow defendant, who has appeared by counsel, to answer and disprove the case as made by plaintiff.—Doty v. Campbell, 1 How. Prac. (N. S.) 101.

[v] (N. Y. 1894) Where a defendant appears before a justice of the peace on the return day of the summons, after the hour limited for his appearance, and after plaintiff has given his evidence, but while plaintiff is still present, but before judgment has been entered, it is error for the justice to refuse to allow defendant to appear and answer.—Thompson v. Sheridan, 80 Hun, 33, 29 N. Y. Supp. 868.

[w] (Tex. 1888) In an action before a justice on an account, an answer denying the correctness of the account, and averring "that plaintiff is indebted to defendant for failing to comply with his contract, * * * to his damage in the sum of $5,000, which defendant now pleads in abatement against plaintiff's claim, if he has any, but asks no judgment against plaintiff, but reserves his right to sue for such damages in the court having jurisdiction thereof, and that the material in the account sued upon is part of such contract," sets up a good defense.—Collins v. Dignowity (Sup.) 8 S. W. 326.

[x] (Wis. 1860) Quære, whether the refusal of a justice to receive defendant's plea, after submission of the case by the plaintiff, is error —Tallmadge v. Potter, 12 Wis. 317.

For defects in parties, see ante, § 249.

Necessity for pleading in abatement, pendency of other suit, see "Abatement and Revival," vol. 1, cc. 118, 119, § 123 [r, w].

Pendency of action before justice in which claim might be set off as ground for abatement of other action, see "Abatement and Revival," vol. 1, cc. 60, 61, § 46.

[a] (Ala. 1874) A plea in abatement in a justice's court must be filed at the first term at which the case has been for trial, and comes too late after a general continuance.—Noles v. Marable, 50 Ala. 366.

[b] (Ala. 1882) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace for cutting timber, the amount of damages was not stated in the summons, but was alleged in the complaint to be $50, a plea to the jurisdiction on the ground that the damages exceeded $50 was frivolous and properly stricken from the file.—Wagnon v. Turner, 73 Ala. 197.

[c] (Ill. 1885) No written pleadings are required in a case before a justice of the peace, and no technicalities can be availed of; nevertheless, all dilatory defenses must be made at the earliest opportunity, as, for instance, that plaintiff has been adjudged to have no existence by reason of a judgment of quo warranto.—Dodge v. People, 113 Ill. 491, 1 N. E. 826.

[e] (Vt. 1824) That an action before a justice of the peace is not seasonably entered is properly pleadable in abatement; and the objection cannot be reached by a motion to dismiss the action.—Stone v. Proctor, 2 D. Chip. 108.

[f] (W. Va. 1891) The proper method to take advantage of any defect in the summons or in the return thereto in a justice's court is by a motion to quash, because in that court there are no formal pleadings, and the question cannot be raised by plea in abatement.—Layne v. Ohio River R. Co., 35 W. Va. 438, 14 S. E. 123.

[a] (Ark. 1854) In a suit before a justice of the peace, a set-off should not be rejected where the plaintiff had verbal notice of it, whether this notice was direct or indirect, though, if, from the manner in which notice was given, the plaintiff was surprised by the set-off, he might claim a continuance.—Reed v. Akin, 14 Ark. 475.

[b, c] (Iowa, 1878) Where a case before a justice of the peace against several defendants had been settled by one of them before the time set for trial, and before the filing of an answer, and it had been so entered upon the docket, held to be too late after that time to file a counterclaim.—Holmes v. Hull, 48 Iowa, 177.

[d] (Mich. 1896) In an action commenced before a justice of the peace to recover damages for wrongfully cutting trees on plaintiff's land, contrary to an agreement between plaintiff and defendant, where the pleadings are verbal, a notice of recoupment which does not point out in what respect the contract was broken by plaintiff is insufficient.—Kerr v. Bennett, 109 Mich. 546, 67 N. W. 564.

[e] (Mo. 1896) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 6205, providing that a defendant must give notice of any set-off in an action before a justice before the jury is sworn, the mere filing of a set-off without such notice to the adverse party is insufficient.—Frisby v. Ritman, 66 Mo. App. 418, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1365.

[f] (N. Y.) In an action before a justice of the peace, the defendant must plead or give notice of his set-off at the time of joining issue; and, if he neglects to do so, he cannot afterwards make the set-off at the trial.—(1813) Waring v. Lockwood, 10 Johns. 108; (1815) Sellick v. Fox, 12 Johns. 205.

[g] (N. Y. 1850) On joining issue in a justice's court, it is sufficient for defendants to plead the general issue and give notice that they will prove on the trial that the plaintiff is largely indebted to them for board, washing, and mending, furnished to him at his request, and for money paid, work, labor, and services, and that they will claim a judgment for $100, unless the plaintiff at the time objects to the notice for want of certainty or requires a specification of the nature of the set-off.—Bell v. Davis, 8 Barb. 210.

[i] (Tex. 1886) In an action in justice court, where defendant in offset to plaintiff's claim pleads an overcharge made in a previous settlement, it is unnecessary that the plea should allege either mistake or fraud, since the pleadings are not required to be in writing.—Eastham v. Randolph, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 115.

4. DEMURRER OR EXCEPTIONS, MOTIONS, AMENDMENTS, AND SUPPLEMENTAL PLEADINGS.

Demurrer in justice court as motion to dismiss on appeal, see post, 650 [c].

Misjoinder of actions as ground for demurrer, see ante, § 229 [i].

§ 327. Demurrer or exception and motions.

[a] (Mo. 1894) There is no demurrer to a defective complaint filed before a justice of the peace; the remedy being by motion to dismiss, to strike out, or to make the complaint more definite.—Martin v. Creech, 58 Mo. App. 391.

[b] (Neb. 1884) There is no statutory authority for a demurrer to a bill of particulars before a justice of the peace.—Miller v. Mesick, 15 Neb. 646, 20 N. W. 100.

[c] (N. Y. 1829) A demurrer may be interposed to pleadings in the justices' courts.—Van Hoesen v. Van Alstyne, 3 Wend. 75.

[d] (N. Y. 1837) The omission to plead a by-law may be taken advantage of by demurrer in a justice's court, as well as in a court of record.—Harker v. City of New York, 17 Wend. 199.

[e] (N. Y. 1847) Where a declaration in a justice's court set forth no ground of action, and the evidence made out no cause of action, a judgment against the defendant cannot be sustained, though the defendant took issue without demurring, and the plaintiff's allegations were fully proved.—Tifft v. Tifft, 4 Denio, 175.

[f] (N. Y. 1853) A motion to dismiss a complaint on the ground that it does not state facts enough to constitute a cause of action, as it depends on general principles of law and pleading, and not on rules of practice which pertain to courts of justices of the peace, is improper in such courts.—Hilliard v. Austin, 17 Barb. 141.

[g] (N. Y. 1853) Though a motion to dismiss the complaint in an action before a justice of the peace be made on the return day, yet it is error to allow it on the adjourned day, when the parties are ready for trial on the issues joined.—Hilliard v. Austin, 17 Barb. 141.

[h] (N. Y. 1855) A demurrer is the only proper mode of raising an objection to a pleading in a justice's court. The justice has no authority to entertain a motion to strike out a defense.—City of New York v. Mason, 1 Abb. Prac. 344.

[i] (N. Y. 1857) When defendant demurs to the complaint on the ground it does not state, etc., a cause of action, and the cause is submitted on the complaint and demurrer, the justice, on overruling the demurrer, may properly render judgment for the plaintiff.—The demurrer admits the facts stated in the complaint, and dispenses with proof of plaintiff's case.—Board of Excise Com'rs of Saratoga County v. Doherty, 16 How. Prac. 46.

[j] (N. Y.) Code Civ. Proc. § 2891, relating to justices' courts, provides that, "if a defendant fails to appear and answer, the plaintiff cannot recover without proving his case." Laws 1881, c. 414, § 3, provides that in certain cases, if the defendant fails to answer or demur to a sworn complaint, he shall be deemed to have admitted its allegations, and the court shall enter judgment for the amount demanded without further proof. Held, that the latter act does not repeal, but only modifies, the Code; and that, where defendant demurs, judgment cannot be entered without proof.—(1885) Oulman v. Schmidt, 35 Hun, 345; (1888) Lansing v. Stevens, 50 Hun, 605, 3 N. Y. Supp. 79.

[k] (N. Y. 1888) Laws 1881, c. 414, § 3, provides that, where defendant, in a suit before a justice of the peace, fails to answer or demur, on the return of the summons with proof of service, the court shall deem the allegations of the complaint admitted, and enter judgment for the amount claimed. Held that, where defendant demurred, and the demurrer was overruled, the court could not enter judgment without evidence of the amount claimed.—Thomas v. Jones, 47 Hun, 81.

[l] (N. Y. 1896) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2935, subd. 4, authorizing a demurrer by plaintiff in a justice court "to one or more counterclaims stated in the answer," an answer in such court is not demurrable because it improperly denied any knowledge or information as to the allegation of the complaint.—Singer v. Effler (City Ct. Alb.) 16 Misc. Rep. 334, 39 N. Y. Supp. 720.

—— on appeal, see post, §§ 665–693.

—— respecting parties to action, see ante, §§ 248, 249.

—— setting up limitations, see ante, § 246 [n].

Pleading title in amendment, see ante, § 219.

[b] (Cal. 1858) Amendments are to be allowed with great liberality in justice cases.—Butler v. King, 10 Cal. 342.

[c] (Cal.) Amendments to complaints are within the discretion of the justice.—(1858) Linhart v. Buiff, 11 Cal. 280; (1859) Canfield v. Bates, 13 Cal. 606.

[d] (Ga. 1895) Since the passage of Act Oct. 16, 1891, amending Act Sept. 26, 1883, it is not essential to the right of amending a plea and making a defense of a suit in justice court on an unconditional written contract that defendant should file a written plea at the first term.—Heyward v. Field, 95 Ga. 714, 22 S. E. 653.

[e] (Mich. 1882) Under Comp. Laws, § 5309, a person arrested and brought before a justice on a civil warrant has a right to a reasonable time for pleading, and where the justice requires him to plead immediately, and he pleads the general issue, and the case is then adjourned, he is entitled of right, and without conditions, to amend his pleadings, and put in any justification he may have on the adjourned day.—Meddaugh v. Williams, 48 Mich. 172, 12 N. W. 34.

[f] (Mich. 1895) A contract provided that, if plaintiff failed to deliver logs to be sawed at defendant's mill, a debt due him from defendant should become payable in lumber at the mill. Held, that a declaration thereon filed in a justice court, which failed to allege that plaintiff did not deliver the logs to be sawed, or that he demanded the lumber at the mill, could be amended by the insertion of allegations to that effect.—Stanley v. Anderson, 107 Mich. 384, 65 N. W. 247.

[g] (Mo. 1860) A description of the premises in a statement in an action of trespass before a justice, "building and premises in block number 84 of the city of St. Louis," being sufficient, an amendment adding the words "South Fourth street" is unnecessary, and therefore immaterial.—Burt v. Warne, 31 Mo. 296.

[h] (Mo. 1882) A justice of the peace may allow amendments not changing the cause of action.—Turner v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 76 Mo. 261.

[i] (Mo. 1891) An account, filed with a justice of the peace as the basis of an action, is not so fatally defective as to be incapable of amendment, when it consists merely of the item, "To balance for services rendered as traveling salesman, $64.15."—Lustig v. Cohen, 44 Mo. App. 271.

[j] (Mo. 1891) A statement before a justice of the peace that "plaintiff says defendants are justly indebted to him in the sum of $85.68, which sum is due him from defendants for the sale of cigars, wherein plaintiff acted as the agent and salesman of defendants under a certain written contract, and all of said sum of $85.68 is still due plaintiff," states a cause of action, and is subject to amendment.—Dahlgren v. Yocum, 44 Mo. App. 277.

[k] (Mo. 1892) Where an action before a justice of the peace is commenced by a statement of account consisting of one item "for work and labor," the statement, though insufficient to support a judgment, is not so defective as not to allow of amendment.—Lamb v. Bush, 49 Mo. App. 337.

[l] (N. J. 1818) If a plaintiff alters his "state of demand," after filing it in the office of a justice, without express permission of the court, a nonsuit must be entered, or it will vitiate the judgment.—Blackwell v. Leslie, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 112.

[m] (N. Y. 1836) An amendment will be allowed in a justice's court, by adding a plea after the issue joined, on terms necessitating an adjournment, if necessary, notwithstanding 2 Rev. St. p. 238, § 69, provides that, where a suit is commenced by summons, plaintiff can have but one adjournment, not to exceed eight days.—Colvin v. Corwin, 15 Wend. 557.

[n] (N. Y.) A justice of the peace has the same power to allow amendments as courts of record.—(1836) Colvin v. Corwin, 15 Wend. 557; (1845) Babcock v. Lipe, 1 Denio, 139; (1847) Fulton v. Heaton, 1 Barb. 552; (1856) Perry v. Tynen, 22 Barb. 137.

[o] (N. Y. 1845) A justice of the peace may allow plaintiff to add a new count to his declaration after the case has been adjourned.—Babcock v. Lipe, 1 Denio, 139.

[p] (N. Y. 1847) An application to amend a pleading in a justice's court is addressed to the discretion of the court.—White v. Stevenson, 4 Denio, 193.

[q] (N. Y. 1847) Where the plaintiff in a justice's court declared on a special agreement as a parol writing, which, when produced on the trial, turned out to be under the hands and seals of the parties, it was held that the justice could allow the plaintiff to amend, and that he might disregard the variance.—Mosher v. Lawrence, 4 Denio, 419

[r] (N. Y. 1852) Where a justice overrules a defense on the ground that it is not well pleaded, it is the duty of the justice to order the pleading to be amended.—Turck v. Richmond, 13 Barb. 533.

[s] (N. Y. 1856) On demurrer to the complaint in an action in a justice's court, the court, if it deems the objection well taken, should order the pleading to be amended, and has no power to pronounce judgment on a demurrer without such order.—Glasse v. Keulsen, 3 Abb. Prac. 100.

[t] (N. Y. 1871) When it becomes necessary to amend the complaint, in an action commenced in a justice's court to recover for the services of the plaintiff's minor son, in order that it may appear more clearly and specifically upon the face thereof by whom the services were in fact performed, such complaint may be amended on the trial, or after the trial, to conform to the proof.—Osborn v. Nelson, 59 Barb. 375.

[u] (N. Y. 1872) A justice of the peace has the right to allow an amendment of the complaint, on the trial of an action before him, by reducing the amount of damages claimed therein below $50, though the effect of such an amendment will be to deprive the defendant of a right to a new trial in the county court.—Jaycox v. Pinney, 62 Barb. 344.

[v] (N. Y. 1875) In an action before a justice of the peace for injury to plaintiff's buggy in a collision with defendant's wagon, in which a general denial is filed, it is error to refuse to allow defendant to amend his answer to show that since issue was joined an action had been tried by defendant against plaintiff to recover damages for the same collision, in which plaintiff had set up his damages as a counterclaim.—Ryan v. Lewis, 5 Thomp. & C. 662.

[w] (N. Y. 1879) In an action before a justice of the peace by the payee of a note given on the sale of a horse, a refusal to allow the defendant to amend his answer by setting up a breach of warranty is error; the proposed defense not being shown to be false or vexatious.—Walsh v. Cornett, 17 Hun, 27.

[x] (N. Y. 1888) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2944, allowing pleadings in justices' courts to be amended at any time before or during the trial, if substantial justice will be promoted, the justice must allow an application, made on the adjourned day, to amend the answer by setting up a former suit in bar, where there is nothing to show that it is for delay, or that the proposed defense is false; and though the complaint is verified as required by Laws 1881, c. 414, the absence of a verification of the proposed amended answer cannot be taken as evidence of its falsity, or of bad faith, where it does not appear that a copy of the verified complaint was served with the summons, as required by that act.—Vaughn v. Lego, 49 Hun, 606, 1 N. Y. Supp. 689, 15 Civ. Proc. R. 164.

[y] (N. Y. 1891) In trover brought in a justice's court, defendant denied the complaint, and afterwards filed an amended answer which set up matters of justification, but contained no denial. Held that, under the rule that pleadings in justices' courts are to be liberally construed, and since defendant evidently intended the amended answer to be in addition to the denial contained in the original answer, it would be so considered, and all matters which might have constituted a defense under the original and amended answers should have been admitted.—Van Curen v. Switzer, 58 Hun, 602, 11 N. Y. Supp. 263.

[z] (Wis. 1890) Rev. St. § 3626, subd. 11, provides that pleadings in courts of justices of the peace may be "amended at any time before trial, or during the trial, when by such amendment substantial justice will be promoted." Held, that the allowance of an amendment in a justice's court after the case was submitted, but before judgment, which made the complaint conform technically to the evidence given on the trial, and did not mislead defendant, was not error.—Hibbard v. Peek, 75 Wis. 619, 44 N. W. 641.

[a] (Cal. 1858) A justice may allow a complaint to be amended as to jurisdictional facts.—Linhart v. Buiff, 11 Cal. 280.

[b] (Cal. 1862) Where the jurisdiction of a justice's court extends only to a part of the relief sought in a complaint, it is erroneous to dismiss the complaint therefor. The court should direct an amendment or disregard the objectionable matters.—Howard v. Valentine, 20 Cal. 282.

[c] (Ind. 1894) Where, in replevin before a justice, the value of the property and amount of damages claimed together take the case beyond his jurisdiction, the complaint may be amended before appeal by omitting the damages.—Bensch v. Farnsworth, 9 Ind. App. 547, 34 N. E. 751, 37 N. E. 284.

[d] (Ind. 1894) Rev. St. 1894, § 7106 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5225), confers jurisdiction on a justice of the peace in an action to recover real property from a tenant unlawfully holding over. Held, that plaintiff, after bringing an action before a justice of the peace to recover real estate in such a manner that the justice had no jurisdiction, may amend his complaint by stating that defendant is plaintiff's tenant, and is unlawfully holding over.—Blair v. Porter, 12 Ind. App. 296, 38 N. E. 874, 40 N. E. 81.

[e] (Minn. 1875) Where, in an action in a justice's court, the complaint claims a sum beyond the jurisdiction of the court, but during the trial the plaintiff amends so as to reduce the claim to a jurisdictional amount, and the trial is then proceeded with by both parties, such court has jurisdiction to enter judgment therein.—Lamberton v. Raymond, 22 Minn. 129.

[f] (Mo. 1872) A justice of the peace may permit a plaintiff to amend his statement, so as to bring the amount within his jurisdiction.—Burden v. Hornsby, 50 Mo. 238.

[g] (N. Y. 1847) Where the plaintiff, in a justice's court, claimed damages in his declaration to an amount beyond the jurisdiction of the justice, and issue was joined and the cause adjourned, it was held that the plaintiff, on the adjourned day, might be permitted to amend the declaration so as to bring the case within the justice's jurisdiction, though the defendant objected to the amendment.—Woolley v. Wilber, 4 Denio, 570.

[h] (N. Y. 1856) In an action before a justice of the peace, defendant alleged an assault on his horse, while the horse was attached to a buggy, "and while the plaintiff was in said wagon." Held that, though not an action for an assault, in which case the justice would have had no jurisdiction, the justice did right in permitting the plaintiff to devest his complaint of the allegations relative to the presence of the plaintiff in the wagon, which he supposed might characterize the action as one of assault, and that the action as amended was clearly one for "injuring property."—Bull v. Colton, 22 Barb. 94.

[a] (Mo. 1894) A statement of a claim filed in justice court as an account for a certain number of feet of logs, at a certain amount per 1,000, may be amended by showing that it was an account for hauling the logs, this not being a statement of a different cause of action.—Cameron v. Hart, 57 Mo. App. 142.

[b] (N. Y. 1859) Under Code Proc. § 366, a justice's court has power to allow an amendment of a complaint for conversion, changing the allegations from those appropriate to a tort to those appropriate to a mere breach of contract. Such an amendment does not substantially change the cause of action.—Doughty v. Crozier, 9 Abb. Prac. 411.

[c] (N. Y. 1868) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 64, subd. 11, providing that pleadings may be amended at any time before trial when substantial justice will be thereby promoted, a justice of the peace has power to allow an amendment of a complaint before trial by substituting a different form of action for the one brought.—Bigelow v. Dunn, 53 Barb. 570, 36 How. Prac. 120.

[d] (N. Y. 1886) A plaintiff, suing for conversion, may on the trial waive the tort and amend, setting out a second cause of action for liquidated damages under a contract relating to the same subject-matter as the first cause of action.—De Witt v. Greener, 11 Civ. Proc. R. 327.

[e] (N. Y. 1886) Code, § 2044, requiring a justice to allow an amendment to a pleading, if substantial justice will be promoted thereby, he may permit an amendment to a complaint changing a cause of action in tort into one on contract.—De Witt v. Greener, 11 Civ. Proc. R. 327.

[f] (Vt. 1839) A justice of the peace cannot permit an amendment which changes the cause of action.—Emerson v. Wilson, 11 Vt. 357, 34 Am. Dec. 695.

§ 331. —— Notice of amendment.

[a] (Kan. 1872) It is error for a justice of the peace to render a judgment against a defendant on an amended bill of particulars, without the defendant having any notice of the amendment.—Alvey v. Wilson, 9 Kan. 401.

[a] (N. Y. 1841) A plea puis darrein continuance may be received in a justice's court.—West v. Stanley, 1 Hill, 69.

[b] (N. Y. 1848) In a justice's court, a plea in abatement puis darrein continuance is the proper, if not the only effectual, mode of taking advantage of an agreement to submit to arbitration the matters in controversy in the suit, made after issue joined.—Ressequie v. Brownson, 4 Barb. 541.

5. SIGNATURE AND VERIFICATION.

Verification as necessary in order to raise issue, see post, § 336 [b, n, o, s, tt, z, zz].

[a] (Ark. 1881) Pleadings before justices, whether written or oral, may be without verification.—Shinn v. Tucker, 37 Ark. 580.

[b] (Cal. 1886) Code Civ. Proc. § 446, providing that pleadings in the superior court shall be subscribed by the party or his attorney, does not apply to justices' courts.—Montgomery v. Yolo County Superior Court, 68 Cal. 407, 9 Pac. 720.

[c] (Ill. 1861) Under Scates' Rev. St. p. 254, c. 85, providing that defendant shall not deny on trial the execution of an instrument on which an action is brought, unless his plea is verified by affidavit, in a proceeding before a justice of the peace, defendant, if he deny the execution of an instrument in writing on which the action is brought, whether it is sealed or not, must do so by plea verified by affidavit.—Griswold v. Trustees of Peoria University, 26 Ill. 41, 79 Am. Dec. 361.

[d] (Ind. 1837) Where the certificate of a justice attached to a plea in abatement is imperfect, and it appears that the plea has been properly sworn to, the court should permit the justice to amend the certificate.—Blake v. Nichols, 4 Blackf. 311.

[e] (Ind. 1837) If there be a justice's certificate attached to a plea in abatement, stating that the plea has been sworn to before him, the plea must be considered as sufficiently verified.—Blake v. Nichols, 4 Blackf. 311.

[f] (Ind. 1867) A plea in abatement must be verified by oath or affirmation. This rule applies in courts of record, as well as in justices' courts. The provision of Code 1843, c. 40, art. 8, § 200, expressly requiring such verification, is continued in force by Code 1852 (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 336) § 802.—Indianapolis, P. & C. Ry. Co. v. Summers, 28 Ind. 521.

[g] (Ind. 1872) Where a complaint filed before a justice of the peace is signed by one as next friend of the plaintiff, it is a sufficient consent in writing under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 42, § 11.—Rowe v. Arnold, 39 Ind. 24.

[h] (Iowa, 1858) The petition was signed, "G. W. & R. Hoover." The justice, after a motion to dismiss, allowed "sworn to" to be added to the jurat, it having been sworn to, and held that the mode of signing was not fatally defective. His action was sustained on appeal.—Hoover v. Rhoads, 6 Iowa (6 Clarke) 505.

[i] (Minn. 1878) An unverified answer to a verified complaint in a justice's court is a nullity, and must be treated as such, unless plaintiff does something by which he recognizes its validity as a pleading.—Thompson v. Killian, 25 Minn. 111.

[j] (Miss. 1877) The requirement of Code, § 683, as to a defendant's sworn denial of the execution of an instrument, applies to suits in justices' courts, as well as those in circuit courts.—McBride v. Kilgore, 55 Miss. 242.

[k] (Mo. 1830) A plea in abatement in a justice's court need not be sworn to.—Henry v. Lane, 2 Mo. 201.

[l] (N. Y. 1818) In a court of a justice of the peace, a plea in abatement need not be verified by affidavit.—Gilbert v. Vanderpool, 15 Johns. 242.

[m] (N. Y. 1859) A verification of pleadings in justices' court, to the effect that the affiant believes the pleading to be true, is sufficient.—Schwerin v. Mills, 2 Hilt. 394.

[n] (N. Y. 1891) Under Laws 1881, c. 414, § 1, which provides that, in an action in a justice's court on a contract for the recovery of money only, the plaintiff or his agent may make a written complaint, which shall be subscribed by plaintiff or his agent, and shall be verified as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 526 (prescribing what an affidavit of verification shall contain when made by a party or by a person other than a party), the complaint in an action in a justice's court on a written instrument for the payment of money, brought by plaintiff's agent, who was in possession of the writing sued on, may be verified by the agent.—Syracuse Moulding Co. v. Squires, 61 Hun, 48, 15 N. Y. Supp. 321, 21 Civ. Proc. R. 58, reversing judgment (1891) 13 N. Y. Supp. 547, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 241.

6. BILL OF PARTICULARS AND COPY OF ACCOUNT, AND FILING WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

BILL OF PARTICULARS, § 334.
FILING WRITTEN INSTRUMENT, § 335.

[a] (Ga. 1892) A bill of particulars attached to a summons in a justice's court is an office paper of the court, and, when lost, a copy may be established instanter. That this was done, and that the copy may not have been correct, is not cause for reversing the final judgment.—Ballard Transfer Co. v. Clark, 91 Ga. 234, 18 S. E. 138.

[b] (Ind. 1861) A bill of particulars, with the names of the parties, sufficiently states a cause of action before a justice of the peace.—Smithson v. Dillon, 16 Ind. 169.

[c] (Iowa, 1866) When the cause of action in a justice's court consists of a book account embracing several items, the defendant is entitled to a bill of particulars, or to have the items entered on the justice's docket, if he demands the same.—McKenney v. Hopkins, 20 Iowa, 495.

[d] (Kan. 1863) The filing of a note with the undertaking indorsed thereon, in a case before a justice of the peace, is a sufficient bill of particulars.—Brenner v. Weaver, 1 Kan. 488, 83 Am. Dec. 444.

[e] (Kan. 1875) It is sufficient if a bill of particulars, in a case before a justice, states the essential facts, no matter how rudely and inartistically, yet so that the defendant is not misled, but clearly informed of the exact claim made upon him.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 14 Kan. 557.

[f] (Kan. 1887) Pleadings before justices are not to be viewed with great strictness; and mere technical objections, founded on a strict construction of a bill of particulars, may be disregarded.—Krous v. Pratt, 37 Kan. 651, 16 Pac. 103.

[g] (Kan. 1891) In justice's court, a bill of particulars is sufficient which reads: "The plaintiff alleges for his cause of action against H. the use of one two-horse wagon from the 20th day of September, 1887, to the 21st day of November, 1887, 50 days in time between dates, at twenty-five cents per day, $12.50."—High v. Hill, 46 Kan. 96, 26 Pac. 456.

[h] (Kan. 1891) In justice's court, a bill of particulars is sufficient which alleges that the defendant employed plaintiff to solicit a purchaser for certain land, and agreed to pay 5 per cent., or the customary commission; that plaintiff found a purchaser who paid $2,000 for the land, but defendant refused to pay plaintiff, and there is due him on the sale $100.—Pate v. Fitzhugh, 46 Kan. 129, 26 Pac. 452.

[i] (Kan. 1892) Technical precision is not required in the statement of a cause of action in a bill of particulars in a justice's court, but the most liberal construction will be given to it, and a cause of action stated in the most general way will be sustained, in order to uphold a judgment inherently right.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Henning, 48 Kan. 465, 29 Pac. 597.

[j] (Kan. 1896) Though a bill of particulars filed before a justice of the peace, in an action to recover of a railroad company damages for stock killed, when strictly construed, imputes the negligence to the railroad train instead of to the servants of the company, it will, under the Code, be held sufficient.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 2 Kan. App. 167, 43 Pac. 284.

[k] (Mich. 1883) Where a bill of the particulars of a defendant's items of set-off has been demanded by plaintiff, and tendered by defendant after the expiration of the time within which it was ordered to be filed, and after he has asked for the striking of a jury, it is error for a justice of the peace, on his motion, to refuse to receive it because not filed sooner.—Boatz v. Berg, 51 Mich. 8, 16 N. W. 184.

[l] (Neb. 1882) A statement in the form of a common debtor and creditor account is sufficient as a bill of particulars on a claim for damages.—Crossley v. Steele, 13 Neb. 219, 13 N. W. 175.

[m] (Neb.) Where an action is brought on a promissory note before a justice of the peace, and the note is copied by him into his docket, and a summons issued thereon, it is a sufficient bill of particulars.—(1883) Wells v. Turner, 14 Neb. 445, 16 N. W. 484; (1885) Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lemke, 18 Neb. 184, 24 N. W. 727.

[n] (Neb. 1884) The defendant need not file a bill of particulars unless required by the plaintiff so to do, under Code Civ. Proc. § 951, which provides that defendant shall file such bill, as to any set-off, "if required" by the plaintiff.—Clarine v. Nelson, 15 Neb. 440, 19 N. W. 684.

[o] (Neb. 1884) A bill of particulars alleged that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum and interest, "on two certain promissory notes hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A and B,' which is made a part hereof," etc. Held, that it stated a cause of action.—Freeman v. Burks, 16 Neb. 328, 20 N. W. 207.

[p] (Neb. 1887) A bill of particulars in an action in a justice's court, setting out that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in a sum stated "for 17 stock hogs, weighing 2,240 pounds gross," is sufficient to apprise the defendant of the nature of the action, and will be upheld where no objection is taken until after judgment.—Cook v. Hester, 21 Neb. 369, 32 N. W. 72.

[pp] (N. J.) The copy of account must contain the particular items.—(1806) Clark v. Hillyer, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 102; (1809) Magee v. Buckbee, 3 N. J Law (2 Penning.) 550.

[r] (N. Y. 1893) A justice of the peace has no inherent power to strike out or ignore an entire pleading because of failure to comply with an order for a bill of particulars, but is limited to the imposition of the penalty prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 531, which provides that the party refusing to give such bill of particulars is precluded from giving evidence as to the subject on which it was demanded.—Bloom v. Huyck, 71 Hun, 252, 25 N. Y. Supp. 7.

[s] (Ohio, 1876) Under the requirement of the justice act (Swan & C. St. p. 681, §§ 54, 55) that the bill of particulars before a justice's court must state in a plain and direct manner the facts constituting the cause of action, and that the evidence on the trial shall be confined to the items set forth in the bill, the only test of its sufficiency is whether it will admit proof of sufficient facts to make out the claim.—Scioto Val. Ry. Co. v. Cronin, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 315.

[t] (Ohio, 1876) The bill is not to be tested by the strict rules applicable to pleadings, but is to be liberally construed.—Scioto Val. Ry. Co. v. Cronin, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 315, affirmed (1882) 38 Ohio St. 122.

[u] (Okl. 1895) In a justice's court, a bill of particulars for work, which states the title of the court and the names of the parties, and alleges an indebtedness for work at the request of defendant, and that the same is due, is sufficient.—Twine v. Kilgore, 3 Okl. 640, 39 Pac. 388.

[v] (Tex. 1894) The form in which an account filed in an action in a justice's court is drawn up cannot prejudice the right of the plaintiff on the merits of his case as disclosed by the evidence.—Sauger v. Noonan, 27 S. W. 1056.

As dispensing with complaint, see ante, § 307.

[a] (Ark. 1844) In a proceeding before a justice of the peace, the instrument or account upon which the action is founded must be filed before the summons issues.—Ex parte Anthony, 5 Ark. (5 Pike) 358.

[b] (Ark.) Where it appears that an account on which a suit is founded is not filed with the justice until after the summons has been issued, it is clear that he can legally take no cognizance of it.—(1845) Pendleton v. Fowler, 6 Ark. (1 Eng.) 41; (1845) Levy v. Shurman, Id. 182, 42 Am. Dec. 690; (1846) Latham v. Jones, Id. 371; (1846) Dickey v. Pettigrew, Id. 424.

[c] (Ark. 1845) Where a plaintiff filed with a justice of the peace, before the summons issued, a bill purporting to be a bank note, on which the name of the defendant did not appear, it was held that, as it did not import any liability on the defendant, it could not constitute the foundation of a suit, and was not such a filing of the cause of action as is required by the statute.—Levy v. Shurman, 6 Ark. (1 Eng.) 182, 42 Am. Dec. 690.

[d] (Ark. 1846) Under the statute requiring the plaintiff to file with the justice, before the issuance of the summons, the instrument purporting to have been executed by the defendant, the filing of a note signed by the defendant, payable to a third person, and not legally assigned to the plaintiff, so as to give him a right to sue in his own name, is not a compliance with the statute, and does not give the justice jurisdiction.—Latham v. Jones, 6 Ark. (1 Eng.) 371.

[e] (Ark. 1847) To give a justice of the peace jurisdiction, the cause of action must be filed with him before suing out the summons.—Keath v. Berkley, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 469.

[f] (Ark. 1849) The cause of action must be filed with the justice before the issuance of the writ to give him jurisdiction of the case, as well where the defendant appears and pleads as where he makes default.—Everett v. Clements, 9 Ark. (4 Eng.) 478.

[g] (Ark. 1850) A plea to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, because no cause of action was filed before summons issued, is a good plea.—Evans v. Parks, 10 Ark. (5 Eng.) 306.

[h] (Iowa, 1856) If the instrument sued on is filed before the justice, his mere failure to mark it "Filed" at the proper time does not prejudice the plaintiff; but the omission may be remedied by an entry nunc pro tunc.—Stone v. Murphy, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 35.

[i] (Minn. 1875) In an action in a justice's court on a promissory note the complaint was defective in failing to state that defendant made the note, and that plaintiff was the owner or holder; but on the trial, defendant having withdrawn his answer, plaintiff, without objection, introduced in evidence, and filed with the justice, a note from defendant to plaintiff, corresponding to the description of the one set out in the complaint. Held, that the filing of the note might be treated as an amendment, under Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 33, permitting amendments during trial to supply omissions in the allegations, and a sufficient compliance with section 28, requiring plaintiff to deliver the instrument sued on to the court.—Royce v. Gray, 21 Minn. 329.

[j] (Miss. 1886) Under Code 1880, § 2196, requiring "the evidence of debt, statement of account, or other written statement of the cause of action," to be lodged with a justice before whom suit is begun, a copy of the note sued on may be filed instead of the original.—Duncan v. Scott County Sup'rs, 64 Miss. 38, 8 South. 204.

[k] (Mo. 1839) The statute of 1835, requiring an instrument in writing on which a suit before a justice of the peace is founded to be filed with the justice before suit commenced, is directory merely, and the filing may be waived by the defendant.—Sublett v. Noland, 5 Mo. 516.

[m] (Mo. 1893) The delivery to a justice of the peace of a contract sued on in his court constitutes a filing, and the filing need not be shown by a file mark.—Collins v. Kammann, 55 Mo. App. 464.

[n] (Mo. 1894) Where an action before a justice of the peace is founded on a note which is not filed before him, neither the justice nor the circuit court on appeal acquires jurisdiction.—Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Foster, 56 Mo. App. 197.

7. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

MATTERS TO BE PROVED, § 336.
EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE UNDER PLEADINGS AND WITHOUT PLEA, § 337.
—— DEFENSES, § 338.
—— SET-OFF OR COUNTERCLAIM, § 339.
—— GENERAL ISSUE, WITH OR WITHOUT NOTICE OF SPECIAL MATTER, § 340.
VARIANCE BETWEEN ALLEGATIONS AND PROOF, § 341.

Failure to appear as admission of claim, see ante, § 276 [c].

[a] (Cal. 1859) In a suit before a justice, an averment that the plaintiff is administrator of A., not denied, requires no further proof.—Liening v. Gould, 13 Cal. 598.

[b] (Ill. 1842) Act 1838–39, "to amend the several laws in relation to practice in courts of law," etc., applies to suits before justices of the peace. In an action before a justice, therefore, an assignee of a note need not prove the assignment, unless it is denied by affidavit.—Archer v. Bogue, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 526.

[c] (Ill. 1849) The provision in Rev. St. c. 40, § 7, dispensing, where there is no plea in abatement, with the proof of partnership and of the names of the partners, in a suit brought by a firm, applies as well to suits commenced before justices of the peace as to those brought in the circuit court.—Evans v. Fisher, 10 Ill. (5 Gilman) 569.

[d] (Ill. 1862) In actions before justices of the peace, the defendant has a right to insist on proof of every material fact necessary to a recovery, just as if all the requisite pleas had been filed; and the plaintiff, if a corporation, must prove its corporate existence.—Town of Lewiston v. Proctor, 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 414.

[e] (Ill. 1862) The statute of frauds will be presumed to be pleaded in a justice's court.—Williams v. Corbet, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 262.

[f] (Ill. 1892) Failure of defendants, or either of them, to deny joint liability by affidavit, when sued on contract in justice's court, as required by Rev. St. c. 110, § 36, relieves plaintiff from proving in the first instance the joint liability of defendants.—Readey v. Schwanzenbach, 46 Ill. App. 348.

[g] (Ill. 1892) Under Prac. Act, § 35, failure to file a plea denying general liability is an implied admission that, if there was a contract by any of defendants, it was that of all.—Fitzpatrick v. Reilly, 46 Ill. App. 520.

[h] (Ind. 1835) The defendant in a justice's court has the benefit of the general issue, though it be not pleaded, and though a special plea be filed.—McHatton v. Bates, 4 Blackf. 63.

[i] (Ind. 1846) Though a suit be commenced in a justice's court, the defendant cannot have the benefit of the plea of non est factum, unless it be pleaded and sworn to.—Neely v. Chinn, 8 Blackf. 84.

[j] (Ind. 1850) In a case originating before a justice, the omission to file a formal replication is not fatal on an objection that there was no issue.—Kinch v. Weatherall, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 226.

[k] (Ind. 1854) On a trial before a justice of the peace, the general issue is in by law, and need not be formally pleaded.—Howard v. Cobb, 6 Ind. 5.

[l] (Ind. 1861) The defendant by his waiver of record, may waive the general denial which the statute puts in, in his favor, in all cases before justices of the peace.—Cross v. Pearson, 17 Ind. 612.

[m] (Ind. 1876) On trial of an action before a justice, where there is no answer pleaded, the defendant has the benefit of the general denial; and, if the action be on a note, plaintiff cannot recover, if it is not offered in evidence.—Logansport, C. & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Braden, 53 Ind. 234.

[n] (Kan. 1877) In a justice's court, the existence of a corporation may be put in issue by defendant, without a denial under oath, and even without a written denial of any kind.—Stanley v. Farmers' Bank, 17 Kan. 592.

[o] (Kan. 1890) Where a claim for wages for services rendered by plaintiff to defendant arises from contract, but is not founded on a promissory note or other instrument in writing, and a statement of such claim or demand is made out in detail and in writing by plaintiff, and presented to defendant, such statement constitutes an account, within Justice's Act, § 84, and Civ. Code, § 108, providing that an account duly verified shall be taken as true unless the denial of the same be verified.—Southern Kan. Ry. Co. v. Gould, 44 Kan. 68, 24 Pac. 352.

[p] (Kan. 1894) In an action before a justice of the peace on a verified account, where no bill of particulars or verified denial is filed by defendant, the correctness of the account is admitted by him.—Bolen Coal Co. v. Whittaker Brick Co., 52 Kan. 747, 35 Pac. 810.

[r] (Mich. 1858) Where plaintiff in a justice's court declares against two or more defendants as makers of a promissory note, which is signed by a collective name, and which is produced and filed with the justice, the defendants, appearing to the action and pleading the general issue, without oath, are to be taken, under Comp. Laws, §§ 3714, 3767, to admit, not only the execution of note in the abstract, but that it was executed by the parties declared against.—Pegg v. Bidleman, 5 Mich. 26.

[s] (Mich. 1877) In an action before a justice on a written instrument, under which plaintiffs claim as assignees, the filing of the instrument, with the indorsement of an assignment purporting to be executed by an attorney in fact of plaintiffs' assignor, and the failure to deny on oath its execution, will not put defendant in a position of admitting the execution, nor save the plaintiff from making proof thereof.—Hinkley v. Weatherwax, 35 Mich. 510.

[ss] (Minn. 1856) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, the answer alleges a set-off, and no reply is interposed, the set-off must be taken as admitted.—Taylor v. Bissell, 1 Minn. 225 (Gil. 186).

[t] (Minn. 1861) Under Pub. St. c. 59, §§ 25, 29, 33, relating to pleadings in a justice's court, nothing is admitted in an answer by failure to reply, except a counterclaim.—Walker v. McDonald, 5 Minn. 455 (Gil. 368).

[tt] (Mo. 1858) In suits in justices' courts, a defendant must deny under oath the execution of the instrument sued on, to render proof of it necessary.—Hickman v. Kunkle, 27 Mo. 401.

[u] (Mo. 1875) In the absence of something to show to the contrary, the defendant in a suit before a justice of the peace is presumed to plead the general issue.—Farmers' & Drovers' Bank v. Williamson, 61 Mo. 259.

[v] (Mo. 1891) In an action before a justice on a note, an affidavit by defendant that he "did not sign the note sued upon" is sufficient to put in issue the "execution" of the note under Rev. St. 1889, § 6217, though the statute uses the word "execution," and not "sign."—Edmonston v. Henry, 45 Mo. App. 346.

[vv] (Mo. 1892) In an action before a justice of the peace, affirmative matter set up by either party is understood to be denied without any allegation to that effect.—Lamb v. Bush, 49 Mo. App. 337.

[ww] (N. Y. 1848) In an action before a justice, the defendant, by refusing to answer or demur, admits the truth of the complaint.—Everitt v. Lisk, 1 Code Rep. 70.

[x] (N. Y. 1850) Where, in a justice court, defendant puts in an answer of set-off, plaintiff's demand is thereby admitted, and need not be proved.—Young v. Moore, 2 Code Rep. 143.

[xx] (N. Y. 1850) In a justice's court, an answer of payment admits the making and performance of the contract sued on.—De Courcy v. Spalding, 3 Code Rep. 16.

[y] (N. Y. 1888) Code Civ. Proc. § 2891, requiring a plaintiff in a justice's court to prove his case on defendant's default, does not require a plaintiff corporation to prove its own corporate existence.—Crown Point Iron Co. v. Fitzgerald, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 427.

[yy] (N. Y. 1888) Code Civ. Proc. § 1776, requiring that the description of a corporation need not be proved, unless put in issue, applies in actions brought by a corporation in a justice's court.—Crown Point Iron Co. v. Fitzgerald, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 427.

[z] (N. Y. 1894) A complaint alleged that defendant, by false and fraudulent representations, induced plaintiff to sell him goods of a certain value, and that plaintiff was damaged to the amount of the value of the goods, less payments made by defendant, and demanded judgment for such amount. Held, that the complaint stated a cause of action to recover damages for deceit, and was not, therefore, within Laws 1881, c. 414, providing that, in an action before a justice on contract or on an account, plaintiff may recover on his verified complaint without further proof, where defendant fails to file a verified answer.—Kusselewskey v. Fabricant, 8 Misc. Rep. 104, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1091.

[zz] (Wash. 1890) Where defendant in forcible entry and detainer sets up quiet possession for more than a year before filing the complaint, the fact that plaintiff did not by a reply deny the allegation of quiet possession is not to be taken as a confession of its truth, since, in a justice's court, all new matter in the answer is presumed to be denied, except, as required by Code, § 1757, subd. 3, in cases where a set-off is claimed by way of defense.—Bellingham Bay & B. C. R. Co. v. Strand, 1 Wash. St. 133, 23 Pac. 928.

Evidence admissible under process, see ante, § 253 [a, b, c, i, n, xj].

[a] (Ga. 1886) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, the only cause of action against a married woman was set out by attaching to the summons three notes, one of which was signed by her husband and the other two signed by him as trustee, on one of which her name appeared, there could be no recovery against her, since her trust estate, if she had any, could not be reached by such pleading.—Crusselle v. Chastain, 76 Ga. 840.

[b] (Iowa, 1866) Though a petition in an action before a justice merely claims a certain sum for the loss of a trunk, when the defendant denies generally, the plaintiff may prove the particular manner of the loss and how the trunk came into the defendant's hands.—Byers v. Des Moines Val. R. Co.'s Lessees, 21 Iowa, 54.

[c] (Iowa, 1868) In an action before a justice of the peace against a railroad company to recover damages for cattle killed on the railroad, it is not necessary to plead the notice and affidavit required, under Laws 1862, c. 169, § 6, in order to make them admissible in evidence.—Brandt v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 26 Iowa, 114.

[d] (Iowa, 1870) A complaint before a justice of the peace asked $100 "for damages," and alleged trespasses committed by defendant on plaintiff's lands, and alleged that plaintiff had possession thereof, and that defendant "broke and entered said premises by force, and * * * cut down and carried away 100 trees, of the value of $100." Held, that plaintiff's recovery was not confined to the value of the trees taken, but might include damages for consequent injuries to the realty, as well as for the breaking.—Dugan v. Hunt, 29 Iowa, 447.

[e] (Mich. 1878) A justice's return set forth that "the plaintiff declared verbally against said defendant on common counts in assumpsit, and also on breach of a written contract, now on file in court, in all for $300, or under." Held a sufficient declaration to warrant the admission of the contract in evidence.—Bradshaw v. McLoughlin, 39 Mich. 480.

[f] (Mich. 1893) An oral declaration in a justice's court, alleging the action was brought for back taxes levied and assessed against certain land previous to the date of its purchase by plaintiff from defendant, on which date defendant gave plaintiff a warranty deed thereof, sufficiently apprised defendant that plaintiff claimed that this deed covenanted against such taxes, and that plaintiff sought to recover for a breach of such covenant, so that, under such declaration, special tax rolls were admissible to establish the lien on the land.—Lynch v. Craney, 95 Mich. 199, 54 N. W. 879.

[g] (Mo. 1852) The date at the head of an account, in a justice's court, does not preclude the plaintiff from proving the time when the various items accrued. It does not presuppose the entire indebtedness to have accrued prior to that time. Such a rigid construction of the accounts of illiterate men would tend to prevent justice.—Mooney v. Williams, 15 Mo. 442.

[h] (Mo. 1892) In an action before a justice, plaintiff need not plead special damages in order to recover them.—Glenville v. St. Louis R. Co., 51 Mo. App. 629.

[i] (Mont. 1896) The assignment of an account must be alleged in the declaration, though the action thereon is brought in justice court.—Balden v. Thomasen, 17 Mont. 487, 43 Pac. 627.

[j] (N. Y.) A declaration for "money due on a contract, damages for the nonperformance of a contract," etc., brought in a justice's court, was sufficient to allow the introduction in evidence of a contract for the sale of lands; the defendant having pleaded the general issue and requiring no specifications.—(1843) Young v. Rummell, 5 Hill, 60; (1844) Id., 7 Hill, 503.

[k] (N. Y. 1849) In an action in a justice's court for a breach of one of the engagements in a lease, there was annexed to the declaration, which alleged the breach without mentioning the form of action, a paper purporting to be a copy of the lease, with a notice to the defendants that the same was such copy, containing substantially the provisions set forth in the declaration, and concluding with the usual words, "Signed, sealed," etc., but there were no marks showing that the original had been sealed. Held, that plaintiffs might give in evidence and recover on the lease, though a sealed instrument.—Smith v. Kerr, 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 144.

[m] (N. Y.) A reply being inadmissible in a justice's court, the allegation of new matter in the answer must in all cases be deemed controverted by the plaintiff; and it is competent for him to countervail it by evidence, either in direct denial or by way of avoidance.—(1856) Hodges v. Hunt, 22 Barb. 150; (1869) Conklin v. Field, 37 How. Prac. 455.

[n] (N. C. 1833) Plaintiff brought an action by warrant returnable before a single justice, and in such warrant stated his claim to be for "debt due by account for the amount of $76," and offered in evidence an account other than a signed account. Held, that such unsigned account was inadmissible, since a justice's jurisdiction in regard to unsigned accounts is limited to sums not exceeding $60, and, the warrant being plaintiff's declaration, no evidence could be rightly received which did not sustain it.—McFarland v. Nixon, 15 N. C. 141.

[o] (Tex. 1885) Since pleadings are not required to be in writing in a justice's court, the facts necessary to entitle a party to recover on an account may be proved without being alleged.—Mensing v. Ayres, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 562.

[p] (Tex. 1886) In an action in a justice court against two railroad companies for professional services rendered to one of them, plaintiffs are entitled to prove the facts which entitle them to recover against both defendants, without alleging them in written pleading.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hutcheson, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 96.

[r] (Wis. 1862) In trespass before a justice, the complaint set forth damage to growing wheat. Held that, under this complaint, a recovery could not be had for injury to grass.—Hassa v. Junger, 15 Wis. 598.

[s] (Wis. 1864) In an action commenced before a justice of the peace, the complaint alleged the cause of action to be "for the balance due on sale and delivery of wheat, * * * sold and delivered to the defendant on," etc., "for an amount of one hundred and fifty bushels, for which plaintiff demands judgment." Held, that this was sufficient to admit proof of a mistake made by the parties in settling for wheat delivered by plaintiff to defendant, by reason of which the latter was charged with and paid for 150 bushels less than the amount actually delivered.—Davis v. McKay, 18 Wis. 477.

Limitations, see ante, § 246 [c, e, f, j].

[a] (Ark. 1846) Usury may be proved, in defense of an action on a note before a justice of the peace, without a plea and affidavit. The statute making them necessary applies only to the superior court.—Howell v. Vinsant, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 146.

[b] (Ark. 1847) In an action on a promissory note before a justice of the peace, want of consideration may be inquired into without special plea.—Greer v. George, 8 Ark. (3 Eng.) 131.

[c] (Ga. 1884) In an action in a justice's court, in which defendant pleads a set-off, plaintiff can defend against such plea by showing that the claim on which it is based is settled, without further pleading.—Patterson v. Newton, 74 Ga. 366.

[d] (Ill.) In an action by the assignee of a note before a justice, where defendant desires to question the assignment, he must deny the same by affidavit.—(1851) Hudson v. Dickinson, 12 Ill. (2 Peck) 407; (1863) Foy v. Blackstone, 31 Ill. 538, 83 Am. Dec. 246.

[e] (Ill. 1875) In a suit before a justice of the peace, against two parties as partners, on a note signed by their firm name, no plea is necessary to put in issue either the execution of the note or the fact of partnership. An affidavit presenting the issue is sufficient.—Zuel v. Bowen, 78 Ill. 234.

[f] (Ill. 1879) Under Rev. St. c. 79, § 58, providing that in actions before justices of the peace on contracts against two or more defendants as joint defendants or partners, or joint obligors or payors, proof of the joint liability need not "in the first instance" be given unless such joint liability is denied by affidavit, the defendants may prove the want of such joint liability, though they failed to file such affidavit.—Donnan v. Bang, 3 Ill. App. 400; Same v. Gross, Id. 409.

[k] (Ind. 1885) Papers and docket entries sought to be introduced, with other evidence, in bastardy proceedings, that defendant had been previously sued before the same justice, on the same cause, on complaint of the same woman under another name, are not admissible unless the answer avers that the prior action was commenced by the same person under the other name, and that they were one and the same person.—Morris v. State, 101 Ind. 560, 1 N. E. 70.

[n] (Iowa, 1869) In an action on an account for work and labor before a justice, defendant in his answer averred in set-off that "there was due and owing him, over and above all offsets and credits to which plaintiff may be entitled, the sum," etc., which averment was denied by the reply. Held, under the liberal rules of pleading before justices of the peace, that it was not error to admit in evidence in behalf of plaintiff a written contract as evidence of a credit, though not pleaded.—Emerick v. Clemens, 26 Iowa, 332.

[q] (Miss. 1888) Defendant, having orally pleaded want of consideration for the note sued on, proved, without objection, that he, as his wife's agent, had given the note to plaintiffs to pay her debt, and that it was understood that his signature as agent was to bind her alone. Held a good defense, though different from that pleaded; the defense not requiring a formal plea.—Currie v. Chambers, 3 South. 412.

[w] (N. J. 1885) In trespass cases in justices' courts, if the defendant fails to file a plea of title and give bond in pursuance of section 25 of the small cause act, he cannot justify by showing legal title in himself or a third person, under whose authority he claims the act of alleged trespass was committed.—Edgar v. [xx] (N. Y. 1810) Under St. 31st Sess. c. 204, § 7, the defendant, in trespass before a justice of the peace under a plea of title, has three grounds of defense, viz., title in himself, title in a third person, and possession out of the plaintiff.—Douglas v. Valentine, 7 Johns. 273.

Hale, 45 Kan. 458, 25 Pac. 856.

[d] (N. Y. 1835) It is sufficient, on the joining of an issue in a justice's court, for the defendant to say "that he pleads the general issue, and gives notice of set-off, and claims a balance of $50," unless the plaintiff requires a specification of the nature of the set-off; and if he does not so object, or make such requisition, he cannot subsequently at the trial object to evidence of set-off, for such want of specification at the time of joining issue.—Civill v. Wright, 13 Wend. 403.

[e] (Wis. 1860) In an action before a justice, a set-off was claimed for "notes given by the plaintiff and conveyed to the defendant before the commencement of the suit." Taylor, 13 Wis. 230.

Brough, 64 Ind. 23.

[c] (Iowa. 1871) In an action on an account before a justice, defendant, under a general denial of indebtedness, may prove payment made at the time he received the articles.—West v. Moody, 33 Iowa, 137.

[d] (Mass. 1811) In trespass q. c. f. before a justice of the peace, defendant cannot give evidence of a right of way under the general issue.—Strout v. Berry, 7 Mass. 385.

[e] (Mass. 1857) Under Rev. St. c. 85, §§ 11, 12, an entry in a record of a justice of the peace that the "defendant appears and pleads orally, and says he is not guilty," is a joinder of issue, and the defendant may give in evidence any matter admissible under any general or special plea in bar.—Wilbur v. Taber, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 361.

[f] (Mich. 1887) In an action before a justice of the peace against a constable for wrongfully selling plaintiff's property on attachment against his son, where defendant pleads the general issue, with notice that he will set up that he levied on the property, as constable, as the property of the son, such notice is sufficient to apprise plaintiff of the character of the defense, and to admit evidence showing that the transfer of the property was a fraud on creditors.—Whittle v. Bailes, 65 Mich. 640, 32 N. W. 874.

[g] (N. H. 1834) In trespass q. c. f. before a justice of the peace, defendant cannot, under the general issue, show title in himself.—Flagg v. Gotham, 7 N. H. 266.

[h] (N. H. 1835) In trespass before a justice, evidence of a license to enter may be given under the general issue.—Wheeler v. Rowell, 7 N. H. 515.

[i] (N. H. 1859) A tender may be given in evidence before a justice of the peace under the general issue.—Colby v. Stevens, 38 N. H. 191.

[j] (N. H. 1859) Act Dec. 31, 1828, allows defendant in an action before a justice to give any special matter in evidence under the general issue. Act July 2, 1831, allowing either party in all civil actions to give in evidence any special matter under the general issue on filing a brief statement, was construed not to apply to actions before justices. Rev. St. c. 187, § 3, afterwards passed, provided that no special plea should be required in a civil action before a justice and contained substantially the second provision of the second act above cited. Held, that the provisions in the revision should be given the same construction as that previously given, and defendant in an action before a justice need not file a brief statement, in order that evidence of tender may be given under the general issue.—Colby v. Stevens, 38 N. H. 191.

[k] (N. J. 1828) In courts for the trial of small causes, the infancy of the plaintiff may be given in evidence under the general issue.—Smith v. Van Houten, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 381.

[l] (N. J. 1837) Rev. Laws, p. 700, provides that a justice may proceed with a qui tam action for cutting timber, therein authorized, notwithstanding any claim defendant may make to the land, unless defendant gives bond for appearance at the next term of court, where the same may be cognizable in an action of trespass. Rev Laws, p. 629, excludes from the jurisdiction of justices all actions involving title to land. Held that, under the general issue in a qui tam action before a justice for cutting timber, ownership of the land by defendant is admissible to show his right of possession.—Hill v. Carter, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 87.

[m] (N. Y. 1813) If the defendant relies on a former trial and judgment, he must plead it, or give notice at the time of joining issue. It is too late, after pleading the general issue, to set up that defense.—Dexter v. Hazen, 10 Johns. 246.

[n] (N. Y. 1829) In an action before a justice of the peace, a defendant, acting in aid of an officer, may justify on such ground under the general issue.—Jennings v. Carter, 2 Wend. 446, 20 Am. Dec. 635.

[o] (N. Y. 1834) Defendant, in an action in justice court, pleaded the general issue and gave notice of a set-off, which he stated was for grain, hides, and boarding. On the same day, after an adjournment, he informed plaintiff's attorney that he had also an account for a stove sold. The justice on the trial refused to receive evidence of the sale of the stove. Held error, since the notice of the set-off was sufficient to cover it.—Harrington v. Ensign, 11 Wend. 554.

[p] (N. Y. 1848) In an action of covenant for rent, before a justice, where the defendant pleaded the general issue and "gave notice of special matters," and on the trial, at a subsequent day, the justice allowed him to give evidence of an eviction, it was held that the justice was right; it being clear that there was no surprise.—Cohen v. Dupont, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 260.

[q] (N. Y. 1873) It is error for a justice of the peace, on a trial before him, to receive evidence under a general denial of the making of a payment since the commencement of the action and joining issue therein, without an amendment of the answer, by leave, for that purpose.—Hall v. Olney, 65 Barb. 27.

[r] (R. I. 1885) Pub. St. c. 196, § 30, provides that whenever an action of trespass shall be brought before any justice court, and the defendant shall plead the general issue, he shall not be allowed to offer any evidence that may bring the title to real estate in question. Held, that the word "title," as used in the statute, signifies, not the fact of plaintiff's possession, but his right of possession; and therefore, where a tenant is sued in trespass by his landlord for an injury to the premises, he may controvert the fact of his landlord's possession, whenever he can do so without bringing his right into question.—Carroll v. Rigney, 15 R. I. 81, 23 Atl. 46.

[s] (Vt. 1868) In an action for damages (aside from taxable costs) for commencing a suit and suffering it to be discontinued by the nonattendance of the justice, it is competent to show in defense, under the general issue, that the plaintiff in that case paid the defendant his taxable costs immediately after such discontinuance.—Read v. Amidon, 40 Vt. 169.

Variance between process and proof, see ante, § 253 [a–c, i, n, x].

[a] (Ark. 1847) In actions of account before a justice of the peace, the plaintiff is not restricted to his bill of particulars, but he cannot recover more than he claims in the whole.—Lafferty v. Day, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 258.

[b] (Mo. 1843) In an action before a justice of the peace to recover $25, the "amount assumed for an order," etc., it was held that such bill of particulars was not supported by evidence that the defendant had sold to the plaintiff certain articles in payment of an order, but refused to deliver them, on account of the failure of the drawers. The order was not accepted in writing.—Wathen v. Farr, 8 Mo. 324.

[c] (Mo. 1855) A variance which is a mere matter of form, and has nothing to do with the substance of the action in causes originating before justices, is not a fatal variance; hence, under a quantum meruit, a plaintiff was allowed to recover on a special contract.—Metz v. Eddy, 21 Mo. 13.

[d] (Mo. 1857) Under a general process "to answer the complaint of the plaintiff," with an account, "J. L. and E. S., partners as L. & S., to C., Dr.," to certain hams and whisky, on proof that the defendants caused a constable to take the property from the plaintiff (the owner), at the suit of the defendants against a third person, and remove it, and that the constable had it still in his possession, the plaintiff may have judgment.—Coughlin v. Lyons, 24 Mo. 533.

[e] (Mo. 1890) Where a statement filed before a justice charges defendant with a conversion of the proceeds of property sold, as well as a conversion of the property, proof that plaintiff consented to the sale does not constitute a variance.—Vette v. Leonori, 42 Mo. App. 217.

[f] (Mo. 1890) Where the statement filed before a justice is in the form of an account, for the value of certain goods, and the proof is of a conversion of such goods, there is no variance. —Kehoe v. Phillipi, 42 Mo. App. 292.

[g] (Mo. 1890) The rule that a party cannot sue for goods sold and delivered and recover for a conversion, though the evidence is sufficient to prove a conversion, applies to suits in justice's courts.—Edwards v. Albrecht, 42 Mo. App. 497.

[h] (Mo. 1891) A recovery cannot be had in an action before a justice of the peace, if the statement of plaintiff's cause of action is drawn in the form of a count at common law for money had and received, and the evidence tends only to establish a cause of action for goods sold and delivered.—Penninger v. Reilley, 44 Mo. App. 255.

[i] (Mo. 1891) In an action before a justice of the peace, a recovery may be had on the theory of an account stated, though the account filed as the basis of the action contains no allegation that defendant promised to pay said balance.—Lustig v. Cohen, 44 Mo. App. 271.

[j] (Mo. 1891) Where, in an action before a justice for breach of contract, the statement alleges a total failure to keep a promise, and the evidence shows a partial failure only, the variance is not material.—Barngrover v. Maack, 46 Mo. App. 407.

[k] (Mo. 1896) In an action in justice court on a paper in the words and figures: "J. J. S. in Acc't with C. E. F. and E. S. S., Dr. Nov. 4. To 45 loads screenings, at $1.75,—$78.75," —recovery could be had on proof of a conversion of the screenings by defendant.—Force v. Squier, 133 Mo. 306, 34 S. W. 574.

[l] (Neb. 1895) Where the pleadings before a justice do not show that the parties litigant were ever partners, it was error to dismiss the action on motion of defendant suggesting that such partnership had been shown by the evidence.—Buckley v. Hook, 43 Neb. 552, 61 N. W. 719.

[m] (N. J.) In an action on the case, the state of demand was for trespass on land. The variance was error.—(1806) Eldreth v. Hoffmire, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 136; (1808) Hull v. Phillips, Id. 367.

[n] (N. Y. 1831) A plea of justification in a justice's court, under a warrant from the school district No. 1, in the town of O., was supported by evidence of a warrant issued by the trustees of school district No. 1 in O. and P. Held, that the variance was not material.—Ring v. Grout, 7 Wend. 341.

[o] (N. Y. 1842) In a declaration in debt, as upon an attachment bond in a justice's court, and oyer served, non est factum was pleaded, but the instrument produced at trial was not a bond, but a covenant to pay the plaintiff $100, or all costs and damages. Held, that this was a variance, though the defendant had not craved oyer.—Rockefeller v. Hoysradt, 2 Hill, 616.

[p] (N. Y. 1854) The rule that where a party seeks to recover on a special agreement, and fails in his proof, he may still recover for work under it, if, supposing there had been no special agreement, he could have recovered, applies to pleadings in justices' courts.—Irvine v. Wortendyke, 2 E. D. Smith, 374.

[q] (N. Y. 1887) R. owed plaintiff the same sum that defendant owed R., and the three agreed that defendant should pay the amount to plaintiff, who should release R., which the latter did. Held sufficient to sustain a complaint in a justice's court, alleging that defendant was indebted to plaintiff for the amount paid to R. at defendant's request.—Riddle v. Sanders, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 153.

[r] (N. Y. 1891) In an action in which an account stated was involved the account was properly admitted in evidence by the justice before whom the cause was tried, though the answer merely pleaded payment in full, and did not plead an account stated; Code Civ. Proc. § 2943, providing that a variance between the pleading and proof in a justice court shall be disregarded as immaterial, unless the court is satisfied that the adverse party has been misled thereby to his prejudice.—Schuyler v. Ross, 59 Hun, 628, 13 N. Y. Supp. 944.

[s] (Wis. 1886) There is no variance between a complaint before a justice alleging that a balance was due plaintiff for work and labor and evidence of that fact, and that it was agreed that defendant should retain such balance, but should pay it to plaintiff on demand, with interest.—Otte v. McLean, 67 Wis. 242, 30 N. W. 367.

8. DEFECTS AND OBJECTIONS, WAIVER AND CURE.

Misjoinder of causes of action, see ante, § 229.

[a] (Ala. 1830) Where the parties to an action before a justice of the peace stipulated that the pleadings should be made up at any time after trial, and a defective declaration appeared in the record, the defect will be deemed to have been cured, whether the declaration was filed before or after the stipulation.—McGrew v. Adams, 2 Stew. 502.

[b] (Kan. 1877) Where a bill of particulars in a justice's court contains every fact essential to the cause of action, though stated in the most indefinite way, and no objection is raised to it at the trial, it will be held sufficient to sustain the judgment.—Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 17 Kan. 566.

[c] (Kan. 1888) In an action before a justice of the peace, in which an answer is filed setting up a partnership between the parties, and alleging the entire business of the partnership, and asking judgment, where no reply or other denial under oath is filed, and the action is tried without objection, the want of such verified reply is waived; and the judgment will not be disturbed because an accounting is had.

—Ciesielski v. Nowacki, 89 Kan. 340, 18 Pac. 232.

[d] (Me. 1844) Where there has been a trial of issue joined before a magistrate, his decision in favor of the plaintiff must be considered as evidence equivalent to the verdict of a jury, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon the testimony introduced; and a defect or omission in the declaration is cured as well by the judgment of the magistrate as by the verdict of a jury.—Emerson v. Lakin, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 384.

[e] (Mich. 1859) Where action was brought in justice's court, under the statute giving treble damages for trespass on lands and cutting and carrying off timber, etc., and the declaration referred to the chapter of the statute by the wrong number, but otherwise cited it correctly, and it was not demurred to, the error was not fatal.—Achey v. Hull, 7 Mich. 423.

[f] (Mich. 1880) Where, in justice court, defendant pleads to the merits and goes to trial, objections to the evidence, based on a want of fullness in the declaration, will not be considered, where defendant has not been misled.—Chauncey v. Skeels, 43 Mich. 347, 5 N. W. 380.

[g] (Mich. 1880) Where the assignee of an insolvent railroad company transfers to a certain person a conditional promise to pay money to the order of the company by indorsing thereon his name, with the word "assignee," and the transferee files the same with a justice as his sole cause of action, an objection that no assignment or assignments were suggested in the declaration cannot be sustained on a final submission of the case, but could only have been taken advantage of by demurrer.—Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 43 Mich. 584, 5 N. W. 1003.

[h, i] (Mich. 1881) Objections to a declaration in a justice's court, good in substance, are waived by going to trial on the merits without objection.—Whelpley v. Nash, 46 Mich. 25, 8 N. W. 570.

[j] (Minn. 1858) Where the parties fail to object that the pleadings before a justice are not verified as required by law, and proceed to trial thereon, they will be deemed to have all the effect they could have if verified.—Taylor v. Bissell, 1 Minn. 225 (Gil. 186).

[k] (Minn. 1871) An account headed "Rodney Parker to August Taylor, Dr.," containing items of debit and credit footed up, and balance struck, subscribed by plaintiff, and sworn to before the justice, with whom it was filed as plaintiff's complaint, is sufficient as a complaint after judgment.—Taylor v. Parker, 17 Minn. 469 (Gil. 447).

[m] (Minn. 1875) Defendant, in an action in a justice's court, without answering, took an adjournment for a week, at which time an amended verified complaint was filed, then took a change of venue, and subsequently took another adjournment, and venire for a jury. Held, that he was thereby precluded from objecting to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the complaint filed on the return day was unverified, and the adjournment then granted irregular.—Burt v. Bailey, 21 Minn. 403.

[n] (Minn. 1878) In a justice's court, on the return day, defendant filed an unverified answer to a verified complaint, setting up a counterclaim exceeding plaintiff's demand. No reply was put in, and adjournment, on motion of defendant and by consent of plaintiff, was had. On the adjourned day defendant failed to appear, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff on proofs submitted for amount of his claim. Held, that the failure of the plaintiff to object to the want of verification of the answer at the time it was filed, and his consent to an adjournment, was not a waiver of his right to object to it on that ground.—Thompson v. Killian, 25 Minn. 111.

[o] (Mo. 1874) Where the facts necessary as a foundation for an action in a justice's court may be inferred from the statement filed, though they are not shown in direct terms, the statement will be sufficient after verdict.—Wood v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. Ry. Co., 58 Mo. 109.

[p] (Mo. 1881) Where a statement filed before a justice was imperfect, but the sum claimed was within the jurisdiction of the justice, and was for rent, and after the trial of defendant's plea in abatement he appeared to the merits of the case, and it was defendant's right to have the justice require the plaintiff to make a brief verbal statement of his cause of action, and in view of the fact also that the statute requiring the statement has been held to be merely directory, held that defendant had waived a more formal statement.—Webb v. Robertson, 74 Mo. 380.

[pp] (Mo. 1892) Failure of a justice of the peace to indorse the date of filing on a pleading lodged with him does not affect his jurisdiction.—Thompson v. Marshall, 50 Mo. App. 145.

[q] (Mo. 1893) Under Rev. St. § 6138, providing that no formal pleadings shall be required in a justice's court, but only a "statement of the facts constituting the cause of action upon which the suit is founded," a statement in an action for damages caused by fire set out by defendant's train, which does not allege negligence, is sufficient on objection raised after verdict.—Polhans v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 115 Mo. 535, 22 S. W. 478.

[r] (Mont. 1889) Where an action on a note is tried in justice's court without any reference to the answer, which is insufficient, and no exception is taken to evidence on the ground of variance, the sufficiency of the answer cannot be objected to; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 768, 777, providing that in justices' courts pleadings may be oral in actions other than forcible entry and detainer, and that a variance shall be disregarded unless the adverse party has been misled to his prejudice.—Budd v. Power, 8 Mont. 380, 20 Pac. 820.

[rr] (N. J. 1806) In an action on a promissory note, the failure to state the date of the note is cured by a verdict.—Van Dervere v. Ogburn, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 66; Snyder v. Satterly, Id. 87.

[s] (N. J. 1808) Where the defendant made no objection to the uncertainty of the state of demand, and went to trial on it, the court refused to reverse the judgment for that cause.—Leary v. Van Dyke, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 870.

[ss] (N. J. 1809) The objection that no consideration was set out in the state of demand was waived, after verdict.—Bigelow v. Pines, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 523.

[t] (N. J. 1866) In a suit before a justice, where the amount of the demand, aside from the credits, exceeded $100, and the credits were not specifically set forth, the defendant appeared on the return day and filed a statement of the dealings between the parties, showing that the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant to an amount which would reduce the plaintiff's demand below $100. No objection was made to the jurisdiction of the court. Held, that any defect in the plaintiff's statement of credits was cured by the defendant's admissions.—Keep v. Kelly, 32 N. J. Law (3 Vroom) 56.

[tt] (N. Y. 1815) In the justice's court, a variance between the process and declaration must be objected to before joining issue and going to trial.—Bloodgood v. Overseers of Poor of Jamaica, 12 Johns. 235.

[u] (N. Y. 1845) Where, after a demurrer in a justice's court has been overruled, the demurring party pleads to, or takes issue on, the pleading to which the demurrer related, such demurrer forms no part of the case, on error brought by such demurring party.—Peck v. Cowing, 1 Denio, 222.

[uu] (N. Y. 1848) An objection to the form of a declaration in a justice's court, which may be taken by demurrer, will be considered as waived if not taken at the time of joining issue.—Willard v. Bridge, 4 Barb. 361.

[v] (N. Y. 1852) Where defendant in a justice's court on the decision of a demurrer against him puts in an answer, he thereby waives the demurrer.—Irvine v. Forbes, 11 Barb. 587.

[w] (N. Y. 1856) On the presentation of a complaint, containing several counts, before the justice's court, the defendants moved to have all but the first stricken out, which was denied, and they made no further objection. Held, that if they designed to raise the objection of indefiniteness and uncertainty in the complaint, or that it did not state a cause of action, they should have done so by demurrer, and that these objections were waived by not thus making them.—Hall v. McKechnie, 22 Barb. 244.

[ww] (N. Y. 1886) A plaintiff objecting to an answer verified by an agent, who did not state the reasons why he made the verification, on the ground that it was defectively verified, without specifying the specific defect, is not entitled to judgment by reason of the defect.—Rude v. Crandell, 11 Civ. Proc. R. 11.

[xx] (N. C. 1886) In an action before a justice in which two causes of action are alleged, the first sufficiently, the second defectively, for want of proper averment of jurisdictional facts, the justice may proceed to judgment on the first.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Barrett, 95 N. C. 36.

[y] (S. C. 1894) Where an affidavit before a justice to enforce a lien on crops for rent fails to state when the crops were raised, or that the land rented was in the county of the justice, but the affidavit of defense states these facts, such defects are cured.—Tinman v. McMeekin, 42 S. C. 311, 20 S. E. 36.

[yy] (Wis. 1859) In pleadings in a justice's court, almost every defect in form will be disregarded unless objected to.—Meyer v. Town of Prairie du Chien, 9 Wis. 233.

[z] (Wis. 1863) Where a complaint was imperfect in not being sufficiently definite and certain, such objection was waived by answering, and going to trial on the merits, in the justice's court.—Jarvis v. Hamilton, 16 Wis. 574.

[zz] (Wis. 1875) If the complaint entered by the justice in justice's court fails to state the particulars of plaintiff's demand with sufficient certainty, the court has power, under Tayl. St. p. 1362, § 51, to compel plaintiff to make it more specific.—Dehnel v. Komrow, 37 Wis. 336.

[a] (Minn. 1892) In an action in a justice's court, which, without pleadings, had, by consent, been adjourned from the 1st to the 10th, a written stipulation by the parties made on the 7th, and filed on the 9th, that the cause be adjourned from the 10th to the 14th, waives the objection that the justice lost jurisdiction by an adjournment for more than a week without pleadings.—Johnson v. Hagberg, 48 Minn. 221, 50 N. W. 1037.

[b] (N. J. 1889) A stipulation entered into between parties to an action in a justice's court before the return day of the summons, that the cause shall stand adjourned to a certain day without prejudice to either party, does not contain a waiver of the statutory requirement that if defendant have a set-off he shall deliver it to the justice on or before the day to which the hearing shall be first adjourned.—De Mott v. Taylor, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 307, 17 Atl. 291.

[c] (N. Y. 1823) An agreement that a cause shall be adjourned three days, and that then, if A. do not attend as a witness, the justice may adjourn for such reasonable time as he may deem necessary to procure A.'s attendance, is valid, and cannot be revoked except by consent of both parties.—Richardson v. Brown, 1 Cow. 255.

[e] (N. Y. 1887) An oral stipulation, extending indefinitely the time within which a justice may render his judgment, is void, as indefinite.—Flynn v. Hancock, 46 Hun, 368.

[f] (N. Y. 1887) Mere consent to the extension of time in which a justice may render judgment by the attorney for each party, expressed to the justice himself in the absence of the adverse counsel, does not amount to a stipulation.—Flynn v. Hancock, 46 Hun, 368.

[g] (N. Y. 1887) Authority to make a stipulation extending the time in which a justice may render judgment, after the submission of the action, will not be presumed from the fact that the counsel tried the case.—Flynn v. Hancock, 46 Hun, 368.

[h] (Vt. 1894) A stipulation that, "if there is any reason why either of the parties cannot attend on" the day of trial, "then said cause shall be continued," was properly construed to mean that in the absence of one party, or his counsel, the other should continue the cause without any action by the justice before whom the cause was to be tried.—Standard Granite Co. Quarries v. Aikey, 67 Vt. 116, 30 Atl. 806.

[a] (Conn. 1871) A letter, written out of court by a justice to counsel who had made a motion in cause before him, stating that he had decided not to allow the motion, is not a decision of the motion.—Hollister v. Hollister, 38 Conn. 178.

[b] (Me. 1885) The rule of law that a motion in abatement of an action must be filed at the earliest moment possible, and that, after a general continuance of the action has occurred, such a motion is too late, applies to justice's courts, in the absence of rules of such courts to the contrary.—Otis v. Ellis, 78 Me. 75, 2 Atl. 851.

—(N. J. 1838) Corlies v. Vannote, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 324;
(N. Y. 1807) Burlingham v. Deyer, 2 Johns. 189.

[aa] (U. S. 1820) On an attachment issued by a justice of the peace, under Act Va. Dec. 26, 1792, if the plaintiff's claim arise in part on a note of the defendant taken up by the plaintiff, who was the indorser, the plaintiff's own affidavit is not sufficient evidence of the debt, without producing the note.—Mills v. Wilson, Fed. Cas. No. 9,616 [2 Cranch, C. C. 216].

[b] (Ark. 1847) In an action on a promissory note before a justice of the peace, the filing of a plea of want of consideration, verified by affidavit, does not shift the burden of proof of want of consideration from the defendant to the plaintiff.—Greer v. George, 8 Ark. (3 Eng.) 131.

[c] (Ark. 1886) Under the practice, a judgment may be rendered by a justice of the peace on a verified account, without other proof of its correctness.—Carolan v. Carolan, 47 Ark. 511, 2 S. W. 105.

[d] (Ga. 1860) In establishing an account in justice's court, the preliminary oath, that the party has no evidence to establish the account except his own oath, should be made in writing.—Shirley v. Price, 30 Ga. 328.

[e] (Mich. 1860) While the rules of pleading applied to justices' courts are extremely liberal, a cause of action must be as fully proved in those courts as in any other.—Cicotte v. Morse, 8 Mich. 424.

[f] (Mich. 1873) Where, in an action upon a negotiable instrument, the paper is not on file with the justice, as required by Comp. Laws, § 5310, it was error to admit the instrument in evidence, against objection, without proof of the signature.—Colbath v. Jones, 28 Mich. 280.

[g] (Mo. 1835) The statute of 1831, allowing equitable defenses to be set up to actions at law before justices of the peace, did not change the rules of evidence.—Davis v. Cleaveland, 4 Mo. 206.

[h, i] (Mo. 1838) Under Rev. Code 1825, p. 361, § 18, providing that in a suit founded on a written instrument by the opposite party, such instrument, if filed with a justice before trial, shall be received, unless the other party denied the execution thereof, it was error to allow plaintiff to introduce a bond not the foundation of the action, and which he had not filed with the justice, on the testimony of a witness that he was present when this bond was executed, and that he saw the defendant sign it, but without producing the subscribing witness, or accounting for his absence.—Maupin v. Triplett, 5 Mo. 422.

[j, k] (N. Y. 1813) A justice cannot reject evidence, or act from his own personal knowledge, of the truth of the facts.—Locke v. Smith, 10 Johns. 250.

[l] (N. Y. 1823) Where a cause has been discontinued by reason of the justice's nonattendance at the adjourned day, and plaintiff and one of the defendants appear and go to trial on another day agreed on, declarations of the defendant who did not appear or consent to the arrangement are inadmissible against the other.—Stoddard v. Holmes, 1 Cow. 245.

[m] (N. Y. 1830) The same precision is not required with respect to evidence in justices' courts as in courts of record.—Musier v. Trumpbour, 5 Wend. 274.

[mm] (N. Y. 1855) Though a justice of the peace is to judge whether a witness in a case in his court is competent to testify as an expert, if the justice misjudges, it is as much an error as if he misjudges on any other question. It is not a question of discretion, where his judgment is conclusive.—Wiggins v. Wallace, 19 Barb. 338.

[n] (N. Y. 1857) A justice is not an arbitrator with power to divide the damages in a doubtful case, but is bound to decide against the party who, having the burden of proof, fails to sustain his case.—Prentiss v. Sprague, 1 Hilt. 428.

[o] (N. C. 1888) That a civil action before a justice was dismissed as to one defendant may be shown by parol evidence, the rules for the proof and authentication of the proceedings of courts of record not applying to justices' courts.—State v. Green, 100 N. C. 419, 5 S. E. 422.

[q] (Pa. 1854) A judgment of a magistrate against defendant, on the mere production of what was asserted to be his promissory note, but without proof that he was the maker, will be reversed.—Lenore v. Ingram, 1 Phila. 519.

[r] (Pa. 1888) In an action before a justice on an account, in which plaintiff charges defendant with money paid him for lumber, and with sums paid for cartage, crediting him with certain sums "per acc't sales," defendant may show, to defeat the action, though not to establish a set-off, the amount of lumber sold to plaintiff, though that would leave him debtor to defendant in a sum beyond the justice's jurisdiction.—Mills v. David, 15 Atl. 914.

[s] (Pa. 1889) Under Act Sept. 30, 1791, and subsequent acts, justices of the peace are authorized to receive proof of deeds and other instruments of writing in the same manner as judges of the supreme court or courts of common pleas were authorized to do by Act March 18, 1775.—Shiffer v. Broadhead, 126 Pa. 260, 17 Atl. 592, 24 Wkly. Notes Cas. 44.

[t] (Wis. 1883) A paper granting a private way over the land of another, being a grant of an interest in land, within Rev. St. 1878, § 3573, is not admissible in a justice's court as a defense to an action of trespass after the right has been revoked, for the purpose of proving the possession of the grantee, and so establishing his said right, but the right must be established by other evidence.—Lowitz v. Leverentz, 57 Wis. 596, 15 N. W. 842.

[a] (U. S. 1835) A witness, summoned by a justice of the peace of Washington county to attend before him and testify in a suit for a small debt, who fails to attend, may be fined not to exceed 20 shillings Maryland currency, upon the return of an attachment issued by the justice and made returnable to the circuit court for the District of Columbia.—Ex parte Gorman, Fed. Cas. No. 5,628 [4 Cranch, C. C. 572].

[d] (Ga. 1860) In establishing an account in the justice's court after the preliminary oath, that the party has no other evidence whereby to establish his account except his own oath, the testimony should be oral, giving the adverse party the privilege of cross-examination.—Shirley v. Price, 30 Ga. 328.

[g] (Ill. 1850) The statute authorizing parties to trials commenced before justices of the peace to avail themselves of the oath of the adverse party is in derogation of the principles of the common law, and must be interpreted to embrace only such cases as are strictly within its spirit and letter.—Pickering v. Misner, 11 Ill. (1 Peck) 597.

[h] (Ill. 1850) If the adverse party elects to become a witness, he must testify fairly and fully so far as he may be interrogated.—Pickering v. Misner, 11 Ill. (1 Peck) 597.

Hubble, 3 Blackf. 205.

[j] (Ind. 1839) Rev. Code 1831, p. 304, provides that in all trials before justices of the peace it shall be lawful for plaintiff, if the defendant denies the debt, to require him to answer on oath or affirmation to such charge, and whenever defendant alleges matter of payment or set-off, or any other plea in defense or bar of the same, he may in like manner require plaintiff to answer on oath or affirmation, and on the refusal of either party to answer the justice may enter judgment as confessed. Held, that defendant could not require plaintiff to testify on oath as to the general issue, or as to any matters not specially pleaded.—Sherry v. Martin, 5 Blackf. 156.

[jj] (N. Y. 1813) An action on the case lies against a person regularly subpœnaed as a witness in a justice's court, and who neglects or refuses to attend.—Hasbrouck v. Baker, 10 Johns. 248.

[jjj] (N. Y. 1817) A witness who is subpœnaed to attend a trial in a justice's court is not entitled to recover from the party subpœnaing him anything for his expenses beyond the 25 cents per diem allowed by the statute.—Fuller v. Mattice, 14 Johns. 357.

[l] (N. Y. 1854) Code, § 399, cl. 8, requiring 10 days' notice of the intended examination of an assignor of a thing in action, as a witness, to be given to the adverse party, is applicable to justices' courts.—Collins v. Knapp, 18 Barb. 532.

[p] (N. Y.) A justice of the peace has no power to commit a witness for a refusal to answer a question in accordance with the provisions of 2 Rev. St. p. 274, § 204, until the party at whose instance the witness attended shall have made the affidavit required by the said section.—(1857) People v. Webster, 14 How. Prac. 242; (1875) Rutherford v. Holmes, 5 Hun, 317, affirmed (1876) 66 N. Y. 368.

[q] (N. Y. 1873) A justice of the peace, holding a court of special sessions, has jurisdiction and authority to punish a person as for a criminal contempt of such court, for willfully and contemptuously refusing to be sworn as a witness by or before such court, or by or before such justice while holding such court as justice of the peace; he having been duly subpœnaed as a witness.—Bowen v. Hunter, 45 How. Prac. 193.

[r] (N. Y. 1875) The fact that a question is put upon the cross-examination of one of the parties to the action, who has been examined as a witness in his own behalf, does not relieve the justice from compliance with the requirement of the statute, that a witness shall not be committed for contempt until the party at whose instance he has attended shall have made the affidavit required by 2 Rev. St. p. 274, § 204.—Rutherford v. Holmes, 5 Hun, 317, affirmed (1876) 66 N. Y. 368.

[ss] (S. C. 1886) Code, § 88, subd. 15, provides "that the provisions of the Code of Procedure respecting forms of actions, parties in actions, the rules of evidence," etc., shall apply to courts of justices. Held, that it was error to refuse to permit defendant to cross-examine generally a witness of plaintiff, and a new trial should be granted, although defendant afterwards produced and examined the same witness in his own behalf.—Dillard v. Samuels, 25 S. C. 318.

[t] (Vt. 1862) A subpœna for a witness may be directed by a justice of the peace to an indifferent person to serve.—Smith v. Wilbur, 35 Vt. 133.

[a] (Ala. 1832) In an action before a justice of the peace, to recover more than $20, the defendant may, by his own oath, prove a set-off, provided such set-off does not exceed $20.—Thompson v. Jones, 2 Stew. & P. 46.

[b] (Ala. 1843) Defendant in an action before a justice of the peace cannot prove a credit of $20 on his own oath.—Aiken's Dig. p. 294, § 11.—Ivey v. Pierce, 5 Ala. 374.

[c] (Ala. 1878) The statute making the parties competent witnesses in suits before justices of the peace, when the matter in controversy does not exceed $20, is, in effect, repealed by Code, § 3058.—Lemay v. Walker, 62 Ala. 39.

[d] (Ga. 1860) An account, whose amount places it beyond the statute allowing the plaintiff in a justice's court, under certain circumstances, to prove his demand by his own oath, may be brought within the statute by payments reducing it.—Nichols v. McAbee, 30 Ga. 8.

[e] (Ill. 1850) In case the adverse party, called to testify in justice's court, refuses to be sworn, or, being sworn, refuses to testify to the matter in issue, the party calling him may be sworn as a witness in his own behalf touching that matter.—Pickering v. Misner, 11 Ill. (1 Peck) 597.

[f] (Ill. 1850) If the adverse party elects to become a witness, and exhibits a disposition to conceal anything, or, by his manner of testifying, deprives the party calling him of the benefit of the facts within his knowledge, the court may properly hold this to be a refusal to testify, and allow the party calling him to become a witness.—Pickering v. Misner, 11 Ill. (1 Peck) 597.

[g] (Ill. 1858) To authorize a plaintiff to testify, he must make an affidavit that he has a claim or demand against the defendant; and he must show by his affidavit that he has no witness or other legal testimony to support it.—Lee v. Quirk, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 392.

[h] (Mich. 1855) Under Rev. St. c. 93, § 5, declaring that, in any action brought before a justice of the peace on a book account, if a party claiming the same shall make oath that there is no disinterested witness who knows the facts relating to such account, the parties to such action may produce in court a book containing the account, and may be examined in relation thereto, where a plaintiff sues for a balance of a book account, if the defendant admits the debts charged against him on the plaintiff's books, plaintiff cannot be sworn as a witness to prove his account, since the only facts in relation to the account which, under the statute, plaintiff was a competent witness to establish, were those which were admitted.—Morse v. Congdon, 3 Mich. 549.

[i] (Mo. 1842) If the plaintiff in justice's court call the defendant, under the statute, to prove his demand, this does not entitle the defendant to testify as to a set-off. The case is not within the principle that a witness called for one purpose becomes witness for all.—Musick v. Musick, 7 Mo. 495.

[j] (Mo. 1844) In an action on a joint and several contract, one of the defendants will not be allowed to testify against his codefendants without their consent, under Rev. St. 1835, p. 361, allowing the plaintiff to subpœna the defendant to testify before a justice of the peace.—Levy v. Hawley, 8 Mo. 510.

[k] (Mo. 1845) Under the statute allowing a party to call on his adversary to testify in a justice's court, and, in case of his refusal, to give his own testimony, he must call on all of the adverse parties, if more than one, and his own testimony will be admissible against those who refuse to testify.—Grigg v. Bodrio, 9 Mo. 223.

[n] (N. C. 1856) Where an action is brought on an account amounting to more than $60, and items are credited thereon so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of a single justice of the peace, the credits being entered for that purpose only, plaintiff cannot prove the account under the book debt law, by his own oath, as under that he has to swear that the account sued on contains a true account of all the dealings.—Waldo v. Jolly, 49 N. C. 173.

cannot testify therein except by consent.—McMillen v. Andrews, 10 Ohio St. 112.

[oo] (Pa. 1840) An action was brought by A. before a justice of the peace, against the defendants, to recover a balance alleged to be due by them for work done. The justice gave judgment against the plaintiff, on the ground that B. was a partner with him in this contract and in the performance of the work, and ought to have been joined as plaintiff. A new action was then brought, in the names of A. and B., for the use of A., against the same defendants. Held, that B. was not a competent witness for A. on the trial of this action.—Kelly v. Eichman, 5 Whart. 446.

[p] (Pa. 1856) Proceedings before a justice will be set aside, on certiorari, where the justice examined as a witness a party to the suit, one of several defendants, his codefendants objecting thereto.—Loesch v. Hofsien, 13 Leg. Int. 21.

[q] (S. C. 1822) The act of 1747 (Pub. Laws, p. 214) authorizes a justice to swear the parties litigant before him; and if the defendant will not offer to deny the debt on oath, the oath of the plaintiff shall be sufficient to prove it.—Cohen v. Saddler, 2 McCord, 239.

[r] (Tex. 1849) The plaintiff, at a trial before a justice, made oath that he knew of no person but A. by whom he could prove his account; and by the representation of the sheriff, not sworn, it appeared that A. was then, and almost always was, too drunk to get to the court house. Held, by this court, that the plaintiff had not established his right under the statute to prove his own account.—McGee v. Currie, 4 Tex. 217.

[s] (Iowa, 1870) By Revision, § 4038, a justice of the peace has power, on the application of a person desirous of obtaining the affidavit of another, to require the appearance of the latter before him by a subpœna issued for that purpose; and a refusal to obey a subpœna of the justice thus issued, or to answer when brought before him, is a contempt of his rightful authority, for which the person refusing may be committed by the justice.—Robb v. McDonald, 29 Iowa, 330, 4 Am. Rep. 211.

[b] (N. J. 1827) An affidavit taken before one justice cannot be read to prove a notice in a cause pending before another justice.—Hunt v. Langstroth, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 223.

[c] (N. Y. 1884) Where, on an application by defendant for a continuance in a justice's court, plaintiff, being a nonresident, asked that her deposition, and that of a witness who appeared in her behalf, be taken, under Code, § 2906, it was error for the justice on the subsequent trial to consider the depositions, without their being offered in evidence.—Livingston v. Morrissey, 6 Civ. Proc. R. 28.

Dismissal and nonsuit of forcible detainer, see "Forcible Entry and Detainer," vol. 23, c. 1382, § 154 [a, c].

[a] (Ind. 1871) Where a plaintiff having a joint cause of action against several persons triable in a justice court issues process against all of them, but part of the defendants are not found, and dismisses his action as against those not found, as allowed by 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 593, § 63, he may, at any time thereafter, proceed against the defendants not found.—Root v. Dill, 38 Ind. 169.

[b] (Ind. 1872) In an action before a justice against joint defendants, it is not a dismissal of the suit against one of the defendants if he is not served and the action be prosecuted to judgment against his codefendants; but the plaintiff may at any time bring his new action against such defendant.—Kettering v. Norville, 39 Ind. 183.

[c] (Ind. 1881) An entry by a justice, on his docket, of the finding in the case, is not an announcement thereof within Code, § 363, so as to deprive plaintiff of his right to dismiss. Such announcement must be made orally in open court, or by means of a public record which will bring the ruling to the knowledge of the parties.—Cohn v. Rumely, 74 Ind. 120.

[dd] (Iowa, 1860) In an action in justice's court, the attorneys for the respective parties met in the justice's office before the hour set for trial, and defendant's attorney informed the attorney for plaintiff that he intended to plead certain matter in set-off. When the hour of trial came plaintiff's attorney dismissed the suit, paying all costs that had accrued up to that time. Held, that an entry in the justice's docket of the statements made by the defendant's attorney prior to the time of trial was unauthorized and insufficient to entitle defendant to proceed to judgment on his set-off.—Kuhn v. Bone, 10 Iowa, 392.

[e] (Kan. 1887) In an action commenced in justice's court against T. and other defendants, the plaintiff may dismiss as to any or all of the defendants.—Sawyer v. Forbes, 36 Kan. 612, 14 Pac. 148.

[f] (Neb. 1884) If, after a set-off is filed, plaintiff dismisses his action and pays the costs, the justice, after entry of dismissal, should docket the set-off under its proper title,—the claimant as plaintiff, and the adverse party as defendant.—Rawalt v. Brewer, 16 Neb. 444, 20 N. W. 391.

[g] (Neb. 1886) An action of replevin was commenced before a justice of the peace, and a return made by the sheriff, showing the value of the goods to be $821.44. The justice then prepared a transcript of the proceedings for the district court, but whether it was filed or not did not appear. Soon afterwards the plaintiff and defendant appeared before the justice, and caused the following entry to be made in his docket: "By agreement of both parties, this suit is dismissed, and the sheriff is ordered to return said goods to defendant, from whose possession they were taken." Held that, independently of the question of the jurisdiction of the justice, it was a valid agreement to dismiss the action, and that, if the property was in possession of the sheriff, it was his duty to return it to the party from whom he had taken it.—Wilcox v. Brown, 20 Neb. 355, 30 N. W. 264.

[h] (N. Y. 1809) A plaintiff in a justice's court may withdraw and be nonsuited, before the jury give in their verdict.—Platt v. Storer, 5 Johns. 346.

[i] (N. Y. 1814) On the trial of a cause before a justice without a jury, the plaintiff may elect to become nonsuit any time before it is finally submitted.—Hess v. Beekman, 11 Johns. 457.

[j] (N. Y. 1858) Before an action in a justice's court is finally submitted, the plaintiff has a right to discontinue; and this even where damages are claimed by way of recoupment.—Bidwell v. Weeks, 2 Hilt. 106.

[k] (Pa. 1844) Where two suits had been brought before an alderman on defendant's two promissory notes, and the plaintiff was nonsuited in each case on failing to prove the defendant's signature, and the suits were again brought before the same alderman, and the plaintiff, being yet unable to prove the signature, discontinued the suits in the absence of the defendant, and after there had been a hearing and an adjournment, and then brought suit on the two notes in the district court, so as to oblige the defendant by the rule of court to admit his signature, or deny it under oath, it was held that the discontinuance before the alderman was binding on the court, and that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment, notwithstanding defendant alleged in an affidavit that the discontinuance was greatly to his annoyance.—Lancaster Bank v. McCall, 4 Pa. Law J. 287.

[o] (Utah, 1890) In an action before a justice of the peace to recover possession from a tenant at will who has been given notice to quit, an answer alleging that defendant was in under a verbal lease for more than a year, but that he had made lasting improvements, expecting to hold possession until a certain time, and praying affirmative relief, does not constitute a counterclaim or prayer for affirmative relief, and hence the action may be dismissed by plaintiff at any time before trial, as provided by Comp. Laws 1888, § 3943, subd. 1.—Flygare v. Maloney, 12 Utah, 497, 23 Pac. 879.

[p] (Vt. 1856) A justice, after deciding to continue a case on defendant's motion, may, on plaintiff's motion, at the same sitting enter a discontinuance on the record.—Flint v. Whitton, 28 Vt. (2 Williams) 557.

[a] (Ala. 1838) An entry of "Judgment v. plaintiff by default for costs," and signed by the justice of the peace, is not void for want of form, but is a judgment of nonsuit.—Wyatt v. Judge, 7 Port. 37.

[b] (Ark. 1846) An entry by a justice of the peace that "this case, for the want of proof to sustain the plaintiff's demand, was dismissed at the plaintiff's costs," was held to be a judgment on the merits, and not of nonsuit.—Parsell v. Smyers, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 55.

[c] (Cal. 1856) Where the complaint in action to recover possession of a mining claim, in a justice's court, improperly contains an allegation of an injury done and a prayer for damages, the action should not be dismissed, but the allegation should be disregarded or stricken out, and the plaintiff be allowed to try his right to the claim.—Van Etten v. Jilson, 6 Cal. 19.

[d] (Cal. 1861) Suit was begun before a justice in township No. 5; service was returned as made in township No. 3, by a constable of the same; before answer was filed, defendant moved to dismiss for want of jurisdiction in the court over his person, and for insufficiency of the constable's return to confer jurisdiction. Held, that the motion was properly refused; though a showing that the facts were such that the record could not be amended would have entitled defendant to a dismissal.—Hamilton v. McDonald, 18 Cal. 128.

[e] (Ga. 1843) Proving an account in a justice's court, previous to a nonsuit, will not dispense with proof of the same account in a subsequent action founded on it in the same court.—Mann v. Crombie, Ga. Dec. 133, pt. 2.

[f] (Ga. 1887) Under Code, § 4154, providing that cases before justices shall be tried at the time and place mentioned in the summons, a justice cannot refused to dismiss such case on motion made in due time, where the constable's return fails to show valid service.—Western & A. R. Co. v. Pitts, 79 Ga. 532, 4 S. E. 921.

[g] (Ga. 1895) A motion to dismiss which fails to point out the defect for which a dismissal is asked is insufficient.—Southern Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 96 Ga. 655, 23 S. E. 836.

[h] (Ga. 1896) Where a case is on trial before a jury in a magistrate's court, the presiding justice has no power to grant a nonsuit.—Gunn v. Wood, 99 Ga. 70, 24 S. E. 407.

[i] (Ill. 1888) Rev. St. c. 79, § 33, providing that if, in an action before a justice, the plaintiff or his agent does not appear, the justice must dismiss the suit unless defendant consent to a continuance, is imperative, and it is immaterial that defendant claims a set-off.—Cunningham v. Wright, 27 Ill. App. 334.

102, the justice having the right, under 2 Rev. St. p. 454, § 22, to continue cause where the want of sufficient service is not waived by consent.—(1859) Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. v. Shannon, 13 Ind. 171; (1861) Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Quier, 16 Ind. 440.

[k] (Iowa, 1856) Though, if it appear at the trial of a case before a justice of the peace that the title to real estate is in question, the cause may be transferred to the district court, it should not be, even then, dismissed.—Cox v. Graham, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 347.

[l] (Iowa, 1856) The nonappearance of the plaintiff before a justice within an hour after the time fixed for trial will not justify a nonsuit, where the suit is founded on an instrument in writing, purporting to have been executed by the defendant, and the signature not denied on oath.—Jewett v. McLelland, 3 G. Greene, 568.

[m] (Iowa, 1866) A cause should not be dismissed because the justice before whom it is brought, thinking himself disqualified by interest, called on a justice, who had no jurisdiction to try cases in that township, to hear the cause, and he did so; but such acts as are void should be disregarded, and the cause should be legally tried.—Ely v. Dillon, 21 Iowa, 47.

[n] (Kan. 1886) A cause pending before a justice of the peace was continued upon the application of one of the parties until January 16th, but by mistake the justice made an entry upon his docket that it had been continued until January 15th, and, as the plaintiff did not appear on that day, he made an order dismissing the cause. On January 16th the plaintiff appeared, and, after notice to the defendant, procured an order setting aside the judgment of dismissal. Held, that the rulings of the justice in correcting his record, and setting aside the order of dismissal, made before the case was triable, and proceeding with its trial upon the day to which it had been adjourned, was not error.—Petrie v. Karsch, 35 Kan. 357, 11 Pac. 154.

[nn] (Me. 1866) A justice of the peace has no power, unless by statutory authority, to set aside an involuntary nonsuit on a day subsequent to that on which the entry was made.—Pratt v. Roberts, 53 Me. 399.

[o] (Mich. 1890) How. Ann. St. § 6817, provides that each justice court "is hereby vested with all such powers, for the purpose of exercising jurisdiction by this chapter conferred, as are usual in courts of record, except the power of setting aside a verdict and arresting judgment thereon." Held, that it was competent for a justice, after announcing the dismissal of a case for nonappearance of the plaintiff, but before any minute or record thereof had been made, to recall the announcement, and reinstate the case for trial, upon learning, a few moments later, that plaintiff's attorney had appeared, but, finding the court room locked, had gone to the clerk's office across the way, and was waiting there at the time of the announcement.—Hodges v. Bagg, 81 Mich. 243, 45 N. W. 841.

[oo] (N. J. 1839) A justice of the court for the trial of small causes cannot dismiss a suit of which he has jurisdiction, after a trial on the merits, but must give judgment for one or the other of the parties.—Miller v. Miller, 18 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 165.

[p] (N. J. 1879) If the justice in a suit for rent finds that, incidental to a conveyance to a third party, the right of action was not in the plaintiff, the suit should be dismissed, and the defendant not required to plead title or give bond.—Messler v. Fleming, 41 N. J. Law (12 Vroom) 108.

[pp] (N. Y. 1810) In an action before a justice, the defendant is not entitled to a nonsuit because the venire is not returned at the time appointed for trial, but another venire may be issued.—Blanchard v. Richly, 7 Johns. 198.

[q] (N. Y. 1813) A justice has no power to stay proceedings in a cause, or to dismiss the suit, because plaintiff had been nonsuited in a former suit, or the costs of the suit were unpaid in which he had been nonsuited.—Youle v. Brotherton, 10 Johns. 363.

[qq] (N. Y. 1829) Where the plaintiff in a justice's court neglects to appear on the coming in of the verdict, judgment of discontinuance may be entered.—Relyea v. Ramsay, 2 Wend. 602.

[r] (N. Y. 1833) A justice may refuse to enter a judgment of nonsuit against a plaintiff who fails to appear on the return of the process "within one hour" after the same is returnable, if a reasonable cause exists for such refusal.—Barber v. Parker, 11 Wend. 51.

[rr] (N. Y. 1840) If a defendant in a justice's court makes affidavit that the justice is a material and necessary witness for him, the suit must be discontinued, though the justice says that he has no recollection of the facts which the defendant expects to prove by him.—Hopkins v. Cabrey, 24 Wend. 264.

[s] (N. Y. 1842) The affidavit required by Laws 1838, p. 232, § 1, for dismissal of the action on the ground that the justice is a material witness, should be such that the justice can judicially pronounce it relevant or irrelevant, and should show that the justice is a necessary, as well as material, witness.—Young v. Scott, 3 Hill, 32.

[ss] (N. Y. 1842) After issue joined on the merits and a trial before a justice of the peace, the justice held the cause for advisement four days, and then nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground of a variance between the declaration and proof, though no motion of nonsuit for this reason had been made at the trial. Held, that this was irregular.—Shall v. Lathrop, 3 Hill, 237.

[t] (N. Y. 1847) A defendant, in a justice's court, is entitled to judgment of nonsuit if the plaintiff do not appear within one hour after the time for appearance mentioned in the summons; and where the justice required a defendant to wait five minutes longer, which he refused to do, and the plaintiff appeared within that time, and after the defendant had left, it was held that it was erroneous for the justice to proceed in the cause.—Wilcox v. Clement, 4 Denio, 160.

[tt] (N. Y. 1849) To authorize a justice of the peace to order a discontinuance of a suit pending before him because he is himself a material witness in the cause, it must appear that the defendant cannot safely proceed to trial without him.—Murtha v. Walters, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 517.

[u] (N. Y. 1868) As the defendant in an action to recover possession for chattels has a constitutional right to trial by a jury of 12 men, and a justice of the peace has only power to impanel a jury of 6 men, it follows that when, on the return of a justice's summons in such an action, the defendant demands a jury of 12, the justice must dismiss the suit.—Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Prac. 140.

[uu] (N. Y. 1891) On motion to dismiss an action on the ground that the mandate was issued by the justice in blank, it was error to exclude the testimony of the managing clerk of plaintiff's attorneys that before bringing the action they received such a mandate from the justice.—Hannaman v. Muckle (Co. Ct.) 15 N. Y. Supp. 961, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 296.

[w] (Tenn. 1865) A warrant obtained from a justice of the peace November 22d was not placed in an officer's hands for service until the 10th of the following November. On the defendant's motion, the suit should be discontinued on account of the laches of the plaintiff.—Maynard v. May, 42 Tenn. (2 Cold.) 44.

[ww] (Vt. 1824) The objection that the action before a justice of the peace is not seasonably entered cannot be reached by a motion to dismiss the action.—Stone v. Proctor, 2 D. Chip. 108.

[x] (Vt. 1840) A justice of the peace cannot render a judgment of nonsuit against a plaintiff, when he appears, without his consent.—Smith v. Crane, 12 Vt. 487.

[xx] (Vt. 1847) Where an action is commenced before a justice of the peace, a motion to dismiss, on the ground that the magistrate had not entered on the writ a minute of the day, month, and year it was issued, as required by Rev. St. c. 57, § 9, must be made at the return day of the writ.—Wheelock v. Sears, 19 Vt. 559.

[y] (Wash. 1890) In an action against a corporation, before a justice of the peace, defendant, on showing that its chief office is in another county, is prima facie entitled to a dismissal of the suit, under Code, § 1780 (justice's practice act), providing that an action may be dismissed without prejudice where it appears that it is brought in the wrong county.—Knoff v. Puget Sound Co-op. Colony, 1 Wash. St. 57, 24 Pac. 27.

[yy] (W. Va. 1891) With reference to procedure in justice's courts, Code 1887, c. 50, § 66, provides that, "saving the right of a defendant, who has filed a set-off or counterclaim, to proceed to trial though the plaintiff fail to appear or dismiss his action, judgment may be rendered against plaintiff, dismissing his action, with costs, but without prejudice," if he fails to appear and prosecute his action within one hour after the time for appearance mentioned in the summons or last order of continuance. Held that, where plaintiff has failed to appear within the hour as prescribed by statute, and defendant has filed no set-off or counterclaim, though he has filed a plea, it is error to allow a jury trial, and render final judgment for defendant. The proper judgment is one dismissing the action without prejudice to a new action.—Buena Vista Freestone Co. v. Parrish, 34 W. Va. 652, 12 S. E. 817.

[zz] (Wis. 1891) Plaintiff brought trespass in the justice's court, in which issue was joined, and an adjournment granted. He afterwards filed an amended complaint, which was allowed on condition that he should pay costs, and an adjournment was granted defendant. Plaintiff objected to the order and adjournment, and asked to withdraw his amended complaint, to which defendant successfully objected, and the cause was continued to a later hour of the same day, when defendant announced himself ready for trial. Plaintiff refused to proceed, whereupon judgment of nonsuit and for costs was rendered against him. Held, that the judgment was proper.—Duffy v. Ryan, 79 Wis. 242, 48 N. W. 374.

[b] (Minn. 1861) Pub. [f] (N. Y. 1847) A justice of the peace cannot hold a cause open for any number of days from the return of the summons, where the defendant does not appear and there is no issue joined, though he might, perhaps, adjourn the cause to a day certain; and where a cause was held open four days and then tried, the defendant not appearing, the proceedings were adjudged erroneous.—Wilcox v. Clement, 4 Denio, 160.

[g] (N. Y. 1861) On the return day a justice may adjourn the case of his own motion for a time not exceeding eight days.—Nellis v. McCarn, 35 Barb. 115.

Discretion as to admission of affidavit of third person on application for continuance, see post, § 355 [k].

[a] (Kan. 1868) A justice of the peace has no discretion to refuse a continuance to a party on his oath "that he cannot, for the want of material testimony which resides out of said county and which he has been unable to procure, safely proceed to trial, at this time, but that he expects to have said testimony at the expiration of 30 days"; no counter showing having been made.—West v. Rice, 4 Kan. 563.

[b] (Mich. 1874) In an action commenced by attachment before a justice of the peace, where an adjournment against defendant's protest was made to the same day and hour for which the hearing of a motion to dissolve the attachment before a commissioner at a considerable distance in another township had been fixed, the refusal, on the adjourned day, to grant a further adjournment, on a showing that both defendant and other material and necessary witnesses were also necessary and material witnesses on the rehearing before the commissioner, was an abuse of judicial discretion.—Mercer v. Lowell Nat. Bank, 29 Mich. 243.

[c] (Mich. 1896) The record of the justice showed that on the return day defendant demanded security for costs and a bill of particulars, and the cause was adjourned two weeks on an agreement that it should then be tried; that on the adjournment day defendant's counsel asked for a further adjournment, to which plaintiff objected, as he had several witnesses from a distance; that security for costs was entered on the adjournment day; that defendant was not prevented from preparing his defense from the delay in filing such security; that the bill of particulars was filed and served before the adjournment day, defendant knowing before such service who were his witnesses; and that no affidavit of merit was filed. Held, that the refusal of a further adjournment was not an abuse of discretion.—Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. v. Vanderbilt, 109 Mich. 489, 67 N. W. 691.

[d] (N. Y. 1811) The discretion given to a justice by Acts 31st Sess. c. 204, § 2, to adjourn a cause, ought not to be exercised arbitrarily, but with sound discretion.—Rose v. Stuyvesant, 8 Johns. 426.

[e] (N. Y. 1811) A person was sued by warrant before a justice; but it did not appear, from the return to the certiorari, whether the defendant was in fact a freeholder, or person having a family, and that the requisite evidence was given to authorize the issuing of a warrant; and the defendant prayed for an adjournment for want of a material witness, and offered security to appear and stand trial; but the justice refused to grant an adjournment unless the defendant would make oath that the witness was material, which being refused, the justice proceeded, and gave judgment for the plaintiff. Held, that the defendant was entitled to an adjournment under Acts 31st Sess. c. 204, § 4, and the judgment was reversed.—Sebring v. Wheedon, 8 Johns. 458.

[f] (N. Y. 1812) A justice, on the return of a summons, may adjourn the cause for six days, at the plaintiff's request, without requiring an oath of the absence of at material witness.—Kittle v. Baker, 9 Johns. 354.

[g] (N. Y. 1817) If, on an application before a justice for a continuance, the opposite party will admit the matters expected to be proved by the absent witness, and such admission has been accepted, movant is precluded from asking for a second adjournment to enable him to prove the testimony of the same witness.—Brill v. Lord, 14 Johns. 341.

[h] (N. Y. 1818) Where a defendant is sued in a justice's court by warrant, he is entitled to an adjournment, on giving good security for his appearance, without making oath of the want of a material witness.—Cross v. Moulton, 15 Johns. 469.

[i] (N. Y. 1823) The defendant is entitled to one adjournment of course, on making oath and giving security.—Smith v. Fenton, 2 Cow. 425.

[j] (N. Y. 1845) An adjournment of a cause in a justice's court cannot be claimed as a matter of right, after a jury has been impaneled.—Parmelee v. Thompson, 7 Hill, 77.

[k] (N. Y. 1854) Where issue has been joined in a justice court, and the cause adjourned for trial, the defendant is not entitled, as a matter of right, to a further adjournment on the ground that his counsel is engaged in another court.—Ranney v. Gwynne, 3 E. D. Smith, 59.

[m] (N. Y. 1887) A party to an action in a justice court is not entitled, as a matter of right, to an adjournment for the want of a material witness, without proof thereof; but the application lies within the discretion of the justice.—Penoyer v. Phillips, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 783.

[n] (Vt. 1876) Gen. St. c. 31, § 50, requiring a justice, in an action commenced without service on defendant, to continue the cause for notice to him, is mandatory.—Rollins v. Clement, 49 Vt. 98.

[b] (Me. 1840) St. 1834, c. 101, gives power to a justice of the peace to continue a cause to be tried by another justice, before whom the writ was made returnable, only on the return day of the writ.—Spencer v. Perry, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 413.

[c] (Me. 1840) The justice has no power to continue a cause before the time at which the writ is returnable, notwithstanding apprehended violence in case he attempts to hold court.—Martin v. Fales, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 23, 36 Am. Dec. 693.

[d] (Me. 1850) By Rev. St. c. 16, § 14, a justice of the peace is authorized to continue once a cause brought before another justice. Held, that this continuance may be ordered on the return day of the writ, or any day of adjournment, when the original justice is unable to attend.—Tyler v. Beal, 31 Me. 336.

[e] (Mich. 1861) The right expressly given to a justice by Comp. Laws, § 90, to adjourn a cause of his own motion, on the return day, cuts off all implication of an intent to give him the like power in any other stage of the case.—Stadler v. Moors, 9 Mich. 264.

[f] (Mich. 1895) Under 2 How. Ann. St. § 6903, authorizing a justice, under certain conditions, "at the time of the return" of a summons in replevin, to adjourn the cause, an adjournment by him on the return day of the writ, without any return of the writ, is unauthorized, and proceedings had under the adjournment would be void.—Harbour v. Eldred, 107 Mich. 95, 64 N. W. 1054.

[g] (N. J.) A justice cannot adjourn a trial without consent of the parties after it is actually commenced by going into evidence on the merits.—(1807) Andrews v. Wright, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 280; (1810) Stretch v. Forsyth, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 713.

[h] (N. J. 1811) Before an adjournment can take place in the justice's court, a summons must be returned and the parties in court, or at least the plaintiff must appear.—Halsey v. Whitlock, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 869.

[i] (N. Y. 1811) The right of a justice to adjourn a cause on his own motion must be claimed and exercised at the return of process.—Kilmore v. Sudam, 7 Johns. 529.

[j] (N. Y. 1811) In an action before a justice it is too late to ask for an adjournment after the jury are sworn.—Fink v. Hall, 8 Johns. 437.

[k] (N. Y. 1845) Where, on the return of a summons or attachment, defendant refuses to plead, the justice may, on his own motion, or on the application of the plaintiff, adjourn the cause not exceeding eight days, notwithstanding no issue has been joined.—Thompson v. Sayre, 1 Denio, 175.

[m] (N. Y. 1891) Code Civ. Proc. § 2959, provides that at the time of the return of a summons, or of the joinder of issue without process, but at no other time, the justice may on his own motion adjourn the trial not more than eight days. Section 2960 provides that at such time an adjournment may be had at plaintiff's instance if he shows on oath that he cannot safely proceed to trial for want of material evidence. Held, that after a trial has been had, at which the jury disagreed, it is error, on the return of the new venire, to allow plaintiff an adjournment on the ground of absent witnesses against defendant's objection.—Hannaman v. Muckle (Co. Ct.) 15 N. Y. Supp. 961, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 296.

[n] (N. Y. 1895) Where attachments were issued in a justice's court to compel the attendance of witnesses after the court had decided to adjourn until next day, the fact that it did adjourn before the return of the writs was not error.—Fish's Eddy Chemical Co. v. Stevens, 92 Hun, 179, 36 N. Y. Supp. 397.

[o] (Vt. 1834) A justice may adjourn after a jury has been drawn which the officer is proceeding to summon; the statute confining the power to no particular stage of the proceeding.—Griffin v. Spaulding, 6 Vt. 60.

Entering grounds on record, see post, § 457.

[a] (Ga. 1887) Under Code, § 4154, providing that cases before justices shall be tried at the time and place mentioned in the summons, a justice cannot continue a case to perfect service.—Western & A. R. Co. v. Pitts, 79 Ga. 532, 4 S. E. 921.

[c] (Mich. 1885) A justice of the peace should not grant a continuance to allow a party to procure the assistance of counsel.—Warner v. Comstock, 55 Mich. 615, 22 N. W. 64.

[d] (N. Y. 1851) To entitle defendant in a justice's court to demand an adjournment, he must make oath that he cannot safely proceed to trial for want of some material testimony or witness.—Lynsky v. Pendegrast, 2 E. D. Smith, 43.

[e] (N. Y. 1861) A justice of the peace may adjourn a case on the return day, if plaintiff makes oath that he cannot safely proceed to trial on account of the absence of material witnesses.—Nellis v. McCarn, 35 Barb. 115.

[f] (N. Y. 1871) A defendant on joining issue before a justice of the peace pleaded a general denial, and desired to plead payment, but the justice, with the plaintiff's knowledge, declined to receive the plea, on the ground that the defense of payment was covered by the general issue. Held, that this was notice to the plaintiff that the defendant relied on payment as a defense, and that the refusal of the justice on the trial to allow an adjournment to the plaintiff on an affidavit of surprise, absence of witnesses, etc., after permitting the defendant to amend his answer by pleading payment, was not error for which the judgment would be reversed.—Sherar v. Willis, 5 Lans. 329.

[g] (N. Y. 1885) A justice has no power to adjourn summary proceedings, except under Code, § 2248, for the purpose of enabling a party to procure his necessary witnesses.—Kiernan v. Reming, 2 How. Prac. (N. S.) 89, 7 Civ. Proc. R. 311.

[h] (N. Y. 1887) The Code of Civil Procedure, authorizing the adjournment of summary proceedings in the discretion of the judge or justice before whom they are pending for the purpose of procuring necessary witnesses, does not prohibit an adjournment for any other cause satisfactory to the court.—Goff v. Vedder, 12 Civ. Proc. R. 358.

[i] (Pa. 1831) A party who neglects, up to the day of hearing before a justice, to take the proper legal steps to procure the attendance of his witnesses, is not entitled to a continuance.—Knight v. Parry, 1 Ashm. 221.

Section 60 provides that either party may have a continuance on showing that he cannot safely proceed to trial for want of some material evidence, and that he has used due diligence to procure the same. Held, that a defendant who does not make the oath prescribed by section 58, but moves for a continuance on the ground of want of counsel and absence of a witness, must show that he has used due diligence to secure such witness.—Mullinax v. Waybright, 33 W. Va. 84, 10 S. E. 25.

[b] (Iowa, 1894) An affidavit for a continuance in a justice's court which alleges that defendant's attorney knew that there were a number of cases assigned for hearing before his, and that he was informed that such cases would be ready for trial, and, not thinking his case would be called, had left town on business, does not show due diligence, as it does not show of whom he inquired, or that he had sufficient reason to rely upon the information.—Cox v. Allen, 91 Iowa, 462, 59 N. W. 335.

[c] (Me. 1873) When a trial justice is unable to attend at the time and place appointed for trial, the continuance by another justice, as provided by Rev. St. c. 83, § 12, must be within and not without the office appointed as the place of trial.—Belcher v. Treat, 61 Me. 577.

[d] (Mich. 1872) A cause may be adjourned by a justice of the peace on the written stipulation of counsel, without the presence of the parties.—Parmalee v. Loomis, 24 Mich. 242.

[e] (Mich. 1877) Where, on return day of a summons issued from a justice's court, an affidavit is filed showing that defendant is too unwell to leave his house, and plaintiff's counsel admits that defendant was ill the day previous, it is error to refuse a continuance.—Locke v. Leonard Silk Co., 37 Mich. 479.

[f] (Mich. 1883) An application for adjournment on affidavits is properly refused by a justice on refusal of the party to submit to a cross-examination.—Boatz v. Berg, 51 Mich. 8, 16 N. W. 184.

[g] (Mich. 1887) The authority of a justice of the peace to adjourn a cause on account of the absence of material witnesses must, by How. Ann. St. § 6899, be on showing made upon oath; and it is error to adjourn a cause in absence thereof.—Scullen v. George, 65 Mich. 215, 31 N. W. 841.

[h] (Minn. 1861) On the return day of a summons in a justice's court, plaintiff appeared and filed his complaint, but defendant did not appear. An adjournment was granted on affidavit of plaintiff's attorney that he "had a subpœna for, but was unable to procure the attendance of, a material witness, and could not safely proceed to trial without such witness." Held, that such affidavit was insufficient to authorize an adjournment.—School-Dist. No. 7 v. Thompson, 5 Minn. 280 (Gil. 221).

[i] (Minn. 1875) Where the opposite party consents to an adjournment of a case in a justice's court for more than a week, the affidavit required by Gen. St. c. 65, § 34, to obtain an adjournment to a day later than one week, may be dispensed with.—O'Brien v. Pomroy, 22 Minn. 130.

[j] (N. Y. 1806) If the defendant's attorney offer to make affidavit of the absence of a material witness, and request an adjournment, his affidavit should be received, unless some special objection be shown.—Seers v. Grandy, 1 Johns. 514.

[k] (N. Y. 1816) The admission of an affidavit of any other person than the party himself, for the purpose of obtaining a second adjournment on account of the absence of material witnesses, rests in the sound discretion of the justice.—Killmer v. Crary, 13 Johns. 228.

[l] (N. Y. 1833) An adjournment by agreement of parties, in the absence of the justice, is not regularly made, though afterwards entered by him on his docket.—Kimball v. Mack, 10 Wend. 497.

[m] (N. Y. 1854) After the parties had pleaded, a justice of the peace adjourned the cause to the 20th of May, and then left his office. When he returned a short time afterwards, he found lying on his desk a written consent, signed by the counsel for both parties, that the cause should stand adjourned to the 18th of May, and thereupon did so adjourn it, neither the counsel nor the parties being present. Held, that the latter adjournment, in the absence of parties and counsel, was void.—Weeks v. Lyon, 18 Barb. 530.

[n] (N. Y. 1855) A motion to adjourn for the want of material evidence cannot properly be granted when founded on an affidavit which is defective in not being entitled, or in not stating in the body of it, the action in which the witness is required.—Irroy v. Nathan, 4 E. D. Smith, 68.

[o] (N. Y. 1858) An affidavit for a continuance in a justice court, alleging that a material witness was not within reach of process on the day the affidavit was made, is insufficient, since it may still be true that he was within reach until that day, and that no effort had been made to secure his attendance.—Cristman v. Paul, 16 How. Prac. 17.

[p] (N. Y. 1861) Where plaintiff testified that he could not safely proceed to trial on account of the absence of witnesses, the justice was authorized to grant an adjournment, notwithstanding he did not swear that the witnesses were material; his language plainly implying such fact.—Nellis v. McCarn, 35 Barb. 115.

[q] (N. Y. 1868) A justice may allow a plaintiff to introduce evidence showing that the defendant's application for adjournment was not made in good faith and was groundless.—Weed v. Lee, 50 Barb. 354.

[r] (N. Y. 1870) The refusal of an application before a justice of the peace for an adjournment, under 2 Rev. St. p. 239, § 75, providing for such adjournment where the justice is satisfied that the applicant cannot safely proceed to trial for the want of material testimony, is proper, where the applicant does not allege that he cannot safely go to trial without the witness, and where the materiality of the witness was based on the advice of counsel, without proof that the counsel had knowledge as to the materiality.—Burgett v. Edwards, 4 Lans. 193.

[t] (Tex. 1883) On application for a continuance in a county court, previous applications for continuance of the cause in justice court, made before the appeal was taken, will be considered in determining its sufficiency.—Heidenheimer v. Bledsoe, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 318.

[u] (Vt. 1846) If the justice of the peace before whom a writ is made returnable is absent at the return day, another justice, in order regularly to continue the suit, must be present at the place of return, within the two hours from the time appointed for the return, and there, having the writ in his possession, continue the case.—Hinman v. Swift, 18 Vt. 315.

[v] (Vt. 1850) Where the justice's office at which the writ is made returnable is closed, it is sufficient if another magistrate go to the door within two hours after the time specified for the trial, having the writ in his possession, and decide to continue the case, though he do not go within the office, and do not make an audible call of the suit and the parties, nor audibly declare the case continued, and do not make the entry of the continuance on the writ at the door of the office, nor within the two hours.—Knight v. Berry, 22 Vt. 246.

[w] (Vt. 1854) If the entry of a continuance is in the handwriting of the plaintiff's attorney, it is no ground of objection if the continuance was granted, and the entry assented to and adopted by the justice, by his official signature.—Eastman v. Waterman, 26 Vt. 494.

[a] (Nev. 1893) Where, by consent of parties, a case in a justice's court is adjourned for more than 10 days, the undertaking to pay the judgment that may be required, provided for by section 3565, Gen. St., is not required, and a dismissal of the action for the reason that such undertaking has not been given is error.—Nevada Cent. R. Co. v. District Court of Lander County, 21 Nev. 409, 32 Pac. 673.

[c] (N. Y. 1823) In an action against the surety for an adjournment, under section 4 of the $25 act, the original judgment is the measure of the damages. To bring the security within section 5, the adjournment must be on oath.—Stewart v. McGuin, 1 Cow. 99.

[d] (N. Y. 1823) The object of the act providing that if the adjournment is required by the defendant he shall give sufficient security to appear on the day to which the cause is adjourned, and in default of such appearance to pay the debt adjudicated against him, is to place the plaintiff in the same situation at the adjourned day as he was in on the return of process.—Cornell v. Reynolds, 1 Cow. 241.

[e] (N. Y. 1823) A cause being adjourned, under section 4 of the $25 act, on giving security, the defendant appeared at the adjourned day, and on verdict against him, his bail immediately tendered him to the justice, who called for a constable to take charge of him, but finding none, he said he had nothing to do with the defendant. Held, that the bail was discharged, though the principal was not to be found, on entering judgment and issuing execution.—Cornell v. Reynolds, 1 Cow. 241.

[f] (N. Y. 1823) Where the plaintiff proceeds as a nonresident, the defendant need not give security for an adjournment.—Row v. Pulver, 1 Cow. 246.

[g] (N. Y. 1823) Under the fifth section of the $25 act, the security for an adjournment is not satisfied by the mere appearance of the defendant at the adjourned day, but the debt must be paid, or the body surrendered in execution.—Sarles v. Hyatt, 1 Cow. 253.

[h] (N. Y. 1847) Where a defendant in a justice's court executed a bond, with surety, under Act 1831, p. 405, § 40, reciting that the defendant had applied for an adjournment of the cause, and conditioned to be void if he should not dispose of his property until after the expiration of 10 days after the plaintiff should be entitled to execution on the judgment, it was held that the bond was only to become effective in case an adjournment was granted, and that, if no adjournment took place after the execution of the bond, the surety incurred no liability; also, that it made no difference in this respect that the bond was executed and dated on the day the cause was tried, as a substitute for a similar bond executed by the defendant with another surety, on an actual adjournment of the cause on a prior day, the substitution being made to enable the former surety to testify.—Mosier v. McKay, 4 Denio, 116.

[i] (N. Y. 1849) A bond given on an adjournment of a case in a justice court is not affected by 2 Rev. St. (2d Ed.) p. 214, § 60, forbidding a sheriff or other officer to take any bonds or other security by color of his office, in any case or manner than such as are provided by law.—Williams v. Hubbard, 2 Code Rep. 52.

[k] (N. Y. 1849) In a justice court, an adjournment bond was given at the joining of issue and the case was adjourned, from time to time, beyond 90 days from the joining of issue by consent of the parties to the suit, but without the consent or knowledge of the sureties. Held, that such adjournment and agreement of the parties did not discharge the sureties, since the adjournment was regular, and by 2 Rev. St. (2d Ed.) p. 170, § 86, it was not necessary to give a new bond on an adjournment subsequent to the one at which the bond was given, unless required by the justice or the bail of defendant in the prior bond.—Williams v. Hubbard, 2 Code Rep. 52.

[l] (N. Y. 1851) A defendant in a justice's court is not entitled to a long adjournment, without giving, in addition to a proper affidavit, security for his appearance and for payment of damages and costs.—Belshaw v. Colie, 1 E. D. Smith, 213.

[m] (N. Y. 1860) On motion of the defendant, the justice adjourned the case for eight days without requiring the oath and bail demanded by the plaintiff as a condition of the adjournment. The plaintiff had his old subpœna renewed. On the adjourned day the plaintiff did not appear, and on motion of the defendant the justice ordered a nonsuit and judgment for costs. Held, that the justice had power at his discretion to adjourn without bail, but that his return showed in this case that he adjourned on the defendant's motion, and not of his own accord, and that he had no power to adjourn on the defendant's motion without ordering bail as demanded.—Peck v. Andrews, 32 Barb. 445.

§ 357. Time and place for adjournment.

[a] (Conn. 1841) A justice of the peace, being a county officer, may properly adjourn his court to an adjoining town in his county for the purpose of examination of witnesses.—Town of Lyme v. Town of East Haddam, 14 Conn. 394.

[c] (Ga. 1884) Under Code, § 4130, requiring "all continuances in justice's courts to be from term to term," the consent of parties to a continuance out of term will not validate it.—White v. Mandeville, 72 Ga. 705.

[d] (Iowa, 1883) An agreement by a justice of the peace to hold a case open till the agent of defendant could telegraph to his principal in another state for information as to the defense is mere matter of grace, and is reasonably complied with by an adjournment from Saturday till 8 o'clock Monday morning.—Olim v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 61 Iowa, 250, 16 N. W. 124.

[e] (Kan. 1888) It is error for a justice to continue an action more than eight days without the consent of a party who is present in court.—Covart v. Haskins, 39 Kan. 571, 18 Pac. 522.

[f] (Mich. 1888) Suit was brought before a justice October 28th; the writ being returnable November 8th. On the return day the cause was continued to January 28th. Held, that the continuance dates from the return day, and under How. Ann. St. § 6899, providing that a justice may continue a case for three months, it was not beyond the lawful time.—Hatch v. Christmas, 68 Mich. 84, 35 N. W. 833.

[g] (N. J. 1807) Where on the adjourned day the parties appear, but the witnesses do not appear, it was error for the justice to adjourn the cause for more than 15 days from the date of summons.—White v. Lippincot, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 266.

[f] (N. Y. 1859) Where a justice continues a case for argument, whether on the day of the argument he will receive further evidence is a matter within his discretion, and will not be reviewed.—Heidenheimer v. Wilson, 31 Barb. 636.

[g] (Pa. 1852) An offer of a transcript of a judgment against plaintiff and in favor of defendant on the trial before an alderman does not preclude its use as a set-off when thereafter offered as such before the hearing of testimony was closed.—O'Niel v. Whitecar, 1 Phila. 446.

[h] (Wis. 1857) A justice cannot decide on the account of plaintiff, verified by his account book and note, without giving the defendant an opportunity to rebut the same by proof on his part.—Betts v. Stevens, 6 Wis. 400.

Roberts, 90 Ill. 492.

[g] (Iowa, 1858) In an action before a justice of the peace against the defendant as indorser, instructions which treat him as the assignor are not improper.—Hall v. Monohan, 6 Iowa (6 Clarke) 216, 71 Am. Dec. 404.

[h] (Iowa, 1880) Code 1873, § 3516, declaring that all "proceedings" prescribed for the circuit court shall be pursued in justices' courts, but that the powers of such courts shall be such only as are therein enumerated, does not, in the absence of an express provision, confer authority to instruct the jury in a case.—St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Harrington, 53 Iowa, 380, 5 N. W. 568.

[i] (Neb.) There is no provision in the laws authorizing a justice of the peace to charge a jury on the law of a case, and it is error for him so to do.—(1882) Ives v. Norris, 13 Neb. 252, 13 N. W. 276; (1884) Wilson v. Young, 15 Neb. 627, 19 N. W. 497.

[o] (N. Y. 1833) Where the cause is submitted to a justice, and he takes time to make up his judgment, it is not then in his power to nonsuit the plaintiff for insufficiency or incompetency of evidence.—Elwell v. McQueen, 10 Wend. 519.

[q] (N. Y. 1847) In a court of record, where an error is committed by improperly admitting evidence when objected to, the court may cure the error, and render the exception nugatory, by instructing the jury to disregard such evidence. the trial at what time the summons by which the suit was commenced was issued, and there is evidence tending to show that the summons was illegal and void, by reason of its not having been issued by the justice in person, but by his clerk in pursuance of his directions, the defendant has a right to have submitted to the jury the questions, what were the instructions given by the justice to his clerk, and whether they were complete, so as to enable the clerk to issue the summons without the exercise of any discretion on his part, or directions from any other person.—Borrodaile v. Leek, 9 Barb. 611.

[s] (N. Y. 1850) If the court take those questions from the jury, and decide that the summons was lawfully issued, the judgment will be reversed, and a new trial granted.—Borrodaile v. Leek, 9 Barb. 611.

[t] (N. Y. 1852) A justice is not bound to give instructions to a jury. If he gives wrong instructions, it is error.—Delancy v. Nagle, 16 Barb. 96.

[tt] (N. Y. 1860) Where the justice in his charge assumed in favor of the defendant a material question on which the evidence was conflicting, by instructing the jury that another question was the only point to be passed on, held, that judgment for the defendant should be reversed.—Pettit v. Ide, 12 Abb. Prac. 44.

[u] (N. Y. 1860) The omission or refusal of the justice to charge the jury is not error.—Pettit v. Ide, 12 Abb. Prac. 44.

[uu] (N. Y. 1860) The justice has a right to charge the jury, though it is usual to omit to do so.—Pettit v. Ide, 12 Abb. Prac. 44.

[v] (N. Y. 1887) A justice of the peace has no power to direct a verdict when the jury has once been impaneled to try the cause.—Blumburg v. Briggs, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 242.

[vv] (N. Y. 1887) A justice of the peace may charge a jury on the law, subject to the same strict rule applicable to courts of record, but if he omits to charge the jury, the jury become the judges of the law as well as of the facts.—Blumburg v. Briggs, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 242.

[w] (N. Y. 1887) At the close of plaintiff's case, the justice may nonsuit him if there be no evidence tending to establish a cause of action; but if there is the slightest proof on which a verdict could properly be founded, a nonsuit is error.—Blumburg v. Briggs, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 242.

[x] (Ohio, 1877) A judgment of the mayor's court, dismissing a suit without prejudice, on the ground that the testimony does not sustain the action, is unauthorized and erroneous.—Ferrall v. Bluffton Lodge, No. 371, I. O. O. F., 31 Ohio St. 463.

[y] (Ohio, 1883) Where it does not appear from the record that any questions of law arose in an action before a justice of the peace requiring an instruction to the jury, the refusal to give such instruction was not error.—Dougherty v. O'Connell (Dist. Ct.) 12 Wkly. Law Bul. 261.

[zz] (Tex. 1852) After a case has been submitted to a jury on the merits, a justice has no authority to withdraw it from them and dismiss the case, unless it appear to be done by consent of parties. If he do, his judgment will be a nullity.—Baily v. Knight, 8 Tex. 58.

§ 365. Custody, conduct, and deliberations of jury.

Discharge on failure to agree as ousting jurisdiction, see ante, § 190 [e, f].

Instructions to jury, see ante, § 364.

Waiver of failure to swear jury, see post, § 448 [j, uu].

[a] (Ga. 1891) The verdict of a jury in a justice's court is not vitiated because the jury, after deliberating for some hours, came into court, announced that they could not agree unless they could have before them a certain cash book, and, upon being informed by the presiding justice that the book was not legal evidence, returned to their room, under the direction of the justice, to resume their deliberations, and in a few minutes brought in a verdict. Though it was irregular for the jury to call for more evidence, it was not such misconduct as to render their subsequent finding illegal.—Nolen v. Heard, 87 Ga. 293, 13 S. E. 554.

[b] (Ind. 1874) When a jury is sent out by a justice of the peace to consult upon their verdict, the justice must determine when they have consulted together for a reasonable time; the jury cannot determine this for themselves, and separate without leave of the justice.—Murphy v. Wilson, 46 Ind. 537.

[c] (Kan. 1882) In a case tried before a justice and a jury, it is error for the justice to enter the jury room while they are deliberating.—Stager v. Harrington, 27 Kan. 414.

[e] (Mich. 1887) In a case before a justice of the peace, after the jury had retired, the officer in charge reported to the justice that they wanted to see him, but he refused to see them, and the officer then said they desired to know whether they should consider a certain judgment between the parties, to which the justice replied that he might tell them that he had been directed to discharge such judgment. The jury then rendered a judgment for the defendants for $99 damages, and costs. By request of attorneys for both parties, the justice went with the jury to consult as to a different verdict, and a second verdict for one of the defendants was arrived at. Held, that sending the message to the jury was error, but that both parties having, by consent, set the verdict aside, and allowed the justice and jury to consult together, and render another verdict, the court had jurisdiction to render judgment thereon.—Snyder v. Wilson, 65 Mich. 336, 32 N. W. 642.

[f] (Minn. 1884) At the trial of a cause before a justice of the peace, after the jury had retired and were deliberating on their verdict, the justice entered their room, and remained in it about one minute, without consent of the parties. Held that, as it did not appear that any communication was made by him to the jury, or that there was any injury suffered by the unsuccessful party, and as the prevailing party was without fault, the verdict should not be set aside for this cause alone.—Helmbrecht v. Helmbrecht, 31 Minn. 504, 18 N. W. 449.

[g] (Minn. 1893) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 60, and Id. c. 84, § 10, authorizing a justice to discharge a jury because of its inability to agree, there was no abuse of discretion in discharging a jury which had failed to agree after being out 14 hours and all night.—Rollins v. Nolting, 53 Minn. 232, 54 N. W. 1118.

[h] (N. J. 1810) It is irregular for the justice to go to the jurors' room, after they have retired, and give them further instructions; if such are required, it must be done in open court.—Hance v. Deklyne, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 659.

[hh] (N. J. 1812) Where, on the affidavit of a juror, it appears that a part of the jurors obtained food and publicly ate it in an adjoining room to the jury room, and refused to admit those disagreeing with them, and that he agreed for fear of being starved out, the justice's judgment will be reversed.—Morrow v. McLennen, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 918.

[i] (N. J. 1838) Two or three hours' consultation is not sufficient to justify a justice of the peace in discharging a jury because they cannot agree upon a verdict.—Gulick v. Van Tilburgh, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 417.

[j] (N. J. 1838) A justice of the peace ought not to discharge a jury until every reasonable hope of their agreement in a verdict has vanished.—Gulick v. Van Tilburgh, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 417.

[k] (N. Y. 1807) In a suit before a justice under the £10 act, where a constable who was counsel for plaintiff served a venire and was sworn to attend the jury after the trial, and defendant knew of his being counsel for plaintiff and made no objection, and no abuse is shown, the court will infer, in support of the judgment, that the parties consented to his attending the jury.—Tallman v. Woodworth, 2 Johns. 385.

[l] (N. Y. 1809) After the jury in a justice's court had retired, they sent for the justice and asked if they could add anything to the charge of the plaintiff, and he answered "No," nothing further being said. This is not an irregularity for which the verdict will be set aside.—Thayer v. Van Vleet, 5 Johns. 111.

[m] (N. Y. 1813) In an action before a justice of the peace, after the jury had retired to deliberate on their verdict, they requested the justice to inform them whether a certain point of evidence had been given, and he answered the inquiry. Held, that this was erroneous, and the judgment was reversed; it not appearing that it was done with the consent, or in the presence, of the parties.—Bunn v. Croul, 10 Johns. 239.

[n] (N. Y. 1816) If a justice deliberates with the jury, privately and apart from the parties, and without their consent, in a trial before him, his judgment will be reversed as erroneous.—Taylor v. Betsford, 13 Johns. 487.

[o] (N. Y. 1816) A justice cannot deliberate privately and apart with the jury, in a trial before him, unless with the consent of the parties, and this consent cannot be inferred from the silence of the parties, but must be made to appear affirmatively.—Taylor v. Betsford, 13 Johns. 487.

[p] (N. Y. 1818) It is improper for a justice of the peace, during a trial before him, to permit the party to treat the jury with spirituous liquor.—Kellogg v. Wilder, 15 Johns. 455.

[q] (N. Y. 1823) Where a juror was, without the knowledge of the justice or parties, absent while a witness was under examination, but as soon as his absence was discovered the examination was suspended, and the witness was re-examined upon his return, so that the juror heard all the evidence, the judgment will not be reversed therefor.—Eastman v. Tuttle, 1 Cow. 248.

[r] (N. Y. 1823) It is error for a justice to hold any intercourse with the jury at their room, or send them papers, without the consent of the parties.—Benson v. Clark, 1 Cow. 258.

[rr] (N. Y. 1825) It is cause for reversing a justice's judgment that spirituous liquors were circulated among the jury while sitting as such, even though by consent.—Rose v. Smith, 4 Cow. 17, 15 Am. Dec. 331.

[s] (N. Y. 1835) After a cause tried in a justice's court has been submitted to the jury, and they have retired to consider of their verdict, it is not irregular in the justice, at the request of the jury, to give them further instructions upon the law of the case, if the parties are, or have an opportunity of being, present.—Rogers v. Moulthrop, 13 Wend. 274.

[u] (N. Y. 1843) After a jury in a suit before a justice had retired, they sent for the justice, who notified the parties, and, supposing that they would follow, passed into the jury room alone. Finding that they did not, he refused to hold any communication with the jury and withdrew, when all parties returned with him into the room and it was agreed that the jury might examine witnesses further, which they did. Held no irregularity which would invalidate the judgment.—Keeler v. Lockwood, Hill & D. Supp. 137.

[uu] (N. Y. 1847) It is error for a justice of the peace before whom a cause has been tried by a jury to go into the jury room, while the jury are deliberating, and give them instructions on the evidence, without the express consent of the parties; and it is not enough that they know he is going in and do not object.—Moody v. Pomeroy, 4 Denio, 115.

[w] (N. Y. 1850) Where a justice of the peace, while the jury are deliberating on their verdict, enters the jury room at their request, with the knowledge and consent of one of the parties, a consent by such party, that the justice may read to the jury the testimony of a witness, will be implied.—Hancock v. Salmon, 8 Barb. 564.

[x] (N. Y. 1857) The verdict of a jury in a justice's court will not be set aside on the sole ground that the constable, who had charge of the jury after they had retired to their room to deliberate on their verdict, urged the jury to give a verdict for the plaintiff, who prevailed.—Baker v. Simmons, 29 Barb. 198.

[y] (N. Y. 1889) In a civil action tried before a justice of the peace, after the jury had retired, the justice entered their room and said to them, "It takes a good deal of time and expense to try these lawsuits, and it seems as though you ought to agree." One juror said they stood two to four, and the justice replied, "You are so near together that you had better agree." A verdict was soon after returned. Held that, however honest the motives of the justice, his interference with the deliberations of the jury was unwarrantable, and the judgment must be reversed.—Valentine v. Kelly, 54 Hun, 78, 7 N. Y. Supp. 184, 17 Civ. Proc. R. 367.

[yy] (N. Y. 1890) The presence of the justice in the jury room, while the jury were deliberating, without consent of the parties, is reversible error.—Gibbons v. Van Alstyne, 56 Hun, 639, 9 N. Y. Supp. 156.

[z] (N. Y. 1891) After the jury in an action before a justice of the peace had retired, the justice stepped to the door of the jury room, and asked the constable in charge for a paper belonging to the justice. The foreman of the jury asked the justice if he could see the evidence, to which the justice answered, "No." Several questions were then asked him by the jurors, to which he replied that he could answer no questions, unless the parties were present and agreed. Held, that the irregularity was harmless.—Kerr v. Hammer, 61 Hun, 619, 15 N. Y. Supp. 605; Id., 61 Hun, 622, 15 N. Y. Supp. 970.

[zz] (N. Y. 1894) It is error for a justice of the peace to enter the jury room, and, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, read to the jury defendant's original answer, which had not been read to them before.—Seeley v. Bisgrove, 83 Hun, 293, 31 N. Y. Supp. 914.

Findings on trial by justice without jury, see post, § 367.

[a] (Ga. 1856) A verdict in a justice's court for the "principal," and interest and costs, the jury replying to a question by the court, from what time interest should be calculated, that it should be from the delivery of certain pork sued for, the time of which was proved, is not too uncertain.—Mitchell v. Addison, 20 Ga. 50.

[b] (Ga. 1889) The jury in a justice's court may correct their verdict at the time of returning it, and before they have dispersed or been discharged, when they have made a mistake in writing it out.—Almand v. Scott, 83 Ga. 402, 11 S. E. 653.

[c] (Ga. 1892) Before the jury have dispersed, the presiding magistrate in a justice's court may send them out to correct their verdict by expressing therein the date from which interest on the principal sum found for plaintiff is to be computed, this addition to the verdict being requisite to give proper certainty to the original finding.—Baker v. Thompson, 89 Ga. 486, 15 S. E. 644.

[d] (Ill. 1856) In actions for debt before justices, the debt and damages need not be distinguished in the verdict.—Horton v. Critchfield, 18 Ill. (8 Peck) 133, 65 Am. Dec. 701.

[e] (Iowa, 1885) Where defendant, in a suit before a justice, denies all indebtedness, and the verdict for plaintiff fails to state how much plaintiff should recover, judgment for the amount claimed cannot be entered on the verdict.—Bartle v. Planee, 68 Iowa, 227, 26 N. W. 88.

[f] (Kan. 1877) In an action before a justice of the peace, the verdict of the jury should be in writing and signed by the foreman of the jury. It is not necessary that all the jurors should sign their names to the verdict.—Hanson v. Lawson, 19 Kan. 201.

[g] (Mich. 1843) On a plea of not guilty to a declaration in replevin, an issue was tried by a jury in a justice's court, who returned a verdict as follows, "This jury find for the plaintiff." Held, that this verdict, though not a formal one, sufficiently indicated for which party the jury had found the issue, and that it was the duty of the justice to enter the verdict in the proper form, according to the substantial finding, and to render judgment thereon.—People v. Foote, 1 Doug. 102.

[h] (Mo. 1831) In a suit before a justice, the effect of a judgment will be given to the verdict of a jury so soon as the verdict is entered on the justice's docket.—Rutherford v. Wim, 3 Mo. 14.

[i] (Mo. 1882) A judgment of a justice of the peace will not be reversed because there was no special finding upon a counterclaim, if the general finding was necessarily decisive against it.—Flesh v. Christopher, 11 Mo. App. 483.

[j] (Neb. 1888) Where a judgment is based on a verdict of the jury, it is unnecessary for the justice to make findings of fact.—Dye v. Russell, 24 Neb. 829, 40 N. W. 416.

[k] (N. J. 1818) In a trial before a justice, the jury may render a special verdict.—Springer v. Reeves, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 207.

[l] (N. Y. 1809) If the jury find a verdict of damages for the defendant, in a case in which he is not entitled to damages, the justice of the peace may enter a remittitur damna, and give judgment for the defendant generally.—Burger v. Kortright, 4 Johns. 414.

[m] (N. Y. 1816) The jury in the justice's court cannot find a special verdict, nor can the justice render any judgment on such verdict.—Wylie v. Hyde, 13 Johns. 249.

[n] (N. Y. 1852) A justice of the peace cannot receive a verdict, unless plaintiff is present or some one appears for him, and if it is fairly to be inferred from the justice's return that he received a verdict in the absence of plaintiff, a judgment thereon will be reversed.—Douglass v. Blackman, 14 Barb. 381.

[o] (N. Y. 1873) The only verdict a jury in a justice court can render is for the plaintiff or for the defendant, and any other facts that they may find cannot prejudice the other party.—Marcellus v. Countryman, 65 Barb. 201.

[q] (N. Y. 1891) In an action in a justice's court, for penalties for violation of the excise laws, a verdict was rendered in the following form, "We finde the defende $100 dollars"; and subsequently verbally explained by the jury to the court, and then expressed in writing, "We fiude the defende of two offenses, $50 each." Held, that the verdict should not be set aside, on appeal, as too uncertain and irregular to support a judgment.—Morehead v. Brown, 59 Hun, 617, 13 N. Y. Supp. 197.

[r] (Or. 1887) Where a jury in a justice's court presented a paper purporting to contain their verdict, but which failed to express their real meaning, and the justice continued the case till next day, and allowed the jury to separate, and next day received their verdict, held, that such verdict was irregular, and must be set aside, and a new trial granted.—Nickelson v. Smith, 15 Or. 200, 14 Pac. 40.

[s] (Tex. 1857) In a suit on open account, or for an unliquidated demand, a general verdict is of doubtful validity, especially in suits before a justice of the peace, and such a verdict will not support a judgment for the amount claimed.—Harrell v. Babb, 19 Tex. 148.

[t] (Wis. 1878) In an action to recover $160, alleged to be the contract price of a machine sold to the defendant, the jury found generally for the plaintiffs, without expressing the amount of damages, and the justice rendered judgment for them for $160. Held, that this, if irregular, was not jurisdictional, and the judgment should be affirmed.—Barnes v. Schmitz, 44 Wis. 482.

[b] (Neb. 1882) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 297, which provides that upon trial of questions of fact by the court without a jury there must be a general finding, and under section 1085, which makes the provisions of the Code generally applicable to proceedings before justices of the peace, there must be a finding of facts in all cases tried before a justice of the peace where a jury is waived.—Crossley v. Steele, 13 Neb. 219, 13 N. W. 175.

[c] (Neb. 1884) The justice trying a case without a jury is not required to make his findings any more specific than if made by a jury, and he may find for the plaintiff a certain sum and assess his damages, without making any finding as to a counterclaim filed by defendant.—Ransdell v. Putnam, 15 Neb. 642, 19 N. W. 611.

[d] (Neb. 1891) When an action at law is tried to a court without a jury, the finding of fact by such court is a substitute for and stands in lieu of a verdict of a jury, and need be no more specific than the verdict of a jury upon the same pleadings and evidence, and a finding by a justice, in the words "After hearing the evidence, it is therefore considered by me that the plaintiff have and recover from the defendant the sum of $69.15, together with costs taxed, $49.15," is a sufficient compliance with Civ. Code, § 297, which provides that there must be a general finding in all actions tried by a justice, and a special finding, if requested by one of the parties.—Rhodes v. Thomas, 31 Neb. 848, 48 N. W. 886; Same v. Havelik, Id.

[e] (N. J. 1819) Where a justice of the peace has erroneously summoned a jury before the defendant has appeared, but the defendant makes default in appearing, the jury may be dismissed, and the case tried by the justice.—Wills v. McDole, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 501.

[f] (N. Y. 1873) Where a justice of the peace erroneously receives evidence, under a general denial of the making of a payment since the commencement of the action, and joining issue therein, without an amendment, he cannot afterwards, and after the case has been submitted to him, correct the error by rejecting the evidence.—Hall v. Olney, 65 Barb. 27.

[g] (N. Y. 1895) Where defendant, in an action in a justice's court, demanded a jury trial, but failed to appear on the day set for trial, the justice may discharge the jury and hear plaintiff's proofs.—Helmick v. Churchill, 92 Hun, 524, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1028.

[h] (N. Y. 1896) On a trial before a justice without a jury, where the only issue was whether defendant had made a certain payment, the exclusion of a receipt which defendant swore that plaintiff signed with his mark, but which plaintiff and his son denied, was without prejudice, as the ruling in effect determined the question of fact at issue.—Dreyer v. Meyer, 3 App. Div. 619, 38 N. Y. Supp. 902.

[i] (N. C. 1819) Where the trial by jury is dispensed with, the justice must, nevertheless, observe the course of the common law in trials.—State v. Barrow, 7 N. C. 121.

[j] (Ohio, 1876) A justice of the peace is not bound to state his conclusions of law and of fact separately.—Hartman v. White, 7 Ohio Dec. 45, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 79.

[k] (Pa. 1880) After a hearing before a justice of the peace without a jury is concluded, additional testimony cannot properly be received in the absence of the opposite party, without a reopening of the proceedings, and notice.—Commonwealth v. King, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 203.

[g] (Pa. 1830) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace for trover or trespass, the demand of plaintiff exceeds $10, the justice can, at the request of either party, refer the decision of the cost to referees.—Knight v. Vandergrift, 1 Ashm. 245.

[h] (Pa. 1882) A justice of the peace is bound to hear and pass on allegations of misconduct of a referee in a case before him, and his refusal to do so is ground for reversal on certiorari.—Yetter v. Carpenter, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 523.

[i] (Vt. 1860) The enlargement of a rule of reference by a justice of the peace cannot be shown by a statement in the referee's report, but a record or certificate to that effect from the justice is necessary.—Lazell v. Houghton, 32 Vt. 579.

St. 1879, art. 1623, providing that a justice may at any time within 10 days after judgment in a suit tried before him grant a new trial therein, where a justice grants a new trial after more than 10 days have expired, on motion of the unsuccessful party, the judgment rendered on another trial is void.—Odle v. Davis (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 721.

Collateral attack for want of jurisdiction, see post, § 410.

(N. C. 1832) Jones v. Jones, 14 N. C. 360.

[b] (U. S. 1825) A justice's judgment in an action of debt for an amount within his jurisdiction, against the surety on a constable's official bond, is not absolutely void, though the proper remedy was by action on the bond, which was for an amount beyond the jurisdiction.—Mickum v. Edds, Fed. Cas. No. 9,531 [2 Cranch, C. C. 568].

[d] (Cal. 1860) Where suit before a justice was brought in one township, and the summons was served by the constable of that township in another township, and it nowhere appeared in the record that the defendant was a resident in the first township, or a nonresident of the county, and the case was not brought within the other exceptions of the statutes (Wood's Dig. pp. 232, 233), the judgment rendered was void.—Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 296.

[e] (Dak. 1889) Where, in forcible entry and unlawful detainer, defendant pleads ownership of the premises, and offers evidence to prove that fact, the justice being thereupon bound to cease all proceedings and certify the case to the district court, his subsequent judgment, on failure to certify the case, is coram non judice.—Murry v. Burris, 6 Dak. 170, 42 N. W. 25.

[f] (Ind. 1852) Where a justice was disqualified by relationship to the plaintiff, his judgment is coram non judice and void.—Dawson v. Wells, 3 Ind. 398.

[h] (Ind. 1875) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace of one township against a sole defendant who is a resident of another township where there is a justice, there being no legal reason that the action could not be brought in such other township, is void.—Hampton v. Warren, 51 Ind. 288.

[i] (Ind. 1878) The jurisdiction of justices of the peace is limited, in contested cases, to $200, and where a complaint before a justice demanded the return of personal property valued at $50, and $50 additional as damages for its detention, and also demanded judgment for $106 additional for moneys alleged to have been embezzled by the defendant, and judgment was given for the plaintiff, by default, for $156, it was held that the judgment was void, as the amount claimed exceeded the justice's jurisdiction.—State v. Forry, 64 Ind. 260.

[j] (Ind. 1888) Under Rev. St. § 1450, providing that suits may be instituted before justices by agreement or process, "and the delivery of the process to the officer authorized to serve the same, if by process, and the entry of the fact upon the docket, if by agreement, shall be deemed such commencement," where a judgment fails to show that the suit was instituted by agreement, by an entry on the docket, and shows that the summons was delivered by the justice to plaintiff's attorney, who was not an officer authorized to serve the same, and that such summons was served outside the state, contrary to the provisions of section 1431, limiting the jurisdiction of justices in civil cases to their respective townships, such judgment is void.—Penrose v. McKenzie, 116 Ind. 35, 18 N. E. 384.

[k] (Ind. 1893) A justice's judgment in an action for forcible entry and detainer is not void because of his certification to the circuit court that the title to the land came in issue.—Bridges v. Branam, 133 Ind. 488, 33 N. E. 271.

[n] (N. Y. 1843) The judgment of a justice, given in a case where the title to land plainly comes in question, is not void for want of jurisdiction, but voidable for error.—Koon v. Mazuzan, 6 Hill, 44.

[o] (N. Y. 1847) Where, in a justice's court, the plaintiff's claim and the defendant's set-off together exceed $400, and the justice, instead of entering a discontinuance, proceeds with the cause, and gives judgment for the balance, such judgment, though erroneous, is not void for want of jurisdiction.—Lamoure v. Caryl, 4 Denio, 370.

[p] (Pa. 1807) A justice of the peace rendered judgment for an amount exceeding his jurisdiction. Held, on appeal, that, it appearing on the face of the record that the justice had no jurisdiction, it was the duty of the court to arrest judgment, though the jurisdiction was not pleaded.—Moore v. Wait, 1 Bin. 219.

(Kan. 1864) Case v. Hannahs, 2 Kan. 490.

[b] (Cal. 1863) Where a return to a summons was made in the name of a deputy sheriff, instead of in the name of the sheriff himself, a judgment rendered in the suit in which the summons was issued, by a justices' court, was held void for want of jurisdiction.—Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401.

[c, d] (Ga. 1875) A justice of the peace had in his hands certain notes for suit, and defendant wrote on the back of the notes, "I acknowledge service on the within notes." Held, that the fact that defendant made payments on a part of the note, after judgment was rendered on such notes, without any summons being issued, and obtained an agreement that execution should be stayed for 12 months, did not estop him from denying the validity of the judgment.—Gunnels v. Deavours, 54 Ga. 496.

[e] (Ga. 1877) If a justice tries a case within less than the period provided by law after the summons, the judgment is void, even if the parties interpleaded and did not object at the time of trial.—Mitchell v. Braswell, 59 Ga. 532; Warfield v. Ivey, Id. 603.

[h] (Kan. 1891) A summons issued by a justice of the peace was served by a constable by leaving a copy, which was a correct copy of the original, except that the name of the constable was signed to the copy in place of the name of the justice; but an indorsement on the copy was signed by the latter as justice. Held that, though such service might have been set aside on motion, it was not absolutely void, and the judgment entered on it was voidable only, and not void.—Stewart v. Bodley, 46 Kan. 397, 26 Pac. 719, 26 Am. St. Rep. 105.

[i] (Mich. 1875) Comp. Laws, § 5264, authorizing the issuance of a short summons when the plaintiff is a nonresident, is permissive only, and the use of a long summons in a case before a justice does not render the judgment void for want of jurisdiction.—Moore v. Vrooman, 32 Mich. 526.

[j] (Mich. 1892) Where a justice's summons, issued March 2, 1888, returnable March 10, 1888, was served within the proper time, a judgment entered thereon is not void because the officer by mistake returned that it was served March 3, "1886."—Evans v. Calman, 92 Mich. 427, 52 N. W. 787, 31 Am. St. Rep. 606.

[k] (Mich. 1893) A justice's judgment cannot be sustained where his docket shows that the summons was issued on the 12th of the month, returnable on the 20th, and the judgment rendered on the 10th.—Holmes v. Cole, 95 Mich. 272, 54 N. W. 761.

[o] (N. Y. 1871) A short summons, authorized by 3 Rev. St. (5th Ed.) p. 462, §§ 212–215, to be issued against defendants who come within that class, and who by the nonimprisonment act of 1831 cannot be proceeded against by long summons or warrant, being an extraordinary process, can only issue on preliminary proof, and plaintiff must bring himself within that provision by affidavit before the justice, and without such proof a judgment in the justice court will be presumed to be void until that proof is supplied.—Rue v. Perry, 63 Barb. 40.

[p] (N. Y. 1880) Where a justice certified that he issued and delivered a summons to a constable on the 23d day of January, and the constable in his return certified that he served it on the "3d" day of January, on affidavits that the constable inadvertently omitted the figure "2," held, that the mistake was not fatal to the judgment.—Snyder v. Schram, 59 How. Prac. 404.

[t] (Tenn. 1871) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace before return day of the writ is not void, but erroneous.—Glover v. Holman, 50 Tenn. (3 Heisk.) 519.

[u] (Tenn. 1874) The failure of a magistrate to note on the back of his warrant the fact of its issuance will not render the magistrate's judgment void.—Elliott v. Jordan, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 376.

[v] (Tenn. 1874) A justice's judgment is not void because the summons commanded the defendant to appear immediately before the justice.—Elliott v. Jordan, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 376.

[g] (Ill. 1874) A recital in the docket of a justice of the peace, that defendant agreed that plaintiff have judgment for a certain sum, and that plaintiff accepted the judgment so tendered, sufficiently shows a judgment by confession.—Boettcher v. Bock, 74 Ill. 332.

[h] (Ill. 1887) A judgment by a justice of the peace on an admission by defendant that the amount is due is not a judgment by confession.—Goddard v. Fischer, 23 Ill. App. 365.

[i] (Ind. 1880) On a judgment taken before a justice of the peace, where the amount is "over $40 and under $75," an undertaking for stay of execution "for 180 days from the rendition thereof" has the effect of a judgment confessed by such replevin bail.—Hawes v. Pritchard, 71 Ind. 166.

[j] (Kan. 1886) Where a justice of the peace left his office and went to the defendant's residence, which was in the same township, and there the defendant waived summons, confessed judgment, and swore to the necessary affidavit therefor, and the justice then returned to his office, where he made the proper entries of the proceedings, judgment is neither void nor voidable. The defendant, when she waived the summons, confessed the judgment, etc., waived the irregularity of the justice's taking the confession of the judgment at a place other than his office.—Krueger v. Beckham, 35 Kan. 400, 11 Pac. 158.

[k] (Mass. 1879) Under Comp. St. Vt. c. 29, § 22, authorizing a justice of the peace to accept and record a confession of a debt to a creditor made by the debtor personally, "either with or without antecedent process, as the parties may agree," and to render judgment on such confession, a record of a judgment, which shows that the debtor appeared before the justice, without antecedent process, and acknowledged the debt to be due, and does not state that he agreed that such acknowledgment should be taken as a confession of judgment, or that the judgment should be rendered thereon without antecedent process, is insufficient.—Henry v. Estes, 127 Mass. 474.

[l] (Mich. 1843) A judgment by confession under Rev. St. p. 389, § 2, must "be signed by the person making the same in the presence of the justice and of one or more competent witnesses," and the witnesses must sign their names as such.—Beach v. Botsford, 1 Doug. 199, 40 Am. Dec. 45.

the justice, where complainant declares, and defendant orally confesses, the action, the justice may properly render a judgment for defendant without further formalities. — Crouse v. Derbyshire, 10 Mich. 479, 82 Am. Dec. 51.

[nn] (Mo. 1841) Article 6, § 2, of the statute concerning justices of the peace, prescribing the manner of confessing judgments, does not apply where there is process. Rev. Code 1835, p. 362.—Davis v. Wood, 7 Mo. 162.

[pp] (Mo. 1857) In justices' courts, a confession of judgment need not be in writing signed by the defendant, and filed by the justice; and the appearance and confession of the defendant are sufficient ground whereon to issue an execution.—Franse v. Owens, 25 Mo. 329.

[q] (Mo. 1886) A mere written acknowledgment of indebtedness, filed by a debtor with a justice, which contains neither a formal confession of judgment, nor written authority to the justice to enter judgment, is not sufficient as the basis of a judgment, where there is no antecedent process, and no voluntary appearance of the parties.—Loth v. Faconesowich, 22 Mo. App. 68.

[qq] (Mo. 1892) Since, at common law, confession judgments require service of process, and, by Rev. St. § 6274, if made before a justice of the peace without service, must be in writing, a judgment orally confessed without service before a justice is a nullity.—Burr v. Mathers, 51 Mo. App. 470.

[r] (Mont. 1891) On a justice's docket appeared the following entry: "Defendant appeared in court, and confessed judgment for the amount sued for and costs of suit. Judgment is therefore herein entered for the plaintiff." Action had been commenced, but no valid summons had been served on defendant, and no written answer had been filed, and there was nothing else to show an oral answer; neither was there writing authorizing entry of judgment. Held that, though Code Civ. Proc. § 740, provides that a justice shall have jurisdiction on the voluntary appearance and pleading of the parties without summons, still, it being provided by sections 770, 806, that where the pleadings are oral the substance of them shall be entered by the justice in his docket, there was nothing to show authority for the entry of judgment, as "confessed judgment" could not be taken to be the substance of an oral answer, but must be considered to be used with reference to section 465 et seq., which authorize entry of judgment by confession where no action has been commenced, on the filing of a certain written statement signed by defendant.—Hunter v. Eddy, 11 Mont. 251, 28 Pac. 296.

[rr] (Nev. 1865) A justice of the peace does not acquire jurisdiction in a proceeding, under Prac. Act, § 651, by a landlord against a tenant under a written lease, in which the latter waives summons and notice in all legal proceedings against himself, and authorizes a third party to confess judgment for him, when no demand of possession is made and no summons issued, though said party confesses judgment. —Paul v. Armstrong, 1 Nev. 82.

[u] (N. Y. 1863) If a defendant appear before a justice of the peace and sign a confession of judgment in his presence, the presence or absence of the docket will not affect the jurisdiction of the justice.—Stone v. Williams, 40 Barb. 322.

[uu] (N. Y. 1888) In replevin before a justice neither party appeared. The justice had met defendant, who had told him and plaintiff he would not appear, but would pay the costs, and to deliver the property to plaintiff. The justice entered judgment on his minutes, June 21, 1882. August 1, 1883, at the request of defendant's attorney, he entered judgment on his docket, and August 24, 1883, defendant appealed. Code Civ. Proc. § 3013, provides that where plaintiff does not appear within one hour of the time of trial the justice shall enter a nonsuit. Section 3015 provides that on judgment confessed the justice shall enter judgment forthwith. Held, that the justice treated the conversation as a confession of judgment, and made an entry carrying out the agreement; and, after an acquiescence of over a year, defendant would not be heard to complain.—Traffarn v. Getman, 49 Hun, 611, 3 N. Y. Supp. 807.

Cayuga County Sup'rs, 7 How. Prac. 255.

[dd] (N. Y. 1890) A justice of the peace having no authority to enter judgment by confession on a contingent liability, judgments based principally on such a liability are not valid as to minor items, covered thereby, which were actually due at the time confession was made.—Adams v. Tator, 57 Hun, 302, 10 N. Y. Supp. 617, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 114.

[e] (N. Y. 1890) Code Civ. Proc. § 2864, giving jurisdiction to justices of the peace to enter confessions of judgments, does not confer authority to confess for a contingent liability. Section 3011 provides that, on the confession of judgment before a justice, there must be an affidavit stating that the defendant is honestly indebted to plaintiff in the sum specified, over and above all just demands which defendant has against plaintiff. Held, that a justice of the peace had no authority to enter a confession of judgment in favor of a surety on certain notes against the principal maker, where the surety had not paid the notes at the time of the entry of judgment, though before such entry he had agreed with the principal to make such payment.—Adams v. Tator, 57 Hun, 302, 10 N. Y. Supp. 617, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 114.

[f] (Pa. 1858) If parties appear before a justice, with or without a summons, and agree on the state of accounts between them, and one confesses judgment in favor of the other for a sum exceeding $100, the justice has jurisdiction to enter and enforce it.—Butler v. Urch, 2 Grant, Cas. 247.

[ff] (Tenn. 1875) Under Code, §§ 2977-2979, 4125, subsec. 2, limiting the power of a justice of the peace to enter judgment by confession by his jurisdiction of the amount, and providing that "the written evidence" on which the confession is taken is to be "filed and constitute a part of the record of the cause," and defining the power of a justice to be "to enter up judgment by confession of a defendant to any amount within his jurisdiction in the particular case," a judgment by confession entered by a justice on an open account for a sum in excess of his jurisdiction is void.—Alley v. Myers, 2 Tenn. Ch. 206.

[g] (Vt. 1853) Where judgment is rendered by confession of the debtor before a justice of the peace, the amount will make no difference as far as the question of jurisdiction is concerned.—Hubbard v. Fisher, 25 Vt. 539.

[a] Though the omission of the oath or affidavit, required by statute, from a judgment by confession in a justice's court, renders the judgment void as to creditors, it is valid and binding between the parties.
—(Ind. 1843) Campbell v. Baldwin, 6 Blackf. 364; (1871) Barnett v. Juday, 38 Ind. 86; (1878) Kennard v. Carter, 64 Ind. 31; (1879) Mavity v. Eastridge, 67 Ind. 211; (1882) Hopper v. Lucas, 86 Ind. 43; (1885) Chapin v. McLaren, 105 Ind. 563, 5 N. E. 688; (N. Y. 1824) Griffin v. Mitchell, 2 Cow. 548; (1829) Germon v. Swartwout, 3 Wend. 282; (1863) Stone v. Williams, 40 Barb. 322.

[c] (N. J. 1818) The act requiring affidavits in cases of judgment by confession, before justices of the peace, does not extend to actions commenced by summons served and returned.—Budd v. Marvin, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 248.

[d] (N. J. 1836) An affidavit for confession of judgment, as prescribed by Act Feb. 19, 1829 (Har. Comp. Laws, p. 248), must in every respect accord with the directions given in that act, and must state the consideration of the debt; and the act embraces the court for the trial of small causes, and virtually repeals section 18 of the act constituting that court.—English v. Sharpe, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 457.

[f] (N. Y. 1829) The specification of items for which a judgment is confessed, under the act to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, as well as the oath, must be in writing.—Germon v. Swartwout, 3 Wend. 282.

[a] (Ark. 1889) Mansf. Dig. § 5185, provides that any person indebted, or against whom a cause of action exists, may personally appear in a court of competent jurisdiction and confess judgment therefor. Held, that a judgment confessed before a justice, the record of which fails to show, except by inference, that defendant personally appeared, is void.—Smith v. Finley, 52 Ark. 373, 12 S. W. 782.

[d] (N. J. 1829) To authorize a justice to enter an action "by agreement of the parties without process," under the act for the trial of small causes, the plaintiff and defendant should appear before the justice to manifest their consent or some person on behalf of the plaintiff having competent authority, verified on oath before the justice.—Young's Adm'r v. Stout, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 302.

[e] (N. J. 1836) If the plaintiff be not present either by attorney or in person when judgment is confessed in a justice's court on affidavit, it is ground for reversal; but his presence will be presumed unless the contrary appear of record.—English v. Sharpe, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 457.

[f] (N. Y. 1818) A justice of the peace cannot enter a judgment by confession against a defendant, unless on his appearance in court, either in person or by attorney, or where he has been duly summoned.—Bromaghin v. Throop, 15 Johns. 476.

[g] (N. Y. 1828) Under the $50 act (Acts 47th Sess. c. 238), requiring that in all cases where a warrant shall issue the constable shall be commanded to take the defendant and bring him or her forthwith before the justice, etc., the confession of a judgment on the authority of a defendant as upon a warrant, where he is not in fact arrested and brought before the court, is void.—Colvin v. Luther, 9 Cow. 61.

[h] (N. Y. 1832) A judgment in a justice's court cannot legally be entered on confession, unless the defendant is brought in by summons, or voluntarily appears in court and confesses judgment; authority given to the justice to enter judgment, at an accidental meeting in the street, is not sufficient.—Tenny v. Filer, 8 Wend. 569.

[i, j] (Ohio, 1850) Under Swan & C. St. p. 506, § 1, declaring that a justice shall have jurisdiction to enter judgment for any sum not exceeding $200, when the debtor shall "appear" before him without process, a justice may enter judgment where the debtor appears by attorney to confess judgment.—Staner v. Stom, 1 Ohio Dec. 344.

[k] (Ohio, 1860) Under Swan & C. St. p. 332, § 327, providing that, if any debtor shall appear before a justice without process and confess that he is indebted to another, the justice may render judgment against him, to authorize the justice to render judgment in such case, the defendant must specially appear and confess that he is indebted to the plaintiff in a named sum, and plaintiff must appear personally and apply for judgment on such confession; no judgment can be rendered against a person or confession made by an agent or attorney.—Murdock v. Cooper, 2 Ohio Dec. 306.

[m] (Pa. 1855) In an amicable action before a justice of the peace for a sum over $100, the confession of judgment is good without the personal appearance of the plaintiff. It is sufficient if he appear by agent.—Truitt v. Ludwig, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 145.

[n] (Pa. 1891) Act 1810 limited the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to $100, but provided that they might entertain an amicable action for an amount exceeding that sum, when the parties appeared and judgment was confessed before the magistrate. The act of 1814 provided that justices might entertain amicable actions for sums less than $100 on subjects within their jurisdiction, under the act of 1810. By the act of 1870 justices of the peace of Crawford county were authorized to entertain suits in actions on contract when the sum in controversy did not exceed $300. Held, that where the defendant appeared before a justice of Crawford county, agreed to the entry of an amicable action, and confessed judgment on a contract for an amount less than $300, the justice had jurisdiction to enter the judgment without an appearance on the part of the plaintiff.—Tarr v. Eddy, 142 Pa. 410, 21 Atl. 993.

[a] (Ill. 1840) One cannot authorize a justice to render judgment against him by sending a letter to the justice requesting him to enter judgment against defendant, in favor of plaintiff, for an amount named therein, though he expressly state that he waived service of process and authorized the judgment. Such a judgment is absolutely void.—Evans v. Pierce, 3 Ill. (2 Scam.) 468.

[aa] (Ind. 1851) A justice of the peace has no authority to render a judgment bearing more than legal interest, though the parties consent.—Berry v. Makepeace, 3 Ind. 154.

[b] (Ind. 1871) A recital in the record of a justice, that "B., the defendant, appeared and confessed the following note, * * * and said that he was justly indebted for the same," shows a sufficient consent on the defendant's part to warrant entry of judgment.—Barnett v. Juday, 38 Ind. 86.

[c] (Minn. 1859) A judgment based on a verdict rendered in a justice's court, on consent of the parties, by a majority of the jury, cannot be sustained where the defeated party's consent was given in ignorance of the fact, known to his opponent, that the majority was against him.—Snow v. Hardy, 3 Minn. 77 (Gil. 35).

[d] (N. J. 1833) In an action by the payee of a promissory note against the indorser, an admission of the plaintiff's demand by the defendant to the justice on a day preceding a return of the summons will not authorize the justice to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff.—Outcalt v. Rankin, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 33.

[e] (N. Y. 1854) Where a suit on a promissory note is commenced before a justice of the peace by personal service of the summons, and both parties appear, and the defendant consents that judgment may be rendered against him for the amount of the note, the judgment is valid without an affidavit as to the amount due, or a written confession, or proof.—Gates v. Ward, 17 Barb. 424.

[f] (N. Y. 1888) The return by a justice showed that plaintiff objected to the introduction, as a counterclaim, of a note which, taken with plaintiff's demand, exceeded the justice's jurisdiction but that he would "allow" it. No proof of the execution of the note was given. The return also showed that defendant consented "to the whole thing." Held, that judgment was properly given for plaintiff for the amount of his demand, less the note, and for costs.—Hearman v. Snyder, 50 Hun, 605, 3 N. Y. Supp. 94.

[g] (Pa. 1879) Where it appears from the record of a justice of the peace that defendant admitted the claim of plaintiff, such admission is a sufficient hearing of proofs and allegations on which to base a judgment.—Griffin v. Koch, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 47.

[h] (Tex. 1878) A judgment of a justice of the peace as follows: "H. Sewell v. A. C. Beasley and S. M. Brown. Note $67.50; due Dec. 1st, 1859. Citation issued January 4th, 1860, F. H. Patrick, deputy sheriff. Executed by copy January 7th. Defendants appeared and acknowledged judgment for principal, interest, and costs of suit. C. P. Campbell, J. P.,"—is not invalid for uncertainty.—Davis v. Rankin, 50 Tex. 279.

[a] (Del. 1857) Where the parties to an action before a justice of the peace have appeared, and the defendant has filed a set-off, judgment by default on the set-off should not be rendered against the plaintiff on his failure to attend at the trial, but only a judgment of nonsuit.—Adkins v. Jester, 1 Houst. 352.

[b] (Ind. 1856) One was sued before a justice in another town from that in which he resided, though there was at the time in his own town a justice competent to act. The party was defaulted, and execution issued. Held, in a proceeding to vacate the judgment and set aside the execution, that the judgment was void.—Brickley v. Heilbruner, 7 Ind. 488.

[d] (Mich.) A default judgment of a justice of the peace is void where the docket entry shows that the cause was adjourned, without stating the place to which the same was adjourned.—(1895) Waldron v. Palmer, 104 Mich. 556, 62 N. W. 731; (1896) Fitzhugh v. Rivard, 109 Mich. 154, 66 N. W. 947.

[e] (Minn. 1861) In an action before a justice of the peace, a defendant waives nothing by failure to appear; and plaintiff must show strict compliance with the statute in obtaining an adjournment in order to sustain a judgment by default.—School-Dist. No. 7 v. Thompson, 5 Minn. 280 (Gil. 221).

[g] (Mo. 1882) A judgment of a justice rendered by default on a cause of which the justice had no jurisdiction is void.—Bornschein v. Finck, 13 Mo. App. 120.

[h] (N. J.) A justice cannot enter judgment on the mere default of the defendant.—(1806) Torrence v. Van Emburgh, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 106; (1807) Shinn v. Earnest, Id. 155; (1807) Hendrickson v. Code, Id. 322; (1808) Crane v. Crane, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 412; (1809) Cooper v. Madara, Id. 531; (1809) Keen v. Scull, Id. 544; (1810) Pearson v. Briggs, Id. 621; (1810) Clarke v. Clarke, Id. 724.

[i] (N. J. 1818) Under the statute, judgment by default cannot be entered by a justice.—Hevener v. Kerr, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 58.

[j] (N. J. 1822) A judgment rendered against a plaintiff in his absence by a justice of the peace is erroneous, and will be reversed.—Cavalier v. Doughty, 6 N. J. Law (1 Halst.) 227.

[k] (N. Y. 1856) After defendant, in an action in justice's court, had commenced his proofs, the case was adjourned by consent. On the adjourned day plaintiff failed to appear. Held, that the justice erred in proceeding with the case and rendering judgment in favor of defendant on his counterclaim, since the only judgment proper in such case would be nonsuit or dismissal.—McCullum v. McClare, 3 Abb. Prac. 106.

[l] (Ohio, 1858) Act March 5, 1858, § 105, providing that, if either party fail to appear before a justice of the peace before the return day of the summons, the case may proceed at the request of the adverse party, does not enable the justice to try a plaintiff's cause of action where he fails to appear; he has power simply to enter a judgment of nonsuit or dismissal.—Sharp v. Liddle, 3 Ohio Dec. 64.

[n] (Tex. 1857) In a suit against several defendants in a justice's court, the original citation was returned as served on all the defendants but one, and there was a continuance for service on the remaining defendant, and a citation issued for him was returned, "executed by serving copy April 5, 1855"; and in the justice's docket followed these entries: "April 28th, offset proven and allowed, $20.50. Decree for balance, $70.50." Held, that the judgment did not appear to be by default as to any of the defendants, but on appearance and trial as to all.—Howerton v. Luckie, 18 Tex. 237.

§ 383. Process and appearance to sustain judgment.

Showing process or appearance on record, see ante, § 214.

[a] (Ala. 1893) Where, in an action in justice court against a corporation, the return of the constable is "executed by summons," a judgment by default against the defendant, without independent proof that the person served was authorized to receive service, is void.—Independent Pub. Co. v. American Press Ass'n, 102 Ala. 475, 15 South. 947.

[b] (Ark. 1881) A justice's summons, erroneously directed to the coroner for service, if duly served by him, will nevertheless support a verdict by default.—McCabe v. Payne, 37 Ark. 450.

[c] (Cal. 1885) Where a summons in a justice court stated that, in case of default, "plaintiff would take judgment for the amount claimed," instead of that "plaintiff would apply to the court for the relief demanded," as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 844, a judgment by default thereon is voidable only.—Keybers v. McComber, 67 Cal. 395, 7 Pac. 838.

[d] (Colo. 1893) Under Gen. St. 1883, § 1936, providing that a suit before a justice shall be commenced by summons, in which the justice shall specify a certain day for the trial, not less than 5 nor more than 15 days from the date of such summons, a justice's judgment entered August 1, 1891, by default, against plaintiffs, in an action commenced by summons dated July 27, 1891, citing plaintiffs to appear July 1, 1891, is void.—Rice v. American Nat. Bank, 3 Colo. App. 81, 31 Pac. 1024.

[f] (Ind. 1861) A summons was issued by a justice of the peace on February 13th, returnable on the 20th; it was served on the 18th, and on the 20th judgment was rendered by default, which on the 27th was set aside on plaintiff's motion, and the trial set for the 9th of March, following, on which day judgment was again rendered by default. In December, suit was instituted in the circuit court to set aside this judgment. Held, that on the 20th of February there was not such jurisdiction of the person of the defendant as authorized the rendition of the judgment of that date.—Jamieson v. Caster, 16 Ind. 426.

[g] (Iowa, 1870) A judgment by default rendered by a justice of the peace on a notice served only four days before, being on notice which is merely defective, is not void for want of jurisdiction.—Shea v. Quintin, 30 Iowa, 58.

[h] (Iowa, 1872) Where an action in a mayor's court had by consent been indefinitely continued "until after the then next ensuing term of the district court," a judgment rendered at a trial fixed on request of the plaintiff, without notice to the defendant, is irregular and void.—Rowley v. Baugh, 33 Iowa, 201.

[i] (Kan. 1888) Where a defendant fails to appear in a justice court and judgment is rendered against him for an amount larger than that indorsed on the copy of the summons, such judgment is void.—Basset v. Mitchell, 19 Pac. 671.

[j] (Mo. 1886) Judgment by default, entered by a justice of the peace, is void, if the summons was not served 10 days before the date of rendition.—France v. Evans, 90 Mo. 74, 2 S. W. 141.

[k] (Neb.) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1100a, requiring a defendant, when sued on an instrument purporting to have been made by him, but who controverts the making of the same, to "make and file an affidavit with the justice of the peace before whom the suit is pending that such instrument was not made, given, subscribed, accepted, or indorsed by him," where the justice has in his possession the instrument on which the action is brought, and there is no such affidavit of the defendant made and filed with him, denying its execution, nor any defense made to the action, the justice may render judgment on such instrument though the plaintiff fail to appear.—(1883) Wells v. Turner, 14 Neb. 445, 16 N. W. 484; (1885) Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lemke, 18 Neb. 184, 24 N. W. 727.

[l] (N. J. 1827) Where the justice adjourned the cause in the absence of defendant, the summons not having been duly served, and gave no notice thereof, and tried the cause in defendant's absence, the judgment will be reversed.—Camman v. Perrine, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 253.

[m] (N. J. 1828) Defendant in an action before a justice appeared on the adjourned day to make application for a further continuance for two weeks. The justice's partner said that as plaintiff had written making the same request, it would undoubtedly be granted, and that defendant need not wait as he would inform the justice of his application. The justice subsequently adjourned the cause one, instead of two, weeks, and plaintiff appearing, and defendant, who had had no notice of the adjourned date of trial, being absent, judgment went by default against defendant, though he had a good defense. Held, that the judgment should be reversed.—Probasco v. Hartough, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 55.

[n] (N. Y. 1833) If the defendant in an action before a justice willfully abandons his defense by availing himself of the momentary omission of plaintiff to appear within the time limited, and judgment by default is rendered against him, he is remediless.—Barber v. Parker, 11 Wend. 51.

[nn] (N. Y. 1862) The return of a summons, with the constable's indorsement thereon of due personal service upon defendant, confers jurisdiction on the magistrate issuing the summons, and authorizes him to proceed with the trial and render judgment, though defendant does not appear.—Wavel v. Wiles, 24 N. Y. 635.

[q] (Pa. 1848) The only personal service known to the law is where the original summons is produced to the defendant, and the contents thereof made known to him by the officer making the service, and hence the return of a constable, "Copy of the within served personally," is insufficient to sustain a judgment by default.—Commonwealth v. Dalling, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 285.

[qq] (Pa. 1848) In cases of judgment by default before a magistrate, it must appear that defendant has actually had notice of the suit by service of process in the manner prescribed by Act March 20, 1810, otherwise the judgment will be reversed.—Commonwealth v. Dalling, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 285.

[r] (Pa. 1851) The court will reverse a judgment rendered by default before a magistrate, unless it clearly appear on the face of the officer's return that the summons has been served in the manner prescribed by law.—Buchanan v. Specht, 8 Leg. Int. 162, 1 Phila. 252.

[rr] (Pa. 1851) To sustain a justice's judgment by default on a sci. fa. against bail, the officer's return should show that the constable produced the original writ to the defendant, as is required by law on the service of other writs of summons.—Buchanan v. Specht, 8 Leg. Int. 162, 1 Phila. 252.

[s] (Pa. 1862) Where the summons was made returnable nearly nine months after its issuance, probably by mistake, error in rendering judgment by default was fatal.—Hunter v. Weidner, 1 Woodw. Dec. 6.

[ss] (Pa. 1868) A summons stating plaintiff's demand to be $10.44 is insufficient to sustain a judgment by default for $30.55; no evidence appearing to have been heard by the magistrate.—Heffner v. Hoch, 1 Woodw. Dec. 453.

[t] (Pa. 1873) Where a summons sets an incorrect date for the hearing before a justice of the peace, a judgment rendered on default of appearance will be reversed on certiorari.—Sauser v. Werntz, 1 Leg. Chron. 249.

[tt] (Pa. 1873) To sustain a default judgment in a justice's court, there must be a service of summons by oath or affirmation.—Sauser v. Werntz, 1 Leg. Chron. 227.

[u] (Pa. 1879) Service of a justice's summons by leaving a copy at "defendant's house with an adult member of the family" is insufficient to sustain a judgment by default, the act of the assembly requiring service, when not personal, to be by "leaving a copy of it at his dwelling house in the presence of one or more of his family or neighbors."—Smith v. Noone, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 165.

[uu] (Pa. 1879) The return of service of summons, in an action before a justice, stated that it was "served by making known within contents to within named defendants." The justice's record showed that the return was made on oath, but the original return on the summons showed that it was "acknowledged" before another justice, but did not show that it was sworn to. Held not to sustain a judgment by default.—Starch v. Snyder, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 172.

[v] (Pa. 1884) To sustain a judgment by default, plaintiff or some one in his behalf must appear before the justice.—Karche v. Bach, 1 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 118.

[vv] (Pa. 1893) A judgment by default in an action before a justice of the peace is invalid when proof of service of the summons is not made by affidavit, as Purd. Dig. pl. 55, expressly so requires.—Hoary v. McHale (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 686.

[ww] (Pa. 1894) Where a special deputation to serve a justice's process does not show that it was made by the constable of the proper county, and the record does not identify his official character, the service is irregular, and insufficient to sustain a judgment by default.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Cook (Com. Pl.) 7 Kulp, 257, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 434.

[x] (Pa. 1895) Act 1879 (P. L. 194; Purd. Dig. p. 982) pl. 49, provides that, if the plaintiff shall file an affidavit stating the amount due from defendant, the justice shall cause a certified copy thereof to be served at the time and in the manner that service is made of the summons in the case. Held, that service of a paper which is not certified, and not an exact copy of the affidavit, is insufficient to sustain a judgment by default.—Elwood Paper Co. v. Radziewicz (Com. Pl.) 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 81.

[xx] (Pa. 1896) In an action before a justice, wherein judgment was rendered by default, the record recited: "Summons returned on oath. Served a true copy of the within summons on the daughter of" defendant, "at his residence." The constable's return recited, after averring service, "So answers on oath," but did not show that the constable was sworn to his return of service. Held, that the judgment should be reversed for neglect of the justice to swear the constable to his return as required by Act March 20, 1810, § 6.—Bell v. Borough of Oakdale (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 298, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 198, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 317.

[yy] (Tex. 1881) A justice's judgment by default, based on a citation by publication, made on an affidavit that defendant's residence was unknown to the affiant, is void on the face of the record.—Stegall v. Huff, 54 Tex. 193.

[z] (Tex. 1894) Under Rev. St. art. 1570, requiring a citation from a justice to cite defendant to some regular term of his court, a judgment by default on a citation, which notified defendant to appear on the first Monday, instead of the fourth Monday (the term as fixed by the commissioners' court), in October, is void.—Whitney v. Krapf, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 304, 27 S. W. 843.

[zz] (Wis. 1890) Where one of several defendants to an action in a justice's court is not served with process and does not appear, a default judgment against him is a nullity.—French v. Ferguson, 77 Wis. 121, 45 N. W. 817.

[a] (U. S. 1824) A woman, against whom a justice of the peace of Washington county, D. C., has issued a warrant for a small debt, and who is notified by the officer to appear before the justice at a certain time and place named in the warrant, is bound to appear and answer; and if she does not, the justice may proceed ex parte and render judgment against her by default.—Oneil v. Hogan, Fed. Cas. No. 10,529 [2 Cranch, C. C. 524].

[b] (Ark. 1874) A default judgment may properly be rendered by a justice of the peace against a defendant who has appeared to the action, but interposed no answer or defense.—Page v. Sutton, 29 Ark. 304.

[c] (Cal. 1887) Where defendants were served and filed an answer, in a suit before a justice, but were not present on the day of trial, not having received notice from the justice, and judgment was rendered against them, such judgment was not a judgment by default.—Weimmer v. Sutherland, 74 Cal. 341, 15 Pac. 849.

[d] (Cal. 1887) Code Civ. Proc. § 859, provides that justices' courts can set aside judgments by default within 10 days. Defendants were served, and filed an answer, in a suit before a justice, but were not present on the day of trial, not having received notice from the justice, and judgment was rendered against them. Held, that this not being a judgment by default, an order setting it aside was error.—Weimmer v. Sutherland, 74 Cal. 341, 15 Pac. 849.

[e] (Cal. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 872, providing that if a demurrer to the complaint is overruled, and defendant fails to answer at once, the justice may render judgment against him, it is proper, on the overruling of a demurrer and a failure to answer forthwith, to immediately enter judgment against defendant, who had notice of the time of hearing, but did not appear; and section 850, requiring the justice to fix a day for the trial of the cause after an appearance, is thus complied with, as the issue presented was one of law, for which a hearing was fixed.—Stewart v. Justice's Court of Los Angeles Tp., 109 Cal. 616, 42 Pac. 158.

[f] (Dak. 1888) In an action before a justice, defendant appeared on the return day of the summons, and obtained a continuance. On the day to which the case was continued, defendant's attorney appeared and filed an answer, but defendant did not appear, and judgment was given against him. Held not a judgment by default.—Harris v. Watkins, 5 Dak. 374, 40 N. W. 536.

[g] (Iowa, 1857) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, on the day set for trial, defendant demanded a jury, which was impaneled and sworn, and, after plaintiff's witnesses had been sworn, moved for judgment for the amount claimed by him, for want of an answer or denial of the plaintiff's claim, which motion was sustained, and judgment rendered against the defendant, such judgment was not a judgment by default.—Rhodes v. De Bow, 5 Iowa (5 Clarke) 260.

[h] (Iowa, 1870) Where, in an action before a justice, defendant appeared and answered, his subsequent failure to appear on a day to which the case was continued is not a "default" within Revision, § 3886, providing that a justice may set aside a default judgment within 6 days of its rendition.—Douglas v. Langdon, 29 Iowa, 245.

[i] (Iowa, 1875) Where defendant fails to plead, judgment entered against him is taken as by default, though he appeared to the action.—McFarland v. Lowry, 40 Iowa, 467.

[j] (Iowa, 1875) Where the defendant in an action before a justice of the peace has applied for and obtained a change of venue before the notice is returnable, but fails to plead or to appear at the trial, judgment by default may be entered against him.—Park v. Ratcliffe, 42 Iowa, 42.

[k] (Mo. 1886) Though a party to an action before a justice appears before it is finally submitted for trial, he may thereafter abandon it and suffer it to go by default.—Smith v. Wineland, 21 Mo. App. 387.

[l] (N. J. 1823) If a plaintiff discharges the defendant from arrest on a warrant, on the defendant's promising to appear before the justice, and the defendant does not appear, and the plaintiff takes judgment in his absence, the judgment will be reversed.—Anonymous, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 120.

[n] (N. Y. 1818) Where defendant appears at the hour set for the trial and consents to a short delay to accommodate the justice, and then voluntarily absents himself, he cannot complain of a judgment against him, on an ex parte trial.—Myer v. Fisher, 15 Johns. 504.

[o] (N. Y. 1856) Where a justice adjourned a cause, with provision that if defendant filed security meantime he should then have a further adjournment, and defendant filed the security, but failed to appear on the adjourned day, held that the justice was right in proceeding to judgment.—Muber v. Held, 3 Abb. Prac. 110.

Waiting hour before taking default, see ante, § 232.

[a] (Colo. 1887) A judgment by default in justice's court, rendered, in the absence of defendant or his counsel, prior to the hour set out in the citation, is a void judgment, and is not sufficient to support a plea in abatement on the ground of a former suit pending, filed in a second suit on the same cause of action.—Yentzer v. Thayer, 10 Colo. 63, 14 Pac. 53, 3 Am. St. Rep. 563.

[b] (Kan. 1876) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace against the defendant in the action four days before the return day of the summons, and four days before the defendant is notified to appear, is void.—Briggs v. Tye, 16 Kan. 285.

[c] (Kan. 1888) Where defendant fails to appear in a justice court, judgment cannot be rendered against him for an amount larger than that indorsed on the copy of the summons served on him.—Basset v. Mitchell, 19 Pac. 671.

[d] (La. 1891) Defaults need not be taken and confirmed before the justice of the peace court in Louisiana, as is done before the district courts.—State ex rel. Houston Cent., A. & N. R. Co. v. Riley, 43 La. Ann. 177, 8 South. 598.

[e] (Me. 1851) A judgment obtained against a defendant before a justice of the peace is erroneous and reversible, if it was rendered before the day at which the defendant was summoned to attend.—Crosby v. Boyden, 33 Me. 368.

[f] (Mich. 1877) It appeared by a justices' docket that, on default of defendants, one of whom the declaration alleged to be the maker, the other the indorser of the note sued on, the justice heard the cause on a return of service "on the within named defendant," and entered judgment as follows: "Judgment is this day rendered for $300 damages, and $3 costs." Held, that the judgment was indefinite and void on its face.—Sherman v. Palmer, 37 Mich. 509.

[g] (Miss. 1880) Though a justice of the peace may render judgment on default after a constructive service, yet such judgment rendered at the return term is void.—Betts v. Baxter, 58 Miss. 329.

[h] (Neb. 1881) The record showed that defendant made a special appearance, and objected to the jurisdiction of the justice by motion which was overruled. Held, that a judgment against defendant, without showing an entry of default against him, was valid.—McPherson v. First Nat. Bank, 12 Neb. 202, 10 N. W. 707.

[i] (N. J. 1836) An entry by a justice of the peace in the record, that "the plaintiff filed his demand for $30. The defendant not appearing, the plaintiff proved his demand, and I gave judgment for the same."—is not a judgment.—Polhemus v. Perkins, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 435.

[j] (N. Y. 1828) A justice, having regularly heard a cause ex parte in the defendant's absence, cannot afterwards open the matter and proceed to a rehearing, without the plaintiff's consent, but must enter judgment according to the proof.—People v. Lynde, 8 Cow. 133.

[k] (Utah, 1886) Under Laws 1884, p. 288, § 718, requiring defendant in justice's court to appear within five days after the service of summons, defendant is entitled to five days after the day of the issue of the summons in which to answer, and a judgment by default entered before the five days have expired is invalid, though the justice fixes an hour for defendant's appearance.—Ducheneau v. House, 4 Utah, 303, 10 Pac. 427.

[l] (Vt. 1848) The statute in reference to supreme and county courts (Rev. St. c. 25, § 32) which gives the court power to cause damages to be assessed by a jury, after default, does not extend to justices of the peace; but if it did, it confers on them only a discretionary power, the refusal to exercise which is no ground of error.—Brown v. Irwin, 21 Vt. 68.

[m] (Vt. 1848) And if the common law, in reference to the assessment of damages by a jury, is in force as to justices of the peace, which may be doubted, that makes the exercise of the power to call a jury discretionary with the court.—Brown v. Irwin, 21 Vt. 68.

[n] (Wash. 1889) Code, § 1781, provides that when a defendant who has been served with a true copy of the complaint and notice fails to appear and plead within the time specified in the notice, or within an hour thereafter, judgment shall be given without further evidence. Held, that where, at the end of an hour from the time set for trial, no appearance having been entered for defendant, plaintiff demands judgment, and shortly afterwards persons present object, as agents for defendant, but the justice says, "I will have to render judgment," and refers such agents to section 1781, judgment is rendered for plaintiff, though after plaintiff and his attorney depart the justice grants defendant a continuance, but enters up the judgment for the plaintiff several hours thereafter.—McCoy v. Bell, 1 Wash. St. 504, 20 Pac. 595.

[o] (Wis. 1861) Where a justice having adjourned a case for 90 days afterwards changes the time to a shorter period, and plaintiff appears at the time fixed and takes judgment, it is a nullity.—Mahr v. Young, 13 Wis. 634.

Entry of proof in docket, see post, § 456.

[a] (Del. 1835) A justice of the peace must try the cause on the allegations and proof of plaintiff before rendering judgment by default.—Coulter v. Layton, 1 Har. 494.

[b] (Del. 1852) On a hearing in defendant's absence, though after an appearance, a magistrate must hear proof as well as allegations before giving judgment.—Phillips v. Cannon, 5 Har. 366.

[c] (N. J. 1811) A justice of the peace cannot render judgment in defendant's absence without a trial.—Cowperthwait v. Horner, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 850; Flemings v. Newman, Id. 852.

[d] (N. Y.) A plaintiff must prove his case in a justice's court, though defendant neglects to appear.—(1804) Stocking v. Driggs, 2 Caines, 96; (1848) Muscott v. Miller, 1 Code Rep. 53.

[e] (N. Y. 1813) If the defendant makes default on return of a summons personally served, in an action before a justice of the peace, the justice cannot give judgment for the plaintiff without proof of his demand, made in the same manner as if the defendant appeared and denied it.—Cudner v. Dixon, 10 Johns. 106.

[f] (N. Y. 1849) In justice court plaintiff must prove his case before he is entitled to judgment, even though the defendant makes no defense.—Smith v. Falconer, 1 Code Rep. 120.

[g] (N. Y. 1849) In the assistant justice's court a plaintiff must prove his claim, though the defendant does not make any defense. In such case a default does not admit the plaintiff's claim.—Swift v. Falconer, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 640.

[h] (N. Y. 1853) The court of common pleas will reverse a judgment rendered in a justice's court where the evidence is insufficient to support it, whether defendant appeared in the court below or not, as plaintiff is bound to prove his case whether defendant appeared or not, under Code, § 64, subd. 8, providing that on default of defendant plaintiff cannot recover without proving his case.—Howard v. Brown, 2 E. D. Smith, 247.

[i] (N. Y. 1859) The judgment of a justice of the peace cannot be sustained unless the plaintiff established his cause of action by legal evidence, though defendant was not present at the trial.—Perkins v. Stebbins, 29 Barb. 523.

[j] (N. Y. 1861) In an action in a justice's court for trespass on real property, defendant answered simply that a former suit was a bar. On the trial the justice denied an application for leave to amend, and defendant declined to produce any evidence, whereupon the justice, without any proof from plaintiff, gave judgment for the amount demanded in the complaint. Held error for which the judgment should be reversed. Code, § 168, which entitles the plaintiff to judgment where the answer does not deny the cause of action, is not applicable to justices' courts.—Raymond v. Traffarn, 12 Abb. Prac. 52.

[k] (N. Y. 1891) In an action before a justice of the peace for money due for services rendered, etc., testimony by plaintiff that he had a claim against defendants for labor performed at their request during a certain time, that they had paid him for some of the work, and that a certain sum remained due, no part of which had been paid and which plaintiff had demanded, is sufficient to sustain a judgment for plaintiff on defendants' default, within Code Civ. Proc. § 2891, which provides that, "if a defendant fails to appear and answer, the plaintiff cannot recover without proving his case."—Griffin v. Jackson, 59 Hun, 620, 13 N. Y. Supp. 321.

[l] (Pa. 1868) Where the action is against four, two of whom, not legally served with process, do not appear, if from the record it appear that there was no testimony given before the justice, a judgment against all the defendants will be reversed on certiorari.—Wagenhorst v. Smith, 1 Woodw. Dec. 421.

[n] (Pa. 1880) Where a defendant in an action before a justice of the peace has appeared and filed an affidavit of defense, the justice cannot enter judgment for the plaintiff without having proofs of the claim, notwithstanding the defendant failed to appear at the hearing.—Wissler v. Becker, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 103, 11 Lanc. Bar, 187.

[o] (Pa. 1884) To sustain a justice's default judgment some evidence must be heard in support of plaintiff's claim.—Karche v. Bach, 1 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 118.

[q] (Pa. 1893) A judgment cannot be rendered by a justice against a defendant on his refusal to make any defense, where plaintiff has not produced any evidence to support his claim.—Chambers v. Reynolds (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 402.

[r] (Wis. 1854) A justice of the peace should not render judgment on default without requiring full and competent proof of the plaintiff's demand.—Roberts v. Warren, 3 Wis. 736.

In garnishment proceeding, see ante, § 300 [d, n].

[a] (Ga. 1895) The fact that plaintiff's attorney, after a case was continued in a justice's court, informed defendants that the case would not be tried until the next month, was no cause for setting aside a judgment rendered against defendants by default at the next term, though defendants were ignorant and supposed that they would be resummoned.—Eady v. Napier, 96 Ga. 736, 22 S. E. 684.

[b] (Iowa, 1857) In an action before a justice of the peace, on the day set for the trial, defendant demanded a jury, which was impaneled and sworn. After plaintiff's witnesses had been sworn, plaintiff moved for judgment for the amount claimed by him, for want of an answer or denial of the plaintiff's claim, which motion was sustained, and a judgment rendered against the defendant. Defendant, four days afterwards, made oath that he had orally denied the plaintiff's claim on the trial, and that the justice had failed to enter the denial in his docket, on which affidavit the justice set aside the judgment, and appointed another day for the trial. Held, that the judgment rendered by the justice was not a judgment by default within section 2296 of the Code, and that the justice had no power to set it aside.—Rhodes v. De Bow, 5 Iowa (5 Clarke) 260.

[d] (Iowa, 1881) The provision of Code 1873, § 2877, for the retrial of an action on application within two years, where judgment has been rendered on service by publication only, and the defendant has not appeared, is also applicable, under section 3516, to judgments in a justice's court, in the absence of any provision for such cases. The provision of section 3543, for setting aside judgments in a justice's court, applies only where there has been personal service.—Taylor & Farley Organ Co. v. Plumb, 57 Iowa, 33, 10 N. W. 282.

[f] (Iowa, 1896) Whether the fact that a notice to defendant in an action of forcible entry and detainer was not signed by plaintiff, or by the justice of the peace before whom the proceeding was returnable, as required by Code 1873, § 3519, but was signed by plaintiff's attorney, is a "satisfactory excuse," within Code 1873, § 3543, providing that the justice of the peace may set aside a judgment by default within six days after its rendition, on a showing of a "satisfactory excuse," is a question to be determined by the justice, the defect not being jurisdictional.—Arts v. Rocksien, 98 Iowa, 536, 67 N. W. 409.

[g] (Kan. 1887) Where an action pending in justice's court is continued by consent to 1 o'clock p. m. of a certain day, but the justice makes an entry of the continuance in his docket which may read 10 o'clock a. m. of the same day, instead of 1 o'clock p. m., and the justice, through his mistaken belief that the cause does stand for hearing at 10 o'clock a. m., at the request of the plaintiff, and in the absence of the defendant, tries the action, and renders judgment against the defendant, such judgment, on motion of the defendant, may be vacated, because of its rendition before the action stood regularly for trial, and a new trial granted, on reasonable notice of such motion being given to the plaintiff.—Barons v. Anderson, 37 Kan. 399, 15 Pac. 226.

[h] (Kan. 1888) Judgment rendered in justice's court against defendants in their absence, may be set aside under Comp. Laws 1879, c. 81, § 114.—Covart v. Haskins, 39 Kan. 571, 18 Pac. 522.

[i] (Mo. 1876) The fact that defendant in a justice's court was prevented on account of sickness from attending at the trial, and that he had diligently tried to be represented, will justify the justice in setting aside a default judgment on the day after its rendition.—State ex rel. McCann v. Smyth, 1 Mo. App. 571.

[j] (Mont. 1893) Under Comp. St. div. 1, § 804, providing that the provisions of the General Code of Civil Procedure relative to practice, pleading, and trial shall, so far as applicable, and not in conflict with the provisions of the Justices' Code, be observed in justices' courts, a justice may open a default, and allow a defense to be interposed, in accordance with the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 116.—Schwabe v. Lissner, 13 Mont. 215, 33 Pac. 1012.

[k] (Neb. 1884) A defendant who has voluntarily permitted judgment to be entered against him by default before a justice, after having had a previous default against him set aside and an opportunity to make his defense, cannot have the second default set aside.—Smythe v. Kastler, 16 Neb. 264, 20 N. W. 208.

[l] (Neb. 1894) Where judgment has been rendered by default against a defendant in his absence, it is the duty of the justice to set aside the same on the defendant's moving therefor within 10 days, paying the costs, and notifying plaintiff of the day of trial, in compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1001.—Smith v. Riverside Park Ass'n, 42 Neb. 372, 60 N. W. 599.

[m] (N. Y. 1852) Where a justice was without jurisdiction by reason of proceeding by a short summons against defendant as a nonresident, without proof thereof, an offer by him, on the appearance of defendant a few minutes after judgment on default was rendered, to open the case, if defendant would state his defense, so that the justice could see if it was a valid one, was without authority.—Sperry v. Major, 1 E. D. Smith, 361.

[n] (N. Y. 1854) Where a justice proceeded with a case and rendered judgment therein immediately on the expiration of the time named in the summons, he has no power to open up the judgment on the defendant's coming immediately after and asking to be let in to defend. —Appleby v. Strang, 1 Abb. Prac. 143.

[o] (N. Y. 1890) Under Laws 1882, c. 410, § 1367 (Consolidation Act), providing that any justice may upon motion set aside any default made in any action tried before him, a plaintiff who has offered proof of personal service of summons on defendant, and obtained a judgment by default in a justice's court, cannot object to the vacation of the judgment by the justice, on proof that personal service was not had, on the ground that the justice had never acquired jurisdiction of the action.—Edel v. McCone, 10 N. Y. Supp. 538, 16 Daly, 216.

[p] (Ohio, 1886) The provision of Rev. St. § 6578, that a judgment by default entered against a defendant in his absence may be set aside by the magistrate where an affidavit is filed setting forth a good and sufficient reason for defendant's absence, and otherwise complying with the statute, is imperative, the word "may" therein being construed to read "shall." —Pope v. Pollock, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 347, 1 O. C. D. 193.

[q] (Or. 1892) In the absence of statutory authority, a justice of the peace has no power to set aside a judgment against defendant, rendered by default after personal service of the summons.—American Building & Loan Ass'n v. Fulton, 21 Or. 492, 28 Pac. 636.

[r] (Pa. 1854) Act July 12, 1842, § 31, making it the duty of an alderman who has entered judgment by default "where the attachment or summons shall not have been personally served" on affidavit of defense, in part or in whole, made by defendant or some person for him, to open the judgment and rehear the case, refers exclusively to attachments and summonses issued under the several provisions of that act, and does not apply to suit, under Act March 20, 1810, as for work and labor done.—Whitehead v. Gillespy, 1 Phila. 515.

[a] (Ark. 1881) On application to set aside a justice's judgment rendered on default, no notice to plaintiff is necessary.—Frizzell v. Willard, 37 Ark. 478.

[b] (Cal. 1895) A motion to open a justice's judgment on default cannot be made by simply filing a written motion within the 10 days prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 859, and giving notice of a hearing at a time after the period has expired.—Spencer v. Branham, 109 Cal. 336, 41 Pac. 1095.

[c] (Ind. 1884) Where a judgment by default before a justice of the peace is granted on a partnership note against both parties, and one of them thereafter moves to set aside such judgment, which is done, the fact that the justice recites in his entry that the motion is granted "to him" does not control the presumption that such partner in making the motion acted in behalf of the firm, and that the judgment was set aside as to both defendants.—Robinson v. Snyder, 97 Ind. 56.

[d] (Ind. 1884) Where a judgment is entered on default in attachment before a justice against a resident on an affidavit of nonresidence, it cannot be set aside after the statutory time by an affidavit of residence and want of notice.—Brown v. Goble, 97 Ind. 86.

[e] (Me. 1862) Under Rev. St. 1841, a justice, having on the return day defaulted an action, cannot on the next day take off the default; there having been no continuance of the action.—State v. Hall, 49 Me. 412.

[f] (Me. 1866) A justice of the peace has no power, except by the provisions of some statute conferring the authority, to set aside a default on a day subsequent to that on which the entry was made.—Pratt v. Roberts, 53 Me. 399.

[g] (Mo. 1862) A motion by a nonresident to set aside a judgment which has been rendered against him on default before a justice must be made within 10 days from its rendition.—Blanchard v. Hatch, 32 Mo. 261.

[h] (Mo. 1876) In computing the 10 days' time within which a motion to set aside a default before a justice of the peace may be made, under Wag. St. p. 847, § 2, the first day after the rendition of the judgment should be excluded, and the last included. Thus, the judgment being rendered October 28th, motion filed November 7th was held to be in time.—Reynolds v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 64 Mo. 70.

[j] (Neb. 1887) A judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace against defendants. Within 10 days, R., attorney for defendants, appeared before the justice, and, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1001, "offered to confess judgment for the costs in the case, and moved the court to set aside the default heretofore rendered in this case, and set said cause for trial," which offer and motion were made in writing, and signed by attorney for defendants, whereupon the justice made the following entry in the docket of the case: "Motion sustained, default set aside, and trial set for the eighth day of May, 1886, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon of said day;" signed officially by the justice, notice being given thereof as provided by statute. Held, that the offer to confess judgment made by the attorney was sufficient, under the statute, and the fact that the order was not conditional was not material, and it was error to subsequently refuse a new trial.—Stanton v. Spence, 22 Neb. 191, 34 N. W. 359.

[k] (Neb. 1890) On motion to set aside a judgment given by a justice of the peace in the absence of the defendant, the order should be conditional; but if it is absolute, and a day set for another trial, the error is in form only, and is harmless.—Tyler v. Baxter, 29 Neb. 688, 46 N. W. 153.

[l] (Neb. 1894) Code Civ. Proc. § 1001, provides that when judgment shall have been rendered against a defendant, in his absence, in a justice's court, the same may be set aside on the conditions (1) that his motion be made within 10 days; (2) that he pay or confess judgment for the costs; (3) that he notify the opposite party of the opening of said judgment, and of the time and place of trial, at least 5 days before the time. Held, that the third condition need not be complied with until after the default is opened.—Smith v. Riverside Park Ass'n, 42 Neb. 372, 60 N. W. 599.

[m] (N. C. 1851) Where a judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace against an absent party, and the party within 10 days thereafter applies for relief, under Rev. St. c. 62, § 15, the justice has no right summarily to vacate the judgment. He must issue a notice to the opposite party and an order to summon witnesses, and produce all the papers before him, or some other justice, within 30 days, directing a forbearance of proceedings in the meantime, on which appointed day the case should be reconsidered.—Sloan v. McLean, 84 N. C. 260.

[n] (N. C. 1851) Where a justice on such application made an order at once vacating the judgment, and no further proceedings were had thereon, it was held that, the order not being warranted by law, the original judgment remained in full force.—Sloan v. McLean, 84 N. C. 260.

[o] (Ohio, 1859) Under Swan's St. p. 516, § 106, providing that a judgment rendered against defendant in his absence by a justice of the peace may be set aside on a motion made within 10 days after such judgment was entered, upon his paying or confessing judgment for the costs awarded against him, and notifying, in writing, the opposite party of the opening of such judgment and of the time and place of retrial, in order to open a judgment, the statute must be complied with.—McCann v. Duffy, 2 Ohio Dec. 114.

[p] (Ohio, 1859) Where a party moving to set aside a judgment rendered against him in his absence by a justice of the peace fails to give notice to the other party of the opening of such judgment and of the time and place of retrial, as required by Swan's St. p. 516, § 106, the judgment remains unaffected and in full force.—McCann v. Duffy, 2 Ohio Dec. 114.

[q] (Pa. 1864) Where a judgment by default has been rendered against defendant who has not been summoned, the justice has authority to grant a rehearing after the expiration of 30 days from the rendition of the judgment.—Dicks v. Carter, 21 Leg. Int. 340.

[r] (Pa. 1895) Act March 29, 1810, § 7, authorizes a justice to open a default judgment on application made within 30 days, averring a set-off, etc. Held, that a justice has no power to open a judgment after the expiration of 30 days, for the purpose of allowing a set-off, however unjust the judgment.—McNamara v. McIntosh (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 135, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 123.

[s] (R. I. 1878) A justice court, by rendering final judgment in an action and adjourning, exhausts its jurisdiction over the action, and cannot, after having given judgment by default for defendant and adjourned, remove the default and continue the case.—Hamill v. Bosworth, 12 R. I. 124.

[e] (Mo. 1886) A justice's judgment against a husband generally for antenuptial debts of his wife, instead of a special judgment to be satisfied out of property acquired by her, is erroneous.—Babb v. Bruere, 23 Mo. App. 604.

[f] (Neb. 1890) Where a bill of particulars in a case before a justice states a cause of action, and a written answer is filed thereto, and the case is submitted on the pleadings, and the answer is insufficient, the justice can enter judgment for plaintiff.—Simons v. Sowards, 29 Neb. 487, 45 N. W. 779.

[g] (Neb. 1896) A general finding for plaintiff of a justice of the peace is sufficient to sustain a judgment for plaintiff, as against an attempt to set the same aside in the district court on error.—Coad v. Read, 48 Neb. 40, 66 N. W. 1002.

[h] (Neb. 1896) Code Civ. Proc. § 1002, relating to the rendition of judgment on a trial before a justice of the peace, applies to a county judge exercising the ordinary powers and jurisdiction of a justice.—Best v. Stewart, 48 Neb. 859, 67 N. W. 881.

For entry of judgment, see post, § 396.

Stipulations as to time for rendering judgment, see ante, § 343 [e, f, g].

[a] (Conn. 1843) No judgment can be rendered in a justice's court against a party who has appeared in time, except at the hour designated, or in a reasonable time thereafter; and what is a reasonable time will be, in all other cases, a question depending upon circumstances, and governed by sound discretion.—Burgess v. Tweedy, 16 Conn. 39.

[b] (Del. 1845) A justice of the peace can render judgment only on a day to which the case stands adjourned.—Lynch v. Hill, 4 Har. 312.

[c] (Ga. 1893) A judgment by a justice of the peace at the regular time and place of holding his court, but which was written out and signed at some other time and place in the district, is rendered within sufficient time, since the word "rendered," as used in Code, § 462, refers to the making up and announcement of the judgment, and not to the clerical act of reducing it to writing.—Ryals v. McArthur, 92 Ga. 378, 17 S. E. 350.

[d] (Ill. 1861) A justice of the peace, after the evidence has been heard in a case, has no authority to order a continuance, or to postpone the case for advisement, but must render judgment. Such postponement will work a discontinuance, even though it be had with the consent of the parties.—Harrison v. Chipp, 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 471.

[e] (Ill. 1865) A justice of the peace can, like any other court, after the evidence and arguments are closed, adjourn the case for a definite and reasonable time, before giving his decision, without losing jurisdiction.—Hall v. Reber, 36 Ill. 483.

[f] (Iowa, 1858) A justice has but three days after verdict in which to render judgment.—Guthrie v. Humphrey, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 23.

[g] (Iowa, 1860) In case of a jury trial before a justice, judgment should be rendered on the verdict forthwith. The justice having failed in this case to enter it for nearly 60 days afterwards, it was held that he had lost the right so to do.—Harper v. Albee, 10 Iowa, 389.

[h] (Kan. 1877) In computing the four days allowed, under Gen. St. p. 799, § 115, for a justice to render judgment, both the day of trial and the day of entering judgment must be counted. For a justice to render judgment after the four days so computed, is error, which may be corrected by petition in error.—Stewart v. Waite, 19 Kan. 218.

[j] (Minn. 1893) In a justice court a verdict was returned between noon and 1 p. m. on Saturday, while the justice was hearing other cases, and he did not render judgment on the verdict until Monday. Held, that the judgment was rendered in due time, under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 68, requiring a judgment to be rendered "forthwith" on return of a verdict, since the time was reasonable, having regard to the circumstances.—Sorenson v. Swensen, 55 Minn. 58, 56 N. W. 350, 43 Am. St. Rep. 472.

[k] (Mo. 1880) The three days within which a justice must render judgment are exclusive of Sunday.—Hodgson v. Banking House of Bartholow, 9 Mo. App. 24.

[l] (Mo. 1890) Rev. St. 1889, § 6279, requiring a justice of the peace to enter judgment within three days after the cause has been submitted to him, means a submission for final decision, and does not require a judgment on the merits to be rendered within three days from the submission of issues under a plea in abatement.—Cella v. Schnairs, 42 Mo. App. 316.

[m] (Neb. 1882) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1002, and Comp. St. c. 19, § 38, which provides that a court may be opened on Sunday "to receive a verdict," a justice of the peace must render judgment immediately on a verdict returned on Sunday.—Thompson v. Church, 13 Neb. 287, 13 N. W. 626.

[n] (Neb. 1884) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1002, which provides that "upon a verdict the justice must immediately render judgment accordingly," he has no right to delay until the next day.—Austin v. Brok, 16 Neb. 642, 21 N. W. 437.

[nn] (N. J. 1819) Judgment must be given in open court, where parties have an opportunity to be present, as well by justices of the peace as by any other judges.—Clark v. Read, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 486.

[o] (N. Y. 1838) A justice must render judgment within four days after the cause is submitted to him for final decision.—Watson v. Davis, 19 Wend. 371.

[oo] (N. Y. 1846) A justice of the peace must render judgment on the jury's verdict immediately, and cannot wait until the next day.—Sibley v. Howard, 3 Denio, 72, 45 Am. Dec. 448.

[p] (N. Y. 1846) Taxing the costs is parcel of the act of rendering judgment; therefore, where a justice entered the verdict in his docket immediately on its being rendered, but omitted to complete the taxation of costs until eight days afterwards, the judgment was erroneous.—Sibley v. Howard, 3 Denio, 72, 45 Am. Dec. 448.

[pp] (N. Y. 1851) Under the statute requiring judgments before justices of the peace, to be rendered within four days after the submission of the cause, a cause being submitted to a justice on the 28th of June, a judgment rendered on Monday, the 3rd day of July following, was not entered in season.—Bissell v. Bissell, 11 Barb. 96.

[q] (N. Y. 1852) Where the record of a justice states that the trial was had on the 11th, and the judgment was rendered on the 12th, it will be presumed that the verdict was not rendered until the 12th, and that therefore judgment was given in time.—Beattie v. Qua, 15 Barb. 132.

[rr] (N. Y. 1865) If a justice fails to render his decision within the time limited by law, he loses jurisdiction of the case, and the plaintiff's only remedy is to sue again.—Bloomer v. Merrill, 29 How. Prac. 259, 1 Daly, 485.

[s] (N. Y. 1871) A statute regulating justices' courts, which directs that in all cases where a verdict is rendered the justice "shall forthwith render judgment," should be so construed as to harmonize with another general statute for the observance of the Sabbath, which authorizes courts to receive a verdict on Sunday, but forbids the transaction of any other business on that day. The effect is that if a jury render a verdict on Sunday the justice may receive it, wait till Monday before proceeding further, and on Monday render the judgment. —Allen v. Godfrey, 44 N. Y. 433.

[ss] (N. Y. 1873) Where a justice of the peace renders judgment on the verdict of a jury, he must do so immediately on the verdict being received; and, if he omits to include the costs, he cannot thereafter render a judgment including such costs.—Schneider v. Armstrong, Sheld. 379.

[t] (N. Y. 1887) Code Civ. Proc. § 3015, requires a justice to render judgment forthwith after the trial of an action, and to enter it on his docket. An action was tried before a jury, and, at once, after verdict for defendant was rendered, the justice made a memorandum on his minutes of testimony of the various items of costs, and the amount thereof, and indorsed "Verdict for defendant" and "Judgment for costs against plaintiff rendered." It being suggested that the costs were in excess of the legal limit, he determined on the amount allowable, announced his conclusion to the attorneys, and wrote the items in his minutes, and informed counsel that certain witness fees were included, but did not enter them in the minutes, nor did he then write judgment opposite the total amount. Four days later he wrote down the amount of the witness fees, entered and signed judgment, dating it back as of the day of trial. Held, that the judgment was not rendered until the later date, and was void under the statute.—Putman v. Van Allen, 46 Hun, 492, 13 Civ. Proc. R. 246.

[u] (N. Y. 1896) Where the jury in a justice's court returned a verdict after 10 o'clock at night, and the justice, who was tired and unable to see well, made a memorandum of the verdict, and on the following morning adjusted the costs, rendered the judgment, and entered it in his docket, the judgment was rendered "forthwith," within Code Civ. Proc. § 3015.—Sweet v. Marvin, 2 App. Div. 1, 37 N. Y. Supp. 442.

[uu] (Ohio, 1861) Where a justice of the peace fails to render judgment, or take any other action, for a period of 10 months, on the verdict of a jury rendered in a cause on trial before him, such neglect of duty, on the part of the justice, works a discontinuance of the action.—Dunlap v. Robinson, 12 Ohio St. 530.

[v] (Ohio, 1866) Where the docket of a justice shows a trial, but no notice of any continuance, the date on which judgment was rendered will be held to be the same as that of the trial.—Hoagland v. Schnorr, 17 Ohio St. 30.

[vv] (Ohio, 1884) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, a jury is waived, and the cause is submitted to the justice, he should give judgment within four days of the trial and submission.—Sanderson v. Pullman (Dist. Ct.) 11 Wkly. Law Bul. 145.

[w] (Vt. 1860) When the trial of a suit before a justice of the peace is commenced on the return day of the writ, or on a subsequent day to which it has been continued, and is pursued to judgment without an intervening adjournment, all the proceedings after the commencement of the trial, including the rendition of the judgment, must in law be treated as perfected on the day when the trial commenced. Therefore, where it appeared from the justice's record that the trial lasted, without an adjournment, into the next day after it was commenced, when the jury returned their verdict and the justice rendered judgment thereon; it was held that, notwithstanding the judgment appeared by the justice's record to have been rendered as of the last day of the trial, the law would refer it to the day on which the trial commenced, and treat it as rendered on that day.—Oakes v. School Dist. No. 9, 33 Vt. 155.

[ww] (Wis. 1851) A justice of the peace has the right to take three days in which to render judgment.—Caughey v. Vance, 3 Chand. 308, 3 Pin. 275.

[x] (Wis. 1861) A justice of the peace, before whom an action is tried without a jury, may take time to consider on the cause, and to that end may continue it not longer than 72 hours from the time of submission.—Gallup v. Johnson, 14 Wis. 197.

[xx] (Wis. 1870) Under Rev. St. c. 120, § 160, which requires a justice of the peace to render judgment forthwith, on receiving the verdict, when the defendant is in custody at the hearing of the cause, where the justice received a verdict on Saturday night, and did not render judgment until Monday morning, held, that he thereby lost jurisdiction of the cause.—McNamara v. Spees, 25 Wis. 539.

[y] (Wis. 1871) The statute (Laws 1861, c. 58) which declares that no court shall transact any business on February 22d, "unless it be for the purpose of instructing or discharging a jury, or receiving a verdict," and Rev. St. c. 120, § 160, which requires that in all cases where a verdict shall be rendered in a justice's court the justice shall "forthwith render judgment," must be construed together, so as to prevent a failure of justice, and must be held to authorize an immediate rendition of judgment, where the verdict is received on February 22d.—Perkins v. Jones, 28 Wis. 243.

[zz] (Wis. 1885) Under Rev. St. §§ 3662, 3742, requiring a justice of the peace to render a judgment instanter on a verdict returned by a jury in replevin, simply reading the verdict aloud to the parties to the suit, and entering an order of continuance until the next day, and then rendering judgment, is not sufficient, though the verdict is returned on a legal holiday.—Smith v. Bahr, 62 Wis. 244, 22 N. W. 438.

[a] (N. H. 1827) A justice's judgment on a report of referees, made in pursuance of a submission of a controversy of less than $200 value, is erroneous, if the parties have no day before the justice to be heard on the report, or if it does not appear that the party against whom the judgment was rendered had notice of the time when it was rendered.—Atwood v. York, 4 N. H. 50.

[b] (N. H. 1830) Where a rule of reference is made returnable to a justice of the peace, the parties have a right to be heard before judgment is rendered by the justice on the report.—French v. Shackford, 5 N. H. 143.

[c] (N. J. 1813) Since the principle of rendering judgment on a report of a referee in a justice court in the absence of the defendant, and without notice to him, has been established by long practice, the court will not disturb it.—Fairholme v. Forker, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 995.

[d] (N. J. 1823) A judgment by a justice on a report of referees, in absence of defendant, and without notice, is erroneous.—Pierson v. Pierson, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 125.

[e] (N. J. 1830) If a justice, after hearing a cause, takes time to consider the same, but does not make a regular adjournment to a particular day and hour, he must give notice to the parties of the day and hour when the judgment will be rendered.—Edwards v. Hance, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 108.

[f] (Ohio, 1855) Section 92 of the Justice's Code (Swan's St. p. 514), does not render the payment of jury fees a condition precedent to the rendition of judgment.—Robinson v. Kious, 4 Ohio St. 593.

[g] (Pa. 1844) Where, after a final hearing of a case before a justice, he postpones his decision, without fixing any day, the judgment rendered by him afterwards can only be regarded as a judgment from the day notice shall be given to the party to whom the judgment is entered.—Taylor v. Smith, 4 Pa. Law J. 105.

[h] (Pa. 1883) Where a justice of the peace, after a hearing, postponed his decision, without fixing a day certain on which he would render his decision, and, without notice to the defendant, entered judgment against him, such judgment was void, and an execution issued upon it must fall with it.—Bower v. Stum, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 19.

[i] (Pa. 1894) Where a justice reserves his decision, and adjourns court without day, a judgment afterwards rendered without notice to the parties is void.—Leslie v. Innes (Com. Pl.) 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 178, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 689.

[j] (Pa. 1894) The fact that a justice of the peace mailed a notice to a party fails to show notice, in the absence of evidence that such party received it.—Leslie v. Innes (Com. Pl.) 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 178, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 689.

§ 392. Rendition of judgment at unauthorized time or place.

Waiver of delay in rendering judgment, see post, § 448 [c].

[a] Compliance with the statute directing that a justice of the peace render judgment within four days after the cause has been submitted to him may be waived by the parties, as this limitation of time is intended for their convenience and protection.
—(N. Y. 1857) Barnes v. Badger, 41 Barb. 98;

[b] (Cal. 1891) Code Civ. Proc. § 892, relative to justices' courts, provides that "when the trial is by the court judgment must be rendered at the close of the trial," but attaches no penalty or consequence to a violation thereof. Held, that such provision is merely directory, and that a judgment rendered by a justice six weeks after trial is valid.—Heinlen v. Phillips, 88 Cal. 557, 26 Pac. 366.

[c] (Ga. 1881) A judgment on a note, rendered by a justice at his house, instead of at the regular court room, is void.—Reed v. Thomas, 66 Ga. 595.

[d] (Ga. 1884) Under Code, § 4130, requiring "all continuances in justice courts to be from term to term," a judgment rendered at a continuance out of term is void.—White v. Mandeville, 72 Ga. 705.

[b] (Ala. 1852) A judgment, rendered by a justice of the peace, "for $37.30, on note due 25th December, 1840, bearing interest from that date, and cost of suit," though informal, is not void for uncertainty. It is, in legal effect, a judgment for $37.30.—Lightsey v. Harris, 20 Ala. 409.

[c] (Ill. 1856) In actions of debt before justices, the debt and damages need not be distinguished in the judgment.—Horton v. Critchfield, 18 Ill. (8 Peck) 133, 65 Am. Dec. 701.

[d] (Ill. 1859) The fact that a justice of the peace renders a judgment in debt, in an action of trespass, is no ground for a reversal.—Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 105.

[e] (Ill. 1859) A judgment in debt by a justice of the peace, for a gross amount of debt and damages, will not for that reason be reversed.—Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 337.

[f] (Ill. 1890) An entry of judgment in a court not of record of New York, in the following form, "Judgment for the plaintiff for $81.99 damages, besides $2.50 cost, and $7.00 extra costs," is sufficiently certain.—Kopperl v. Nagy, 37 Ill. App. 23.

L., recover of and from the defendant, E. L., the sum as claimed in the above case, together with all costs of suit, for which let execution issue," etc.,—will be sustained, notwithstanding its informality.—Ladnier v. [l] (N. J.) "I give judgment with the jury" is not a sufficient rendition of judgment by a justice of the peace.—(1811) Green v. Lawrence, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 848; (1812) Van Houten v. Beam, Id. 944.

[m] (N. J. 1825) A judgment of a justice is erroneous, where rendered "with legal costs," without specifying the amount of the costs in words at length, but only in figures.—Smith v. Miller, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 175, 14 Am. Dec. 418.

[n] (N. C. 1871) When a suit before a justice is for a money demand, it is erroneous for him, after giving judgment for the amount claimed, to specify in what kind of money it shall be paid. Boyer, 7 Ill. (2 Gilman) 417.

[h] (Minn. 1892) In a trial by jury before a justice of the peace, a verdict was duly rendered on Saturday night, and at the instance and by the consent of defendant, the defeated party, judgment was not formally entered for the amount of the verdict and costs until Tuesday following. Held, that it was competent for defendant to waive strict conformity with the statute as to the time of entering the judgment.—Rucker v. [o] (N. Y. 1871) The act of rendering judgment by a justice is judicial, that of entering it in his docket is ministerial; hence, while the former duty is imperatively to be performed within four days, the statute directing the entry in the docket also to be made in four days is directory only, and that duty may be validly performed afterwards.—Fish v. Emerson, 44 N. Y. 376.

[q] (N. Y. 1888) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3015, providing that when plaintiff is nonsuited, or discontinues or withdraws his action, the justice must forthwith enter judgment, he has no power to enter judgment 10 days after the withdrawal of an action.—Kuklo v. Kleis, 50 Hun, 600, 2 N. Y. Supp. 358, 15 Civ. Proc. R. 431.

[s] (S. C. 1891) A trial justice need not enter judgment immediately after the rendition of a verdict.—Thomson v. Dillinger, 35 S. C. 608, 14 S. E. 776.

[t] (Tenn. 1871) A justice of the peace, having entered judgment as to one defendant and made no entry as to another, cannot, on his memory alone, be allowed afterwards to enter a judgment by way of amendment. The presumption is that the case was dismissed as to the one against whom no entry was made.—Trevathan v. Caldwell, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 535.

[u] (Tex. 1895) Where the justice court fails to enter such a judgment as will dispose of the case as to all the parties, it may at a subsequent term enter a judgment so disposing of the case.—Young v. Pfeiffer (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 94.

Mandamus to compel true record, see "Mandamus," II. (A).

[a] (Mass. 1808) Where it appeared that the record of a justice's judgment was extremely defective, but the writ on file with the justice contained a declaration sufficiently formal, the court said that if the judgment had referred to the writ for the declaration, according to a very irregular practice which formerly prevailed in the common pleas, the writ would have been considered as a part of the judgment, so far as it contained the declaration, and thus the judgment would have been saved.—Clap v. Clap, 4 Mass. 520.

[b] (Mass. 1849) A justice of the peace made an entry of a civil action upon his memorandum book, and of the proceedings therein, as follows: "1842, Dec. 3. Daniel Darling v. Horace Park. Entered and defaulted, and judgment for plaintiff for damages, 9.69, cost 3.11—12.80,"—and issued execution accordingly; but neither the writ nor the evidence of the plaintiff's demand was then filed in the case, or in the possession of the justice. Held that, if these papers were before the justice when the execution was issued, the proceedings were not irregular, and that, on being subsequently produced before him and verified, he would thereupon be authorized to make a record of the judgment at large.—Park v. Darling, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 197.

[c] (Mich. 1844) Under the proper entitling of a cause with the names of the parties, a justice of the peace entered on his docket an award of judgment in the following form: "It is therefore considered that the said P. do recover of the said D. the sum," etc. Held, that the docket entry did not show, with sufficient certainty, in whose favor, and against whom, the judgment was rendered.—Rood v. School Dist. No. 7 of Town of Bloomfield, 1 Doug. 502.

[d] (Mich. 1844) The docket entry of a justice's judgment must be as certain, in matters of substance, as the judgment of a court of record.—Rood v. School Dist. No. 7 of Town of Bloomfield, 1 Doug. 502.

[e] (Mich. 1859) Where an issue in justice's court was tried by jury, and the justice entered the proceedings thereon in his docket as follows: "After hearing all the evidence, the jurors returned a verdict for plaintiff for the sum of $48.05, and costs of suit; damages, $48.05; costs, $7.63,"—it was held that this entry was valid as a judgment, and sufficient to authorize the issue of an execution thereon.—Overall v. Pero, 7 Mich. 315.

[f] (Mich. 1860) The statute requiring a justice to keep a docket, and to enter therein the judgments rendered by him, is directory only.—Hickey v. Hinsdale, 8 Mich. 267, 77 Am. Dec. 450.

[g] (Miss. 1852) Judgments of justices of the peace must be enrolled and recorded, justices' courts being courts of record.—Brian v. Davidson, 25 Miss. (3 Cushm.) 213.

[h] (N. C. 1879) A justice's judgment is admissible in evidence, though not written out in his own hand.—Reeves v. Davis, 80 N. C. 209.

[i] (Tenn. 1859) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace need not, necessarily, be written on the warrant. The judgment is valid if written upon the docket of the justice rendering the judgment.—Hollins v. Johnson, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 346.

[j] (Tenn. 1865) A justice's docket contained these entries, viz.:

NO.	DATE.	PARTIES' NAMES.	AM'T OF JUDGM'T.
45	23	June 13, 1842. J. C. Williams v. William Jones.	For Plaintiff, $8.87½.
46	23	Same v. Elias Reese, Cordy Reese.	For Plaintiff, $100.46¼.

Held, that the second entry of judgment was not sufficient to sustain an execution against Elias and Cordy Reese.—McClellan v. Cornwell, 42 Tenn. (2 Cold.) 298.

[k] (Tenn. 1874) An entry on a justice's docket, "Elliott & Co. v. W. B. Jordan, judgt., 846.82," constitutes a valid judgment.—Elliott v. Jordan, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 376.

[l] (Tenn. 1878) In the absence of other equities, a court of chancery has no jurisdiction to supply the record of a justice's judgment destroyed by fire.—Scott v. Watson, 3 Tenn. Ch. 652.

[m] (Tex. 1856) The following was the record of a judgment on the docket of a justice of the peace:

"(Title of the suit.) Debt on note, $68,67

Summons issued 11th day of November, A. D. 1846, returnable the 21st day of November, 1846. November 21st, 1846. The defendant came forward and acknowledged payment. Appeal taken by defendant to district court." Held a sufficient entry to show a valid judgment.—Wahrenberger v. Horan, 18 Tex. 57.

[n] (Tex. 1883) It is not necessary that a justice's judgment should be recorded to render it admissible when offered in evidence solely for the purpose of showing the justice's authority for issuing execution thereon.—Burrow v. Brown, 59 Tex. 457.

[o] (Vt. 1849) The statute requiring justices of the peace to make full records of their judgments must be held to be positive and peremptory, so long as the justice can comply with it, but must be deemed as only directory when compliance has become impossible, and then the minutes of the justice, in connection with the files and papers upon which they are entered, will furnish sufficient evidence of a valid judgment.—Ellsworth v. Learned, 21 Vt. 535.

[a] (Ga. 1881) The signature of a justice of the peace need not be affixed to a judgment entered by him on his docket.—Gunn v. Tackett, 67 Ga. 725.

[b] (Ind. 1864) A paper purporting to be the record of a judgment before a justice of the peace, but not signed by the justice, is inadmissible, as 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 592, § 58, requires such a judgment to be entered and signed.—Ringle v. Weston, 23 Ind. 588.

[c] (Mich. 1854) A justice's judgment not signed by him is bad.—Howard v. People, 3 Mich. 207.

[d] (Mich. 1872) Where an entry of judgment was followed immediately by stay of execution on the justice's docket, and the justice's signature was appended but once and below them both, each having the same date, though dated separately, it was inferable from the docket that the entry of the judgment and of the stay was all done at one time and as all one transaction, and the signature was a good signing of the judgment.—Hollister v. Giddings, 24 Mich. 501.

Filing transcript in court of record, see "Judgment," vol. 30, cc. 772–780, §§ 573–577.

[a] (Pa. 1885) A judgment on a sci. fa. on a transcript from a justice of the peace of another county will not be reversed on certiorari, because the record of the second justice does not show the cause of action, or that a summons was issued or return made, in the original judgment.—Grube v. Getz, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 124.

[b] (Pa. 1886) Act April 15, 1845, § 1, conferring authority on justices to issue attachment executions, does not enlarge their jurisdiction, under Act March 20, 1810, providing for the docketing of justices' judgments in other counties than that in which they were rendered.—Collins v. Brower, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 261.

[c] (Pa. 1887) A judgment on the transcript of a judgment before a justice in another county cannot be entered by another justice in a county in which the defendant is not a resident nor found therein.—Mowry v. Thomas, 1 Wilcox, 106.

[c] (Ind. 1871) A justice of the peace has no power to change, or in any manner interfere with, a judgment he has rendered, except to grant a new trial, or to enter satisfaction where the judgment is subsequently paid.—Foist v. Coppin, 35 Ind. 471.

[d] (Iowa, 1873) Correction by a justice of the peace of an erroneously assessed judgment, if made before hearing on a writ of error, will prevent a reversal.—Rahn v. Greer, 37 Iowa, 627.

[e] (Ky. 1847) Justices of the peace have jurisdiction to issue writs of error coram nobis, when that is the appropriate remedy to correct errors in their own courts, and this jurisdiction is not taken away by the statute of 1820, giving authority to certain justices in a county to grant such writs in certain cases.—Breckinridge v. Coleman, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 331.

[f] (Ky. 1847) The statute of 1802, requiring writs of error coram nobis to be tried at the first term, does not apply to trials of such writs before justices of the peace.—Breckinridge v. Coleman, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 331.

[g] (Neb. 1877) After entering judgment, a justice's judicial function ceases; and he has no authority afterwards to modify it.—Fox v. Meacham, 6 Neb. 530.

[h] (N. Y. 1863) Where a justice of the peace tried a cause and rendered a judgment for the plaintiff for $98 damages and $4.65 costs, in all $102.65, and duly entered it in his docket, and afterwards discovered that he had, by mistake, made his costs 69 cents less than he was entitled to, and then undertook to correct the error by setting that sum underneath the original footing, and adding them together, without erasing or altering any part of the original docket, but afterwards, finding that it was illegal to alter a judgment, erased the addition, and thus restored the docket to its original form, held, that these alterations did not make the judgment void, as they were made after the time limited by statute for the justice to render judgment and enter it in his docket. They were clearly void acts, as much so as if they had been done by a stranger; and, being void, they could not affect the judgment.—Dauchy v. Brown, 41 Barb. 555.

[i] (N. Y. 1873) The alteration, by a justice of the peace, of a judgment already entered on his docket, does not defeat the judgment; but it remains a judgment for the amount originally entered.—Rose v. Depue, 1 Thomp. & C. 16.

[j] (Pa. 1871) Aldermen of Philadelphia cannot alter judgments entered by them, except in the mode prescribed by acts of assembly.—Nippes v. Kirk, 8 Phila. 299.

[k] (Tenn. 1871) A justice of the peace, having entered judgment in an action against one of two defendants, cannot afterward amend it by making an entry, as to the other defendant, on his memory alone.—Trevathan v. Caldwell, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 535.

[l] (Tenn. 1872) A justice's alteration of a judgment, two weeks after stay of execution, by striking out the words "to be discharged in Tennessee and Kentucky bank notes," was not erroneous.—Womack v. Walling, 60 Tenn. (1 Baxt.) 425.

[m] (Vt. 1847) The fact that the authority of a justice is temporary, subject to be terminated by his death or removal or the end of his term of office, precludes him from exercising that supervisory power over judgments rendered by him which is possessed by courts of a more permanent character.—Mosseaux v. Brigham, 19 Vt. 457.

[e] (Ind. 1861) A justice having assumed to render judgment on February 20th, defendant is for all purposes out of court. Consequently, a motion on February 27th to set aside the judgment, and the subsequent proceedings, in the absence of notice to the opposite party, are wrongfully entertained.—Jamieson v. Caster, 16 Ind. 426.

[f] (Ind. 1871) A justice of the peace has no authority to vacate a judgment.—Foist v. Coppin, 35 Ind. 471.

[g] (Kan. 1884) A justice of the peace has no power to vacate his own judgment, and proceedings before him for such purpose are void.—Shaw v. Rowland, 32 Kan. 154, 4 Pac. 146.

[h] (Kan. 1891) Where a justice of the peace sets aside a judgment and grants a new trial the judgment ceases to exist, and cannot be resuscitated by a subsequent order of the justice, vacating his order setting it aside and granting the new trial, on the ground that defendant's motion to set the judgment aside was not in writing, as agreed upon.—Olson v. Nunnally, 47 Kan. 391, 28 Pac. 149, 27 Am. St. Rep. 296.

[i] (Md. 1855) A magistrate's court has no power to set aside a judgment rendered at a preceding term.—Frazier v. Griffie, 8 Md. 50.

[k] (Mo. 1890) A justice's judgment for plaintiff showed on its face an appearance of defendants and a trial, after which defendants appeared and filed an affidavit to set aside the judgment, and thereupon judgment was set aside, and a new trial granted. Both parties appeared on a new trial, and judgment was rendered for defendants, and on appeal to the circuit court defendants again had judgment. Held that, as the record on appeal did not show that the first judgment was by default, it must be held that the justice had no power to set it aside, and that of the subsequent proceedings the court had no jurisdiction.—Leith v. Shingleton, 42 Mo. App. 449.

[m] (Neb. 1881) Defendant need not state his defense as a condition precedent to setting aside the judgment, and it is error for the justice to overrule his motion to set the judgment aside, where he has complied with the conditions of the statute.—Strine v. Kingsbaker, 12 Neb. 52, 10 N. W. 534.

[n] (N. Y. 1863) The mayor's court in the city of Albany can set aside a judgment on the merits entered on the report of a referee.—People v. Austin, 43 Barb. 313.

[o] (N. Y. 1883) The absence of authority in the Code of Civil Procedure for one justice to reconsider or vacate an order made by another indicates it to have been the intention of the legislators that it should not be exercised.—In re National Trust Co., 4 Civ. Proc. R. 203.

[p] (N. Y. 1883) Where the justice, by whom orders passing the account of a receiver of a corporation and allowing him commission for his services were made, had jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings before him, and make the allowance for commission, but the sums allowed were erroneous, a motion before another justice to vacate and set aside and resettle the orders is properly denied, since such application should be made to the justice who made the orders, or an appeal taken for the purpose of reviewing the propriety of the orders made.—In re National Trust Co., 4 Civ. Proc. R. 203.

[q] (N. C. 1844) Where a magistrate gives a judgment against defendant for a sum beyond his jurisdiction, the defendant may resort to a writ of false judgment to have it set aside.—Morgan v. Allen, 27 N. C. 156.

[r] (N. C. 1885) As a justice of the peace cannot grant a new trial, if a judgment is rendered by him notwithstanding his assurance that it should not be, the remedy is not by motion to set aside the judgment, but by appeal or recordari.—Navassa Guano Co. v. Bridgers, 98 N. C. 439.

[s] (N. C. 1893) A final judgment entered in justice's court can be set aside, on the ground of fraud and collusion between the justice and others, only in an independent action.—King v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 112 N. C. 318, 16 S. E. 929.

[u] (Ohio, 1896) The statutory provisions requiring that a motion before a justice, to open a judgment, be in writing, stating the grounds, and that it be verified, may be waived by the adverse party; and an oral motion consented to is good.—Forest City Stone Co. v. French, 4 Ohio Dec. 141, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 69.

[v] (Pa. 1828) Justices of the peace have power to open a judgment if it is apparent that the process has been wrongfully and fraudulently abused.—Galley v. Davenport, 1 Ashm. 149.

[w] (Pa.) Under the provisions of Act 1810, §§ 4, 7, authorizing a justice to set aside a judgment within 20 or 30 days after its rendition, for certain causes, the justice has no authority to grant a hearing after the expiration of 6 months from the rendition of the judgment.—(1854) Stockdale v. [z] (S. C. 1883) The provision of Code, § 195, authorizing the court in certain specified cases, at any time within a year, to relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, does not embrace or apply to trial justices' courts.—Doty v. (Wis. 1866) Crandall v. Bacon, 20 Wis. 639, 91 Am. Dec. 451.

[b] (Ala. 1895) Where a landlord, in an action before a justice of the peace against his tenant for unlawful detainer, recovers judgment, and is awarded damages for the detention, notwithstanding the tenant had a good legal defense, which he was only prevented from pleading because it involved the merits of the landlord's title, equity will not enjoin the enforcement of such judgment, though the judgment creditor is insolvent.—Davis v. Pou, 108 Ala. 443, 19 South. 362.

[c] (Ariz. 1894) Injunction lies to an execution on the judgment of a justice to whom the case has been transferred, rendered in the absence of the certified transcript of the transferring justice's docket required by Rev. St. par. 1409.—Dial v. Olsen, 36 Pac. 175.

[d] (Ark. 1841) A supersedeas will issue from the supreme court to restrain an execution issued by a justice on a judgment obtained without process or notice.—Ex parte Woods, 3 Ark. (3 Pike) 532.

[f] (Ga. 1843) A judgment in a justice's court cannot be set aside by bill in equity, on the application of other creditors, on the ground of want of jurisdiction.—Brisco v. Brewer, Ga. Dec. 105, pt. 2.

[g] (Ill. 1867) Under the statute providing that no writ of injunction can be granted to stay proceedings on a judgment obtained before a justice of the peace for a sum not exceeding $20, a court of equity will not enjoin the collection of a balance alleged to be due on such judgment, where the balance attempted to be collected is less than $20, even though the original judgment was rendered for $62.—Breckenridge v. McCormick, 43 Ill. 491.

[h] (Ill. 1887) Where defendant tenders money into a justice's court, and the court, after giving judgment for plaintiff, wrongfully applies such money in payment of costs and part payment of plaintiff's judgment, and the plaintiff so receives it, defendant is not entitled to an injunction against proceedings by the plaintiff to enforce his judgment.—Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Kamman, 119 Ill. 362, 10 N. E. 217.

[i] (Ind. 1871) An injunction will lie to stay proceedings on a judgment of a justice of the peace against a defendant sued and served with summons out of his county and without an appearance.—Grass v. Hess, 37 Ind. 193.

[j] (Ind. 1884) A justice of the peace has no equity jurisdiction to relieve from a judgment valid on its face, though void in fact.—Brown v. Goble, 97 Ind. 86.

[k] (Ind. 1893) In an action to enjoin a judgment in justice's court in an action of replevin, of which the justice had jurisdiction, it is immaterial whether a verdict for damages in favor of defendant therein was erroneous, or even void, as errors in the proceedings leading up to the judgment do not affect the question of jurisdiction.—Rhodes-Burford Furniture Co. v. Mattox, 135 Ind. 372, 35 N. E. 11.

[m] (Iowa, 1892) Equity will cancel and enjoin the enforcement of a judgment by default rendered by a justice after he had lost jurisdiction by an unlawful adjournment.—Iowa Union Tel. Co. v. Boylan, 86 Iowa, 90, 52 N. W. 1122.

[n] (Kan. 1888) When a defendant fails to appear in a justice's court, and judgment is rendered against him for an amount larger than that indorsed on the copy of the summons, such judgment may be enjoined.—Basset v. Mitchell (Sup.) 19 Pac. 671.

[p] (Md. 1883) Over 1,000 judgments were rendered by two magistrates in favor of a single plaintiff against a number of different defendants; all except 2 being for the exact sum of $100 or $98. It appeared that in most, if not all, the cases, there was no debt due. In some of them the evidence showed that there was no service of summons on defendant, in spite of the officer's return of service. In others, judgment was rendered by the magistrate, after siguing a paper saying that the suits were dismissed. In others, no trial, even ex parte, was had. In one case a judgment against "S. F. Thomas" was changed by the plaintiff so as to read "Sam. F. Thomas." The defendants had no notice of the existence of the judgments until after the time for appeal had passed. Held, that the judgments would be canceled and their enforcement enjoined by a court of equity.—Wagner v. Shank, 59 Md. 313.

[q] (Mich. 1879) Where a justice had jurisdiction in a case, irregularities and errors in the course of his proceedings cannot be reviewed by a bill in chancery to set aside the judgment entered upon a transcript from such justice.—Wilson v. Coolidge, 42 Mich. 112, 3 N. W. 285.

[r] (Minn. 1892) Where the rights of third parties have not intervened, an action will lie to set aside the judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered by default, on a constable's certificate of service of the summons, if in fact such summons was not served.—Knutson v. Davies, 51 Minn. 363, 53 N. W. 646.

[s] (Mo. 1891) Where a judgment is void because the summons was issued by a justice of the peace beyond the county wherein he was elected, injunction will lie to restrain an execution on the judgment.—United States Mut. Acc. Ins. Co. v. Reisinger, 43 Mo. App. 571.

[t] (Neb. 1875) H. commenced an action in the district court to enjoin the collection of a judgment obtained against him before a justice of the peace, and praying for a new trial of the cause, alleging that he was called away on account of the dangerous illness of his son, during which time service of summons was made by leaving a copy at his residence; that he returned home on the day of the trial, but was too sick to attend on that day and for 20 days after, when it was too late for the court in which judgment was rendered to grant any relief; and that he had a good defense to the action, which was fully set forth. Held, on demurrer, that a new trial should be granted.—Horn v. Queen, 4 Neb. 108.

[u] (Neb. 1891) An injunction will not lie to restrain a justice's judgment, rendered after he had lost jurisdiction by improperly continuing the suit for an indefinite period.—Lininger v. Glenn, 33 Neb. 187, 49 N. W. 1128.

[uu] (Tenn. 1848) Where defendant agreed that the justice should render a conditional judgment against him, and the justice entered an absolute judgment by confession, chancery had jurisdiction to relieve against the judgment.—Gwinn v. Newton, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 710.

[v] (Tenn. 1872) A court of chancery has no jurisdiction to correct a mistake in the amount of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace.—Wagstaff v. Braden, 60 Tenn. (1 Baxt.) 304.

[vv] (Tenn. 1873) Code, § 4098, providing that no justice related to the parties within a certain degree shall sit in any cause, is mandatory; and chancery will enjoin a judgment rendered by a justice incompetent to sit, by reason of consanguinity, etc., unless the parties have waived the same in writing.—Smith v. Pearce, 65 Tenn. (6 Baxt.) 72.

[w] (Tex. 1857) Where a justice of the peace grants a new trial without notice to the adverse party, who does not appear at the second trial, the latter may enjoin the collection of the judgment thus rendered.—Aycock v. Williams, 18 Tex. 392.

[ww] (Tex. 1858) That a debt was divided and suits brought on each portion in a justice's court, which would have no jurisdiction over one suit for the whole amount, is no reason for enjoining the judgment in one suit, unless it also appears that by means of the division the defendant was deprived of some right or remedy and that he had not consented to the division.—Pryor v. Emerson, 22 Tex. 162.

[x] (Tex. 1881) An execution for an excess above $200 of a judgment in a justice's court in a suit of forcible entry and detainer will be perpetually enjoined, where $200 has been paid, as the justice has no jurisdiction to render judgment for more than $200.—Boaz v. Graham, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 159.

[xx] (Tex. 1882) Complainant, seeking an injunction, alleged that, in a suit against him for $10 in a justice's court, the jury ignored a $40 note which he pleaded as a set-off, and, judgment being rendered against him, his appeal was dismissed, because the judgment, from its amount, was not appealable. Held, that no ground for an injunction appeared.—Halcomb v. Kelly, 57 Tex. 618.

[y] (Tex. 1884) The fact that the court of appeals has no jurisdiction to enter an appeal from a justice's judgment, where the amount involved is less than $100, does not enable such court to reopen the matters thereby adjudicated, in an action to enjoin the collection of the judgment.—Bullard v. White, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 286.

[yy] (Tex. 1891) When a void judgment in justice's court is for less than $20, no appeal or certiorari can be prosecuted to set it aside, and injunction is the only remedy, and this the district court has jurisdiction to grant, though the supervision of justices' courts by appeal or certiorari must be in the county court.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Rawlins, 80 Tex. 579, 16 S. W. 430.

[zz] (W. Va. 1887) Under Const. art. 3, § 13, providing that no fact tried by a jury shall be retried except as at common law; and Code, c. 50, § 91, declaring that no more than one new trial shall be granted by a justice in any case,—equity cannot enjoin and reverse a judgment rendered on a verdict in the second trial of a cause in a justice's court, the issue being one of law and fact, namely, whether a judgment pleaded by defendant as a set-off was assigned to him only colorably, to defeat plaintiff's exemptions.—Ensign Mfg. Co. v. McGinnis, 30 W. Va. 582, 4 S. E. 782.

[a] (Ala. 1846) If a confession of judgment before a justice of the peace was by mistake, or procured by fraud, it seems a court of chancery would afford relief.—Wilson v. Collins, 9 Ala. 127.

[b] (Cal. 1859) If the plaintiff in some way gets hold of the justice's docket after entry of judgment, and alters the record so as to include a defendant not originally named in it, and not served, equity will vacate the judgment.—Chester v. Miller, 13 Cal. 558.

[c] (Ga. 1890) A petition to vacate a judgment rendered in a justice's court alleged that the defendant had been prevented from defending by the fraud of the plaintiff and his counsel in stating to him that the case would be dismissed. Defendant testified that the plaintiff's counsel told him that the case would not be tried at the April term. The judgment was dated April 4th, but was in fact rendered at the May term, at which the defendant did not appear to defend. The judgment was entered on the summons issued by the justice, but not on his docket. Held, that the defendant had not proved the case stated in his petition, and that the judgment could not be enjoined for failure of the justice to enter it on his docket.—Lee v. Arnsdorff, 86 Ga. 264, 12 S. E. 352.

return a verdict, set aside such judgment as fraudulently entered.—Dady v. Brown, 76 Iowa, 528, 41 N. W. 209.

[f] (Kan. 1896) Where defendant in justice court was induced to confess judgment by the fraudulent representations of plaintiff and the justice that to do so was the quickest mode of getting the case into the district court, he is entitled to an injunction staying the judgment.—Kimble v. Short, 2 Kan. App. 130, 43 Pac. 317.

[g] (Mich. 1843) An execution on a judgment of a justice will be restrained, where defendant lost his defense, not by any neglect, but through the fraudulent conduct of plaintiff, by which he was lulled into security and did not appear at the trial.—Burpee v. Smith, 1 Walk. Ch. 327.

[h] (Mo. 1892) Where parties to an action set for trial before a justice of the peace have orally agreed that plaintiff shall have a continuance entered, but plaintiff, instead, procures judgment in his own favor, defendant is not in laches for failure to attend the trial, or look after the cause in time to appeal, and may have relief in equity for plaintiff's fraud.—Sanderson v. Voelcker, 51 Mo. App. 328.

[i] (N. J. 1866) Suit was brought against the complainant before a justice of the peace, to which the complainant, with his counsel, appeared, and the result was a nonsuit. On the following day another summons was served, which the complainant took to the office of his counsel, and left with the clerk, who promised him that the business should be promptly attended to. Owing to the illness of the counsel, no appearance was made, and judgment was rendered against the complainant on dedefault. Held that, as complainant's rights were lost by unavoidable accident, equity will interfere to restore those rights.—Brown v. Elliott, 17 N. J. Eq. (2 C. E. Green) 353.

[j] (N. Y. 1878) The collection of a justice's judgment may be restrained because of a fraudulent representation to the defendant that the purpose of the action was merely to collect of him an unpaid note, when in fact a paid note was intentionally included.—Hinckley v. Miles, 15 Hun, 170.

[k] (Or. 1882) At the hour when defendant's case was called for trial before a justice, defendant was engaged with plaintiff and one of his attorneys in trying to come to a settlement. Plaintiff's other attorney, knowing this, procured a default and judgment. Held, that the judgment was obtained by fraud, and should be set aside and its enforcement enjoined.—Marsh v. Perrin, 10 Or. 364.

[l] (Tex. 1894) When defendant agreed with plaintiff's attorney that defendant's agent should be notified by said attorney or the justice when the case would be called for trial, that he might present the affirmative defenses alleged, and a trial was had without notice to, or knowledge of, defendant or his agent, defendant has a good excuse for failing to support his answer, and can enjoin the judgment rendered ignoring it.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Stephenson (Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 236.

[m] (Vt. 1853) On petition to set aside a judgment for fraud, accident, or mistake, where it appeared that the attorney forgot the day of the court, and consequently the defendant was defaulted, his negligence must be regarded as the negligence of the party, and the statute authorizing the county court to grant a new trial, where a justice of the peace has rendered judgment against a party, and he has been deprived of his day in court by fraud, accident, or mistake, does not apply.—Babcock v. Brown, 25 Vt. 550, 60 Am. Dec. 290.

[n] (Vt. 1853) On petition to set aside a judgment before a justice, it appeared that there was an omission in the copy of the writ left with the petitioner as to the place of holding the court. The service of the writ by the return of the officer was complete, so that the writ could not have been abated. It was not claimed that this omission was the reason why the petitioner did not appear before the justice. Held, that there was no omission, accident or mistake depriving the party of his day in court, so as to authorize the setting aside of the judgment.—Babcock v. Brown, 25 Vt. 550, 60 Am. Dec. 290.

[o] (Vt. 1859) On petition to set aside the judgment of a justice of the peace because the petitioner was deprived of his day in court by fraud, accident, or mistake, and was therefore defaulted, it appeared that the petitioner's attorney, being suddenly called away on the day of the trial, requested another person to attend to the suit for him, who promised, but neglected, to do so. Held, that this did not bring the case within the statute, so as to authorize the county court to set aside the judgment.—Davison v. Heffron, 31 Vt. 687.

[a] (Ala. 1833) Since the statute authorizes the trial of controversies for sums under $50 originating before a justice of the peace to be had on the justice and equity of the case, equity will not interfere with a judgment in such a case where the matter in dispute does not exceed $20.—Williams v. Berry, 3 Stew. & P. 284.

[b] (Iowa, 1896) A party who sues in equity to set aside a judgment by default rendered by a justice of the peace without jurisdiction need not show that he is not indebted to the party who obtained such judgment.—Henkle v. Holmes, 97 Iowa, 695, 66 N. W. 910.

[c] (Kan. 1881) In an action to enjoin the collection of a justice's judgment, it appeared from the record of the justice that there was service on the defendant, appearance, and a continuance by consent until he should return from certain business, when the case should be called at once, and that there was a trial and judgment against such defendant at a day appointed by the justice; but such record failed to show that defendant had returned, that he had notice of the day appointed for trial, or that he was present at such trial. There was evidence that such defendant had been back several times between the day of adjournment and the day of trial; that his attorney was duly notified by the justice of the time fixed for trial; that such attorney told the justice that his client had no defense, and to go ahead and render judgment; and that in fact there was no defense, and the debt was a just one, and ought to be paid. Held, that an injunction was properly refused.—Devinney v. Mann, 24 Kan. 682.

[d] (Kan. 1894) The attorneys for the parties stipulated to continue the case, and mailed same to the justice. The stipulation not having arrived when the case was called, plaintiff took judgment by default. Held that, in the absence of allegations showing a valid defense to the action, execution of the judgment should not be restrained.—Poor v. Tuston, 53 Kan. 86, 35 Pac. 792.

[e] (N. H. 1849) The court will not proceed summarily on petition to vacate a judgment irregularly entered by a justice of the peace, if there be no evidence that the petitioner might have prevailed on the merits and that substantial injustice has been done by the irregularity complained of; nor will a new trial be granted under a general prayer for relief in the petition under the same circumstances.—Ela v. Goss, 20 N. H. 52.

[f] (Ohio, 1889) A judgment of a justice of the peace, the record of which shows service on the defendant, will not be enjoined because there was no service, where the judgment plaintiff was not guilty of fraud and the debt was in fact due, so that another trial would not result differently.—Dixon v. Bird Varnish Co., 10 Ohio Dec. 481, 21 Wkly. Law Bul. 258.

[g] (Tex. 1881) In an action to enjoin or set aside a justice's judgment, plaintiff must show that he had a good legal or equitable defense to the original demand or cause of action.—Masterson v. Ashcom, 54 Tex. 324.

§ 405. —— Existence of other adequate remedy.

[a] The court will not relieve against the decision of a justice, on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings, where there is no obstacle to prevent a decision of the question at law.

—(Ga. 1842) Stites v. Knapp, Ga. Dec. 36, pt. 2;

(N. Y. 1818) Shottenkirk v. Wheeler, 3 Johns. Ch. 275; (1834) Gorman v. Low, 2 Edw. Ch. 324;

(N. C. 1831) Bissell v. Bozman, 17 N. C. 154;

[b] (Cal. 1861) A defendant who has never been served with a summons in a case before a justice, in which execution has issued against him, has an effectual remedy by motion to the justice to set the same aside. Upon denial of this motion, he may appeal to the county court, if the time for appeal has not elapsed; and, if it has elapsed, he may obtain a review by certiorari, and he is not entitled to an injunction.—Comstock v. Clemens, 19 Cal. 77.

[c] (Cal. 1887) An injunction will not issue to restrain a levy of execution on a justice's judgment docketed in the superior court, when the relief sought is based on the ground that the judgment is void because the summons was fatally defective. Under the law of that state the judgment debtor has ample remedy at law, by motion in the justice's court, to arrest the execution.—Luco v. Brown, 73 Cal. 3, 14 Pac. 366, 2 Am. St. Rep. 814; Same v. Bushyhead, 14 Pac. 368.

[d] (Cal. 1888) In an action to annul a judgment in justice's court by default, regular on its face, and for an injunction restraining its collection, where the complaint showed that a motion, made under Code Civ. Proc. § 859, giving to justices power to relieve from judgments by default, on good cause shown, was denied, it appearing that plaintiff had pursued an adequate remedy at law, a demurrer to the complaint is properly sustained, and, on refusal to amend, the injunction should be dismissed.—Reagan v. Fitzgerald, 75 Cal. 230, 17 Pac. 198.

[e] (Conn. 1876) M. brought an action against B. before a justice of the peace; the only service upon B. being by leaving a copy at his place of residence. B. was at that time confined in an insane asylum in another part of the state, and neither he nor any one in his behalf had any notice of the suit, and M. got judgment by default. B. obtained a decree for a perpetual injunction against collection thereof. Held, that the decree was not erroneous, on the ground that there was adequate remedy at law by a writ of error, as the writ might not be so served as to operate as a supersedeas.—Blakeslee v. Murphy, 44 Conn. 488.

[f] (Ill. 1892) Equity will not restrain defendants from collecting a judgment obtained by them in a justice's court, where complainant has an adequate remedy at law by appeal.—Geraty v. Druiding, 44 Ill. App. 440.

[g] (Ind. 1843) Where a party is aggrieved by a decision of the circuit court dismissing an appeal from a justice's judgment, the amount in controversy not being less than $20, exclusive of interest and costs, his only remedy is by appeal or writ of error to the supreme court, and not by bill to enjoin the judgment.—Pichon v. McHenry, 6 Blackf. 517.

[h] (Ind. 1861) The circuit court cannot entertain an action to set aside a judgment of a justice of the peace for want of jurisdiction; but an application must be made to the justice to vacate the judgment, and an appeal taken from his refusal.—Jamieson v. Caster, 16 Ind. 426.

[i] (Ind. 1870) Proceedings on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace will not be enjoined in favor of one who has had an opportunity to appeal therefrom, or where by an application to the circuit court or court of common pleas an appeal may be authorized after the lapse of time limited therefor under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 597, § 68.—Baragree v. Cronkhite, 33 Ind. 192.

[j] (Ind. 1891) Injunction will not lie to restrain the collection of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace on the ground of irregularities occurring at the trial, since an adequate legal remedy may be had by appeal.—Parsons v. Pierson, 128 Ind. 479, 28 N. E. 97.

[k] (Iowa, 1885) In an action before a justice of the peace, before the time for entering an appearance had elapsed, defendant came in, found no one present, and after expiration of the time went away, and paid no further attention to the case. Later, on the same day, the justice entered judgment by default. Held, that defendant's remedy was by appeal or writ of error, and that he could not obtain an injunction to restrain the enforcement of the judgment, which was, at most, erroneous, but not void.—Central Iowa Ry. Co. v. Piersol, 65 Iowa, 498, 22 N. W. 648.

[l] (Md. 1852) Two judgments were rendered on confession before a justice of the peace, no warrants having been issued or served on the defendants. On a bill for injunction to restrain executions, it was held that relief for such an objection to the judgments should be sought at law by appeal to the county court, and that equity could furnish no relief.—Brumbaugh v. Schnebly, 2 Md. 320.

[m] (Mo. 1894) An execution issued on a void judgment of a justice of the peace will not be enjoined, as plaintiff's remedy at law is ample and adequate.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Lowder, 59 Mo. App. 3.

[n] (Neb. 1886) Where a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, a judgment rendered by him after the expiration of the time fixed by statute must be corrected by a direct proceeding for that purpose, and will not be enjoined upon that ground alone.—Gould v. Loughran, 19 Neb. 392, 27 N. W. 397.

[o] (Neb. 1888) On commencement of an action before a justice he designated a time for trial, and on issuing the summons he designated an earlier time, of which the plaintiff had no notice, until after a judgment had been rendered against her. Held, that such judgment must be corrected by a direct proceeding for that purpose, and will not be enjoined upon that ground alone.—Proctor v. Pettit, 25 Neb. 96, 41 N. W. 131.

[p] (Nev. 1873) The court will not enjoin the execution of an erroneous judgment of a justice, since defendant's remedy is by appeal.—Connery v. Swift, 9 Nev. 39.

[q] (Nev. 1873) The court will not enjoin the execution of a void justice's judgment, if the defendant's remedy by motion to set aside the execution has not been lost.—Connery v. Swift, 9 Nev. 39.

[r] (N. C. 1893) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace without due notice to defendant of the time and place of hearing cannot be set aside by suit in the superior court. The remedies are a motion before the justice, or a writ of recordari in the superior court.—Gallop v. Allen, 113 N. C. 24, 18 S. E. 55.

[s] (Tenn. 1842) A bill alleged that complainant applied to an agent of defendant, and made to him several notes within the jurisdiction of a justice, amounting to several hundred dollars, and the agent indorsed them, and defendant discounted them at 15 per cent. Judgment was got, and to satisfy them new notes were given, which were again discounted at 15 per cent.; and new judgments were taken and new notes were given, in a constantly recurring series, until within two years the aggregate of the notes amounted to $2,500 and the judgments to $1,300. Held that, as the judgments were obtained before a justice of the peace, whose jurisdiction was limited to $200, and as to do justice the court would have had to consider the whole transaction and the entire amount involved, plaintiff had no adequate remedy at law, and the enforcement of the judgments would be enjoined.—Frierson v. Moody, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 561.

[t] (Tex.) A judgment of a justice of the peace will not be enjoined for error of the court, where the judgment defendant has any other adequate remedy at law.—(1854) Fitzhugh v. Orton, 12 Tex. 4; (1882) Halcomb v. Kelly, 57 Tex. 618.

[u] (Tex. 1856) On a petition for an injunction, it appeared that the petitioner, against whom a judgment had been rendered in justice court, had at the time a claim against the plaintiff in such action which exceeded $100, and which he could not, therefore, plead in set-off in the justice court. The petition prayed that injunction be issued restraining execution upon such judgment until he could bring suit upon his claim and get judgment to set off against the judgment rendered against him. Held, that the petitioner's proper remedy was to have brought suit on his claim and pray an injunction thereon, thus avoiding a multiplicity of suits.—Brady v. Hancock, 17 Tex. 361.

[x] (Tex. 1881) Where a justice's judgment is void, and the time has elapsed for appeal therefrom, or for certiorari, the proper remedy of the party affected by the judgment is to move in the justice court that rendered it to set aside any execution that may have been issued on it, and from the judgment of the justice upon that motion an appeal will lie. Injunction is not the proper remedy.—Lackie v. Bramlett, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1130.

[y] (Tex. 1881) Injunction will not lie to enjoin a judgment recovered in a justice court, where the defendants had a complete legal remedy by appeal or certiorari, and the judgment was not void.—Long v. Anderson, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1161.

[z] (Vt. 1874) Where a party is unjustly deprived of his day in court before a justice of the peace, by reason of fraud, accident, or mistake, the county court has power, under Gen. St. c. 38, to afford him an adequate remedy, and hence he cannot apply for relief to a court of chancery.—Sleeper v. Croker, 48 Vt. 9.

[zz] (W. Va. 1888) A judgment by a justice, without service of process on or notice to the defendant, is void. But as it may be set aside by the circuit court on certiorari, no relief can be had against it in a court of equity.—Kanawha & O. Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364, 6 S. E. 924.

[a] (Ill. 1825) The remedy of a party aggrieved by the judgment of a justice of the peace is by appeal, and, if he does not appeal in time, equity will not relieve him by enjoining the judgment.—Reynolds v. Mitchell, 1 Ill. (Breese) 177.

[b] (Ill. 1889) A defendant who is misinformed by the justice of the peace before whom the suit is pending that the suit has been dismissed, when in fact a judgment was rendered against him, and then relies on the assurance of the justice that he will set the judgment aside, cannot enjoin the levy of an execution issued on that judgment by the succeeding justice, into whose possession the docket has come.—Carr v. Trainor, 36 Ill. App. 587.

[c] (Ind. 1893) In an action to restrain the levy of an execution upon a justice's judgment, a complaint which alleges that an appeal bond was tendered to the justice, which he refused to approve, and which does not allege that there is any valid defense to the cause of action sued on, is insufficient, since the justice's failure to approve the bond did not prevent the appellant from perfecting his appeal, either by having the justice compelled by mandate to approve the bond, or by obtaining an appeal on application to the circuit court, as allowed by Rev. St. 1881, § 1503.—Boyd v. Weaver, 134 Ind. 266, 33 N. E. 1027.

[d] (Iowa, 1891) Where defendant does not know of the entry of a void judgment by a justice until too late to have it reviewed by appeal or certiorari, he may have the judgment set aside by suit in equity.—Tomlinson v. Litze, 82 Iowa, 32, 47 N. W. 1015, 31 Am. St. Rep. 458.

[e] (Mo. 1895) A judgment will not be enjoined because the justice who rendered it said that he would not render judgment until the 4th of the month, but rendered it on the 2d, where the judgment defendant did not go to the justice until the 14th of the month to see what judgment, if any, had been rendered.—Herweck v. Koken Barber Supply Co., 61 Mo. App. 454, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 606.

[f] (Or. 1891) In a suit to enjoin a judgment the bill alleged that, by reason of the resignation of the justice by whom it was rendered, plaintiff was prevented from perfecting his appeal; but it appeared that, of the 30 days allowed within which to perfect the appeal, 18 were allowed to elapse before any steps were taken to do so. Held, that this alone was not sufficient to confer jurisdiction on a court of equity to interfere with the judgment.—Galbraith v. Barnard, 21 Or. 67, 26 Pac. 1110.

[g] (Tenn. 1871) A bill by defendants at law, alleging a suit before a justice of the peace and judgment for defendants, and that plaintiffs in such suit appealed, but failed to give bond, or have papers carried up, or enter cause on docket, or prosecute the appeal, until eight years afterwards, where judgment was taken without knowledge of complainant, is demurrable, as the defendant could have taken up the papers on failure of the appellant to do so.—Gunn v. Neal, 49 Tenn. (2 Heisk.) 318.

[h] (Tex. 1854) An injunction will not be granted to restrain the execution of a justice for error in the decision, when the petitioner has been negligent.—Fitzhugh v. Orton, 12 Tex. 4.

[i] (Tex. 1854) An injunction to restrain the execution of a judgment of a justice of the peace, and to remove the same for errors to the district court for new trial, will not be granted, where the party, through negligence, has failed to prosecute a certiorari within the time prescribed by law.—Musgrove v. Chambers, 12 Tex. 32.

[jj] (Tex. 1881) An action will not lie to set aside a judgment of a justice's court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, eight years after its rendition; the record showing defendant's appearance by attorney, and showing no plea to the jurisdiction, and the application not denying the fact of notice of the judgment, nor explaining the reason for the delay in seeking relief.—Masterson v. Ashcom, 54 Tex. 324.

[l] (Tex. 1887) Under a statute which makes the judgment of a justice of the peace final where the amount in controversy is less than $20, such a judgment cannot be reviewed by means of an application to a superior court for an injunction restraining the enforcement of the judgment, when it appears that every defense which the applicant for the injunction had the right to urge might have been proved in the suit in the justice's court.—Odom v. McMahan, 67 Tex. 292, 3 S. W. 286.

[m] (Tex. 1892) Where, in an action on a note in justice's court, defendant pleaded the statute of limitation, but did not appear at the trial, execution of the default judgment will not be restrained.—Ivey v. McConnell (Civ. App.) 21 S. W. 403.

Retroactive operation of statute extending limitation of time in which to petition for vacation of judgment, see "Limitation of Actions," I. (A).

[a] (Ill. 1873) Under section 8 of the act entitled "Ne Exeat and Injunctions" (Rev. St. 1845, c. 72), expressly providing that no writ of injunction shall be granted to stay proceedings under a judgment obtained before a justice of the peace for a sum not exceeding $20, besides the costs, where such judgment is under that sum, it is not error to dissolve the injunction granted on the filing of the bill.—York v. Kile, 67 Ill. 233.

[b] (Ind. 1859) In a suit to enjoin the collection of a justice's judgment, after demurrer for want of verification of the complaint and of bond filed overruled, trial by the court and motion for new trial overruled, it is not error to allow the affidavit to be made and the bond to be filed, where no steps have been taken by the defendant to obtain a stay of proceedings or to have the complaint set aside.—Denny v. Moore, 13 Ind. 418.

[d] (Ind. 1874) A complaint to enjoin the collection of a judgment of a justice of the peace alleged that there was no service of process and set out the entry of judgment, which entry did not show any service of process, and also alleged facts showing that there was no real party plaintiff. Held, that the complaint was good.—Nicholson v. Stephens, 47 Ind. 185.

[e] (Ind. 1881) In a suit to enjoin a justice's judgment, copies of the proceedings before the justice do not constitute such exhibits as to become a part of the complaint by being filed therewith, and do not add to or detract from the direct averments of the complaint.—Matheney v. Earl, 75 Ind. 531.

[f] (Ind. 1884) A complaint to have declared void a judgment of a justice of the peace, which merely alleges that the defendant was never a resident of the county where the judgment was rendered, is bad on demurrer, in not showing that the case was not one of which the justice would have had jurisdiction, notwithstanding the defendant's nonresidence.—Leary v. Dyson, 98 Ind. 317.

[g] (Mich. 1843) A magistrate before whom a judgment was rendered is not a proper party defendant to a suit brought in chancery to restrain proceedings on it.—Burpee v. Smith, Walk. Ch. 327.

[h] (Mo. 1835) A bill in equity to stay proceedings at law before a justice of the peace and to obtain an appeal, alleging that part of the judgment rendered was unjust, is insufficient, without alleging how much was unjust.—Smith v. De Lashmutt, 4 Mo. 103.

[i] (Mo. 1835) A bill in equity to stay proceedings at law before a justice of the peace and to obtain an appeal, alleging that taking an appeal within three days was prevented by the absence of the justice, is insufficient, without alleging that complainant was unapprised of the intended absence.—Smith v. De Lashmutt, 4 Mo. 103.

[j] (Neb. 1893) A petition in equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment of a justice of the peace, which does not aver facts from which it appears that the plaintiff has a meritorious defense to the cause of action on which the judgment is based, and that his failure to interpose such defense in the justice court, and to avail himself of an appeal or proceedings in error, was not due to any neglect or default on his part, does not state a cause of action.—Langley v. Ashe, 38 Neb. 53, 56 N. W. 720.

[k] (N. C. 1889) In claim and delivery proceedings before a justice of the peace the property was delivered to plaintiff, but afterwards the justice dismissed the proceeding for want of jurisdiction, and gave judgment of restitution against plaintiff, with an alternative judgment for $150. Held, that it was proper for the superior court to refuse a preliminary injunction, to restrain the collection of an execution issued on the alternative judgment, on the ground that the property belonged to plaintiff, and if he paid the money he would be unable to recover it.—Powell v. Allen, 103 N. C. 46, 9 S. E. 138.

[l] (N. C. 1895) Defendant having made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, plaintiff, through its attorney, who was also acting as trustee under the deed of assignment, split up its account against the insolvent corporation so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of a justice's court, and obtained judgments thereon; defendant making no defense thereto by reason of representations made to it by such trustee. Held that, in its answer to a creditors' bill brought by plaintiff, defendant could by counterclaim impeach such judgments for fraud and demand that they be vacated.—Wilson Cotton Mills v. C. C. Randleman Cotton Mills, 116 N. C. 647, 21 S. E. 431.

[m] (Tex. 1857) The judgment of a justice of the peace in a case in which he had no jurisdiction being void, it is immaterial whether the application for an injunction is within 90 days.—McFaddin v. Spencer, 18 Tex. 440.

[n] (Tex. 1858) A justice's judgment was enjoined on proof that it was had without service; but on the admission of the party that he really owed the debt, the court, having acquired jurisdiction of the controversy, terminated it by continuing the injunction as to the justice's costs, but giving judgment to the respondent for the debt.—Willis v. Gordon, 22 Tex. 241.

[o] (Tex. 1860) A petition for an injunction against a justice's judgments on the ground that he had no jurisdiction, and that the plaintiff had split his one cause of action into several, is fatally defective, unless it alleges of what the one, and of what the several, accounts consisted.—Brundage v. Candle, 25 Tex. Supp. 387.

[p] (Tex. 1873) Where injunction has issued to prevent the collection of a justice's judgment alleged to have been satisfied by a payment in Confederate money, and the judgment creditor has been cited to show cause why the injunction should not be made perpetual, he should by his answer and proof clearly show that he in no wise consented to the payment of the judgment in illegal currency.—Buie v. Crouch, 37 Tex. 53.

[r] (Tex. 1896) In an action to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, neither the justice, nor the officer about to levy execution, is a proper party; notice to them of the injunction being sufficient.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Blankenbeckler, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 249, 35 S. W. 331.

[b] (Kan. 1895) A judgment of a justice of the peace in a proceeding of the subject-matter and parties to which his record shows that he had jurisdiction cannot be questioned collaterally.—Vincent v. Davidson, 1 Kan. App. 606, 42 Pac. 390.

[f] (N. Y. 1850) The judgment of a justice, having jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, and of the subject-matter of the suit, cannot be questioned upon its merits in a collateral action.—Wesson v. Chamberlain, 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 331.

[g] (N. Y. 1878) Where defendant in an action before a justice of the peace was served with summons, neglected to appear, allowed judgment by default to be entered against him, and failed to appeal, the judgment cannot be collaterally attacked in an action for malicious prosecution.—Sailesbury v. Creswell, 14 Hun, 460.

[h] (N. C.) A judgment of a justice's court, regularly docketed on the judgment docket of the superior court, is within the rule that judgments cannot be attacked collaterally.—(1872) Reid v. Spoon, 66 N. C. 416; (1885) Moore v. Edwards, 92 N. C. 43.

[i] (Ohio, 1885) In order to render a valid judgment, a justice of the peace must have jurisdiction of the subject-matter and parties, as prescribed by statute, and this must fairly appear by his record; but, jurisdiction appearing, his judgments are as impregnable against collateral attack as those of any other tribunal.—McCurdy v. Baughman, 43 Ohio St. 78, 1 N. E. 93.

[j] (Pa. 1861) A plaintiff whose cause of action is set out on the docket of a justice is concluded by it. He cannot impeach it collaterally.—Warner v. Scott, 39 Pa. (3 Wright) 274.

Collateral attack on acts of de facto justice, see ante, § 18.

[a] A justice's judgment in a case of which he has jurisdiction cannot be collaterally assailed for irregularities.

(Mo. 1883) Colvin v. Six, 79 Mo. 198; (1883) State ex rel. Colvin v. Six, 80 Mo. 61.

(Mo. 1894) Jones v. Pharis, 59 Mo. App. 254.

[c] (Ark. 1863) Where a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit and of the person of the defendant, the judgment cannot be regarded as null and void, when presented to the circuit court collaterally in a case of garnishment founded thereon, on account of error of the justice in rendering judgment on default without evidence to establish an account on which the action was founded.—Shaver v. Shell, 24 Ark. 122.

[d] (Ark. 1886) A justice of the peace has the right to determine every question that arises in a cause pending in his court that a superior court has under like circumstances; and, where he errs in his conclusions upon the law, the judgments of his court are no more open to attack than those of the circuit court.—Carolan v. Carolan, 47 Ark. 511, 2 S. W. 105.

[e] (Cal. 1888) A justice's judgment cannot be collaterally attacked by showing that the debt on which it is based was merged in a former judgment rendered in another township.—Gregory v. Bovier, 77 Cal. 121, 19 Pac. 232; Gregory v. Allison, 19 Pac. 233.

[f] (Ill. 1880) Only upon jurisdictional facts can a justice's judgment be impeached collaterally. Parol evidence is not admissible to show that an alteration in his docket record thereof was improperly made.—Thatcher v. Maack, 7 Ill. App. (7 Bradw.) 635.

[g] (Ind. 1881) After service of process on defendant, and two days before the return day of the writ, the justice gave judgment against defendant, falsely reciting on his docket an appearance by defendant, a waiver of the usual notice, and an admission by defendant that "plaintiff's claim was correct, just, and due, and that judgment might be rendered thereon." Held that, as between the parties, the judgment was binding until set aside by the justice or reversed by the supreme court, on appeal; and, defendant having acquiesced in such judgment, it could not be collaterally impeached by other creditors who had taken judgment on the return day.—McAlpine v. Sweetser, 76 Ind. 78.

[h] (Mich. 1859) A justice's judgment, which appears to have been rendered on a note, cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that the docket does not show to whom the note was payable or whether it was negotiable.—Van Kleek v. Eggleston, 7 Mich. 511.

[i] (Mich. 1872) A justice's judgment, while it remains unreversed, cannot be collaterally attacked, in an action founded on it, for an error which does not go to the jurisdiction.—Allen v. Mills, 26 Mich. 123.

[j] (Mich. 1876) A failure to make proof of the authority of plaintiff's attorney, as required by Comp. Laws 1871, § 5305, in case of defendant's nonappearance, does not render a justice's judgment subject to collateral attack.—Reed v. Gage, 33 Mich. 179.

[k] (Mich. 1876) In the absence of any statutory requirement, failure of a justice of the peace to wait an hour after the time specified in the process for the defendant to appear is at most but an irregularity, and not a jurisdictional defect, for which his judgment can be impeached collaterally.—Smith v. Brown, 34 Mich. 455.

[m] (Mich. 1892) Where the docket entry of a judgment of a justice's court does not show affirmatively that the justice on the adjourned day of the cause waited one hour for defendant to appear, the defect cannot be raised in a collateral proceeding attacking the judgment, since the defect is not jurisdictional.—Chaddock v. Barry, 93 Mich. 542, 53 N. W. 785.

[n] (Mo. 1893) In a suit on a money judgment, rendered by a justice of the peace against the defendant on five days' service in a proceeding on a landlord's summons, it must affirmatively appear that the verified statement required by the statute was filed by the plaintiff.—Wise v. Loring, 54 Mo. App. 258.

[o] (Mo. 1894) A judgment of a justice of the peace enforcing a mechanic's lien cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that the person making affidavit to the account filed was not the agent of the contractor.—McLaughlin v. Schultz, 125 Mo. 469, 28 S. W. 755.

[p] (N. Y. 1829) A judgment by a justice, on a verdict received in the absence of the plaintiff, is not void, but voidable only, and its validity is not inquirable into collaterally.—Relyea v. Ramsay, 2 Wend. 602.

[q] (N. Y. 1887) Where the summons in a justice's court is served as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2878, the fact that the complaint was not sufficiently served to authorize the justice to enter judgment by default without further proof, does not prevent the justice from taking proof and entering judgment accordingly; and whether he proceeded properly, or entered judgment without proper proof, can only be considered in a direct proceeding to review the judgment.—Strickland v. Laraway, 55 Hun, 612, 9 N. Y. Supp. 761.

[r] (N. C. 1851) When a justice of the peace renders a judgment in a case where he has jurisdiction, everything is presumed to have been done, on collateral attack, which it was necessary to do, in order to make the judgment regular; and his judgment, like a judgment given in a court of record, is in full force until reversed.—Hiatt v. Simpson, 35 N. C. 72.

[s] (Or. 1894) A judgment rendered in justice's court on default cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that the complaint on which it was based did not state a cause of action.—North Pacific Cycle Co. v. Thomas, 26 Or. 381, 38 Pac. 307, 46 Am. St. Rep. 636.

[u] (Pa. 1840) A stranger to a judgment of a justice of the peace cannot controvert it for irregularities in collateral proceedings.—Hazelett v. Ford, 10 Watts, 101.

[w] (Tex. 1888) In a suit to enjoin an execution issued from justice's court, it appeared that judgment had been rendered against plaintiff for $13, disallowing his counterclaim for $22, and that the county court had dismissed an appeal on the ground that the judgment was for less than $20. Held, that the judgment of the county court, though erroneous, was conclusive until set aside, and could not be collaterally attacked.—Roberts v. McCamant, 70 Tex. 743, 8 S. W. 543.

[x] (Tex. 1889) Rev. St. art. 1547, formerly provided that the justices residing at the county seats should hold regular terms on the last Monday in each month. In 1876 the commissioners' court of a county prescribed the second Monday as the time for holding court in precinct 1 of said county. In 1881 the article was amended to require justices to hold their regular terms at such times as should be prescribed by the commissioners' courts of their counties; but no new order was made as to precinct 1, and a judgment was rendered by a justice thereof on the last Monday of a month. Held, on collateral attack, that, in the absence of proof of the contrary, it would be presumed in favor of the validity of the judgment that the county seat was in the precinct in which the justice who rendered the judgment resided.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Ware (Sup.) 11 S. W. 554.

[b] (Cal. 1860) In a suit before a justice, the summons was served in the township where the suit was commenced, and this was certified upon the summons by the officer who made the service. The defendant resided in the county, but in another township than the one in which he was served. Held, that the judgment rendered on default could not be impeached collaterally on the ground of want of jurisdiction.—Fagg v. Clements, 16 Cal. 389.

[c] (Cal. 1888) A justice's judgment cannot be attacked by showing that defendant did not reside in the township in which it was rendered, where the return on the summons in the action shows that the proper officer served it on defendant in that township.—Gregory v. Bovier, 77 Cal. 121, 19 Pac. 232.

[e] (Mich. 1872) Where the statutes do not require the fact of residence to be proved before the justice or entered on his docket, it will not be presumed, on collateral attack, in the absence of proof, for the purpose of defeating jurisdiction, that the parties thereto were residents of the county.—Allen v. Mills, 26 Mich. 123.

[f] (Mich. 1884) The validity of a judgment, rendered by a justice on a claim within his jurisdiction, cannot be collaterally attacked, because such claim constituted a mechanic's lien, to enforce which the justice had no jurisdiction.—Smith v. Pearce, 52 Mich. 370, 18 N. W. 111.

[g] (Mo. 1879) A justice's judgment, regular on its face, cannot be impeached in a collateral proceeding by showing that the suit was not brought in a township in or adjoining one in which the defendant resided.—Fulkerson v. Davenport, 70 Mo. 541.

[h] (Mo. 1887) In ejectment to recover the possession of certain real estate, defendant claimed title under a sheriff's deed, given at a sale under two special executions issued upon special judgments rendered by a justice of the peace upon special tax bills for the doing of certain grading in Kansas City. Section 4 of the Kansas City charter provides: "Where the amount due on any tax bill does not exceed three hundred dollars, suit may be brought thereon before the recorder of the city, or any justice of the peace of said city," etc. The executions only recited that the justice who rendered the judgments was a justice of the peace of Kaw township, and omitted the words "in Kansas City." It was admitted that it appeared from the proceedings held before the justice that he was a justice of the peace in Kansas City. Held, that the judgments were not subject to collateral attack.—Karnes v. Alexander, 92 Mo. 660, 4 S. W. 518.

[m] (Tenn. 1872) Defendant in replevin may assail a justice's judgment against him as an indorser on a note for over $250 on which demand and notice had not been made; plaintiff claiming the property under an execution issued thereon.—Wolf v. Eakerly, 57 Tenn. (10 Heisk.) 124.

[o] (Tex.) Justices' courts, being created by the constitution, exercise, within their defined limits, general jurisdiction; and their judgments cannot be collaterally attacked as void for not showing all the facts necessary to give a court jurisdiction.—(1879) Williams v. [p] (Tex. 1883) The judgment of a justice of the peace cannot be attacked collaterally by an inquiry into plaintiff's motive in giving a credit which reduced the amount claimed to an amount within the justice's jurisdiction.—Odle v. Frost, 59 Tex. 684.

[q] (Tex. 1890) A judgment of a justice of the peace, which recites that the plaintiff against whom it was rendered appeared, is good as against collateral attack, though such plaintiff did not in fact appear or submit to the jurisdiction.—Williams v. Haynes, 77 Tex. 283, 13 S. W. 1029, 19 Am. St. Rep. 752.

[a] (Ala. 1852) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace cannot be impeached, in a collateral proceeding, by proof that the warrant was not served on one of the defendants.—Lightsey v. Harris, 20 Ala. 409.

[b] (Ark. 1886) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace cannot be attacked collaterally for mere irregularities in process.—Webster v. Daniel, 47 Ark. 131, 14 S. W. 550.

[c] (Cal. 1863) A judgment by default rendered by a justice of the peace may be impeached in a collateral action for want of jurisdiction, as shown by a failure of a deputy sheriff who made the service to make his return in the name of the sheriff.—Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401.

[d] (Cal. 1887) Whether an alias summons was regularly issued or not is not a jurisdictional question, and a judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered on such summons, will be held sufficient as against a collateral attack.—Dore v. Dougherty, 72 Cal. 232, 13 Pac. 621.

[e] (Ill. 1865) Where it appeared that a trial was had in a justice's court on shorter notice to the defendant than prescribed by the statute, and there was no appearance of the defendant, it was held that there was no jurisdiction over him, and that a judgment rendered in the case was absolutely void, and could be questioned in any proceeding.—Johnson v. Baker, 38 Ill. 98, 87 Am. Dec. 293.

[f] (Ind. 1881) The judgment of a justice of the peace is not void by reason of defective service of the summons, and cannot be collaterally attacked.—Hume v. Conduitt, 76 Ind. 598.

[g] (Kan. 1875) A judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered on a service of summons made only two days prior to the rendering of the judgment, is not void, but only voidable, and is valid and binding, on collateral attack, until reversed, vacated, or set aside by some direct proceeding instituted for that purpose.—Nelson v. Becker, 14 Kan. 509.

[h] (Md. 1887) Judgments rendered by justices of the peace will not be allowed to stand where the record fails to show affirmatively that a summons had been issued and served upon defendant. Such defect may be called in question even in a collateral action founded upon such judgments; as in an action of ejectment, where defendant seeks to rest his title upon alleged sales made under executions issued under such judgments.—Fahey v. Mottu, 67 Md. 250, 10 Atl. 68.

[i] (Mo. 1873) A judgment of a justice of the peace is not subject to collateral attack for defects as to process, when the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction appear affirmatively on the face of the proceedings.—Jeffries v. Wright, 51 Mo. 215.

[j] (N. Y. 1859) The statute requirement that the return of process to a justice's court shall be signed by the constable serving the same is satisfied, for the purposes of supporting a judgment attacked collaterally, by a return made out in the presence of the constable by the justice.—Reno v. Pinder, 20 N. Y. 298.

[k] (Ohio, 1893) A judgment of a justice of the peace cannot be collaterally attacked, though summons was not served three days before rendition, as required by Rev. St. § 6476.—Righter v. Thornton (Com. Pl.) 30 Wkly. Law Bul. 32.

[l] (Or. 1894) Summons and complaint in an action in justice's court, duly served on defendant, which advise him that a certain action has been there commenced against him for a certain sum as damages for breach of contract, and warn him to appear at a specified time and place, are sufficient to sustain a judgment in default against collateral attack.—North Pac. Cycle Co. v. Thomas, 26 Or. 381, 38 Pac. 307, 46 Am. St. Rep. 636.

[m] (Pa. 1893) A justice's docket showed that summons had been served "by leaving copy at place of business." The return merely was, "Served by copy." Held an irregularity only, and the judgment was voidable, not void, and not subject to collateral attack.—Sweeney v. Girolo, 154 Pa. 609, 26 Atl. 600, 32 Wkly. Notes Cas. 404.

[n] (Tex. 1869) In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the judgment of a justice's court, attacked for want of service, will be presumed to be correct on collateral attack.—Carter v. Griffin, 32 Tex. 212.

[o] (Tex. 1881) Under the law in force in 1869, a justice's judgment by default, based on a citation by publication, made on an affidavit that defendant's residence was unknown to the affiant, is void on the face of the record, and may be attacked collaterally.—Stegall v. Huff, 54 Tex. 193.

[p] (Tex. 1883) The judgment of a justice of the peace, which recites that defendant was duly cited, cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground of a defective service, and, consequently, a want of jurisdiction.—Long v. Brenneman, 59 Tex. 210.

[q] (Tex. 1894) Where the judgment of a justice of the peace shows that citation was served on defendant, it cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that no service was made and that the record showing service was false.—Watkins v. Davis, 61 Tex. 414.

[r] (Tex. 1887) Under Act Aug. 7, 1848, three weeks are required for publication of citation in a justice's court. An order of publication was made on January 25th, and judgment was rendered on February 22d. On collateral attack, held that the service must be considered properly made.—Traylor v. Lide (Sup.) 7 S. W. 58.

[s] (Tex. 1895) On collateral attack on a justice's judgment, the presumption of its validity, though it is silent as to service of citation, is not overcome by proof that a citation issued in the proceedings was defective, if there was time for the service of another and valid citation, and no affirmative showing that such other citation was not served.—Hambel v. Davis (Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 251.

8. LIEN, SUSPENSION, ENFORCEMENT AND REVIVAL, AND SATISFACTION.

SUSPENSION, § 413.

§ 412. Lien.

[a] (Miss. 1854) A judgment of a justice of the peace is within the statute providing that judgment liens shall operate only from the date of the enrollment of the judgment.—Stevens v. Mangum, 27 Miss. (5 Cushm.) 481.

[b] (Miss. 1882) A judgment debtor's conveyance of land is void as against a judgment of a justice of the peace duly enrolled before the conveyance is filed for record.—Heirmann v. Stricklin, 60 Miss. 234.

[c] (N. C. 1799) A judgment of a justice of the peace does not bind the land.—Cressman v. Geoge, 1 N. C. 115.

[d] (N. C. 1872) A judgment in a justice's court does not create a lien on the property of the defendant.—Ledbetter v. Osborne, 66 N. C. 379.

[e] (N. C. 1895) Since under Code, § 1754, a judgment for rent is a lien on the crops, a judgment of a justice's court for rent, also adjudging the judgment a lien on the crops, is not invalid as being in excess of his jurisdiction, as the portion of the judgment adjudging the lien will be treated as surplusage.—Hargrove v. Harris, 116 N. C. 418, 21 S. E. 916.

Stay of execution, see post, §§ 436–439.

[a] (Ala. 1851) An execution, issued by a justice of the peace after the lapse of 10 years from the issuance of the last previous execution, is not sufficiently regular to authorize a sale of the land on which it may be levied for want of personal property, since the judgment has become dormant.—Brown v. Higginbottom, 19 Ala. 207.

[b] (Cal. 1857) Judgments by a justice expire absolutely five years after entry, and execution cannot issue after such time. Prac. Act, § 214, applies only to courts of record.—White v. Clark, 8 Cal. 512.

[c] (Cal. 1857) The loss of the docket of a justice will not prevent the five years within which a judgment expires (Prac. Act, §§ 200, 214) from running.—White v. Clark, 8 Cal. 512.

[d] (Cal. 1857) Under Prac. Act, § 600, providing that an execution for the enforcement of a judgment in a justice's court may be issued, on the application of the party entitled thereto, at any time within five years of the entry of judgment, an execution issued after such time is void, though the docket of the justice has been lost during a period of three years within the time.—White v. Clark, 8 Cal. 512.

[e] (Del. 1839) Execution may issue on judgments before a justice of the peace at any time within three years, without scire facias, and may be extended beyond that time, if followed up regularly; but, if not, there must be a scire facias.—Messick v. Russel, 3 Har. 13.

[f] (Ga. 1888) The indorsement by a justice of a receipt for his costs, on executions placed in the sheriff's hands, is such an entry as is contemplated by Code, § 2914, declaring that judgments shall become dormant after seven years from the last entry on an execution issued thereon by an officer authorized to execute it.—Gholston v. O'Kelley, 81 Ga. 19, 7 S. E. 107.

[g] (Ga. 1890) On appeal from a justice's judgment, the judge of the superior court entered judgment against defendants in their absence, without the intervention of a jury. Afterwards such judgment was declared void, and the appeal reinstated, and then dismissed on plaintiff's motion. Held, that the appeal would be considered as pending from the time it was first entered until it was dismissed, and, under Code, § 3628, providing that the effect of an appeal is to suspend the judgment, the justice's judgment was not dormant, though more than the time prescribed by Code, § 2914, had elapsed.—Twitty v. Bower, 84 Ga. 751, 11 S. E. 354.

[h] (Ga. 1891) Since an execution on a justice's judgment is directed to any constable of the county, an entry thereon by a constable is legal, though he is not an officer of the militia district in which the execution issued, and will keep the judgment alive.—Neal v. Brockhan, 87 Ga. 130, 13 S. E. 283.

[i] (Ga. 1891) A return of nulla bona as to personal property made on a justice's fi. fa. will keep the judgment from becoming dormant, if made by a constable of the county, though not of the district, in which the judgment was rendered and the defendant resides; and every such return will be presumed to be based on a search for property.—Bennett v. McConnell, 88 Ga. 177, 14 S. E. 208.

[k] (Mo. 1882) After three years from the rendition of a justice's judgment, no execution can be issued on it until revived.—Pears v. Goff, 76 Mo. 92.

[l] (Pa. 1847) Execution issued on a justice's judgment seven years after its rendition, without a revivor by sci. fa., is regular and valid.—Heebner v. Chave, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 115.

[m] (Pa. 1868) Under St. Westm. II., giving a judgment creditor the right to issue a writ of scire facias post annum et diem, an execution on a justice's judgment, 10 years and 6 months after its rendition, without a scire facias, was void, since at common law no execution could be issued after a year and a day from the rendition of the judgment, and the statute applies to judgments rendered by a justice of the peace.—Ford v. Salisbury, 2 Clark, 401.

[n] (Pa. 1893) Act May 9, 1889, which dispenses with execution before the justice on judgments of $100 and upwards as a condition precedent to the right to issue execution out of the court of common pleas after a transcript has been docketed in the prothonotary's office does not affect the act of 1854, which requires a justice's judgment more than five years old to be revived by scire facias before execution can be issued thereon.—Smith v. Wehrly, 157 Pa. 407, 27 Atl. 700, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 327; Inquirer Print. & Pub. Co. v. Same, 157 Pa. 415, 27 Atl. 703, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 330.

[o] (Tenn. 1879) An execution issued on the judgment of a justice of the peace, nearly 20 years after it was rendered, should be quashed, as an action on said judgment is barred by Code. § 2776.—McGrew v. Reasons, 71 Tenn. (3 Lea) 485.

[a] (Del. 1832) Where the defendant in an action before a justice of the peace died after judgment had been rendered, and an execution was issued against his property without a scire facias to make his representative a party having been issued, such execution was irregular, and should be set aside on certiorari.—Cooper v. May, 1 Har. 18.

[c, d] (Ill. 1847) Where suit was instituted before a justice of the peace against two as makers of a note, and judgment rendered against one of them, and the justice afterwards issued process against the other to show cause why judgment should not be entered against him, such process could not be sustained as a scire facias.—Orr v. Thompson, 9 Ill. (4 Gilman) 451.

[e] (Ind. 1835) On scire facias by a justice of the peace to show cause why an execution should not issue on a judgment rendered by his predecessor in office, the defendant, on plea of payment, may prove by parol that he paid the amount of the judgment to the justice by whom the judgment was rendered; it being proved that at the time of the payment the justice was in office and had the docket in his possession, but neglected to make the entry of payment.—Morrison v. King, 4 Blackf. 125.

[f] (Ky. 1837) Equity will enforce the sale of a debtor's lands to satisfy justice's judgments against him, where a sale of the lands on execution issued by a justice is not permitted.—Harlan v. Barnes' Adm'rs, 35 Ky. (5 Dana) 219.

[g] (Ky. 1839) Act 1821, § 6, providing that on the return nulla bona of an execution the creditor may file a bill in equity to subject any interest, legal or equitable, in any estate of the debtor, real or personal, applies to justices' judgments.—Newdigate v. Jacobs, 39 Ky. (9 Dana) 17.

[h] (N. J. 1827) On scire facias to show cause why a new execution should not issue, the only judgment which the justice could render against the defendant was that a new execution issue.—Woolston v. Gale, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 32.

[i] (N. J. 1848) Rev. St. p. 921, providing that, on the return unsatisfied of an execution, a bill may be filed for the discovery of any property belonging to the debtor and to subject it to the judgment, applies to justices' judgments.—Lore v. Getsinger, 7 N. J. Eq. (3 Halst. Ch.) 191.

[j] (N. Y. 1831) Chancery will lend its aid to enforce the judgment of a justice's court, though not a court of record.—Bailey v. Burton, 8 Wend. 339.

[m] (Pa. 1895) In an action against a husband alone, the justice cannot, after entry of judgment, bring in the wife by scire facias, and substitute for the original a judgment against the husband and wife jointly.—Naylor v. Carrell (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 208.

[n] (Vt. 1819) Scire facias on a judgment of a justice of the peace to the county court is given by statute, and it must set forth facts showing a case within the statute.—Phelps v. Mott, Brayt. 191.

Jurisdiction of justice, see ante, § 166 [uu].

New promise as reviving right of action on judgment barred by limitations, see post, § 420 [p].

Retroactive operation of statute extending limitations on barred justice's judgment as reviving right to sue, see post, § 420 [t].

[a] (Ala. 1856) A judgment rendered before the adoption of the Code by a justice of the peace may be revived on scire facias, in a case where there is no other proof than the rendition of a regular judgment, the issue of an execution on it within a year, the return of the execution with the indorsement of "Nulla bona," and the failure to issue another execution for a period of more than 10 years.—Shelley v. Graves, 29 Ala. 385.

[b] (Ala. 1893) The revival of a justice's judgment by scire facias does not entitle the judgment creditor to sue thereon after the expiration of six years from its rendition, since the order of revival merely confers on the judgment creditor the statutory right to issue executions on the judgment after it has become dormant for that purpose, and does not enlarge his common-law right to sue thereon.—Marx v. Sanders, 98 Ala. 500, 11 South. 764.

[c] (Ark. 1889) As Mansf. Dig. § 4103, expressly prohibits the issue of execution on the judgment of a justice of the peace after five years from the date of its rendition, the power to issue it cannot be revived by scire facias, or other proceeding peculiar to courts of superior jurisdiction.—Trammell v. Anderson, 52 Ark. 176, 12 S. W. 328.

[d] (Ga. 1854) The judgments of justices' courts may be revived to the same extent that judgments of higher courts may be.—Wilcher v. Hamilton, 15 Ga. 435.

[e] (Ind. 1853) A proceeding by scire facias to revive a judgment falls within the cases in which the statute fixes the time for the rendition of judgment, and failure of the justice to enter it within the period required works a discontinuance of the suit.—Burton v. McGregor, 4 Ind. 550.

[f] (Ind. 1871) Although, under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 528, § 155, it is unnecessary to revive a judgment in favor of a deceased person before execution can issue, yet that statute does not take away the right to have such judgment revived, and, in actions before justices of the peace, 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 610, § 120, makes express provisions for such revivor.—Wyant v. Wyant, 38 Ind. 48.

[g] (Kan. 1887) The provisions of the Civil Code for the revival of judgments apply to a judgment rendered before a justice of the peace, where such judgment has not been transferred to the district court by appeal or otherwise.—Israel v. Nichols, 37 Kan. 68, 14 Pac. 438; Id., 37 Kan. 69, 14 Pac. 439.

[h] (Kan. 1888) A justice can revive a dormant judgment rendered by him, either by an action brought for that purpose and commenced by summons, or by a motion and notice under Civ. Code, art. 19.—Schultz v. Hine, 39 Kan. 334, 18 Pac. 221.

[i] (Miss. 1877) On sci. fa. to revive a justice's judgment in replevin, it will be presumed that the justice, in compliance with Code, § 1448, judicially ascertained that the value of the property exceeded the debt, though he did not make a separate entry of such finding.—Roberts v. Weiler, 55 Miss. 249.

[j] (Mo. 1871) When a debtor in a justice's judgment has left the county, the creditor may revive his claim by a direct suit on the judgment itself.—Wood v. Newberry, 48 Mo. 322.

[l] (Mo. 1876) Execution cannot issue on a justice's judgment by reason of its revival in the name of an executrix, as provided by Wag. St. p. 830, § 5, after three years from the date of the rendition of the judgment against the testator. In order to have execution in such case, the judgment must be revived as provided by Id. pp. 830, 831, §§ 7-9.—Corby v. Tracy, 62 Mo. 511.

[m] (Mo. 1893) Rev. St. 1889, § 6570, which provides that "the time within which an act is to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day and including the last" applies to sections 6292 and 6297, which require the return of a citation to revive a justice's judgment not less than 10 days from the date of issue.—Sappington v. Lenz, 53 Mo. App. 44.

[n] (Mo. 1896) An affidavit to revive a judgment under Rev. St. 1889, § 6291, must show that the judgment was rendered by the justice before whom the proceeding to revive is pending, or by his predecessor in office.—Kincaid v. Griffith, 64 Mo. App. 673, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1135.

[o] (Neb. 1885) The provisions of the Code for the revival of judgments apply to actions before justices of the peace.—Miller v. Curry, 17 Neb. 321, 22 N. W. 559.

[p] (Pa. 1894) An appeal from a judgment of an alderman reviving a judgment on a scire facias is not an action ex contractu within Practice Act 1887, and need not be replied to by affidavit of defense.—Stewart v. Eisenhower (Com. Pl.) 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 529, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 619.

[q] (Tenn. 1833) It is not necessary to issue a notice on scire facias to revive a judgment rendered before a justice of the peace which has remained dormant for one year.—Gunn v. Benson, 13 Tenn. (5 Yerg.) 221.

[r] (Tenn. 1835) If a sci. fa., issued by the clerk of a county court to revive a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace who has died or resigned, be made returnable to the court, instead of the clerk thereof, as is required by statute, it confers no jurisdiction on the court.—White v. Davenport, 15 Tenn. (7 Yerg.) 475.

[s] (Tenn. 1869) The circuit courts have no authority to issue an original scire facias to revive a judgment which was rendered by a justice of the peace.—Bryant v. Smith, 47 Tenn. (7 Cold.) 113.

[t] (Tenn. 1874) Where the record of a judgment is lost, and supplied by affidavit after the decease of the magistrate, it may be revived and proceeded upon, without the affirmative proof of the succession, etc., required by Code, § 3070a; the presumption under section 4138 being that the magistrate issuing the execution is the proper successor.—Anderson v. Moore, 63 Tenn. (4 Baxt.) 15.

[b] (Mo. 1866) A scire facias to revive the judgment of a justice of the peace, brought more than 10 years after the rendition of the judgment, was not barred by Act Dec. 1, 1855, which limits to 10 years actions on judgments of courts of record, which are liens on real estate.—Humphreys v. Lundy, 37 Mo. 320.

[c] (Mo. 1876) A scire facias may issue to revive a justice's judgment after the lapse of 10 years. The statute of limitations applies only to judgments of courts of record.—Corby v. Tracy, 62 Mo. 511.

[e] (Ind. 1866) A justice of the peace may, on proper motion, enter an order that mutual judgments, rendered before him, shall be set off the one against the other.—Howk v. Meloy, 26 Ind. 176.

[f] (Ind. 1869) Where a motion is made to set off against each other mutual judgments obtained before the same justice, it is not sufficient answer that the execution on the judgment against the party has been stayed, and that the time for such stay has not expired.—Meloy v. Howk, 32 Ind. 94.

[g] (Ind. 1887) It is no answer to a complaint for satisfaction of a judgment on the docket of a justice of the peace, pursuant to section 1497, Rev. St. 1881, that the satisfaction was made more than six years before the commencement of the action.—Palmer v. Hayes, 112 Ind. 289, 13 N. E. 882.

[h] (Mich. 1843) A justice of the peace entered a cross judgment on his docket that it was paid, stating the day, and signed the entry in his official capacity. Held, that such entry was prima facie evidence that the judgment was satisfied, and that this evidence was not rebutted by proof, unaccompanied by any explanatory testimony, of another entry immediately below the former, on the same docket, without date, signed by the justice in his individual capacity, stating, in effect, that the judgment had not been paid, according to the import of the former entry.—Beach v. Botsford, 1 Doug. 199, 40 Am. Dec. 45.

[i] (Mich. 1879) A judgment recovered before one justice of the peace can be ascertained and applied by another in satisfaction of a counterclaim recovered before him by the other party.—McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 Mich. 215.

[j] (Mich. 1879) An entry by a justice on the face of a judgment of the words, "Judgment discharged," is only prima facie evidence of payment, and can be proved to be incorrect.—Dane v. Holmes, 41 Mich. 661, 3 N. W. 169.

[k] (Mo. 1892) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 6316, providing that no payment on a judgment, made to a justice, either before or after execution, shall be valid unless made with the consent of the judgment creditors, a payment to the justice's clerk after execution issued, of which the creditor did not know at the time, and which he refused to accept, is invalid.—Medart v. Baker's Eureka Hot Air & Stove Burner Mfg. Co., 51 Mo. App. 19.

[m] (N. Y. 1830) The imprisonment of the defendant on a justice's execution is a satisfaction of the judgment while the imprisonment continues.—Sunderland v. Loder, 5 Wend. 58.

[n] (N. Y. 1856) A levy under a justice's execution on sufficient personal property to satisfy the judgment is not per se a satisfaction of the judgment.—Denvrey v. Fox, 22 Barb. 522.

[o] (N. Y.) The provision of the Code that no action on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace shall be brought in the same county within five years after its rendition, does not prevent parties thereto, and especially an assignee thereof, from using such judgment as set-off or counterclaim against another justice's judgment.—(1859) Clark v. Story, 29 Barb. 295. CONTRA, see (1849) Smith v. Jones, 2 Code Rep. 78.

[p] (N. C. 1888) A motion to have satisfaction entered of a justice's judgment on which execution has improvidently issued after payment may be entertained by the justice.—Bailey v. Hester, 101 N. C. 538, 8 S. E. 164.

[r] (Pa. 1854) Where the defendant in an action before an alderman offered a judgment in a former action in bar of plaintiff's action, but no action was taken on it, it was error, upon a hearing after the continuance, to refuse to allow defendant to file such judgment as a set-off.—O'Niel v. Whitecar, 1 Phila. 446.

[t] (Pa. 1858) A notice to a plaintiff in an action before a justice to enter satisfaction on the judgment may be properly served by leaving a copy with his wife at his dwelling house.—Cunningham v. McCue, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 469.

[u] (Pa. 1864) A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a cause of action founded on the judgment of another justice, except as prescribed by the act of 1810. He cannot, therefore, set off a judgment of another justice against one on his own docket, and enter judgment for the balance.—Kline v. McKee, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 519.

[v] (Tenn. 1878) An action may be maintained in the circuit court on a justice's judgment, though execution has been levied on land and returned into the circuit court for condemna-

[w] (Tex. 1873) Where a payment on a justice's judgment in Confederate money was made by and with the consent or approval of the owner of the judgment, it was a satisfaction so far as he was concerned, and it was wholly immaterial whether Confederate money was an unlawful or treasonable currency.—Buie v. Crouch, 37 Tex. 53.

—(N. Y. 1819) James v. Henry, 16 Johns. 233; (N. C. 1825) Bain v. Hunt, 10 N. C. 572.

[aa] No action will lie on a judgment of a justice of the peace, where the record thereof does not show that the defendant was served with process, and there is no proof of such service.
—(Me. 1857) Waterville Iron Mfg. Co. v. Goodwin, 43 Me. 431;

[b] (U. S. 1803) Indebitatus assumpsit lies on the judgment of a justice of the peace.—Green v. Fry, Fed. Cas. No. 5,758 [1 Cranch, C. C. 137].

[c] (Ala. 1835) It is a good defense to an action on a justice's judgment to show that execution is still available.—White v. Hadnot, 1 Port. 419.

[d] (Ark. 1878) When the record of a justice's judgment has been lost or destroyed, the remedy given in Gantt's Dig. § 3774, providing that in such case the justice may, on motion of the judgment creditor and after five days' notice, render a new judgment, is cumulative to that of the common law.—Garibaldi v. Carroll, 33 Ark. 568.

[e] (Del. 1842) An action of debt will not lie before a justice of the peace of one county on a judgment recovered before a justice in another county.—Johnson v. Hayes, 3 Har. 486.

[f] (Ill. 1859) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to render a judgment in an action on the judgment of another, where the amount is less than $100.—Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 337.

[g, h] (Ind. 1882) A suit predicated on a judgment of a justice of the peace, which, as set forth, is void for uncertainty and for want of a definite statement of the amount for which it was rendered, cannot be maintained.—Hopper v. Lucas, 86 Ind. 43.

[i, j] (N. Y. 1835) The suing out of a certiorari to remove a justice's judgment may be pleaded to an action of debt on such judgment, though not sued out till after the commencement of such action.—Wemple v. Johnson, 13 Wend. 515.

[k] (N. Y. 1838) In a suit on a justice's judgment, the docket must show the issuing of summons, and a return of personal service in the cause in which judgment was rendered. —Brown v. Cady, 19 Wend. 477.

[l] (N. Y. 1849) Under Code, § 64, providing that a justice shall have jurisdiction in an action arising on contract for the recovery of money only, he has no jurisdiction of a suit on a judgment rendered before the Code went into effect.—Maguire v. Gallaghan, 1 Code Rep. 127.

[m] (N. Y. 1849) Code, § 64, providing that a justice shall have jurisdiction in an action arising on contract for the recovery of money, gives him jurisdiction to try an action on a judgment, since it is a contract.—Maguire v. Gallaghan, 1 Code Rep. 127.

[n] (N. Y. 1857) The jurisdiction conferred by the Code on justices of the peace, in cases founded on judgments recovered before a justice, is general, and not limited to $100, and a justice has jurisdiction to give a plaintiff judgment in such case for more than that amount. —Humphrey v. Persons, 23 Barb. 313.

[o] (N. Y. 1892) Code Civ. Proc. § 2862, subd. 6, provides that the court of a justice of the peace is not a court of record. Section 3017 provides that a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, on being docketed in the county clerk's office, "is deemed a judgment of the county court, * * * and must be enforced accordingly." Held, that a judgment for damages obtained by plaintiff in a justice's court, and docketed under section 3017, remained in fact the judgment of a court "not of record," and an action thereon was not inhibited by section 1913, providing that an action on a judgment for money rendered by a court of record cannot be maintained by the original parties.—Harris v. Clark, 65 Hun, 361, 20 N. Y. Supp. 232.

[p] (N. C. 1844) A single magistrate has jurisdiction of debt, though above $60, founded on a former justice's judgment.—Morgan v. Allen, 27 N. C. 156.

[q] (N. C. 1853) A justice's judgment on a warrant against an administrator, ascertaining the amount due, and having indorsed thereon a suggestion of the defendant's intention to plead "No assets," according to statute, is not a final judgment, and an action will not lie on it.—Anderson v. Young, 44 N. C. 408.

[r] (N. C. 1873) Code Civ. Proc. § 63, authorizing the maker and indorser of bills or notes to be joined as defendants, does not authorize the joinder of the indorser of a note after it has been merged into judgment in an action on the judgment; and hence, where such indorser and judgment creditor reside in different counties, a justice of the county wherein the indorser resides has no jurisdiction of the judgment debtor, under Acts 1871–72, p. 100, c. 60, authorizing a justice, where defendants reside in different counties, to issue process to both counties.—Wooten v. Maultsby, 69 N. C. 462.

[u] (Vt. 1819) In an action of debt on a judgment, brought before a justice, his jurisdiction must be ascertained by the amount due on the judgment, as appears on the record and proceedings under the judgment. Extrinsic evidence cannot be considered.—Brush v. Torrey, Brayt. 141.

[v] (Vt. 1849) The ad damnum, in a writ returnable before a justice of the peace, is taken as a test of apparent jurisdiction only in cases where the declaration does not otherwise limit the extent of the plaintiffs' claim. In an action of debt on judgment, the plaintiffs' demand is limited to the amount of the judgment described in the declaration and the interest upon it; and, if that amount be within the limit of the justice's jurisdiction, the excess of the ad damnum beyond that amount will be treated as unmeaning, for any purpose of affecting jurisdiction.—Bishop v. Warner, 22 Vt. 591.

[w] (Vt. 1853) A suit commenced before a justice of the peace was, in absence of the justice who signed the writ, continued by another justice, and defendant, at the day to which it was so continued, moved to dismiss, which was granted, and judgment rendered for defendant for costs. Held, that such judgment, being regular, was sufficient to support an action of debt.—Ames v. Hilliard, 25 Vt. 222.

[a] (Ala. 1835) An action will lie on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace after the expiration of a year and a day from the time said judgment was rendered; no execution having issued within that time.—White v. Hadnot, 1 Port. 419.

[b] (Ala. 1893) Code, § 2615, provides that actions on justice's court judgments must be brought within six years from their rendition. Sections 3363, 3364, provide that, if an execution is issued within six months after such judgment is rendered, and is returned unsatisfied, another execution may be issued thereon at any time within three years, without a revival of the judgment; that the right to revive such judgment by scire facias is barred after five years from the rendition thereof, or from the issuance of the last execution thereon. Held, that the sections relating to executions and revival of judgments were cumulative, and independent of the common-law right to sue on the judgment, and hence the issuance of an execution thereunder did not suspend the common-law right to sue.—Field v. Sims, 96 Ala. 540, 11 South. 763.

[c] (Cal. 1860) An action will lie in a justice's court on a justice's judgment, either before or after the time for the issuance of execution has expired.—Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 372, 76 Am. Dec. 538.

[e] (Ind. 1870) Under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 593, which provides that a judgment by default before a justice "may be set aside, on motion, at any time within 10 days thereafter, on payment of all costs, and, when so set aside, the justice shall set a day for trial and" give notice, etc., a judgment rendered by a justice against a defendant on default can be made the foundation of an action commenced thereon within 10 days after the rendition thereof.—Fravel v. Springfield Tp., 34 Ind. 296.

[f] (Mich. 1855) Debt will lie on a justice's judgment immediately on its rendition, though execution has been stayed.—McDonald v. Butler, 3 Mich. 558.

[g] (N. Y. 1823) Where an execution issued on a judgment in a justice's court was not returned at all by the constable, it was held that plaintiff might bring an action of debt on the judgment, notwithstanding the statute providing that, if the execution be returned unsatisfied, the action may lie (1 N. R. L. 387).—Hale v. Angel, 20 Johns. 342.

[h] (N. Y. 1828) An action lies on a justice's judgment immediately on its rendition, though execution be stayed by statute.—Smith v. Mumford, 9 Cow. 26.

[i] (N. Y. 1849) The provision in the Code of Procedure that no action shall be brought on a judgment within two years after its rendition does not apply to a justice's judgment recovered before the Code went into effect.—McGuire v. Gallagher, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 402.

[j] (S. C. 1830) A new action cannot be brought on a judgment in a magistrate's court within a year and a day.—Lee v. Giles, 1 Bailey, 449, 21 Am. Dec. 476.

[k] (S. C. 1853) Judgment was rendered in a magistrate's court, and execution issued, and, while this execution was in full life and force, a suit was brought on the judgment. Held, that the suit was premature.—Ligon v. McNeil, 6 Rich. Law, 377.

[l] (Wis. 1873) Rev. St. c. 122, § 10, which declares that "no action on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace shall be brought in the same county within two years after its rendition," except in certain specified cases, forbids the bringing of such actions in justices' courts, as well as in any other. Said section applies to a judgment for less than $10 damages, as well as to one for a greater sum, a transcript of which can be filed with the clerk of the circuit court.—Diederich v. Nachtsheim, 33 Wis. 225.

Proceedings to revive judgments, see ante, § 416.

[a] (Ala. 1893) A complaint which alleges that the amount sued for is "due by judgment rendered" on a specified date by a justice of the peace, construed most strongly against the pleader, predicates the recovery on the judgment as originally rendered, though it further alleges that such judgment was thereafter revived against defendant by said justice; and hence the action is barred if six years have elapsed since the judgment was rendered, though not since its revival.—Marx v. Sanders, 98 Ala. 500, 11 South. 764.

[a] (Conn. 1843) Defendant, in an action of debt on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, pleaded that, on the rendering of said judgment against him, he moved an appeal to the county court, which was allowed. The plaintiff replied that the defendant moved an appeal to the county court, which said appeal was allowed, but the appeal was never entered, etc. Held, that the replication amounted to an admission that a valid appeal was taken and allowed.—Curtiss v. Beardsley, 15 Conn. 518.

[b] (Conn. 1843) The defendant, in an action of debt on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, pleaded that, upon the rendering of said judgment against him, he moved an appeal to the county court, which was allowed. Held, that the plea was not bad for want of an averment that a bond or recognizance was given on the appeal, as this fact was necessarily implied in the allowance of the appeal.—Curtiss v. Beardsley, 15 Conn. 518.

[c] (Ind. 1857) A declaration on the judgment of a justice of the peace should show that the justice had jurisdiction of the cause.—Willey v. Strickland, 8 Ind. 453.

[d] (Ind. 1862) In a suit on a judgment of a justice of the peace, the complaint must either aver the facts showing jurisdiction, or allege, as a substitute, that the judgment was duly given.—Crake v. Crake, 18 Ind. 156.

[e] (Ind. 1875) In an action on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace of one township, against a defendant, who is a resident of another township, the recovery of the judgment and the residence of the defendant are facts to be pleaded in bar, and not in abatement.—Hampton v. Warren, 51 Ind. 288.

[f] (Ind. 1895) A complaint in an action on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, not alleging that the summons was issued, nor that there was an appearance, nor that defendant resided in the township, nor (as is permitted by statute) that the judgment was duly rendered, is fatally defective.—Shockney v. Smiley, 13 Ind. App. 181, 41 N. E. 348.

[i] (N. Y. 1815) In an action of debt on a judgment in a justice's court, it is not necessary to show that the person or justice before whom the judgment was obtained was a magistrate, or that he had not been superseded at the time the judgment was rendered. If the record is proved by the testimony of the justice, not on oath, without objection at the time, it is sufficient.—Reed v. Gillet, 12 Johns. 296.

[j] (N. Y. 1827) In debt upon a justice's judgment, the plea of nul tiel record may be joined with a plea of payment; a justice's judgment ranking as a specialty, and being triable by the jury.—Witherwax v. Averill, 6 Cow. 589.

[k] (N. Y. 1828) A declaration on a justice's judgment averred a recovery of a certain debt of $50, as also 93 cents for the party's damages, as well by reason of detaining the debt as for his costs, etc. Proof of $50 debt, and 93 cents costs. Held no variance, as the terms, "93 cents damages and costs," imported costs only.—Smith v. Mumford, 9 Cow. 26.

[l] (N. Y. 1834) A declaration on a justice's judgment, alleging that the judgment was rendered in a justice's court in a certain county in the state in an action of which justices of the peace have civil jurisdiction, sufficiently shows the jurisdiction of the justice; the declaration stating, in addition, the amount of the judgment, the time and place of its rendition, etc.—Stiles v. Stewart, 12 Wend. 473, 27 Am. Dec. 142.

[m] (N. Y. 1845) The return of a justice to a certiorari stated that the plaintiff "declared on a judgment rendered before me on" a day named "in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants for" a sum of debt and costs mentioned, without any further statement of the proceedings in the suit in which said judgment was obtained. Held, the question arising in a case where the defendant did not appear before the justice or object, that the declaration was sufficient.—Groff v. Griswold, 1 Denio, 432.

[n] (N. Y. 1848) In declaring upon a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, the facts giving the justice jurisdiction must be specifically stated, and a mere averment of jurisdiction is not sufficient.—Barnes v. Harris, 3 Barb. 603.

[o] (N. Y. 1848) In an action on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, a declaration which omits to state any of the proceedings before the justice between the return of process and the rendering of the judgment is bad on special demurrer; but the imperfection would be cured by a verdict.—Barnes v. Harris, 3 Barb. 603.

it is not necessary to aver that the summons was returned to the justice, or that the constable made a return thereon, or that any time of day was specified in the process, or that a court was held at the time and place specified, or that the sum claimed was less than $100.—Barnes v. Harris, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 374, affirming (1848) 3 Barb. 603.

[r] (Ohio, 1833) In an action of debt on a judgment of a justice of the peace, nul tiel record and nil debet cannot be pleaded together.—Adair's Adm'r v. Rogers' Adm'r, Wright 428.

[s] (Pa. 1876) In a suit on a transcript of a judgment obtained before a justice of the peace which did not show any record of service on the defendant, the affidavit of defense set forth that the instrument sued on was not such an instrument as entitled the plaintiff to judgment. The defendant having failed to allege the want of service, a supplemental affidavit was allowed.—Veite v. McFadden, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. 63.

[t] (Wis. 1870) In an action on a judgment rendered in a justice's court, the complaint must show that the defendant or defendants in the judgment were served with process in the original suit, unless the complaint states the original cause of action.—Warner v. Simpson, 27 Wis. 115.

[a] (Ind. 1857) The provisions of 2 Rev. St. p. 45, § 83, declaring that where the existence of a judgment of a court of special jurisdiction, sued on or pleaded, is denied, the facts conferring jurisdiction on the tribunal must be proved, apply to judgments of courts of justices of the peace.—Draggoo v. Graham, 9 Ind. 212.

[b] (Ind. 1882) A transcript of a judgment of a justice of the peace which, while setting out figures apparently intended to state the amount of the judgment, contains no mark or character to show what such figures represent, whether dollars, cents, or commodities, is defective and insufficient to sustain an action.—Hopper v. Lucas, 86 Ind. 43.

[c] (Iowa, 1847) In an action on the judgment of a court of limited and special jurisdiction, such as a justice of the peace, the plaintiff will be required to show the law conferring the jurisdiction.—Gay v. Lloyd, 1 G. Greene, 78, 46 Am. Dec. 499.

[d] (Me. 1855) In debt on the judgment of a justice whose commission had expired more than two years, if the minutes on his docket, though incomplete, are such as to show that the record of a regular judgment would be authorized, they will sustain the suit.—Grosvenor v. Tarbox, 39 Me. 129.

[e] (Me. 1886) An action of debt on judgment for $14.95 debt, and $3.48 costs, is not sustained where the only record given in evidence is the word "Defaulted," in the handwriting of the justice on the back of the original writ, and the execution reciting a judgment of $14 debt, and $3.48 costs.—Bunker v. Forsaith, 4 Atl. 557.

[f] (Mich. 1844) In an action of debt on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, plaintiff proved the judgment by the docket of the justice, and defendant gave in evidence an entry of the same docket, showing that the cause was on a day named removed to the supreme court by certiorari. In rebuttal the plaintiffs showed an order of the supreme court, made about the same time, dismissing from the docket of that court a cause of the same title. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to show that the cause had not been, in fact, removed from the justice into that court and that the judgment of the justice was in full force.—Howard v. Rockwell, 1 Doug. 315.

[g] (Mich. 1870) In an action on a justice's judgment, stated in his docket to have been rendered on confession, recital of that fact in the docket not being necessary, and not conclusive, it was competent to introduce the files of the case to show the character of the writing, alleged to be the confession, on which the judgment was founded.—Dodge v. Bird, 19 Mich. 518.

[h] (Mich. 1883) Where a justice's docket recites that plaintiff declared "orally in assumpsit on the common counts, and specially in writing," it cannot, in an action on the judgment, be assumed that, in declaring specially, he added a count upon a cause of action not cognizable by the justice, or that, even if he did, the judgment was rendered upon the bad count.—Schlatterer v. Nickodemus, 50 Mich. 315, 15 N. W. 489.

[i] (Mich. 1889) In assumpsit on a judgment rendered by a justice, where it is shown that the summons and return in the suit before the justice have been lost, the entries in the justice's docket showing that the summons had been returned, and "that the same had been personally served on said defendant by reading the same, and giving a copy on the * * * day of * * * by * * *, constable," corroborated by oral proof of service on the defendant in the county, are sufficient evidence of the jurisdiction of the justice to render the judgment.—Ziegler v. Henry, 77 Mich. 480, 43 N. W. 1018.

[j] (Pa. 1831) Under the act of assembly, providing that a certified transcript of a judgment against a resident of another county may be delivered to the plaintiff for recovery of the amount before a justice of the peace in the county where defendant resides, "as in cases originally brought before him," a certified transcript of the judgment of a justice of another county is prima facie evidence on which plaintiff may recover in an action thereon before a justice of the county of defendant's residence.—Keck v. Appleback, 2 Pen. & W. 465.

[k] (Vt. 1849) Where a justice of the peace dies without leaving a record, in the form required by law, of a judgment rendered by him, a copy of the original writ in the suit, with the officer's return thereon, with a copy of the memoranda made by the justice thereon, showing that the defendant was defaulted, and the amount of damages and costs, and the issue of execution, with a copy of the execution, all certified by the clerk of the county court of the county in which the justice resided, will constitute sufficient evidence to sustain a declaration in debt on the judgment, notwithstanding it does not appear from the officer's return on the writ in the suit in which the judgment was rendered that the defendant had notice of the suit, and it does not appear from the justice's memoranda that either party appeared before him at the return day.—Ellsworth v. Learned, 21 Vt. 535.

[a] (Mich. 1884) Since Comp. Laws, §§ 5377, 5378, provide that a judgment for plaintiff in a justice's court in an action against joint debtors shall be against all of the defendants, and that it shall be conclusive evidence of the liability of the defendant who was personally served with process, but that against every other defendant "it shall be evidence only of the extent of the plaintiff's demand, after the liability of such defendant shall have been established by other evidence," an action on such judgment was properly discontinued as to a defendant who was not served in the first action, and judgment rendered against him only on whom service was had.—Holcomb v. Tift, 54 Mich. 647, 20 N. W. 627.

[b] (Mich. 1889) How. Ann. St. § 8960, provides that, when a debtor is imprisoned on execution, his creditor shall advance his board, in default of which the sheriff shall not be required to retain him in jail. In an action on a justice's judgment it appeared that plaintiff's attorney delivered an execution against the debtor's person to the sheriff, and, after paying part of defendant's board on demand, refused to pay more. Held, that it was properly charged that if plaintiff's "agent" refused to pay the expenses, and defendant was discharged, no recovery could be had; it being apparent that by the word "agent" the jury understood that the attorney was meant.—Strawsine v. Salisbury, 75 Mich. 542, 42 N. W. 966.

[b] (Ga. 1894) An execution by a justice, founded on a judgment, is prima facie valid if it conforms in all respects to the docket, though the judgment entry may be ambiguous as to the party in whose favor, or the party against whom, the judgment was rendered.—Collins v. Camp, 94 Ga. 460, 20 S. E. 356.

[c] (Ill. 1872) An execution is void which is issued on a judgment obtained in a suit brought by a town before a justice of the peace within the town, contrary to Township Organization Law, art. 12, § 6, prohibiting the town where a suit is brought for its benefit from suing before a justice of the peace within the same.—Heagle v. Wheeland, 64 Ill. 423.

[d] (Kan. 1891) Where there is no valid judgment of the justice of the peace in existence to uphold an execution, it may be attacked collaterally, as well as directly.—Olson v. Nunally, 47 Kan. 391, 28 Pac. 149, 27 Am. St. Rep. 296.

[e] (Md. 1800) An execution issued by a justice of the peace on a judgment recovered on warrant was held to be void for want of a return day.—West's Lessee v. Hughes, 1 Har. & J. 6.

[f] (Mo. 1863) Act 1855, §§ 65, 66, regulating executions, apply only to execution issued from the court of record, and not to those issued by the justice's court.—Bennett v. Vinyard, 34 Mo. 216.

[g] (N. Y. 1829) The omission of the Christian names of the plaintiffs, in a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, will not render void an execution in which the names of the parties are fully set forth.—Jennings v. Carter, 2 Wend. 446, 20 Am. Dec. 635.

[h] (N. Y. 1844) A justice's execution, founded on a judgment rendered without jurisdiction, cannot be deemed valid in favor of the party who procured it to be issued.—Cornell v. Barnes, 7 Hill, 35.

[i] (N. Y. 1870) Though a judgment of a justice of the peace is irregular, and could be reversed on appeal, an execution issued thereon is valid; the irregularity not rendering the judgment void.—Hodge v. Adee, 2 Lans. 314.

[j] (Tenn. 1872) Execution may issue, though the copy of the judgment from the justice's docket be defective.—White v. Patterson, 60 Tenn. (1 Baxt.) 450.

[k] (Tex. 1888) Rev. St. art. 1613, requiring a judgment of a justice to direct the issuance of such process as may be necessary to carry it into execution, does not apply to a judgment rendered before the statute was enacted, though the execution was issued after its enactment.—Roberts v. Connellee, 71 Tex. 11, 8 S. W. 626.

[k] (Pa. 1887) A leasehold interest may be sold by a constable on an execution issued by a justice of the peace, since leasehold estates are, like movables, subject to such seizure and sale.—Lerew v. Rinehart, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 50.

Pullum, 4 Blackf. 442.

[g] (Ind. 1841) A justice of the peace is bound to issue execution within a reasonable time after judgment, whether requested to do so or not. A delay of 45 days was held to be unreasonable.—State v. Brown, 5 Blackf. 494.

[j] (Mich. 1857) An application to a justice to issue execution within five days may be by parol.—Rash v. Whitney, 4 Mich. 495.

[k] (Mich. 1857) What is competent evidence in support of an application for the issue of an execution within five days the justice must determine. If he awards execution on improper, though colorable, evidence, it would be mere error of judgment, and not excess of jurisdiction.—Rash v. Whitney, 4 Mich. 495.

[m] (Mo. 1886) The statute, which requires that, before any execution shall be issued by a justice, he shall state in his docket an account of debt, damages, and costs, is mandatory, and a compliance with it is essential to the issuance of a valid execution.—Loth v. Faconesowich, 22 Mo. App. 68.

[p] (N. Y. 1838) A justice's execution against a party, an inhabitant having a family, issued before the expiration of the time limited by statute, is good, if applied for at the rendition of judgment, though judgment was not rendered until four days after the trial, and the execution was obtained without notice of an intention to apply for it.—Cogswell v. Cole, 21 Wend. 34.

[r] (N. Y. 1854) Authority is not given to justices of the peace to issue execution after two years from the rendition of judgment.—Morse v. Goold, 11 N. Y. (1 Kern.) 281, 62 Am. Dec. 103.

[s] (N. Y. 1856) 2 Rev. St. p. 295, § 18, providing that "actions" on justices' judgments shall be commenced within six years after the cause of action accrued, does not limit the time within which execution may be issued on such judgments, as they are liens "in the same manner and with like effect" as judgments of the court of common pleas (2 Rev. St. p. 247, § 128), the lien of which continues as against the execution debtor, for 20 years.—Waltermire v. Westover, 14 N. Y. (4 Kern.) 16.

[t] (N. Y. 1894) Code Civ. Proc. § 1380, provides that execution may be issued on a judgment after expiration of one year from death of the judgment debtor, except that, where the lien of the judgment was created as prescribed in section 1251, execution cannot be issued until three years after letters testamentary or of administration have been granted. Held, that execution on a justice's judgment may be issued after one year from the judgment debtor's death, as justices' judgments are made liens by section 3017, and not by section 1251.—In re Wallace's Estate (Sur.) 6 Misc. Rep. 397, 26 N. Y. Supp. 774; In re Phelps, Id.

[u] (Ohio, 1843) A justice of the peace may issue execution within the time allowed for putting in a plea for stay of execution, if specially directed. After that time he must issue execution without special direction.—Sharpless v. Taylor, 12 Ohio, 243.

[v] (Ohio, 1843) A justice of the peace is not bound to issue execution, without special order of the judgment creditor, until the time allowed for putting in bail for stay of execution has expired.—Sharpless v. Taylor, 12 Ohio, 243.

[w] (Pa. 1881) An alderman or justice has a right to issue execution, where the same is demanded, at any time after the rendition and entry of judgment, and need not wait until the time for appeal has expired.—Knapp v. Stoner, 18 Lanc. Bar, 67.

[x] (Wis. 1865) A judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace in February, 1859, and execution issued and levied in October, 1861. By the statute in 1859 (Rev. St. c. 120, § 175), execution upon a judgment rendered in a justice's court could not issue after two years from its entry. Held, that though chapter 140, Laws 1861, allowing the issue of execution within five years after judgment rendered, was probably intended to apply only to courts of record, yet under chapter 286, Laws 1863, the levy of the execution in this case can be sustained.—Selsby v. Redlon, 19 Wis. 17.

[a] (Ala. 1847) An execution issued by a justice of the peace from one county to another may be certified, either by the clerk of the county to which it is sent, or by any justice of that county, who is satisfied of the genuineness of the signature of the justice issuing it.—Jordan v. Mead, 12 Ala. 247.

[b] (Del. 1841) An execution cannot be issued by a justice of the peace in one county on a transcript of a judgment before a justice of another county. The proper course is by scire facias.—Lofland v. Carnnon, 3 Har. 320.

[c] (Pa.) A judgment may be transferred from the docket of a justice in one county to the docket of a justice in another county for the purpose of issuing execution in such county.—(1866) Saul v. Geist, 1 Woodw. Dec. 306; (1880) McKinney v. Lingley, 2 Kulp, 454.

[d] (Pa. 1886) A transcript of a judgment from a justice's docket cannot be entered, under Act March 20, 1810, § 17, for purposes of execution, on the docket of a justice of another county, in which defendant does not reside or cannot be found, that act expressly limiting entry to counties in which defendant may reside; and the fact that he may have property therein, and that jurisdiction is given justices by Act April 15, 1845, to issue attachment executions, does not enlarge their jurisdiction in the respect referred to.—Hintermeister v. Organ Co., 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 268.

[e] (Tenn. 1834) Where a justice of the peace of one county issues an execution on a judgment rendered by a justice for another county, the execution must be certified according to Act 1805, c. 66.—Gibbs v. Bourland, 14 Tenn. (6 Yerg.) 481.

[f] (Tenn. 1836) A justice of the peace rendered judgment in one county, and an execution thereon, properly certified, was taken to another county, on which a justice of the peace in the latter county rendered another judgment. Held, that the justice had no authority, under Act 1805, c. 66, § 4, to render the latter judgment.—Perry v. Royle, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 18.

[g] (Tenn. 1836) A justice of the peace of one county rendered a judgment on an execution sent from another county, on which an execution issued, reciting the first judgment. Held that, though the justice had no power to render the last judgment, yet he had power, under Acts 1805, c. 66, § 4, to issue the execution founded on the first judgment, and that the execution so issued was regular.—Perry v. Royle, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 18.

[h] (Tenn. 1872) A certificate to an execution, so as to justify its reissue in another county, must show that the person who rendered the judgment was an acting justice of the county at the time of the rendition of such judgment.—State v. Bettick, 60 Tenn. (1 Baxt.) 209.

[i] (Tenn. 1874) Code, § 3073, provides that on the production of an execution on a justice's judgment from another county, accompanied by a certificate of the clerk of the county court of that county that the justice by whom such judgment was rendered and the execution issued was at the time an acting justice of the peace in his county, any justice of the peace may issue an execution for the original judgment and costs. Held, that an execution issued by a justice on the production of an execution from the justice's judgment from another county, in which the certificate of the county clerk did not state that the justice rendering the judgment was an acting justice of the peace at the time of its rendition, is void, since the statutory proceedings must be strictly pursued.—Moore v. Lynch, 63 Tenn. (4 Baxt.) 287.

[j] (Tenn. 1886) Under New Code, § 3786, requiring that, in order for execution to issue on a justice's judgment in a county other than where judgment was rendered, the judgment shall be accompanied by the certificate of the clerk of the county court that the justice by whom the judgment was rendered and the execution issued was at the time an acting justice of the peace of his county, a certificate which stated that the person who rendered the judgment was an acting justice of the peace at the time of the rendition of the same was sufficient, as the context fairly implied that he was then "justice of the county in which the judgment was rendered," and was therefore a substantial compliance with the statute.—State v. Hood, 84 Tenn. (16 Lea) 235.

[a] (Ala. 1886) Where an execution issued by a justice of the peace fails to show in whose favor it was issued, it is void on its face, and an indorsement on the back of such an execution, being no part of it, cannot be looked to in aid of the defect.—Cooper v. Jacobs, 82 Ala. 411, 2 South. 832.

[b] (Ala. 1890) Under Code 1886, § 3345, providing that a justice must, unless otherwise directed, after the lapse of five days from rendition of judgment, issue a writ of fieri facias for the satisfaction of the judgment, the fact that the writ is issued before the lapse of the five days does not render the writ void, and is of no avail in a collateral impeachment of the proceedings under it.—Waldrup v. Friedman, 90 Ala. 157, 7 South. 510, 24 Am. St. Rep. 775.

[c] (Ala. 1893) Entries on the docket of a justice of the peace, and his indorsements on the back of an execution issued by him, are not admissible in collateral proceedings in a chancery court, founded on such execution, to show that the execution, though bearing a certain date, was in fact issued at another date.—Friedman v. Waldrop, 97 Ala. 434, 12 South. 427.

[d] (Ga. 1854) An execution issued by a justice need not show on its face all that may be necessary to give a justice's court jurisdiction.—Hamilton v. Moreland, 15 Ga. 343.

[e] (Ga. 1892) On certiorari to a justice of the peace, where it appears that the judgment was rendered at the December term of the justice's court, and the execution shows that it was rendered on the 20th of December, there is no variance between the execution and the judgment.—Steele v. Cochran, 88 Ga. 296, 14 S. E. 617.

[f] (Ind. 1844) An execution issued by a justice of the peace, reciting a judgment for $102.36, without showing how much was for debt and how much for interest thereon, was held not to be void, as it will be presumed that the justice, in rendering such judgment, was acting within his jurisdiction.—State v. Westbrook, 7 Blackf. 138.

[g] (Ind. 1845) An execution issued by a justice of the peace, reciting a judgment rendered by him for $102, with interest and costs, was held to be valid.—State v. Burnside, 7 Blackf. 577.

[h] (Ky. 1827) An execution issued by a justice of the peace, with his signature affixed to an indorsement that no security would be taken, there being no signature at the foot of the writ, was held to be a sufficient signing.—Nichols v. Taylor, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 325.

[i] (Ky. 1887) The presumption is in favor of the regularity of an execution issued by a justice of the peace.—Black v. Steele, 6 S. W. 23.

[j] (Me. 1834) An execution issued by a justice of the peace, without having a seal affixed to it, does not authorize an officer to seize on or dispose of goods seized by virtue thereof.—Porter v. Haskell, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 177.

[k] (Mass. 1811) A justice of the peace, in taking a recognizance for the payment of a debt, pursuant to St. 1782, c. 21, and in issuing execution thereon, exercises no judicial power, but acts as a ministerial officer merely. If, therefore, there be any material variation between the execution and recognizance on which it is awarded, as if the execution misrecite the date of the recognizance or the time of payment, or issue for a different sum than that acknowledged to be due by the recognizance, the execution will be void.—Albee v. Ward, 8 Mass. 79.

[l] (Mass. 1858) An execution issued on a judgment of a justice of the peace, which is signed by him as justice of the peace, but recites that the judgment was recovered before him as "trial justice" (when there is no statute in force creating such an office), and accidentally omits the initial of the debtor's middle name, is void.—Palmer v. Crosby, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 46.

[m] (Mich. 1851) The omission in a justice's execution of the year in which the judgment was rendered will not vitiate the execution, it being in all other respects regular.—Perkins v. Spalding, 2 Mich. 157.

[n] (Mich. 1867) Where the entry of a justice of the peace on his docket as to the issuance of an execution complies with the statute, it will be presumed that the execution was issued at the request of the plaintiff.—Peck v. Cavell, 16 Mich. 9.

[o] (Mo. 1860) The officer receiving an execution from a justice of the peace should indorse thereon the time of its receipt.—Gott v. Williams, 29 Mo. 461.

[p] (Mo. 1895) Rev. St. 1889, § 6305, provides that before any execution shall be delivered by a justice he shall state in his docket, and on the back of the execution, an account of the debt, damages, and costs, and the rate of interest on the judgment. Held, that a failure to so indorse the execution does not render it void.—Buis v. Cooper, 63 Mo. App. 196, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 746.

[r] (N. Y. 1870) Though Acts 1865, c. 616, expressly provides for the form of an execution to be issued in replevin in a justice court, where the judgment is for the delivery of the possession of the property, neither such statute nor any other provides for the form, nor expressly authorizes an execution, where the property has been delivered to plaintiff and the judgment is merely that he is entitled to possession and for costs. Hence the justice has authority in such case to issue an execution commanding the officer to levy the costs on the goods and chattels of defendant, which is the form prescribed generally by 2 Rev. St. 1836, § 131, for execution on judgments in justice courts.—Connors v. Joyce, 3 Lans. 315.

[s] (N. Y. 1875) An execution issued by a justice of the peace, who has general jurisdiction to issue executions in his court, need not state facts necessary to give the justice jurisdiction of the action in which the judgment upon which it is issued is entered.—Field v. Parker, 4 Hun, 342.

[t] (N. C. 1844) Where the execution of a justice of the peace is on the same paper with the judgment, it must be considered as referring to the judgment, and is made certain as to the debt, interest, and costs, and the person who recovered the same.—McLean v. Paul, 27 N. C. 22.

[v] (Vt. 1838) An execution issued on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace for the county of A., dated in a town in said county, is not void because a different venue is laid in the margin.—Avery v. Lewis, 10 Vt. 332, 33 Am. Dec. 203.

[w] (Vt. 1865) The justice by whom judgment was rendered died before execution issued, and the execution was signed by D. as justice of the peace, when he was in fact county clerk. Held, that a levy on real estate by virtue of such execution was void.—Perry v. Whipple, 38 Vt. 278.

[x] (Va. 1845) An execution issued by a justice of the peace of one county is valid, though it purports to be issued in another county, if in fact it was issued in the proper county.—Davis v. Davis, 2 Grat. 363.

[y] (Wis. 1852) An execution issued by a justice of the peace must strictly conform to the form prescribed by the statute.—Streeter v. Frank, 4 Chand. 93, 3 Pin. 386.

§ 431. —— Directions for levy and return.

[a] (Ala. 1886) An execution on a justice's judgment is not void because addressed, "To the sheriff of said county" and levied by him.—Sandlin v. Anderson, 82 Ala. 330, 3 South. 28.

[b] (Ala. 1890) Though an execution issued by a justice of the peace is made returnable at a date beyond the 60 days prescribed by statute, it may be enforced within the time in which it should properly have been made returnable.—Mitchell v. Corbin, 91 Ala. 599, 8 South. 810.

[c] (Ind. 1872) A paper issued by a justice of the peace to a constable, reciting the rendition of a judgment, as appears of record on his docket, and adding the words "by levy and sale of the goods" of defendant, "and make return thereof within six months from date," without other words of command or direction, will not justify a levy by the constable.—Gaskill v. Aldrich, 41 Ind. 338.

[d] (N. J. 1846) The command in an execution issued in a justice's court, requiring the officer executing it, "for the want of sufficient goods to * * * make the sum," to receive an inventory of all of defendant's goods, is unauthorized and unlawful, as it departs from the command prescribed in the act constituting such court.—Kipp v. Chamberlin, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 656.

[e] (N. Y. 1830) An execution on a justice's judgment for a sum not exceeding $50 cannot be made returnable in 60, instead of 90, days.—Toof v. Bently, 5 Wend. 276.

[f] (N. Y. 1853) Executions issued by justices of the peace, as well as by courts of record, are required to be made returnable in 60 days.—Bander v. Burley, 15 Barb. 604.

[g] (N. Y. 1853) Code 1852, § 64, rule 12, providing that an execution issued by a justice of the peace shall be returnable in 60 days, repeals inconsistent statutory provisions, as especially provided by section 468.—Bander v. Burley, 15 Barb. 604.

[h] (N. C. 1821) Where a magistrate issues an execution in the first instance against goods and chattels, lands and tenements, though irregular, under the act of 1794, it is cured by the constable's return that, in default of chattels, he had levied on land.—Lanier v. Stone, 8 N. C. 329.

[i] (N. C. 1825) Where a justice of the peace enters a judgment on the back of a warrant, and writes, "Execute and sell according to law," these words will be deemed an execution.—Armstrong v. Bailey, 10 N. C. 463.

[j] (Pa. 1825) A justice issued an execution, directed to the constable of the town of B., distant four miles from the township of N., where the defendant resided, there being another township of B. between that and the town of B. Held that, though there was an acting constable in the township of N., and also of B., yet the execution was not for that reason void. The provisions of the statute on this head are only directory, and the justice is to judge who is the constable most convenient to the defendant.—Smith v. Schell, 13 Serg. & R. 336.

[k] (Pa.) It is not necessary that a day should be mentioned in the execution issued by a justice of the peace on which return is to be made by the constable.—(1831) Lewis v. Jones, 1 Ashm. 53; (1888) Evans v. Howell, 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 285.

[l] (Pa. 1831) An execution directed to "any constable of the county," instead of being directed to the constable of the "ward, district, or township where the defendant resides, or the next most convenient constable to defendant," is not void, but may be legally executed by the proper constable of the district.—Garrigues v. Jackson, 1 Ashm. 218.

[m, n] (Pa. 1888) An execution issued by a justice of the peace, returnable on a day named, being 30 days after date of issuance, instead of 20 days, will not be set aside on certiorari, where the justice makes affidavit, attached to the transcript, that naming a date 30 days after issuance of the writ, in place of 20 days, was a clerical error.—Evans v. Howell, 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 285, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 313.

[o] (Tenn. 1835) When a justice of the peace dies or resigns, and his papers are turned over to the clerk of the county court, an execution issued by the clerk on a judgment rendered by such justice must be made returnable to the clerk of the county court, and not to the county court.—White v. Davenport, 15 Tenn. (7 Yerg.) 475.

[p] (Tenn. 1848) A justice of the peace indorsed the following on an execution: "For want of an officer, I do hereby deputize A. B. to execute the within process, and return it according to law." Held, that this was a valid deputation, and conferred on A. B. the power to execute the precept.—Hampton v. Allison, 28 Tenn. (9 Humph.) 113.

[q] (Vt. 1827) Under St. 1797, p. 130, c. 9, § 21, conferring on the justices of the peace jurisdiction to render judgment on confession, all executions issued on such judgments must be made returnable within 60 days from date.—Ex parte Hatch, 2 Aikens, 28.

[r] (Vt. 1837) An execution issued by a justice of the peace, on a judgment in which the damages do not exceed the sum of $53, should be made returnable in 60 days, though the damages and costs together exceed that sum.—Allen v. Warren, 9 Vt. 203.

[s] (Vt. 1842) A debtor in an appealed suit tendered a judgment by confession, in pursuance of the act in addition to the justice act passed in 1821, for more than $53 damages. Held, that the execution issued on such judgment should have been made returnable in 120 days.—Jameson v. Paddock, 14 Vt. 491.

[t] (Vt. 1869) Under Rev. St. p. 174, § 44, a justice's execution, exceeding $53 damages, should be made returnable in 120 days, even though on a judgment rendered on confession.—Spaulding v. Robbins, 42 Vt. 90.

[a] (Ark. 1861) An amendment made by order of the justice issuing an execution, changing its direction to another township and to another constable, though irregular, does not render the process null and void.—Atkinson v. Gatcher, 23 Ark. 101.

[b] (Ind. 1850) Justices of the peace have power to correct clerical mistakes in executions.—Silner v. Butterfield, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 24.

[c] (Me. 1834) A justice of the peace has no authority, after a sale of goods seized on an execution issued by him, and a return of the execution, and action commenced against the officer, to amend the execution by affixing a seal which was originally wanting.—Porter v. Haskell, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 177.

[d] (N. Y. 1813) Though process issued by a justice may be altered by his direction, yet a general authority by him to a constable to alter the dates of executions, instead of renewing them, or to fill up or alter process, is void.—Pierce v. Hubbard, 10 Johns. 405.

[e] (N. Y. 1830) A justice of the peace has no power to make an amendment in an execution issued by him after it had been executed.—Toof v. Bently, 5 Wend. 276.

Power to renew execution after expiration of term, see ante, § 204 [e].

[a] (Ala. 1847) An alias execution, issued by a justice of the peace, after the death of the defendant, is an absolute nullity, and no rights can be acquired under it.—Henderson v. Gandy's Adm'r, 11 Ala. 431.

[b] (Del. 1859) Where there has been a fi. fa., and a levy thereon to the amount of the debt and costs, a justice cannot issue a fi. fa., with a clause of attachment on the judgment, until after the former levy and execution is disposed of.—Jacquett v. Lowber, 2 Houst. 203.

[c] (Del. 1861) Where a fi. fa. has been issued on a judgment of a justice of the peace, and not returned, another fi. fa. and venditioni exponas cannot be issued on it without first resorting to a writ of sci. fa. to enable defendant to show that the debt has been levied and collected on the former writ.—Purnell v. Semans, 2 Houst. 399.

[d] (Ill. 1862) There is no lawful mode of renewing an execution, except there has been a return to that already issued by the officer, of his doings thereon. A justice of the peace cannot renew an execution by any indorsement of his upon it.—Calhoun County Court v. Buck, 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 440.

[e] (Ill. 1876) Where an affidavit is filed by a plaintiff, and an execution issued thereon by a justice of the peace inside of 20 days after the date of the judgment, and the execution is returned inside of the 20 days, the same affidavit will be sufficient to authorize the issuing of an alias execution.—Johnson v. Holloway, 82 Ill. 334.

[g] (Ind. 1864) Where a constable levies on property to satisfy an execution from a justice's court, and advertises it for sale, but fails to sell, and returns the writ, with his proceedings indorsed thereon, and the justice issues another execution, and fails to append to it a copy of the return made to the first, his failure so to do will not render the second execution void, but only voidable, and it may be set aside on motion before the justice; but, if no such motion was made, all acts done under it will be valid.—Culbertson v. Milhollin, 22 Ind. 362, 85 Am. Dec. 428.

[i] (Mich. 1874) Under the statute (Comp. Laws, § 5410) an execution on a justice's judgment may be renewed, after having been returned unsatisfied, at any time when a new one could be lawfully issued; and the renewal writ will have the same force for 60 days succeeding the renewal that a new writ would have.—Bigalow v. Barre, 30 Mich. 1.

[j] (Mich. 1896) Under 2 How. Ann. St. § 6975, relating to the issuance of execution by justices of the peace, and authorizing a second execution only in case the first is returned unsatisfied, a second execution issued by a justice before a prior execution had been returned unsatisfied is void.—Friver v. McNaughton, 110 Mich. 22, 67 N. W. 978.

[k] (Mo. 1890) Rev. St. 1879, § 3018, providing that "if any execution be not satisfied it may, at the request of the plaintiff, be renewed from time to time by the justice," by indorsement to that effect, does not authorize the justice to renew an execution which has been returned unsatisfied, at the expiration of the time allowed therefor by statute.—State v. Boettger, 39 Mo. App. 684.

[l] (N. Y. 1815) A justice may renew an execution issued by him, without a return of nulla bona indorsed thereon. An indorsement on the original writ, "This execution renewed," is all that is necessary, and is evidence that the constable had satisfied the justice that there were no goods on which he could levy.—Wickham v. Miller, 12 Johns. 320.

[m] (N. Y. 1828) A justice's execution may be renewed without a formal return of nulla bona, and it may be renewed after the return day, from time to time, at the option of the plaintiff.—Visger v. Ward, 1 Wend. 551.

[n] (N. Y. 1830) The six months allowed for the renewal of an execution by a justice of the peace after his removal from office are held to be calendar, and not lunar, months.—Parsons v. Chamberlin, 4 Wend. 512.

[o] (N. Y. 1830) The expiration of the time for which a justice is appointed is considered a removal, within the meaning of the act in respect to the renewal of executions.—Parsons v. Chamberlin, 4 Wend. 512.

[p] (N. Y. 1831) A renewal of an execution need not be signed by a justice. Any memorandum in the handwriting of the justice, on any part of the execution, indicating his intention, and a redelivery to the constable, is sufficient.—Preston v. Leavitt, 6 Wend. 663.

[q] (N. Y. 1845) An execution from the justice's court may be renewed by the justice while it remains unsatisfied, even though sufficient property to satisfy it has been levied on, and is held under the levy, where there is not time enough remaining to advertise and sell.—People v. Hopson, 1 Denio, 574.

[r] (N. Y. 1853) Under Rev. St. tit. 4, c. 2, § 145, providing that, if an execution issued by a justice be not satisfied, it may from time to time be renewed by the justice issuing the same, by an indorsement thereon, which shall renew the execution, where issued on a judgment for less than $25, for 30 days, "and no longer," a levy by the constable more than 30 days after such a renewal is without authority.—Bander v. Burley, 15 Barb. 604.

[s] (N. Y. 1853) Executions issued by justices of the peace may be renewed, if issued on a judgment for more than $25, exclusive of costs, for 90 days, and for 30 days in all other cases, and no longer.—Bander v. Burley, 15 Barb. 604.

[t] (N. Y. 1854) Though a justice of the peace cannot issue execution after two years from the rendition of judgment, an execution having been issued and returned unsatisfied, he may renew it after the two years have elapsed.—Morse v. Goold, 11 N. Y. (1 Kern.) 281, 62 Am. Dec. 103.

[u] (N. Y. 1870) Where an execution issued by a justice of the peace is levied on property of which defendant has possession, but in which he has no leviable interest, and defendant, before expiration of the execution, purchases the property, the lien attaching to the defendant's interest acquired by the purchase is kept good by a renewal of the execution, under 2 Rev. St. pp. 251, 252, § 145, providing that a renewal of an execution issued by a justice of the peace shall be deemed to renew it in full force in all respects.—Hodge v. Adee, 2 Lans. 314.

[v] (N. Y. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3025, 3027, providing that an execution issued by a justice of the peace must be made returnable in 60 days, and that, on return unsatisfied, the justice may issue a new execution, or, by indorsement, may renew the original execution for 60 days, a renewal for 30 days is void.—Winne v. Houghtaling, 84 Hun, 168, 32 N. Y. Supp. 450.

[ww] (Ohio, 1854) Where a justice of the peace altered the date of the first execution on a judgment before him, for the purpose of converting it into an alias, though such proceeding may be irregular, the alias writ is not void, and a constable may lawfully proceed to execute the precept.—Faris v. State, 3 Ohio St. 159.

[x] (Ohio, 1857) Where a return has been made on an execution issued by a justice of the peace of "No goods in the township" where the justice resides, with a suggestion that there are goods of the "judgment debtor," in another township of the same county, an execution issued to any constable of either of the two townships, though not strictly in accordance with the statute, is not therefore void.—Lyon v. Fish, 20 Ohio, 100.

[xx] (Pa. 1846) Where the transcript of an alderman does not show that the first execution has been returned, it is error for another alderman to issue an alias execution thereon.—Moore v. Risden, 3 Clark, 409, 5 Pa. Law J. 430.

[y] (S. C. 1837) A magistrate's execution, after the lapse of a year and a day from the time it issued, must be revived, in order to give authority to levy and sell.—Bird v. Stone, 3 Hill, Law, 282.

[yy] (Tenn. 1872) Where, after levy on lands of an execution issued by a justice, the court, on a showing that defendant owned certain personal property which might be reached by execution, ordered a stay of proceedings on the levy, and remanded the case for issuance of an alias writ by the justice, such justice may by a writ of procedendo be required to issue the alias execution.—McGavock v. Schneider, 54 Tenn. (7 Heisk.) 467.

[z] (Vt. 1802) It is, it seems, an unauthorized proceeding for a justice of the peace to indorse an execution as renewed, so as to run beyond its original term.—State v. Campbell, 2 Tyler, 181.

[zz] (Vt. 1847) An execution issued by a justice of the peace, which is renewed by erasing the date and inserting a new date, after it has been delivered to an officer for collection, but before service has been made, and within its life, is not thereby rendered absolutely void, so that it may be set aside on audita querela.—Sawyer v. Doane, 19 Vt. 598.

[a] (Ala. 1890) Under Code 1886, § 3345, providing that an execution issued by a justice shall be returnable not more than 60 days from the date of its issue, a levy thereafter made, and all subsequent proceedings founded on it, are void.—Waldrup v. Friedman, 90 Ala. 157, 7 South. 510, 24 Am. St. Rep. 775.

[b] (Ala. 1895) Since the passage of Act Feb. 26, 1875 (Code, § 811), authorizing sheriffs to execute all mesne and final process which is required of constables, a sheriff may levy on lands an execution issued by a justice of the peace.—Mickle v. Montgomery, 111 Ala. 415, 20 South. 441.

[c] (Ark. 1872) An execution on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace is a lien on all goods and chattels of the defendant in the execution, within the limits of the township to which the execution was directed, from the time of its delivery to the constable.—Isbell v. Epps, 28 Ark. 35.

[d] (Ga. 1847) It is necessary to the validity of a sale of land or negroes by a constable on a magistrate's execution that it should appear by the entries on the execution that there was no other property of defendant subject to execution, or that defendant, being in possession, pointed out such property to the officer.—Hopkins v. Burch, 3 Ga. (3 Kelly) 222.

[e] (Ga. 1858) Where a judgment obtained in one county is afterwards levied on real estate in another county, a return having previously been made by a constable, other than the one making the final levy, that no personal property on which to levy could be found in the first county, it will be presumed, in support of the second levy, that the first return was made by a constable of the county in which the judgment was recovered.—Hollingsworth v. Dickey, 24 Ga. 434.

[f] (Ga. 1883) Land cannot be sold under the execution of a justice's court on which there was no entry of "No personal property to be found," since Code, § 4172, so provides.—Robinson v. Burge, 71 Ga. 526.

[g] (Ga. 1891) Where the plaintiff in fi. fa. has filed a deed to his debtor, under section 1969 et seq. of the Code, for the purpose of having land levied upon, which had been conveyed to him by his debtor as security for the debt, the sheriff, though the fi. fa. issued from a justice's court, may make the levy, by virtue of the act of October 17, 1885, allowing sheriffs to execute executions issuing out of justices' courts, etc., without making a search for personal property, or making an entry upon the fi. fa. that no such property can be found, since, the object being to enforce the fi. fa. against the specific land pledged to secure the debt, the general rule as to the collection of fi. fas. issued from justices' courts does not apply.—Bennett v. McConnell, 88 Ga. 177, 14 S. E. 208.

[h] (Ga. 1894) Until an execution issued from a justice's court has been indorsed "Nulla bona," a constable of another county has no authority to make any levy or return thereunder.—Formby v. Shackleford, 94 Ga. 670, 21 S. E. 711.

[i] (Ind. 1845) Where an execution is levied by a constable, he may, when informed of the invalidity of the writ, abandon the levy.—Ezra v. Manlove, 7 Blackf. 389.

[j] (Ind. 1845) If, after the issuing of a fi. fa. by a justice of the peace and before its execution, plaintiff dies, the writ may still be executed.—Murray v. Buchanan, 7 Blackf. 549.

[k] (Ky. 1833) A constable is not bound to execute or return an execution issued by one justice on the judgment of another.—Clifford v. Cabiness, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 384.

[l] (La. 1840) The pointing out by a defendant in a justice's execution of immovables to the sheriff will, perhaps, authorize him to distrain without first seizing movables, but not to sell. They should be hired out under the justice's direction for a sufficient amount to pay the judgment creditor.—Freeman v. Watts, 15 La. 476.

[m] (Mo. 1845) A person specially appointed constable under Rev. Code 1835, p. 352, art. 2, § 20, is to be regarded as deputy of the proper constable, in respect to the lien of executions in the hands of the proper constable, and can gain no advantage over the latter by taking a prior possession of goods in the latter's township.—Jones v. Hoppie, 9 Mo. 173.

[n] (Mo. 1876) Under present laws a justice of the peace cannot deputize a private person to execute final process.—Huff v. Alsup, 64 Mo. 51.

[o] (N. J. 1831) Executions issued from justices' courts are liens only on the personal property, and where they are sought to be enforced against a trust fund arising in part from the sale of personalty and in part from the sale of realty, and the fund created from the sale of personalty is exhausted, they will stand, as to the fund created by the sale of the realty, on the footing of the general debts.—State Bank v. Marsh, 1 N. J. Eq. (Saxt.) 288.

[p] (N. J. 1888) Section 67 of the justice's court act (Revision, p. 552), requiring a constable to take a written inventory of property levied on, is directory only, and if, under an execution out of a justice's court, he takes actual possession of a chattel, or places a keeper in possession, it will amount to a valid levy, though no inventory be taken.—State v. Martin, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 148, 16 Atl. 189.

[r] (N. J. 1889) Justice's Court Act, § 67, provides, with reference to the levy of executions, that the constable shall take an inventory in writing of so much of the property of defendants as he means and intends to levy on, which inventory and levy shall be annexed to the said execution, and shall at all times be received as evidence of the levy, and that the property so levied upon shall be bound from the time of such levy. Held, that the object of the act was to make an inventory essential to a valid levy when the property was left in defendant's hands as bailee, but not to render the levy sufficient without an actual or constructive seizure of the goods; and that where a constable, having in his hands an execution issued by a justice of the peace against the goods of an insolvent corporation, before decree of insolvency actually made, went to the factory of defendant, where the goods were locked up, and, without effecting an entrance, made an incomplete inventory of them by partial view through a small opening in a window, the attempt to make a levy was a failure, and created no lien on the goods, as against the official receiver.—Nelson v. Van Gazelle Valve Mfg. Co., 45 N. J. Eq. (18 Stew.) 594, 17 Atl. 943.

[ss] (N. Y. 1816) And the advertisement may be made on a day subsequent to the levy, provided both were within the 20 days.—Wylie v. Hyde, 13 Johns. 249.

[t] (N. Y. 1816) The priority of executions in the justice's court depends on the time of the actual levy, and not on the time of delivering the execution to the constable.—Wylie v. Hyde, 13 Johns. 249.

[tt] (N. Y. 1823) The same rules of law which govern sheriffs in the levy of executions from the higher courts govern constables in the levy of executions of a justice, except where some statute intervenes.—Pixley v. Butts, 2 Cow. 421.

[v] (N. C. 1828) A levy cannot be made on land under a justice's judgment more than three months after the date of the execution.—McEachin v. McFarland, 12 N. C. 444.

[vv] (N. C. 1836) A justice of the peace is not authorized by Rev. St. c. 24, § 10, to appoint a special constable to execute a fieri facias.—Garlick v. Jones, 48 N. C. 404.

[w] (N. C. 1863) As an agreement by A. that B. might put a sawmill, etc., on his land, for the purpose of carrying on the business of sawing lumber, "as long as B. wished," gave B. a life interest in the land necessary to the business, determinable at his option, this interest, and the mills erected according to the privilege, were not liable to be sold by virtue of an execution under a justice's judgment, without an order of court.—Stancel v. Calvert, 60 N. C. 104.

[ww] (Pa. 1861) Where executions issued on two judgments before a justice of the peace were returned the day after the levy, in consequence of appeals taken in each case, their lien on the goods levied on was destroyed, and they were not entitled to be paid out of the proceeds of the same property, subsequently sold by the sheriff on the execution of another creditor, though the appeals taken by defendant were not entered up by the first return day of the ensuing term, as required by law.—Appeal of Cope, 39 Pa. (3 Wright) 284.

[x] (Pa. 1891) Under Act March 20, 1810, when an execution has been issued by a justice of the peace, the constable should levy and sell whenever practicable within 20 days from the teste of the writ; but, if he levy on any day within the 20, the lien will continue for 20 days from the date of levy, and during the lien he may sell without an alias writ, though the return day have passed, subject, however, to liability to be charged with the debts and costs under section 12, unless he can show satisfactory reasons why he did not proceed earlier.—Page v. Gardner (Com. Pl.) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 577.

[y] (Tenn. 1870) Though it may not be essential to the validity of a condemnation and sale of land on a justice's judgment that the papers be returned and the condemnation had at the next term of the circuit court, unless they are returned within a reasonable time, the lien acquired by the levy is lost, and a bona fide purchaser from the debtor by sale made and deed registered after levy, and before execution, will acquire a good title.—Anderson v. Talbot, 48 Tenn. (1 Heisk.) 407.

[yy] (Tenn. 1883) A justice of the peace has no authority to appoint a special constable to execute a fi. fa., except in case of a suit pending.—State v. McKittrick, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 476.

[z] (Vt. 1842) St. 1821, providing that an execution issued on a justice's judgment for more than $53 should be made returnable within 120 days, is not merely directory; and, where an execution on such a judgment is made returnable in 60 days, the lien on the property attached on the writ is lost.—Jameson v. Paddock, 14 Vt. 491.

[zz] (Va. 1826) An execution issued by a justice of the peace from the court of a county or corporation in Virginia cannot be served by a constable, except in the city of Richmond.—Stokes v. Perkins, 4 Rand. 356.

Liability of officer for abuse of property, see "Sheriffs and Constables," III., IV.

[a] (Ala. 1842) Where judgment was rendered against a defendant, and the justice entered in his docket: "Stayed 60 days. H. N. W., Security," but no stay bond was given, and execution issued against the defendant and security, which was levied on property of the defendant, the "security" becoming surety in a forthcoming bond, and afterwards execution issued on the bond, which was levied on the property of the security, it was held that though the first execution was void as to the security, it was valid as to the defendant, and that the execution issued on the forthcoming bond was valid.—Gilleland v. Ware, 4 Ala. 414.

[b] (Ill. 1885) A constable having an execution in his hands which may be a lien on property has no right thereunder to replevy the property.—Persels v. McConnell, 16 Ill. App. (16 Bradw.) 526.

[c] (Ind. 1829) Though the condition of the delivery bond be to deliver the property to the person to whom the execution was directed, without mentioning his name, yet the bond is valid, and the ambiguity may be explained by extrinsic evidence.—Evans v. Shoemaker, 2 Blackf. 237.

[d] (Ind. 1829) Where the forthcoming bond is conditioned to return the property in as good order as it was when the bond was given, the only question, on executing a writ of inquiry, is the amount of the plaintiff's damages; and in the absence of evidence as to the value of the property, the amount of the execution is the rule of damages.—Chinn v. Perry, 2 Blackf. 268.

[f] (N. Y. 1812) If a constable, after taking goods in execution, deliver them to A. on his giving a receipt promising to redeliver them on demand, and the constable does not demand and sell them within 30 days, he loses all claim and title to the possession thereof.—Brown v. Cook, 9 Johns. 361.

[g] (N. Y. 1871) A constable has such an interest on property upon which he has levied by virtue of executions as will enable him to maintain an action to recover the possession thereof from one who has purchased the same of the defendant in the executions, after levy.—Rue v. Perry, 63 Barb. 40.

§ 436. Stay of execution.

As barring action on judgment, see ante, § 419 [f, h].

Supersedeas or stay of execution on appeal, see post, § 606.

[a] (Ark. 1887) After a justice has issued a supersedeas staying an execution against property claimed as exempt, he has no power to recall it, and the execution plaintiff, if aggrieved, must appeal to the circuit court, as provided by Mansf. Dig. § 3006.—Cox v. Lee, 50 Ark. 456, 8 S. W. 400.

[b] (Del. 1844) If a suit before a justice should be commenced by summons, the justice should allow the freeholder's stay of execution, unless oath be made, etc.—Elligood v. Cannon, 4 Har. 176.

[c] (Ind. 1842) A judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered prior to December 1, 1839, and which had been replevied, is not within the act of 1840, authorizing an additional replevy as to judgments rendered previous to its enactment, and which had not been replevied under the law then in force, and as to judgments rendered by a justice subsequent to December 1, 1839, which has been replevied.—McIntosh v. Shotwell, 6 Blackf. 281.

[d] (Ohio, 1844) A bail may be put in for a stay of execution on a judgment before a justice of the peace, after the 10 days have expired, with the consent of plaintiff.—Whalon's Adm'r v. Glenn, 1 Ohio Dec. 57, 1 West. Law J. 396.

[e] (Pa. 1831) A freeholder defendant, after judgment against him before a justice, is entitled to a stay of execution upon the security of his real estate, and no time is prescribed at or before which the allegation of freehold must be made; he can show that he owns real estate, at any time, either before or after execution has issued. If he neglects to suggest his privilege, an execution may be issued against him; but on the payment of the costs which have accrued on the execution, the magistrate should supersede it, and grant to the defendant his lawful privilege.—Stiles v. Powers, 1 Ashm. 407.

[f] (Pa. 1879) Though the fact that the defendant in an action before a justice of the peace has been attached in an attachment execution by a creditor of the plaintiff for the money owing to plaintiff is not sufficient to stay the action against him, the execution will be stayed until the determination of the attachment execution.—Dorsel v. Hamilton, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 123.

[g] (Tenn. 1837) Two justices of the peace had no authority to suspend an execution on the ground that the judgment has been paid after its rendition.—Rogers v. Ferrell, 18 Tenn. (10 Yerg.) 254.

[h] (Tenn. 1858) After the issuance of an execution on a justice's judgment, the two days allowed for staying having expired, the justice has no authority, under Act 1842, c. 136, § 4, to receive a stay on the judgment, and no consent or agreement of the parties can give him such power.—Apperson v. Smith, 37 Tenn. (5 Sneed) 372.

[i] (Tenn. 1858) Though a constable, by giving his receipt for the collection of a note, becomes individually the agent of the owner, and incurs sundry obligations as such, he has no authority to dispense with the stay of execution on the judgment before a justice, so as to prevent the owner from taking his execution immediately, if the judgment is not legally stayed.—Mallett v. Hutchinson, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 558.

[j] (Tenn. 1873) Where a judgment is rendered against a principal and surety, and the latter procures a stayor, the justice in such case is not required to act on the personal application of the surety, or on his written assent, to have the judgment stayed, but may act on such evidence as satisfies him that the surety has either procured or assented to the stay.—Gaut v. White, 62 Tenn. (3 Baxt.) 196.

[k] (Tenn. 1881) Under Code, § 3059, providing that in all judgments before justices of the peace the defendant is entitled to stay of execution on proper security, defendant in a suit for rent is entitled to a stay, notwithstanding the plaintiff's lien on the crop.—Spradlin v. Bratton, 74 Tenn. (6 Lea) 685.

[a] (Ind. 1881) The doctrine that an entry of replevin bail, after the judgment has ceased to be repleviable, does not constitute a judgment on which an execution can be issued, applies as well to entries of replevin bail on the dockets of justices of the peace as to similar entries on the records of judgments in the circuit courts.—Eltzroth v. Voris, 74 Ind. 459.

[b] (Ky. 1822) A justice of the peace has the same authority to quash an illegal or irregular bond, given to replevy an execution issued by him, as courts have.—Thomas v. Clarke, 11 Ky. (1 Litt.) 287.

[c] (N. C. 1849) The surety for the stay of an execution is not bound where the justice who stays the execution signs the name of the surety in his absence, though the surety may afterwards ratify the signature and pay the judgment; but to bind the surety, he must sign his own name, or some one must sign it for him in his presence.—Rickman v. Williams, 32 N. C. 126.

[d] (Ohio, 1864) An undertaking for stay of execution on a judgment of a justice of the peace, taken and signed after the period fixed by the statute for entering the same, when based upon a sufficient consideration, is valid as a common-law contract, though it may not be available under the statute.—Duckwall v. Rogers, 15 Ohio St. 544.

[e] (Pa. 1841) "I become special bail for $90," signed by the bail, in an action before an alderman, upon the alderman's docket, was held a sufficient recognizance for a stay of execution under Act 1810, § 9, there being no entry of appeal.—Frost v. Roatch, 6 Whart. 359.

[f] (Pa. 1848) B. appeared before a justice of the peace, with a defendant in an execution which was issued within 20 days after judgment recovered, and offered that, if the plaintiff therein would wait 6 months, he would pay it, which was acceded to by the plaintiff; and some time after the justice made the following entry in his docket: "B. appears Nov. 19th, and acknowledges himself as bail, to be paid at the expiration of six months." Held that, though this was not a recognizance under the statute, it constituted, as a consideration for forbearance and not to levy an execution, a sufficient promise to support assumpsit.—Brice v. Clark, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 301.

[g] (Pa. 1849) A recognizance entered into before the justice of the peace for stay of execution, in which no sum is mentioned, or condition set out, is void.—Caldwell v. Brindle, 2 Am. Law J. (N. S.) 95.

[h] (Tenn. 1827) The stay of an execution on a justice's judgment is in the nature of a judgment confessed by the security for the stay, and, to bind him, he must be present when the justice officially enters his name as security, or must sign his own name as such. If he be not present, a written authority to the justice, or some other person, is necessary.—Hickman v. Williams, 8 Tenn. (Mart. & Y.) 116.

[i] (Tenn. 1834) In order to bind the security for stay of execution, he should either appear in person and make the acknowledgment before the justice, or should give written authority to someone to appear for him.—Patrick v. Driskill, 15 Tenn. (7 Yerg.) 140.

[j] (Tenn. 1842) A. recovered judgment for $62.50 on the 19th of September, 1840, against B. and C. before a justice of the peace. D. addressed this letter to the justice: "You may enter me as stay of a judgment that A. recovered against B. on the 19th of September, for the sum of $62.50. This 21st day of September, 1840." There was no other judgment rendered against B. on that day. Held, that it was sufficiently apparent that D. intended to communicate authority to stay the execution in that case, and that it was sufficient authority to authorize the entry of D.'s name as security for stay of execution.—Dilliard v. Askew, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 536.

[k, l] (Tenn. 1851) A written authority to a justice to enter the name of an absent person as stayor to an execution must contain such a description of the judgment in one or more particulars as will identify the judgment intended, without the aid of extrinsic evidence.—Barr v. McGregor, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 518.

[m] (Tenn. 1851) D. addressed a letter to a justice of the peace in the following words: "You are authorized to enter my name as stay or to a judgment given against A. and B., in favor of C., on the 22d of January, 1849." Held, that this was insufficient because the amount of the judgment was not mentioned.—Rhodes v Chappell, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 527.

[n] (Tenn. 1854) Where a party, in the absence of the justice of the peace, wrote his name as a stayor of execution opposite the judgment in the docket, and the justice afterwards allowed the stay, the party so pledging himself cannot escape liability on account of the informality, as his clearly manifested intention to become bound, and the acceptance of him as surety by the justice, was sufficient.—Carmichael v. Hawkins, 34 Tenn. (2 Sneed) 405.

[o] (Tenn. 1857) Where a justice has received a stayor of execution under Act 1835, c. 17, § 10, its jurisdiction is gone, and if thereafter he receives another stayor, such stayor is not bound thereby.—Howard v. Brownlow, 36 Tenn. (4 Sneed) 548.

[p] (Tenn. 1858) Judgment having been obtained by the plaintiff against M., the defendant executed a written instrument directed to the justice, reciting, "You may set my name as stayor to a debt against M. for about $400, in favor of C., in the hands of W." Held, that on the proper identification of the judgment by parol evidence, the defendant was bound as stayor.—Cannon v. Trail, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 282.

[q] (Tenn. 1858) "Sir: You will enter my name as stay of execution on five judgments that Morgan & Co. obtained before you on the 1st day of July, against Wood & Hart, for some eight or nine hundred dollars and costs of suits. This 3d day of July, 1857. J. L. Cooper. [Seal.]" Held, that the foregoing instrument, addressed to a justice of the peace, was not a sufficient authority to him to enter the signer's name as stayor.—Morgan v. Cooper, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 430.

[r] (Tenn. 1859) Where it is said that the agreement to become stayor must be made before the justice of the peace at his office, nothing more is intended than that it must be made at the place where the justice performs the official act of rendering or accepting the confession of the judgment which is to be stayed. That is his office for that purpose and occasion, as much as is his ordinary place of doing business.—Morgan v. Coleman, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 352.

[t] (Tenn. 1859) Where a party went to the magistrate's office and entered his name as stayor, after the expiration of the two days allowed by law, in the absence of the magistrate and plaintiff, it was held that the subsequent assent of the judgment creditor to the stay of execution, after the lapse of two days, and of the justice to accept the party as stayor, manifested by their acquiescence, was as effectual to bind him as if their previous assent to the act had been expressly given.—Neil v. Beaumont, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 627.

[u] (Tenn. 1872) One who directed a justice of the peace to put his name down as stayor to a judgment, at a time when the justice was on his way home, and was about 300 yards from his office, is liable as stayor, though the name was signed in the absence of the papers in the cause, and in the absence of the justice's docket.—Skelton v. Baker, 54 Tenn. (7 Heisk.) 292.

[v] (Tenn. 1873) An agreement to become a stayor may be made before a justice outside of his office and be subsequently entered on his docket by him.—Smith v. Hart, 57 Tenn. (10 Heisk.) 468.

[w] (Tenn. 1884) One cannot be charged as stayor of a judgment against A. where, there being two suits, one against A., the other against A. and B., and the order specifying a judgment against A. and B., the judgment against A. was marked stayed by the justice, though at the time no judgment had been rendered in the suit against A. and B.—Shipley v. Goodwin, 81 Tenn. (13 Lea) 666.

[x] (Tenn. 1884) A stayor of execution issued on a justice's judgment may be liable, though the authority to enter his name as stayor was given verbally to the justice at a place other than his office or where the judgment was rendered.—Keeling v. Stokes, 82 Tenn. (14 Lea) 419.

[a] (Ind. 1841) Bail for the stay of execution of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace must be entered on his docket, and is a matter which may be proved by a transcript, at least where the entry is not denied on oath.—Remington v. Henry, 6 Blackf. 63.

[b] (Ind. 1861) 2 Rev. St. 1852, p. 467, §§ 84, 87, provide that an execution defendant shall be entitled to a stay of 120 days by entering bail on the docket of the justice. Held, that an agreement with a constable levying execution, indorsed on the execution, but not entered on the justice's docket, without the plaintiff agreeing to stay execution, is without consideration, and void, though the plaintiff did not in fact stay execution.—McCormick v. Cassell, 16 Ind. 408.

[d] (Ind. 1877) Under Act June 9, 1852, § 84, providing that execution may be stayed on a judgment by a justice of the peace on the entry of a recognizance in "substantially" the form therein provided, and setting forth the form showing that the recognizance should be attested by the justice, an entry of bail was not void, though not so attested.—Miller v. McAllister, 59 Ind. 491.

[e] (Ind. 1881) Where an undertaking of replevin bail is written on a separate piece of paper, and pinned to the leaf in the justice's docket on which the judgment appears, this is not "entering" such undertaking upon the docket within the meaning of 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 632, and it is therefore, invalid.—Lockwood v. Dills, 74 Ind. 56.

[f] (Ind. 1881) The entry of a contract of replevin bail is not invalidated by the failure of the justice of the peace to note the required attestation.—Stone v. State, 75 Ind. 235; State v. Trout, Id. 563.

[h] (Mich. 1872) Where an entry of judgment was followed immediately by stay of execution on the justice's docket, and the justice's signature was appended but once and below them both, each having the same date, though dated separately, it was inferable from the docket that both entries were made as one transaction, and the signature was a good attestation of the stay.—Hollister v. Giddings, 24 Mich. 501.

[i] (Ohio, 1872) In case of an undertaking for the stay of execution, the right of the judgment creditor to an execution is not suspended till the entry thereof on the justice's docket.—Gaylor v. Hunt, 23 Ohio St. 255.

[j] (Tenn. 1859) The fact that the name of the stayor is not written in the most appropriate place on the justice's docket, or that the docket is not made out with all the formality prescribed by the act of 1835, will not vitiate the security, or discharge the stayor from his liability.—Lownes v. Hunter, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 343.

[k] (Tenn. 1868) The justices' docket, after entry of a judgment, contained the words, "Stayed by N. M. Kimbrough." Held, that it sufficiently showed who the stayor of the execution was.—Anderson v. Kimbrough, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 260.

[a] (U. S. 1835) Special bail for the stay of execution before a justice of the peace become liable to pay the debt in case it is not paid by the principal, or made out of his property, on the issuing of execution at the expiration of the stay, and nothing can discharge the bail except payment of the judgment.—Wilson v. Eads, Fed. Cas. No. 17,801a [Hemp. 284].

[b] (U. S. 1838) A justice of the peace cannot issue an execution, as on a supersedeas, on the mere indorsement on the back of the original judgment, that it was superseded.—Thomas v. Summers, Fed. Cas. No. 13,912 [5 Cranch, C. C. 434].

[c] (Ark. 1883) Notwithstanding Gantt's Dig. § 3782, providing that on stay of execution on a justice's judgment "such judgment shall be a lien upon all the personal property subject to execution," held that it could not have been the purpose of the legislature to make the stay bond more far reaching than the execution originally, and that, therefore, the lien of the bond would be confined to defendant's personalty in the township where the judgment was rendered.—Carroll v. Gillespie, 41 Ark. 468.

[d] (Ind. 1840) On sci. fa. against bail to stay execution, in which the form prescribed by statute is pursued, it cannot be objected that there was not an allegation against whom the judgment stayed was rendered.—May v. State, 5 Blackf. 442.

[e] (Ind. 1841) In a scire facias against bail for the stay of execution, he is not permitted to show that the officer's return to the execution against the principal debtor is false.—Remington v. Henry, 6 Blackf. 63.

[f] (Ind. 1841) A scire facias against a bail, which was issued by a justice of the peace in April, 1840, recited a judgment rendered by the justice against the original debtor in November, 1839, and alleged that the defendant, in November, 1840, entered himself as bail for the stay of execution on said judgment for 150 days, which period had long since elapsed. Held, that the scire facias could not be objected to on general demurrer, on account of the repugnant allegation as to the time of the entry of bail; and also, that a transcript of an entry of bail, of a different date from the objectionable time when the scire facias alleged the entry to have been made, could not be objected to as evidence on the ground of variance.—Remington v. Henry, 6 Blackf. 63.

[g] (Ind. 1842) In scire facias issued by a justice of the peace against bail entered on the justice's docket for the stay of execution, the plea was that the defendant did not become docket bail for the stay of execution, etc., as alleged in the scire facias. Held, that the plea was substantially a plea of non est factum, and, if sworn to, was admissible; but that, if not sworn to, it should be rejected on motion, under the statutes.—Merkle v. Bolles, 6 Blackf. 288.

[h] (Ind. 1843) The taking of a delivery bond of an execution debtor, and proceeding on it to judgment and execution, without obtaining satisfaction, are no bar to a scire facias against the replevin bail in the case.—Young v. Peery, 6 Blackf. 399.

[i] (Ind. 1844) It is not a sufficient objection for the bail to stay a justice's execution, that the judgment and execution against the principals were in their partnership name.—Elliott v. Doughty, 7 Blackf. 199.

[j] (Ind. 1844) To support a scire facias against bail entered for the stay of execution on a judgment of a justice of the peace, it must appear by the return of a fieri facias against the principal, that sufficient goods and chattels could not be found to satisfy the execution.—Elliott v. Doughty, 7 Blackf. 199.

[k] (Ind. 1844) A statute provided that after stay of execution the first process should be an execution against the goods and chattels of the defendant, and, if sufficient be not found and the writ be so returned, sci. fa. may issue against the bail. To a venditioni exponas, the constable returned, "$17.60 made by sale, and no more property on which to levy." Held that, as the venditioni exponas gave no authority to make a further levy, the latter part of the return, viz., "and no more property on which to levy," was a nullity, and not sufficient to authorize the sci. fa.—Elliott v. Doughty, 7 Blackf. 199.

[m] (Ind. 1847) On a sci. fa. to have execution against bail for the stay of execution on a justice's judgment for $56.25, it appeared that a fi. fa. against the principal debtor had been returned, levied on certain goods which remained unsold, and that afterwards, in March, 1838, a venditioni exponas had been returned that the goods levied on were sold for $20, and that no other property could be found. It also appeared that an alias fi. fa. had issued and had been returned, "No property given upon which to levy." Held, that these facts did not show due diligence against the principal debtor.—Doughty v. Elliott, 8 Blackf. 405.

[n] (Ind. 1850) It is a fatal objection to a scire facias, issued by a justice of the peace against bail to stay an execution, that it does not show that the debt could not have been collected under the execution which issued against the principal.—Varner v. Crabb, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 168.

[o] (Ind. 1881) Mere delay in issuing execution from a justice's court will not release a replevin bail for the stay.—Eltzroth v. Voris, 74 Ind. 459.

[p] (N. Y. 1821) According to the true construction of the eighth section of the act extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace (2 Rev. St. p. 225), the creditor who has recovered judgment in the justices' court, and taken a bond with security, according to the provisions of the act, must sue out execution after the expiration of three calendar months from the date of the judgment, and have a return of non est inventus thereon, before he can maintain an action on the bond; for the surety has no mode of complying with the alternative in the condition of the bond but by surrendering the debtor to the constable having an execution against him.—Tuttle v. Kip, 19 Johns. 194.

[q] (N. Y. 1830) The imprisonment of the defendant on a justice's execution may be pleaded in bar to an action on a bond given by the defendant and a surety to stay the execution for 90 days.—Sunderland v. Loder, 5 Wend. 58.

[r] (N. C. 1828) In an action against a surety for stay of execution, the want of the seal of a justice to the warrant, or the judgment thereon, cannot be objected to after verdict.—Humphreys v. Buie, 12 N. C. 378.

[s] (Ohio, 1833) Bail for stay of execution on a justice's docket will be subjected to execution unless he show good cause to the contrary.—Hall v. Kerr, Wright, 446.

[t] (Ohio, 1845) Where the plaintiff in execution on the return of a vendi with the property in it sold sends instructions to the justice that he need not issue another execution until further orders, it does not discharge the bail for stay of execution, though the execution debtor before the issue of another execution became insolvent.—Whiton v. Ripley, 1 Ohio Dec. 133.

[u] (Ohio, 1864) The remedy given by the statute (Swan & C. St. p. 800, § 172) on undertakings for stay of execution from a justice court is not exclusive, but cumulative only.—Duckwall v. Rogers, 15 Ohio St. 544.

[v] (Ohio, 1875) In a petition on an undertaking for stay before a justice, it is necessary to aver execution issued after stay expired, notwithstanding other executions may have been issued before such expiration, under proceedings to obtain additional security by virtue of Justices' Code, § 164.—Murphy v. Flowers, 27 Ohio St. 468.

[w] (Pa. 1831) Bail entered before a justice for stay of execution are entitled to 10 days, after service of the sci. fa., and before judgment, to surrender the principal.—Daly v. Dobson, 1 Ashm. 74.

[x] (Pa. 1836) The recognizance before a justice for stay of execution is one of technical special bail, and therefore sci. fa. cannot issue thereon until a ca. sa. has issued and been returned non est.—Spalding v. Nolcott, 5 Watts, 335.

[y] (Pa. 1846) Where bail for stay of execution, in a suit before a justice of the peace, reside in another county or city, the sci. fa. against such bail must be issued by an alderman or justice having jurisdiction within the city or county where the bailor himself resides.—Howell v. Cozens, 3 Clark, 410, 5 Pa. Law J. 431.

[z] (Tenn. 1873) The acceptance by a judgment creditor of the benefits of a deed of trust made by the judgment debtor does not release the stayor on the judgment recovered in justice court, though the time given the trustee to wind up the trust extends beyond the stay.—Wood v. McFerrin, 61 Tenn. (2 Baxt.) 493.

§ 440. Quashing, vacating, and other relief.

Equitable relief against execution on account of defects in judgment, see ante, §§ 402–407.
Stay of execution, see ante, §§ 436–439.

[a] (Ark. 1879) Equity will not enjoin further proceedings on an execution issued by a justice of the peace, after an appeal has been taken from his judgment to the circuit court.—Scanland v. Mixer, 34 Ark. 354.

[b] (Ga. 1886) A justice of the peace having no jurisdiction of an action for suing out a garnishment maliciously and without probable cause, his judgment in such action may be arrested and set aside on an affidavit of illegality to the execution issuing thereon.—Williams v. Sulter, 76 Ga. 355.

[c] (Ga. 1886) Where a justice is disqualified unless the parties consent to his acting, a judgment rendered by him is only voidable, and an affidavit of illegality will not lie.—Rogers v. Felker, 77 Ga. 46.

[d] (Ga. 1891) Code, § 3666, provides that where an execution is levied and an affidavit of illegality is filed thereto, the officer shall return the execution, affidavit, and bond to "the court from which the execution issued," and the issue of illegality shall be tried in that court. Held, that an execution issued from a justice court should be returned to such court, and not to the superior court, for trial of the issue of exemption of the land as a homestead.—Moore v. O'Barr, 87 Ga. 205, 13 S. E. 464.

[e] (Ind. 1895) An action will lie to enjoin a sale under execution, based on the mere finding of a justice of the peace, without any judgment having been rendered thereon.—Sare v. Butcher, 141 Ind. 146, 40 N. E. 749.

[f] (La. 1846) Where the value of property seized under a fi. fa. from a parish court exceeds the amount to which its jurisdiction is limited, an injunction may be obtained by one claiming to be the owner of the property, from a district court.—Stroud v. Humble, 1 La. Ann. 310.

[g] (Mo. 1894) The judgment of a justice having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter cannot be collaterally attacked on motion to quash the execution on the ground that the interest allowed in the judgment was excessive, the remedy for such error being by appeal.—Kansas City ex rel. Pryor v. Winner, 58 Mo. App. 299.

[h] (N. Y. 1856) Where plaintiff was endeavoring by execution to enforce a justice's judgment which had been paid and satisfied, and, from the want of a transcript of the record, the county court had no jurisdiction of a motion for relief, or power to issue a judge's order, and plaintiff in the execution being insolvent, the defendant, if compelled to pay the same, would have no adequate remedy, and could have no action against the officer making service of the execution, the same being regular on its face, and issued on a judgment obtained in due form, equity might interfere to restrain, by injunction, further proceedings on the part of the plaintiff in the execution, and set aside the execution, and decree the judgment satisfied.—Mallory v. Norton, 21 Barb. 424.

[i] (Pa. 1866) Where a fi. fa. was issued against one defendant on a joint judgment, the execution will be set aside as the execution must follow the judgment.—Saul v. Geist, 1 Woodw. Dec. 306.

[j] (Pa. 1873) Under Act Assem. Feb. 26, 1855, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sundays, declaring that the penalty for a violation of its provisions shall be recovered as debts of a like amount are recoverable, an execution was issued against defendant for the recovery of the amount of such a penalty, not by or in the name of the commonwealth, but reciting that P. had obtained a judgment against the defendant for the amount of such penalty. The record returned by the magistrate showed no such judgment in favor of P. Held, on certiorari to set aside the execution, that no reasonable presumption in favor of the justice would be violated in setting the same aside.—Commonwealth v. Myers, 5 Lanc. Bar, No. 2, p. 1.

[k] (Pa. 1887) An execution issued against the separate estate of a married woman upon the finding of a justice of the peace will not be summarily stricken off, nor the collection thereof enjoined; the proper remedy being by appeal.—Fenstermacher v. Xander, 116 Pa. 41, 10 Atl. 128.

Disqualification of justice as affecting right of other justice to take jurisdiction of claim, see ante, § 206 [g].

Jurisdiction of claims involving title to land, see ante, § 84 [a].

[a] (Ala. 1840) On trials of the right of property levied on under a justice's execution, no bond is required to be given by the claimant.—Powell v. Gray, 1 Ala. 77.

[b] (Ala. 1890) Upon the levy of a justice's execution on personal property claimed by one not a party to the writ, Code 1886, §§ 3365, 3368, provide that said claimant may try the title, upon making affidavit of title, and executing a bond with sufficient sureties. If judgment is against him, and he fails to deliver the property within 10 days, the bond is returned "forfeited." Held that, before judgment can be rendered and execution issued against claimant and his surety, there must have been a trial of right to the property, and then a return of the bond indorsed "Forfeited."—Foust v. Letson, 90 Ala. 539, 8 South. 59.

[c] (Ala. 1891) The issuance of execution against sureties on a forfeited claim bond by a justice of the peace does not operate as a judgment.—Weedon v. Clark, 94 Ala. 505, 10 South. 307.

[d] (Ga. 1858) The statute requires that claims of slaves levied on by fi. fa. issued by a justice shall be returned to the next term of the superior or inferior court, whichever may first occur.—Cottle v. Dodson, 25 Ga. 633.

[e] (Ga. 1886) Two executions on different judgments rendered by a justice of the peace were levied on different property, which was claimed by one claimant, who executed one bond for the property held under both executions. The amount of the judgments and the value of the property, when aggregated, was beyond the jurisdiction of the justice. Held, that the judgment of the justice in the claim proceeding was absolutely void, nor was it made valid by an appeal, which was dismissed.—Yon v. Baldwin, 76 Ga. 769.

[f] (Ga. 1886) Under Act Oct. 16, 1879, providing that a chattel mortgage may be foreclosed by any justice of the peace or notary public who is ex officio justice of the peace in the county were the mortgagor resides, if a resident of the state, a claim of property levied on, under a mortgage fi. fa. issued by a justice, must be heard in the court that rendered the judgment.—Ridling v. Stewart, 77 Ga. 539.

[g] (Ill. 1894) A case for the trial of "right of property" before a justice, under Rev. St. c. 79, §§ 98–103, should be docketed as a proceeding between the claimant and the plaintiff in the judgment on which the execution issued, and not so docketed as to make the constable defendant.—Aldridge v. Glover, 53 Ill. App. 137.

[h] (Ind. 1840) The day fixed by a justice of the peace for the trial of the right of property in goods taken in execution must be within five days after the claim to the goods is filed. In reckoning the time, the day on which the claim was filed must be counted.—Long v. McClure, 5 Blackf. 319.

[i] (Ind. 1843) Under Rev. St. 1838, p. 490, providing that whenever an execution is levied on personal property of a third person he may file with any justice a claim in writing, a justice of the peace is authorized to try the right of property on which an execution has been levied, though the value of the property exceeds $100.—Hanna v. Steinberger, 6 Blackf. 520.

[l] (N. J. 1891) Revision, p. 550, § 59, provides that when a constable, under execution out of a justice's court, shall levy upon property, and any person other than defendant shall file with him a claim in writing, he shall delay sale for 10 days, and within that period the claimant may apply to a justice of the peace for a venire to summon a jury to try the right of the claimant to the property. Held, that the claimant must file with the justice a claim describing the property levied upon, and the facts which confer jurisdiction on the justice to issue a venire; and if the plaintiff in execution, on the return day of the venire, does not challenge the existence of the jurisdictional facts, but obtains an adjournment, and afterwards permits the jury to be sworn, and the trial to proceed, he will be presumed to have admitted such jurisdictional facts.—Folwell v. Fuller, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 572, 22 Atl. 345.

[m] (N. J. 1891) Revision, p. 550, § 59, provides that when a constable, under an execution out of a justice's court, shall levy upon property, and any person other than defendant shall file with him a claim in writing, he shall delay sale for 10 days, and within that period the claimant may apply to a justice of the peace for a venire to summon a jury to try the right of the claimant to the property. Held, that the claimant on trial before the jury need not prove the execution and levy, the only question to be considered by the jury being the title to the property.—Folwell v. Fuller, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 572, 22 Atl. 345.

[b] (Mass. 1854) An attorney who procures a justice's execution to be issued containing a command to arrest the body of a judgment debtor, and who causes him to be arrested thereon in a case where he knows that the law prohibits such execution, is liable to the debtor in trespass.—Sullivan v. Jones, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 570.

[c] (N. Y. 1830) A variance between a judgment and the execution issued thereon, in a justice's court, will not deprive a party of a justification under such judgment and execution, when the variance happens by mistake; such mistake may be shown by the justice.—Borland v. Stewart, 4 Wend. 568.

[d] (N. Y. 1830) Where, in a plea of justification, in an action for wrongful execution, a justice's execution is described as returnable in 90 days, and the execution produced is returnable in 60 days, the variance is fatal, and the execution will not be received in evidence.—Toof v. Bently, 5 Wend. 276.

[d] (Kan.) Where a motion for a new trial before a justice is filed the day after verdict rendered and due notice is given, holding the motion under consideration for decision by the justice until the ninth day after the verdict exceeding the statutory limit of five days is only an irregularity, which may be waived.—(1887) Scott v. [h] (Mich. 1881) After a disagreement of the jury in a justice's court the parties submitted the case to the justice himself on the same testimony. Held, that they could not afterwards complain of his previous rulings on the trial before the jury.—Hollenburg v. Schuffert, 47 Mich. 126, 10 N. W. 137.

[hh] (Mich. 1890) A defect in the affidavit upon which an action of trespass in a justice court is based, is waived by defendant's pleading and proceeding to trial, and a motion to quash the proceedings then on account of such defect comes too late.—Jacklin v. Soutier, 82 Mich. 648, 46 N. W. 1027.

[i] (Minn. 1859) Under Rev. St. c. 69, art. 1, § 65, providing for the transfer of a cause from a justice's court, on application before the commencement of the trial, a party excepting to a denial of his application does not waive his right to avail himself of the justice's error by proceeding to trial.—Curtis v. Moore, 3 Minn. 29 (Gil. 7).

[j] (Minn. 1876) The oath required by Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 56, to be administered to the officer in whose charge a jury in a justice's court retires, may be waived for the parties, and will be deemed waived if omitted, and no objection is made at the time.—Robert v. Brooks, 23 Minn. 138.

Morrison, 57 Miss. 791.

[m] (Mo. 1884) An error of a justice of the peace, in including accrued interest in reviving a judgment, not having been taken advantage of by appeal, will be held to have been waived, and cannot be rectified on application to quash the execution issued thereon by the circuit court.—Bauer v. Miller, 16 Mo. App. 252.

[n] (Mo. 1890) Where one of the defendants was subsequently brought into the suit by service of summons, he cannot complain that the justice's docket fails to show a continuance from a return day to the day of actual return, five days later.—Building & Planing Mill Co. v. Huber, 42 Mo. App. 432.

[q] (N. Y. 1845) The plaintiff in a justice court declared for the breach of a "verbal contract" in a case where the statute of frauds required a contract in writing, and defendant pleaded specially instead of demurring. Held, that a motion in arrest of judgment not being allowed in that court, defendant could take advantage of the invalidity of the contract on the trial.—Green v. Armstrong, 1 Denio, 550.

[qq] (N. Y. 1847) Where a witness, after giving some testimony, discloses that he is interested in favor of the party who called him, the opposite party, in order to avail himself of the objection, must move to strike out the testimony so given; and if he omit to do this, in a suit before a justice of the peace, the justice cannot, in giving judgment, reject or disregard the evidence of the interested witness.—Heely v. Barnes, 4 Denio, 73.

[r] (N. Y. 1847) Where a declaration in a justice's court set forth no cause of action, and the evidence made out no cause, judgment against defendant could not be sustained, notwithstanding his motion to nonsuit on an untenable ground.—Tifft v. Tifft, 4 Denio, 175.

[u] (N. Y. 1896) Where defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint for insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the cause of action was denied by the justice, and the cause was submitted to him for decision on the merits, plaintiff's acquiescence in the submission was a waiver of his right, under Consolidation Act (Laws 1882, c. 410) § 1382, to have the action "dismissed, with costs, without prejudice to a new action.—Allen v. Rector, etc., of Church of Beloved Disciple (Sup.) 16 Misc. Rep. 584, 38 N. Y. Supp. 805.

Fruit, 3 Clark, 295, 5 Pa. Law J. 222.

[d] (Mich. 1862) Technicalities, imperfections, etc., in the entry of proceedings and judgment before a justice of the peace are of no account, provided the action and judgment can be clearly ascertained from the necessary files and docket entries.—Kinyon v. Fowler, 10 Mich. 16.

[e] (Mich. 1883) The docket record of a justice of the peace must receive a fair and reasonable interpretation, and due allowance must be made for what is practically unavoidable, a justice not being expected to be a legal expert; and it is sufficient that the language shows to a reasonable certainty jurisdiction and a compliance with the law.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452, 16 N. W. 808.

[f] (Minn. 1871) Informalities and inaccuracies in the dockets of justices of the peace are to be disregarded if the meaning is ascertainable, and conformable to law.—McGinty v. Warner, 17 Minn. 41 (Gil. 23).

[h] (N. Y. 1857) The omission of a justice of the peace to deposit his docket with the clerk of the town when he removed therefrom will not affect the validity of the judgments in the docket, or vary the same as evidence, though the justice might have been punished for neglect of duty in this respect, prescribed by the directory statute.—Humphrey v. Persons, 23 Barb. 313.

§ 450. Time for entries, publicity and notice.

Time for entry of judgment, see ante, § 396.

[b] (Ind. 1890) In an action for malicious prosecution, the justice before whom the prosecution was brought testified that he made no record of the proceedings, and, his testimony as to the trial and discharge of plaintiff being objected to, he was permitted to make such a record in his docket, which was then admitted in evidence. Held not error, the making of such entry being a mere ministerial act, which the justice might perform at any time.—Cottrell v. Cottrell, 126 Ind. 181, 25 N. E. 905.

[c] (Mich. 1884) How. Ann. St. § 8035, providing that garnishment suits in justices' courts "may be entered on the docket as suits in other cases," is permissive, not mandatory; and the judgment may be valid where garnishment proceedings had after judgment are entered

[d] (N. J. 1826) At the time or on the day of the commencement of an action by a common informer to recover a penalty, the justice should make a special note in his docket of the day, month, and year of its institution, and if he omit to make the entry until the return of summons, the judgment will be reversed.—Griffith v. West, 10 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 301.

[e] (Pa. 1883) Under Act March 20, 1810, a justice of the peace should make the entries in his docket contemporaneous with the act done, but a neglect to do so is only a matter of form, and is not ground for reversal.—Schoendman v. Glanz, 2 Lanc. Law Rev. 358.

[b] (Mich. 1867) It is not necessary that the justice's docket show that an execution was issued at the plaintiff's request, as that is always presumed.—Peck v. Cavell, 16 Mich. 9.

[c] (Minn. 1871) The affidavit for change of venue in a justice's court need not be set forth in the docket, either verbatim, or in substance.—McGinty v. Warner, 17 Minn. 41 (Gil. 23).

[d] (Miss. 1850) The docket of a justice of the peace in Alabama is required to contain the names of the parties in suits instituted before him, and the debt adjudged.—Scott v. Loomis, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 635.

[e] (Neb. 1884) A justice's docket stated that "the defendant did not appear in person, and his attorney departed before the trial was had," etc. Held, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1086, which provides what such docket shall contain, and requires as to the appearance of parties a bare statement of "which of the parties, if either of them, appeared at the trial," that so much of the docket as related to the departure of defendant's attorney was surplusage and irrelevant.—Cleghorn v. Waterman, 16 Neb. 226, 20 N. W. 636.

[k] (Pa. 1853) If a suit before a justice of the peace or an alderman be terminated by an agreement of parties amounting to a discontinuance, it is his duty to enter the agreement on his docket.—Cope v. Risk, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 59.

[l] (Pa. 1868) Where the record of a justice, in a landlord and tenant proceeding under Act 1863, discloses nothing to connect the lessor with plaintiff, who sues as administrator, except that the lessor's surname was identical with that of decedent's, and action appears to have been brought by the administrator nearly 40 years from the probate of the will, the judgment must be reversed on certiorari.—Holder v. Hill, 1 Woodw. Dec. 451.

[m] (Pa. 1871) Where an action before a justice of the peace has been referred to referees, the record must show that the referees as well as the justice acted in conformity with the statute.—Weissbrod v. Gelder, 3 Leg. Gaz. 260.

[b] (Del. 1871) A set-off, to be pleadable before a justice of the peace, must not only be an account, demand, or cause of action cognizable before him, but both its nature and amount should be entered on his docket.—Huggins v. Lemmon, 4 Houst. 304.

[c] (Del. 1873) The statement of the cause of action on the docket of a justice of the peace was: "Action of debt on record. Demand, $5.30. Summons issued," etc. Held insufficient, as it did not clearly show where the record referred to was, or whether the debt demanded was on a judgment, a recognizance, or a mortgage.—Ralph v. Pennell, 4 Houst. 542.

[g] (Iowa, 1856) The original notice informed the defendant that the plaintiff claimed "$100 as justly due him on attorney's lien secured by bond, made by you December 30, 1854, and filed in," etc., which statement was substantially entered by the justice on his docket. Held, that this was a sufficient statement of the cause of action by him.—Stone v. Murphy, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 35.

[h] (Iowa, 1856) In an action on a bond the docket need not specify the breaches.—Stone v. Murphy, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 35.

[i] (Minn. 1869) The statement in a justice's docket, that judgment "was rendered for the sum of thirty-one dollars and five cents debt, balance due on lot sold by plaintiff to defendants," is not a sufficient "brief statement of the nature of plaintiff's demand and the amount claimed," within Gen. St. p. 422, c. 65, § 7, as it does not tend to show that the action was brought for that sum, or on a liability of that nature. Barnes v. Holton, 14 Minn. 357 (Gil. 276).

[j] (N. J. 1823) If a justice before whom an action is tried in Pennsylvania does not enter the true style of the action in his docket, the judgment will be reversed as erroneous.—Bilderback v. Pounor, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 64.

[k] (Pa. 1863) The statement of a cause of action on a justice's record as follows, "Plea for assumpsit. Amount $8,"—is sufficient.—Goodman v. Moyer, 1 Woodw. Dec. 92.

[l] (Pa. 1865) Where the court record of a magistrate shows the cause of action merely as "demand for $3," and nothing else appears on it to specify the nature of the demand, the judgment will be reversed on certiorari.—Goodman v. Mogel, 1 Woodw. Dec. 286.

[m] (Pa. 1866) The record of justices of the peace, in proceedings under the act of March 25, 1825, to obtain possession of premises from which the tenant had been removed, must set out the facts necessary to establish the right of plaintiff with particularity, either in the complaint, or the findings of the justices.—Uber v. Hickson, 6 Phila. 182.

[n] (Pa. 1868) In penal actions, it is requisite that the substance at least of the acts committed by accused should be alleged somewhere in the proceedings of the justice.—Adams v. Commonwealth, 1 Woodw. Dec. 417.

[u] (Pa. 1887) The record of a justice of the peace should show that the action was brought on a contract, express or implied, between plaintiff and defendant, and a claim, "which sum was promised and agreed to be returned to the plaintiff," is insufficient.—Shaffer v. Kelly, 4 C. P. Rep. 44.

[v] (Pa. 1887) Where the record of a justice of the peace simply shows a claim for "work and labor done," and does not state that the work was done for the plaintiff, or at his instance, it will not support a judgment for the plaintiff.—Merriam v. Myerscough, 4 C. P. Rep. 52.

[w] (Pa. 1887) In a magistrate's record, the entry, "Plaintiff's claim is trespass for personal property," does not sufficiently show the cause of action.—Zeidler v. Seischob, 4 C. P. Rep. 196.

[x] (Pa. 1889) A justice's record, in a suit by a mutual live stock insurance company, failed to show that the defendant ever insured in the company, except by inference. Held, that there was not enough to support the judgment, and that it should be reversed on certiorari.—Dauphin County Mut. Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Pidgeon, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 448.

[y] (Pa. 1893) A judgment of a justice on a note will be reversed when the record does not even show that the note was executed by defendant, or that he promised to pay it.—Sipple v. Guldin (Com. Pl.) 7 Kulp, 100.

[z] (Pa. 1895) An entry in the justice's docket showing that the claim sued on was for "balance due for money collected, and goods received and unaccounted for, also balance on duebill," is a sufficient statement of claim to support a judgment.—Cooke v. Shoemaker (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 212, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 641.

[zz] (Pa. 1896) The record of a justice of the peace, though failing to show that the account claimed on was against the defendant, or that he had promised to pay it, was sufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff.—Missemer v. Trout (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 317.

m., and was held open till 9 o'clock a. m. of August 3d. The subsequent proceedings appear opposite a marginal entry of August 2d, but at the conclusion of the proceedings is the following: "Dated this third day of August, A. D. 1892. Peter W. Losby, Justice of the Peace." Held, that the marginal entry is a clerical error, and the docket showed that the proceedings were had August 3d.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13, 56 N. W. 1042.

[c] (N. J. 1808) The date of the justice's judgment should be entered on the record.—De Marentille v. Oliver, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 379.

[e] (N. J. 1829) In an action by a common informer to recover a penalty, the justice must make a special note in his docket of the day, month, and year, of its institution.—Griffith v. West, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 301.

[f] (N. J. 1859) The record of proceedings on an attachment issued by a justice should show that he fixed on a day for the hearing.—Crisman v. Swisher, 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 149.

[g] (Pa. 1867) Where an alderman enters judgment by default, the hour should be named.—Lindsay v. Sweeny, 6 Phila. 309.

[h] (Pa. 1867) If the proceedings are otherwise regular, the court will not reverse an alderman's judgment because he omits to note that it was entered publicly.—Daly v. Nolan, 6 Phila. 310.

[i] (Pa.) The record of a justice's default judgment must show that the judgment was given publicly against defendant.—(1880) Hildebrand v. Bowman, 12 Lanc. Bar, 30. CONTRA, see (1873) French v. Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co., 1 Leg. Chron. 66.

[j] (Pa. 1883) Where the justice's record does not show that judgment was entered on the day named in the summons, and on the day to which the case had been continued, but shows that judgment was entered "on the 20th, 1882," omitting the month of the year, the proceedings will be set aside on certiorari.—Martin v. Wiggins, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 141.

[k] (Pa. 1886) Where the record of a justice shows at what hour the parties were to appear, and a judgment was rendered by default, the proceedings will not be reversed on certiorari merely because the record does not show at what hour the judgment was rendered.—Cope v. Buck, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 353.

[l] (Pa. 1888) There is no statute which requires an alderman to enter on his record the hour in which he entered judgment by default, if the allegations and proofs are heard at the time and hour mentioned in the summons.—Blessington v. Commonwealth, 14 Atl. 416.

[m] (Pa. 1890) A justice's docket need not show the hour of entering judgment against a garnishee on an attachment affidavit.—Weisman v. Weisman, 133 Pa. 89, 19 Atl. 300.

[n, o] (Pa. 1890) It is not necessary that the record shall show the exact hour at which a judgment by default was rendered by a justice of the peace, where it appears therefrom that, at the hour for the return of the summons, plaintiff appeared, and, defendant being in default, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff after hearing.—Robertson v. Clark (Com. Pl.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 94.

[p] (Pa. 1894) The record of a justice of the peace need not show at what hour of the day judgment was rendered in a default case, nor that it was publicly rendered.—Fronheiser v. Werner (Com. Pl.) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 515, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 522.

[q] (Pa. 1896) The record of a justice of the peace, though failing to show the hour of the hearing, or of the entry of judgment, was sufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff.—Missemer v. Trout (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 317.

[r] (Wis. 1865) A justice of the peace is not required to enter on his docket a statement that his court was held at the time and place appointed in the summons, or at what hour the suit was called and judgment rendered. The presumption will be that the statute was complied with in these respects.—Bacon v. Bassett, 19 Wis. 45.

See ante, § 214.

[a] (Cal. 1893) The notice of trial, required to be given by the justice by Code Civ. Proc. § 850, together with proof of service, must form a part of the record.—Jones v. Justice's Court of Los Angeles City, 97 Cal. 523, 32 Pac. 575.

[b] (Conn. 1838) The record of a justice of the peace, that on the day set for trial he was absent from the town, and that the parties were "duly notified" to appear for trial on the 20th of the month, is sufficient, and need not contain a statement of facts necessary to constitute the notice required by the statute of 1833.—Fox v. Hoyt, 12 Conn. 491, 31 Am. Dec. 760.

[c] (Del. 1859) Where a statute requires that every justice of the peace shall make an entry in his docket of every action commenced before him, stating the names of the parties, the cause of action, the sum demanded, the date of issuing process and when it was returned, the entry on a docket before a justice is not sufficient where it only states the names of the parties, the action, and the sum demanded.—Crawford v. England, 2 Houst. 171.

[d] (Ga. 1882) The docket of a justice of the peace should show the return of service.—Benson v. Dyer, 69 Ga. 190.

[e] (Ind. 1864) The provision of the statute requiring the justice to note the appointment of a special constable to serve process on his docket is imperative.—Benninghoof v. Finney, 22 Ind. 101.

[f] (Ind. 1872) The provision of the statute requiring a justice of the peace to record the appointment of a special constable to serve process on his docket is imperative, and not directory.—Schaw v. Dietrichs, Wilson, 153.

[g] (Ind. 1873) The summons, and officer's return thereto, are not required to be copied at length on the justice's docket.—Strohmier v. Stumph, Wilson, 304.

[h] (Ind. 1881) It is not necessary that the justice copy the summons in the record. A copy of the constable's return or a memorandum showing service of summons is sufficient.—Reed v. Whitton, 78 Ind. 579.

[i] (Miss. 1850) The docket of a justice of the peace in Alabama is required to contain the time of the issue and return of the warrant.—Scott v. Loomis, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 635.

[j] (Ohio, 1885) A recital in the record of a magistrate, that "the constable has demanded his fees in advance and refuses to serve a summons for a jury because not paid," is insufficient, since it does not appear as the return of the officer, and hence does not show that the summons was ever returned, or that any reason was indorsed on it for its nonservice.—Moriarity v. Devine, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 49.

[k] (Pa. 1888) Where a continuance is granted without day in a justice court, the justice's record showing notice of the hearing, but not showing when the notice was given, is insufficient.—Hunt v. Laufer, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 337.

[a] (Iowa, 1856) When pleadings before a justice are oral, he must enter the substance of them on his docket, but more than this is not required.—Stone v. Murphy, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 35.

[c] (Minn. 1872) Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, does not require the justice's docket to contain the verifications of the pleadings.—Tyrrell v. Jones, 18 Minn. 312 (Gil. 281).

[d] (Minn. 1875) It is not necessary that a justice's docket should show affirmatively the verification of a complaint filed in his court.—Burt v. Bailey, 21 Minn. 403.

[e] (Mo. 1889) Rev. St. § 471, relating to attachments before justices, provides that defendant may put in issue by verbal plea, in the nature of a plea in abatement, "the substance of which shall be noted by the justice on his docket, the existence of the facts alleged in the affidavit." Held, that a written plea in abatement, filed with the justice and transmitted to the circuit court on appeal, but not noted on the justice's docket, should not be regarded as never having been filed.—Meyers v. Boyd, 37 Mo. App. 532.

[f] (N. J. 1808) Where the general issue is pleaded with notice of special matter, under Rev. Laws, p. 348, such special matter need not be entered of record.—Stevenson v. Skank, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 434.

[g] (Ohio, 1862) A neglect on the part of a justice of the peace, in an attachment proceeding before him, to enter the affidavits at length, or to particularly state the nature thereof on his docket, does not render the subsequent proceedings illegal.—Carper v. Richards, 13 Ohio St. 219.

[h] (Tex. 1888) Where defendant in justice court makes his pleadings in writing, it is unnecessary that they should be noted on the justice's docket.—Whittington v. Eppstein, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 369.

[i] (Tex. 1894) A justice's docket entry of, "Suit upon acc't and contracts, for $161.55. * * * Defendant pleads general denial,"—is a sufficient "brief statement" of oral pleadings, under Rev. St. art. 1573, in connection with plaintiff's account filed, and it cannot be presumed that plaintiff did not plead an assignment of the account to himself from his dissolved firm.—Davis v. Sorrenson (Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 209.

[j] (Wis. 1875) In an action in a justice's court commenced by attachment, the docket entry stated that plaintiff, on the return day of the writ, "introduced the affidavit on which the warrant of attachment was issued as the complaint in the case." Held, that this reference to the affidavit had the same effect as if it had been copied into the docket as the complaint.—Ruthe v. Green Bay & M. R. Co., 37 Wis. 344.

In forcible detainer, see "Forcible Entry and Detainer," vol. 23, cc. 1383, 1384, § 156 [b, f, g, h].

[a] (Del. 1844) To sustain a judgment by default, the justice's record must show that he heard the proofs of the plaintiff's claim; and it is not sufficient that he "investigates the plaintiff's demand."—Elligood v. Cannon, 4 Har. 176.

[b] (Del. 1859) A judgment of a justice of the peace, to be sustained, must show by the record that the justice heard the case, that the judgment was rendered on his hearing, and that he heard the allegations and proof of the parties.—Hoffecker v. Eaton, 2 Houst. 157.

[e] (N. J. 1842) It is not necessary for a justice of the peace to enter on his docket the documentary evidence offered or admitted on a trial before him.—Ramsey v. Dumars, 19 N. J. Law (4 Har.) 66.

[f] (N. Y. 1804) A default judgment rendered by a justice in an action on a promissory note must show that it was rendered "on hearing the proof and allegations."—Stocking v. Driggs, 2 Caines, 96.

[g] (Ohio, 1860) Under Justices' Act, § 203, the justice is not required to state the evidence on the trial in his docket, except in jury trials.—Niven v. Smith, 2 Ohio Dec. 337.

[h] (Pa. 1846) A statement on the docket of a magistrate, that plaintiff's demand is founded on an account rendered for services rendered by plaintiff to defendant's testator in his lifetime, sufficiently satisfies the statutory requirement, that the kind of evidence on which the plaintiff's demand is founded shall be set out on the docket.—Wilson v. Wilson, 3 Clark, 419, 5 Pa. Law J. 461.

[i, j] (Pa.) The record of a justice must show the kind of evidence by which plaintiff's claim was sustained.—(1872) Paine v. Godshall, 29 Leg. Int. 12; (1887) Jermyn v. Higgins, 4 Lanc. Law Rev. 185. CONTRA, see (1895) Shea v. Plains Tp. (Quart. Sess.) 7 Kulp, 554.

[p] (Pa. 1880) The record of a justice must show that he heard evidence.—Koch v. Miller, 2 Leg. Rec. Rep. 154.

[q] (Pa. 1883) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, both parties appear, it is not error if the record fails to show what witnesses were examined on behalf of the successful plaintiff.—Cope v. Meyers, 1 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 55.

[r] (Pa. 1883) Where the record of a justice of the peace on a judgment by default in favor of the plaintiff does not show that there was some evidence offered and heard in support of plaintiff's claim, the judgment will be reversed.—Karche v. Bach, 1 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 118.

[s] (Pa. 1885) Under Act 1810, § 4, a justice of the peace must set out on his docket the kind of evidence on which plaintiff's demand is founded, but need not show that evidence was produced on the trial.—Cook v. Minick, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 603.

[t] (Pa. 1886) Where a justice of the peace gives judgment other than by default, the record need not show that any witnesses were examined.—Ott v. Snyder, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 185.

[u] (Pa. 1886) An action to recover the penalty, under Act April 12, 1859, which restricts the sale of goods at auction in certain counties, is an action of debt and not a summary conviction, and hence the record need not set out the evidence.—Ott v. Snyder, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 185.

[v] (Pa. 1887) Where the record of a justice of the peace recites that "after hearing proofs and allegations," such recital does not sufficiently show the character of the evidence offered to support the claim.—Merriam v. Myerscough, 4 C. P. Rep. 52.

[ww] (Pa. 1892) Where a justice's docket, in a case where defendant did not appear at the trial, states that the justice heard the proofs and allegations, it sufficiently shows that the judgment was founded on evidence.—Baker v. Richart (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 318, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 195.

[y] (Pa. 1895) Act March 22, 1814, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction in certain actions in tort, provides (Purd. Dig. edition 1894, p. 1149, § 4) that "the proceedings shall be made and done under and according to the provisions" of Act March 20, 1810, giving magistrates jurisdiction in actions ex contractu, and which directs (section 3) the magistrate to "hear the proofs and allegations." Held that, in an action before a justice based on a claim in the nature of a tort, the judgment is sufficient where the record sets forth that, "having heard the parties and their proofs and allegations," judgment was given, without showing affirmatively that some person was sworn.—York Caramel Co. v. Farez (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 129.

[yy] (Pa. 1895) Where a suit is brought in a justice's court by an assiguee, the justice's record need not show affirmatively that the assignment was proved.—Shea v. Plains Tp. (Quart. Sess.) 7 Kulp, 554.

[z] (Pa. 1895) A justice need not set out the evidence at large on his docket, it being sufficient for him to state the plaintiffs' demand, and the kind of evidence, whether written or parol, produced to support it.—Evans v. Brobst (Com. Pl.) 11 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 133, 1 Lack. Leg. N. 300, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 550, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 30.

[zz] (Pa. 1895) The record of a justice of the peace is defective when it shows that the only evidence offered on part of plaintiff was a probated copy of book account, the parties being present at the hearing by counsel, and not in person.—Munroe v. Klepser (Com. Pl.) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 60.

Adjournment without entering time and place as ousting jurisdiction, see ante, § 196.

[a] (Conn. 1864) Where the record of a justice recited that the parties agreed that the case be continued from day to day as security for performance of certain terms of settlement by defendant, until further action should be required by either party, and "that the case was thus continued, without the appearance in person or otherwise of either party, and without any further action or order by the court, until the 21st day of September, etc.," the record was held to mean that the case was actually continued from day to day, without any further action or order of the court than such continuance.—Town of New Haven v. Rogers, 32 Conn. 221.

[b] (Del.) Where there is a second adjournment of a cause before a justice, without application from either party, the record should show the cause for such adjournment.—(1843) Mousely v. Allmond, 4 Har. 92; (1845) Deputy v. Betts, Id. 352.

[bb] (Del. 1849) Though referees appointed by a justice may adjourn a cause for consideration, the record must show the adjournment.—Rickards v. Patterson, 5 Har. 235.

[c] (Minn. 1874) A justice entered in his docket: "By consent of parties, the case is adjourned till Monday, September 23, 1873, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon." Held, that such entry was sufficient, without showing the place of adjournment, it being presumed that proceedings would be resumed at the place from which the adjournment was made.—Anderson v. Southern M. R. Co., 21 Minn. 30.

[d] (Neb. 1890) A case pending before a justice on May 18th was, by agreement of parties, continued to May 25th, and a jury was selected to appear on the latter date. Without any further date being noted on the docket, the entry shows that the parties and jurors appeared, cause was tried, verdict rendered, and judgment entered thereon. Held sufficient to show that the trial was had on the date to which the case was last adjourned.—Tuttle v. Wilson, 29 Neb. 424, 45 N. W. 688.

[e] (Vt. 1836) Though the statute provides that the second justice shall "enter on the files the reasons for the continuance," yet where the reason of the absence of the first justice cannot be certainly known to the second, except from presumption and inference, he is not bound to state such presumption, etc., in his record, but may state the absence generally.—Holland v. Osgood, 8 Vt. 276.

[f] (Wis. 1885) Where a justice of the peace fails to note in his docket the year to which a case is adjourned, the current year will be understood to have been intended, and the omission is immaterial.—Stromberg v. Esterly, 62 Wis. 632, 22 N. W. 864.

[g] (Wis. 1886) The specific causes of granting adjournments need not appear in the justice's records, the entries being that the adjournments were "for cause shown."—Bookhout v. State, 66 Wis. 415, 28 N. W. 179.

[h] (Wis. 1890) Under Rev. St. § 3574, subds. 3, 5, requiring a justice to enter in his docket every adjournment, stating at whose request it is granted, an entry that defendant "asked for an adjournment of one week until the 27th day of April, 1889, at 1 o'clock p. m., at this, my office," is sufficient to show an adjournment until that time, when it appeared that nothing more was done until then.—Johnson v. Iron Belt Min. Co., 78 Wis. 159, 47 N. W. 363.

[a] (N. J. 1807) A justice must enter the names of all witnesses and jurors on his docket.—Lindsly v. Boyle, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 207; Steelman v. Bolton, Id. 321.

[b] (N. J.) It must appear on the record of the justice that the jury were sworn.—(1810) Anonymous, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 632; (1811) Seward v. Chamberlain, Id. 742.

[c] (N. J. 1810) The names of the jurors in a justice's court must be entered of record.—Doughty v. Kindle, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 660.

[d] (N. J. 1838) A justice of the peace should not enter on his docket a conviction of a defaulting juror, as part of the record of the civil suit in which he was summoned.—State v. Hollinshead, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 539.

§ 459. —— Fees and costs.

[a] (Minn. 1893) The omission of a justice to state in his docket the fees due to each person separately, as required by Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 7, subd. 8, does not render the judgment erroneous.—Meister v. Russell, 53 Minn. 54, 54 N. W. 935.

[b] (Miss. 1850) The justice's docket in Alabama must contain the costs adjudged.—Scott v. Loomis, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 635.

[c] (Mo. 1895) The failure of a justice of the peace to state in his docket the separate items of costs, as required by Rev. St. § 6305, does not render an execution void.—Buis v. Cooper, 63 Mo. App. 196, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 746.

[d] (Neb. 1895) A judgment of a justice of the peace that: "It is therefore considered by me that plaintiff recover from defendant the sum of $7.48 and his costs herein expended, taxed at $37.55, as follows: See margin,"—held a sufficient compliance with Comp. St. 1893, c. 28, § 30, providing that in all actions, motions, and proceedings, the costs of the parties shall be taxed and entered on the record separately.—Kissinger v. Staley, 44 Neb. 783, 63 N. W. 55.

[e] (Wis. 1857) Rev. St. c. 88, § 8, as to entries on the docket of certain fees, is directory merely, and the failure to make the entry is not reversible error.—Warner v. Hart, 6 Wis. 464.

[f] (Wis. 1865) Rev. St. c. 120, § 10, which requires the costs and fees to be entered separately on the justice's docket, is directory merely.—Bacon v. Bassett, 19 Wis. 45.

[g] (Wis. 1871) A statutory provision requiring the justice to state in his docket the fees due each person separately, is directory; and the omission of such separate statement does not invalidate the judgment.—Nett v. Serwe, 28 Wis. 663.

§ 460. Signature and certification.

—(Ill. 1892) Daniels v. Thompson, 48 Ill. App. 393;

[b] (N. Y. 1857) The omission of a justice of the peace to certify in his docket that the amounts appearing by such book to be due on the judgments therein had not been paid, to his knowledge, will not affect the validity of the judgments in the docket, or vary the effect of the same as evidence, though the justice might have been punished for the neglect of duty in this respect, prescribed by the directory statute.—Humphrey v. Persons, 23 Barb. 313.

[c] (Ohio, 1833) The justice act of 1831, providing that, if the office of a justice becomes vacant in any manner, his docket or transcript of unfinished business shall be certified by him to his successor or some other justice, or, in case of death, by his executor or administrator, is directory merely as to judgment already entered, and an omission to certify the same merely puts the party to proof of the judgment, as before the law was passed.—Pool v. McCullum, Wright, 432.

[a] (Pa. 1879) Where an alderman has refused to allow the parties to an action or their counsel to examine his records of the case, the proceeding will be reversed.—Carr v. Lewten, 1 Lack. Leg. Rec. 396.

[b] (Vt. 1894) Rev. Laws, § 828, which provides that every justice shall keep a record of his judicial proceedings, and his books of record shall at all times be subject to the inspection of any person interested, does not entitle an interested person to the right to inspect the files, and memoranda thereon, of a justice, kept in his office.—Perkins v. [a] (Ark. 1875) Under Gantt's Dig. p. 320, §§ 1196, 1197, which authorizes the circuit court to issue writs of certiorari, and which provides that the records of inferior judicial tribunals shall be conclusive so far as they extend, an entry in the records of a justice that defendant confessed judgment is conclusive on an application for certiorari.—Countz v. Markling, 30 Ark. 17.

[b] (Colo. 1896) Mills' Ann. St. § 2787, requiring justices to keep a record of their proceedings, etc., does not constitute a court of a justice of the peace a court of record importing absolute verity to the entries in the docket, but such record may be impeached by parol.—Hamill v. Ferrier, 8 Colo. App. 266, 45 Pac. 522.

[c] (Ill. 1880) The entry in the justice docket showing the amount of plaintiff's demand will, in the absence of the summons, be presumed to correspond with the amount indorsed on the summons.—Brown v. Phillips, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 250.

[e] (Iowa, 1892) An entry in a justice's docket that an adjournment for more than three days, which, under Code 1873, § 3527, he had no authority to make on his own motion, was made with the consent of plaintiff and defendant's agent, is not conclusive, and a judgment by default entered after such adjournment is void when in fact no agent of defendant consented to the adjournment.—Iowa Union Tel. Co. v. Boylan, 86 Iowa, 90, 52 N. W. 1122, reversing (1891) 48 N. W. 730.

[f] (Me. 1852) When the record and proceedings show that a justice of the peace has jurisdiction, the facts disclosed by his records, within that jurisdiction, are entitled to the same credit as if contained in the record of other competent tribunals.—Paul v. Hussey, 35 Me. 97.

[g] (Mich. 1844) Plaintiff brought trespass de bonis asportatis against defendant, a justice of the peace, for having unlawfully taken his goods in execution. Defendant justified under a judgment which had been previously rendered against plaintiff. Held, that plaintiff might show by evidence that defendant had no jurisdiction of his person, though such evidence contradicted the minutes or docket which defendant was required to keep.—Clark v. Holmes, 1 Doug. 390.

[h] (Mich. 1860) The entry of a judgment in the docket of a justice is evidence of the judgment, but is not the judgment itself.—Hickey v. Hinsdale, 8 Mich. 267, 77 Am. Dec. 450.

[i] (Mich. 1877) A recital in a justice's docket, that there was personal service, does not establish his jurisdiction to proceed as in case of personal service, where the service was not in fact personal, and the return failed to show affirmatively that it was.—Smalley v. Lighthall, 37 Mich. 348.

[j] (Mich. 1886) The record of a justice's judgment in his docket must control, and it cannot be contradicted by his return to a writ of certiorari.—Weaver v. Lammon, 62 Mich. 366, 28 N. W. 905.

[m] (Mich. 1895) A docket entry by a justice that the parties appeared and adjourned the case by consent cannot be contradicted collaterally, notwithstanding a further statement that such adjournment was had without pleading.—Waldron v. Palmer, 104 Mich. 556, 62 N. W. 731.

[n] (Miss. 1850) The docket of a justice of the peace in Alabama is not a record, and on proof of its loss, by the affidavit of a party claiming under a judgment, parol evidence can be introduced to prove its contents.—Scott v. Loomis, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 635.

[o] (Mo. 1875) Where the record of an action before a justice of the peace fails to show that the defendant was notified according to law, the defect cannot be supplied by parol proof that a summons, alleged to be lost, was issued by the justice and served by the constable, unless such proof also shows the substantial contents of the summons and of the return thereof as well as on whom and by whom it was served, and the method of such service.—Cunningham v. Pacific R. R., 61 Mo. 33.

[p] (Mo. 1880) Where the entry in a justice's docket is ambiguous, it should be so construed as to sustain, if possible, the judgment rendered.—Roach v. Montserratt Coal Co., 71 Mo. 398.

[r] (N. Y. 1833) Proceedings in a cause before a justice may be proved by the production and verification of his docket, but he cannot be permitted to give parol evidence of what transpired.—Boomer v. Laine, 10 Wend. 525.

[s] (N. Y. 1848) A justice's docket of a judgment rendered by him, though it may in some cases be explained, cannot as a whole be contradicted by parol proof; and it has a verity superior to a rule entered in the minutes of the court of common pleas, but not recorded, reversing such judgment.—Niles v. Totman, 3 Barb. 594.

[t] (N. Y. 1868) Though the statute directs that every justice shall keep a docket, and directs what entries he shall make therein, proceedings by him can still be proved by his own evidence.—Baker v. Brintnall, 52 Barb. 188; Same v. Brintrall, 5 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 253.

[u] (Ohio, 1861) The record of a justice of the peace imports absolute verity.—Howell v. Jenkins, 2 Ohio Dec. 552.

[v] (Pa. 1853) Where a suit before a justice of the peace or alderman is terminated by an agreement of parties amounting to a discontinuance, and the agreement is entered on the docket, such entry is evidence thereof, especially after an acquiescence by the parties for 39 years.—Cope v. fendant to prove the judgment by the justice's record.—Cothran v. Knight, 47 S. C. 243, 25 S. E. 142.

[x] (S. D. 1894) An entry in a justice's docket that defendant appeared, and waived "the service of summons, and admitted the allegations of the complaint to be true, and consented that judgment be entered against him by confession, in favor of the plaintiff" for the amount claimed, is prima facie evidence that the said justice had jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, as Comp. Laws, § 6050, authorizes the voluntary appearance of parties.—Jewett v. Sundback, 5 S. D. 111, 58 N. W. 20.

[y] (S. D. 1894) Under Comp. Laws, § 6124, an entry in a justice's docket that plaintiff filed a complaint in which he claimed that defendant was indebted to him in the sum of $48 for goods sold, is prima facie evidence that the justice's court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action.—Jewett v. Sundback, 5 S. D. 111, 58 N. W. 20.

Omission to enter conviction of defaulting juror in docket as affecting validity of conviction, see "Jury," vol. 31, c. 569, § 383 [g].

[a] (Iowa, 1855) Code, § 2269, directing the justice to make certain entries on a docket is directory, and does not affect the validity of his proceedings.—Houston v. Walcott, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 86.

[b] (Minn. 1867) Where written pleadings are filed in a justice's court, an omission of the justice to state in his docket the nature of plaintiff's claim, as required by statute, will not affect the validity of the judgment.—Payson v. Everett, 12 Minn. 216 (Gil. 137).

[c] (Minn. 1872) An omission by a justice of the peace to file the pleadings in the case, as required by law, is a mere irregularity not affecting jurisdiction.—Barber v. Kennedy, 18 Minn. 216 (Gil. 196).

[d] (Neb. 1888) Where a justice of the peace, in a cause tried by jury, recites in his docket that the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for a specified sum, instead of entering the verdict itself in his docket, it is error without prejudice.—Dye v. Russell, 24 Neb. 829, 40 N. W. 416.

[e] (Neb. 1890) Where a justice of the peace, in a case tried by a jury, enters judgment on the verdict actually returned for the amount therein stated, it will not be reversed because of a clerical error in transcribing the verdict in his docket.—Tuttle v. Wilson, 29 Neb. 424, 45 N. W. 688.

[f] (N. Y. 1868) Though the statute directs that every justice shall keep a book called a docket, and also directs what entries he shall make therein, the omission of a justice so to keep his book does not render his judgments void.—Baker v. Brintnall, 52 Barb. 188, 5 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 253.

[g] (Pa. 1868) The omission of the magistrate to set out the fact that the lessor had been "quietly and peaceably possessed of the premises," as required by Act Dec. 14, 1863, in a landlord and tenant proceeding, cannot be supplied by intendment from any of the facts established by the record.—Greenleaf v. Haberacker, 1 Woodw. Dec. 436.

[h] (Tenn. 1842) Where the directory mandates of the statute were nearly complied with, in relation to the docket books of the justice, but a caption to the column was wanting, the proceedings were sustained on the ground of public policy, and the judgment was not void for uncertainty, when attacked by third persons.—Johnson v. Billingsley, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 151.

[i] (Wis. 1881) When the summons and pleadings show the names of all the parties, the judgment of a justice will not be reversed merely because in entering the case in his docket, after giving the name of one plaintiff, he designated the others by the words "et al."—Campbell v. Babbetts, 53 Wis. 276, 10 N. W. 400.

Power to amend after appeal, see post, § 600.

[a] (Ark. 1882) Erroneous entries by a justice of the peace in one case cannot be amended in collateral proceedings.—Wayte v. Wayte, 40 Ark. 163.

[b] (Ark. 1888) Act July 23, 1868, provides that, in order to enforce a laborer's lien before a justice of the peace, if defendant is a nonresident, the justice must notify him to appear and show cause why judgment should not be rendered against him, either by insertions in a newspaper, or by posting the notice in some public place in the township where the property is. Held, where the evidence showed that defendant was a nonresident of the state during the pendency of an action brought against him under the statute, and it did not appear from the docket that he had notice, actual or constructive, of the action, that the justice did not acquire jurisdiction by amending the docket after judgment, so as to make it appear that defendant had notice of the suit, no notice having been given to him of the proposed amendment.—Levy v. Ferguson Lumber Co., 51 Ark. 317, 11 S. W. 284.

[c] (Ga. 1882) Where the docket of a justice of the peace shows no return of service, but there is other proof or acknowledgment thereof, the justice may correct the omission.—Benson v. Dyer, 69 Ga. 190.

[d] (Ind. 1891) In an action for malicious prosecution the docket of the justice showed a trial by jury, and verdict of not guilty, followed by a judgment in favor of defendant for costs. The judgment originally read as in favor of plaintiff, but had been changed, and the record also showed that defendant pleaded guilty. Held, that the entry as to the plea and the original form of the judgment were mere clerical errors, which did not vitiate the record.—Stratton v. Lockhart, 1 Ind. App 380, 27 N. E. 715.

[e] (Mich. 1870) A justice of the peace has no power to amend his record of a judgment, after the day of its rendition, by a change in the name of one of the parties, even with the consent of the opposite party, and in the presence of both.—Foster v. Alden, 21 Mich. 507.

[f] (Mo. 1891) The charter of Kansas City confers jurisdiction to render judgment on a special tax bill on "the recorder of the city, or any justice of the peace of the city." Held that, in a suit on a special tax bill, where the docket failed to show affirmatively that the justice was a justice of the peace, it could not be amended pending proceedings in the circuit court to quash an execution on a judgment rendered by the justice.—Corrigan v. Morris, 43 Mo. App. 456.

[g] (Neb. 1890) Where plaintiff, in an action before a justice of the peace, has recovered a judgment for $8, it is not error to allow the transcript to be amended so as to show that before trial defendant offered in writing to allow plaintiff to take judgment for $15, such amendment being allowed for the purpose of showing facts to defeat plaintiff's recovery of costs, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1004.—Elsanger v. Grovijohn, 29 Neb. 139, 45 N. W. 273.

[h] (N. J. 1832) A justice of the peace can amend his docket according to the facts, after the rendition of his judgment.—Backer's Ex'rs v. Van Fleit's Ex'rs, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 195.

[i] (N. Y. 1836) An error in a justice's docket in the amount for which he has rendered judgment against the defendant, after notice to the parties, can only be corrected on motion in a court of record.—People v. Delaware Common Pleas, 18 Wend. 558.

§ 465. Nature and form of remedy.

[a] (Cal. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. § 890, subd. 4, providing that, if an objection that the action before a justice is brought in the wrong county is overruled, it is cause for reversal on appeal, does not prevent defendant, on such objection being erroneously overruled, from appealing both on questions of law and fact, so as to enable the appellate court to dismiss the case.—Holbrook, Merrill & Stetson v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 106 Cal. 589, 39 Pac. 936.

[b] (Ga. 1875) When a question of fact is involved in the judgment of a justice of the peace, and the amount in controversy exceeds $50, the proper mode of having his decision reviewed is by appeal.—Reedy v. Helms, 54 Ga. 121.

[c] (Iowa, 1856) Though a writ of error will bring up errors of law in the judgment of a justice, yet, if the judgment is final, whether the errors be of law or fact, the party at his election may bring error, or may appeal, under Code, § 2328.—Griffin v. Moss, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 261.

[d] (Iowa, 1859) A writ of error does not lie to review the decision of a justice on the facts. —Miller v. O'Neal, 9 Iowa, 446.

[e] (Iowa, 1864) An erroneous decision by a justice of the peace upon a demurrer should be made the subject of a writ of error and not of an appeal, the latter operating as a waiver of all irregularities, errors, and illegalities, and bringing up the case on its merits.—Leftwick v. Thornton, 18 Iowa, 56.

[f] (Iowa, 1867) Under Rev. St. §§ 3917, 3938, a writ of error will not lie to the final decision of a justice upon the evidence, though erroneous; the proper remedy is by appeal.—Lane v. Goldsmith, 23 Iowa, 240.

[g] (Iowa, 1874) A writ of error, and not an appeal, is the proper remedy of a party aggrieved by the dismissal of a cause by a justice of the peace for want of jurisdiction.—Belding v. Torrence, 39 Iowa, 516.

[h] (La. 1875) It was never contemplated that one sued before a justice of the peace could bring his case to be revised before the district or parish court, and before the supreme court also. The right of double appeals is not conferred by the constitution.—State ex rel. Leahy v. Third Justice of the Peace, 27 La. Ann. 639.

[i] (La. 1893) Where a justice of the peace illegally assumes to act as a police magistrate, and imposes a penalty for a violation of an ordinance, the remedy is to invoke the supervisory jurisdiction of the supreme court, and not by appeal.—State v. Carrau, 45 La. Ann. 1446, 14 South. 292.

[j] (Mich. 1869) An objection to a justice's jurisdiction may be brought in the first instance before the circuit court by special appeal as well as by certiorari.—Wright v. Russell, 19 Mich. 346.

[k] (Mich. 1882) Under Comp. Laws, § 5432, which provides that a special appeal shall bring up for review objections "to the process, pleadings, or other proceedings, and the decision of the justices thereon, which would not be allowed to be made on the trial of the appeal," the question of the justice's jurisdiction may be brought up on a special appeal.—Fowler v. Hyland, 48 Mich. 179, 12 N. W. 26.

[l] (Mich. 1882) It is ground for reversing a justice's judgment rendered in the absence of both parties that plaintiff's attorney did not prove his authority, and the objection is properly taken by special appeal.—Woodbridge v. Robinson, 49 Mich. 228, 13 N. W. 527.

[m] (Minn. 1864) The justice of the peace for the city of St. Paul is an officer of limited jurisdiction, created by special enactment, and his acts are subject to review in such mode as the legislature may prescribe. — Tierney v. Dodge, 9 Minn. 166 (Gil. 153).

[n] (N. J. 1890) If the justice has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action, but has lost jurisdiction over the party by irregular adjournments, the party appealing cannot raise this objection upon appeal, but his remedy is by certiorari.—Steinlein v. Folwell, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 176, 20 Atl. 1079.

[o] (N. Y. 1829) Where an error occurs before a justice on the trial of a cause, whether with or without a jury, the remedy is by appeal. In all other cases the remedy is by certiorari.—People v. Schoharie, 2 Wend. 260.

[p] (Or. 1860) Appeals lie in all cases from the final decisions of justices of the peace, and the remedy by certiorari is concurrent.—Blanchard v. Bennett, 1 Or. 328.

[q] (Pa. 1831) Where a judgment is rendered by a justice for an amount beyond his jurisdiction, the remedy is by motion to strike it off, or by writ of error.—Walker v. Lyon, 3 Pen. & W. 98.

[r] (Pa. 1846) An agreement of 30 years' standing among members of the bar, and filed of record, relating to the form of proceeding in all cases of appeals from justices, and by which the practice had been regulated during that period, is binding on their successors, who have not given previous notice of their dissent. —Hallowell v. Williams, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 339.

[s] (Pa. 1886) The party aggrieved with the judgment of the justice cannot have both an appeal and a writ of certiorari.—Teter v. Cook, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 171.

[t] (Tex. 1884) A party may resort at the same time to both the remedies of appeal and certiorari, but if he does so, he can be compelled in the appellate court to elect which remedy he will rely on, and the remedy abandoned will be dismissed at his costs.—Lindheim v. Davis, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 108.

[u] (Wis. 1852) To determine whether the remedy of a defeated party to an action before a justice is by appeal or certiorari, the amount of the recovery, exclusive of costs, is to be looked to; in replevin it is the value of the property and damages found, exclusive of costs. —Kirby v. Martin, 4 Chand. 91, 3 Pin. 385.

[v] (Wis. 1854) Judgment was rendered by a justice for costs, there having been nothing in the case showing that the claim of either party as proved at the trial exceeded the sum of $50, as contemplated by Rev. St. c. 88, § 227. Held, that the county court acquired no jurisdiction by appeal; certiorari being the proper remedy.—Adler v. Gee, 3 Wis. 742.

Constitutionality of statutes relating to appeals from justices of the peace, see "Constitutional Law," vol. 10, cc. 1210–2368.

[a] (Ill. 1888) Police magistrates are only one kind of justices of the peace, and the statute allowing appeals from justices to the circuit court applied equally to them. Nor does the act of June 13, 1887, amending the statute regarding such appeals by making it apply in terms to police magistrates, authorize a different construction of the statute as it stood.—Newberry v. Bowen, 26 Ill. App. 645.

[b] (Mich. 1880) Comp. Laws, § 5479, forbidding reversal of a justice's judgment for an improper allowance of fees, does not cover a case expressly governed by a statute regulating costs generally, and where the question is not as to particular allowances, which the justice has failed to consider.—Wilcox v. Laflin & Rand Powder Co., 44 Mich. 35, 5 N. W. 1091.

was served on the attorneys of the other party in justice court. October 12, 1891, appeal was granted. Held, that the order granting an appeal should be set aside, as Act Oct. 2, 1891 (Pub. Acts 1891, No. 73), providing that, where the party obtaining judgment appeared by attorney or agent, it would be sufficient to serve notice of subsequent proceedings in the cause on such attorney or agent, was not retroactive.—Danville Stove & Mfg. Co. v. Adsit, 88 Mich. 244, 50 N. W. 140.

[d] (Miss. 1852) The act of 1842 (Hutch. Code, p. 705, art. 17), providing for appeals from the decisions of justices of the peace to the circuit courts, repealed the prior act authorizing an appeal to a jury of five men.—Pollard v. Parish, 23 Miss. (1 Cushm.) 573.

[e] (Neb. 1871) Appeals under the town site act of February 10, 1857, conferring jurisdiction on the mayor of an incorporated town to hear and determine certain questions of title, and providing that notice of appeal from his decision shall be given on the day when the judgment is rendered, are not affected by the act of February 13, 1857, regulating appeals in justices' courts.—Newcomb v. Boulware, 1 Neb. 428.

[f] (Neb. 1879) The practice in an appeal from a justice's judgment is governed by the laws in force at the time of taking the appeal.—Roesink v. Barnett, 8 Neb. 146.

[g] (Nev. 1866) Const. art. 6, §§ 6, 8, declaring that the district court shall have final appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in justices' court, and the legislature shall prescribe by law the manner of determining cases in which appeals may be taken from the justices' courts, are not violated by an act providing that a trial on appeal from justices' court shall be de novo.—Cavanaugh v. Wright, 2 Nev. 166.

[h] (N. Y. 1851) Where an appeal to the county court was perfected by the service of the necessary papers upon the justice on the 3d of June, 1848, it was held that it was a suit pending on the 1st day of July, 1848, and was not affected by the Code of 1848, but was to be governed throughout by the judiciary act of 1847.—Teall v. Van Wyck, 10 Barb. 376.

[i] (N. Y. 1872) Section 371 of the Code, regulating appeals from justice's judgments, is to be construed liberally.—Younghause v. Fingar, 63 Barb. 299.

[j] (Ohio, 1846) The act of March 4, 1845, respecting appeals from a justice of the peace, does not apply to cases appealed before the passage of the act.—Barker v. Cory, 15 Ohio, 9.

[k] (Ohio, 1875) Act March 30, 1875 (72 Ohio Laws, p. 161), which takes away the right to appeal from judgments of a justice of the peace where the sum is less than $100, does not apply to or affect cases where the judgment had already been rendered, and the 10 days allowed by law for giving the appeal bond had not expired at the time the act was passed and took effect; and appeals in such cases might be perfected after the date of the act.—Bode v. Welch, 29 Ohio St. 19.

[l] (Or. 1881) Where a municipal charter made its recorder ex officio justice of the peace, and gave him jurisdiction over all violations of city ordinances, but made no provision for appeals from his judgments as to such violations, held that the statute regulating appeals from justices did not apply to the recorder while sitting as town magistrate, and no appeal would lie therefrom.—Town of La Fayette v. Clark, 9 Or. 225.

[n] (Pa. 1887) Article 5, § 14, of the new constitution, providing that in all cases of summary conviction, or of judgment in suit for a penalty before a magistrate or court not of record, either party may appeal to such court of record as may be prescribed by law, upon allowance of the appellate court, or judge thereof, upon cause shown, and Act April 17, 1876, prescribing the appellate court to which such appeal may be taken, enlarge, instead of restrain, the right of appeal; and, as to judgments in suits for penalties, the object was, not to limit the right of appeal as it then existed, but to secure it, within certain restrictions, against infraction by the legislature for all future time.—Commonwealth v. Brunner, 2 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 377.

[o] (Pa. 1896) Const. art. 5, § 14, provides that, in a suit for a penalty before a magistrate, either party may appeal when allowed by the appellate court. Act April 17, 1876, provides that such an appeal shall be taken to the court of common pleas. Held not restricted to cases in which, prior to their adoption, there was no right of appeal.—Commonwealth v. McCann, 174 Pa. 19, 34 Atl. 299, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. 1; Same v. Courtney, 174 Pa. 23, 34 Atl. 300, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. 2.

[q] (Wis. 1870) The principle, that rights of property once vested, or want of liability once established by judicial default, then final between parties, shall not be disturbed, or the controversy opened by mere legislative enactment, applies as well to a judgment of a justice having full jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter as to a judgment of any other court, and where an appeal from a judgment was not allowed at the time of its rendition, it could not be authorized by subsequent statute.—Town of Lancaster v. Barr, 25 Wis. 560.

[b] (Miss. 1874) Appeals and writs of certiorari are only different modes of getting cases from the justice's court to the circuit court, and do not affect the question of jurisdiction.—O'Leary v. Harris, 50 Miss. 18.

[c] (Mo. 1895) While there is no presumption that a justice of the peace had jurisdiction of an action, still, it having been appealed to a court of superior jurisdiction, there is a presumption that it had jurisdiction, though it had none if the justice had none.—Kellogg v. Linger, 60 Mo. App. 571, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 235.

[a] (Cal. 1882) Under the constitution, and prior to any act of the legislature relating to appeals from justices' courts, the superior court had jurisdiction of such appeals.—California Fruit & Meat Shipping Co. v. San Francisco Superior Court, 60 Cal. 305.

[b] (Fla. 1855) The supreme court has no jurisdiction of appeals from a justice of the peace.—Otoway v. Devall, 6 Fla. 302.

[c] (Mass. 1854) The appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in a civil action, which by Rev. St. c. 85, § 13, may be taken "at any time within 24 hours after the entry of the judgment to the court of common pleas then next to be held in the same county," must be to the court held next after the entry of the judgment, although before the taking of the appeal.—McIniffe v. Wheelock, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 600.

[d] (Mo. 1848) In the county of St. Louis, appeals from justices' courts should be taken to that court in which it can be first tried, and not necessarily to that court where sittings commence next after the appeal.—Patten v. Nelson, 12 Mo. 292.

[e] (Mo. 1873) The acts relating to the Lafayette court of common pleas does not require that an appeal from a justice should be taken to that court instead of the circuit court, when the term of the former court began soonest after the date of granting the appeal.—Smith v. Shore, 53 Mo. 273.

[f] (N. Y. 1865) When an appeal is taken from a justice court it is not to the general term of the court, but to the court of common pleas, and although the argument on the appeal is to be heard at the general term, yet any branch of this court might entertain a motion to dismiss; but where the appeal is to the general term, that alone has the power to decide upon the appealability of the order.—People v. Murphy, 1 Daly, 462.

[g] (N. C. 1853) A party against whom a judgment has been rendered by a justice of the peace may appeal to the next county court, or to the next superior court, at his option.—Plummer v. Wheeler, 44 N. C. 472.

Morse, 1 Lack. Leg. Rec. 391.

[b] (Ala. 1845) Act Feb. 14, 1843, providing that all appeals from justices of the peace, and all cases pending on certiorari in the circuit court of Mobile county, should be returned into the county court of said county, did not deprive the circuit court of all jurisdiction over such cases, so as to require the court of its own motion to repudiate an appeal cause then pending, and hence it was not ground for reversal that such a cause was retained and decided.—Vaughan v. Seed, 7 Ala. 740.

[c] (Ark. 1844) Const. art. 6, § 5, provides that the circuit courts shall exercise a certain control over the county courts, and over justices of the peace in each county in their respective circuits, and shall have power to issue all necessary writs to carry into effect their general and specific powers. Held not to confer appellate jurisdiction on the circuit courts over cases adjudicated by justices of the peace.—Ex parte Anthony, 5 Ark. [g] (Iowa, 1880) Under Laws 1876, c. 143, organizing the superior court of the city of Cedar Rapids, that court and the circuit court exercise concurrent jurisdiction in the matter of appeals from justices of the peace within the township or townships in which the city is situated.—Hickox v. Nutting, 55 Iowa, 403, 7 N. W. 645; Same v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 55 Iowa, 431, 7 N. W. 645.

[i] (Ky.) From a judgment of a justice, on a motion against a constable for failing to return an execution, where the amount exceeds £5, an appeal lies only to the circuit court, unless the case has arisen since the act of 1835.—(1824) Craddock v. Patterson, 17 Ky. (1 T. B. Mon.) 8; (1838) Howard v. Jones, 41 Ky. (2 B. Mon.) 526.

[m] (Miss. 1847) The charter of Natches of 1825 provided that the selectmen should be commissioned as justices of the peace for one year, and that a right of appeal should be had from their judgments, in relation to or arising out of a city ordinance, to the board of selectmen. In 1832, the constitution, then adopted, provided that justices of the peace should be elected by districts for two years, and for a right of appeal from their judgments; and the law passed thereunder provided for an appeal to the circuit courts. Held, that the constitution and charter did not seem to harmonize, but that, where there was an appeal to the circuit court from a judgment on process, signed by "J. R. S., City Magistrate and Justice of the Peace," the court would consider the judgment to have been rendered by the magistrate as justice of the peace, and that it would be error to dismiss such appeal.—Agnew v. City of Natchez, 17 Miss. (9 Smedes & M.) 104.

[n] (Mo. 1852) The superintending control vested by the constitution in the circuit court over justices of the peace is not diminished by the power conferred upon the St. Louis law commissioner.—Ladue v. Spalding, 17 Mo. 159.

[o] (N. J. 1883) P. L. 1882, p. 137, providing for appeals to the district court from judgments of justices of the peace in civil proceedings, confers exclusive jurisdiction on the district court in such cases in cities where they are established.—Jackson v. Kelly, 6 N. J. Law J. 55.

[p] (Wis. 1855) Previous to the passage of Sess. Laws 1855, c. 34, authorizing an appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, the circuit court had no jurisdiction to entertain such appeal.—Asher v. Hill, 4 Wis. 214.

Campbell, 5 Colo. 126.

[f] (Ky. 1852) 2 St. Laws 1796, p. 887, 2 St. Laws 1800, p. 889, 3 St. Laws 1838, p. 376, and 3 St. Laws 1839, p. 377, give justices of the peace exclusive jurisdiction of causes in equity or law, where the amount in controversy was under £5, and authorize an appeal from their decisions to the county courts, where the judgment is of the amount of 25 shillings or over, and under £5; Act Jan. 23, 1840 (3 St. Laws, p. 378), provides that the first section of the act entitled "An act to regulate equitable proceedings under five pounds before justices of the peace" (3 St. Laws 1838, p. 376) be so amended as to increase the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to all sums under $50, and above £5, under the same regulations as specified in said act, provided that the party against whom such order or judgment is entered by the justice may have the right to appeal to the next circuit court to be holden for the county, on his executing bond, as in other cases of appeal. Held, that an appeal lies to the county court from the judgment or decision of a justice of peace, in all cases in equity where the amount in controversy is under £5.—Searcy v. [d] (Ark.) Where a justice of the peace had no jurisdiction because the action on which the suit was founded was not filed with him until after the summons had been issued, the circuit court could acquire none by appeal, and should dismiss the cause for want of jurisdiction.—(1845) Pendleton v. Fowler, 6 Ark. (1 Eng.) 41; (1845) Levy v. Shurman, Id. 182, 42 Am. Dec. 690; (1846) Latham v. Jones, 6 Ark. (1 Eng.) 871; (1846) Dickey v. Pettigrew, Id. 424.

Clements, 9 Ark. (4 Eng.) 478.

[l] (Kan. 1889) Plaintiff sued for a partnership accounting before a justice who rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed to the district court, and moved to dismiss the action because neither the justice nor the district court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. No pleading was filed in either court, except plaintiff's bill of particulars filed in the justice's court, and nothing was done by defendant in either court to waive any want of jurisdiction, except to appeal from the justice to the district court. tion on appeal from a justice.—Wright v. Guy, 10 Serg. & R. 227.

[t] (Pa. 1856) The court of common pleas has jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment by a justice of the peace, where part of the demand passed upon by the justice was without his jurisdiction.—Bunce v. Stanford, 27 Pa. (3 Casey) 265.

[u] (Vt. 1847) Where a suit had been once continued by the justice who signed the writ, and afterwards, in the absence of the justice, it was continued by another justice, and the defendant appeared at the day to which it was so continued, and moved to dismiss the suit, and the motion was overruled and judgment rendered against him, from which he appealed, it was held, upon the motion to dismiss being renewed in the county court, that the action should be dismissed.—Whitcomb v. Rood, 20 Vt. 49.

[v] (Wis. 1865) An appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace who was without jurisdiction will be dismissed by the circuit court.—Felt v. Felt, 19 Wis. 193.

Consent to jurisdiction where the amount was beyond justice's jurisdiction, see post, § 475.

Jurisdiction of appellate court to allow amount in controversy to be increased beyond jurisdiction of justice, see post, § 674.

—— of particular courts determined by amount in controversy, see ante, §§ 469, 470.

[a] An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace may be dismissed, even after trial and verdict in court, where it appears that the amount in controversy exceeded the jurisdiction of the justice. Neither the laches of the defendant, nor his consent, could give jurisdiction.
—(Minn. 1856) Dodd v. Cady, 1 Minn. 289 (Gil. 223);
(Pa. 1861) Collins v. Collins, 37 Pa. (1 Wright) 387.

[b] (Ala. 1849) The fact that, in a case before a justice of the peace, the summons was issued upon a debt of $99, when the jurisdiction of the court was limited to causes involving $50 or less, will not prejudice the trial of the case on its merits, on appeal, as the act of 1819 provides that appeals from judgments of justices of the peace shall be tried according to the justice and equity of the cause, without regarding any defect in the summons or other proceeding of the justice of the peace.—Hart v. Turk, 15 Ala. 675.

[c] (Cal. 1855) Where a justice of the peace rendered a judgment for an amount exceeding his jurisdiction, the county court should dismiss the whole case.—Ford v. Smith, 5 Cal. 331.

[d] (Cal. 1886) Where a justice's court has no jurisdiction of an action to recover specific property, because its value exceeds the limit of its jurisdiction, the superior court can take no jurisdiction of such an action, on appeal from the justice's court.—Shealor v. Amador County Superior Court, 70 Cal. 564, 11 Pac. 653.

[e] (Ga. 1885) An appeal from a justice's judgment on several notes, and consolidation of the suits on each, cannot confer jurisdiction upon the superior court if none existed in the justice's court from which the appeal was taken; owing to the amounts being in excess of the justice's jurisdiction.—Searcy v. Tillman, 75 Ga. 504.

[f] (Ind. 1877) In an action brought in a justice's court, an amended complaint, in four paragraphs, was filed, the aggregate amount demanded thereby exceeding the amount of which the justice had jurisdiction, although the sum demanded in each paragraph and by the original complaint was less than that amount. Held, on appeal, that the circuit court did not acquire jurisdiction.—Mays v. Dooley, 59 Ind. 287; Horton v. Sawyer, Id. 587.

[g] (Kan. 1890) Under Comp. Laws, c. 81, §§ 120–124, providing for an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the district court, the jurisdiction of the district court is exclusively appellate, and, where the justice had no jurisdiction of the action because the amount claimed exceeded $300, the district court acquires none, though it is the defendant who appeals.—Ball v. Biggam, 43 Kan. 327, 23 Pac. 565.

[h] (Minn. 1871) The jurisdiction of a justice in replevin, under Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 5, subd. 2, giving such jurisdiction where the value of the property "does not exceed" $100, depends upon the filing of the affidavit and bond required by sections 81–83 of the same chapter, before the writ can issue, and is not derived from the complaint, as the pleadings are made up on the return of the writ; and, where such affidavit and bond are duly filed, the value specified therein not exceeding $100, and no issue is made on the value, proof, on appeal to the district court, that the property is of greater value than $100, will not oust jurisdiction.—Hecklin v. Ess, 16 Minn. 51 (Gil. 38).

[i] (Miss. 1888) Where an action is without the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, as to the amount involved, the circuit court will acquire no jurisdiction on appeal from his judgment.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McCollister, 66 Miss. 106, 5 South. 695.

[j] (N. C. 1884) Where a plaintiff splits up an account for the purpose of suing in a justice's court, and the two suits are taken to the superior court by appeal, they cannot be consolidated there for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction.—Jarrett v. Self, 90 N. C. 478.

[k] (N. C. 1885) If a justice of the peace had no jurisdiction, the amount involved being too great, the superior court does not acquire jurisdiction on an appeal by the entry of a remittitur as to the excess.—Ijames v. McClamroch, 92 N. C. 362.

[l] (Ohio, 1859) Justices of the peace having jurisdiction, under Act March 14, 1853, § 4, as amended by Act May 1, 1854, § 1, to give damages, not exceeding $300, for breaches of warranties of horses, by appeal from a judgment therefor, the common pleas takes jurisdiction, and the appeal must there be entertained.—McKibben v. Lester, 9 Ohio St. 627.

[m] (Tex. 1891) Where the amount in controversy in a justice's court is in excess of its jurisdiction, the county court, on appeal, does not acquire jurisdiction, nor does the court of appeals, further than is necessary to reverse the judgment, with a direction to dismiss the case.—Waters v. Walker (App.) 17 S. W. 1085.

[n] (Tex. 1896) A justice court has no jurisdiction to try a counterclaim the items of which, taken collectively, exceed $200, and an appeal to the county court from a judgment in such case confers no jurisdiction.—Cain v. Culbreath (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 809.

§ 474. —— Actions involving title to real property.

[a] (U. S. 1880) Where a case of which a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction, because of the fact that the title to land is involved, is removed to the district court by appeal from the justice's judgment, it should be dismissed, because there could have been no lawful trial before the justice.—Langford v. Monteith, 102 U. S. 145, 26 L. Ed. 53.

[b] (Ala. 1880) When a cause before a justice of the peace involves the title to real estate, the circuit court should, on appeal, repudiate the cause as having been tried below without jurisdiction.—Webb v. Carlisle, 65 Ala. 313.

[c] (Ark. 1847) Where it appeared that an action before a justice of the peace involved the title to land, it should be dismissed in the circuit court, on being carried there by appeal.—Fitzgerald v. Beebe, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 305, 46 Am. Dec. 285.

[d] (Ill. 1859) A justice of the peace having no jurisdiction to render judgment for breach of covenant, the county court of appeal has no larger jurisdiction than had the justice.—Kennedy v. Pennick, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 597.

[e] (Kan. 1884) The fact that it appears from the evidence in the district court, on appeal from a judgment of a justice, that title to real estate is involved, will not prevent the court from trying the case, where this fact did not appear in the justice court, though Laws 1870, c. 88, § 2 (Comp. Laws 1879, c. 81, § 7), requires a justice, where it appears, in an action commenced before him, that title is involved, to certify it to the district court for trial.—Douglass v. Easter, 32 Kan. 496, 4 Pac. 1034.

[f] (Md. 1879) On appeal from a justice court to the Baltimore city court, where the action is tried de novo, the latter court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the question of title to land; the justice court not having such jurisdiction.—Presstman v. Silljacks, 52 Md. 647.

[g] (N. H. 1851) Where a justice of the peace enters judgment involving the title of real estate, it is unnecessary to enter an appeal from such judgment, as it is one which the justice had no jurisdiction to make, and to which, therefore, an appeal will not lie.—Morse v. Davis, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 159.

[h] (N. Y. 1871) Code Proc. § 59, providing for the dismissal by a justice of the peace of a case, where it appears on the trial, from the plaintiff's own showing, that the title to real property is in question, governs as well appeals to the county court in such cases.—O'Donnel v. Brown, 3 Lans. 474.

[i] (N. Y. 1892) Code Civ. Proc. § 2956, providing that if, in actions before justices of the peace, it appears "from the plaintiff's own showing that the title to real property is in question, * * * the justice must dismiss the complaint * * * and render judgment against plaintiff," does not apply where an appeal is taken in trespass from a justice to the county court, the record not showing that the title to the land was disputed in the proceedings before the justice, and it was error for the county court to dismiss the complaint on the ground that from plaintiff's showing the title to the land was involved.—Gould v. Patterson, 63 Hun, 575, 18 N. Y. Supp. 332, 28 Abb. N. C. 385, 22 Civ. Proc. R. 230.

[j] (N. Y. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2951, 2952, 2954, provide how defendant may discontinue an action before a justice which he claims will involve a question of title to real estate. Section 2955 provides that, if defendant does not take such steps, the justice has jurisdiction, and defendant is precluded from drawing the title in question. Section 2956 provides that if, however, it appears on the trial, from plaintiff's own showing, that title is in question, and the title is disputed by defendant, the justice must dismiss the complaint. Held that, where defendant did not take steps for a discontinuance, failure of the justice to dismiss, though title was brought in question and disputed, did not render his judgment void for want of jurisdiction, but merely erroneous, and the county court could try the case, including the question of title, on appeal, it being provided by section 3071 that, on such appeal, all proceedings are the same as if the action had been commenced there, except as otherwise specifically provided.—Gould v. Patterson, 87 Hun, 533, 34 N. Y. Supp. 289.

[k] (Or. 1885) The question of title to real estate cannot be entertained by the circuit court on appeal from a justice's court.—Aiken v. Aiken, 12 Or. 203, 6 Pac. 682.

§ 475. Waiver of objections and consent to jurisdiction.

Waiver of objections to jurisdiction of appellate court where amount is too small, see post, § 479.

—— or consent to jurisdiction on appeal where dependent on amount in controversy, see post, § 486.

[a] Where the justice had no jurisdiction of the amount in controversy, consent of parties cannot give the appellate court jurisdiction.—(Minn. 1856) Dodd v. Cady, 1 Minn. 289 (Gil. 223);

(Pa. 1861) Collins v. Collins, 37 Pa. (1 Wright) 387.

[b] (Ala. 1843) Where, on appeal from a justice, the declaration is for a sum within the jurisdiction of the justice, and interest on such sum from the time it became due, and there is a verdict for a sum beyond the jurisdiction of the justice, the judgment thereupon rendered, and to which no objection was made, will not be reversed on error, as, the jurisdiction of the court on appeal not being limited by the amount in controversy, had a suit been originally brought there, it was allowable for the party whose case came up by appeal to impliedly or expressly consent to the decision of the controversy which the primary court would not have been competent to adjust.—Pruitt v. Stuart, 5 Ala. 112.

[c] (Ala. 1852) In appeal cases the defendant may waive all objections to the mode in which he is brought into court, and submit the case, though involving more than $50, to the decision of the circuit court which, by virtue of its general jurisdiction over the amount, can determine it.—Vaughan v. Robinson, 20 Ala. 229.

[d] (Ala. 1858) On appeal from a justice, where the appellate court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, no waiver or consent of the parties can confer jurisdiction.—Little v. Fitts, 33 Ala. 343.

[e] (Ark. 1896) The objection that the record does not show a judgment and affidavit for appeal from a justice to the circuit court cannot be urged on appeal from the circuit court, where the circuit court had original as well as appellate jurisdiction of the cause, and it exercised jurisdiction without objection.—Smith v. Maberry, 61 Ark. 515, 33 S. W. 1068.

[f] (Ind. 1862) The fact that on the trial in the circuit court the title to real estate was brought in issue cannot deprive that court of its jurisdiction, nor can it relate back and defeat the jurisdiction of the justice.—Wall v. Albertson, 18 Ind. 145.

[g] (Ind. 1877) Jurisdiction by consent of the parties cannot be given to a justice of the peace, nor to the circuit court, on appeal of the amount in controversy exceeding $200.—Horton v. Sawyer, 59 Ind. 587.

[h] (Iowa, 1872) A justice of the peace of Wisconsin failed to render judgment on a verdict for plaintiff, returned by the jury. Both parties appeared, and entered upon a trial of the cause on appeal, without objection that no appeal lay from the verdict of the jury; and judgment was rendered against plaintiff. Held, in an action on the transcript of such judgment and proceedings, that the parties thereby gave the appellate court jurisdiction of their persons, and rendered its proceedings and judgment valid, as the court, under the laws of Wisconsin, would have had jurisdiction to try the cause had it been originally commenced there.—Danforth v. Thompson, 34 Iowa, 243.

[i] (Ky. 1877) Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the right to object, because an appeal was brought directly from a justice's court to the circuit court, instead of being brought through the quarterly court, is waived by a failure to move for a dismissal, and consenting to a trial in the circuit court.—Hughes' Adm'r v. Hardesty, 76 Ky. (13 Bush) 364.

[ii] (Mich. 1853) An appellant from a justice, by pleading to the merits, waives his exceptions to the jurisdiction of the court.—Shaw v. Moser, 3 Mich. 71.

[j] (Minn. 1878) Where an appeal has been taken from a justice of the peace on questions of law and fact, and the cause tried and judgment entered in the district court without objection, the jurisdiction of that court is complete, though the amount in controversy was more than $100, and the justice, for that reason, had no jurisdiction.—Lee v. Parrett, 25 Minn. 128.

[k] (Ohio) Where the plaintiff, having failed to recover judgment in an action before a justice of the peace, has applied to the court of common pleas and there filed a petition alleging an entirely new cause of action, and the defendant, without objection, has answered to the merits, the appellate court thereby acquires original jurisdiction of the case; and the fact that it came into the court nominally by appeal is immaterial.—(1859) Bisher v. Richards, 9 Ohio St. 495; (1876) Wilson v. Wilson, 30 Ohio St. 305.

[l] (Ohio, 1877) Where, on an appeal from a judgment of a justice's court, defendant demurs generally as well as for want of jurisdiction, such demurrer is a submission to jurisdiction, since, if he desired to present the question as to jurisdiction, a motion should have been presented to dismiss for want of jurisdiction.—Miller v. Truman, 7 Ohio Dec. 374, 2 Wkly. Law Bul. 241.

[m] (Tex. 1887) Three cases were pending in a justice's court, all instituted by the same plaintiff, but against different defendants. One of the actions was tried and appealed to the district court. A stipulation was entered into by the parties in the other cases that they would abide the result of the case appealed, and the same judgment should be rendered by the district court as had been given in the case appealed. Held, that the district court, having no original jurisdiction of the subject-matter, could not obtain jurisdiction by consent, but only by appeal.—Woodruff v. Bass, 67 Tex. 298, 3 S. W. 48.

[b] (Ill. 1874) Pending an appeal in the circuit court from a justice of the peace, the question of the jurisdiction of the circuit court to entertain such appeal is one that may be determined in that suit, and is not triable upon a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the justice, notwithstanding the appeal, to issue an execution on his judgment.—People v. Huntoon, 71 Ill. 536.

[c] (Kan. 1890) Upon an appeal from a justice of the peace to the district court, an objection by defendant, at the trial, to the introduction of any evidence for plaintiff on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, is sufficient, and in apt time to raise the question of jurisdiction.—Ball v. Biggam, 43 Kan. 327, 23 Pac. 565.

[d] (N. C. 1881) On an appeal in a summary proceeding in ejectment before a justice of the peace, it is the province of the court to determine whether title to land is in controversy.—Parker v. Allen, 84 N. C. 466.

[e] (Pa.) On an appeal, the justice may prove by parol the amount of the plaintiff's demand before him, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the appellate court.—(1811) Hoops v. Worthington, 1 Browne, 336; (1834) Downey v. Ferry, 2 Watts, 304.

[f] (Pa. 1895) Where a transcript on appeal by defendant from a judgment of a justice of the peace is filed in the county court, and plaintiff moves to strike off the appeal, the question of want of jurisdiction in the justice may be raised by defendant by motion to dismiss the proceedings, though certiorari is the proper and best way.—Ripple v. Keast (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 109, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 548, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 31, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 205.

[g] (Tex. 1883) Where an appeal bond from a justice's court does not describe the judgment with sufficient fullness to show that it was final and appealable, the court may consider the transcript in determining the question of jurisdiction.—Owens v. Levy, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 408.

[h] (Tex. 1887) Where the question arises as to the jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice, it is proper for the appellate court to look to the entire record to determine it.—Anderson v. Beaty, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 260.

[i] (Wis. 1865) On an appeal to the circuit court from a justice of the peace, the return of the justice stated that on the 1st of September, 1862 (the return day of the summons), the plaintiff "declared orally on a promissory note given to him by defendant, dated F———, June 9, 1862, and demanded judgment on the same for $100." The return did not further describe the note, nor was it returned with the papers and filed in the circuit court. At the trial in said court, there was offered in evidence by the plaintiff, but ruled out, a note for $600, executed by defendant to plaintiff, dated as above, and indorsed as follows: "Filed Sept. 1, 1862, B. L. P———, J. P., and demanded a judgment of $100, offering to release all of said note but said $100." Held, that this indorsement was sufficient evidence that said note was the one in suit, and that the justice, therefore, had no jurisdiction.—Felt v. Felt, 19 Wis. 193.

[j] (Wis. 1885) The justice's minutes of testimony cannot be referred to on an appeal for the purpose of ascertaining whether the amount in controversy exceeded his jurisdiction, in a case triable de novo in the circuit court on appeal, but in such an action the justice should be required to certify what amount was proved on the trial to his satisfaction, and the amount it was reduced by credits given, or by the set-off or demand of the defendant.—Sellers v. Lampman, 63 Wis. 256, 23 N. W. 131.

[k] (Wis. 1885) Where, on appeal to the circuit court, the parties are allowed to amend their pleadings so that either party could prove an account far in excess of a justice's jurisdiction, this will not show that such proof was made on the trial before the justice, and that he had not jurisdiction.—Sellers v. Lampman, 63 Wis. 256, 23 N. W. 131.

[c] (N. H. 1849) The refusal of a justice of the peace to receive a plea in abatement seasonably offered, and the rendition of final judgment against the defendant, without regard to the plea, constitute such error or abuse, on the part of the inferior jurisdiction, as authorizes the interposition of the extraordinary powers of this court for its correction.—Ela v. Goss, 20 N. H. 52.

[d] (N. Y. 1887) An appeal lies from a judgment of the recorder of the village of Port Jervis, as under Laws 1873, c. 370, he is, for purposes of civil trials in the village, a justice of the peace of the town of Benpark.—Village of Port Jervis v. Barrett Bridge Co., 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 339.

[e] (Wis. 1876) A city charter providing that justices of the peace elected thereunder shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all actions arising under the act or the city ordinances, but neither referring expressly to the general justices' act, nor otherwise providing for regulating the proceedings before such city justices, is to be construed merely as giving such justices jurisdiction of the actions mentioned, to the exclusion of other justices, the proceedings before them being subject to the provisions of the general justices' act, and an appeal lying to the circuit court from their judgment as provided by the latter act.—City of Boscobel v. Bugbee, 41 Wis. 59.

Appeal from order of justice in peace proceedings, see "Breach of the Peace," vol. 8, c. 986, § 15.

[a] (U. S. 1821) No appeal will lie from a judgment of the justice of the peace, in the District of Columbia, imposing a fine for profane swearing in his presence.—Howard v. United States, Fed. Cas. No. 6,763 [2 Cranch, C. C. 259].

[e] (Cal. 1864) An appeal lies from the justice's court to the county court, in an action brought against a railroad company under the act of April 14, 1863, to recover for overcharges.—Burson v. Cowles, 25 Cal. 535.

[g] (Conn. 1854) While the statute was in force prohibiting an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, except in certain specified cases, unless the sum in demand exceeded seven dollars, an action was brought by the selectmen of a town, demanding seven dollars damages, to recover the expenses incurred by them in removing a fence from the public highway, under the act to prevent and remove nuisances, to which the defendant pleaded the general issue, and also that the land from which the fence was removed was his soil and freehold. Held, that such action was not within the provision of the ninth section of said act, concerning appeals on plea of title, nor the provision of the seventy-second section of the act, relating to civil actions, concerning appeals where the plaintiff's right of way is in question, and, therefore, that it was not appealable.—Wildman v. Rider, 23 Conn. 172.

[j] (La. 1858) The district court has jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice's court, in a proceeding under the landlord and tenant law, to expel a contumacious tenant, although the price of the lease is under $10.—D'Armond v. Pullen, 13 La. Ann. 137.

Co. v. New Jersey Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 39 N. J. Law (10 Vroom) 400.

[o] (N. Y. 1854) A judgment of a justice's court, in proceedings instituted under the mechanics' lien law, is a judgment "in a civil action" within the meaning of the Code, allowing an appeal from such judgment to the county court.—People v. Rensselaer County Judge, 13 How. Prac. 398.

[p] (Ohio, 1832) An appeal lies from a justice to the common pleas, in a suit by a paymaster to recover militia fines.—Wright v. Munger, 5 Ohio (5 Ham.) 441.

[q] (Ohio, 1861) An appeal may be taken to the court of common pleas of the proper county from any judgment in replevin of property, rendered by a justice of the peace upon a verdict of the jury, under section 111 of the act regulating the "jurisdiction and procedure before justices of the peace."—Martin v. Armstrong, 12 Ohio St. 548.

[r] (Pa. 1827) An appeal lies from the judgment of a justice of the peace in a suit for the penalty incurred by neglecting to serve notice under the arbitration act of 1810.—Commonwealth v. Bennett, 16 Serg. & R. 243.

[s] (Pa. 1842) In sci. fa. against a constable to recover the amount of an execution put into his hands, the plaintiff is entitled to an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace.—Sott v. Kelso, 4 Watts & S. 278.

[t] (Pa. 1891) Under Act June 16, 1836, an appeal will not lie from an order of two justices approving the expenditures of a person in providing for a pauper.—Appeal of Scott Tp. Poor Dist. (Quart. Sess.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 304.

[u] (Pa. 1895) Acts April 15, 1835, and April 5, 1849, allowing appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace for over $5.33 for a penalty for breach of a borough ordinance, are repealed by implication, so as to allow appeal without regard to the amount of the judgment, by Act April 17, 1876, authorizing appeal from the judgment of a magistrate, in a suit for a penalty, to the court of common pleas, on allowance of said court.—Carlisle Borough v. Lifter (Com. Pl.) 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 85, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 230.

[v] (Tex. 1846) An appeal does not lie from a decision rendered in a justice's court, under the seventeenth section of the land law of 1837.—Field v. Anderson, 1 Tex. 437.

[x] (Vt. 1838) An appeal may be had from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, on a writ of scire facias against bail on mesne process.—Gilson v. Gay, 10 Vt. 326.

[y] (Vt. 1851) The provision in the statute, authorizing the issuing of extents against delinquent collectors, was designed to furnish a summary remedy for those cases. It is a delegation of special and extraordinary powers to justices of the peace, from the exercise of which no appeal lies.—Griswold v. Rutland, 23 Vt. 324.

[z] (Vt. 1860) The provision of the statute (section 10, c. 92, p. 518, Comp. St.) by which a poundkeeper may recover of the owner of any beast impounded the sum of 17 cents a day for the time the owner suffers it to remain in pound beyond 48 hours after notice is penal in its character; and an action brought by the poundkeeper before a justice of the peace to recover this sum or penalty is therefore appealable to the county court under the statute. Comp. St. p. 239, c. 29, § 76.—Edwards v. Osgood, 33 Vt. 224.

[zz] (Vt. 1864) Section 70 of the act relating to justices of the peace allows an appeal "when the defendant shall bona fide plead in excuse or justification that he was acting as a public officer under, or by virtue of, any tax bill or military warrant." Held, that a town not entitled to appeal on account of the small sum sued for could not claim an appeal under this section by pleading that the money which the plaintiff was seeking to recover was collected of him by the town constable upon a legal rate bill and warrant.—May v. Town of Jamaica, 37 Vt. 23.

[a] (Ga. 1875) In claim cases either party may appeal from the decision of the justice of the peace to the superior court, where either the amount of the fi. fa., or the value of the property claimed, exceeds $50. The act of 1874, regulating the right of appeal in such cases, so far as it makes either the amount of the fi. fa., or the value of the property, the test of what is "the sum claimed" in the language of the constitution, is not in conflict with Const. art. 5, § 6.—Turman v. Cargill, 54 Ga. 663.

[b] (Ga. 1878) The provisions of Const. 1877, art. 6, § 7, par. 2, in regard to justice courts, did not change existing laws, so as to allow an appeal where the amount claimed is less than $50.—Tibbs v. Williamson, 61 Ga. 74.

[c] (Ohio, 1844) Where an appeal from a judgment of a justice to the common pleas court is unauthorized because the amount recovered is less than $20, the filing of a declaration by plaintiff in the common pleas court will not confer jurisdiction on that court of the appeal.—Glover v. Moses, 13 Ohio, 321.

[d] (Pa. 1831) In an action before a justice, the sum demanded by the plaintiff gives him the right of appeal, if the decision is in whole or in part against him; and the sum adjudicated against the defendant alone determines his right of appeal.—McGonnegal v. Hopper, 1 Ashm. 195.

[e] (Tex. 1877) Rev. St. art. 1165, giving the right of appeals from the justice court to the county court "when the amount in controversy" exceeds $20, is not repugnant to Const. art. 5, § 16, giving such right where "the judgment" exceeds $20.—Miman v. Eidman, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 629.

[f] (Tex. 1893) In a suit for damages less than $20, when the pleadings are in writing, the justice's failure to enter on his docket the amount claimed in reconvention, being more than $20, will not deprive the county court of jurisdiction of defendant's appeal.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Hayes, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 88, 23 S. W. 443.

[g] (Vt. 1878) A suit on a coupon for $15, taken from a town bond for $500, brought before a justice of the peace, is appealable under V. S. 1876, No. 64, the real question being as to the validity of the bond, which thus became an "exhibit" on the trial, made by the plaintiff, of more than $20.—Town of Concord v. National Bank of Derby Line, 51 Vt. 144.

[h] (Vt. 1884) An action of assumpsit with the common counts for $50, and a special count on a promissory note for $25, brought on a writ, the ad damnum of which was $50, held so far an action of assumpsit on the common counts as to be appealable without affidavit of defense, under Rev. Laws, § 1061.—Northfield Sav. Bank v. Sanders, 56 Vt. 594.

[i] (Wis. 1853) An appeal from a judgment of a justice in replevin for a return of the property and for less than $15 of costs is the proper course, when, although the justice's return does not find technically that the property was worth $50, the evidence reported shows it indisputably.—Weizen v. McKinney, 2 Wis. 288.

§ 480. Cases subject to pecuniary limitation.

[b] (Ga. 1874) The constitution of 1868 provides an appeal to the superior court from the judgments of justices of the peace, in all cases where the amount in controversy between the parties was over $50, whether that controversy originated in a claim case, or in any other class of cases of which the justices of the peace had jurisdiction to hear and determine.—Burts v. Farrar, 50 Ga. 601.

[c] (Ky. 1824) An appeal lies from a judgment of a justice against a constable for money collected and not paid over, if the amount exceeds five pounds.—Craddock v. Patterson, 17 Ky. (1 T. B. Mon.) 8.

[d] (Ky. 1852) The act of 1840 allows appeals to the circuit courts only from orders and judgments in cases between an execution creditor and the defendant's debtor, upon a proceeding under that act to subject such debts to the satisfaction of such execution, where the amount involved is over five pounds.—Searcy v. Switzer, 52 Ky. (13 B. Mon.) 352.

[e] (Minn. 1866) Pub. St. c. 59, § 136, gives a right of appeal from a justice of the peace where the value of the property, as sworn to in the affidavit for a writ of replevin, shall exceed $15, "or where the amount claimed in the complaint shall exceed $30." Held, that this last clause does not apply exclusively to the action of replevin, and therefore gives the right of appeal in an action of trespass where the amount claimed is $45.—Shunk v. Hellmiller, 11 Minn. 164 (Gil. 104).

[f] (Ohio, 1861) The right of appeal in actions of replevin is not restricted nor qualified by subdivision 2, § 123, of an act providing "that appeals shall not be allowed in jury trials, where neither party claim in their bill of particulars a sum exceeding $20."—Martin v. Armstrong, 12 Ohio St. 548.

[h] (Vt. 1839) An action before a justice of the peace, under the second section of the act of 1817, in addition to the pauper acts, for transporting a pauper from one town to another without an order of removal, where the damages claimed do not exceed $10, is not appealable.—Calais v. Hall, 11 Vt. 494.

[i] (Vt. 1856) A claimant in a trustee case before a justice can only appeal where other parties could, not where the judgment affects him to a less amount than $20.—Cabot v. Burnham, 28 Vt. (2 Williams) 694.

[j] (Vt. 1894) Act No. 122 of 1884 declares that no appeal shall be allowed from the judgment of a justice in a case where neither the ad damnum of the writ, nor the sum demanded by the declaration, nor plaintiff's specifications on trial exceed $20, nor in assumpsit on balance of account, where the balance claimed is not more than $20. Held, that the account referred to is an open account, not an account stated, since the section elsewhere provides for appeals on accounts stated.—Scott v. Darling, 66 Vt. 510, 29 Atl. 993.

§ 481. Requisite amount or value.

[a] (U. S. 1827) No appeal lies from a judgment of a justice of the peace in the District of Columbia, unless the debt or demand exceed the sum of five dollars.—Thornton v. Washington, Fed. Cas. No. 14,001 [3 Cranch, C. C. 212].

[b] (Fla. 1855) The circuit courts have original and general jurisdiction, and are authorized by law to entertain jurisdiction of appeals from justices, on judgments exceeding $10 in amount.—Ex parte Henderson, 6 Fla. 279.

[c] (Ind. 1881) An appeal to the supreme court from a judgment in an action instituted before a justice of the peace will be dismissed where the amount in controversy is less than $50.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Trimble, 75 Ind. 378.

[d] (Mich. 1848) Under the act of 1845, a plaintiff against whom a judgment is rendered in a justice's court for costs only, amounting to less than four dollars, may appeal.—Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mich. (Man.) 156.

[e] (Mo. 1852) A circuit court cannot dismiss an appeal from a justice on account of the smallness of the amount in controversy.—Harris v. Hughes, 16 Mo. 599; Whitsett v. Gharky, 17 Mo. 325.

[f] (N. C. 1872) Section 539 of the Code of Procedure, providing that if a judgment of a justice appealed from is $25 or less it shall be reviewed in the superior court on matters of law only, should be construed to mean appeals by defendants against whom judgment is rendered for $25 or less, and who claim that it ought to be still less; and it does not apply to a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for $25 or less, and who claim that it ought to be for more, and who have an apparent, and not a sham, claim for more. The idea is that a trial in the superior court, before a jury, of facts and law, ought not to be entertained when the amount in controversy is $25 or less, and that a trial ought to be allowed when the amount is for more. There would be a grave denial of justice if such a statute were construed to apply to a judgment in favor of plaintiff, where more than $25 is fairly claimed and apparently due; so that, if the plaintiff sue on a note or an account for $100, the magistrate could deprive him of the benefits of an appeal and a trial upon the merits in the superior court, by giving him a judgment for $25 or less.—Cowles v. Hayes, 67 N. C. 128.

[h] (Ohio, 1881) Under the statute prescribing the jurisdiction and procedure of justices of the peace passed March 14, 1853 (Swan & C. St. p. 769), and sections 111, 123 thereof, as amended March 30, 1875 (72 Ohio Laws, p. 159), an appeal did not lie from a judgment of a justice of the peace, where the case was not tried by a jury, for a less sum than $100, exclusive of costs, either under said amended sections, or original section 90 of said act.—Perkins v. White, 36 Ohio St. 530.

[i] (Pa. 1810) Under Act 1810, §§ 3, 4, an appeal lies from a justice of the peace, where judgment is given for more than $5.33 and less than $20.—Harris v. Harrison, 1 Browne, 161.

[j] (Wis. 1856) An appeal may be taken from a justice of the peace, if the amount is over $50, and the affidavit is properly made.—Cavenaugh v. Titus, 5 Wis. 143.

§ 482. Amount claimed or in controversy.

[a] (Iowa) In an action for damages before a justice of the peace the amount in controversy is to be determined from the pleadings; and, when the amount claimed exceeds $25, the circuit court has jurisdiction, under McClain's Code, § 3575, of an appeal, though the judgment rendered is for less than $25.—(1884) Lundak v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 65 Iowa, 473, 21 N. W. 783; (1885) Perry v. Conger, 65 Iowa, 588, 22 N. W. 688; (1885) Nichols v. Wood, 66 Iowa, 225, 23 N. W. 641.

[b] (Ky. 1867) An appeal lies from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the court of common pleas, under section 5 of the act of 1866, when the amount in controversy is over $50, however small the judgment of the justice of the peace.—Donahue v. Murray, 65 Ky. (2 Bush) 194.

[c] (La. 1871) The district court has jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment in a justice's court against a person claiming property levied on by a sheriff of a value exceeding the sum below which the district court has no jurisdiction, though the amount of the execution was less than such sum.—McFarland v. Russ, 23 La. Ann. 608.

[d] (Me. 1886) Under Rev. St. c. 83, § 3, giving to trial justices exclusive jurisdiction when "the debt or damages demanded do not exceed the sum of $20," in an action of assumpsit, the jurisdiction depends on the amount of damages demanded, and not the amount due on the note sued on; and, if the damages claimed exceed $20, the case is appealable, and not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the trial justice.—Cole v. Hayes, 78 Me. 539, 7 Atl. 391.

[e] (Minn. 1891) Defendant in a case where the complaint claims a sum in excess of $30, but in which the recovery is less than $15, is entitled to an appeal under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 113, which provides that any "person aggrieved by any judgment rendered by any justice, when the amount exceeds $15, * * * or when the complaint exceeds $30," shall be entitled to an appeal, etc.—Koetke v. Ringer, 46 Minn. 259, 48 N. W. 917.

[g] (Ohio, 1876) Under Act March 14, 1853 (as amended March 30, 1875), relative to actions before justices of the peace, an appeal lies from the judgment of a justice in a jury case, wherein the amount claimed in the bill of particulars exceeds $100, regardless of the amount of the judgment.—Vogel v. Haffy, 29 Ohio St. 439.

[h] (Pa. 1818) Under Act March 22, 1814, §§ 2, 3, providing that in actions before justices of the peace or aldermen, if the sum adjudged does not exceed $5.33, it shall be conclusive, but if it exceeds that amount an appeal will lie, plaintiff may maintain an appeal from a judgment of no cause of action, in an action before an alderman, where he claims $75 damages on his declaration.—Stewart v. Keemle, 4 Serg. & R. 72.

[i] (Pa. 1825) Under Act March 20, 1810, § 3, providing that a judgment of a justice of the peace, "when not exceeding $20, shall be final and conclusive on both plaintiff and defendant, without further appeal," plaintiff is entitled to an appeal when the sum demanded and set forth in his docket exceeds $20, and the arbitrators reduced his demand more than $20.—Soop v. Coats, 12 Serg. & R. 388.

[j] (Pa. 1846) Where it appeared on the docket of the justice that the action was trover for a mare of the value of $50, and the action was submitted by consent to referees, who awarded for the plaintiff a sum less than $20, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to an appeal.—Marks v. Swearingen, 8 Pa. (3 Barr) 454.

[k] (Pa. 1880) Where in action for trespass for injury to railroad plaintiff asked and recovered $5 damages, but the injury being itemized aggregated more than $5.33, such fact did not entitle defendant to an appeal.—Wallace v. Hickey, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 166.

[m] (Tex. 1883) The jurisdiction of the county court on an appeal from a justice's court attaches where the amount in controversy exceeds $20, though the judgment is for a less amount.—Horton v. McKeehan, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 465.

[n] (Vt. 1840) Where the ad damnum in a writ pending in a justice's court is but $10, the action is not appealable unless the plaintiff's written exhibit, specification, or declaration clearly show that the demand is more.—Weston v. Marsh, 12 Vt. 420.

[o] (Vt. 1859) The defendant subscribed for 1 share of the plaintiff's stock, and thereby contracted to pay the plaintiffs $100 in 10 equal installments, no part to be payable till the performance of a condition precedent. In an action before a justice of the peace, the declaration set forth this contract, averred performance of the condition, and claimed to recover the first installment under an ad damnum of $10. Held, that the action was appealable.—Connecticut & P. R. R Co. v Bates, 32 Vt. 420.

[p] (Vt. 1860) The fact that an officer, in serving a justice's writ with an ad damnum not exceeding $10, delivers to the defendant a copy with the ad damnum stated at more than that sum, does not render the suit appealable, although the defendant appeared and had judgment against him on the supposition that he had a right ot appeal.—Downs v. Reed, 32 Vt. 785.

[q] (Vt. 1867) The allegation of value of the property sued for in a declaration in trover not being descriptive, but rather matter of form, is not a demanding of such value, nor are the evidence and claim a specification within the intent of the statute which denies appeal where "neither the ad damnum in the plaintiff's writ, nor the sum demanded by the declaration, nor the specifications or exhibits of the plaintiffs on trial, shall exceed $10."—Cole v. Goodall, 39 Vt. 400, 94 Am. Dec. 334.

[r] (Vt. 1890) Though neither the ad damnum in the writ, the sum demanded by the plaintiff, nor the judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, exceeds $20, a trustee charged in a less sum, but liable to the principal defendant in a sum exceeding that amount, is entitled to an appeal.—American Exp. Co. v. Gray, 62 Vt. 421, 20 Atl. 276.

[s] (Wis. 1857) Though the judgment for the plaintiff for damages or costs may be for less than $15, he can still appeal, if his affidavit, in addition to the other matters, states that he has a valid claim for more than $50. as set forth in his pleadings in the suit.—Berray v. Woodruff, 6 Wis. 202.

[a] (U. S. 1837) Appeal does not lie from a justice of the peace, in the District of Columbia, who has rendered judgment for five dollars only.—Owner v. Washington, Fed. Cas. No. 10,635 [5 Cranch, C. C. 381].

[b] (Md. 1867) On appeal, where the question of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace over the subject-matter is called into question, its jurisdiction will depend upon the amount recovered, and that being below the jurisdiction of the circuit court, the order of the circuit court entering a judgment non. pros. was not erroneous.—Bushey v. Culler, 26 Md. 534.

[c] (N. Y. 1821) No appeal lies to the common pleas, unless the amount of the verdict or judgment exceeds $25.—In re Marsh, 19 Johns. 171.

[d] (Or. 1867) Under Code, p. 595, c. 9, § 64, a justice's judgment for a sum less than $20 is nonappealable, irrespective of the amount which may have been in controversy.—Stoll v. Hoback, 2 Or. 226.

[e] (Pa. 1825) Where the debt sued for and set forth on the docket is reduced by the judgment more than $20, an appeal lies for the plaintiff, although the judgment is for a less sum than $20.—Soop v. Coates, 12 Serg. & R. 388.

[f] (Pa. 1855) A plaintiff in trespass before a justice claimed $25; referees awarded him $11, and judgment was rendered for that sum. Held, that the defendant had no right to appeal under the statutes of 1814, 1845, his claim not having been reduced by the amount of $20.—Cook v. Dunkle, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 340.

[g] (Pa.) The right of appeal from a judgment of a justice is to be determined by the amount for which judgment was rendered against appellant, and not by the amount for which suit was brought.—(1888) Garvey v. Murphy, 1 Wilcox, 137; (1891) Elliott v. Palmer (Com. Pl.) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 427.

[h] (S. C. 1817) Act 1799 (1 Brev. Dig. p. 476) gives a magistrate jurisdiction in matters of contract to $20. Clause 5 (1 Brev. Dig. p. 24) provides that where the demand is above $6 there may be an appeal. Held, that no appeal lies from their judgments, if under $6.—Penning v. Porter, 1 Mill, Const. 396.

[i] (Tex. 1884) Under Rev. St. art. 1165, giving the county court jurisdiction when the judgment appealed from or the amount in controversy exceeds $20, an appeal lies if the judgment is for less than $20, but the matter in controversy more than $20.—Brazoria County v. Calhoun, 61 Tex. 223.

[j] (Tex. 1895) On appeal from a judgment of a justice's court, the amount in controversy, and not the amount of the judgment rendered, determines the jurisdiction of the appellate court.—Grooms v. Atascosa County (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 73.

[k] (Wis. 1851) Where plaintiff in replevin in justice court recovers property valued at $15, and 6 cents damages, the recovery is for more than $15, so as to give defendant a right to have the judgment reviewed on appeal.—Inman v. Gower, 3 Chand. 162, 3 Pin. 152.

[a] (Kan. 1891) Under Justice's Code, § 122, providing that no appeal shall be allowed "in jury trials where neither party claims in his bill of particulars a sum exceeding $20," no appeal lies in a replevin case tried by jury, in which the value of the property stated in the affidavit and the damages demanded for its detention do not exceed $20.—Nordmark v. Nystrom, 46 Kan. 117, 26 Pac. 449.

[b] (N. J. 1827) An appeal will lie to the common pleas from the judgment of a justice rendered on the verdict of a jury in a case where the debt, demand, or other matter in dispute, does not exceed three dollars.—Cruser v. Duryea, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 15.

[c] (N. C. 1873) Findings of fact by a justice of the peace, in the trial of an action in which the recovery is for less than $25, are not subject to review.—Cauble v. Boyden, 69 N. C. 434.

[d] (Ohio, 1860) Where, in a suit before a justice of the peace, the demand was less than $20, and the parties, by agreement, submitted the case to a jury of three persons, and the plaintiff having offered his evidence, the justice nonsuited him, on motion of the defendant, and discharged the jury, and the plaintiff appealed the case to the common pleas, it was held in the supreme court, on error, that inasmuch as the right of appeal from a justice to the common pleas is only taken away where "the case is tried by jury," and for a demand less than $20, an objection could not have been made to the jurisdiction of the common pleas, and could not prevail on error.—Bethel v. Woodworth, 11 Ohio St. 393.

[e] (Ohio, 1875) Code, § 90, regulating the civil jurisdiction of justices of the peace, provided that if either party claimed more than $20 the case might be appealed, but if neither party demanded a greater sum than $20, and the case is tried by a jury, there should be no appeal. Section 111 provided that in cases not otherwise provided for, either party might appeal, and section 123 provided that in jury trials where neither party claimed more than $20, there should be no appeal. Act March 30, 1875, does not amend section 90, but amends section 111, so as to allow appeals in all cases not specially provided for when the judgment exceeds $100, and section 123, so as to forbid appeals in jury trials where neither party claims more than $100 and the judgment is less than $100. Held that, if the judgment be less than $100, there is no appeal unless there was a jury, when an appeal lies if the claim was more than $100, though the judgment was less than that amount.—Leonard v. City of Cincinnati, 5 Ohio Dec. 279, reversed (1875) 26 Ohio St. 447.

[f] (Ohio, 1896) An action of replevin instituted before a justice of the peace is appealable to the court of common pleas, where the case is tried to a jury, though judgment is rendered in favor of plaintiff for only $12.—White v. Coates, 4 Ohio Dec. 119, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 43.

[g] (Pa. 1816) Under the provisions of Act March 20, 1810, that when the cause is submitted to referees, the justice's judgment, when not exceeding $20, shall be final and conclusive on both plaintiff and defendant, without further appeal, no appeal lies when the judgment is in favor of defendant.—McKim v. Bryson, 2 Serg. & R. 402.

[h] (Pa.) Under Act 1814, § 3, where the demand is in trespass or trover for a sum above $20, and the action is submitted to referees, who award for the plaintiff a sum less than $20, the defendant has not the right of appeal.—(1820) Ulrick v. Larkey, 6 Serg. & R. 285; (1831) Zane v. Johnson, 1 Ashm. 42.

[i] (Pa. 1831) Under the act of 1810, there is no appeal from a judgment of a justice on an award of referees where the sum awarded exceeds the sum of $100.—Sleeper v. Burk, 1 Ashm. 23.

[j] (Wis. 1853) No appeal lies under the statutes of this state from the judgment of a justice of the peace, where the amount in controversy exceeds $15, if no issue of fact or law was joined before the justice.—Love v. Rockwell, 1 Wis. 382.

§ 485. Effect of set-off or counterclaim.

[a] (Conn. 1813) In book debt, the right of appeal is governed wholly by the amount of the demand laid in the declaration. If, therefore, the plaintiff demand less than seven dollars, the action is not appealable, though the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff owed him more than seven dollars.—Fowler v. Stocking, 5 Day, 539.

[b] (Ind. 1876) Where, in an action in justice's court, defendant files a set-off and appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, the amount in controversy for the purposes of appeal is determined by the amount of the set-off.—Hutts v. Williams, 55 Ind. 237.

[c] (Iowa, 1885) A. brought an action before a justice of the peace to recover $24.50, as the value of property converted by B., and B. answered by general denial, and also pleaded a counterclaim for services rendered A. to the value of $30, and asked judgment for that amount. A. denied the counterclaim, and the justice rendered judgment against him for costs, from which he appealed to the circuit court. Held, that the circuit court had jurisdiction of the appeal, the amount involved being more than $25.—Perry v. Conger, 65 Iowa, 588, 22 N. W. 688.

[d] (Ky. 1835) Where the circuit court has jurisdiction of appeals where the amount in controversy exceeds five pounds, a party sues before a justice of the peace for a less sum, the defendant has judgment for a larger sum in set-off, and the plaintiff appeals, the circuit court has jurisdiction of the appeal.—Parks v. Hulme, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 499.

[e] (Minn. 1883) An appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace cannot be allowed under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 113, providing for such appeal "when the amount claimed in the complaint exceeds $30," on the ground that a counterclaim in the answer is for more than $30, if the claim in the complaint is for less than that sum.—Ross v. Evans, 30 Minn. 206, 14 N. W. 897.

[f] (Ohio, 1878) Under Justice Court Act, § 90, allowing appeals only where the claim is more than $20, where an action is for the recovery of $15, and a counterclaim is presented for more than $20, but such counterclaim has no connection with the action, and is disregarded by the justice, and is not involved in the judgment, an appeal is not allowable.—State v. Linn, 7 Ohio Dec. 468, 3 Wkly. Law Bul. 428.

[g] (Ohio, 1881) Defendant in an action before a justice of the peace to recover a sum less than $20 is entitled to an appeal where he files a counterclaim in excess of $20, though the magistrate rules out the counterclaim because no evidence was offered to sustain it.—Chatfield v. Appleton, 8 Ohio Dec. 214, 6 Wkly. Law Bul. 327.

[i] (Pa. 1885) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, a set-off is claimed exceeding in amount $5.33, the justice should allow an appeal, though the judgment is entered for less than that amount.—Schineller v. Herrman, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 145.

[j] (Pa. 1885) Where an appeal was allowed from a judgment of a justice of the peace for a sum less than $5.33 because a set-off was claimed by defendant exceeding such sum, the appeal will not be dismissed because defendant thereafter abandons the set-off.—Schineller v. Herrman, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 145.

[k] (Pa. 1886) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace for wages amounting to less than $5.33, the defendant introduces a set-off exceeding $5.33, an appeal may be taken from the judgment of the justice.—Rafferty v. Clark, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 301.

[l] (Pa. 1887) Where a judgment before a justice of the peace is entered for less than the amount which would entitle defendant to appeal, but a set-off is claimed for more than that amount, an appeal should be allowed, unless it clearly appears that the set-off was not offered in good faith, but for the purpose of preventing a judgment from being filed.—Steele v. Walton, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 211.

[m] (Pa. 1887) The fact that a set-off in a justice court was not maintainable in whole or in part, and that the justice refused to note the claim of set-off on his docket, is not sufficient proof of the bad faith of defendant in filing such set-off, and the appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that such set-off was filed merely for the purpose of enabling defendant to appeal, and not in good faith.—Baldwin v. Burgess, 1 Wilcox, 223.

[n] (Tex. 1881) The amount pleaded in a counterclaim may be considered as the amount in controversy, conferring jurisdiction on the county court on appeal from the justice's court, where the amount claimed by plaintiff is insufficient to confer such jurisdiction.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Grant, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 784.

[o] (Vt. 1826) An appeal lies from a judgment in an action on a note or settled account under $20, notwithstanding the proviso in the statute of 1821, where a demand exceeding $20 is pleaded in offset, in such action.—Baker v. Blodget, 1 Aikens, 342.

[p] (Vt. 1830) No appeal lies in book account where the plaintiff does not demand more than $10, though the defendant plead in offset a claim of more than $20, if it appear that such claim is fictitious, and exhibited for the sole purpose of making the case appealable.—Brush v. Hurlburt, 3 Vt. 46.

[q] (Vt. 1853) Where the account pleaded in offset exceeds the sum of $10, the case is appealable, unless the account appears to be fictitious, or filed for the purpose of obtaining the right of appeal.—Sherwin v. Colburn, 25 Vt. 613.

[r] (Vt. 1882) Where one summoned before a justice as trustee claims by way of offset an amount in excess of the ad damnum in the plaintiff's writ, the amount of the offset, not the amount of the ad damnum, determines the right of appeal.—Church v. French, 54 Vt. 420.

§ 486. Waiver and consent to jurisdiction.

[a] (Kan. 1877) Objection to appeal because the amount was under the statute minimum was held waived by delaying to raise it until after trial and judgment.—Miller v. Bogart, 19 Kan. 117.

[b] (Minn. 1858) Where the amount claimed and found due by the justice is less than $15, exclusive of costs, the district court has no jurisdiction of an appeal, and therefore the appellant may move to dismiss the appeal, for his consent cannot confer jurisdiction.—Dodd v. Cady, 1 Minn. 289 (Gil. 223).

§ 487. Determination of amount.

[a] (Conn. 1867) Where a plea in abatement to an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, allowed only when the judgment exceeded five dollars, did not allege that the judgment rendered was less than five dollars, but "was for the sum of one dollar and costs," it was held not defective.—Curtis v. Gill, 34 Conn. 49.

[aa] (Iowa, 1881) Where an action is brought in a justice court for a certain sum, and a portion of the amount claimed is admitted to be due, and the amount thereof tendered, the difference between the amount claimed and that tendered is the "amount in controversy," for the purposes of appeal.—Young v. McWaid, 57 Iowa, 101, 10 N. W. 291.

[b] (Iowa, 1882) Plaintiff sued before a justice of the peace on account for $32.15, but admitted the payment of $12, and defendant denied all indebtedness, and pleaded payment of $29, but asked for no judgment. Held, that defendant's answer was simply a defense and not a counterclaim, and, as the amount in controversy is less than $25, an appeal to the circuit court should be dismissed.—Boyle v. Wilcox, 59 Iowa, 466, 13 N. W. 428.

[c] (Iowa, 1886) The amount in controversy in causes which have been appealed from a justice's court to the circuit court is to be determined by the pleadings in the case, and not by the evidence introduced on the trial.—Sterner v. Wilson, 68 Iowa, 714, 28 N. W. 34.

[d] (Iowa, 1891) An action was brought before a justice of the peace to recover $5.50. Defendant pleaded a counterclaim of $50. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed to the district court. Plaintiff moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the amount in controversy did not exceed $25. The district court certified the case to the supreme court, and desired its opinion as to whether the district court had jurisdiction, but stated in the certificate that defendant's counterclaim stated no cause of action. Held, there being no question certified with respect to the correctness of the judgment of the court as to the validity of the counterclaim, the same must be taken as correct, and, that being so, the counterclaim presented no claim for recovery, and consequently failed to show that an amount exceeding $25 was in controversy, and that the appeal should have been dismissed.—Campbell v. Lewis, 83 Iowa, 583, 50 N. W. 208.

[e] (La. 1890) Where the plaintiff sued in a justice court for $12.40 on account, and the defendant admitted $7.28 to be due, and pleaded a tender of that amount before suit, the district court had no jurisdiction on appeal ratione materiæ.—State ex rel. Boyet v. Boone, 42 La. Ann. 982, 8 South. 468.

[f] (Pa. 1825) Where the cause of action before a justice appears in his docket to be "a balance of book debt not exceeding $100," and the arbitrators award that plaintiff has no cause of action, he cannot appeal; the docket not showing that his demand exceeded $20.—Stoy v. Yost, 12 Serg. & R. 385.

[g] (Pa. 1825) Under Act March 20, 1810, § 3, providing that a judgment of a justice of the peace, "when not exceeding $20, shall be final and conclusive on both plaintiff and defendant, without further appeal," to entitle plaintiff to an appeal, where the judgment on an award of referees is for the defendant, it must appear on the docket of the justice, that the plaintiff's cause of action exceeds $20.—Stoy v. Yost, 12 Serg. & R. 385.

[h] (Tex. 1886) A proceeding to establish, for a debt of less than $20, a lien on property worth more than $20, involves an amount in controversy of more than $20, and therefore an appeal lies from the judgment of the justice of the peace.—Smith v. Giles, 65 Tex. 341.

[i] (Tex. 1888) In an action in justice court to try the right of property, the value of which is alleged to be a sum sufficient to give the county court jurisdiction on appeal, it is unnecessary that the proof should show the value of the property to be exactly the amount alleged, since if it exceeds $20, the county court has jurisdiction.—Gill v. Jackson, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 355.

[j] (Vt. 1848) It is for the party who appeals from the judgment of a justice of the peace, to show affirmatively that the county court has appellate jurisdiction. Where the declaration contains several counts, and there is nothing upon their face which shows that the sum in demand exceeds $10, but each count concludes with an ad damnum of $10, and the counts are of the same nature and describe apparently the same contract, the county court should not intend that they are for different causes of action, but rather the contrary, and should, in the absence of any proof except what is shown by the declaration, dismiss the suit.—Persons v. Centre Turnpike Co., 20 Vt. 170.

[k] (Vt. 1853) Where there was nothing in the writ, nor in the specification or exhibits produced by plaintiff, on trial of an action of book account, which made the case appealable, and defendant, on cross-examination, called out plaintiff's book, on which appeared charges exceeding $10, the book will not be regarded as plaintiff's exhibit, nor the case thereby made appealable, as the judgment, in such case, is a bar to a recovery for the items not presented.—Warren v. Town of Newfane, 25 Vt. 250.

[l] (Vt. 1873) Gen. St. c. 31, § 70, relating to appeals in assumpsit from a justice of the peace, requires a comparison of the debit and the credit side of the account, to fix, as appealable or not, the amount of the claim.—Williams v. Mason, 45 Vt. 372.

[m] (Vt. 1879) Where replevin is brought under the statute, the matter in demand is the property itself as well as damages for its taking and detention, and where the ad damnum is $20, an appeal lies to the county court, though the value of the property is less than that sum.—Fisk v. Wallace, 51 Vt. 418.

[n] (Vt. 1880) A declaration in assumpsit in a justice's court alleged an indebtedness of $20,—the ad damnum being for the same amount. The specification was for a balance of $19.69, but plaintiff's charges exceeded $20. Held appealable, under the statute allowing appeals when the amount in controversy is over $20.—Perry v. Gay, 52 Vt. 615.

[o] (Vt. 1887) In replevin before a justice, where the ad damnum is $20, and the property appraised at $8, an appeal will lie to the county court, under Rev. Laws, §§ 821, 1246.—Andrews v. Baker, 59 Vt. 656, 10 Atl. 465.

[p] (Vt. 1895) Where plaintiff sued in a justice's court for $9.75 damages for breach of contract, the mere fact that he proved his damages by placing in evidence his books showing that he paid $150 damages in consequence of breaches of several other contracts similar to defendant's, and that the amount claimed was defendant's proportion of such damages, did not render such books "specifications or exhibits of the plaintiff on trial" exceeding $20, so as to entitle defendant to an appeal.—Crosby v. Enterprise Cheese Co., 67 Vt. 638, 32 Atl. 494.

[a] (Conn. 1867) Where a statute allowed an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace when the judgment exceeded five dollars, it was held that the judgment must exceed five dollars, exclusive of costs of suit.—Curtis v. Gill, 34 Conn. 49.

[b] (Ga. 1879) Interest may be included to bring the amount above $50.—Dykes v. Woolsey, 62 Ga. 608.

[c] (Ga. 1889) Under Code, § 4157, giving an appeal from a judgment of a justice's court, where the amount claimed is over $50, an appeal lies from a judgment in an action before a justice for $50 for wages, claimed to be past due, as such amount bears interest from the time it becomes due.—Magarahan v. Wright, 83 Ga. 773, 10 S. E. 584.

[d] (Iowa, 1884) In determining the amount in controversy, on an appeal from a justice, the costs, as shown by the the transcript, are not to be included, but only the sum claimed as damages in the pleadings is the "amount in controversy."—Curran v. Excelsior Coal Co., 63 Iowa, 94, 18 N. W. 698.

[e] (Minn. 1858) Under Rev. St. 1851, c. 69, art. 4, § 123, which provides that an appeal cannot be taken to the district court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, which does not exceed $15, where the judgment is for less than $15, exclusive of costs, his jurisdiction is exclusive and final, and no appeal lies.—Dodd v. Cady, 1 Minn. 289 (Gil. 223).

[f] (Neb. 1894) Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 985, 1017, forbidding appeals from judgments of justices of not more than $20, where the case is tried to the jury, defendant cannot, where the prayer is for judgment for $20, insist upon interest in addition, in order to give him the right to appeal.—Moise v. Powell, 40 Neb. 671, 59 N. W. 79.

[g] (Tex. 1894) A judgment of a justice of the peace against a garnishee for $19.65, and $3.40 costs, in the suit in which he is garnished, and all costs in the garnishment proceedings, is not less than $20, exclusive of costs, and is within the appellate jurisdiction of the district court under Rev. St. art. 1638.—Hubbard v. Vacher (Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 921.

[h] (Vt. 1843) Where the principal and interest of a note exceed $20, the case is appealable, although the principal alone may be less than $20.—Smith v. Smith, 15 Vt. 620.

[i] (Va. 1895) Code 1887, § 2947, as amended March 1, 1894, provides: "If a judgment of a justice be for a sum exceeding $10 and not exceeding $20, exclusive of interest and costs, the justice rendering it may stay execution on it 40 days. * * * From any such judgment, the justice may, within 10 days, * * * allow an appeal where the matter in controversy, exclusive of interest, is of greater amount or value than $10." Held, that an appeal does not lie to a judgment of $10, exclusive of costs.—Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Clark, 92 Va. 118, 22 S. E. 867.

[j] (Va. 1895) Under Code 1887, § 2947, costs are not to be computed as a part of the matter in controversy in determining the right of appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace.—Shafer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 23 S. E. 221.

[a] (Ga. 1893) Where suit was brought in a justice's court on an account for $94.80, and at the trial plaintiff admitted that defendant should be credited with $65.78, it was error to dismiss an appeal to the superior court on the ground that the amount claimed in the court below was less than $50; since the right of appeal depends upon the amounts claimed in the pleadings, and not upon reductions which may be made at the trial. Code, § 4157.—Bell v. Davis, 93 Ga. 233, 18 S. E. 647.

[b] (Ga. 1896) The right of appeal from a justice court to the superior court, under Code, § 4157, depends upon the amounts claimed in the pleadings, and not upon reductions which may be made at the trial.—Dyar v. Scott, 99 Ga. 96, 24 S. E. 855.

[c] (Ill. 1851) A plaintiff, in appeal, cannot confer jurisdiction on the circuit court by remitting a portion of the verdict.—People v. Skinner, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 287, 54 Am. Dec. 482.

[e] (Iowa) When the amount of a judgment recovered before a justice of the peace is reduced to less than $25 by plaintiff's filing a remittitur, the circuit court has no jurisdiction of an appeal, for McClain's Code, § 3575, requires the "amount in controversy" to be $25, or more, for that purpose.—(1885) Milner v. Gross, 66 Iowa, 252, 23 N. W. 654; (1887) Vorwald v. Marshall, 71 Iowa, 576, 32 N. W. 510.

[f] (Iowa, 1886) Plaintiff, claiming $100, in an action before a justice of the peace, recovered $20. After judgment, and before appeal by defendant, plaintiff filed a paper withdrawing his claim for $100, and claiming $20. The circuit court dismissed defendant's appeal, under McClain's Code, § 3575, on the ground that the amount in controversy was less than $25. Held, that the dismissal should be sustained, since the paper filed reduced plaintiff's claim to $20, and he could have recovered no more than that sum if the appeal had been sustained.—Bateman v. Sisson, 70 Iowa, 518, 30 N. W. 870.

[g] (Iowa) McClain's Code, § 3575, provides that from a justice of the peace no appeal shall be allowed in any case where the amount in controversy does not exceed $25. Held, that when the amount of a judgment is reduced to less than $25 by a remittitur, filed before the judgment is entered, an appeal cannot be taken; and it is immaterial that the appeal bond was filed before the remittitur, as such bond cannot take effect until the judgment is entered.—(1888) Schultz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 75 Iowa, 240, 39 N. W. 289; (1896) Knox v. Nicoli, 97 Iowa, 687, 66 N. W. 876.

[h] (Mo. 1856) After an action commenced in justice's court is appealed to the circuit court, plaintiff therein cannot enter a remittitur for an excess recovered beyond the justice's jurisdiction, so as to give the circuit court jurisdiction of the appeal.—Batchelor v. Bess, 22 Mo. 402.

[i] (Neb. 1894) The right, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1017, of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace on the verdict of a jury, must be determined by the amount claimed in the bill of particulars when the trial was had; and, after the right had been exercised, the appeal should not be dismissed because in the appellate court there has been eliminated from consideration a part of the amount claimed.—Kingsbury v. Frans, 40 Neb. 400, 58 N. W. 936.

[j] (Pa. 1840) The court of common pleas has jurisdiction, on an appeal from an alderman or justice of the peace, of a demand for a sum less than $100, although it should appear that the plaintiff had a right to recover more than $100, if he chose to reduce his demand below that sum.—Cleaden v. Yeates, 5 Whart. 94.

[k] (Pa. 1887) The plaintiff in an action before a justice of the peace may remit the whole or a part of the interest on his demand; and, if his claim for interest be reduced so that the whole sum is less than $5.33, the defendant cannot appeal.—Leighow v. Northumberland Bridge Co., 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 622.

[l] (Pa. 1887) Where the plaintiff's claim is made up of different items, sufficient, in all, to entitle the parties to an appeal, plaintiff cannot reduce his demand below the necessary amount after the suit is instituted.—Stollars v. East Finlay Tp., 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 209.

[m] (Vt. 1831) In an action on book account, plaintiff cannot prevent an appeal by setting his ad damnum lower than the debit side of his account.—Church v. Vanduzee, 4 Vt. 195.

[n] (Vt.) If the face of a note exceeds $20, an appeal lies from the justice to the county court, though by indorsements the amount due on its face is reduced below that sum.—(1832) Tyler v. Lathrop, 5 Vt. 170; (1852) Sumner v. Jones, 24 Vt. 317.

[o] (Vt. 1837) In an action before a justice of the peace, on a promissory note exceeding $20, but indorsed below $10, the ad damnum in the plaintiff's writ being $10, and there being no plea in offset, the case is not appealable.—Boardman v. Harrington, 9 Vt. 151.

[p] (Vt. 1844) Where a declaration in an action commenced before a justice of the peace counted upon two notes, both amounting to less than $20, and also contained a count for $20 for money had and received, and the plaintiff offered in evidence the notes alone, and, before the judgment, waived the count for money had and received, the action is not appealable.—Cooper v. Miles, 16 Vt. 642.

[q] (Wis. 1858) After the trial before a justice on a note, the plaintiff cannot reduce the demand, by indorsements, to less than $15, so as to deprive the defendant of his statute right of appeal.—Evans v. Head, 7 Wis. 399.

(c) FINALITY OF DETERMINATION.

NECESSITY OF FINAL JUDGMENT, § 490.
FINALITY OF DETERMINATION, § 491.
JUDGMENTS OF DISMISSAL, NONSUIT, AND FOR COSTS, § 492.

§ 490. Necessity of final judgment.

Verdicts of jury as sufficient rendition of judgment to support an appeal, see post, § 502.

[a] (Ala. 1838) Where a judgment of a justice of the peace is not decisive of the plaintiff's case, a writ of error will not lie.—Wyatt v. Judge, 7 Port. 37.

[b] (Ala. 1858) The circuit court has no jurisdiction over an appeal from the judgment of a justice's jury, the justice having rendered no judgment; the decision appealed from being a claim to a slave seized in one county by a constable under an execution issued by a justice in another county.—Little v. Fitts, 33 Ala. 343.

ment of a justice of the peace may appeal to the circuit court, or court of like jurisdiction, and that the case on such appeal shall be tried de novo, such appellate court cannot, on appeal of a garnishee from a judgment against him, after quashing the garnishment, require him to answer another and separate garnishment, on which the justice had rendered no judgment.—Francis-Chenoweth Hardware Co. v. Bailey, 104 Ala. 566, 18 South. 10.

[d] (Ark. 1852) Until the rendition of judgment by a justice of the peace, no appeal lies to the circuit court.—Adams v. Thompson, 12 Ark. (7 Eng.) 670.

[e] (Iowa) Where, on appeal from a justice of the peace, the record does not show that a judgment was rendered, the appeal will be dismissed.—(1849) Kimble v. Riggin, 2 G. Greene, 245; (1850) Brown v. Scott, 2 G. Greene, 454.

[f] (Me. 1849) Under a statute allowing an appeal from the judgments of a justice of the peace, an appeal does not lie from a decision of the justice which is merely interlocutory, as of respondeat ouster upon a demurrer to a plea in abatement.—Waterville v. Howard, 30 Me. (17 Shep.) 103.

[g] (Miss. 1891) Where an appeal is taken to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice in an attachment suit, the fact that a claimant's issue interposed in such suit was not determined by the justice does not deprive the circuit court of jurisdiction to try such issue, since jurisdiction to try the attachment gives the court jurisdiction to try all issues subordinate thereto.—Dreyfus v. Mayer, 69 Miss. 282, 12 South. 267.

[h] (Mo. 1889) Kansas City Charter (Sess. Acts 1875) art. 7, § 6, provides that when any person is aggrieved by the verdict of a jury in the mayor's court he may appeal to the circuit court for Jackson county. The appeal shall be taken by filing an affidavit with the city clerk, and he shall within a certain time file a complete transcript with the clerk of the circuit court, which "court shall thereupon become possessed of the cause." Held, that the circuit court has no jurisdiction to render judgment in a case commenced in the mayor's court, where its records fail to show that any verdict was rendered in the mayor's court, or that any appeal was taken from such verdict.—City of Kansas City v. Ford, 99 Mo. 91, 12 S. W. 346.

[j] (N. Y. 1858) An appeal from the judgment of a justice will be dismissed, where the record shows that the judgment is incomplete, as in such case it can be neither reversed nor affirmed.—Haulenbeck v. Gillies, 2 Hilt. 238.

[k] (N. Y. 1883) Where an appeal was taken from a justice of the peace before entry of the judgment, the error cannot be cured by amending the notice of appeal after the time for taking the appeal has expired.—Lewis v. Hoffman, 5 Civ. Proc. R. 141.

[l] (N. Y. 1883) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3046, requiring appeal to be taken within 20 days from entry of judgment in the justice's docket, an appeal taken in summary proceedings to recover realty before the final order was entered was prematurely brought.—Lewis v. Hoffman, 5 Civ. Proc. R. 141.

[m] (Vt. 1870) Under Gen. St. c. 30, § 31, providing that where, on appeal from a justice court to the county court, appellant fails to enter his appeal, the other party by complaint may have the county court affirm the judgment appealed from, the county court, where, at the time of the appeal from the judgment, there was a motion for a close jail certificate pending, has no power to pass on the motion, because there was no judgment in the justice's court in respect to it.—Spaulding v. Woodworth, 42 Vt. 570.

Appeal from judgments by default, see post, § 495.

[a] (Ark. 1846) A justice of the peace, in rendering judgment, stated that "this case, for the want of proof to sustain the plaintiff's demand, was dismissed, at the plaintiff's cost." Held that, it being inferable from the entry that this was a final determination of the case on the merits, and not a nonsuit, an appeal would lie.—Parsell v. Smyers, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 55.

[b] (Iowa, 1849) Where, on an appeal to the district court from the judgment of a justice of the peace, it appears that no judgment was entered by the justice on the verdict of the jury, the district court has no jurisdiction of the cause.—Kimble v. Riggin, 2 G. Greene, 245.

[c] (Iowa, 1855) A judgment of a justice, after reciting the names of the parties, the amount claimed, the cause of action, and that the cause had come before him by change of venue, recited that the parties met by counsel before him, that the testimony was heard, and that "it is believed that the plaintiff is entitled to $75 debt, and costs taxed as follows." Held, that this appeared to be a final adjudication, exhibiting the parties, the matter in dispute, and the result, and therefore a good final judgment to be appealed from.—Stowers v. Milledge, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 150, 63 Am. Dec. 434.

[e] (Kan. 1863) Under Act Feb. 26, 1867 (Laws 1867, p. 78), regulating the jurisdiction and procedure before justices of the peace, a judgment in a garnishment proceeding is such a final judgment as may be appealed from to the district court.—Kayser v. Bauer, 5 Kan. 202.

[f] (Kan. 1886) A justice's order, certifying the case on the ground that the pleadings show the title to land to be in dispute, is not a final order, reviewable on petition in error.—Peyton v. Peyton, 34 Kan. 624, 9 Pac. 479.

[g] (Kan. 1887) In an action against S., M. & B., a partnership, before a justice of the peace, a finding and judgment against S., and a finding that M. and B. are not indebted to the plaintiff in any sum, but no judgment thereon, is not a final judgment, within the meaning of section 120, Justices' Act, providing for appeals from justices of the peace, and the plaintiff has no right of appeal.—Butt v. Herndon, 36 Kan. 370, 13 Pac. 580.

[h] (Kan. 1887) Where a motion is made before a justice of the peace to vacate and discharge proceedings in garnishment after final judgment, and said motion is overruled, said ruling by the justice is a final order, and may be taken to the district court on error.—Carlyle v. Smith, 36 Kan. 614, 14 Pac. 156.

corporation has been returned "not satisfied," an order upon proper notice has been made by the justice, under section 32, art. 4, of the act relating to corporations, awarding an execution in favor of plaintiff against a stockholder of the corporation, an appeal will not lie from such order to the district court, since section 120 of the justice's act allows an appeal from final judgments only. The order can be reviewed in the district court only upon a petition in error under Civ. Code, §§ 540, 543, allowing a final order to be so reviewed.—Healey v. Deepwater Clay Co., 48 Kan. 617, 29 Pac. 1088.

[j] (Mass. 1854) An action, entered by the defendant in the court of common pleas on appeal from a justice of the peace, may be dismissed on the defendant's motion, if the justice never rendered any judgment on the verdict returned for the plaintiff on the trial before him, although the action is one which might have been commenced in the court of common pleas.—Bowler v. Palmer, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 553.

[k, l] (Mo. 1841) An appeal lies from the judgment of a justice of the peace, on an issue found between the plaintiff in attachment and an interpleader, before the final determination of the cause between the plaintiff and defendant.—Weisenecker v. Kepler, 7 Mo. 52.

[m] (Mo. 1858) Technical rules are not to be applied to proceedings in justices' courts. So where, in an action tried in a justice's court, the jury returned a verdict against A., which was recorded, but judgment was not, and A. appealed, but the appeal was dismissed for the want of a judgment, it was held that the dismissal was erroneous.—Morse v. Brownfield, 27 Mo. 224.

[n] (Neb. 1885) The receipt and filing of the amount of damages, costs, etc., and the issuance of execution thereon, do not constitute such a judgment or final order as, under Code Civ. Proc. § 580, may be "reversed, vacated, or modified by the district court."—Holmes v. Irwin, 17 Neb. 99, 22 N. W. 124.

[o] (N. Y. 1869) Where, in a justice's court, the merits are fairly entered into, investigated, and the case is finally submitted to the justice, who gives a judgment for the defendant, though without costs, it is conclusive on the plaintiff, a bar to another action, and a final determination, from which an appeal will lie.—Blum v. Hartman, 3 Daly, 47.

[p] (Ohio, 1889) Under Rev. St. § 6583, providing that, in all cases not otherwise specially provided for by law, either party may appeal from the final judgment of any justice of the peace, and section 6578, declaring that, when a judgment shall have been rendered against a defendant in his absence, the same may be set aside by the justice on certain conditions named, an appeal lies from a judgment by default rendered by a justice of the peace, since section 6578 does not limit the defendant to a resort to the remedy thereby provided.—Golds borough v. Bolenbaugh, 2 O. C. D. 337.

[q] (S. D. 1896) The record in an action in justice court specified the nature of the claim, and contained a transcript of docket, concluding with a recital that, "after hearing the evidence and law, judgment was given for plaintiff for $20 against C., and costs, $13.50, making in all $33.50." Held to show a "final determination of the rights of the parties," within Comp. Laws, § 5024.—Hunter v. Karcher, 8 S. D. 554, 67 N. W. 621.

[s] (Wis.) Under Rev. St. 1858, a party who has suffered judgment by default before a justice of the peace has the right of appeal.—(1861) Burnham v. Turner, 14 Wis. 622; (1862) State v. Ives, 15 Wis. 445; (1862) Shroudenbeck v. Phœnix Fire Ins. Co., 15 Wis. 632.

[t] (Wis. 1889) An order by a justice of the peace, in garnishee proceedings, directing the garnishees to pay money into court, is not a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken, under Rev. St. § 3753, providing that "any party to a final judgment rendered by a justice of the peace * * * may appeal therefrom."—Williams v. Briel, 75 Wis. 309, 43 N. W. 952; Same v. Brechler, Id.

Appeal from judgments of dismissal and nonsuit, see post, § 498.

[a] (Mich. 1843) A judgment of nonsuit, rendered in a justice's court upon failure of the plaintiff to appear and prosecute his suit, is not a final judgment from which an appeal can be taken, within the meaning of Sess. Laws 1841, p. 107, § 94.—Bowne v. Johnson, 1 Doug. 185.

[b] (Mich. 1877) Under Comp. Laws, § 5431, authorizing appeal from a justice on judgment of nonsuit, or on any final judgment on issue joined, an appeal lies from a justice of the peace, when a writ of replevin has been dismissed for defects in the affidavit for the writ and judgment has been rendered for damages and costs on waiver of a return.—Stall v. Diamond, 37 Mich. 429.

[c] (Mo. 1858) A justice of the peace had no authority or power, under Rev. Code 1845, to set aside a nonsuit, except it was adjudged on account of the plaintiff's absence; and if a justice should render a judgment of nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiff had not filed the original articles of a plank road association, on which the action was founded, the plaintiff might appeal without moving to set it aside,—the act regulating proceedings in justices' courts not requiring it.—Hannibal, R. C. & P. Plank Road Co. v. Robinson, 27 Mo. 396.

[d] (Mo. 1884) A judgment of nonsuit, entered by a justice on plaintiff's request after submission of the cause, is not a final judgment from which an appeal will lie.—Schmidt v. Halle, 15 Mo. App. 36.

[e] (Neb. 1880) A judgment for costs merely, on the verdict of a jury in favor of the defendant in an action in a justice's court, is not final, and no appeal lies therefrom.—Riddle v. Yates, 10 Neb. 510, 7 N. W. 289.

[f] (N. Y. 1806) A judgment of nonsuit, without awarding costs, is incomplete, and can neither be affirmed nor reversed.—Monnell v. Weller, 2 Johns. 8.

[g] (Ohio, 1860) Where an action is dismissed by a justice for the failure of the plaintiff, a nonresident, to give security for costs, the order of dismissal is not a final judgment, from which an appeal lies.—Strausburgh v. Doran, 2 Ohio Dec. 402.

[i] (Ohio, 1878) A justice's judgment of dismissal without prejudice to a new action, if rendered on a hearing on the merits and finding for defendant, is a final judgment from which an appeal will lie.—Mix v. Crego, 5 Ohio Dec. 552.

[j] (Ohio, 1879) No appeal lies from a dismissal of a case without prejudice, made by a justice on plaintiff's failure to appear, as it is not a final judgment.—Morgan v. Andres, 6 Ohio Dec. 823.

[k] (Tex. 1883) Under Rev. St. art. 1613, requiring a justice to record his judgment at length on the docket, stating the determination of the rights of the parties, and article 1620, making rules governing district courts in relation to judgments applicable to justices' judgments, a judgment against plaintiff for all costs is not a final judgment.—Giersa v. Yocum, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 310.

[m] (Tex. 1887) A justice's docket contained, after reciting that the verdict was for the defendant for costs, this further entry: "It is considered and adjudged by the court that the defendant do have and recover of and from the plaintiff the sum of $10.50, the costs in this suit incurred." Held, that this was not a final judgment from which an appeal could be taken to the district court.—Figures v. Dunklin, 68 Tex. 644, 5 S. W. 503.

[n] (Tex. 1890) The judgment of a justice of the peace dismissing a suit because not brought in the precinct of defendant's residence is final, and an appeal lies therefrom.—Howeth v. Clark (App.) 16 S. W. 175.

[o] (Tex. 1890) A judgment of a justice of the peace dismissing a case, at the costs of the plaintiff, is a final judgment, from which an appeal lies to the county court.—Fuerman v. Ruhle (App.) 16 S. W. 536.

[p] (Tex. 1891) Plaintiffs sued defendants in a justice's court to set aside a constable's sale of certain property of plaintiffs, and to recover the value of the property, and for exemplary damages against defendants for instigating and procuring the sale. Defendants filed general demurrer, general denial, and a special plea alleging that the suit was vexatious. The verdict found the sale not lawful, and set it aside, and judgment was rendered that "the sale made by S., constable, be, and the same is hereby, set aside and held for naught, and that the plaintiffs herein recover of the defendant E. W. White all costs of this suit, for which execution issue." Held not a final judgment from which an appeal would lie.—White v. Smith (App.) 15 S. W. 1111.

[q] (Vt. 1840) Where a justice, on hearing the evidence in a cause, rendered a judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiff, it was held that it was a judgment on the merits, from which the plaintiff might appeal.—Smith v. Crane, 12 Vt. 487.

[r] (Wis. 1865) Judgment of dismissal by a justice, not awarding costs, is a final judgment, within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 120, § 204, and may be appealed from.—Collins v. Wagoner, 20 Wis. 48.

§ 493. Nature in general.

[a] (U. S. 1826) The defendant, against whom a judgment has been rendered by a justice of the peace, cannot maintain an appeal from that judgment after having superseded it by confessing a new judgment, with sureties and six months' stay, under Acts Md. 1791, c. 67.—Coumbe v. Nairn, Fed. Cas. No. 3,278 [2 Cranch, C. C. 676].

[b] (Conn. 1866) An appeal will lie by a defendant from an adverse judgment of a justice of the peace on a plea in abatement.—Russell v. Monson, 33 Conn. 506.

[c] (Ind. 1869) Where, after judgment before a justice, the defendants move for a new trial, and the motion is granted, and afterwards withdraw such motion, and plaintiffs appeal, the appeal cannot be dismissed on the ground that there was no judgment from which an appeal could be taken, though defendants had replevied and paid the judgment.—White v. Griffey, 32 Ind. 97.

[d] (Ind. 1871) Where a judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace, and a new trial is granted, and afterwards, on motion, the order granting a new trial is set aside and a new judgment rendered, an appeal should be taken from the new judgment, and not from the order setting aside the granting of a new trial.—Tarpy v. Cautchfield, 38 Ind. 58.

[f] (Mo. 1881) Where, in an action in a justice's court, the first judgment was a nullity, and, after notice to defendant, plaintiff appeared and another judgment was rendered, an appeal was properly taken therefrom.—Semple & Birge Mfg. Co. v. Thomas, 10 Mo. App. 457.

[g] (N. Y. 1829) A party has a right to appeal from a judgment rendered on an ex parte hearing after issue joined.—People v. Madison Common Pleas, 2 Wend. 628.

[h] (N. Y. 1857) An appeal may be taken, under Code, § 352, as amended in 1857, from a justice's judgment in summary proceedings to the common pleas.—Davis v. Hudson, 5 Abb. Prac. 61.

[i] (Pa. 1817) An appeal lies from the judgment of a justice upon a scire facias, on a judgment obtained before him.—Guilky v. Gillingham, 3 Serg. & R. 93.

[j] (Pa. 1831) Special bail have a right to appeal from the judgment of a justice against them, notwithstanding the act of 1810 says that on the judgment of the justice execution shall issue without stay.—Pritchett v. Moore, 1 Ashm. 26.

[k] (Pa. 1892) An appeal may be taken from a judgment of an alderman on a scire facias to revive a judgment.—Watson v. Wehrly (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 530.

defendant and intervener, and also one for defendant against intervener on a counterclaim, intervener cannot appeal from the latter judgment alone, as Rev. St. §§ 1294, 1337, allow but one final judgment, and require the case on appeal to be tried de novo.—Packenius v. Petri (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 1095.

[b] (Iowa, 1858) A justice having but three days in which to enter judgment, judgment rendered after that time is a nullity, and no appeal lies therefrom.—Guthrie v. Humphrey, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 23.

[c] (Mich. 1873) A judgment of a justice, which was void because entered more than four days after the cause was submitted to him (Comp. Laws 1871, § 5380), is not appealable.—Harrison v. Sager, 27 Mich. 476.

[d] (N. J. 1880) Where what is a judgment in form and color is entered in a justice's court, in an action where the justice has not jurisdiction, the judgment is reviewable either by an appeal to the court of common pleas or by a writ of certiorari.—Williamson v. Middlesex County Judges, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 386.

[e] (N. J. 1887) If a court for the trial of small causes has rendered judgment on a day when the cause was not lawfully before it, the party injured has a remedy by appeal to the common pleas for a new trial, or by certiorari for a mere legal review.—Barclay v. Brabston, 49 N. J. Law (20 Vroom) 629, 9 Atl. 769.

[f] (N. Y. 1831) Though a judgment rendered by a justice in an action of trespass involving the title to lands is void, the party against whom it is rendered is entitled to seek a reversal.—Striker v. Mott, 6 Wend. 465.

[g] (N. Y. 1886) Code, § 3015, requires a justice to render judgment within four days from the time of the submission. Held, that a judgment rendered after four days will not support an appeal, further than for the purpose of reversing the judgment.—Gillingham v. Jenkins, 40 Hun, 594.

[h] (Or. 1862) Rev. St. p. 300, § 54, requiring a justice to cease proceedings in an action when the title to real estate comes in issue "and certify the cause to the circuit court in the same time as upon appeal," is substantially complied with by proceeding to judgment and sending up the papers and proceedings on appeal. The judgment in the lower court is not wholly void, but will support the appeal.—Gird v. Morehouse, 2 Or. 53.

[i] (Tex. 1883) On appeal from a justice's court to the county court, on which Const. art. 5, § 16, provides that there shall be a new trial de novo in the county court, the justice's judgment sustains the appeal, though the original service in the justice's court was void, and so declared by the county court in quashing it.—Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. McTiegue, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 459.

[j] (Utah, 1893) 1 Comp. Laws, p. 104, § 3, an act of congress relating "to courts and judicial officers in the territory of Utah," provides that an appeal shall be allowed to the district courts of their respective districts from all "final judgments" of justices of the peace. 2 Comp. Laws, § 3659, a territorial act, provides that any party dissatisfied with a judgment rendered in a justice's court may appeal the same to the district court. Held, that an appeal would lie from the judgment of a justice of the peace rendered against defendants in an action of trespass in which he had no jurisdiction because defendants filed a verified answer putting in issue plaintiff's right of possession and title to the lands trespassed upon, and was the proper remedy.—Cereghino v. Third District Court of Utah, 8 Utah, 455, 32 Pac. 697.

[k] (Utah, 1895) The fact that a justice of the peace erroneously allows interest, which makes the total amount exceed his jurisdiction, does not deprive him of original jurisdiction, so as to render the judgment void, and therefore unappealable.—McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Marchant, 11 Utah, 68, 39 Pac. 483.

Appeal from judgments by default as final judgments, see ante, § 491.

—(Conn. 1878) Smith v. French, 46 Conn. 239; (Me. 1850) Turner v. Putnam, 31 Me. 557.

[b] (Cal. 1858) If a defendant, duly served, suffer a default before the justice, he thereby conclusively admits the facts set out in the complaint, and cannot deny them on an appeal.—People v. Eldorado County Court, 10 Cal. 19; Funkenstein v. Elgutter, 11 Cal. 328.

[c] (Me. 1848) Where an action commenced before a justice of the peace has been defaulted, no appeal lies thereupon to the district court; and if, in such case, there is an entry of the action in the district court, and it is continued, it may be dismissed on motion of the plaintiff, at the second term.—Harris v. Hutchins, 28 Me. (15 Shep.) 102.

[d] (Mass. 1846) Under Rev. St. c. 85, § 13, an appeal lies from the judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered upon a default, as well as from a judgment rendered after trial on an issue joined by the parties.—Holman v. Sigourney, 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 436.

[e] (Neb. 1881) A provision that no appeal lies in favor of defendant from a default judgment of a justice may be waived, and will be waived if plaintiff treat the appeal as valid, and without objection file the necessary pleadings on his part to make up the issues for a trial on the merits in the appellate court. It is too late to object on the trial to the validity of the appeal.—Minneapolis Harvester Works v. Hedges, 11 Neb. 46, 7 N. W. 531.

[f] (Neb. 1883) An action in a justice's court was adjourned to 1 o'clock of a future day. On that day and hour the court met, and, defendant failing to appear, the court impaneled a jury, and rendered judgment against defendant before 2 o'clock. Held that, defendant being entitled to one hour in which to appear at the adjourned session of the court, an appeal would lie to the district court from the judgment rendered against defendant without allowing him such time in which to appear.—Andrews v. Mullin, 14 Neb. 248, 15 N. W. 216.

[g] (Neb. 1889) On the return day of a writ of replevin all the parties came before the justice before whom the suit was tried. A motion for a continuance by plaintiff was overruled, and he withdrew, and made no further appearance. On motion of defendant, the case was tried by the court, and judgment given against plaintiff for the wrongful taking of the property replevied. Held, that a dismissal of an appeal by plaintiff to the district court, on the grounds that judgment was rendered against plaintiff in the court below, while he was in default, and that no petition had been filed as required by law, was error.—Sornborger v. Huffman, 27 Neb. 491, 43 N. W. 242.

[h] (Neb. 1890) An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace cannot be dismissed on the ground that the judgment was rendered by default, where defendant had appeared on the return day of the summons, obtained a continuance, and subpœnaed witnesses, though he was absent on the day of the trial.—Steven v. Nebraska & I. Ins. Co. 29 Neb. 187, 45 N. W. 284.

[i] (Nev. 1894) Where an unauthorized judgment by a justice is entered by default, the remedy is by certiorari, rather than by appeal.—Wiggins v. Henderson, 22 Nev. 103, 36 Pac. 459.

[j] (N. Y. 1826) An appeal lies from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, where an issue is joined, though the defendant did not appear and take part in the trial.—Ex parte Stafford, 6 Cow. 44.

[k] (N. Y. 1854) Where a defendant has once appeared in justice's court, and afterwards suffers judgment by default, having mistaken the time to which the cause was adjourned, Code, § 366, confers no power on the appellate court to grant relief.—Williams v. McCauley, 3 E. D. Smith, 120.

[l] (N. Y. 1889) Where a defendant is present when the case is called, but refuses to answer, or to take part in the trial, on the ground that it was called too late, there is no failure to appear, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 3064, relating to appeals from justice's court, and providing that "if the appeal is taken by a defendant who failed to appear before the justice, either upon the return of the summons or at the time to which the trial of the action was adjourned," and gives a satisfactory excuse for his default, the court may, in its discretion, set aside the judgment and grant a new trial, etc.—Thomas v. Keeler, 52 Hun, 318, 5 N. Y. Supp. 359, 16 Civ. Proc. R. 408.

[m] (Or. 1866) Under the provisions of Code, p. 595, § 64, relating to appeals from judgments rendered by justices of the peace, no appeal lies from a "judgment on failure to answer."—Ryan v. Harris, 2 Or. 175.

[n] (Or. 1875) When an answer is purposely stricken out or set aside on a trial in justice's court, and, defendant failing to file any other answer, judgment is rendered against him, such judgment, upon a question of defendant's right of appeal, will be considered as a "judgment for want of answer," and not appealable.—Long v. Sharp, 5 Or. 438.

[o] (S. D. 1892) On appeal to the circuit court from a justice's judgment, the transcript sent up by the justice showed that the cause was set for trial at a certain time, that both parties appeared, and witnesses were sworn, and that a certain judgment was rendered. The transcript was silent as to whether an answer was filed, but neither did it refer to a complaint. Held, that the transcript did not show that the judgment in the justice's court was rendered by default, and the circuit court erred in dismissing the appeal on such ground.—Mouser v. Palmer, 2 S. D. 466, 50 N. W. 967.

[p] (Wash. 1895) In case of default judgment before a justice of the peace for want of answer, there can be no review by appeal under 2 Hill's Code, § 1630, but only a review of errors of law by certiorari proceedings under section 1621.—State v. Jefferson County Super. Ct., 12 Wash. 548, 41 Pac. 895.

—(Cal. 1884) Yeazell v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 4 Pac. 503; (Or. 1892) Rader v. Barr, 22 Or. 495, 29 Pac. 889.

[b] (Idaho, 1890) Where, in a suit before a justice for $150, being above the amount of which justices have exclusive original jurisdiction, all the allegations of the complaint were denied, but, to expedite an appeal, defendant, by agreement of both parties, consented to a "pro forma judgment" against him, "reserving all his rights under an appeal," this consent does not deprive him of his right to be heard in the circuit court, and his appeal was improperly dismissed.—Harvey v. Bunker Hill & S. Mining & Concentrating Co., 2 Idaho, 732, 24 Pac. 30.

[c] (Ill. 1852) The statutory provision that "appeals from judgments of justices of the peace to the circuit court shall be granted in all cases, except on judgments confessed," has reference to judgments in civil proceedings, where the action is brought to redress some private injury, and embraces all such cases, whether the jurisdiction is conferred by the same general act or by other statutes passed either before or since.—Edwards v. Vandemack, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 633.

[d] (Ill. 1867) An admission by a defendant before a justice of the peace that "he could not deny the plaintiff's demand" does not amount to a confession of judgment, and the defendant's right of appealing from the judgment remains.—Elliott v. Diaber, 42 Ill. 467.

[f] (Ill. 1894) A judgment entered by a justice of the peace, based on an admission by the defendant of the amount due, is not a judgment by confession, and may be appealed from.—Dearborn Laundry Co. v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 55 Ill. App. 438.

[g] (Ind. 1861) Plaintiff sued defendant before a justice of the peace on an account. Defendant filed a set-off, but, being personally served with a subpœna to appear at trial and testify as a witness, he failed to do so; and therefore his set-off was disallowed and plaintiff's cause of action taken as confessed, and judgment rendered accordingly. Held, that defendant might appeal, and that section 59 of the justices' act did not take away this right.—Mariner v. Hanna, 16 Ind. 23.

[h] (Ind. 1861) Section 59 of the justices' act (2 Rev. St. 1852, p. 459) has reference only to such judgments as are confessed in accordance with the provisions of that section, and has no reference to the cases, contemplated in section 48 of the same act, taken "as confessed" for failure to appear and testify.—Mariner v. Hanna, 16 Ind. 23.

[i] (Iowa, 1883) Where a party to a suit before a justice of the peace agrees to the entry of a judgment against him, he cannot afterwards claim that he was "aggrieved" thereby, within the meaning of Code 1873, § 3575, allowing appeals from justices.—Stever v. Heald, 61 Iowa, 709, 17 N. W. 145.

[j] (Miss. 1888) Code, § 2309, denying appeal from judgments by confession or consent, does not apply to justices' courts.—James v. Woods, 65 Miss. 528, 5 South. 106.

[k] (Ohio, 1833) All final judgments of justices, except those entered by confession, may be appealed from; and bail for stay of execution will not prevent an appeal.—Nealy v. Sexton, Wright, 314.

[l] (Pa. 1846) Where a defendant appears before a justice and confesses judgment, he is not entitled to an appeal.—Halliday v. Mills, 3 Clark, 394, 5 Pa. Law J. 416.

§ 497. Judgments after appearance and on verdict or award.

[a] No appeal lies from the judgment of a justice of the peace in the District of Columbia, rendered upon the verdict of a jury.

—(U. S. 1824) Davidson v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 3,602 [2 Cranch, C. C. 515]; Maddox v. Stewart, Fed. Cas. No. 8,964 [2 Cranch, C. C. 523];

(D. C. 1879) Fitzgerald v. Leisman, 3 MacArthur, 6.

[b] An appeal does not lie from a judgment of a justice of the peace upon the award of arbitrators.

—(Ill. 1840) Van Winkle v. Beck, 3 Ill. (2 Scam.) 488;

(Iowa, 1868) Whitis v. Culver, 25 Iowa, 30.

[c] (Ill. 1851) Under Rev. St. c. 59, § 58, allowing appeals from judgments of justices of the peace, except where judgment was confessed, an appeal lies from a judgment of a justice founded on an award of arbitrators.—Rogers v. Holden, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 293.

[d] (Neb. 1884) A party who appears at the trial before a justice of the peace may appeal to the district court, although he did not introduce testimony.—Baier v. Humpall, 16 Neb. 127, 20 N. W. 108.

[e] (Neb. 1884) A defendant, in an action before a justice, who has appeared "at the return day of the summons," or attended "at the time to which a trial has been adjourned," while not entitled to have a judgment against him set aside under Code Civ. Proc. § 1001, which provides that a judgment rendered against a defendant in his absence may be set aside on certain conditions, will not be denied on appeal.—Cleghorn v. Waterman, 16 Neb. 226, 20 N. W. 636.

[f] (Neb.) A party who has appeared in an action before a justice of the peace, and entered into an agreement continuing the cause, may appeal from the judgment rendered against him.—(1884) Cleghorn v. Waterman, 16 Neb. 226, 20 N. W. 636, 877; (1885) Crippen v. Church, 17 Neb. 304, 22 N. W. 567; (1887) Smith v. Borden, 22 Neb. 487, 35 N. W. 218.

[g] (Neb. 1884) Upon plaintiff's dismissal of his action, a set-off that had been filed by defendant was tried, and judgment was rendered for defendant. The record did not show that said judgment was taken by default. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to an appeal.—Rawalt v. Brewer, 16 Neb. 444, 20 N. W. 391.

[i] (Neb. 1886) When a transcript of a justice shows that the parties were present at the trial, and that the same was tried, both parties being sworn and examined as witnesses, the fact that the defendant was called as a witness for plaintiff only, and offered no witness in his own behalf, will not deprive the defendant of the right of appeal to the district court on the ground that he made no defense.—Broadwater v. Jacoby, 19 Neb. 77, 26 N. W. 629.

[j] (Neb. 1888) Prior to the return day before a justice, the defendants caused subpœnas to be issued for their witnesses, which were served, and the witnesses appeared. On that day the trial was adjourned for 30 days on the application of the plaintiff. On the day to which the trial was adjourned the defendants appeared and objected to the jurisdiction of the court. The objection was overruled, and upon being required to plead or be defaulted, they withdrew from court, and the trial proceeded in their absence, resulting in a judgment against them. They appealed the case to the district court, where, on motion, the appeal was dismissed as having been taken from a judgment rendered in their absence. Held error.—Howard v. Jay, 25 Neb. 279, 41 N. W. 148.

[k] (Neb. 1894) A defendant, who has appeared generally before a justice, may appeal from a judgment against him, though he was not present at the trial, and did not contest the case on the merits.—Crumay v. Henry, 40 Neb. 716, 59 N. W. 369.

[m] (Pa. 1839) If a justice enter judgment on an award for the defendant, the plaintiff may appeal, if his claim exceed $20.—McCloskey v. McConnell, 9 Watts, 17.

[n] (Tex. 1849) Where a right to a location has been contested under Land Laws 1837, § 19, and determined by a justice of the peace and six jurors, the determination is final; the statute giving no appeal therefrom.—Cullem v. Latimer, 4 Tex. 329; Prewitt v. Farris, 5 Tex. 370.

[o] (W. Va. 1888) No appeal lies to the circuit court from the judgment of a justice on a verdict.—Barker v. Walton, 31 W. Va. 468, 7 S. E. 452; Woodford v. Hull, 31 W. Va. 470, 7 S. E. 450.

[d] (Conn. 1890) The record of a justice recited that the plaintiff and defendant appeared and joined issue, and that, no testimony having been offered, the court entered judgment of nonsuit. Held not a judgment upon any of the issues of the case, but strictly a judgment of nonsuit, from which an appeal did not lie under Gen. St. § 683, providing that in all civil actions, except those by summary process, brought before a justice of the peace, an appeal from any judgment rendered therein upon any issue may be had by either party.—Norton v. Petrie, 59 Conn. 200, 20 Atl. 199.

[f] (Mich. 1867) Where a suit in a justice's court was adjourned for a few days by consent of parties, but before there were any pleadings, and on the adjourned day, the justice refused to hear the cause, such refusal might be considered as a nonsuit, and an appeal laid therefrom.—Pattridge v. Lott, 15 Mich. 251.

[g] (Mich. 1874) The decision of a justice dismissing a suit on motion for want of jurisdiction for an alleged defect in the summons is equivalent in effect to a judgment of nonsuit, and is appealable.—People v. Judge of Wayne Circuit Court, 30 Mich. 98.

Jones, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 308, 36 Am. Dec. 723.

[c] (N. Y.) The seventeenth section of the act, which gave the party aggrieved, where the judgment was above $25, an appeal to the court of common pleas, referred only to cases in which a judgment was given after trial of an issue in fact, and not to a case of a judgment on demurrer or an issue at law.—(1820) Peters v. Parsons, 18 Johns. 140; (1822) Breese v. Williams, 20 Johns. 280.

[l] (Wis. 1853) The order of a justice in an action of replevin that the property be delivered up is part of the judgment and subject to appeal.—Weizen v. McKinney, 2 Wis. 288.

Laws 1881, c. 407, a separate appeal to the municipal court of the city of St. Paul may be taken by a garnishee from a judgment against him rendered by one of the city justices, and such right of appeal is not dependent on the removal by appeal of the judgment in the principal action.—Albachten v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. Ry. Co., 40 Minn. 378, 42 N. W. 86; Richter v. Trask, 40 Minn. 379, 42 N. W. 87.

[l] (Ohio, 1895) A petition in error by a garnishee will not lie to review the order of a justice of the peace requiring him to pay into court money of the attachment defendant, the remedy of the garnishee being to refuse to comply with the order, and have a judge adjudicate it in a civil action, pursuant to Rev. St. § 5551.—Hammock v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 139, 6 O. C. D. 105.

[m] (Vt. 1856) Though the principal defendant be defaulted in a suit before a justice, plaintiff may well appeal concerning the trustee's liability. St. 1842.—Van Buskirk v. Martin, 28 Vt. (2 Williams) 726.

[n] (Wis. 1889) Laws 1883, c. 24, providing that in garnishee proceedings "an appeal may be taken from any order of the justice directing the delivery of the property in the garnishee's possession as if from a judgment," does not authorize an appeal from an order directing the garnishee to pay money into court.—Williams v. Briel, 75 Wis. 309, 43 N. W. 952; Williams v. Brechler, Id.

Verdicts of jury as constituting sufficient judgment to support an appeal, see ante, § 491.

[a] (Ala. 1853) In appeal cases from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the rendition of judgment by default on one day against some of the defendants, and on another day against the others who made defense, is a mere irregularity, for which the proceedings should not be quashed.—White v. Blount, 22 Ala. 697.

[b] (Ark. 1884) Though no formal judgment is entered, when there has been a verdict in a trial before a justice of the peace, an appeal may be taken. The verdict in such case may be deemed equivalent to a judgment.—Turner v. Harrison, 43 Ark. 233.

[c] (Cal. 1886) If a justice of the peace fails to enter judgment in his docket in conformity with the verdict before an appeal is taken to the superior court, such failure is not fatal to the jurisdiction of the latter court.—Montgomery v. Yolo County Superior Court, 68 Cal. 407, 9 Pac. 720.

[d] (Dak. 1887) The verdict of a jury in a cause tried before a justice of the peace, which verdict is entered on the justice's docket, entitles the aggrieved party to appeal, although the justice omits to enter a formal judgment.—Porter v. Parker, 4 Dak. 397, 33 N. W. 70.

[e] (Ill. 1861) No particular form is requisite in order to constitute the finding of a justice of the peace a judgment. If it is final, and subjects the party against whom it is rendered to injury, an appeal will lie therefrom.—Kimball v. Riter, 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 276.

[f] (Ill. 1886) In a proceeding under Rev. St. c. 8, § 30, for proof of damages for injury to sheep, the justice's finding is in no sense a judgment, and no appeal lies therefrom.—Lamonte v. Town of Montebello, 21 Ill. App. 186.

[g] (Ind. 1845) An appeal lies to the circuit court from the final judgment of a justice of the peace, however informal the judgment may be.—Brewer v. Murray, 7 Blackf. 567.

[h] (Iowa, 1859) A justice's record recited the verdict of the jury, and concluded, "And judgment was rendered thereon by me accordingly." Held to be a judgment, within the meaning of Code, § 2328, from which an appeal would lie.—Moore v. Manser, 9 Iowa, 47.

[i] (Iowa, 1871) A judgment in an action of replevin before a justice of the peace, reciting that, "after examination of witnesses and allegations of plaintiff and defendant, it was considered to render to plaintiff peaceable possession of the property, together with damages for wrongfully detaining the same, and costs," is sufficient to support an appeal.—Lavalle v. Badgly, 33 Iowa, 155.

[j] (Mo. 1872) The failure of a justice to enter up a formal judgment on a verdict will not prevent an appeal to the circuit court. The effect of such judgment should be given to the verdict as soon as entered on the docket.—Hazeltine v. Reusch, 51 Mo. 50.

[k] (Mo. 1887) An entry in the docket of a justice of the peace in an action on a note, "Dismissed for want of consideration," though informal, is sufficient for the foundation of an appeal.—Workman v. Taylor, 24 Mo. App. 550.

[l] (N. Y. 1893) Where a justice of the peace indorses on his minutes of the trial a memorandum rendering judgment in a specified sum, and stating the amount of damages and costs separately, the judgment is not invalidated by failure of the justice to enter it on his docket, and an appeal may be taken therefrom, though Code Civ. Proc. § 3046, provides that an appeal must be taken within 20 days after entry of the judgment on the justice's docket.—O'Reilly v. Block (Co. Ct.) 23 N. Y. Supp. 670.

—— IN ATTACHMENT, GARNISHMENT, AND REPLEVIN PROCEEDINGS, § 505.
WAIVER OF RIGHT TO APPEAL, § 506.

[a] (Ark. 1884) An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is a matter of right.—Townsend v. Timmons, 44 Ark. 482.

[b] (Pa. 1831) The right of appeal is to be favored.—Dickinson v. McGuire, 1 Ashm. 47.

Parties on appeal, see post, §§ 516–519.

[a] (Ill. 1894) Where a constable is improperly made defendant in a trial of "right of property," before a justice, and judgment is rendered against him for costs, appeal is a proper remedy, and it is error to dismiss such appeal by him on the ground that he was not the proper party defendant.—Aldridge v. Glover, 53 Ill. App. 137.

[b] (N. Y. 1888) Though Code Civ. Proc. § 3011, provides that judgments by confession must be in writing, signed by defendant, and filed with the justice, defendant cannot question the action of the justice, based on his verbal agreement with the justice, made out of court, that judgment should be entered against him; section 3063 providing that the appellate court must render judgment in accordance with justice, disregarding technical errors.—Traffarn v. Getman, 49 Hun, 611, 3 N. Y. Supp. 867.

[c] (Pa. 1814) Where judgment was rendered by an alderman in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant entered bail for an appeal, and subsequently the plaintiff appealed to the justice, and obtained a transcript of the proceedings and certificate of the appeal, which he filed in the office of the prothonotary of the court of common pleas, the court, on the application of the defendant, dismissed the appeal.—Nicolet v. Oellers, 2 Ashm. 115.

[d] (Pa. 1849) Since Act March 20, 1845, the defendant may appeal from the judgment of a justice in all cases where, under existing laws, the plaintiff would be entitled to an appeal.—Prestly v. Ross, 11 Pa. (1 Jones) 410.

[e] (Pa. 1855) Every person against whom a justice of the peace renders a judgment is entitled of common right to an appeal and a trial by jury, whether the judgment was obtained by confession of the party or his agent, or otherwise.—Rowen v. King, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 409.

[f] (Tex. 1881) A person filing a motion for a new trial in a justice's court does not thereby become a party to the action, entitling him to appeal from a judgment rendered therein.—Williams v. Dennis, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1233.

[g] (Tex. 1881) One who was not a party to a judgment rendered in a justice's court cannot appeal therefrom.—Williams v. Dennis, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1233.

[h] (Vt. 1883) Under a statute permitting one who pleads an offset in good faith before a justice of the peace to appeal, the right of appeal exists, if appellant swears to the correctness of his offset, and there is no evidence against it, notwithstanding that the justice adjudges that it was not pleaded in good faith. —Wilder v. Gilman, 55 Vt. 503.

[a] (Ark. 1850) When property levied on under an attachment by a justice is claimed by a third person on interplea, and judgment rendered against him, he may appeal to the circuit court.—Mitchell v. Woods, 11 Ark. (6 Eng.) 180.

[b] (Ill. 1838) In order to enable the owner or consignee of a vessel, attached under the "Act authorizing the seizure of boats and other vessels by attachment," to take an appeal from the judgment of the justice of the peace in such case, he should make himself a party defendant to the suit before the justice. Gale's St. p. 73.—The Constitution v. Woodworth, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 511.

[c] (Ind. 1860) A garnishee can appeal from a judgment charging him, under the general statute allowing appeals from a justice.—Burgess v. Matlock, 14 Ind. 475.

[d] (Iowa, 1867) Rev. St. § 3917, providing that "any party aggrieved may appeal" from a justice's judgment, means parties to the action, and not those, as a surety in replevin, remotely or directly affected by the result.—Crites v. Littleton, 23 Iowa, 205.

[e] (Iowa, 1867) A surety in a replevin bond cannot in his own name prosecute an appeal to retry in the district court the issues made and determined between his principal and a defendant against whom his principal had commenced, but failed to prosecute, the replevin.—Crites v. Littleton, 23 Iowa, 205.

[f] (N. H. 1850) The claimant and holder of notes as disclosed by a garnishee in his answer in garnishment proceedings in the justice court may appeal from a judgment charging the trustee to the court of common pleas.—Barker v. Garland, 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 103.

[g] (Pa. 1856) An assignee for the benefit of creditors may appeal from a judgment of a justice against a trustee on an attachment against his assignor.—Bletz v. Haldeman, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 403.

[h] (Tex. 1881) A person filing an affidavit and bond for the trial of the right of property in an action other than that in which such property is sought to be reached by garnishment in a justice's court is not a party in the suit in garnishment, entitled to appeal from a judgment rendered therein.—Williams v. Dennis, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1233.

[i] (Vt. 1842) One summoned as trustee in a justice's court, in a suit not appealable by the principal debtor, was charged as trustee, and appealed to the county court. Held, on motion, that the trustee had no right to appeal, and that the appeal should be dismissed.—Earl v. Leland, 14 Vt. 328.

[a] (Conn. 1861) Defendant in a suit before a justice pleaded in abatement, and the justice refused an appeal from the judgment against him on the plea. He then pleaded the general issue, and judgment was rendered against him. Held, that the fact that the justice had refused to allow him to appeal, and had required him to plead to the merits, did not affect the rule that by pleading to the merits he had waived his right to appeal from the judgment on the plea in abatement.—Prosser v. Chapman, 29 Conn. 515.

[b] (Iowa, 1844) A verbal agreement between plaintiff and defendant on a trial before a justice of the peace that a verdict in his court should be final will not be allowed to be pleaded in bar to the action when removed to the district court by appeal.—Clark v. Gibson, 1 Morris, 328.

[c] (Pa. 1821) An agreement not to appeal from an award of arbitrators in an action before a justice must be in writing and be made part of the proceedings; otherwise, it is not binding.—Dawson v. Condy, 7 Serg. & R. 366.

[d] (Pa. 1831) Where, in a suit before a justice, the parties referred the case, and agreed, by entry on the justice's docket, that the award of the referees should be final, the common pleas dismissed an appeal.—Bocleau v. Phillips, 1 Ashm. 92.

[e] (Pa. 1887) Where the right of appeal is waived in a note, and suit is brought before a justice of the peace thereon, and the defendant appears and pleads a set-off exceeding the amount of the note, and judgment is rendered for the plaintiff, the defendant cannot appeal, where part of the set-off existed at the time the note was given.—Soden v. Wheaton, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 416.

[f] (Pa. 1887) A waiver of the right of appeal in a note will not prevent the appeal from the judgment of an alderman, where the defendant pleads the statute of limitation, as this defense was not in existence when the note was given.—Wells v. Wilson, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 417.

[g] (Pa. 1887) Where a defendant, under arrest for a charge of obtaining goods by false pretenses, gave a note waiving the right of appeal, and it appears from the testimony that defendant admitted that he owed the money, and voluntarily gave the note, without duress or an agreement to stifle the prosecution, an appeal from a judgment of the justice of the peace on such note will be stricken off by the court.—Snyder v. Halter, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 418.

[h] (Pa. 1888) Where, in an action before a justice on a judgment note containing a waiver of appeal, defendant denies the signature, but not under oath, and a continuance is granted, and on the adjourned hearing defendant does not appear, and plaintiff proves the signature, and obtains judgment, defendant cannot appeal.—Bohan v. Cawley, 14 Atl. 59.

[i] (Pa. 1893) Although a promissory note contains a waiver of appeal, such waiver will not avail to prevent an appeal from a justice of the peace, where the defense is that the note has been paid in full or in part, and the justice has entered judgment against the defendant for the full amount of the note.—Minich v. Basom (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 508.

Loss of right to appeal by failure to appeal in time, see post, § 530.

[a] (Cal. 1887) The payment of the amount of the judgment into court by defendant cannot deprive plaintiff of his right to appeal to the superior court from a judgment of a justice of the peace.—Scott v. Yolo County Superior Court, 73 Cal. 11, 14 Pac. 374.

[b] (Ind. 1874) A defendant who was personally served with process in a suit before a justice of the peace, and who suffered judgment to go against him by default, procured an order of the court of common pleas for an appeal more than 30 days after the rendition of the judgment. His affidavit showed that he paid the costs two days after judgment, and supposed the default had been set aside, and was waiting for the justice to fix a time for the trial of the cause; that he "had no other idea than defending the suit"; that the note on which judgment was rendered had been paid; and that he was not aware that the default had not been set aside until the day of making the affidavit. Held, that the appeal was improperly granted, and should have been dismissed.—Sample v. Gilbert, 46 Ind. 444.

[c] (Iowa, 1883) Where a judgment has been rendered by a justice of the peace, the judgment creditor cannot deprive the debtor of the right to an appeal or writ of error by filing a transcript of his judgment in the circuit court within the time allowed for such appeal, as the judgment is still a judgment of the justice of the peace, although treated, as to its effect and mode of enforcement, as if rendered in the circuit court.—Wilson v. Robinson, 61 Iowa, 357, 16 N. W. 209.

[d] (Me. 1850) Where a party by his counsel appeared, and before judgment had permission on his own motion to withdraw, and did withdraw, his appearance, he is considered as having had an opportunity to appeal, and a writ of error will not lie.—Howard v. Hill, 31 Me. 420.

[f] (Mo. 1890) Payment of costs by plaintiff, defeated in a justice court, does not defeat his right to appeal to the circuit court.—Brinkerhoff v. Elliott, 43 Mo. App. 185.

[g] (Pa.) A party who has prosecuted a certiorari cannot afterwards have an appeal.—(1887) Dehart v. Kerlin, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 396; (1889) Finley v. Smith, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 661.

[h] (Pa. 1892) The right to appeal from the judgment of an alderman on scire facias to revive a judgment is not barred by the fact that appellant had taken a certiorari to the judgment, which had been stricken by the court.—Watson v. Wehrly (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 530.

[a] (Del. 1883) A garnishee against whom a judgment is recovered upon an execution attachment before a justice of the peace cannot appeal from it without requiring the justice in the hearing of the case to enter on his docket a plea that the attachment process was taken against him by collusion between plaintiff and defendant, etc., or upon a claim or debt divided for the purpose of bringing it within the jurisdiction of the justice, as required by Rev. Code, pp. 619, 620.—Williams v. Hawley, 6 Houst. 482.

[b] (Ga. 1842) No matter can be assigned as a ground of error, in the proceedings before a justice's court, which was not urged in that court.—Dodson v. Connally, Ga. Dec. 132, pt. 1; Chambers v. Dickson, Id. 164.

[c] (Ill. 1850) If security for costs has not been given in a penal action before a justice of the peace, a motion to dismiss for that cause must be made before the justice; and, if not so made, the objection cannot be taken in the appellate court.—Adams v. Miller, 12 Ill. (2 Peck) 27.

[d] (Iowa, 1869) Under Revision, § 3545, a motion to correct an alleged error of a justice's court must have been made before and overruled by the justice before a writ of error to the district court will lie to correct such error.—Smith v. Parker, 28 Iowa, 359.

[e] (Iowa, 1889) Code 1873, § 3516, relative to justices' courts, provides that the parties to the action may be the same as in the district court, "and all the proceedings prescribed for that court, so far as the same are applicable and not herein changed, shall be pursued in justices' courts." Held, that a party objecting to a decision rendered in a justice's court must in an intelligible manner, and at the time, make his objection known, in order to have the decision reivewed by proceedings in error.—Condray v. Stifel, 77 Iowa, 283, 42 N. W. 185.

[g] (Me. 1844) Exceptions to the ruling of a justice of the peace, on the trial of an action before him to recover a fine alleged to have been incurred by a soldier for nonappearance at a training company, are only authorized by what may be deemed the common law in this country, originating under St. 13 Edw. I. c. 131.—Simpson v. Wilson, 24 Me. (11 Shep.) 437.

[h] (Mass. 1839) On an appeal from a conviction before a justice of the peace for failure to perform military duties, the appellant cannot urge an objection not taken before the justice, and which, if it was taken, might have been obviated by proof.—Cousins v. Cowing, 40 Mass. (23 Pick.) 208.

[i] (Mo. 1853) It appearing from the record that the trial below was by the court without a jury, that there was a general finding for the defendant, that no objection was taken to any evidence, and no point of law was raised, the supreme court affirmed the judgment.—Haase v. Stevens, 18 Mo. 476.

[a] (Ala. 1846) As a justice of the peace of one county is not authorized to issue an attachment returnable into another, it is competent for a garnishee to avail himself of the irregularity in the attachment, in an appellate court, though no objection had been made to it previous to the judgment below.—Dew v. Bank of Alabama, 9 Ala. 323.

[b] (Ala. 1849) An attachment returnable before a justice of the peace cannot be quashed in the circuit court, to which an appeal is taken from the judgment of the magistrate, because the attachment was not executed in the county in which it issued; the objection not having been taken before the justice.—Slaton v. Apperson, 15 Ala. 721.

[d] (Ala. 1876) In an action for the recovery of personal property, if there be no plea to the jurisdiction in the justice's court, the question of want of jurisdiction in the justice, by reason of excess of value or amount in controversy, cannot be raised in the circuit court when the case is carried to that court by appeal, or by statutory certiorari.—Glaze v. Blake, 56 Ala. 379.

[e] (Cal. 1886) Where, in an action before a justice to recover a sum of money due on an assessment for street work in a municipality, no question of the legality of the assessment is raised before the justice, so as to oust him of jurisdiction, such question cannot be raised in the superior court on an appeal from the justice's judgment.—Williams v. Mecartney, 69 Cal. 556, 11 Pac. 186.

[f] (Ind. 1841) On appeal from a justice's court, the objection that the suit was not brought in the proper township cannot be taken in the circuit court, unless before taken in the justice's court.—Allison v. Hedges, 5 Blackf. 546.

[g] (Ind. 1854) The want of jurisdiction of a justice of the peace may be shown, either before the justice or on appeal to the circuit court.—Poyser v. Murray, 6 Ind. 35.

[h] (Ind. 1893) Where the transcript of a justice shows a want of jurisdiction on its face, it may be objected to for the first time on appeal.—Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Parish, 6 Ind. App. 89, 33 N. E. 122; Same v. Creamer, 6 Ind. App. 700, 33 N. E. 238.

[i] (Mass. 1855) A motion to dismiss a case for want of jurisdiction in the justice of the peace before whom it was commenced and tried may be first made in the court of common pleas on appeal from the judgment of the justice.—Elder v. Dwight Mfg. Co., 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 201.

[j] (Mass. 1864) A defendant in an action of replevin brought before a justice of the peace was defaulted, and appealed to the superior court. After the case had been in that court several terms, he moved to dismiss it for want of jurisdiction. Held that, so far as the motion was founded on defects appearing on the appraisement and bond, it was an objection to the sufficiency of the service of the writ, and should have been made, at the latest, in the superior court at the first term. Not having been made so soon, it was waived.—Davenport v. Burke, 91 Mass. (9 Allen) 116.

[l] (Miss. 1881) A defendant may object for the first time, on appeal from the justice's court to the circuit court, that plaintiff has failed to comply with the statutory prerequisite for maintaining his action.—Hope v. Hurt, 59 Miss. 174.

[m] (Miss. 1881) A case was postponed by a justice of the peace to a day fixed with the consent of the parties, and on such day a trial was had and judgment rendered for defendant. On appeal to the circuit court judgment was rendered for plaintiff. Held, that defendant could not then object that the justice's judgment was void, because rendered in vacation.—Rice v. Locke, 59 Miss. 189.

[n] (Mo. 1860) The objection that the justice had no jurisdiction may be taken for the first time in the circuit court on error.—Webb v. Tweedie, 30 Mo. 488.

[o] (Mo. 1868) Where judgment is rendered for an amount within the jurisdiction of a justice, it will be permitted to stand, if the plaintiff raises no objections, notwithstanding an order was made consolidating two suits of the plaintiff against the same defendant, thereby increasing the amount claimed beyond the jurisdiction of the justice.—Bridle v. Grau, 42 Mo. 359.

[p] (Mo. 1878) Where, in an action, under Railroad Act, § 43, for double damages for stock killed through the company's failure to maintain proper fences, neither the statement filed with the justice nor the transcript of the proceedings shows that the stock was killed in the township where the suit was brought, the objection of want of jurisdiction may be raised for the first time in the supreme court.—Barnett v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 68 Mo. 56, 30 Am. Rep. 773.

[q] (Pa. 1853) The act of 1810 excepts from the jurisdiction of justices all cases of real contract where the title to land may come in question. By the act of 1814 jurisdiction was given to justices in all actions of trespass for injury to real estate, except those in which the title to land actually does come in question; and, in order to determine whether the fact be so, the defendant may interpose his oath at any time before the trial and stop the proceedings. Held, that the justice has authority to determine the cause, unless the defendant makes oath that the title to land will come in question, and that it is too late to make the objection after the case comes into the common pleas by appeal.—Lauchner v. Rex, 20 Pa. (8 Harris) 464.

[r] (Pa. 1884) Where the justice has no jurisdiction of a case before him, advantage thereof may be taken on appeal.—O'Connell v. Bank, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 296.

[s] (Tex. 1882) A plea that defendant in a justice's court was sued out of his precinct cannot be first made on appeal in the county court.—Engel v. Brown, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 803.

[t] (Tex. 1883) A plea to the jurisdiction on the ground that defendant was not sued in a justice's court in a proper justice's precinct cannot first be raised on an appeal in the county court.—Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. McTiegue, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 460.

[u] (Tex. 1886) Where a plea of privilege to be tried in the county of defendant's residence is filed in the justice court, it may be insisted upon in the county court on appeal, unless waived.—Walthew v. Milby, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 121.

[v] (Tex. 1890) After the trial on the merits in a justice's court, the defendant is precluded on appeal from raising the question of jurisdiction on the ground that the complaint did not affirmatively show that the premises in question were situated in the justice's precinct.—Cahill v. Texas Mexican Ry. Co., 76 Tex. 100, 12 S. W. 1128.

§ 510. Defects as to process and parties.

[a] (Ala. 1826) An objection to the return of the process cannot be made on the appeal, unless it was made before the justice.—Needham v. Newsom, Minor, 407.

[b] (Ark. 1838) If the original process in a justice court is correct, defendant cannot, on appeal, complain of irregular service thereof, where he did not appear before the justice and make objection thereto.—Hester v. Murphy, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 55; McKee v. Murphy, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 55.

[c] (Ill. 1867) Where a defendant has appeared and defended his suit, and taken an appeal in the lower court, he cannot take advantage for the first time in the higher court of any defect in the process, such as the want of a revenue stamp upon the summons.—Roberts v. Formhalls, 46 Ill. 66.

[d] (Ill. 1874) Where a suit was instituted by a plaintiff by one Christian name, and judgment was rendered before the justice of the peace in his favor by another Christian name, and no objection on that account was made before the justice, and it appears from the record that he was as well known by the one name as the other, held, that the objection was properly overruled in the circuit court.—Scott v. White, 71 Ill. 287.

[dd] (Ill. 1874) The objection that a suit begun before a police magistrate should have been against the trustees of a church, instead of against the church itself, cannot be urged for the first time in the circuit court on a motion in arrest of judgment.—African M. E. Church v. McGruder, 73 Ill. 516.

[e] (Ill. 1877) Since there is no law making it the duty of a defendant to appear to a summons issued by a justice of the peace, his nonappearance should work him no prejudice; and, if he makes a motion questioning the jurisdiction at the earliest moment on appeal in the circuit court, he will be in time.—Evans v. Bouton, 85 Ill. 579.

[f] (Ind.) If a defendant appears to an action before a justice of the peace without objecting to the process, he cannot object to it on appeal in the circuit court.—(1844) Vermilya v. Davis, 7 Blackf. 158; (1845) Dudley v. Fisher, 7 Blackf. 553.

[g] (Iowa, 1864) A defendant who has in fact been served with notice in an action brought before a justice of the peace cannot sue out a writ of error from the district court to have a judgment by default reversed, because of a defective return of service, without first seeking to have the inferior court correct the defect.—Leonard v. Hallem, 17 Iowa, 564.

[h] (Kan. 1884) An objection that service in a case in justice's court was defective because the justice had no authority to appoint the special constable who made the service, and because the latter did not take the required oath, must first be made in the justice's court.—Brust v. Green, 32 Kan. 182, 4 Pac. 81.

[i] (Ky. 1828) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, it cannot be objected for the first time that the warrant had been returned, and the judgment rendered against defendant, out of the district where he resided.—Sturgus' Adm'r v. White's Adm'r, 46 Ky. (7 T. B. Mon.) 228.

[j] (Neb. 1896) Objection that a plaintiff has not sued in his full Christian name may be first made in the district court on appeal from justice court.—Small v. Sandall, 48 Neb. 318, 67 N. W. 156.

[k] (N. J. 1888) On appeal to the common pleas from the justice's court, an objection then made that the evidence showed that at the time of the service of the summons defendant was a nonresident is too late; defendant having appeared before the justice and defended on the merits without raising the objection.—Naye v. Noezel, 50 N. J. Law (21 Vroom) 523, 14 Atl. 750.

[n] (Tex. 1890) On appeal from justice's court, a defendant cannot plead a misjoinder of parties and actions, to which no objection was taken before the justice.—Matula v. Fitzgerald (App.) 15 S. W. 644.

[a] (Ala. 1887) A defective affidavit, in an attachment commenced before a justice of the peace, cannot be objected to after the case has been appealed to the circuit court.—Horton v. Miller, 84 Ala. 537, 4 South. 370.

[d] (Ind. 1834) Pleas before a justice which are objectionable must be objected to in his court. The objection, if first made in the appellate court, is too late.—McClelland v. Quarles, 3 Blackf. 459.

[e] (Ind. 1857) Objections to the certainty of a complaint before a justice cannot be taken for the first time on error, if it be certain enough to bar another action.—Harper v. Pound, 10 Ind. 32.

[f] (Ind. 1891) In an action before a justice, a complaint in which the plaintiff states "that on the 4th day of January, 1888, he commenced working for the defendant by the day, and that he worked 144 days, which is worth 75 cents per day, making $108, which is wholly unpaid," is sufficient, when attacked for the first time in the circuit court.—Milhollin v. Fuller, 1 Ind. App. 58, 27 N. E. 111.

[g] (Ind. 1894) Where a complaint in a justice court is defective merely in that a necessary fact is imperfectly or indefinitely stated, an objection thereto cannot be made for the first time on appeal.—Mason v. Kempf, 11 Ind. App. 311, 38 N. E. 230.

[h] (Iowa, 1886) A defendant in trespass, who raises no objection in a justice's court before verdict to a claim for exemplary damages in the petition, cannot make such objection on appeal.—Atkinson v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 70 Iowa, 68, 29 N. W. 808.

[i] (Kan. 1873) Where no question is raised in the justice's court as to the sufficiency of a bill of particulars, if by a very liberal construction said bill of particulars can be construed to state a cause of action, neither the district court nor the supreme court should disturb the judgment founded thereon.—Kaub v. Mitchell, 12 Kan. 57.

[j] (Kan. 1880) In an action brought by an attorney at law before a justice of the peace for services rendered in defending an action brought by a husband against his wife for divorce, the bill of particulars, which is sufficient in every respect, except that it does not specifically state to whom the plaintiff first gave the credit for his services, and does not state why an allowance for alimony pendente lite, including suit money, was not made, will not be held to be fatally defective, when the question is raised for the first time in the supreme court.—Gossett v. Patten, 23 Kan. 340.

[k] (Mich. 1894) The replevin case having been commenced before a justice, and the affidavit there containing a description of the property, which was not attacked for insufficiency, the circuit court had jurisdiction to award a return of the property and assess damages, though the description in the writ was defective.—Simmons v. Robinson, 101 Mich. 240, 59 N. W. 623.

[l] (Minn. 1858) In an action commenced before a justice of the peace, an objection that neither complaint nor answer was properly verified was untenable; there having been no objection made in the court below on that ground.—Taylor v. Bissell, 1 Minn. 225 (Gil. 186).

[m] (Minn. 1871) On appeal from the district court in an action of replevin commenced before a justice and appealed thereto, the supreme court will not consider defects in the affidavit upon which the justice issued the writ, where no such objection was made in the court below.—Goodell v. Ward, 17 Minn. 17 (Gil. 1).

[n] (Minn. 1878) Where a party has an opportunity in a justice's court to object to a pleading therein, but fails to do so, it will be sustained, on appeal, if by any liberal and reasonable construction of its averments it can be. —Thompson v. Killian, 25 Minn. 111.

[o] (Mo. 1885) If the objection that the statement does not state a cause of action is overruled and excepted to, and a motion in arrest of judgment is duly filed and overruled, the objection is entitled to be considered in the appellate court.—Wilson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 18 Mo. App. 258.

[p] (Mo. 1887) If it appears from the justice's transcript and from the testimony of both parties at the trial that the justice had jurisdiction, it is too late, after verdict, to object that the statement filed is jurisdictionally defective.—Kennedy v. Prueitt, 24 Mo. App. 414.

[q] (N. Y.) On appeal from a justice's judgment, defendant cannot make formal objections to the declaration of which he might have availed himself by demurrer in the court below.—(1833) Dean v. Gridley, 10 Wend. 254; (1852) Neff v. Clute, 12 Barb. 466.

[r] (N. Y. 1848) Where, on the trial of a cause before a justice of the peace, the plaintiff omits to reply to the defendant's plea, or to demur to it, he will not be permitted, on appeal to the common pleas, to object to the form of the plea.—Ross v. Hamilton, 3 Barb. 609.

[s] (N. Y. 1896) Where the pleadings are oral, and the complaint fails to disclose whether the action is in replevin or trover, and the defendant goes to trial on them without compelling plaintiff to make them more definite, he cannot object to them for the first time on appeal.—Lyngstrandh v. William Haaker Co. (Sup.) 16 Misc. Rep. 387, 38 N. Y. Supp. 129.

[t] (Pa. 1865) After appeal from a magistrate and a general plea, it is too late to object to the form of action.—Schlott v. Lower Heidelberg Tp., 1 Woodw. Dec. 280.

[u] (Wis. 1893) Where an action is brought before a justice, it is not too late to raise the question of misjoinder of issues on a demurrer ore tenus in the circuit court on appeal.—Wirth v. Bartell, 84 Wis. 200, 54 N. W. 399.

§ 512. Errors or irregularities in proceedings.

[a] (U. S. 1827) In Arkansas a judgment of a justice of the peace in a civil case will not be reversed on the ground that there was not a trial by jury, unless it appears that a jury trial was asked and refused by the justice.—Deadrick v. Harrington, Fed. Cas. No. 3,694b [Hemp. 50].

[b] (Ala. 1880) Where an attachment is commenced before a justice of the peace, and an appeal taken to the circuit court, no objection can be then for the first time raised to the regularity of the proceedings.—Reynolds v. Simpkins, 67 Ala. 378.

[c, d] (Iowa, 1880) The fact that, in a trial before a justice of the peace, neither party objects as to the power of the justice to instruct the jury, does not preclude the consideration, on appeal, as to whether he has the power.—St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Harrington, 53 Iowa, 380, 5 N. W. 568.

[e] (Kan. 1861) The reversal of a judgment of a justice of the peace, on petition in error in the appellate court, in a case where the justice had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter of the action, cannot be had, unless the transcript shows that the action or rulings of the justice were objected or excepted to at the time.—Garvey v. Schollkopf, McCahon, 179.

[f] (Kan. 1869) Where a party participated in proceedings before a justice of the peace, and made no objection to errors and irregularities, the judgment will not be reversed because of them, especially when they might have been corrected, had attention been called to them at the trial.—Grandstaff v. Scoffin, 5 Kan. 97.

[g] (Minn. 1865) On appeal from a judgment in a justice's court in an action on a promissory note the omission to file the note is not ground for reversal of the judgment, where it appears that the note was produced at the trial, and that the appellant did not ask that it be made part of the record.—Tune v. Sweeney, 34 Minn. 295, 25 N. W. 628.

[h] (Neb. 1895) A party to an action in justice court, who failed to object to the receiving of the verdict on the ground that one of the jurors was absent, could not raise that ground of objection on error in the district court.—Jones v. Driscoll, 46 Neb. 575, 65 N. W. 194.

[i] (N. Y. 1808) Where no objection is made to the form of the oath administered by a justice of the peace at the time of trial, it cannot afterwards be alleged for error.—Brownell v. Slocum, 3 Johns. 430.

[j] (N. C. 1858) Where, under a proceeding by a warrant, given by chapter 17, § 7, Rev. Code, upon an appeal to the superior court, a verdict was taken for the value of an animal killed on a railroad, it was held that it was too late to take the objection in this court that the judgment of the justice of the peace was rendered without a valuation of the animal by freeholders.—Aycock v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 51 N. C. 231.

[k] (Wis. 1862) Where defendant in the justice's court went to trial without requiring security for costs, the circuit court, on appeal by plaintiff, cannot dismiss the case because of this omission.—Conrad v. Cole, 15 Wis. 545.

[a] (Me. 1844) After a town has availed itself of the advantages of an appeal entered by its selectmen, it is too late at the second term to deny their right to appear and answer to the suit in the name of the town.—Strout v. Inhabitants of Durham, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 483.

[b] (Mo. 1882) On appeal to the circuit court from the justice's court, the defense that the plaintiff had not the legal capacity to sue cannot be raised for the first time.—Compton v. Parsons, 76 Mo. 455.

[c] (N. Y. 1859) In an action in a justice's court to recover penalties for violations of the excise law, the objections that the overseers of the poor had not already sued, that security was not given before the summons was issued, or that the offense was not proved to have been committed in the town, must be taken before that court, and cannot be first raised on appeal.—Pruyn v. Tyler, 18 How. Prac. 331.

[d] (N. Y. 1863) On appeal from a justice's court to the county court, a nonsuit will not be granted, on the ground that the plaintiffs sued as individuals, and not as commissioners of highways, and that the complaint does not aver that they are commissioners. The objection should have been made in the justice's court.—Fowler v. Westervelt, 40 Barb. 374, 17 Abb. Prac. 59.

[a] (Ariz. 1873) A defendant in an action on a note, who permits it to be given in evidence on the trial before a justice of the peace without objection, cannot for the first time on appeal in the district court raise the question of the admissibility of the note, because it was not properly stamped, as required by the United States revenue laws.—Irvine v. Lopez, 1 Ariz. 81, 25 Pac. 799.

[b] (Mich. 1896) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace will not be reversed because the testimony admitted was not the best evidence, if no objection was made to it on the trial.—Martin v. Smith, 108 Mich. 278, 66 N. W. 61.

§ 515. Motions for new trial and to set aside default.

[a] Where defendant in an action before a justice suffered a default, and made no motion to have the same set aside, an appeal from the justice is properly dismissed.
—(Ark. 1879) Lawrence v. Meyer, 35 Ark. 104;
(Mo. 1873) Smith v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co., 53 Mo. 338; (1884) Horton v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 83 Mo. 541.

[b] Unless the defendant, within 10 days after the rendition of a default judgment by a justice of the peace, makes application to the justice to set it aside, an appeal from such judgment cannot be granted.
—(Ark. 1874) Page v. Sutton, 29 Ark. 304;
(Mo. 1857) Burns v. Hunton, 24 Mo. 337.

[c] (Ark. 1847) Where the transcript of a justice of the peace showed that the parties came by their attorneys, and that the plaintiff's account was proved, upon which judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, it sufficiently showed that the judgment was not by default, and that an appeal would lie without a motion to set it aside.—Pryor v. Williams, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 295.

[d] (Ark. 1850) When judgment in a justice court is by default, and the defendant appeals without having applied to the justice to set it aside within 15 days after it is rendered, the appeal should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—Wynn v. Garland, 11 Ark. (6 Eng.) 302.

[e] (Kan. 1887) Before an action in a justice's court, tried with a jury, can be reviewed on petition in error in the district court, a motion for a new trial must be made in the justice's court.—Hart Pioneer Nursery Co. v. Scruggs, 13 Pac. 575.

[f] (Kan. 1894) Where the record on appeal from a justice's court to review an exclusion of evidence does not show a motion for a new trial, and notice of the time of hearing same, as required by Justice's Code, §§ 110, 111, and the action of the justice thereon, it is proper for the district court to affirm the judgment.—Hennigh v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 53 Kan. 370, 36 Pac. 711.

[g] (Mo. 1834) Sess. Acts, p. 33, § 2, providing that "in all cases" a party feeling himself aggrieved by a justice's judgment may appeal, does not repeal Rev. Code, p. 481, § 22, precluding an appeal from a judgment by default, where no motion was made to set it aside.—Barnett v. Lynch, 3 Mo. 369.

[h] (Mo. 1847) In a suit against a boat before a justice of the peace, where a judgment by default against the boat has been rendered, and a motion to set the same aside overruled, an appeal will lie from the judgment of the justice.—Hore v. The Belle, 11 Mo. 107.

[i] (Mo. 1879) An appeal from a judgment by default allowed by a justice after the 10 days granted by 2 Wag. St. p. 847, § 2, had expired without an application having been made to set aside the judgment, and without its having been refused, dismissed, though the defendant made affidavit that he applied to the justice within the 10 days, but found that he was out of the county and would not return until the time had expired.—Pearson v. Carson, 69 Mo. 569.

[j] (Mo. 1886) To give the appellate court jurisdiction of a judgment by default in a suit before a justice of the peace, it is necessary, under Rev. St. § 3040, first to file a motion to set it aside.—Smith v. Wineland, 21 Mo. App. 387.

[k] (Mo. 1890) It is not a necessary prerequisite to an appeal from a justice of the peace in forceable entry and detainer that the losing party should ask for a new trial, under Rev. St. 1879, § 2442.—Henry v. Lansdown, 42 Mo. App. 431.

[l] (Mont. 1890) Trial on appeal from a justice's court being, by Code Civ. Proc. § 826, de novo on the papers filed in the justice's court, judgment by default must be affirmed, on appeal, where the complaint was sufficient, and no motion was made to set aside the default, or for other relief, in the justice's court.—Gage v. Maryatt, 9 Mont. 265, 23 Pac. 337.

[n] (Tex.) The overruling of a motion for a new trial is a prerequisite to an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace.—(1873) Langbein v. State, 37 Tex. 162; (1881) Griffin v. Brown, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1097. CONTRA, see (1885) Masterton v. Conrad, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 753.

[p] (Tex. 1880) Gen. Laws 15th Leg. p. 172, § 3, providing for a motion for a new trial in a justice's court, precludes an appeal to the county court, where no motion for a new trial has been made and overruled in the justice's court.—Howard v. Jenkins, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 68.

[a] (Del. 1843) In an action of assumpsit commenced before a justice of the peace against two persons jointly, but where only one was taken, and judgment recovered against him alone, the court, on appeal, sustained a declaration and verdict against him, without noticing the person originally named as a co-defendant.—Jackson v. Hedges, 4 Har. 96.

[b] (Ill. 1841) In an action against three before a justice of the peace, two only are served with process, and the case is carried up on appeal by the plaintiff, and process from the appellate court is served only on such two. Held, that they only were before the court as defendants.—Wells v. Reynolds, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 191.

[c] (Ill. 1878) Only the persons who were parties to the judgment need be brought before the circuit court on appeal thereto.—Fabbri v. Cunio, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 240.

[d] (Ky. 1868) On appeal to the circuit court, where the action must be tried de novo and the adverse parties be summoned to answer, an indorsement by attorneys, on the appeal bond, that one of the parties entered his appearance, did not make him a party to the appeal.—Wills v. McKee, 5 Ky. Law Rep. 683.

[e] (N. J. 1848) If one of two joint debtors is summoned, and he alone appears and makes defense in the names of both before the justice, he may appeal in the name of both, without summons and severance, if it does not appear positively that his codefendant refuses to join in the appeal.—Pharo v. Parker, 21 N. J. Law (1 Zab.) 332.

[f] (N. Y. 1827) If there be an issue and trial before a justice as to part only of the defendants, the remedy is by appeal by all.—Moody v. Gleason, 7 Cow. 482; People v. Judges of Onondago County, Id. 492.

[g] (Pa. 1843) Where a stakeholder in arbitration proceedings has been sued, and judgment rendered against him, in the alderman's court, he is not bound to appeal, but must allow a party interested to use his name in an appeal, upon security being given to indemnify him against loss.—Deaves v. Brightly, 4 Clark 37.

[h] (W. Va. 1893) In an action against Bert F., a judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace for the amount of plaintiff's claim. An entry in the justice's docket recited that H. H. F. appeared, filed a bond, and asked that an appeal be granted, which was done. The bond recited the appeal as asked by Bert F. His affidavit and that of H. H. F. showed that the latter asked the appeal as agent for the former. Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the appeal was taken by Bert F., through H. H. F.—York v. Free, 38 W. Va. 336, 18 S. E. 492.

[c] (Ind.) If, from the judgment of a justice of the peace against several defendants, some of them appeal to the circuit court in their own names, without joining the others, the appeal should be dismissed on motion.—(1842) Kain v. Gradon, 6 Blackf. 138; (1848) Inhabitants of Congressional Tp. No. 19 v. Clark, 1 Ind. (1 Cart.) 139; (1854) Ebert v. Ludlow, 6 Ind. 29.

[i] (Miss. 1876) Where a judgment is rendered in a justice's court against three defendants jointly, and an affidavit for appeal is made by one, and the bond executed by two, there is not such a want of proper parties to the appeal as would warrant a dismissal by the circuit court.—Roberts v. Weiler, 52 Miss. 299.

[j] (Neb. 1896) One of several defendants having separate and distinct defenses may prosecute an appeal from justice court without joining his codefendants.—Claflin v. American Nat. Bank, 46 Neb. 884, 65 N. W. 1056.

[k] (N. J. 1827) Where judgment is rendered in a justice's court against two defendants, only one of whom defended, he may appeal from such judgment, and for that purpose make use of the other defendant's name.—Sheppard v. Fenton, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 8.

[l] (N. Y. 1854) It is not ground of dismissing an appeal, brought by one of two defendants against whom judgment has been rendered in a justice's court, that both defendants do not unite in the appeal.—Mattison v. Jones, 9 How. Prac. 152.

[m] (Pa. 1815) Where judgment is given before a justice against two defendants, an appeal by one is good, notwithstanding the other comes into court and dissents.—Gallagher v. Jackson, 1 Serg. & R. 492.

[a] (Ill. 1835) Where judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace against two defendants, and one only of them appeals, the case should be docketed against the appellant only in the appellate court.—Mitcheltree v. Sparks, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 198.

[b] (Ky. 1832) Where a joint judgment is rendered by a justice against several defendants, any one of them has the power to appeal to the circuit court, and all defendants are thereby necessarily brought into that court.—Palmer v. Kennedy, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 498.

[c] (Ky. 1839) Under the act of 1831 one or more of several persons against whom a justice has rendered judgment may appeal, with the same effect as though all had united in the appeal.—Clagget v. Blanchard, 38 Ky. (8 Dana) 41.

[d] (Neb. 1896) When the interests of several defendants in an action in justice court are inseparably connected, an appeal by one brings up the entire case.—Claflin v. American Nat. Bank, 46 Neb. 884, 65 N. W. 1056.

[e] (Tex. 1890) Judgment having been entered in a justice's court against a defendant and the sureties on a bond given by him, an appeal by the defendant inures to the benefit of the sureties, though they do not join therein.—McKay v. Irion (App.) 15 S. W. 123.

[a] (Ala. 1877) The action which the charter of Selma allows a purchaser of lands sold for city taxes to institute for the recovery of possession is governed by the general rules applicable to ejectment, or the corresponding statutory action, rather than that for forcible detainer; and, where judgment is rendered in the justice's court against the tenant, the landlord may intervene and appeal.—Ex parte Webb, 58 Ala. 109.

[b] (Mo. 1875) Where one not shown to have any interest in the estate files an affidavit charging another with embezzling the property of a deceased person, the administrator cannot, on appeal of the case to the circuit court, appear there for the first time and file a new affidavit, and compel the party accused to proceed to trial thereon. Such action of the administrator would be the introduction of a new party and a change in the cause of action.—Shaw v. Groomer, 60 Mo. 495.

[c] (Tenn. 1881) Where a garnishee appeals from the justice's judgment against him, it is error for the circuit court to allow the judgment debtor to intervene as a party in the garnishment proceedings. His remedy was to appeal from the judgment.—Cowan v. Lowry, 75 Tenn. (7 Lea) 620.

[d] (Tex. 1886) In an action in justice court by a tenant to recover damages for injury done to his crop, on appeal from the judgment rendered in his favor, the landlord cannot in the county court intervene and claim a portion of the damages by virtue of an undivided interest in the crop injured.—Gulf C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ford, 3 Willson. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 147.

[a] (Cal. 1881) To effectuate an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, three things are necessary, viz., the filing of a notice of appeal with the justice, the service of a copy of the notice upon the adverse party, and the filing of an undertaking; and all these things must be done within 30 days after the rendition of the judgment, and are jurisdictional prerequisites, but the order in which they are done is not material.—Coker v. Colusa County Superior Court, 58 Cal. 177.

[b] (Ga. 1895) Where three cases pending in justice's court between the same parties were consolidated by consent, and tried together, and a judgment was rendered therein, a mere verbal agreement between counsel for both parties that the attorney for the losing party "might appeal by consent" all three cases did not amount to entering an appeal, nor carry the cases to trial as on appeal, though the presiding justice made an entry in his docket of such agreement.—Newman v. State, 97 Ga. 367, 23 S. E. 831.

[c] (Ill. 1840) Where, on appeal from a justice of the peace, the appeal bond was filed in the clerk's office one day before the passage of a law fixing the time of holding courts in Boone county, and the summons to the appellee and the supersedeas were issued afterwards, it was held that the appeal was regularly taken, as the court was in existence at the time the bond was filed, and that the circuit court had jurisdiction.—Scammon v. Cline, 3 Ill. (2 Scam.) 456.

[d] (Ill.) Under the act of 1837 "to provide for the election of probate justices of the peace," appeals from the decisions of such justices may be taken, in all cases not included in the third and fourth sections of that act, in the same manner as before the statute.—(1841) Gibbons v. Johnson, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 61; (1843) Scott v. Crow, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 183.

[e] (Ind. 1876) From the record on appeal it appeared that the cause had been commenced before a justice of the peace; but it was not shown that any judgment had been rendered by the justice, or any appeal taken from his court, nor in what manner the cause reached the circuit court; but it appeared that the parties to the action had appeared in the circuit court, and that an amended complaint and an answer were there filed. Held, that the appeal should be treated as if the cause had originally commenced in the circuit court.—Purdue v. Stevenson, 54 Ind. 161.

[f] (La. 1846) The jurisdiction of the supreme court over appeals from justices of the peace being limited to questions of law, such questions must be brought before the court in the usual mode of bringing questions of law before an appellate court, or the appeal will be dismissed.—Third Municipality v. Hazelbach, 1 La. Ann. 386.

[g] (Mo. 1892) It is essential to the jurisdiction of the appellate court that the appeal was taken in the manner prescribed by law, and where it was not so taken the appellate court has no jurisdiction to proceed to an examination on the merits.—Whitehead v. Cole, 49 Mo. App. 429.

[h] (N. Y. 1877) Code Civ. Proc. § 1303, providing, where the appellant serves notice of appeal on the clerk or adverse party and neglects in other respects to perfect his appeal, the court may permit the omission to be supplied, does not apply to appeals from justice courts.—Roberts v. Davids, 12 Hun, 394.

[i] (Ohio, 1859) Where a case in which the common pleas would have original jurisdiction was brought into that court by appeal from a justice, if the parties proceed to trial upon the merits without objection to the mode in which the jurisdiction was taken, it is too late after verdict to make such an objection.—Bisher v. Richards, 9 Ohio St. 495.

[j] (Ohio, 1896) Where a judgment is rendered by a justice against a defendant not present, and an appeal bond is given by defendant's attorney without authority, which is immediately repudiated by defendant, who instead moves to vacate the judgment, there is no error on the part of the justice in regarding the appeal as a nullity and in entertaining the motion.—Forest City Stone Co. v. French, 4 Ohio Dec. 141, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 69.

[k] (Utah) 2 Comp. Laws 1888, § 5380, providing that appeals from justices of the peace shall not be effectual unless appellant cause the papers to be filed in the district court within 30 days, and section 3027, giving courts of record power to make rules, and section 5459, authorizing the collection from appellant of a jury fee, in jury cases, before his papers are filed, are valid, and within the legislative power of the territory.—(1890) City of Salt Lake City v. Redwine, 6 Utah, 335, 23 Pac. 756; (1891) Legg v. Larson, 7 Utah, 110, 25 Pac. 731.

§ 521. Petition or prayer.

Affidavits for appeals pro forma pauperis, see post, § 551.

Effect of granting appeal as giving the appellate court jurisdiction, see post, § 605.

Prayer for appeal as notice of appeal, see post, § 589.

[a] (Ind. 1842) After an entry of judgment for the plaintiff on a justice's docket, this statement followed, viz.: "On," etc., "comes the defendant, and files an appeal bond, but does not ask an appeal until he further considers the matter." Held that, notwithstanding that statement, the defendant might, on appeal, show by affidavits that the appeal was prayed for when the appeal bond was filed.—Frazer v. Smith, 6 Blackf. 210.

[b] (Ind. 1891) There is no rule of practice authorizing the filing of an answer to an application for an appeal made more than 30 days after the rendition of a judgment by a justice of the peace, after such application has been granted.—Kreite v. Smith, 3 Ind. App. 64, 29 N. E. 174.

[c] (Mass. 1888) On petition to enter in the superior court an appeal from a trial justice, petitioner cannot show by parol evidence that he offered to recognize, or that he offered to deposit with the trial justice, and tender to him, a sufficient sum in lieu of a recognizance, which the justice refused, but must proceed in review.—Handy v. Tibbetts, 145 Mass. 537, 14 N. E. 645.

[d] (Mo. 1829) A party in a justice's court who does not enter his recognizance until after the day of trial does not "pray for an appeal" on such day, within Act Establishing Justices, § 23, requiring a written notice of appeal after such day, if no appeal is prayed for on the day.—Cochran v. Bird, 2 Mo. 141.

[e] (Mo. 1880) Rev. St. §§ 457, 458, do not allow service of a petition for review of a judgment in attachment, rendered by a justice of the peace on publication of notice without service or appearance, to be served upon the attorney of plaintiff. It must be served personally.—Allen v. Singer Mfg. Co., 72 Mo. 326.

[f] (N. J. 1827) If, on the transcript of a justice's docket, duly certified under hand and seal, the justice, on the day after the certificate bears date, makes an indorsement on the back of such transcript "that the defendant appeared, and filed an affidavit, and produced bond, and demanded an appeal," such indorsement is not evidence of the demanding of the appeal, and will not be received by the common pleas.—Bennet v. Kite, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 106.

[g] (N. Y. 1836) The affidavit for an allowance of an appeal from a justice's judgment on the ground of newly-discovered evidence must set forth, not only the testimony and proceedings before the justice, but the substance of the newly-discovered evidence.—People v. Saratoga Common Pleas, 18 Wend. 596.

Allowance of appeal after time for appeal has expired, see post, §§ 531–533.

Failure to pay fees as ground for refusing to grant appeal, see post, § 545.

Liability of justice for refusal to grant appeal, see ante, § 45.

[a] (Ark. 1842) The supreme court may grant a mandamus commanding a justice of the peace to grant an appeal to the circuit court, or show cause, although a rule on the justice to send up the appeal might have been obtained from the circuit court.—Levy v. Inglish, 4 Ark. (4 Pike) 65.

[b] (Ark. 1842) The mere insufficiency of the recognizance offered is not ground for refusing an appeal, by a justice of the peace, without showing a refusal of those to be bound to enter into a sufficient recognizance. The justice is bound to take a recognizance in legal form.—Levy v. Inglish, 4 Ark. (4 Pike) 65.

[c] (Ark. 1844) A mandamus will lie to compel a justice of the peace to grant an appeal in a proper case.—Ex parte Martin, 5 Ark. (5 Pike) 371.

[d] (Ark. 1851) A writ of error was brought on an appeal from a justice of the peace. The error assigned was that no entry was made on the justice's docket and that an appeal was allowed from his judgment. Held that, by the statute of 1846, this was no valid objection; it appearing that the party appealing had on his part complied with all the requirements of the law.—Rapley v. Brown, 12 Ark. (7 Eng.) 80.

[e] (Ill. 1889) The filing of the transcript of the justice with the clerk of the circuit court within 20 days of the rendition of the judgment is a sufficient compliance with the statute, so far as regards the prayer for an appeal.—Hanna v. City of Kankakee, 34 Ill. App. 186.

[f] (Ind. 1838) The filing of the transcript of a record by a justice of the peace in the circuit court is prima facie evidence that an appeal was duly prayed and granted.—Humble v. Williams, 4 Blackf. 473.

[g] (Ind. 1851) A justice of the peace, not being the successor of another justice, but having in his possession the docket of another justice in the cases provided for, cannot grant an appeal from a judgment on such docket, and certify a transcript in the case, until he shall have previously transferred the judgment to his own docket.—Walker v. Prather, 3 Ind. 112.

[h] (Mo. 1895) The provision of Rev. St. § 6340, that no appeal allowed by a justice shall be dismissed for want of affidavit or recognizance, does not apply where no appeal was allowed, and the record shows that, though an appeal was prayed, the justice merely certified to the record, without allowing the appeal.—Moulder & Simpson v. Anderson, 63 Mo. App. 34, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 588.

[i] (N. J. 1833) In granting, or refusing to grant, an appeal, a justice acts judicially, and is to decide whether an appeal lies, whether it is claimed in due time, and as to the form of the appeal bond.—Tichenor v. Hewson, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 26.

[k] (N. Y. 1832) An appeal from a justice of the peace may be allowed by a commissioner, though he do not reside in the county where the judgment was rendered.—People v. Rensselaer Common Pleas, 7 Wend. 533.

[l] (Pa. 1836) If a justice refuse to permit bail to be entered for an appeal from his judgment, he thereby denies the appeal itself.—Gregor v. Slingluff, 1 Miles, 210.

[m] (Pa. 1888) The court of common pleas has no authority to compel a magistrate to grant an appeal.—Shaffer v. Dohan, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 384.

[n] (Pa. 1896) A petition to the court of common pleas, under Act April 17, 1876, to allow an appeal to that court from a judgment for a penalty, stated that the petitioner was innocent of the offense charged, that the magistrate did not observe the rules of evidence in examining witnesses, and that the representative of the state officer who filed the information did not show sufficient authority; but it did not account for petitioner's nonappearance at the trial. Held, that the court properly refused to allow the appeal.—Commonwealth v. Menjou, 174 Pa. 25, 34 Atl. 301, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. 3.

[o] (Tenn. 1830) Where the proceedings returned by the justice did not show that he granted the appeal, except by the recital in the appeal bond, it was held that the circuit court had not jurisdiction of the case.—Rogers v. Hill, 9 Tenn. (1 Yerg.) 400.

§ 523. Time for prayer or allowance.

[a] (U. S. 1831) It is proper to dismiss an appeal when it does not appear from the record that it was prayed for on the day of trial, or the requisite notice given.—Jacobs v. Jacobs, Fed. Cas. No. 7,161a [1 Hemp. 101].

[b] (Ill. 1874) The law does not require that an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace shall be prayed for at the time the judgment is rendered.—Fix v. Quinn, 75 Ill. 232.

[c] (Ill. 1878) Under Rev. St. 1874, p. 652, § 102, requiring that an appeal should be prayed for on the day of entering judgment on the trial of right of property before a justice, where the record shows that such appeal was not prayed for until three days after rendering judgment, the appeal will be dismissed.—Murphy v. McDonald, 3 Ill. App. (3 Bradw.) 19.

render a judgment therein, although the justice on whom the appeal is served makes a return thereto.—Seymour v. Judd, 2 N. Y. (2 Comst.) 464.

[e] (N. Y. 1860) Under the Code (Laws 1857, c. 723), the allowance of an appeal from a justice can only be made within the time limited by that statute.—Wait v. Van Allen, 22 N. Y. 319.

[c] (Ark. 1860) Where, in an attachment before a justice, the defendant gave a bond to dissolve the attachment, and appeared on the day fixed for trial, and filed a set-off, and consented to a continuance, and, upon trial and hearing of testimony upon the set-off, judgment was rendered against him, defendant had 30 days within which to appeal, under Dig. c. 95, § 86, pt. 2.—Moehring v. Kayser, 21 Ark. 457.

Dig. p. 474, providing that either party dissatisfied with the judgment of a justice of the peace may, within three days, demand an appeal to the circuit court, which shall be granted upon the appellant paying costs and giving bond, the appeal must be perfected within the three days by the actual payment of the costs and the tender of the appeal bond.—Summerlin v. Tyler, 6 Fla. 718.

[g] (Fla. 1893) Under Act June 2, 1887, limiting the time for taking appeals to the circuit court from judgments of justices of the peace to 30 days, no review of such judgments can be had by a writ of error taken after the expiration of the 30 days.—State v. Walker, 32 Fla. 431, 13 South. 928.

[c] (Miss. 1852) After a judgment by a magistrate in favor of the defendants, the plaintiffs appealed to a jury of five, from whose verdict against them they appealed to the circuit court. Held, that the original judgment of the magistrate, not having been appealed from within the five days allowed for that purpose, was still in full force, and that the circuit court had no jurisdiction of the appeal from the jury of five.—Pollard v. Parish, 23 Miss. (1 Cushm.) 573.

Dickinson, 2 Ashm. 224.

[g] (Pa. 1846) A judgment by default was rendered by a justice of the peace against a defendant, who two days afterwards came to the office of the justice and demanded, for reasons assigned, that the judgment should be opened. The justice thereupon fixed a particular day and hour, and notified the plaintiff to appear at the time fixed "to show cause why the judgment should not be opened and a hearing given." At the time appointed the plaintiff appeared, but the defendant did not, whereupon the justice, after waiting two hours, confirmed the judgment as it was. Held, that the 20 days for an appeal, allowed by the statute, was to be computed from the final decision of the action, and not from the time of the rendition of the first judgment; and this, whether the original judgment was confirmed or changed.—Sleck v. King, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 211.

[h] (Pa. 1888) Where judgment by default is entered by a justice of the peace, and a rehearing is granted, an appeal from a judgment thereon must be allowed within 20 days thereafter.—Farra v. Kelly, 3 Del. Co. Ct. R. 421.

[i] (Pa. 1888) The fact that a justice of the peace, on the rehearing of a case before him, found that a set-off, which was set up on such rehearing, did not amount to a valid set-off, did not make the former judgment a final judgment; but the defendant was entitled to the statutory time from the judgment on rehearing.—Farra v. Kelly, 3 Del. Co. Ct. R. 421.

[a] (Fla. 1856) Thomp. Dig. p. 474, which prescribes the time within which appeals from justices' courts to the circuit court may be taken, has reference to the adjournment of the court, and not to the date of the rendition.—Summerlin v. Tyler, 6 Fla. 718.

[b] (Mass. 1858) When a judgment in a police court is actually rendered on the day of the trial, an appeal therefrom must, by Rev. St. c. 85, § 13, be claimed within 24 hours, although terms of the court are established by statute; and, by a rule of the court, judgments are entered as of the last day of the term, unless otherwise ordered.—Welch v. Damon, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 383.

[c] (Mass. 1859) From a judgment upon default in the justices' court of the county of Suffolk, which, by a rule of that court, shall be entered at the adjournment of the court on the same day, unless otherwise ordered, and is in fact actually so entered, an appeal, under Rev. St. c. 85, § 13, and Id. c. 87, § 11, must be taken within 24 hours, although no judgment is entered on the docket until three days afterwards, and an appeal is then taken and allowed by the justices' court.—Gardner v. Dudley, 78 Mass. (12 Gray) 430.

days after the actual rendering of judgment.—Fuchs v. Pohlman, 2 Daly, 210.

[e] (N. Y. 1890) Code Civ. Proc. § 3140, provides that a justice of the peace must keep a docket book in which he must enter the judgment, and section 3046 provides that an appeal must be taken within 20 days after the entry of judgment in the justice's docket. Held, that the time for taking an appeal from the judgment of a justice is to be reckoned from the entry of the judgment in his docket book, and not from the entry in his minutes.—Beuerlein v. Hodges, 57 Hun, 586, 10 N. Y. Supp. 505, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 107.

[f] (N. C. 1893) Code, § 876, providing for an appeal from a justice in 15 days after notice of judgment in cases where "the process is not personally served," applies only in cases where the service is by publication.—King v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 112 N. C. 318, 16 S. E. 929.

[g] (Pa.) Where a case is held under advisement by a justice of the peace, and no day is fixed for entry of judgment, the right of appeal exists for 20 days after notice of entry of judgment.—(1844) Taylor v. Smith, 2 Clark, 318; (1882) Frantz v. Dehart, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 5.

[h] (Pa.) Where a party has no notice of entry of judgment before a justice of the peace, the 20 days allowed for appeal will begin to run at the end of 10 days after final hearing, within which time the justice is required to enter judgment, by Act March 22, 1877.—(1881) Haines v. Townsend, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 146, 12 Lanc. Bar 160; (1884) Imler v. Houser, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 6, 2 Del. Co. Ct. R. 132.

[i] (Pa. 1882) Where the evidence as to the time when notice of the entry of a judgment in a justice's court was given appellant does not clearly and satisfactorily show that the time for appeal has elapsed since such notice, a right of appeal will not be denied.—Frantz v. Dehart, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 5.

[j] (Pa. 1891) Where a justice of the peace reserved his decision until a day and hour certain, and then neglected to render it at that time, one of the parties who went to the office of the justice at the appointed time, and waited there an hour in vain, was justified in assuming that the justice had taken the 10 days allowed by law within which to render his decision, and consequently was not required to give notice of appeal until the expiration of such 10 days, or from date of actual notice of the judgment.—Boyd v. Ward (Com. Pl.) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 9.

[b] (Mich. 1882) Appellees, in an appeal from a justice of the peace, having entered their appearance generally in the circuit court, before a motion to dismiss was made, such appearance was conclusive as to jurisdiction of such court, aside from questions as to whether appeal was taken in time or proper return was made, and that judgment of dismissal should be reversed.—McCombs v. Johnson, 47 Mich. 592, 11 N. W. 400.

[c] (Mo. 1869) When the time allowed for appeal from the justice to the circuit court has expired, the appearance and consent of parties will not give the circuit court jurisdiction of the appeal.—Robinson v. Walker, 45 Mo. 117.

[d] (Pa. 1846) In case of an appeal by a defendant from the judgment of a justice of the peace, it is too late for the plaintiff, after he has filed his declaration, to move the court to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that it was not taken within 20 days.—Sleck v. King, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 211.

[e] (Vt. 1894) The failure of plaintiff to file in the county court an appeal from a justice's judgment within the 21 days allowed by Acts 1892, No. 28, § 18, is waived by the defendant entering a general appearance after filing of the appeal, and then allowing the time allowed for dilatory motions to pass without raising the objection.—Mack v. Lewis, 67 Vt. 383, 31 Atl. 888.

Extension of time for filing appeal bond, see post, § 561.

[a] (Pa. 1853) After the expiration of the 20 days allowed for an appeal, a magistrate cannot, by granting (at the instance of defendant and without plaintiff's consent) a rule to show cause why the judgment should not be opened, secure to defendant another 20 days, from the ultimate decision on the rule, in which to appeal.—Russell v. Smith, 1 Phila. 425.

§ 530. Effect of delay or failure to take proceedings.

[a] (Mich. 1881) Where an appeal from a justice court to the circuit court is not taken within the time prescribed by statute, the circuit court acquires no jurisdiction.—Franks v. Smith, 45 Mich. 326, 7 N. W. 906.

[b] (Miss. 1877) Where appeal is taken from the justice to the circuit court after the time prescribed by statute, judgment rendered by the latter court on such appeal is void.—Kramer v. Holster, 55 Miss. 243.

[c] (Mo. 1877) The circuit court acquires no jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice's judgment not taken in the time prescribed, and an order therein for additional security is a nullity.—Moore v. Damon, 4 Mo. App. 111.

[d] (Mo. 1881) An appeal from a justice of the peace will be dismissed, unless taken within the statutory time for so doing.—Bauer v. Cabanne, 11 Mo. App. 114.

[e] (N. J. 1894) A party who neglects to demand an appeal from a judgment in a court for the trial of small causes, on or before the first day of the term of the common pleas next ensuing, loses his right to appeal; that being the provision of Justice's Court Act, §§ 79, 82, 83.—Lear v. Budd, 56 N. J. Law (27 Vroom) 457, 28 Atl. 800.

[f] (Pa. 1882) An appeal will be stricken off if it be shown that the affidavit therefor was made subsequently to the 20 days allowed therefor.—Reese v. Hetzel, 4 Law T. (N. S.) 217.

[g] (Tenn. 1859) By Code Proc. § 3140, two entire days (exclusive of Sunday) after judgment are allowed for an appeal from a justice's judgment. Held that, after the expiration of the two days, the justice has no jurisdiction to grant an appeal, and the same should be dismissed.—Gilbert v. Driver, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 463.

[h] (Tenn. 1872) Where, from the papers, a case appears to have been appealed four days after the justice's judgment, his affidavit that, according to information and belief, the appeal was granted within the time (two days) allowed by law, will not prevent a dismissal.—Park v. Bybee, 60 Tenn. (1 Baxt.) 267.

[a] (Ind. 1849) An affidavit to procure an appeal from the judgment of a justice, after the expiration of 30 days, under Rev. St. 1843, p. 892, must show that the taking of the appeal in proper season was prevented by unavoidable circumstances, or by improper conduct of the justice or of the appellee.—Thomas v. Littlefield, 1 Ind. (1 Cart.) 361.

[b] (Ind. 1849) An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace may be taken of right within 30 days, and after that time for, among other causes, the improper conduct of the justice rendering the judgment. An affidavit for an appeal after the 30 days had expired stated that the affiant filed an appeal bond within five days after the judgment was rendered, and a few days afterwards was surprised by the issuance of an execution. Held, that the affidavit was insufficient, in not showing that when he filed his bond the justice informed him that it was approved.—Thomas v. Littlefield, Smith, 236.

[c] (Mich. 1870) Under the statute relating to appeals from justices' courts, and providing that such appeals may be authorized after the expiration of five days, where the party has been prevented from taking the appeal by circumstances not under his control, the affidavit for allowance of the appeal must be sworn to.—Calvert v. McNaughton, 2 Mich. N. P. 8.

[d] (Mich. 1873) Where the time has expired for appealing from a justice's judgment, an application to the circuit court for leave to appeal is a special proceeding materially affecting legal rights; and the court can obtain jurisdiction only by personal service of the notice required on the judgment creditor.—McCaslin v. Camp, 26 Mich. 390.

[e] (Mich. 1895) Local Acts 1895, Act No. 460, providing that an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in Detroit may be authorized by the circuit court of Wayne county when a party has been prevented from making a defense on the merits by circumstances not under his control, does not give to the circuit court discretionary power to allow an appeal after the statutory time therefor has elapsed.—Goldhamer v. Lillibridge, 107 Mich. 259, 65 N. W. 97.

[f] (Mo. 1880) If an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace cannot be taken within the 10 days prescribed by law, the justice has no power to allow it after that time. The remedy is by application to the circuit court for mandamus.—Union Savings Ass'n v. Keisker, 8 Mo. App. 232.

[g] (Pa. 1884) Where judgment has been recovered against three joint trespassers before a justice of the peace, and two appealed within time, the court will allow the other to appeal nunc pro tunc, by giving bail; and the appeal of the two will inure to the benefit of the third.—Edsall v. Ford, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 72.

[h] (Pa. 1887) Where an execution has been issued on a judgment of a justice of the peace, and the judgment has been paid by the sale of defendant's personal property to third persons, an appeal will not be allowed to be perfected nunc pro tunc.—Vargason v. Eldred, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 93.

[i] (Pa. 1895) Where defendant appealed from a judgment against him in an action to recover the penalty imposed by Act May 21, 1885 (P. L. 20), prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine, such appeal being taken within the time allowed in actions for debt, but no motion for the allowance of the appeal being made until after such time had elapsed, the court will allow the appeal nunc pro tunc as of the day when it was taken before the magistrate.—Commonwealth v. Swift (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 95.

[j] (W. Va. 1888) One who, after the expiration of 10 days after the justice has rendered a judgment, applies, under Code, c. 56, § 174, to the circuit court, or a judge thereof in vacation, for an appeal, which may be granted for good cause shown, must file his application, and the proofs with it, in writing, including his own or the affidavits of others.—Hubbard v. Yocum, 30 W. Va. 740, 5 S. E. 867.

[a] (Ind. 1851) Ordinarily appeals must be taken from judgments of justices within 30 days, but the circuit court may authorize the taking of an appeal after the expiration of that period, if it be made to appear, by affidavit, that the party wishing to appeal was prevented from taking it within that time, by unavoidable circumstances, or the improper conduct of the appellee or of the justice, and that he has merits in such appeal.—Pruitt v. Shelbyville Lateral Branch R. Co., 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 530.

[b] (Ind. 1857) An affidavit that A. went to the office of a justice to file an appeal bond, with H. as surety; that he prayed an appeal, and was told by the justice that he could not then take the bond; that he, having himself executed an appeal bond, left it with the justice, with an agreement between him, A., and H., that H. would, on the next day, go before the justice and sign the bond; that he, honestly believing that H. had done so, did not go to the justice's office until after the time prescribed by law for taking such bond had elapsed, nor did he know, until after the expiration of that time, of H.'s failure to perform his engagement,—is not sufficient to justify an order of court authorizing an appeal, after the time allowed for taking such appeal has expired.—Welch v. Watts, 9 Ind. 450.

[c] (Mich. 1867) Under Comp. Laws, c. 117, § 194, providing that five days shall be the limit of time allowed for appeal after the rendition of a judgment, and section 190, providing that appeals may be authorized after such time by the circuit court, when the party making the appeal has been prevented from taking the same by circumstances not under his control, if a justice of the peace states that he wishes time to consider the case before rendering his decision, but does not fix a day on which he will render such decision, the parties, being still in court, are bound to inquire once each day if a decision has been reached.—Draper v. Tooker, 16 Mich. 74.

[d] (Mich. 1884) Serious illness of a party's wife is sufficient ground to authorize a circuit court to allow an appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace after the expiration of the statutory period, under How. Ann. St. § 7005, permitting delay caused by circumstances not under a party's control.—Braastad v. Alexander H. Day Iron Min. Co., 54 Mich. 258, 20 N. W. 43.

[e] (Mich. 1885) An appeal from a justice's judgment may properly be allowed by the circuit court, under How. Ann. St. § 7005, where the defeated party relied on his attorneys, and they were honestly mistaken about the date of an adjournment, so that judgment was taken by default, and they did not hear of it until the five days' time for appealing had gone by.—Capwell v. Baxter, 58 Mich. 571, 25 N. W. 493.

[f] (Mo. 1891) Rev. St. 1889, § 6334, provides that "if in any case the justice shall allow an appeal, and certify in his certificate the cause of his failure to allow the same at the proper time, such appeal shall be sustained, when it would have been competent for the court to have or direct the same to be allowed." Held, that where the return of a justice shows that the affidavit and bond for the appeal were filed within the time allowed therefor, but that the justice entered the order allowing the appeal after the expiration of that time because he had failed to satisfy himself within the time as to the sufficiency of the affidavit and bond, the appeal should not be dismissed.—Jester v. McKinney, 47 Mo. App. 62.

[g] (Mo. 1892) Rev. St. § 6333, authorizing the circuit court, in certain cases, to compel a justice of the peace to allow an appeal, does not authorize a rule on the justice to allow an appeal, where it does not appear that the party desiring to appeal made the affidavit required by section 6330, or was prepared to perfect the bond required by section 6328 within the prescribed time; and the fact that he called at the justice's office within such time with the intention of appealing, but failed to find the justice, is insufficient.—Kelm v. Hunkler, 49 Mo. App. 664.

[h] (Neb. 1889) Plaintiff's petition alleged that on the 14th day of February, 1885, he commenced an action before a justice in F. county against defendant for $47 due on final settlement; that defendant appeared and obtained an adjournment until a time when plaintiff was compelled to remove from the county, and that he abandoned the suit, dismissed it, and paid costs; that afterwards defendant, in fraud of plaintiff's right, filed a counterclaim with the justice for $246, and fraudulently obtained a judgment against plaintiff for $199, plaintiff having in the mean time changed his residence to another county; that about one year and a half after rendition of the judgment he was first made aware of its existence by the levy on his property by the sheriff of the county of his residence; that he had a complete defense to the claim of the defendant, and had been damaged by the seizure of his property, and prayed for a decree setting aside the judgment, and general relief, and for judgment for $272. Held, that the facts would not authorize the district court to grant an appeal from the judgment of the justice of the peace four years after its rendition.—Miller v. Camp, 28 Neb. 412, 44 N. W. 486.

[i] (Ohio, 1834) High floods, and inability to find a magistrate, were held not to excuse a neglect to enter an appeal within the first two days of the next term of the common pleas.—Price v. Orange, Wright, 568.

[j] (Pa. 1869) Defendant, appealing from a judgment of a justice, demanded his transcript, which was made out by S. and signed by the justice, S. having promised appellant to take it to him in the country within a few days; but failed to do so, and the appeal was not entered in time. Held that, the justice appearing in no official default, leave to enter the appeal nunc pro tunc would be denied.—Bechtel v. Leinbach, 1 Woodw. Dec. 470.

[k] (Pa. 1871) An appeal from a judgment of an alderman will not be allowed to be filed nunc pro tunc, on the ground that defendant was not summoned, where the record shows that he appeared.—Perkins v. Ward, 1 Leg. Gaz. R. 239.

[l] (Pa. 1880) An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace will not be allowed after 20 days where the delay is the fault of the party appealing.—Butterworth v. Pratt, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 53.

[m] (Pa. 1883) An appeal nunc pro tunc to the court of common pleas from a judgment of an alderman, whether in a case of summary conviction, or to recover a penalty, will not be allowed where no distinct and sufficient cause for appeal is shown.—Board of Health v. Decker (Com. Pl.) 8 Lack. Jur. 173, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 117, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 362.

[n] (Pa. 1886) Where an appeal has been taken from a judgment by an alderman, and the applicant has failed to perfect it, because of sickness of his attorney, he will not be allowed to perfect the appeal after the time allowed by law.—Mason v. Reddington, 4 C. P. Rep. 147.

[o] (W. Va. 1886) Ignorance of the law requiring an appeal from a justice to be taken within 10 days affords no excuse for not taking it, and is not "good cause" for which the circuit court, under the statute, may, within 90 days, permit him to appeal.—Home Sewing Mach. Co. v. Floding, 27 W. Va. 540.

[p] (W. Va. 1888) Defendant, served with summons, though residing out of the state, wrote and mailed a letter to counsel in the state, requesting him to take an appeal if judgment were rendered against him. The letter was never received. Defendant, though living only half a day's journey from the justice, made no further inquiry about the matter. Held, that under Code, c. 50, § 174, permitting the circuit court to grant an appeal after the regular 10 days, for good cause shown, he should not have been granted an appeal.—Hubbard v. Yocum, 30 W. Va. 740, 5 S. E. 867.

[q] (W. Va. 1888) The fact that a party has neglected to attend to an action before a justice, or to take an appeal within 10 days after said judgment, because of his absence from home, attending to his ordinary business, is not a good cause for granting such appeal by a circuit court.—Hubbard v. Yocum, 30 W. Va. 740, 5 S. E. 867.

[r] (W. Va. 1888) The good cause for not having taken an appeal from a justice within 10 days, which is required by Code, c. 50, § 174, must be such as would authorize a court of equity, if the suit had been in the circuit court, to enjoin a judgment till a new trial of the case could be had, when a party had failed to apply to the common-law court during the term for a new trial.—Hubbard v. Yocum, 30 W. Va. 740, 5 S. E. 867.

[s] (Wis. 1885) The mere fact that the appellee in an appeal from a justice's judgment expressed a desire to settle the case, and talked to the appellant about a settlement, affords the appellant no excuse for failing to do what is necessary to the perfecting of the appeal.—Comdohr v. Coleman, 64 Wis. 413, 25 N. W. 422.

§ 533. —— Absence or fault of justice.

Time of absence of justice as part of time limited to take appeal, see ante, § 525.

[a] (Ind. 1891) On a motion asking to be allowed to appeal from a judgment rendered nine years before by a justice of the peace, defendant alleged that at the time of the rendition of the judgment she was a resident of Kentucky, and was visiting in Indiana; that while there she was served with a summons to appear before a justice of the peace; that at the hour for trial she went to his office, and said she had come in obedience to the summons, and that she wanted to get back as soon as possible to her sick baby; that the justice said that plaintiff had paid the costs and dropped the suit, and that she need not stay; that she believed the suit was dismissed, and did not know that a judgment had been rendered against her until the sheriff served an execution nine years after; that she was not at the time of the rendition of the judgment, or at any time, indebted to plaintiff; and that if she had known of the judgment she would have appealed within the time allowed by law. Held, that an appeal was properly allowed, under Rev. St. 1881, § 1503, which provides that the circuit court may, after the expiration of 30 days, grant an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace when a party has been prevented from taking the same by circumstances not under his control.—Kreite v. Smith, 3 Ind. App. 64, 29 N. E. 174.

[b] (Mich. 1894) The absence from his residence by the justice rendering a judgment is no ground to permit a dilatory appeal, under How. Ann. St. § 7005, authorizing such appeal where appellant has been prevented from taking it by circumstances not under his control, as section 7006 provides that in case of such absence the affidavit and bond may be served on any member of the justice's family, of suitable age, and the costs and fees paid to such member.—Combs v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 99 Mich. 234, 58 N. W. 71.

[c] (Mo. 1838) That the absence of the justice from home during the 10 days after trial may be a good excuse for not appealing, it must appear that he was absent during the whole of the 10 days.—Holt v. Varner, 5 Mo. 386.

[d] (Pa. 1831) A party ready and willing to comply with the prerequisites to an appeal cannot be deprived of his right by the willful or accidental omission of the justice. An appeal, in such case, may be filed nunc pro tunc.—Louderback v. Boyd, 1 Ashm. 380.

[e] (Pa. 1838) Where a justice of the peace has been absent from the county, or confined by sickness, and was unable to receive an appeal tendered within the 20 days, or has refused to receive it, where the party was entitled to it an appeal nunc pro tunc will be allowed, if prompt application be made to the court, although the 20 days may have expired.—Read v. Dickinson, 2 Ashm. 224.

[f] (Pa. 1880) Where an appeal was taken from a judgment of a justice of the peace more than 20 days after the judgment, it will not be allowed if the fault is that of the appellant, though a statement of the justice may have misled him as to the time of appeal.—Butterworth v. Pratt, 12 Lanc. Bar, 71.

[g] (Pa. 1882) Where a defendant in a judgment of a justice is prevented from completing his appeal within a proper time by the action of the justice, the court will allow it to be entered nunc pro tunc.—Sollenberger v. Heisker, 2 Leg. Rec. Rep. 368.

[gg] (Pa. 1886) Where an appellant, without fault on his part, has been prevented from appealing by the act of the justice, an appeal will be allowed nunc pro tunc, if asked for in a reasonable time.—McIlhaney v. Holland, 111 Pa. 634, 5 Atl. 731.

[h] (Pa. 1890) Where a justice interferes to prevent an appeal by demanding costs, and dissuading appellant's intended surety on appeal from becoming such, an appeal will be allowed, though the time within which it might be taken has elapsed.—Horton v. Douglass (Com. Pl.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 192.

[i] (Pa. 1890) Where a party is prevented from obtaining an appeal from the judgment of a justice within the prescribed 20 days, by the absence of the justice from his office, an order may be afterwards entered nunc pro tunc, allowing the appeal.—Voorhis v. O'Malley (Com. Pl.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 193.

[j] (W. Va. 1889) The refusal of a justice to grant an appeal from his judgment in a proper case is sufficient cause for failure to take the appeal within the statutory time, and for the granting of such appeal by the judge of the circuit court upon the petition of the party aggrieved stating such refusal of the justice.—Lowther v. Davis, 33 W. Va. 132, 10 S. E. 20.

[k] (W. Va. 1895) It was no ground for granting an appeal within 90 days after date of the judgment, under the statute, that the party did not take his appeal within the prescribed 10 days, for the reason that the justice promised him to prepare a bond and bring it to his place of business for execution, and that he hence paid no further attention to the matter.—Powell v. Miller, 41 W. Va. 371, 23 S. E. 557.

[a] (Ark. 1875) Under Gantt's Dig. § 3811, no appeal can be allowed by a justice unless the appellant, or some person for him, shall make and file with the justice an affidavit that the appeal is not taken for delay, but that justice may be done.—Garrison v. Nelson, 30 Ark. 394.

[b] (Conn. 1870) The act of July 30, 1868, with regard to appeals from justices of the peace to the superior court, repeals, by implication, the second section of the act of July 11, 1867, requiring the defendant, in cases appealed by him, to file an affidavit that he believes he has a good defense, and that he takes the appeal in good faith.—Werner v. Phelps, 36 Conn. 357.

[c] (Ind. 1874) The defendant in a judgment rendered upon a delivery bond before a justice of the peace cannot appeal from such judgment without first filing an affidavit, in accordance with the statute (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 604, § 90), that he has merits in such appeal; and the fact that the execution by which the property named in the bond was levied upon was improperly or illegally issued is no ground for dispensing with such affidavit.—Hughes v. Jackson, 48 Ind. 296.

necessary to perfect the appeal.—Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mich. (Man.) 156.

[e] (Mo. 1884) An affidavit is essential to give to the circuit court jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice's court.—Myers v. Woolfolk, 8 Mo. 348.

[f] (Pa.) Under Act April 20, 1876, regulating appeals from a judgment of justice of the peace and alderman, in actions for wages of manual labor, a defendant must make an affidavit that such appeal was not intended for the purpose of delay.—(1878) Schneider v. Hess, 10 Lanc. Bar, 99; (1878) Rafferty v. McKeeby, 11 Lanc. Bar, 150; (1886) Davidson v. Markley, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 594; (1892) Flegel v. Dotterer (Com. Pl.) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 156.

[g] (Pa. 1878) To bring an appeal within the provisions of the act relating to causes for wages for manual labor, the transcript is sufficient, if it appear, taking the transcript all together, that the claim is for manual labor.—Murrey v. Todd, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 51.

[h] (Pa. 1880) Where the transcript on an appeal from a justice of the peace showed a judgment for plaintiff for labor performed, and the defendant, in taking the appeal, did not make the affidavit or give bail, as required by the act of 1876 in cases of manual labor, and on the hearing of the motion testimony was heard which showed that the judgment was for manual labor alone, the appeal must be stricken.—Mee v. Kurtz, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 63.

[i] (Pa. 1882) An executor or administrator, sued in his representative capacity before a justice of the peace for the wages of manual labor, may appeal without filing the affidavit and entering security required of appellants generally.—Koontz's Adm'r v. Howsare, 100 Pa. 506.

[j] (Pa. 1883) Where, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, the transcript certified that the judgment was for "work and labor don on farme," it did not appear that the claim was for "wages for manual labor," within Act 1876, in reference to appeals.—Womelsdorf v. Heifner, 104 Pa. 1.

[k] (Pa. 1885) In order to require the bail and the affidavit made necessary by Act April 26, 1876, the transcript from the justice's record must show that the action was for wages for manual labor.—Worrich v. Slate Co., 1 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 158.

[l] (Pa. 1886) Where a defendant in a suit before a justice of the peace fails to make the affidavit for appeal required by Loc. Act Feb. 28, 1870 (P. L. 269), his appeal will be struck off.—Cressman v. Bossing, 9 Atl. 191.

[m] (Pa. 1886) Where the transcript of an alderman shows a claim for work and labor done and materials furnished, the affidavit that the appeal was not taken for delay, as required by Act March 2, 1868, and Gen. Act April 20, 1876, will not be required in order to entitle defendant to appeal.—Eastman v. O'Neill, 4 Lanc. Law Rev. 314.

[n] (Pa. 1886) Where defendant in a suit before a justice of the peace appeals, but refuses to give the affidavit and bail required by Act April 20, 1876, though his attention is called to such requirement, the appeal will be stricken off.—Davidson v. Markley, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 594.

[o] (Pa. 1888) To require the affidavit and security on an appeal from a judgment of the justice of the peace, under Act April 9, 1872, and Act April 20, 1876, it must appear, either in the claim filed or from the transcript, that the judgment was rendered for the wages of manual labor.—McElrath v. Foust, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 653.

[p] (Pa. 1888) Where the transcript on appeal from an alderman shows simply that plaintiffs' claim is for labor done by their son for defendant, and the kind of labor is not indicated, nor is there any allegation on the record that defendant is one of the classes of debtors enumerated in Act April 9, 1872 (Purd. Dig. pp. 1698, 1699), providing a lien for moneys due for labor and services rendered by any miner, mechanic, laborer, or clerk, from "any person or persons or chartered company employing clerks, miners," etc., "either as owners, lessees, contractors, or underowners of any works, mines, manufactory," etc., there is nothing to justify the court of common pleas in holding that the case is within that act, and in dismissing the appeal because not perfected as actions under the first section of the act are required to be.—Ely v. Stanton, 120 Pa. 532, 14 Atl. 441.

[q] (Pa. 1892) Where an appellant, having done everything else that was required, was misled by the justice to omit to file an affidavit, an appeal will be allowed.—McCarty v. Killian (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 49.

[r] (Pa. 1894) A claim described as on "a contract for work and labor done and performed as carpenter" does not appear to be "for wages of manual labor," so as to require defendant, appealing from a justice's judgment therefor, to make affidavit that his appeal is not for delay, but that he believes injustice has been done him. Act April 20, 1876, § 1 (Purd. Dig. p. 1699).—Glahn v. Peeler (Com. Pl.) 7 Kulp, 284.

[s] (Pa. 1896) To entitle an appellee to the benefits of Act Feb. 25, 1870, regulating appeals from justices in the county of Luzerne, in actions for wages for work done within the county, and requiring an affidavit that the appeal was not taken for purpose of delay, the transcript must show that the work and labor sued for were done within such county.—Reber v. Peerless Mfg. Co. (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 258.

[t] (Tex. 1857) A party wishing to revise the decision of a justice overruling a motion for a continuance must file the statute affidavit, even though the justice requires a different one, which he had no right to require, and which the party could not furnish.—Bodman v. Harris, 20 Tex. 31.

[u] (Wis. 1854) In all cases of appeal from the judgment of a justice, if the requirements of the statute (Rev. St. c. 88, § 228) be not complied with, by filing the affidavit and recognizance in the manner and within the time prescribed, the appellate court should dismiss the appeal. The act of March 24, 1852, does not extend to cases of appeal from justices.—Pelton v. Town of Blooming Grove, 3 Wis. 310.

[v] (Wis. 1894) The circuit court acquires no jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice where no affidavit that it was taken in good faith was presented to the justice, as required by Rev. St. § 3754.—Knapp v. Seyler, 87 Wis. 165, 58 N. W. 248.

§ 535. Time for filing.

[a] (Kan. 1896) Both the written statement and the affidavit required by the statute for an appeal by a municipality from the judgment of a justice of the peace must be filed within 10 days after rendition of the judgment, and a failure to file either within that time will require a dismissal of the appeal.—Board of County Com'rs of Rawlins Co. v. Beals, 2 Kan. App. 313, 43 Pac. 95.

[b] (Mo. 1836) The affidavit and recognizance to prosecute an appeal must be filed before the appeal is granted.—Filley v. Walls, 4 Mo. 271.

[c] (Mo. 1842) The affidavit required to be made by the party appealing from a judgment of a justice of the peace may be filed in the circuit court after the motion to dismiss is made.—Jamison v. Yates, 7 Mo. 571.

[d] (N. J. 1822) On an appeal from a justice's judgment it should appear on the transcript of the justice's docket that an affidavit that the appeal was not intended for delay, etc., was filed with the justice at the time of filing the appeal bond, as required by Supplement to Small Cause Act Nov. 23, 1821, § 6.—Anonymous, 6 N. J. Law (1 Halst.) 230.

[e] (N. J. 1827) On an appeal from the judgment of a justice, founded on a report of referees, the affidavit required by the statute of November, 1821, must be filed with the justice at the time of filing the appeal bond. Presenting a bond to the justice one day and affidavit at a subsequent day, though prior to the next court to which the appeal must be made, is not sufficient.—Coleman v. Warne, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 290.

[f] (N. Y. 1830) A party is not entitled to an appeal, unless the affidavit on which its allowance is asked is made within 10 days after rendition of judgment.—People v. Hayden, 4 Wend. 203.

[g] (Pa. 1872) Under Act March 2, 1868, requiring an affidavit, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, that the appeal is not taken for delay, the affidavit need not be filed at the same time as the appeal.—Morton v. Blank, 4 Lanc. Bar, No. 28, p. 2.

§ 536. Service of affidavit.

[a] (N. Y. 1853) The affidavits on appeal, which are relied on to show error in fact, should be served on the respondent.—Hurd v. Beeman, 8 How. Prac. 254.

§ 537. Formal requisites.

[a] (Ark. 1861) The omission of the affiant's signature does not invalidate the affidavit required by Gould's Dig. c. 99, § 180, which prescribes that the appellant "shall make and file with the justice an affidavit that the appeal is not taken for the purpose of delay."—Gill v. Ward, 23 Ark. 16.

[b] (Ark. 1895) Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 4438, which provides that appeals from justices shall not be dismissed "for any defect in the affidavit or obligation for the appeal," it is error to dismiss because the affidavit on appeal has no venue.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Deane, 60 Ark. 524, 31 S. W. 42.

[c] (Mich. 1872) An affidavit for an appeal from a justice's court, sworn to before any other officer than the justice, is of no avail unless the jurat is signed by such officer; but, where a person desiring to appeal has sworn to the proper affidavit before the justice himself, he has done all that can be required of him in that regard, and the neglect of the justice to sign the jurat cannot prejudice the rights of the appellant.—Dickinson v. Simondson, 25 Mich. 113.

[d] (Minn. 1876) An affidavit supporting an appeal from a justice of the peace must show upon its face that it was taken before a proper officer.—Knight v. Elliott, 22 Minn. 551.

[e] (Miss. 1874) Where the statute requires an affidavit to be made by one praying an appeal from a justice's court, the certificate of the justice that the statutory affidavit was made is sufficient evidence of that fact, although the affidavit was not signed.—Brooks v. Snead, 50 Miss. 416.

[f] (N. J.) The affidavit of the appellant that the appeal was not taken for delay, and that appellants have a just and legal defense to the suit, must conform strictly to the statute; but the exact words of the statute need not be adopted.—(1830) Engle v. Blair, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 339; (1834) Schenck v. Ayers, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 311; (1834) New Brunswick Steamboat & Canal Transp. Co. v. Baldwin, Id. 440.

[g] (N. J.) An affidavit to support an appeal cannot be indorsed upon the bond. If it is, the appeal should not be entertained.—(1835) Freas v. Jones, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 20; (1836) Dilkes v. Browning, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 471.

[gg] (N. J. 1837) Where the affidavit made and filed in a justice's court, on appealing to the court of common pleas, in an action of trespass on the case, is entitled "In debt," the appeal must be dismissed, because there was no such action pending.—Dunham v. Rappleyea, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 75.

[h] (N. J. 1837) Under a statute providing that a party demanding an appeal from a justice's judgment shall file with the justice an affidavit made by himself, stating, etc., an affidavit stating the necessary facts, sworn to and acknowledged before a notary, though not subscribed by the affiant, is sufficient.—Garrard v. Hitsman, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 124.

[i] (N. Y. 1845) A party, intending to appeal to the common pleas from a judgment of a justice of the peace, procured the allowance of an appeal to be indorsed by a proper officer upon a paper purporting to be an affidavit, and served the same upon the justice who rendered the judgment, complying, at the same time, with the other requirements of the statute respecting appeals; but the jurat to the affidavit was not subscribed by any officer. Held, that no appeal was perfected.—Ladow v. Groom, 1 Denio, 429.

[j] (Wis. 1856) An affidavit for appeal need not be regularly entitled, of the cause and court.—Kearney v. Andrews, 5 Wis. 23; Bremer v. Kœnig, Id. 156.

[k] (Wis. 1856) The affidavit required by Rev. St. § 228, which provides that "the appellant, or some person for him, must make an affidavit stating that the appeal is made in good faith," etc., an affidavit attached to the recognizance, although not entitled in the case, is good by its relation to the recognizance.—Kearney v. Andrews, 5 Wis. 23; Bremer v. Koenig, 5 Wis. 156.

[l] (Wis. 1879) On appeal from a justice's court, a paper in the form of the statutory affidavit of appeal, purporting to be made by appellant, was returned by the justice with his certificate that it was subscribed and sworn to before him. It was not in fact subscribed, and there was nothing to show that the appellant's name in the body of it was in his own handwriting. He appeared to have signed the notice of appeal and the undertaking to stay execution on the same sheet with the affidavit. Held, that the affidavit was insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the circuit court.—Wright v. Fallon, 47 Wis. 488, 2 N. W. 1120.

[m] (Wis. 1881) An affidavit given under Rev. St. § 3754, requiring "an affidavit" that an appeal from a justice's court is made in good faith, is insufficient unless signed by the affiant at the foot thereof, although he may have written his own name in the body of the affidavit.—Schuster v. Haight, 53 Wis. 290, 10 N. W. 511, distinguishing Lederer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. (1875) 38 Wis. 244.

[n] (Wis. 1884) An affidavit of appeal is defective which is so uncertain that perjury could not be assigned against one of the parties to it, because it sets up that only one of the parties was duly sworn, although the jurat certifies that both subscribed and swore to it.—Morris v. Brewster, 60 Wis. 229, 19 N. W. 50.

§ 538. —— Who may make and take affidavit.

[a] (Iowa, 1870) An attorney for plaintiff in error may properly make out the affidavit for the writ.—Dixon v. Brophey, 29 Iowa, 460.

[b] (Mich. 1883) Under Comp. Laws, § 5453, providing that "no appeal [from a justice] shall be dismissed on the ground of a defective affidavit, nor because the same does not conform to the provisions of this chapter: provided, the appellant, his agent or attorney, shall make an affidavit which shall conform to said provisions,"—an appeal should not be peremptorily dismissed on the ground that the affidavit for the appeal was sworn to before a notary who was an attorney in the case, though Pub. Acts 1877, p. 3, declares it unlawful for notaries to administer oaths in such cases.—Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Mich. 100, 16 N. W. 250.

[c] (Minn. 1870) Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 104, does not require, and it is not necessary, that an affidavit for appeal be sworn to before the justice from whom the appeal is taken.—Rahilly v. Lane, 15 Minn. 447 (Gil. 360).

[d] (Mo. 1841) A party appealing from the judgment of a justice of the peace, under the statute of 1839, must make the affidavit in person, and cannot do so by attorney.—Papin v. Howard, 7 Mo. 34.

[e] (N. J. 1833) The affidavit required by Act Nov. 23, 1821, § 23, providing that on appeal from a justice the appellant shall file an affidavit that the appeal is not intended for delay, must, prior to the statute of February, 1834, have been "made before the justice who tried the cause."—Munn v. Merry, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 183.

[f] (Pa. 1887) On an appeal by a city from the judgment of an alderman for the wages of manual labor, the city solicitor is the proper party to make the affidavit required by Act April 20, 1876.—Gamble v. City of Lebanon, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 594.

[g] (Wis. 1884) An affidavit for an appeal from a justice's judgment, purporting to be made by appellant's attorney, will be presumed to have been authorized by appellant.—Smith v. Ormsby, 61 Wis. 13, 20 N. W. 656.

§ 539. Essentials and sufficiency of affidavit.

[a] (Ark. 1843) An affidavit that an appeal "is not taken for the purpose of delay, but that justice may be done," is sufficient to support an appeal from a justice of the peace.—Underwood v. Wylie, 5 Ark. (5 Pike) 248.

[b] (Cal. 1862) Appeal was taken to the supreme court from a justice's decision upon a case submitted upon an agreed statement of facts. Instead of the affidavit required by Prac. Act, § 377, the record only showed an allegation in the agreed statement on appeal that the case was heard below on an agreed statement, "and the affidavit of the defendant that the controversy was real." Held, that this was fatally defective, and the appeal was dismissed.—Mellois v. Chaine, 20 Cal. 679.

[c] (Ind. 1859) The affidavit, in case of an appeal from the judgment of a justice, in a suit upon a forfeited delivery bond, must set forth facts so as to show that his case has merits.—Harding v. Mansur, 13 Ind. 454.

[d] (Iowa, 1857) An affidavit of facts for appeal is sufficient, unless controverted by the return of the justice of the peace, and the appellant should be granted a new trial.—Miller v. State, 4 Iowa (4 Clarke) 505.

[e] (Iowa, 1870) An affidavit for a writ of error to reverse the judgment of a justice, setting aside a default, need not allege that plaintiff resisted the motion to set aside.—Dixon v. Brophey, 29 Iowa, 460.

[f] (Mich. 1849) An affidavit for an appeal from the judgment of a justice, under the act of 1845, made by the attorney of the party, and stating that plaintiff recovered five dollars more than was justly and honestly his due, as deponent believes from the facts and evidence in the cause, they having been fully communicated to him, was held sufficient.—Austin v. Strong, 1 Mich. (Man.) 259.

[g] (Mich. 1858) Where the affidavit on which an appeal from a justice is based is general, and relates only to the merits, matters connected with process, or any question arising upon it, cannot be corrected by a retrial on the merits in the appellate court. To raise those questions there, the affidavit should set them forth specially. If no motion is made below as to the warrant, the defendant can avail himself of an objection to it only by certiorari.—Chappee v. Thomas, 5 Mich. 53.

[h] (Minn. 1870) An affidavit and notice of appeal from a justice of the peace are not invalidated by a mistake in reciting the date of the judgment from which the appeal is taken. —Rahilly v. Lane, 15 Minn. 447 (Gil. 360).

[i] (Miss. 1874) An affidavit for appeal from a justice's court, sued out within the time prescribed by the statute, alleged that "the appeal prayed in the above-stated case is not made to vex, harass, or oppress the said plaintiff, but that justice may be done." Held, that the omission of the word "delay" from the statutory form did not defeat the object and purpose of the appeal.—White v. Shumate, 50 Miss. 130.

[j, k] (Miss. 1877) An affidavit for an appeal to the circuit court from a justice's court, averring that the appeal is prosecuted in order that justice may be done, is sufficient, although omitting to state that it is not taken for delay. —Coppock v. Smith, 54 Miss. 640.

[l] (N. J. 1842) Where the judgment was for the defendant in the small cause court, an affidavit by the plaintiff that "he has a just and legal cause of action upon the merits of the case" is sufficient to support an appeal.—Hamilton v. Pidcock, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 435.

[m] (N. J. 1875) An affidavit filed for appeal from a judgment in a justice's court on the verdict of a jury in these words, "The defendant verily believes that he hath a just and legal defense to make upon the merits of the appeal," etc., is sufficient.—Snover v. Tinsman, 38 N. J. Law (9 Vroom) 210.

[n] (Wis. 1855) An affidavit on appeal from a justice of the peace that the appeal was not taken for delay is sufficient, where signed by the appellant, though it does not state in it that the affiant is the appellant.—Cady v. Anson, 4 Wis. 223.

§ 540. —— Particular statutory requirements.

[a] (Iowa, 1847) The affidavit for an appeal from a justice of the peace to the district court must be in the language prescribed by the statute; hence it is not sufficient to swear that "injustice has been done by the verdict," but the affidavit must state that it has been done by the "verdict and judgment."—Cook v. United States, 1 G. Greene, 39.

[b] (Mo. 1892) An affidavit for an appeal from a justice's court, which fails to state whether the appeal is from the merits, or from an order or judgment taxing costs, as required by Rev. St. 1889, § 6330, is insufficient; and, if not amended, the appeal will be dismissed.—Spencer v. Beasley, 48 Mo. App. 97; Whitehead v. Cole, 49 Mo. App. 428.

[c] (Mo.) Failure of an affidavit for appeal from a justice's court to state whether the appeal is from a judgment on the merits or from an order taxing costs is not a jurisdictional defect.—(1893) Watson v. Barbee, 55 Mo. App. 147; (1894) Welsh v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., Id. 599; (1894) Draper v. Farris, 56 Mo. App. 417; (1894) Crawford v. Armstrong, 58 Mo. App. 214.

[d] (Mo. 1894) Rev. St. § 6330, requires that an affidavit for an appeal from a justice of the peace shall, inter alia, state whether the "appeal is from the merits or from an order or judgment taxing costs." Held, that an affidavit of appeal from a justice's judgment, both on a plea in abatement and on the merits, which stated that the "appeal is taken from the judgment rendered on the plea in abatement and in the cause," was insufficient.—Greischar v. Alexander, 56 Mo. App. 56.

[e] (N. Y. 1848) On appeal the judgment must be stated in the affidavit of appellant.—Davis v. Lounsbury, 1 Code Rep. 71.

[f] (N. Y. 1848) The failure to aver in an affidavit on appeal that the affidavit contains a statement of the substance of the testimony and proceedings before the justice is not fatal to the appeal; but respondent, if dissatisfied, may serve a counter affidavit.—Mulford v. Decker, 1 Code Rep. 71.

[g] (N. Y. 1849) Under Code, § 303, on an appeal from a justice court, the affidavit of the appellant must set forth the grounds on which the appeal is founded.—Thompson v. Hopper, 1 Code Rep. 103.

[h] (N. Y. 1849) An affidavit to support an appeal from a justice must, under the Code of Procedure, point out distinctly the ground on which he alleges there is error in the judgment.—Williams v. Cunningham, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 632.

[i] (N. Y. 1850) Under Code, § 303, on appeal from a justice court, the appellant's affidavit must state, or purport to state, the substance of all the testimony and proceedings of the court below, or the appeal will be dismissed.—Brown v. Stearns, 2 Code Rep. 119.

[j] (N. Y. 1885) Upon appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, entered on default, an affidavit of appellant "that manifest injustice has been done deponent, in this: that said judgment ought not to have been for more than $37.63 with costs, instead of the sum of $200 and costs, as it now stands,"—alleges mere conclusions, and not facts, and is insufficient to show that manifest injustice has been done.—Bates v. Gorman, 8 Civ. Proc. R. 180.

[k] (N. Y. 1885) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3064, upon appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, entered on default, the appellant's affidavit for appeal must show a satisfactory excuse for his default, and also show facts from which it will appear that manifest injustice has been done.—Bates v. Gorman, 8 Civ. Proc. R. 180.

[m] (Pa. 1872) Under Act March 2, 1868, requiring an affidavit, on the appeal from a justice of the peace, that "the appeal was not taken merely for delay," the absence of the word "merely" does not render the affidavit insufficient.—Morton v. Blank, 4 Lanc. Bar, No. 28, p. 2.

[n] (Pa. 1887) Gen. Act April 20, 1876, relating to appeals from justices of the peace, does not repeal Act Feb. 28, 1870; and hence an affidavit in conformity with the act of 1876 is not sufficient, but the affidavit must comply with the provisions of the act of 1870.—Burns v. Johnson, 4 C. P. Rep. 173.

[o] (Pa. 1895) Under Act Feb. 28, 1870 (P. L. 269), providing the method of appeal from a justice of the peace in actions for labor in Luzerne county, and requiring an affidavit setting forth the amount, if any, admitted to be due plaintiff, defendant's appeal will be stricken off; such statement being omitted from his affidavit, and it not being shown that he was misled by the justice.—McGeehan v. O'Donnell (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 159.

[p] (Wis.) An affidavit on appeal from a judgment of a justice, reciting that "the application for an appeal is made in good faith," is not a compliance with a statute requiring the affidavit to allege that "the appeal is made in good faith."—(1851) Brown v. Pratt, 4 Chand. 32, 3 Pin. 305; (1854) Brearley v. Warren, 3 Wis. 397.

[q] (Wis. 1885) An affidavit that "this appeal is in good faith" is a sufficient compliance with Rev. St. § 3754, requiring an affidavit that "the appeal is 'made' in good faith"; and, if the affidavit is attached to a properly entitled notice of appeal, it need not itself be entitled in the action.—Filer & Stowell Co. v. Sohns, 63 Wis. 118, 23 N. W. 135.

§ 541. Amendment of affidavit and supplying omitted affidavit.

[a] (Ark. 1879) If a justice omits to sign his name to the jurat to an affidavit for an appeal to the circuit court, he may be compelled to sign it by rule of court.—Guy v. Walker, 35 Ark. 212.

[b] (Ark. 1885) An imperfect affidavit for an appeal, made by one partner before a justice, may be amended in the circuit court by another.—Coleman v. Frauenthal, 46 Ark. 302.

[c] (Ind. 1859) The appellant, from the decision of a justice in a suit on a forfeited delivery bond, will not be allowed to amend his affidavit for appeal in the appellate court.—Harding v. Mansur, 13 Ind. 454.

[d] (Mich. 1872) Where a justice has sent up with his return an affidavit for appeal, which was duly sworn to before him, but to which he neglected to attach his jurat, the circuit court may allow the justice to attach his jurat nunc pro tunc, should he voluntarily appear and do so, or, if not, may make an order for a further return, requiring him officially to certify whether the affidavit had been duly sworn to before him.—Dickinson v. Simondson, 25 Mich. 113.

[e] (Miss. 1874) Where an affidavit for an appeal from a justice's court does not substantially comply with the statute, the court, upon application, should allow the party to amend it, provided the application to amend is made within a reasonable time.—White v. Shumate, 50 Miss. 130.

[f] (Miss. 1880) A justice of the peace, who has neglected to date and sign an affidavit for an appeal, should be permitted to affix the date and his signature in the circuit court, on motion to dismiss.—Green v. Boon, 57 Miss. 617.

[g] (Mo.) An affidavit for appeal from a justice's court, which does not state whether the appeal is from the merits or matter of costs, confers jurisdiction on the circuit court, and may be amended before a motion to dismiss is passed on.—(1893) Watson v. Barbee, 55 Mo. App. 147; (1894) Welsh v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., Id. 599.

[h] (N. J. 1830) If the appellant neglect to file with the justice, at the time of demanding the appeal, the affidavit required by the statute, and, after the appeal is returned, he obtain leave to file a new appeal bond, he will not be suffered to supply the omission of the affidavit by adding it to the new bond.—Parke v. Hunt, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 82.

[i] (Pa. 1884) Where an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, on a claim for manual labor, is taken in good faith, and within the time prescribed by law, the court will, on proper and timely application, allow the requisite affidavit to be filed and a defective recognizance to be perfected.—Thomas v. Pyle, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 295.

[j] (Pa. 1887) Where, in an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, an affidavit that the appeal was not taken for delay was defective, under the provisions of the act of 1870, the applicant will be permitted to perfect his appeal by filing the required affidavit.—Burns v. Johnson, 4 C. P. Rep. 173.

[k] (Pa. 1887) Where an appeal has been taken without the filing of an oath that the appeal was not intended for delay, the appeal will not be dismissed, but the appellant will be allowed to file such affidavit.—Lesch v. Turnpike Co., 1 Wilcox, 195.

[m] (Wyo. 1892) Code, § 2501, provides that the court may, before or after judgment, in furtherance of justice, amend any proceeding by adding the name of a party, or by correcting a mistake. Laws 1890, p. 55, § 7, provides that district courts may allow amendments to the record. Held, that where an affidavit for appeal from a justice's court had been sworn to, but by inadvertence the signatures of the affiant and the officer administering the oath were omitted, the district court properly allowed the affidavit to be amended by inserting such signatures.—Redman v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 3 Wyo. 678, 29 Pac. 88.

§ 542. Waiver of want of or defects in affidavits.

[a] (Ark. 1858) An affidavit of appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court is a prerequisite to the granting of the appeal, which is not waived by submitting to a trial on the merits in the circuit court.—Merrill v. Manees, 19 Ark. 647.

[b] (Ark. 1894) Plaintiff, by going to trial on an appeal by defendants from a justice court, waives the failure of one of the defendants to file an appeal affidavit.—Elder v. Crabtree, 59 Ark. 177, 26 S. W. 817.

[c] (Mich. 1884) An appellant's failure to sign an affidavit for an appeal from a justice's decision may be waived by the appellee by appearing and noticing the case for trial.—Hamilton v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 52 Mich. 409, 18 N. W. 193.

[d] (Mo. 1893) Where a justice grants an appeal in an action for damages to crops, and files the papers in the circuit clerk's office, and the parties go to trial in the circuit court on the merits, objections to the appeal affidavit and to the jurisdiction are waived.—Pearson v. Gillett, 55 Mo. App. 312.

[e] (Mo. 1894) Though the affidavit for appeal from a justice's court be defective, if appellee appears and goes to trial without objection, he waives the defect, and acknowledges the jurisdiction of the circuit court.—Lowry v. Phillips, 57 Mo. App. 232.

(d) PAYMENT OF FEES OR COSTS.

NECESSITY OF PAYMENT AND EFFECT OF FAILURE TO PAY, § 543.
PARTIES REQUIRED TO PAY AND APPEALS PRO FORMA PAUPERIS, § 544.
TIME FOR PAYMENT AND EXCUSING FAILURE TO PAY IN TIME, § 545.
COSTS AND FEES INCLUDED, § 546.
—— FEES FOR TRANSCRIPT OR RETURN, § 547.
SUFFICIENCY OF PAYMENT OR TENDER AND EVIDENCE OF PAYMENT, § 548.
WAIVER OF PAYMENT, § 549.

§ 543. Necessity of payment and effect of failure to pay.

[a] (Cal. 1855) One of the conditions upon which an appeal is allowed from a justice of the peace is the payment of the costs of the action.—McDermott v. Douglass, 5 Cal. 89.

[b] (Cal. 1856) A justice of the peace may refuse to send up the transcript of a cause tried before him until his fees are paid by appellant; but, if he sends it up without receiving his fees, the fact that they are not paid is no ground for dismissing the appeal.—Bray v. Redman, 6 Cal. 287.

[c] (Cal. 1894) Under St. 1877–78, p. 134, requiring that all fees of a justice of the peace must be paid before he can be compelled to forward any papers on appeal, mandamus will not lie to compel a justice to forward papers on appeal in a civil action until his fees incurred by both parties have been paid.—Webster v. Hanna, 102 Cal. 177, 36 Pac. 421.

[d] (Iowa, 1861) In case of an appeal from the decision of a justice, the judgment below will not be affirmed, for the reason that the docket fee has not been paid by the appellant, provided it has been secured to the satisfaction of the clerk of the court.—Hess v. McConville, 12 Iowa, 190.

[e] (Iowa, 1871) The district court rule providing that, if appellant from justice court fails to pay the docket fee by noon of the second day of the term, appellee may pay the same, and have the case docketed and the judgment affirmed, does not apply where the case was docketed by the clerk without requiring the fee from either party; and in such case appellee is not entitled to an affirmance on motion.—Squires v. Millett, 31 Iowa, 169.

[f] (Md. 1877) The requirement in Act 1867, c. 164, of prepayment of costs before hearing, on appeals from a justice, is to protect the justices and other officers, and not the parties. Such payment is not a prerequisite of the appeal.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Waltemyer, 47 Md. 328.

[g] (Mo. 1852) The St. Louis law commissioner cannot file the papers in a case appealed from a justice of the peace and affirm the judgment for the nonpayment of his fee.—Hunt v. Hernandez, 16 Mo. 170; Boyle v. Skinner, 17 Mo. 246.

[h, i] (Mo. 1856) Where a party appealing from a justice of the peace to the St. Louis land court fails to pay the jury fee and file the transcript, the court may, on appellee filing a transcript and paying the fee, affirm the judgment of the justice.—Harley v. McAuliff, 24 Mo. 85.

[j] (Mo. 1874) Under Wag. St. p. 832, § 17, authorizing a justice to set aside "a judgment of nonsuit, or by default, upon payment of all the costs then accrued," the payment of such costs is not a prerequisite to the right to appeal.—Palmer v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. R. Co., 57 Mo. 249.

[k] (Mo. 1876) Where a motion to set aside a default rendered by a justice of the peace is overruled, the moving party may appeal, though he has failed to pay the costs.—Hooker v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 63 Mo. 449.

[l] (Pa. 1879) Where a payment of costs is a condition precedent to the right of appeal from the judgment of the justice or alderman, an appeal taken without such payment will be stricken.—White v. Martin, 11 Lanc. Bar, 55.

[m] (Pa. 1880) Under Act April 20, 1876, regulating appeals from judgments of justice of the peace for wages of manual labor, a justice of the peace has no right to demand prepayment of the costs as a prerequisite to the affidavit required.—Gainer's Appeal, 11 Lanc. Bar, 135.

[n] (Pa. 1886) On an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the justice is entitled to demand and receive from the appellant the costs in the case, before making out and delivering the transcript for the appeal.—Tiernan v. Manigle, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 96.

[o] (Pa. 1886) Under Loc. Act March 2, 1868, failure to pay the costs on taking an appeal from an alderman is not fatal to the appeal.—Eastman v. O'Neill, 4 Lanc. Law Rev. 314.

[q] (Pa. 1889) Under Act June 24, 1885 (P. L. 159), magistrates of Philadelphia are entitled to demand and receive from the appellant the costs in the case, before making and delivering the transcript on the appeal.—Kelly v. Royal, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 495.

[r] (Pa. 1891) Act June 24, 1885 (P. L. 159), providing that justices shall have the right to demand and receive costs "before issuing a transcript of a judgment recovered before them, for entry in the court of common pleas or other purpose," does not apply where defendant in a judgment recovered before a justice applies for a transcript of the proceedings, for the purpose of taking legal advice as to whether he shall appeal or take a certiorari.—Commonwealth v. Oldfield, 6 Kulp, 272.

[a] (Ill. 1894) A rule of the circuit court provided that, in cases of appeals from inferior courts, the clerk should collect from appellant $5, and, in case of refusal to pay such advance fees, the clerk should perform no services, etc. Held that, where the appellee paid such fees, the circuit court could not order appellant to refund such sum to appellee, and, on failure of appellant to obey the order, dismiss the appeal.—Garrity v. Mallory, 53 Ill. App. 300.

[b] (Pa. 1880) Act May 2, 1868, § 1, authorizing appeals and transcripts from judgments of justices of the peace without payment of cost, does not enable municipal corporations to appeal without payment of costs.—Borough v. Heffner, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 250.

[c] (Pa. 1881) No appeal from a judgment of a justice or alderman will be allowed unless the party appealing shall pay all costs accrued before said justice, except where the parties reside in the county, and the appellant may show that he is unable to pay such costs.—Knapp v. Stoner, 13 Lanc. Bar, 67.

[d] (Pa. 1887) Under Loc. Act March 2, 1868, and Gen. Act June 24, 1885, municipal corporations are not required to pay costs before taking their appeal.—Gamble v. City, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 594.

[e] (Pa. 1887) An appeal pro forma pauperis regular on its face will not be stricken off for falsity in the affidavit of poverty, on which it was granted.—Simrell v. Hall, 1 Wilcox, 164.

[f] (Pa. 1888) An affidavit, under Act June 24, 1885 (P. L. 159), for an appeal in forma pauperis, is not sufficient when it merely sets forth that he is unable to pay the costs accrued in the above case, but should state that his inability arises from poverty.—Miller v. Raub, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 209.

[g] (Pa. 1888) A justice of the peace may determine whether the affidavit for an appeal in forma pauperis is true or false, as the appeal is not a matter of right.—Miller v. Raub, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 209.

[a] (Ark. 1842) A justice of the peace has no right to refuse to enter a prayer for an appeal from his decision, to take a recognizance, and grant the appeal, because his fees for such services are not first paid. He has no right to demand the fees until the services are performed.—Levy v. Inglish, 4 Ark. (4 Pike) 65.

[b] (Colo. 1887) Where the appeal bond has been filed and approved, and an appeal accordingly prayed, within the 10 days fixed by Gen. St. § 1979, the failure to pay to the justice the costs of the appeal within that time is no ground for dismissing the appeal.—Schofield v. Felt, 10 Colo. 146, 14 Pac. 128.

[c] (Ind. 1892) A justice of the peace is not entitled to his fees in advance for approving the bond and making up and transmitting a transcript of the proceedings had before him to the clerk of the circuit court.—Coats v. State, 133 Ind. 36, 32 N. E. 737.

[d] (Iowa, 1806) It is error to affirm the judgment of a justice of the peace, on the ground that the appellant has failed to pay the docket fee by noon of the second day of the next term after his appeal, as required by rule of court, when less than 10 days intervenes between the taking of the appeal and the commencement of the next term of the district court. Revision 1860, §§ 3926, 3929, 3930.—Seeberger v. Miller, 20 Iowa, 428.

[e] (Iowa, 1870) A transcript is not on "file," within the rule of court providing that on appeal from a justice, if appellant fails to file a transcript by the second day of the term, appellee may file such transcript and obtain an affirmance, unless the filing fee is paid to the clerk, or security therefor is given.—Pinders v. Yager, 29 Iowa, 468.

[f] (Mich. 1875) On appeal from a justice's court the appellants are entitled to the whole of the day on which the return is filed in which to make payment of the entry fee, without being in default; and it is error to enter a dismissal grounded upon an order nisi, made on the day of filing the return, requiring payment of the entry fee and of an attorney's fee of five dollars.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Wright, 32 Mich. 491.

[g] (Mo. 1851) If the appellant from a justice's judgment fail to pay the clerk the jury fee, as required by the act of 1847, the circuit court may, upon the appellee filing a proper transcript of the judgment and paying the jury fee, affirm the judgment of the justice.—Gordon v. Scott, 15 Mo. 249.

[h] (Mo. 1892) Defendant appealed from a judgment against him in the justice's court, and the justice delivered the transcript to the deputy clerk, without paying the filing fee required by Rev. St. 1889, p. 2148, § 17, and the deputy did not docket the case. Subsequently, plaintiff obtained an affirmance of the judgment. Held, that the fact that defendant had an understanding with the clerk whereby the clerk filed all transcripts in cases appealed by defendant, and charged the fee to defendant, and that the deputy did not know of this arrangement, was an excuse for not paying the fee, and ground for setting aside the affirmance.—Johnson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 48 Mo. App. 630.

[i] (Mo. 1892) Under 2 Rev. St. p. 2148, § 17, requiring appellant from a justice's judgment, on filing his transcript in the St. Louis circuit court, to pay a filing fee, such fee may be paid and transcript filed the first day of the term to which the appeal is returnable.—Meits v. Koetter, 51 Mo. App. 370.

[j] (N. Y. 1879) The Code, amended 1851, has restored the rule requiring service of a notice of appeal and payment of the costs within 20 days to render effectual an appeal from a justice of the peace to the county court.—Thomas v. Thomas, 18 Hun, 481.

[k] (N. Y. 1896) A justice whose judgment was appealed from failed to state to appellant the correct amount of the costs included in the judgment, and hence appellant did not pay them all, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 3047. Held, that the authority given appellate courts by section 3049, to permit omissions through mistake or excusable neglect to be supplied on just terms, was properly exercised by allowing appellant to correct the omission.—Black v. Maitland, 1 App. Div. 6, 36 N. Y. Supp. 739.

[l] (Pa. 1878) Where, in an appeal from a justice, the costs are not paid within 20 days, and the transcript is not filed in the common pleas until after the next return day, the appeal is not valid.—Donnelly v. Purcell, 1 Sus. Leg. Chron. 47.

[m] (Pa. 1895) Bail for an appeal from a judgment of a justice was entered within the time prescribed by law, but by oversight the costs were not paid under 23 days after judgment, when defendant paid the costs, and, an appeal being refused, took a transcript which he filed as an appeal. Held, that the appeal should be allowed to stand.—Stone v. Conway (Com. Pl.) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 74.

[a] (Iowa, 1879) Under Code 1873, § 3583, providing that on the taking of an appeal from a justice of the peace the justice shall file in the office of the clerk of the circuit court certain papers, including a transcript, he cannot make a payment to himself of the filing fees of the clerk of the circuit court a condition of transmitting the papers to the clerk; he not being required to pay the clerk any fees.—McKay v. Maloy, 53 Iowa, 33, 3 N. W. 808.

[b] (Mich. 1894) The costs of judgment, which How. Ann. St. § 7003, requires appellant to pay to the justice of the peace within five days, include jury fees.—Swarthout v. McKnight, 99 Mich. 347, 58 N. W. 315.

[c] (Minn. 1865) In a civil action before a justice, the fees of witnesses of the defeated party are not taxable as costs under the judgment, and therefore such party may appeal without paying such fees.—Trigg v. Larson, 10 Minn. 220 (Gil. 175).

[d] (Mo. 1879) The law of 1847, requiring the payment of a jury fee on filing a transcript from a justice, is not repealed by Rev. St. 1855, p. 913, §§ 27–29, nor by section 21 of the act of March 3, 1857.—Bailey v. Lubke, 8 Mo. App. 57.

[e] (N. J. 1827) A rule of the common pleas, requiring the appellant upon the return of the appeal papers, and prior to the entry of the appeal, to pay to the clerk of the court the sum of one dollar, is illegal.—Carpenter v. Titus, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 90.

[f] (N. Y. 1827) The appellant is not bound to pay his own costs, nor any more than the costs recovered by the opposite party and included in the judgment.—Ex parte Beadlestone, 7 Cow. 507.

[g] (N. Y. 1828) On appeal all the costs must be paid to the justice. The party has no right to retain a part as belonging to him.—People v. Saratoga Common Pleas, 1 Wend. 282.

[h] (N. Y. 1893) Laws 1881, c. 438, provides that in all civil actions in which an issue of fact shall be tried in the justice's court of the city of Albany, now known as the "City Court of Albany," there shall be allowed to the prevailing party, and be included in the judgment by way of indemnity for his expenses, an attorney's fee, according to the amount involved. Code Civ. Proc. § 3047, requires appellant, when he serves his notice of appeal from a justice's judgment, to pay the costs of the action included in the judgment. Held, that the attorney's fee allowed the prevailing party in the city court is a part of the costs which appellant must pay on appealing to the county court.—Schwemmer v. Stratton, 66 Hun, 629, 22 N. Y. Supp. 523.

[i] (N. Y. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. § 3047, providing that, at the time of serving notice of appeal from a justice's judgment, appellant shall pay to the justice's clerk the costs of the action, includes an allowance made under section 3129, providing that the prevailing party in a justice's court in the city of Brooklyn shall be allowed $12.—Kenney v. Livery Stable Keepers' Ass'n, 89 Hun, 190, 35 N. Y. Supp. 8.

[j] (N. Y. 1896) Where a judgment is reversed, and the case remanded to a justice, and on new trial he dismisses the complaint, on tender of the costs of the second trial, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 3047, without tender of the costs of the former appeal, the justice must make a return of the appeal.—Van Bussum v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 16 Misc. Rep. 40, 37 N. Y. Supp. 665.

[k] (Ohio, 1824) A justice of the peace, on an appeal from his judgment, is bound to give a transcript to the appellant, on a demand for it, and a tender of the fee, and cannot insist on the costs being first paid.—Leffingwell v. Flint, 1 Ohio (1 Ham.) 274.

[l] (Pa. 1878) Act April 20, 1876, did not repeal Act 1873, requiring the prepayment of constable's costs in all cases of appeal; and hence, where such costs are not paid, the appeal will be dismissed.—Rafferty v. McKeeby, 11 Lanc. Bar, 150.

[m] (Pa. 1881) Where an execution has been issued on a judgment of an alderman before appeal was taken, the costs of the execution are a part of the costs which must be paid before the bill will be allowed.—Knapp v. Stoner, 13 Lanc. Bar, 67.

[n] (Pa. 1883) An appeal will not be stricken by reason of the nonpayment of the attorney's fee.—Shirk v. Schadt, 5 Law T. (N. S.) 167.

[o] (Pa. 1887) Under Act June 24, 1885, the failure of defendant, on an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, to pay the cost of plaintiff's witnesses, is not fatal to the appeal; the justice having demanded and received his own costs and the constable's costs alone.—Clark v. Stephens, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 592.

[p] (Pa. 1895) Under Act March 2, 1868, providing that justices of the peace shall be entitled to receive from appellant, before giving a transcript of appeal, "all costs that have accrued in the said action," as well as, under Act June 24, 1885, providing that, in "all cases" of appeal from a justice, he shall be entitled to receive from appellant "the costs in the case" before delivery of the transcript for the appeal, he is entitled to costs that have accrued on execution on the judgment.—Commonwealth v. Snayberger (Com. Pl.) 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 83; Sunday v. Same, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 295.

[q] (Wis. 1841) On appeal from an order of a justice of the peace, the appellant is not required to pay any portion of the costs, except the justice's fees.—Kensler v. Brunett, 1 Pin. 112.

[a] (Ind. 1834) The justice is bound to file his transcript seasonably, although his fees have not been paid nor tendered.—Ingram v. Plasket, 3 Blackf. 450.

[b] (Iowa, 1879) Under Code 1873, § 3804, allowing a justice of the peace a fee of 50 cents for making and certifying transcript on appeal, he may require the payment of his fee therefor before allowing the same to go out of his possession.—McKay v. Maloy, 53 Iowa, 33, 3 N. W. 808.

[c] (Mich. 1874) Payment to a justice of the peace for making return to an appeal is a condition precedent to the right to maintain the appeal.—People v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

[d] (Minn. 1865) Under Comp. St. c. 59, § 150, payment of the costs and of the fee for the return by the justice of the peace are essential conditions to the jurisdiction of a justice to allow an appeal in a civil action; and, where it appears from the return that the fee for the return has not been paid, the appeal may be dismissed.—Trigg v. Larson, 10 Minn. 220 (Gil. 175).

[e] (N. Y.) The justice is not bound to make return on appeal, where the return fee is not paid him; and, if the making the return is prevented by nonpayment of the fee, it is ground for dismissing the appeal.—(1850) Van Hensen v. Kirkpatrick, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 74; (1851) Id., 5 How. Prac. 422.

[f] (S. D. 1892) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, the service and filing of a notice of appeal, and an undertaking on appeal, as required by the statute, are the only prerequisites to the taking of an appeal that are jurisdictional; and the payment of the justice's fee for making his return does not constitute one of the acts necessary to perfect the appeal.—Edminster v. Rathbun, 3 S. D. 129, 52 N. W. 263.

[g] (Wis. 1861) A justice of the peace, whose judgment has been appealed from, may make his return of the record, without payment of the fee and tax prescribed to be paid to him.—Golling v. Harder, 14 Wis. 86.

[a] (Cal. 1858) An offer made to a justice to pay his fee when the papers for appeal are made out is not a sufficient tender, under Wood's Dig. p. 245, § 627, requiring a justice's fees to be paid before the justice is required to send up the papers.—People v. Harris, 9 Cal. 571.

[b] (Colo. 1888) Under Gen. St. § 1979, allowing appeals from justices of the peace, provided the party appealing shall, within 10 days, give bond and pay the cost of granting the appeal, it is not necessary, in order to perfect the appeal, that the costs be paid to the justice personally when the appeal bond is filed in the county court, as sections 1982, 1983, require that, upon the bond being filed and approved, the clerk shall issue a supersedeas enjoining the justice from further proceedings.—Denver & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Rader, 11 Colo. 536, 19 Pac. 476; Same v. Tong, 11 Colo. 539, 19 Pac. 478.

[c] (Ga. 1878) The requirement of Code, § 3616, that the appellant shall "pay" all costs up to the time of entering the appeal, is not complied with by a mere deposit thereof. Such payment is for the benefit of the party finally successful.—Abrams v. Lang, 60 Ga. 218.

[d] (Ga. 1881) An appeal to the superior court from a justice's court will not be dismissed because of the failure of the justice to certify that the appellant had, within the proper time, paid the costs and given bond, as required by law.—Pearce v. Renfroe, 68 Ga. 194.

[e] (Ill. 1893) It is reversible error to dismiss the appeal upon nonpayment of court fees in excess of the amount of such fees as allowed by statute.—Hanford v. Hagler, 49 Ill. App. 258.

[f] (Mich. 1894) The return of the justice of the peace is not conclusive that the jury fees have been paid by appellant; How. Ann. St. § 7019, making such return conclusive evidence only of the payment of the justice's fees.—Swarthout v. McKnight, 99 Mich. 347, 58 N. W. 315.

[g] (Minn. 1870) A certificate of a justice, on allowance of appeal, "Costs paid, and appeal allowed," is evidence that the appeal fee required by Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 104, was paid.—Rahilly v. Lane, 15 Minn. 447 (Gil. 360).

[h] (N. Y. 1824) The fact of payment to the justice need not be indorsed on the appeal bond.—Ex parte Kellogg, 3 Cow. 372.

[i] (N. Y. 1826) To entitle a party to appeal, he must pay, not only the 75 cents for making and filing the return, but the costs to the justice. Paying the 75 cents to the justice and the costs to the opposite party will not satisfy the words of the act, which are to be taken strictly against the party seeking to appeal.—Ex parte Stephens, 6 Cow. 69.

[j] (N. Y. 1830) It is no cause for quashing an appeal that the justice took less costs than he was entitled to, when a party was willing and offered to pay all that could be required of him, and in fact paid all that was demanded.—People v. Genesee Common Pleas, 4 Wend. 202.

[k] (N. Y. 1888) Where defendant, on judgment being rendered against him in justice's court, paid all costs that the justice said were due, the defendant being refused permission to see the taxed bill of costs, his appeal will not be dismissed because the fee due the justice for filing his return was not paid within the required time.—Mann v. Dennis, 50 Hun, 605, 3 N. Y. Supp. 95.

[a] (Colo. 1887) Under Gen. St. §§ 1979, 1981, requiring a party appealing from the judgment of a justice to file an appeal bond, and pay the costs of granting the appeal, the payment of such costs within the prescribed time is not a prerequisite of the right of appeal, when it is waived by the justice, by filing the transcript in the appellate court without such payment.—Carbonate Town Co. v. Ives, 10 Colo. 81, 14 Pac. 120.

[b] (N. Y. 1826) To warrant an appeal, the costs must be actually paid. The justice cannot waive payment by charging them in account against the party.—Ex parte La Farge, 6 Cow. 61.

[a] (Cal. 1880) The word, "or," in Civ. Code, § 978, joining the clauses referring respectively to the undertaking for costs on appeal from a justice's court and an undertaking for a stay of proceedings, is to be read "and," and in all cases the former undertaking is essential.—McConky v. Alameda County Superior Court, 56 Cal. 83.

[b] (Ga. 1884) One who brings two suits in a justice's court, one suit against two defendants, and the other against the same two and a third person, must, on appeal to a jury in the justice's court, give an appeal bond in each case.—Sparks v. Hancock, 73 Ga. 143.

[h] (Me. 1884) The provision of the statute declaring that before an appeal from the decision of a trial justice is allowed "the appellant shall recognize, with sufficient surety or sureties to the adverse party, if required by him," means that no recognizance, with or without sureties, is necessary, unless required by the adverse party.—Colby v. Sawyer, 76 Me. 545; overruling Dolloff v. Hartwell (1854) 38 Me. 54.

[i] (Mass. 1865) An appellant from the judgment of a justice of the peace or police court in a civil action is not obliged to enter into any recognizance for the prosecution of his appeal and the payment of costs, under Gen. [p] (Vt. 1839) Where a party has had notice of a suit before a justice, appears, consents to a judgment, and appeals, but neglects to enter bail, in consequence of which execution issues, he cannot be relieved, on petition, under the statute of 1829.—Finney v. Hill, 11 Vt. 233.

St. § 6408, declaring that when a party in a fiduciary capacity, who has given bond for the faithful performance of his duties, appeals, in the interest of the trust, from a judgment or order of any court, he may do so, without giving bond, by giving written notice to the court of his intention to appeal within the time allowed for giving bond, an assignee who has given bond as such need not give bond on appeal from a justice of the peace.—Terry Clock Co. v. Mussey (Com. Pl.) 13 Wkly. Law Bul. 568.

[f] (Ohio, 1894) An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, by a party described in the action as the administrator of an estate, is not perfected without an undertaking therefor, as required by Rev. St. § 6584, unless appellant is a party to the judgment in his fiduciary capacity, and the appeal is in the interest of the trust.—Thomas v. Moore, 52 Ohio St. 200, 39 N. E. 803.

[g] (Pa. 1823) Under the act of March 22, 1817, a corporation, on an appeal, must give bail for the debt, interest, and costs, in all cases where, by the previously existing laws, private persons were bound to give special bail or surety in the nature of special bail.—Germantown & P. [k] (Pa. 1895) One appealing in forma pauperis is not relieved from the necessity of giving bail, as required by Act March 20, 1845, and by Act June 24, 1885 (P. L. 159), providing that any party to a suit before a justice of the peace shall have the right to appeal, without payment of costs, on filing with the justice an affidavit that he is unable to pay them on account of poverty.—Davison v. [m] (Tenn. 1873) A next friend cannot prosecute an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace upon the pauper's oath.—Brooks v. Workman, 57 Tenn. (10 Heisk.) 430.

[n] (Tex. 1871) The statute of 1866, providing for appeals from justices' courts, does not repeal the statute (Pasch. Dig. art. 1503) by which executors are exonerated from giving bonds for costs on appeals.—Jones v. Hughes, 33 Tex. 598.

[o] (Tex. 1881) An affidavit in lieu of an appeal bond from a justice's court, stating that appellant, "by reason of his poverty, is unable to give the appeal bond in this case," does not comply with the law, and the appeal should be dismissed.—Young v. Bickley, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1073.

[p] (Tex. 1885) An affidavit given in lieu of an appeal bond, in an appeal from a justice to a county court, is not sufficient when made before the justice after the adjournment of the term, but not certified by the county judge to the effect that the facts therein contained have been proved before him.—Isbell v. Everheart, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 658.

[q] (Tex. 1888) An affidavit in forma pauperis, in lieu of security for costs on appeal, which was made before the trial justice at a regular session of his court, at the same term at which judgment was rendered, and describing the judgment appealed from, is sufficient, though it failed to show that affiant was unable to pay "any part of the costs."—Duffey v. [t] (Wis. 1871) The appellant in replevin from a justice of the peace may perfect his appeal, under Rev. St. c. 120, § 205, without giving the undertaking described in Laws 1859, c. 112, § 4.—Haentze v. Howe, 28 Wis. 293.

§ 552. Obligors in bonds or security.

[a] It is only necessary for the surety, and not for the party, to sign an appeal.
—(Ga. 1900) Shirley v. Price, 30 Ga. 328;
(Tex. 1882) Trial v. Lepori, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1274.

[b] (Ill. 1850) Where an attorney, having no authority under seal from his client to execute a sealed instrument, did execute an appeal bond from the decision of a justice of the peace, which was afterwards ratified by his client by the execution of a power of attorney under seal, it was held that, under the act concerning justices of the peace and constables (Rev. St. p. 325), whenever a party intends to appeal and make such an attempt at the execution of a bond that the officer authorized to approve it accepts the bond, it is not designed that the appellant should be prejudiced by any informality or deficiency in the bond.—Bragg v. Fessenden, 11 Ill. (1 Peck) 544.

[c] (Ill. 1857) Where the overseer of highways in township organizations makes complaint to the justice on account of an alleged neglect to perform road labor, and an appeal is taken by the town from a judgment therein, the appeal bond should be executed by the town supervisor in the name of the town.—Gardner v. Town of Chambersburgh, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 99.

[d] (Mich. 1848) Where a statute provides that, "if any party shall appeal from a judgment rendered by a justice," such party, his agent, or attorney "shall enter into a recognizance," it was held that the appeal might be taken, and the recognizance entered into, by the person for whose use the suit was brought.—Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mich. (Man.) 156.

[e] (Mich. 1890) How. Ann. St. § 7000, provides that the party appealing from a justice of the peace shall give a bond to the adverse party, which shall be executed by appellant, with one or more sureties, or by two or more sufficient sureties without the appellant. Judgment was rendered against two defendants. One made affidavit of appeal, stating therein that it was made on behalf of both defendants, and that both appealed. The bond was signed only by the one making the affidavit, as principal, and by one surety. Held, that the judgment against the other defendant was unaffected thereby, and that he was not entitled to any notice of trial in the circuit court.—Jopp v. Kegel, 83 Mich. 50, 46 N. W. 1027.

[f] (Mo. 1823) Under Geyer's Dig. p. 390, providing that a party appealing from a justice of the peace shall give a recognizance subscribed by himself and the surety, an appeal will be dismissed where the recognizance was not signed by the appellant, as well as the surety.—Nichols v. Circuit Ct. of St. Louis Co., 1 Mo. 357.

[g] (Mo. 1826) Where an appeal from a justice is prayed for by one of two defendants, but recognizance is entered into by both, the appeal is well taken.—Sargent v. Sharp, 1 Mo. 601.

[h] (N. Y.) Executing an appeal bond by surety alone is not sufficient. It must be executed by the party, or one of the parties, appealing.—(1827) In re Brooks, 7 Cow. 428. CONTRA, see (1825) People v. Judges of Dutchess County, 5 Cow. 34.

[i] (Ohio, 1885) Where the evidence shows that a case was appealed at the instance of defendant, it is sufficient, though the sureties only signed the bond.—Geller v. Puchta, 1 O. C. D. 18.

[j] (Or. 1896) It is not necessary to its validity that the appellant himself should sign the undertaking required by section 70 of the Justices' Code, declaring that, on an appeal from a justice's court, "the undertaking of the appellant must be given with one or more sureties."—Drouilhat v. Rottner, 13 Or. 493, 11 Pac. 221.

[k] (Pa. 1809) Under the act of 1804, which required that an appellant from a justice's judgment should be "bound with surety" in the nature of special bail, it was held by the common pleas that the defendant himself must enter into the recognizance with his surety.—Newton v. Haggerman, 1 Browne, 94.

[l] (Pa. 1813) Under Act March 20, 1810, directing that defendant who appeals from the judgment of a justice shall be bound with surety in the nature of a special bail, defendant need not join in the recognizance.—Cavence v. Butler, 6 Bin. 52.

[m] (R. I. 1887) Where the attorney of record has no authority under seal so to do, a bond executed by him in behalf of his client on appeal from a justice court is void; and hence the appeal will be dismissed.—Andrews v. Beane, 15 R. I. 451, 8 Atl. 540.

[n] (R. I. 1887) Pub. Laws, c. 582, § 2, is unconstitutional, in so far as it attempts to make valid bonds theretofore signed in behalf of their clients by attorneys of record in appeals from justices' courts.—Andrews v. Beane, 15 R. I. 451, 8 Atl. 540.

[o] (Tex. 1882) Where plaintiff's affidavit, for a writ of sequestration against the firm of M. & Co., stated that M. was a member of the firm, but that the other partners were unknown, it is proper for M., on an appeal from a judgment in a justice's court for plaintiff, to sign the appeal bond in his individual name.—Munzerheimer v. Merrill, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 578.

[p] (Tex. 1894) Though, in a bond on appeal from a joint judgment in a justice's court against two persons, one of them fails to bind himself to pay such judgment as may be rendered on appeal against the two jointly, the bond, as to the other, is good.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Mosty, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 330, 27 S. W. 1057.

[q] (Tex. 1894) An appeal bond filed in a justice's court, executed by one of several against whom judgment is jointly given, is sufficient.—Ayers v. Smith (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 835; following Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Mosty (Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 1057.

§ 553. Obligees in bonds or security.

[a] (Conn. 1856) Rev. St. p. 822, § 10, provides that a person may appeal from a judgment rendered against him by a justice to the county court, provided on appeal he shall give a bond of recognizance to the treasurer of the county. St. 1855, c. 26, § 17, abolished the county court and transfers its jurisdiction to the superior court. Held, that the bond on appeal to the superior court should be made to the county treasurer.—Calef v. Phelps, 25 Conn. 114.

[d] (Tex. 1894) Where the judgment in a justice's court is for different amounts against each of three defendants, and provides that the amounts collected on the judgments against two shall be applied in satisfaction of the judgment against the third, the bond on appeal from the two former judgments should run in favor of the third defendant also.—Cockrill v. Eason (Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 464.

[e] (Tex. 1895) Appellant's failure, on appeal from a justice court, to make the appeal bond payable to all the other parties adversely interested, deprives the appellate court of jurisdiction.—Packenius v. Petri (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 1095.

[g] (Tex. 1896) In an action in a justice's court against F. to recover a diamond, plaintiff obtained a writ of sequestration, and had it levied on a diamond in possession of S., who claimed it, and replevied it. S. was made a defendant, cited and served as such, and judgment was obtained against him for the possession and value of the diamond claimed by him. F. disclaimed the diamond sued for, and judgment was rendered in his favor. Held that, the interests of F. and S. being adverse, on appeal to the county court by S., a bond payable to plaintiff only gave such court no jurisdiction.—Friedman v. Dockery (Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 766.

[h] (Tex. 1896) A bond on appeal from a justice of the peace is required by statute to be payable to the appellee, and one made payable to the appellees "or their certain attorneys" is fatally defective.—Nones v. McGregor (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 1083.

§ 554. Sureties on bonds or security.

Substitution of competent surety for one declared incompetent, see post, § 576.

[a] (Ga. 1894) As the surety on a replevin bond given by defendant in a distress warrant is liable for the condemnation money, he cannot become surety on an appeal taken by defendant to the superior court from the judgment rendered against him in the justice's court.—Osborne v. Hughes, 93 Ga. 445, 21 S. E. 65.

[b] (Ind. 1878) A party, against whom a judgment had been rendered by a justice of the peace, tendered to the justice a bond executed by him without any surety, and demanded an appeal to the circuit court. Held, in an action by such judgment defendant against such justice and the judgment plaintiff, for a writ of mandate to compel the granting of such appeal, that such bond was insufficient.—Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Beam, 63 Ind. 490.

[c] (Ind. 1878) Where the rules of a court prohibit attorneys from becoming sureties on appeal bonds in cases appealed from justices of the peace, attorneys infringing such rule are liable on the bond; and the bond is sufficient, though they are probably liable also for contempt.—Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Hardy, 64 Ind. 454.

[d] (N. H.) The want of two sureties on a recognizance entered into upon an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, in a civil cause, is merely an irregularity in the proceedings, and not a jurisdictional exception.—(1855) Farnam v. Davis, 32 N. H. 302. CONTRA, see (1849) Gilman v. Bartlett, 20 N. H. 168.

[e] (N. Y. 1879) The ordinary practice is to require two sureties on appeal, even if the justice to whom the undertaking is submitted may, in his discretion, require but one.—Delamater v. Byrne, 57 How. Prac. 170.

[f] (N. Y. 1880) Gen. Prac. Rule 5 declares that an attorney shall not be surety on any bond required by law or rule, or any order of a court, or judge, in any action or proceeding. Held not to apply to justice courts; and hence an appeal bond from a justice court was valid, though the surety was an attorney.—Lawler v. Van Aernam, 22 Alb. Law J. 156.

[g] (Okl. 1895) The requirement of St. 1890, § 5255, that an appeal from a justice's court shall not be effectual unless an undertaking with two or more sureties be filed, is not complied with by filing a bond containing but one surety.—Brickner v. Sporleder, 3 Okl. 561, 41 Pac. 726.

[h] (Pa. 1880) A rule of court preventing an attorney at law from becoming bail in any action pending in the common pleas does not prevent him from taking bail on appeal from a judgment of a justice.—Ober v. Koser, 12 Lanc. Bar, 104.

[i] (S. D. 1892) On appeal from a justice's court, after it has been established that one of the sureties on the appeal bond was incompetent, because of his being an attorney, the appellate court commits reversible error if it proceeds to try the action and enter judgment without a new bond.—Towle v. Bradley, 2 S. D. 472, 50 N. W. 1057.

[j] (Tex. 1882) Where a bond on appeal from a justice does not have two or more sureties, as required by Rev. St. art. 1639, it is insufficient.—Bradway v. Clipper, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 306.

[k] (Tex. 1883) The fact that one of two sureties on an appeal bond from a justice's court had been a surety on the claim bond, and a judgment of such court had been rendered against him, does not preclude him from being considered as a surety on the appeal bond.—Heidenheimer v. Bledsoe, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 317.

[l] (Tex. 1884) Where a joint action was brought against two defendants, and judgment was recovered as to one only, who appealed, the other was a proper person to act as surety on the appeal bond.—Baumbach v. Cook, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 100.

[n] (Tex. 1890) On appeal from a judgment in a justice's court against the defendant, and the sureties on a bond given by him on replevying property seized on attachment issued in the cause, the sureties on the replevin bond are competent as sureties on the appeal bond.—Witten v. Caspary (App.) 15 S. W. 47.

[nn] (Tex. 1890) The surety on the appeal bond on an appeal from a justice need not be a resident of the county where the judgment was rendered.—Fuerman v. Ruhle (App.) 16 S. W. 536.

[o] (Tex. 1895) Appeal by the principal in a claim bond from the judgment in the claim proceeding does not render the surety on such bond a party to the appeal, nor incompetent as a surety on the appeal bond.—Peoples v. Rodgers, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 32 S. W. 798.

[p] (Wyo. 1879) The Justices' Code, requiring the surety on an appeal bond from a justice of the peace to be a resident property holder within the county, is complied with when the record shows that the undertaking was tendered with proper affidavit, and he received it and allowed the appeal.—Jenkins v. Emery, 2 Wyo. 58.

§ 555. —— Justification of sureties.

[a] (Cal. 1890) That on appeal from a justice court the undertaking was filed more than five days before the notice of appeal was served does not deprive appellee of his opportunity to except to the sureties, since such service was notice that the undertaking had been or would be filed within the statutory time.—Dutertre v. San Francisco Superior Court, 84 Cal. 535, 24 Pac. 284.

[b] (Cal. 1890) The sureties in a bond given on appeal from a justice of the peace having failed to justify in five days after exception to their sufficiency, the superior court is without jurisdiction to extend the time in which they may justify or new sureties be given; Code, Civ. Proc. § 978, providing that unless they or other sureties justify in five days "the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given."—McCracken v. Los Angeles County Superior Court, 86 Cal. 74, 24 Pac. 845.

[c] (Dak. 1888) Justices' Code, § 93, provides that an appeal from a justice to a district court is not effectual, unless an undertaking be filed, and that the adverse party may except to the sufficiency of the sureties within five days after the filing of the undertaking, and, unless the sureties justify before the justice, on notice to the adverse party, the appeal is void. Held, that a justification filed with the appeal bond, and a certificate of the justice approving the sureties, constituted a sufficient compliance with the statute to give the district court jurisdiction; and failure of the sureties to again justify, after notice by the adverse party, was immaterial.—Judson v. Bulen, 6 Dak. 70, 50 N. W. 484.

[d] (Iowa, 1867) Under Rev. St. § 4125, a justice may require a person offered as surety to justify that he is worth the amount required by law over and above his liabilities, and reject him if he refuses.—Lane v. Goldsmith, 23 Iowa, 240.

[e] (Kan. 1887) The failure of the sureties upon an appeal bond to make affidavit of their qualifications, where it does not appear that the sureties are insufficient, is not a ground for a dismissal of the appeal.—Smith v. Nescatunga Town Co., 36 Kan. 758, 14 Pac. 246.

[f] (Kan. 1892) Where an appeal bond is tendered to a justice of the peace without any justification by the sureties thereon, and the justice objects to their sufficiency, appellant should satisfy him by affidavit or other proof of their qualifications.—Chicago, K. & N. Ry Co. v. Marshall, 47 Kan. 614, 28 Pac. 701.

[g] (N. Y. 1884) Code Civ. Proc. § 3050, requires an undertaking on appeal from a justice to be approved by the justice who rendered the judgment, or by a judge of the appellate court, and also provides that section 1335 shall apply to such an undertaking. The latter section provides that on failure of sureties to justify on notice within a certain time the effect is the same as if the undertaking had not been given. Held, that failure of sureties, on appeal from a justice, though approved by the justice or a judge of the appellate court, to justify after notice, renders the undertaking a nullity.—Ross v. Markham, 5 Civ. Proc. R. 81.

[h] (Or. 1886) An affidavit of a surety on an undertaking for appeal from a justice's court, as follows: "——, being first duly sworn, say that I am a resident householder under the state of Oregon, and am worth the sum of ——. P. M. Coffin,"—is not in compliance with the law, and the appeal will be dismissed.—Starks v. Stafford, 14 Or. 317, 12 Pac. 670.

[i] (Pa. 1831) Where bail for an appeal is entered within 20 days, the justice should allow time for exception and justification, and, if necessary, for entering other bail.—Smith v. Steel, 1 Ashm. 80.

[j] (Pa. 1831) Where bail for an appeal is entered within 20 days, the justice retains the right to inquire and decide on the sufficiency of bail, while it is left to the election of appellant to prosecute the appeal or not, and before it is filed in the common pleas.—Smith v. Steel, 1 Ashm. 80.

[k] (Pa. 1847) Where an appeal is taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace, and the bail excepted to, the place to justify bail is before the justice; and if, after the bail has been refused by him, the appellant enter the appeal, it will, on application of the appellee, be stricken off.—Cummings v. Forsman, 6 Pa. (6 Barr) 194.

[l] (S. D. 1894) An appeal from a justice's court will be dismissed if the sureties in the undertaking are excepted to, as provided in Comp. Laws, § 6133, and they do not justify as required.—Barber v. Johnson, 4 S. D. 528, 57 N. W. 225.

[m] (S. D. 1894) The affidavits of the sureties as to their qualifications, appended to the undertaking when executed, do not constitute such justification as is contemplated by said section.—Barber v. Johnson, 4 S. D. 528, 57 N. W. 225.

[n] (Utah, 1892) An appeal from a commissioner's court is governed by the same rules that regulate appeals from justices' courts, and, where appellant's sureties failed to justify until three days after notice excepting thereto was served on him by the adverse party, the appeal was properly dismissed, under 2 Comp. Laws 1888, § 3660, providing that on an appeal from a justice's court the appellant must, on exceptance to the sufficiency of his sureties, have them justify within two days thereafter.—Pratt v. Jarvis, 8 Utah, 5, 28 Pac. 869.

[o] (Wis. 1853) No appeal from a justice can be entertained by the county court when the sureties upon the appellant's recognizance neither justify their responsibility on oath within 10 days after the rendition of judgment nor are acknowledged to be sufficient by the appellee or his attorney.—Clark v. Bowers, 2 Wis. 123.

§ 556. Nature of security required.

[a] (Iowa, 1849) Rev. St. p. 333, § 34, allowing security for the prosecution of appeals to be given by recognizance, applies to appeals in proceedings before a justice against boats and vessels.—The Lake of the Woods v. Shaw, 2 G. Greene, 91.

[b] (N. H. 1846) When the statute requires a bond on appeal from a justice of the peace, a recognizance will not be accepted as a substitute.—Nurse v. Porter, 18 N. H. 57.

lant may give an undertaking before the justice, with one or more sureties, to the effect that if judgment be rendered against the appellant the sureties will pay the amount with costs. Section 117, being part of the chapter relating to clerks of the superior court, provides that any person desiring to commence or defend any civil action or special proceeding may execute a mortgage on real estate of the value of the bond or undertaking required, and with similar conditions, in lieu thereof. Held, that this section has no application to justices' courts, but there is nothing to prevent a respondent from accepting a chattel mortgage in lieu of the undertaking, if he pleases.—Comron v. Standland, 103 N. C. 207, 9 S. E. 317, 14 Am. St. Rep. 797.

[d] (Ohio, 1883) On appeal from a justice of the peace, appellant deposited a check with the justice, who attached it to the ordinary form of undertaking, regularly filled out, except the signature, and certified that the check was received as a bond and was approved. Held, that appellant had not entered "into an undertaking," as required by the statute; and hence the appellate court acquired no jurisdiction.—Allen v. Walnut Hills, M. & P. Turnpike Co., 12 Wkly. Law Bul. 168.

[e] (Pa. 1894) The depositing of money with a justice is not a compliance with the act regulating appeals.—Steam Heat & Power Co. v. Hutchinson (Com. Pl.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 491.

[a] (Ill. 1838) Where the statute requires that an appeal bond shall be entered into in the clerk's office, and the sureties approved by him, it is sufficient if the bond prepared by the clerk be duly lodged and filed in his office, although not executed therein.—Waldo v. Averett, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 487.

[b] (Iowa, 1859) An appeal from a justice to the district court should not be dismissed, for want of a proper bond, where the attesting and approving thereof is in substantial, though not in strict, conformity with the mode prescribed by statute.—Moore v. Manser, 9 Iowa, 47.

[c] (Me. 1857) The recognizance taken before a magistrate to prosecute an appeal must be returned to the court to which the appeal is taken.—Inhabitants of Stetson v. Inhabitants of Corinna, 44 Me. 29.

[g] (Mo. 1896) Rev. St. 1855, p. 972, § 4, requiring that a recognizance before a justice must be signed by the parties and approved by the justice, does not require the presence of the appellant before the justice.—Crist v. Smith, 66 Mo. App. 398, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1354.

[h] (Neb. 1888) The sureties on an appeal bond from a justice need not sign it in his presence. If he requires proof of the genuineness of the signatures or sufficiency of the sureties, he should make it known when the bond is received by him or soon thereafter; otherwise, the objection will be waived.—State v. Clark, 24 Neb. 318, 38 N. W. 832.

[i] (N. H. 1846) When the statute requires a bond to be given by a person appealing from a decision of a justice of the peace, it is not the duty of the justice to draw up the bond.—Nurse v. Porter, 18 N. H. 57.

[j] (N. H. 1854) When an appeal is taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the proper practice is for the justice to go through with the usual form in taking the recognizance of the principal and sureties.—Ballou v. Smith, 29 N. H. (9 Fost.) 530.

[k] (N. J. 1833) If the affidavit is indorsed on the appeal bond, and sworn to before the justice who tried the cause, and on the same day on which the appeal bond is filed and the appeal demanded, it is sufficient evidence of the seasonable filing of the bond.—Carman v. Smick, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 117.

[l] (Ohio, 1862) The filing of the original undertaking for an appeal from the decision of a justice with the clerk by the appellant, though irregular, is a substantial compliance with the statute, which requires a certified copy of such undertaking to be so filed.—Job v. Harlan, 13 Ohio St. 485.

[m] (Ohio, 1882) An appeal from a justice's court will not be dismissed for want of a seal opposite the party's signature to the undertaking for appeal.—Fisher v. Trevor, 8 Ohio Dec. 408, 7 Wkly. Law Bul. 322.

[n] (Tex. 1880) An appeal bond from a justice's court, signed by marks of obligors unable to write, is valid, though there were no subscribing witnesses.—Boehl v. Hecker, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 761.

[o] (Tex. 1880) The mere recitation in the body of an appeal bond of the names of sureties is not sufficient evidence that the persons so designated are bound as sureties.—Pevito v. Rodgers, 52 Tex. 581.

[p] (Tex. 1885) The failure of a justice to place a file mark on the appeal bond does not affect its validity, nor prejudice the rights of the appellant.—Whitman Agricultural Co. v. Voss, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 552.

[c] (Miss. 1888) The fact that a bond on appeal from a justice is executed and approved before rendition of the judgment appealed from does not invalidate the bond, and hence the appeal will not be dismissed.—James v. Woods, 65 Miss. 528, 5 South. 106.

[d] (N. C. 1827) An appeal from a justice, granted on security given two days after the judgment, will not be dismissed, though no entry appears that time was given at the trial for the appellant to find sureties, and though the appeal was allowed without affidavits.—Lamon v. Gilchrist, 12 N. C. 176.

[e] (Or. 1886) An undertaking, prepared and signed, to be used in perfecting an appeal from a justice's court, is valid where it is not prepared until after judgment is rendered, and not filed until the notice of appeal is filed, though prepared before such notice is served, and hence the appeal will not be dismissed.—Byers v. Cook, 13 Or. 297, 10 Pac. 417.

[f] (Pa. 1835) On an appeal from the decision of the regulators of the district of Southwark, made to the court of common pleas, it is not necessary, under the provision of the third section of Act April 15, 1782, that the security for costs should be given at the time of filing the appeal; but it must be given and approved before the venire can be issued to the sheriff to summon a jury for the trial of the cause.—Perot v. Jenkins, 49 Tenn. (2 Heisk.) 629.

[j] (Vt. 1838) An appeal from a justice of the peace must be entered within two hours, and bail for the prosecution of the appeal must be actually entered within that time. The entering of bail is necessary to perfect the appeal.—Webb v. Hopkinson, 10 Vt. 544.

§ 559. —— Necessity of timely execution and filing and effect of failure.

[a] (Cal. 1885) Where, under Code Civ. Proc. § 978, money has been deposited in lieu of an undertaking on appeal from a justice court, the appellant cannot withdraw it, and file an undertaking, after the statutory limitation of time for filing undertakings has expired. He thus abandons his appeal.—Mullen v. Hunt, 67 Cal. 69, 7 Pac. 121.

[b] (Cal. 1891) Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 974, 978, the undertaking on appeal from a justice of the peace must be filed within 30 days from the rendition of judgment in order to give jurisdiction, and, where it is not filed in time, the judgment, on appeal, of the municipal court of appeals of San Francisco, to which it was transferred from the county court, is void.—McKeen v. Naughton, 88 Cal. 462, 26 Pac. 354.

[e] (Ind. 1847) Under Rev. St. 1843, p. 189, authorizing appeals from a judgment of a justice to the circuit court within 30 days thereafter, and requiring the justice to cause the bonds filed with him to be filed in the clerk's office to which such appeals are taken, where an appeal from a justice in Franklin county is by mistake taken to the Fayette circuit court, where the papers are filed and remain for a year, and are then withdrawn and filed in the Franklin circuit court, there is no legal appeal.—White Water Val. Canal Co. v. Henderson, 8 Blackf. 528.

[f] (Kan. 1887) In order to effect a valid appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the appellant must, within 10 days from the rendition of the judgment, place in the hands of the justice, or in his office, a proper appeal bond, under Justice Code, §§ 121, 122.—Bubb v. Cain, 37 Kan. 692, 16 Pac. 89.

St. c. 155, §§ 28, 29, provide that no appeal from a trial justice's judgment shall be allowed, unless appellant, within 24 hours after entry thereof, enter into recognizance to obey the judgment of the superior court, with sureties approved by the appellee. The plaintiff claimed an appeal, but the trial justice, being in doubt whether the plaintiff should recognize or give a bond, extended the time "until such time as he should notify the plaintiffs to appear before him," and subsequently, upon notice, the plaintiff appeared and recognized with surety, but no notice was given to the defendant. Held, that the appeal was not legally allowed and perfected.—Parker v. [aa] (Iowa, 1862) A justice rendered judgment June 8th. His original transcript showed the filing of an appeal bond on the 19th; but the bond bore date the 29th, and the amended transcript stated that the appeal was taken on the 29th. Held, that the conclusion that the appeal was not taken in time was justified by this record.—Brown v. Beesett, 13 Iowa, 185.

[a] (Ala. 1851) When a party against whom a judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace craves an appeal from the judgment on the day of its rendition, but does not give bond until the sixth day afterwards, being prevented from giving bond on the fifth day by reason of the justice's absence from home, it is error to dismiss the appeal.—Averett v. Horn, 19 Ala. 803.

[b] (Cal. 1894) An appeal will not be dismissed because the bond was not filed within 30 days after the rendition of the judgment by a justice of the peace, if the bond was delivered and left at the office of the justice, but was not received or marked "Filed" by him until 2 days after the 30 days.—Perkins v. Superior Court of Fresno County, 37 Pac. 780.

[c] (Colo. 1885) The court may, on appeal from a justice of the peace, extend the time allowed for filing the bond, or for filing a second bond, where the first is insufficient.—McKee v. Bassick Min. Co., 8 Colo. 392, 8 Pac. 561.

[d] (Ill. 1879) No court can make a rule whereby jurisdiction of a cause may be obtained, when it is not conferred by general law. So held as to a refusal to dismiss an appeal from a justice's court on motion, where the required appeal bond had not been filed in the statutory time.—Rozier v. Williams, 92 Ill. 187.

[e] (Kan. 1887) If an appeal bond is presented to a justice of the peace in time, his failure to enter the same in his docket till the day after will not deprive the party of his right of appeal.—Struber v. Rohlfs, 36 Kan. 202, 12 Pac. 830.

[f] (Mo. 1831) Though the record shows that an appeal from a justice was taken on the day of trial, and that the bond was by mistake dated the next day, yet the appeal will not be dismissed for this cause.—Pearce v. Myers, 3 Mo. 31.

[g] (N. C. 1876) A justice of the peace accepted an appeal bond, assuring the appellant that it was sufficient; but, after the expiration of the statutory time for giving bond, it was determined to be defective. Held a case of excusable neglect, entitling the appellant to perfect his appeal in the superior court.—Richardson v. Debnam, 75 N. C. 390.

[h] (Tex. 1887) Where an appeal bond was sent to the justice by mail, and taken from the post office by his son, who placed it in his father's docket within the proper time after the rendition of the judgment, but which was not discovered by the justice until 23 days thereafter, it was proper for the justice to approve and file it as of the day on which it was received from the post office.—Williams v. Hilburn, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 287.

§ 562. Amount of bond or security.

[a] (Ala. 1877) Code, § 3654, not having prescribed any sum or penalty in which the bond on appeal from a justice's judgment shall be given, the omission therein to specify any penalty is not a ground for dismissal of the appeal.—Ruffin v. Hines, 59 Ala. 565.

[b] (Cal. 1881) On appeal from a judgment in a justice's court, one of the conditions of the undertaking was that the appellant would pay all costs recovered against him in the appellate court. Held, that neither the circumstance that the amount of the bond was more than $100, nor that it was insufficient in amount to operate a stay of execution, rendered the appeal ineffectual.—Ward v. Marin County Superior Court, 58 Cal. 519.

[c] (Ky. 1830) Under the act of 1812, providing that the bond on appeal from the judgment of a justice shall be double the amount of the debt and costs, a bond for only $1 less than double the amount of the debt and costs is defective, and the appeal will be dismissed.—Field v. O'Bryan, 27 Ky. (4 J. J. Marsh.) 365.

[d] (N. Y.) The bond required to be given on appeal to the common pleas from the judgment of a justice of the peace must be in the penalty of double the judgment, whether for costs only, or for damages and costs.—(1825) Ex parte Harrison, 4 Cow. 61; (1826) Ex parte Corwin, 5 Cow. 291.

[e] (Or. 1890) On an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in an action to recover the possession of a mining claim, an undertaking given in accordance with Code, § 2182, for an amount sufficient to compensate the plaintiff for its use pending appeal, and for costs and disbursements, is sufficient, not only for a stay of proceedings on the judgment, but for an appeal as well.—Bilyeu v. Smith, 18 Or. 335, 22 Pac. 1073.

[f] (Pa. 1811) The court of common pleas dismissed an appeal where appellant had not given security, but had lodged the amount of the judgment with the justice to await the event of the suit; there being no provision for interest and costs.—Stewart v. Prosser, 1 Browne, 282.

[g] (Pa. 1815) An appeal will be quashed if security is not given for double the amount of the judgment.—Langs v. Galbraith, 1 Serg. & R. 491.

[h] (Pa. 1823) Where, on an appeal from a justice by a corporation, bail was not given absolute in a sum sufficient to cover debt, interest, and costs, the appeal will be dismissed.—Germantown & P. Turnpike Co. v. Maglee, 9 Serg. & R. 227.

[i] (Pa. 1852) By the act of 1845, all bail in cases of appeal from the judgments of justices of the peace must be bail absolute in double the amount of costs. Held, that a recognizance "in the sum of $35, on condition that the defendant shall appear at the next court of common pleas to prosecute his appeal with effect," was sufficient.—Murray v. Haslett, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 356.

[j] (Pa. 1888) Under Act April 20, 1876 (P. L. p. 43, § 1), providing that, before taking an appeal from a judgment before a justice for wages for labor, defendant must give bail for payment of the debt and costs, where a judgment is entered on a claim in part for wages and in part for other matters, an appeal cannot be taken without bail for the whole debt.—Davenport v. Searfoss, 13 Atl. 956.

[k] (Pa. 1895) Act March 15, 1847 (P. L. 361), providing that when any corporation, not a municipal corporation, shall appeal or take a writ of error, the bail shall be taken absolute for the payment of the debt, interest, and costs, on affirmance of the judgment, applies to appeals from justices of the peace.—Young v. Colvin, 168 Pa. 449, 31 Atl. 1094.

[l] (Tex. 1881) An appeal bond filed by a plaintiff in a justice's court for $20 is sufficient, where judgment was for costs amounting to $16.25, of which plaintiff had paid $9.40.—Sullivan v. McFarland, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1200.

[m] (Tex. 1890) The plaintiff having sued out a distress warrant, one W. claimed the property levied on, and made affidavit and gave bond for the trial of the right of property. Judgment was rendered in justice's court that W. recover of plaintiff the property in controversy, and all costs of suit. Held, that an appeal bond in double the amount of costs was sufficient.—Ross v. Williams, 78 Tex. 371, 14 S. W. 796.

[n] (Tex.) Under the act requiring that a bond on appeal from a justice's to a county court shall be double the amount of the judgment, the costs of the justice's court must be included in the amount of the bond.—(1895) Bell v. Brady, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 526, 33 S. W. 303. CONTRA, see (1881) Colorado County v. Delaney, 54 Tex. 280.

[o] (Wis. 1855) Under the statute requiring that a party appealing from a justice shall enter into a recognizance in double the amount of the judgment, the term "judgment" does not include costs.—Ganet v. Mears, 4 Wis. 306.

[p] (Wis. 1856) The recognizance for appeal from a justice's court must be in the sum of $50, at least, though the damages and costs below are less than $25.—Kearney v. Andrews, 5 Wis. 23.

[q] (Wyo. 1879) Under the justice's code, requiring a bond on appeal from a justice to be in a sum certain, but not requiring the sum to be named, a bond is sufficient which does not name the sum.—Jenkins v. Emery, 2 Wyo. 58.

§ 563. Conditions of bonds.

Amendment of defective condition in bond for appeal, see post, § 575.

[a] (Cal. 1855) The omission of the words "to pay to" will not affect the obligation of an appeal bond given on appeal from a justice's court.—Billings v. Roadhouse, 5 Cal. 71.

[b] (Ky. 1825) On appeal from a justice of the peace, the bond must be conditioned to pay the original debt and costs, provided appellant gets cast.—Talbot v. Benson, 18 Ky. (2 T. B. Mon.) 59.

[c] (Ky. 1846) The act regulating appeals from justices of the peace provides that persons praying an appeal shall, in the clerk's office of the circuit court to which the appeal is returnable, enter into a bond, etc., with condition to pay the same, "provided he gets cast." Held, that a condition of a bond that, "if judgment be confirmed or the appeal dismissed, then," etc., is a substantial compliance with the statute.—Feemster v. Anderson, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 537.

[d] (Me. 1854) If a recognizance upon an appeal contain provisions not authorized by law, and omit those required by law, the appeal will be dismissed, as void.—French v. Snell, 37 Me. 100.

[e] (Me. 1858) A recognizance conditioned "to pay all intervening damages and costs," entered into to prosecute an appeal to this court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, in an action of trover, is unauthorized and void and furnishes no security to the adverse party for costs; and the court, on motion, will dismiss the appeal.—Jordan v. McKenney, 45 Me. 306.

[f] (N. Y. 1828) Where judgment was against two, but qualified as to one, because he had been discharged under the body act, and the other alone appealed, it was held that the bond need not provide for the surrender of the insolvent party's body.—People v. Judges of Onondaga County, 8 Cow. 120.

[g] (N. Y. 1828) The appellee cannot object that the bond is better for him than the statute requires, as if it omit the clause providing for the surrender of the appellants' bodies.—Ex parte Hurlburt, 8 Cow. 138.

[h] (Pa. 1833) A recognizance taken by a justice on appeal by a defendant must contain a condition that the recognizor shall be discharged if the defendant shall, on affirmance, pay the debt, interest, and costs.—Pier v. McKinney, 2 Watts, 103.

[i] (Tex. 1883) The fact that an appeal bond from a justice's court was made, conditioned on payment of the judgment "in the county court," does not affect its validity.—Heidenheimer v. Bledsoe, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 316.

[j] (Tex. 1891) Rev. St. art. 1405, providing that, where the judgment is for the recovery of land or other property, the appeal bond shall be conditioned to pay the appellee the value of the rent or the hire of such property, is not applicable to an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace for the possession of personal property, as such appeals are governed by article 1639.—Batsel v. Blaine (App.) 15 S. W. 283.

§ 564. —— Condition to prosecute appeal and satisfy judgment.

[a] (Ala. 1845) Under Clay's Dig. p. 314, § 9, providing that, on appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, the bond shall be conditioned that appellant shall prosecute his appeal with effect, and, if cast in the suit, pay and satisfy the condemnation of the court, an appeal bond is sufficient when conditioned that the appellants shall prosecute their appeal with effect, and, if they "fail therein, then pay the judgment, with such damages and costs as shall be adjudged against them in said court."—Lightfoot v. Strahan, 7 Ala. 444.

[b] (Ala. 1845) On an appeal from a justice of the peace, the defendant and his sureties acknowledged that they were bound unto the plaintiff in a definite sum "for the payment of the principal, costs, charges, and all expenses attending the suit" between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the latter had "appealed from the justice's court of beat No. 3 for the county," etc., to the circuit court to be holden, etc. Held that, although the bond did not conform literally to the act, yet that it was substantially sufficient, and was equivalent to a condition "to prosecute the appeal to effect, and, in case the appellant be cast therein, to pay and satisfy the condemnation of the court."—Windham v. Coats, 8 Ala. 285.

[c] (Ill. 1878) An appeal from a justice court will be dismissed, where the bond is conditioned to "pay whatever judgment may be rendered by the court upon dismissal or trial of said appeal," since such bond is not in substantial conformity with Rev. St. 1878, p. 647, which provides that such bonds shall require appellants to "pay whatever judgment may be rendered against them by said court upon the trial of said appeal, or, in case the appeal is dismissed, pay the judgment rendered against them by said justice, and all costs occasioned by said appeal."—Smith v. Davis, 89 Ill. 203.

[d] (N. C. 1883) Battle's Revisal, c. 63, § 63, providing that, on appeal from a justice of the peace to the superior court, the undertaking shall be "to the effect that, if judgment be rendered against appellant," the sureties will pay the amount unsatisfied by execution, "together with all costs awarded against the appellant," is sufficiently complied with by an undertaking that "appellant shall pay all costs that may be awarded against him, and that, if the judgment, or any part thereof, be affirmed, or the appeal be dismissed, appellant shall pay the amount directed to be paid by the judgment, or the part of such amount as to which the judgment shall be affirmed."—Walker v. Williams, 88 N. C. 7.

[e] (Ohio, 1862) The stipulation "that the appellant will prosecute his appeal to effect and without unnecessary delay," by section 112, Justice's Code, is an indispensable condition of the undertaking, and must be substantially complied with to perfect the appeal.—Job v. Harlan, 13 Ohio St. 485.

[f] (Ohio, 1880) An appeal bond from a justice of the peace, in which the surety recites that, if judgment is rendered against appellant, "I will satisfy," etc., is sufficient, though the statutes provide that the bond shall be conditioned that appellant satisfy the judgment.—Farrell v. Finch, 6 Ohio Dec. 995.

[g] (Pa. 1865) A recognizance taken on an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, by this entry on the docket, "B. goes surety in the sum of fifty dollars for the prosecution of this suit to effect," is sufficient to entitle the appellants to their appeal.—Rhey v. Baird, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 85.

[h] (Tex. 1879) The condition of an appeal bond from a justice's court, that "the said G. prosecutes his appeal to effect, or will pay or satisfy the judgment against the that may be obligators on the bond," is without meaning, and fails to comply with Acts 15th Leg. p. 163, § 21, prescribing conditions for such bonds.—Carter v. Grigsby, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 348.

[i] (Tex. 1881) An appeal bond from a justice's to a county court, conditioned "that the said H. shall prosecute his appeal to effect, and satisfy the judgment or decree that may be rendered against the obligors in this bond," substantially complies with Rev. St. art. 1639, requiring the bond to be "conditioned that the appellant shall prosecute his appeal to effect, and shall pay off and satisfy the judgment which may be rendered against him on such appeal."—Haby v. Haby, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 157.

[j] (Tex. 1881) An appeal bond from a justice's court, conditioned "that the said M. & H. shall prosecute their said appeal to effect, and shall pay and satisfy any judgment that may be rendered against them in said suit," substantially complies with Rev. St. art. 1639.—Miller v. Sappington, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 176.

[k] (Tex. 1881) An appeal bond from a justice's court, conditioned that appellant shall prosecute his appeal "with" effect, "and" shall pay and satisfy the judgment, substantially complies with Rev. St. art. 1639.—Kerr v. Clegg, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 791.

[l] (Tex. 1881) An appeal bond from a justice's court, conditioned as required by Rev. St. art. 1639, is not invalidated by the additional words, describing the judgment which the obligors bind themselves to pay as one to be rendered "on the trial of this case in the county court aforesaid, if the decision shall be against the said K. [appellant.]"—Kerr v. Clegg, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 791.

[m] (Tex. 1881) An appeal bond from a justice's court, conditioned on payment of all costs that may be adjudged against appellants, if they fail to prosecute the suit, is fatally defective.—Garrett v. Gay, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1026.

[n] (Tex.) Rev. St. 1879, art. 1639, provides that a party appealing from a judgment in a justice's court to the district court shall, within 10 days from the date of the judgment, file with the justice a bond payable to the appellee, "conditioned that the appellant shall prosecute his appeal to effect, and shall pay off and satisfy the judgment which may be rendered against him on such appeal." Held, that an appeal bond conditioned that appellant should "prosecute its appeal to effect, or pay," etc., is a sufficient compliance with the statute.—(1881) Sullivan v. McFarland, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1198; (1883) Mills v. Hackett, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 845; (1883) Worley v. Hudson, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 26; (1890) Southern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Stanley, 76 Tex. 418, 13 S. W. 480.

[o] (Tex. 1882) An appeal bond from a justice's court, conditioned "that the said L. shall prosecute his appeal to effect, and shall pay and satisfy the judgment or decree that may be rendered against the obligors of this bond," substantially complies with Rev. St. art. 1639.—Trial v. Lepori, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1275; Lee v. Stone, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1277.

[q] (Tex. 1885) A bond on appeal from the judgment of a justice, conditioned that "the appellant shall pay off and satisfy the judgment which shall be rendered," instead of "shall pay off and satisfy the judgment which may be rendered," is sufficient.—Stitt v. Barefoot, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 793.

[r] (Tex. 1887) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, an appeal bond conditioned to "pay off" a judgment, instead of "pay of and satisfy" the judgment, is sufficient.—Clifford v. Clark, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 238.

[s] (Tex. 1887) A bond upon appeal from justice's court that fails to provide, as one of its conditions, "that the appellant shall prosecute his appeal to effect," is not a compliance with the statutory provisions (Rev. St. art. 1639), regarding such bonds.—Figures v. Dunklin, 68 Tex. 644, 5 S. W. 503.

[t] (Tex. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1879, art. 1639, a bond is sufficient, the condition of which is that they "shall prosecute their appeal with effect, and shall pay all costs which have accrued in this court, together with that which may accrue in the county court, should they be cast in the suit."—Moove v. Alston (App.) 15 S. W. 47.

[u] (Tex. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1879, art. 1639, a bond is insufficient, the condition of which is that the "appellant shall prosecute his appeal to effect, and shall pay all the costs which have accrued in the court below, or which may accrue in the appellate court."—Allison v. Gregory (App.) 15 S. W. 416.

[v] (Tex. 1891) Sayles' Civ. St. art. 1639, requires an appeal bond to be in a sum double the amount of the judgment, "conditioned that the appellant shall prosecute his appeal to effect, and shall pay off and satisfy the judgment which may be rendered against him." By Id. art. 1639a, it is provided that an appellant who is unable to give bond or pay costs shall nevertheless be allowed to prosecute his appeal upon making strict proof of his inability. Held, that a bond, on appeal from a justice of the peace, conditioned that "appellant shall prosecute his appeal with effect, and shall pay all costs," is a compliance with neither section, and the appeal must be dismissed.—Pace v. Webb, 79 Tex. 314, 15 S. W. 269.

§ 565. Requisites and sufficiency in general.

[a] (Ind. 1846) That an appeal bond, in the case of an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, bears date after the bond was filed in the clerk's office, is no objection to the bond.—Littell v. Bradford, 8 Blackf. 185.

[b] (Mass. 1885) A. appealed from a judgment against him, and filed a bond under St. 1882, c. 95, which did not state against whom the judgment appealed from was rendered, nor the date of the judgment, nor the amount thereof, either in debt or costs. The bond bore no date, and did not appear to have received the approval of the adverse party or the justice before whom the case was tried. Held, appeal should be dismissed.—Putnam v. Boyer, 140 Mass. 235, 5 N. E. 493.

[c] (N. H. 1854) An entry on the docket of the justice in this form: "Appealed. A. B., principal, C. D., and E. F., sureties, in the sum of $20, for costs,"—is a sufficient docket entry, from which the justice may draw out the recognizance in full and furnish a copy when requested.—Ballou v. Smith, 29 N. H. (9 Fost. 530.

[d] (N. Y. 1865) The Code prescribes no form for the undertaking to be given on appeal from the judgment of the justice of the peace.—Doolittle v. Dininny, 31 N. Y. 350.

[e] (Tex. 1880) An appeal bond from a justice's court, conditioned that appellant shall prosecute the appeal or pay the judgment "that may rendered," is valid; the word "be" being manifestly omitted through a clerical mistake.—Kerr v. Murrell, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 890.

[f] (Tex. 1881) The law requiring an appeal bond from a justice's court to be "a bond filed with the justice" is not complied with by an entry in the justice's docket that certain persons acknowledge themselves bound by the obligations required in an appeal bond.—Garrett v. Gay, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1026.

[g] (Tex. 1885) On appeal from a judgment rendered in a justice court, the appeal will not be dismissed because the date of execution on the appeal bond antedates the date of the judgment one day, where it recites the proper date.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Hodge, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 619.

[h] (Tex. 1886) It is not essential that an appeal bond should state that an appeal has been taken, if the fact that it has been taken is otherwise made to appear.—Moses v. Clements, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 172.

[i] (Tex. 1886) On appealing from the judgment of a justice, the use of the word "applies," instead of the word "appeals," in the bond, is a clerical mistake which could not possibly mislead, and will not invalidate the bond.—Moses v. Clements, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 172.

[j] (Tex. 1888) In appealing from a judgment entered against plaintiff in justice court for defendant's costs, the appeal bond, reciting,

"From which said judgment for said costs the said R. has appealed to the county court," sufficiently shows that it is from the whole judgment the appeal is taken, and not only from that part of it adjudging the costs against appellant.—Robinson v. Justin, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 376.

[k] (Tex. 1895) Where the bond on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is filed and approved after the judgment, and within the time fixed by law, the fact that it bears date prior to the rendition of the judgment does not affect its validity.—Peoples v. Rodgers, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 32 S. W. 798.

§ 566. Description of judgment.

[a] (Tex. 1882) An appeal from a justice's court to the county court will be dismissed, where the appeal bond misdescribes the judgment—Bradway v. Clipper, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 306.

[b] (Tex. 1882) An appeal from a justice's court will be dismissed, where the appeal bond does not give the style and number of the case, gives the date of the rendition of the judgment incorrectly, and omits the name of one of the parties against whom it was rendered.—Kerr v. Stone, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 811.

[c] (Tex. 1883) On appeal from a judgment in a justice's court "that plaintiff take nothing by his suit, and that defendant go hence, and that he recover his costs of plaintiff," the appeal bond recited that "The defendant recovered a judgment against K. for the cost of seven suits, said cost amounting to * * * $27.25." Held, that the bond did not misdescribe the judgment.—Kerr v. Nutten, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 410.

[d] (Tex. 1884) Where a justice renders judgment for the recovery of a horse, or, in case a recovery could not be had, its value, and damages, an appeal bond which describes the judgment as one for the value and damages, without mentioning the recovery of the horse, is sufficiently certain to support the appeal.—Austin v. McMahan, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 429.

[e] (Tex. 1886) On appeal from the judgment of a justice on an account, and ordering the foreclosure of a landlord's lien on property seized under a distress warrant, the omission to mention that part of the judgment which foreclosed the lien in the appeal bond is not a misdescription, but a failure to fully describe the terms of the judgment, and does not invalidate the bond.—Moses v. Clements, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 171.

[f] (Tex. 1887) A judgment was rendered in justice court against a constable and his sureties upon his bond, but which did not specify that it was rendered against the constable as principal and the others as sureties. Defendants appealed, and their appeal bond described the judgment as rendered against the constable as principal and the others as sureties. Held, that the recital of the facts in the bond was not calculated to mislead, since the record shows that the constable was principal and the other defendants were his sureties.—Lewis v. Richardson, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 343.

[g] (Tex. 1887) The caption of an appeal bond from a justice's court set forth the number of the case, the names of the parties thereto, and described it as being in the justice's court of a certain county and precinct. The body of the bond recited a recovery by the plaintiff against the defendant, giving a correct description of the recovery. Held sufficient.—Wilkes v. Adler, 68 Tex. 689, 5 S. W. 497.

[h] (Tex. 1890) An appeal to the district court from a judgment in replevin in a justice's court is properly dismissed when the appeal bond describes the judgment as having been rendered August 21st, against the principals in the bond as defendants, for $150, and a certain sum as costs, when it was in fact rendered August 22d, against such defendants and specified sureties for the recovery of the property, and, in case that could not be found, for $150, and recited that that sum was the value of the property sued for.—James v. Roberts, 78 Tex. 670, 15 S. W. 111.

[i] (Tex. 1890) An appeal bond properly describes the judgment when it states the style and number of the suit, the justice who rendered it, the date of its rendition, the amount, and the parties for and against whom it was rendered.—Williams v. Sims (App.) 16 S. W. 786.

[j] (Tex. 1891) A clerical error will not vitiate an appeal bond or affidavit, and where, on appeal from a justice's court, the appellant files an affidavit in lieu of an appeal bond, in which the judgment is correctly described in every respect except the number of the cause is given as 391, instead of 395, it is error for the county court to dismiss the appeal on motion of appellee.—Jones v. Malloy (App.) 15 S. W. 198.

[k] (Tex. 1893) A bond on appeal from a justice's court stated the title of the cause and the court, and the date and amount of the judgment against the garnishee. It then recited that, after the writ was served on the garnishee, defendant replevied the fund in the hands of the garnishee, giving a bond thereon, and that judgment was rendered against defendant and the sureties on the replevin bond for the amount of the judgment against the garnishee; and that, "when this judgment on said bond is collected and satisfied, it shall operate as a satisfaction of the judgment against said garnishee, from which judgment the defendant has taken an appeal to the county court." Held, that the appeal should not be dismissed as insufficiently describing the judgment appealed from.—Bauer v. Fields (Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 180; Same v. Adkins, Id. 181.

[m] (Tex. 1894) Sayles' Civ. St. art. 1639, prescribing the requisites of a bond on appeal from the justice court, does not require a description of the judgment or its amount to be in the bond.—Perry v. Cullen, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 478, 25 S. W. 1043.

§ 567. —— Recitals as to parties and court.

[a] (Ala. 1876) An appeal bond, given in a justice's court, reciting that the appeal was taken by the defendant and his wife, whose name is also given, but which does not recite that the justice rendered judgment against both, and correctly states the amount and date of the judgment, and the name of the plaintiff therein, conforming substantially to the requirements of the statute, does not alter the case or give the defendant ground for moving to dismiss the proceedings because complaint was filed against the husband alone in the city court.—Sossman v. Price, 57 Ala. 204.

[b] (Kan. 1887) On an appeal from a judgment by a justice of the peace of Comanche county, which was then unorganized, and attached to Barber county for judicial purposes, the justice was referred to in the appeal bond as an officer of Comanche county, instead of being designated as an officer of Comanche township, Barber county. Held, that the technical defect did not prejudice any one, nor invalidate the undertaking.—Smith v. Nescatunga Town Co., 36 Kan. 758, 14 Pac. 246.

[c] (N. Y. 1828) A bond reciting the judgment as rendered before I. S., justice of the peace, is good, without adding the county of which he is a justice.—Anonymous, 1 Wend. 85.

[d] (Ohio, 1854) If a recognizance is taken in the form prescribed in section 111, Act March 14, 1831, defining the duties of justices of the peace in civil cases, it is sufficient, although it does not appear, either by the recognizance or the transcript, which party took the appeal.—Holton v. Wade, 3 Ohio St. 543.

[e] (Tex. 1882) The variance between an appeal bond from a justice's court, giving the name of a party to a judgment as "Lapori," and the judgment, giving the name as "Lepori," is not fatal.—Trial v. Lepori, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1273.

[f] (Tex. 1883) A judgment of the justice of the peace against a firm, rendered on service on an individual partner, named the member served as defendant, against whom judgment was rendered individually, while the appeal bond named only the firm by firm name. Held, that there was no variance, and that the objectionable words would be regarded as surplusage.—Hedges v. Armistead, 60 Tex. 276.

[g] (Tex. 1887) Describing the judgment as rendered against "the Texas Pacific Railway Co.," instead of "the Texas & Pacific Railway Co.," in the appeal bond, does not render it void, since it could not possibly mislead the appellee.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. McCumsey, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 264.

[h] (Tex. 1890) When an appeal bond describes the judgment so as to identify it, it is sufficient though it does not recite that the judgment was against the sureties on a replevin bond as well as against defendant.—Witten v. Caspary (App.) 15 S. W. 47.

[i] (Tex. 1892) Where the bond on appeal from a justice court correctly states the number and style of the cause and the court in which the judgment was rendered, the appeal should not be dismissed as insufficiently describing the judgment, though all of the parties against whom it is entered are not named, the amount is misstated, and the date of entry can only be inferred from the date of the verdict.—Warren v. Marberry, 85 Tex. 193, 19 S. W. 994.

[j] (Tex. 1894) The omission of the number of the case, and the names of all the parties to the judgment, from the bond on appeal from a justice court, is not a fatal defect.—Farror v. Dowd (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 919.

[k] (Tex. 1896) A bond on appeal from a justice court is not insufficient because it names the justice before whom the judgment was rendered as "T. W. R.," instead of "W. T. R.," and appellant as the "M., K. & T. Railroad Company," instead of "Railway Company," where the judgment was otherwise identified.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Vowell (Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 354.

[l] (Wis. 1877) Where the notice of appeal from a justice and the bond state that the appeal is to the circuit court, while appeals from justices' courts lie only to the county court, the latter does not acquire jurisdiction.—Johnson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 43 Wis. 431.

§ 568. —— Recital of date.

[a] (Kan. 1889) A cause was tried before a justice of the peace on the 28th day of May, 1886, and judgment rendered for plaintiff on that day. The transcript of the justice failed to show that any appeal was taken by the defendant, or that any appeal bond was presented, approved, or filed. The justice, in transmitting the transcript to the clerk of the district court, included among the papers sent up an appeal bond, which purported to have been approved by him in time, but the bond recited a judgment rendered May 31, 1886. Held, that the district court, upon the motion of the plaintiff, should have dismissed the appeal.—Shuster v. Overturf, 42 Kan. 668, 22 Pac. 718.

[b] (N. Y. 1829) A bond is good, without stating the day of the rendition of the justice's judgment.—People v. Orleans Common Pleas, 2 Wend. 292.

[c] (Tex. 1883) An appeal bond from a justice court, which described the judgment by giving the style of the cause, the court in which the judgment was rendered, the amount, and in whose favor and against whom, is sufficient, although it does not show the number of the cause nor the date of the judgment.—Knight v. Old, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 77.

[d] (Tex. 1884) An appeal from a judgment of a justice should be dismissed, where the appeal bond misdescribes the judgment, both as to date and amount.—Gibson v. Giles, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 402.

[e] (Tex. 1885) Though a bond on appeal from justice court need not give the date of the judgment, the date, when given, becomes part of the description, and cannot be disregarded as surplusage; hence an appeal bond, describing a judgment rendered September 27th, as being rendered on November 27th, is insufficient.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Rains, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 752.

[f] (Tex. 1886) An appeal bond from a justice's to the county court, which describes the judgment as to the number of the cause, the justice before whom the same was tried, and the amount of the judgment, although it omits the date of its rendition, is sufficiently certain to support an appeal.—Eichman v. State, 22 Tex. App. 137, 2 S. W. 538.

[g] (Tex. 1890) Where the justice's transcript misdescribes the judgment as having been rendered on one date, when in fact it was rendered on another, the appeal should not be dismissed because the appeal bond properly describes the judgment by the date when it was in fact rendered.—Knight v. Grigsby (App.) 16 S. W. 866.

[h] (Tex. 1891) An error in stating the date of a judgment will not invalidate a bond on appeal from a justice's court, if the other statements contained therein fully identify the judgment.—Edwards v. Allen (App.) 17 S. W. 1074.

[i] (Tex. 1893) Where the bond on appeal from a justice correctly describes the judgment by the number of the case, names of the parties, amount, and the court in which it was rendered, it is sufficient, though it gives the date as the 28th, instead of the 30th, of the month.—Alderman v. Jones, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 336, 21 S. W. 298.

[j] (Tex. 1894) A bond on appeal from a justice, describing the judgment in conformity with the description in the justice's transcript, should not be dismissed for uncertainty for reciting that on the day the judgment was rendered, "or on the next day," the court allowed a remittitur, the transcript showing that the remittitur was made on the day the judgment was rendered.—Crow v. Curry (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 715.

§ 569. —— Recital of amount.

Misdescription as to both date and amount, see ante, § 568.

—— parties and amount of judgment, see ante, § 567.

[a] (N. Y.) The bond must recite the precise amount of the justice's judgment.—(1826) Ex parte Weed, 5 Cow. 286; (1827) Ex parte Alvord, 6 Cow. 585.

[b] (Tex. 1881) An appeal bond from a justice's court, giving the names of the parties to a judgment for $264, the court in which it was rendered, and its date, is not invalid because it gives the amount of the judgment as $260.—Nelson v. Baird, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1236.

[c] (Tex. 1883) A failure of an appeal bond from a justice's court to mention the sum of $2 adjudicated as damages does not render it invalid.—Mills v. Hackett, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 846.

[d] (Tex. 1883) An appeal bond from a justice of the peace need not show the amount of the judgment, nor that it was final.—Christian v. Crawford, 60 Tex. 45.

[e] (Tex. 1884) A discrepancy in an appeal bond of one cent in stating the amount of a judgment does not vitiate the bond.—Laird v. Frieberg, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 111.

[f] (Tex. 1885) An appeal bond which describes the property recovered with reasonable certainty in every other respect, except that it omits the amount, is sufficiently certain.—Parsons v. Crawford, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 669.

[g] (Tex. 1887) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, an appeal bond which describes the judgment rendered as amounting to a sum which includes the costs does not misdescribe the judgment, so as to avoid the appeal bond.—Anderson v. Beaty, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 260.

[h] (Tex. 1894) Where the bond on appeal from a justice's court correctly states the number and style of the cause, the court, and the date of the judgment, such judgment having been rendered for different amounts against each defendant, and for the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, the appeal should not be dismissed, though the bond fails to state the amount of the judgment against one of the defendants, or mention the order of foreclosure.—Cockrill v. Eason (Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 464.

§ 570. Approval of bond or security.

Liability of justice for refusal to approve an appeal bond, see ante, § 41.

Power to accept or approve appeal bond after expiration of term, see ante, § 204 [c, h].

Presumption as to approval of bond for appeal, see post, § 710.

[a] (Ark. 1858) The recognizance prescribed by the statute should be taken and approved by the justice before granting an appeal, or the recognizance should be perfected in the circuit court.—Merrill v. Manees, 19 Ark. 647.

[b] (Ill. 1891) On appeal from a justice, appellant may either file his bond with the justice and have it approved by him, or with the clerk of the appellate court and be approved by him, under Rev. St. c. 79, §§ 62, 64, 65.—Fairbank v. Streeter, 41 Ill. App. 434, reversed (1892) 142 Ill. 226, 31 N. E. 494.

[bb] (Ind. 1882) Where a justice of the peace had accepted an appeal bond, and it was discovered to be in too small a sum, he could not recall his acceptance and demand another bond.—Miller v. O'Reilly, 84 Ind. 168.

[c] (Ind. 1892) On refusal by a justice to approve a good and sufficient appeal bond, the injured party may bring mandamus to compel him so to do, and to transmit a transcript of proceedings to the clerk of the circuit court, without waiting for the expiration of the 20 days allowed the justice by Rev. St. § 1501, for preparing and transmitting the transcript.—Coats v. State, 133 Ind. 36, 32 N. E. 737.

[d] (Kan. 1880) A justice of the peace from whose judgment an appeal has been taken, is bound by Comp. Laws 1879, p. 720, c. 81, § 121, to approve an appeal undertaking, conditioned, with sufficient surety, in the sum of $50, said sum being more than double the amount of the judgment and costs, if presented to him within 10 days from the rendition of said judgment.—Cox v. Rich, 24 Kan. 20.

[e] (Kan. 1892) Mandamus will not lie to compel a justice to approve an appeal bond after expiration of the time for appeal, when it has been tendered without any justification by the sureties, and the justice objects to their sufficiency, though the sureties possessed the requisite qualifications.—Chicago, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Marshall, 47 Kan. 614, 28 Pac. 701.

[f] (Mich. 1895) Under 2 How. Ann. St. § 8307, providing that appeals from judgments of circuit court commissioners shall be conducted as near as may be as on appeals from justices; and the subsequent enactment (3 How. Ann. St. § 7000), providing that on appeal from a justice the bond may be taken by the county clerk,—the county clerk may approve a bond on appeal from a commissioner.—Cole v. Donovan, 106 Mich. 692, 64 N. W. 741.

[g] (N. J. 1836) A justice of the peace is the proper judge of the sufficiency of an appeal bond filed in a case before him; and it is error for the common pleas to require him to send up an appeal, without proof that an appeal has been legally taken.—Stull v. Abbott, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 338.

[h] (N. Y. 1845) A peremptory mandamus will be allowed to compel a court of common pleas to approve a new appeal bond, where the bond returned by the justice is not approved by him, or is approved by an officer who is not authorized under the law "of appeals to the court of common pleas."—People v. Judges of Niagara County Common Pleas, 1 How. Prac. 196.

[i] (N. Y. 1884) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1350, requiring an undertaking on appeal from a justice to be approved by the justice or by a judge of the appellate court, such approval is necessary before the bond is delivered.—Ross v. Markham, 5 Civ. Proc. R. 81.

[j] (Pa. 1827) If the justice erroneously reject a recognizance offered within 20 days, he may correct the mistake by receiving it afterwards, and the appeal will be good.—Noble v. Honk, 16 Serg. & R. 421.

[k] (Tex. 1885) Where, on appeal from the judgment of a justice, his transcript shows that the appeal bond was approved, it is unnecessary that the approval be indorsed on the bond, and that it be marked "Filed."—Whitman Agricultural Co. v. Voss, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 648.

[l] (Tex. 1885) Where the bond on appeal from the judgment of a justice is neither approved nor filed, and the record contains nothing from which its verity or authenticity can be presumed, it will not be considered.—Whitman Agricultural Co. v. Voss, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 549.

[m] (Tex. 1886) It is the duty of a justice, when an appeal bond is presented to him, to either approve or reject it.—Jones v. Wells, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 95.

[n] (Wis. 1855) Where a party, appealing from the judgment of a justice of the peace, entered into a recognizance before another justice, who certified in the usual form that the opposite party was satisfied with the surety, the recognizance was sufficient.—Ganet v. Mears, 4 Wis. 306.

§ 571. —— Acts constituting approval and indorsement of approval.

[a] (Ind. 1845) The filing of an appeal bond, with the transcript, etc., in the clerk's office, by the justice, in the case of an appeal, is prima facie evidence that he had approved of the bond.—Lacy v. Fairman, 7 Blackf. 558.

[b] (Ind. 1886) Where, on appeal to the circuit court from a justice's judgment, it does not appear that the appeal bond was filed with the justice, or approved by him, parol evidence is admissible to show the facts.—McCrory v. Anderson, 103 Ind. 12, 2 N. E. 211.

[c] (Neb. 1895) A bond on appeal from a justice of the peace to the district court is approved by the justice if he receives it, examines it, and expresses himself as "satisfied," and retains it in his custody.—Bingham v. Shadle, 45 Neb. 82, 63 N. W. 143.

[d] (N. H. 1854) Where, upon an appeal being taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the principal and sureties presented themselves before the magistrate to recognize as required by statute, and he, with their assent and in their presence, made an entry upon his docket of an appeal and of their recognizing as principal and sureties, it was held that the appeal and recognizance were sufficiently taken.—Ballou v. Smith, 29 N. H. (9 Fost.) 530.

[e] (N. Y. 1824) The justice's approbation of the appeal bond may be inferred from the act of filing it; and the appellee cannot object to a hearing of the appeal because the justice has not indorsed his approbation on the bond, nor because he has not filed it within the time required by the act.—Sholts v. Judges of Yates County, 2 Cow. 506.

[f] (N. Y. 1827) The justice need not indorse his approval of the surety within any particular time. He may approve before the bond is executed, and indorsed after the 10 days allowed for the appeal.—People v. Judges of Dutchess County, 7 Cow. 487.

[g] (Tex. 1885) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, where the bond was not approved or marked "Filed," but the record disclosed its approval, the appellant is entitled to have the justice approve and file the same nunc pro tunc.—Whitman Agricultural Co. v. Voss, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 553.

[h] (Tex. 1885) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, where the appeal bond erroneously appears to have been executed, approved, and filed on a day prior to that in which judgment was rendered, the appellant is entitled to have the justice indorse his approval on the bond nunc pro tunc as of the proper date.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Hodge, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 620.

[i] (Tex. 1886) The approval of an appeal bond is directory, and the bond is not a nullity because the justice neglects to indorse his approval upon it.—Jones v. Wells, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 95.

[j] (Tex. 1886) The entry upon an appeal bond that it is approved is not a judicial, but a clerical, act, and the omission to make the entry does not affect the validity of the bond.—Jones v. Wells, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 95.

[k] (Tex. 1887) That the approval by a justice of an appeal bond is not dated will not affect its validity, where it is filed within proper time.—Jones v. Spann, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 283.

[l] (Tex. 1889) Where the appeal bond had been delivered to the justice, and by him approved in due time, but he failed to mark it filed and approved, he should be permitted by the county court to do so nunc pro tunc.—Muller v. Humphreys (App.) 14 S. W. 1068.

[m] (Wis. 1855) If the party taking an appeal from a justice of the peace does everything required of him by the statute to perfect his appeal, but the magistrate neglects to make his indorsement of satisfaction as to the surety, the appeal ought not to be dismissed as imperfectly executed.—Shiff v. Brownell, 4 Wis. 285.

[n] (Wyo. 1879) The statute requiring approval by justice of appeal bond is complied with when the record shows that the justice received the undertaking and allowed the appeal.—Jenkins v. Emery, 2 Wyo. 58.

§ 572. —— Effect of approval

[a] The judgment of a justice of the peace as to the sufficiency of the sureties in an appeal recognizance is final.

—(Me. 1851) Wood v. Estes, 33 Me. 578;
(Tex. 1887) Pickle v. Abbott, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 345.

[b] (Ill. 1843) Where a party, appealing from a judgment of a justice of the peace, has entered into bond, which is approved and accepted by the justice, the appeal is taken.—Little v. Smith, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 400; Ewing v. Bailey, Id. 420.

[c] (Ill. 1875) When an appeal bond is accepted and approved by the justice, even if it is defective, the appeal is nevertheless taken from the judgment, and it is the duty of the opposite party to follow the case to the appellate court. If he is not satisfied with the bond, he can obtain a rule to file a sufficient bond, and, in default thereof, the appeal can be dismissed.—Miller v. Superior Mach. Co., 79 Ill. 450.

[d] (Tex. 1890) The surety on the appeal bond need not be a resident of the county where the judgment was rendered; and, where the justice of the peace has approved the bond, the solvency of the sureties need not be shown by certificate or otherwise.—Fuerman v. Ruhle (App.) 16 S. W. 536.

[e] (Tex. 1893) The fact that an appeal bond given by plaintiff on appeal from a justice's court is signed by one of the defendants as surety is no ground for dismissing the appeal, since the approval of the bond by the justice determines the sufficiency of the surety.—Voss v. Feurmann (Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 936.

§ 573. Amendment and new security in general.

Amendment of bond by release of surety to become witness, see "Witnesses," II. (B).

[a] On motion to quash an appeal from a justice of the peace on the ground of a defective recognizance, the appellant should be permitted to amend it, and thus perfect his appeal.

—(Ark. 1883) Morrison v. State, 40 Ark. 448; (Miss. 1883) Gaddis v. Palmer, 60 Miss. 758; (Pa. 1841) Bream v. Spangler, 1 Watts & S. 378.

[b] (Ala. 1847) An appeal from a justice of the peace should not be quashed for a defect in the bond, unless the appellant, upon being required by the court, fails or refuses to execute a perfect one.—Carter v. Pickard, 11 Ala. 673.

[c] (Ala. 1851) It is erroneous to dismiss an appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court on account of a defect in the appeal bond, when the appellant offers to execute a new and sufficient bond and proceed to trial forthwith.—Appleton v. Turrentine, 19 Ala. 706.

[d] (Ark. 1846) On appeal from a justice of the peace, the circuit court may take a recognizance for the appeal only when no recognizance, or a defective one, was taken below.—Miller v. Heard, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 50.

[e] (Ill.) In appeals from justices of the peace, if the bond is insufficient, the statute is imperative that the court shall permit a good and sufficient bond to be filed. Gale's St. p. 409.—(1836) Dedman v. Barber, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 254; (1838) Hubbard v. Freer, Id. 467.

[f] (Ill. 1851) Where a party, by himself or his agent, undertakes to appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace, and executes a bond which is accepted, the appeal shall be sustained, if he will supply any defect in the bond, when objection is made thereto.—Trustees of Schools v. Starbird, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 49.

[g] (Ill. 1858) An appellant from a decision of a justice of the peace, in a trial of the right of property, having filed a defective bond, may have leave to amend it in the appellate court.—Patty v. Winchester, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 261.

[h] (Ill. 1876) It is within the discretion of the circuit court, on appeal from a justice, to require appellant to file an additional bond.—Bennett v. Pierson, 82 Ill. 424.

[i] (Ill. 1889) Where a party, on appealing to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, files an imperfect appeal bond, it is error to dismiss the appeal before rule on appellant to file a sufficient bond.—Murphy v. Consolidated Tank Line Co., 32 Ill. App. 612.

[j] (Ind. 1864) Where an appeal is prayed from the judgment of a justice of the peace within the time limited by law, and a bond signed by the surety, but not by the principal, is filed and approved by the justice, the appellant is entitled to his appeal, and the subsequent withdrawal of the bond to procure its execution by the principal, and its absence from the files until after the expiration of the time limited for an appeal, will not devest the party's right to the appeal.—Hollensbe v. Thomas, 22 Ind. 375.

[k] (Me. 1878) A magistrate may, with the permission of the court, amend a recognizance returned by him, or make a new return, more fully and correctly to set forth the undertaking.—Ingalls v. Chase, 68 Me. 113.

[l] (Mo. 1863) By the Revised Code, an appellant from a justice's court may file a new or amended affidavit and recognizance in the appellate court.—Williams v. Watson, 34 Mo. 95.

[m] (Neb. 1888) On appeal from a justice to the district court, appellee at a succeeding term obtained an order that appellant give an additional undertaking within 25 days, or his appeal be dismissed. No undertaking was filed, but at the next term appellant made showing that his undertaking was sufficient, and asked for further time to file an additional one, if required. Held no error to grant this request, the first order not having been obeyed, and the court not having lost jurisdiction.—Robare v. Kendall, 22 Neb. 677, 35 N. W. 940.

[n] (N. Y.) The common pleas have no jurisdiction of an appeal case, unless the proceedings required by section 36 of the $50 act (Acts 47th Sess. c. 238), relative to the appeal bond, etc., are strictly complied with. That court cannot amend the bond; nor can it acquire jurisdiction (when the bond, etc., is defective) by consent of parties, and by their proceeding to trial. A judgment given in such case has no effect.—(1825) Ex parte Chryslin, 4 Cow. 80; (1827) Ex parte Alvord, 6 Cow. 585; (1827) Ex parte Brown, 7 Cow. 468; (1828) Latham v. Edgerton, 9 Cow. 227.

[o] (Pa. 1831) Where judgment was obtained before a justice, and bail for an appeal was entered on the twentieth day, and was excepted to and struck off, and other bail entered on a following day, the court would not dismiss the appeal on motion.—Dickinson v. McGuire, 1 Ashm. 47.

[p] (Pa. 1865) On the trial of an appeal from the judgment of a magistrate, new bail may, if necessary, be substituted on trial.—Hill v. Schucker, 1 Woodw. Dec. 251.

[q] (Pa. 1869) Where a bond on appeal from a judgment of a justice is defective, the appellant may file a new bond, if he files it within the 20 days after the rendition of the judgment by the justice, and thereby perfect the appeal.—Gehring v. Lambert, 1 Leg. Gaz. 85.

[r] (Pa. 1879) If the recognizance for an appeal be defective, the appellant should have leave to perfect the same.—Tripp v. Barnes, 1 Law T. (N. S.) 73.

[s] (Pa. 1883) If defective bail be entered, the appellant will be given time to perfect it before his appeal will be stricken off.—Repp v. Coal Co., 5 Law T. (N. S.) 77.

§ 574. Defects which may be amended or corrected.

[a] (Cal. 1882) Upon an appeal from a justice's court, the superior court has power to authorize the appellant to file a new undertaking, in lieu of an undertaking insufficient in form.—Gray v. Amador County Superior Court, 61 Cal. 337.

[b] (Conn. 1866) An appeal was taken from a justice of the peace to the superior court, and a bond properly taken on the appeal by a recognizance; but the justice, in afterwards writing out the bond, described the court to which the appeal was taken as the county court instead of the superior court. Held, that the mistake was a clerical one that could be amended, and did not invalidate the appeal.—Russell v. Monson, 33 Conn. 506.

[c] (Ill. 1866) Rev. St. p. 325, § 65, permitting a bond on appeal from justice court to be amended in the appellate court, authorizes the amendment in the appellate court of the justice's approval of the bond by attaching a revenue stamp.—Hinman v. Kitterman, 40 Ill. 253.

[d] (Ill. 1866) Under Rev. St. p. 325, § 65, permitting appeal bonds from justice's court to be amended, all defects which are not jurisdictional may be corrected by amendment.—Hinman v. Kitterman, 40 Ill. 253.

cuit court to amend his appeal bond, to correct a misrecital in the date of the judgment.—Stilley v. King, 3 Ill. App. (3 Bradw.) 338.

[f] (Iowa, 1855) Where an appeal bond, in which the names of the parties before the justice are transposed, appears on the record to be given in the cause appealed, the district court by Code, § 2511, may allow the defect to be corrected.—Brock v. Manatt, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 128.

[g] (Kan. 1892) Gen. St. 1889, par. 1395, provides that an appeal from an award of damages by commissioners in railroad condemnation proceedings may be taken to the district court in the same manner as an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace. Paragraph 4973 provides that the party appealing from a judgment of a justice of the peace shall, within 10 days from its rendition, enter into an undertaking to the adverse party, with at least one surety, to be approved by such justice, in a sum not less than $50 in any case, nor less than double the amount of the judgment and costs, conditioned to prosecute the appeal to effect, etc. Paragraph 4974 provides that the appeal shall be complete on the filing and approval of the undertaking, as provided in paragraph 4973. Held, that an appeal bond in condemnation proceedings which was signed by the surety only, and which left blank the amount of the penalty, was void, and that the district court did not acquire sufficient jurisdiction by the attempt to permit the bond to be amended by inserting the amount.—St. Louis, K. & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Morse, 50 Kan. 99, 31 Pac. 676.

[h] (Mich. 1873) Under Comp. Laws 1871, §§ 5451, 5453, an appeal from a justice of the peace cannot be dismissed absolutely for defects and informalities in the affidavit and bond for appeal, where the applicant tenders a new and proper affidavit and bond.—People v. Judge of Wayne Circuit Court, 27 Mich. 303.

[i] (Ohio, 1883) Rev. St. § 6595, provides that in proceedings on appeal, when the surety in the undertaking shall be insufficient, or such undertaking is insufficient in form or amount, the court, on motion, may order a change or renewal of such undertaking. On appeal from a justice, a bank check was deposited with him by the appellant, payable "to the justice of the peace, appeal, or order," and thereupon the ordinary form of an undertaking for appeal was written out by the justice on his docket, but was not signed by any one, and the certificate added and signed by the justice that the check was received as bond, and was approved. Held, that it did not constitute an undertaking for appeal, and that the court of common pleas had no authornty to allow the filing of a new undertaking, but was without jurisdiction to proceed.—Allen v. Walnut Hills, M. & P. Turnpike Co., 9 Ohio Dec. 322, 12 Wkly. Law Bul. 168.

[j] (Or. 1885) Under Justices' Code, §§ 7-9, an appeal cannot be dismissed on motion of the defendant, on account of the undertaking being defective, when such defect was merely technical, and when the appellant, before the determination of the motion to dismiss, offered to file a new undertaking, and it was not necessary, under the statute, that such undertaking should be served on the adverse party.—Hosford v. Logus, 13 Or. 130, 11 Pac. 900.

[k] (Pa. 1878) On an appeal from a judgment of a magistrate, the recognizance to secure costs must be taken before the magistrate who rendered the judgment; but, where this has not been done, the court will permit appellant to perfect his recognizance, and will not strike off the appeal.—Insurance Co. v. Swaigert, 9 Lanc. Bar, 138.

[l] (Tex. 1896) A bond on appeal from a justice of the peace, which is made payable to the appellees or "their certain attorneys," is fatally defective, and cannot be amended.—Nones v. McGregor (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 1083.

§ 575. —— Defects in amount or condition of bond.

[a] (Dak. 1889) The fact that an undertaking on appeal from a justice's judgment to the district court omits the condition binding appellant to obey any order of the district court, in case it should dismiss the appeal or affirm the judgment, as required by Justices' Code, § 93, does not warrant the district court in dismissing the appeal, where appellant offers to amend the undertaking by inserting the omitted condition.—Keehl v. Schaller, 6 Dak. 499, 50 N. W. 195.

[b] (Ill. 1851) On an appeal from the judgment of a justice, the bond must be at least in twice the amount of that judgment. If not, the appeal should be dismissed; but the appellant may avoid the difficulty by executing a sufficient bond.—Brown v. Keirns, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 296.

[c, d] (Kan. 1894) Where an appeal bond, filed with and approved by a justice of the peace, is insufficient in form or amount, the party appealing should be given an opportunity by the district court, where the appeal is pending, to change or renew the bond before the case is dismissed for the defect therein.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hurst, 52 Kan. 609, 35 Pac. 211.

[e] (Mo. 1835) On appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, if the appeal bond is not sufficient, the appellant may be allowed to file a new appeal bond.—Jones v. Davis, 4 Mo. 28.

[f] (Mo. 1895) Where a bond is given on appeal from a justice, in an action for rent and possession, under Rev. St. § 6400, providing that no appeal shall be given defendant in such a case unless he give bond, with security, sufficient to secure all damages and rent due and to become due, a bond given in the court to which appeal is taken, under section 6340, providing that an appeal from a justice shall not be dismissed because the bond is insufficient, if appellant give such bond as he ought to have given before the allowance of the appeal, is in place of, not in addition to, the first bond.—Kellogg v. Linger, 60 Mo. App. 571, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 235.

[g] (Pa. 1883) Where an appeal was taken from a judgment of a justice of the peace, and a recognizance was entered and transcript taken out, but the plaintiff excepted to the sufficiency of the bail, and no new bail was furnished, the appeal was not to be stricken, but may be perfected in the common pleas.—Johnson v. Miller, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 148.

[h] (Pa. 1887) Where the amount of bail on appeal from a justice court was sufficient to cover the debt, but was not so conditioned, the defect may be remedied, and is not ground for dismissal of the appeal.—Lesch v. Turnpike Co., 1 Wilcox, 195.

[i] (S. D. 1892) When a motion to dismiss an appeal is made in the appellate court on the ground that the undertaking filed is insufficient, and the appeal appears to have been taken in good faith, the appellate court must permit appellant to file a new undertaking, and, when it is filed, deny the motion to dismiss.—Towle v. Bradley, 2 S. D. 472, 50 N. W. 1057, distinguishing Rudolph v. Herman (1891) 50 N. W. 833.

[j] (Tex. 1877) On an appeal from the justice's court, the county court cannot permit appellant to amend an appeal bond that is not conditioned as prescribed by statute.—Bremond v. Seeligson, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 637.

§ 576. —— Omission to give bond and defects relating to parties or sureties.

[a] (Ill. 1880) Where an appeal from a justice is taken by filing a bond in the appellate court, that court has no jurisdiction to enter an order requiring the surety on the bond to justify, or the defendant to file, a new bond, or, in default thereof, to dismiss the appeal.—Woodhull v. Kelly, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 323.

[b] (Ind. 1875) The provision in section 66 of the act concerning justices of the peace (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 595), that no appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court shall be dismissed for the insufficiency of the appeal bond, if the appellant will file a sufficient bond to the acceptance of the court, embraces an insufficiency of the bond caused by its being executed by the appellant alone without any surety.—Murphy v. Steele, 51 Ind. 81.

[c] (Kan. 1881) On an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the appeal bond was made to run to one not a party to the record or proceedings. Held that, no special equities being shown, the appeal could not be perfected by making a new bond to the right party; that this would be in the nature of an amendment, while there was nothing to amend.—Lovitt v. Wellington & W. R. Co., 26 Kan. 297.

[d] (Kan. 1885) When the surety on an appeal bond is disqualified, the appellate court may permit the bond to be corrected.—McClelland v. Allison, 34 Kan. 155, 8 Pac. 239.

[e] (Mo. 1846) Where, on appeal from a justice of the peace, it appears to the appellate court that the surety in the recognizance given below is insufficient, such court may require a new recognizance.—State v. Lavalley, 9 Mo. 834.

[f] (N. Y. 1865) Under Code Proc. § 327, providing that when a party shall in good faith give notice of appeal, and shall omit by mistake to do any other necessary act, the court may permit an amendment, where appellant, on appeal from a justice, fails to give security, the error is amendable by leave of the court.—Briggs v. Swales, 29 How. Prac. 201, 19 Abb. Prac. 323.

[g] (N. Y. 1869) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 355, requiring appellant, in cases where he is entitled to a trial de novo, to give security, an appellant who omits to give such security may, in the discretion of the appellate court, be permitted to give it nunc pro tunc.—Lake v. Kels, 11 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 37.

[h] (N. Y. 1884) Where an appeal is taken from a justice, and the undertaking required by Code Civ. Proc. § 3069, is given, and on objections to the sufficiency of the sureties they do not justify, the court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3049, can permit the appellants to give a new undertaking and perfect the appeal.—Ross v. Markham, 5 Civ. Proc. R. 81.

[i] (N. Y. 1892) A party appealing from a justice's court to the county court cannot be compelled to file a new undertaking in case of the death or insolvency of the surety to his original undertaking, either under Code Civ. Proc. § 1308, which is limited to appeals other than from justices' courts, or under section 3276, which applies only to the undertaking to secure costs required of plaintiffs in certain cases at the beginning of an action.—Bonnett v. Townsend, 63 Hun, 45, 17 N. Y. Supp. 566.

[j] (Or. 1886) Subdivision 4, § 527, Civ. Code, authorizing the filing of the undertaking on appeal where it has been omitted through mistake, does not apply to appeals from a justice's court. The undertaking in appeals from a justice of the peace must be filed within 30 days from the date of the entry of judgment.—Odell v. Gotfrey, 13 Or. 466, 11 Pac. 190.

[k] (Pa. 1872) Where an appeal was taken from a judgment of a justice of the peace, and the appellant did not file an appeal bond, on the ground that he was a freeholder, the court will not dismiss the appeal on account of such failure, but will permit him to file the requisite bond.—Fishburn v. Siffiers, 4 Leg. Op. 468.

[l] (Pa. 1880) Where an appeal was taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace, but no recognizance was given, on the ground that appellant was a freeholder and not required to give bail, the common pleas will allow the appeal to be perfected by giving proper security.—Davis v. Marra, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 328.

[m] (Pa. 1886) Where a defective recognizance has been entered into on an appeal from a justice's court, the appellant will be permitted to perfect it; or if, without fault of his, he has been prevented from appealing by the act of the justice, an appeal will be allowed nunc pro tunc, if asked for in reasonable time.—McElhaney v. Holland, 111 Pa. 634, 5 Atl. 731.

[n] (Tex. 1895) On appeal to the district court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, refusal to allow the appellant to substitute a competent surety on the appeal bond for one whom the court has declared incompetent is error.—Peoples v. Rodgers, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 32 S. W. 798.

[o] (Wis. 1841) Rev. St. p. 322, § 12, provides that no appeal allowed by a justice shall be dismissed on account of there being no recognizance, or that the recognizance is defective if the appellant will, before motion to dismiss, enter before the district court into such recognizance as he ought to have entered into before the allowance of the appeal, and pay all costs that shall be incurred by reason of such default or omission. Held that, where appellant failed to execute a recognizance before taking such appeal, it would not avail him to offer to file a sufficient recognizance in the district court. The statute must be complied with by actually filing such recognizance and paying costs before the motion to dismiss is disposed of.—Kensler v. Brunett, 1 Pin. 112.

§ 577. Procedure for amendment or correction of bond.

[a] (Cal.) Where, on appeal from a justice court, the sufficiency of the sureties on appellant's undertaking is excepted to, and he files a new undertaking, with other sureties, but gives no notice, as required by statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 978), the appeal must be dismissed.—(1885) Wood v. Monterey County Superior Court, 67 Cal. 115, 7 Pac. 200; (1886) Herting v. Santa Barbara Superior Court, 10 Pac. 514.

[b] (Conn. 1852) The proper mode of taking objection to an error in a bond on appeal from a justice court is by plea in abatement.—Ives v. Finch, 22 Conn. 101.

[c] (Ill. 1865) On appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, if the bond filed in the cause is adjudged informal, or otherwise insufficient, it is the duty of the court to enter a rule against the appellant that, unless he file a sufficient bond by a day named by the court, the appeal will be dismissed.—Wear v. Killeen, 38 Ill. 259.

[d] (Ind. 1882) Where an appeal bond has been taken by a justice of the peace, he loses jurisdiction, and remedy for any defect therein must be sought in the court to which the appeal was taken.—Miller v. O'Reilly, 84 Ind. 168.

[e] (Mo. 1863) In proceedings in the St. Louis land court on appeal from a justice of the peace, the fact that appellee's second motion to dismiss the appeal (the first being overruled) was placed on the court's law docket will not be sufficient notice to him that on the ex parte hearing of the second motion he was adjudged to furnish additional security for his appeal. Hence his failure to furnish it will not be ground for dismissal.—Papin v. Buckingham, 33 Mo. 454.

[f] (Neb. 1896) If the court is satisfied of the insufficiency of the appeal undertaking, it is proper practice to fix the time within which a renewal shall be effected, and to enter a dismissal of the action for a noncompliance with such order.—Galligher v. Wolf, 47 Neb. 589, 66 N. W. 645.

[g] (Neb. 1896) If, in an appeal to the district court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the appeal bond is believed to be insufficient, it is proper, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1016, for the appellee to file a motion asking the court to order a change or renewal of such undertaking.—Galligher v. Wolf, 47 Neb. 589, 66 N. W. 645.

[h] (Pa. 1894) Where the bond in an appeal from a justice is defective, appellant should be called upon by rule to perfect it.—Steam Heat & Power Co. v. Hutchinson (Com Pl.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 491.

[i] (Pa. 1895) Where the recognizance for an appeal from a justice of the peace is defective, appellant should be called upon by rule to perfect the same within a given period, and it is error to quash the appeal until this has been done.—Twyford v. Dyer (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 28, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 714.

[j] (S. D. 1893) Where an appeal from a justice court has been dismissed for want of a good bond, it is proper to refuse an application to amend the bond, so long as the judgment of dismissal remains in force.—Rudolph v. Herman, 4 S. D. 430, 57 N. W. 65.

[k] (S. D. 1893) It is proper to refuse to allow the application, though the motion contains a prayer for general relief, under which the court might vacate the judgment, if it were asked to do so.—Rudolph v. Herman, 4 S. D. 430, 57 N. W. 65.

§ 578. Waiver of defects in bond and delay in filing.

[a] (Conn. 1852) Where plaintiff without objection suffered an appeal to be taken from a justice court, the bond to be filed, the case to be entered and continued for several terms, and his attorney's appearance entered, he will be deemed to have waived objections to the bond, and cannot first raise the same on the eve of the trial.—Ives v. Finch, 22 Conn. 101.

[b] (Conn. 1852) The provision of St. 1849, p. 67, requiring a bond with surety to be filed on appeal from a justice court, being solely for the benefit of the appellee, he may waive the same.—Ives v. Finch, 22 Conn. 101.

[c] (Ill. 1895) Where a bond on appeal was executed in compliance with the order of the county court, and was duly approved by the county judge, an objection thereto will not be entertained after the case has been submitted to a jury.—Matlock v. Pray, 61 Ill. App. 102.

[d] (Kan. 1887) Where, in an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the district court, an appeal bond was filed with the justice, more than 10 days after the judgment, the appellee does not waive the defects of the appeal by appearing in the district court for the purpose of questioning the jurisdiction of the court.—Bubb v. Cain, 37 Kan. 692, 16 Pac. 89.

[e] (Mass. 1861) The omission to move in the superior court for the dismissal of an appeal from the judgment of the justices, on charges of fraud alleged against a debtor on his application to take the poor debtor's oath, is a waiver of formal objections to the recognizance entered into by the creditor on his appeal.—Brown v. Tobias, 83 Mass. (1 Allen) 385.

[f] (Mich. 1895) After a general appearance on appeal from a justice of the peace, a party is not entitled, in response to a motion for security for costs, to have the appeal dismissed because the sureties on the appeal bond did not justify before the justice, as required by How. Ann. St. § 7000.—Sherwood v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 107 Mich. 136, 64 N. W. 1045.

[ff] (Miss. 1852) After the term of the circuit court to which an appeal is taken from a justice of the peace, it is too late to move the court to dismiss the appeal for the insufficiency of the appeal bond, provided the bond be voidable only, and not void.—Battle v. Woolf, 23 Miss. (1 Cushm.) 318.

[g] (Mo. 1894) On appeal from a justice's court, where the appellee appears to the merits without objection, he waives objections to the formality of the appeal bond and the validity of the order of the justice.—Long Bros. v. Bolen Coal Co., 56 Mo. App. 605.

[h] (N. H. 1855) The provision of the statute requiring sureties on a recognizance on appeal from a judgment of a justice in a civil cause may be waived by the appellee.—Farnam v. Davis, 32 N. H. 302.

[i] (N. H. 1855) The objection to a want of sureties on a recognizance on appeal from a justice in a civil cause is waived, if appellee appears at the term at which the appeal is entered, and the cause be continued without a motion to dismiss.—Farnam v. Davis, 32 N. H. 302.

[j] (N. Y. 1825) The court may refuse to proceed, for want of jurisdiction, if they become satisfied, during the trial, that the appeal bond was executed without authority, as the want of jurisdiction was not waived by going to trial.—Ex parte Shethar, 4 Cow. 540.

[k] (Pa. 1813) If special bail on an appeal is informally taken, and the plaintiff moves to quash the appeal, and afterwards appears before arbitrators and pleads his cause, the informality is waived.—Cavence v. Butler, 6 Bin. 52.

[l] (Pa. 1826) Motion to dismiss an appeal from a justice, on the ground of the recognizance being defective, not made until May, 1823, while the appeal was entered August term, 1821, is too late.—Shank v. Warfel, 14 Serg. & R. 205.

[m] (S. D. 1892) Where, on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, an undertaking to pay costs on appeal has not been filed under Comp. St. § 6133, providing that an appeal is ineffectual for any purpose unless such an undertaking is filed, the appellate court acquires no jurisdiction, even though the appellee may have consented to the undertaking that was filed as sufficient.—Rudolph v. Herman, 2 S. D. 399, 50 N. W. 833.

[n] (S. D. 1892) Comp. Laws, § 6133, providing for undertakings on appeal from justices' courts, does not require that an affidavit of the sureties be made unless the adverse party excepts to the sureties, in which case it provides that, "unless they or other sureties justify before the justice before whom the appeal is taken within five days thereafter, upon notice to the adverse party, to the amounts stated in their affidavits, the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given." Held, that the exception to sureties so provided for is limited to their pecuniary responsibility, and not to their ability to become sureties, and a failure to except to the sufficiency of an attorney as a surety is no waiver of the right to object to the undertaking, on the ground that by section 469 attorneys are prohibited from becoming sureties.—Towle v. Bradley, 2 S. D. 472, 50 N. W. 1057.

[o] (Tex. 1890) An affidavit in forma pauperis not conforming to Rev. St. 1879, art. 1401, will not perfect an appeal from a justice's court, and it may be dismissed for want of jurisdiction after several continuances have been had in the county court.—Golightly v. Irvine (App.) 15 S. W. 48.

[p] (Tex. 1891) On appeal by defendants from a justice's court, plaintiff appeared in the district court and amended his original account, and, after allowing several terms of the district court to pass, moved to dismiss the appeal for formal defects in the appeal bond. Held, that plaintiff's acts constituted a waiver of such objections to the bond.—Cason v. Laney, 82 Tex. 317, 18 S. W. 667.

§ 579. Necessity of notice of appeal.

Notice of appeal as prerequisite to judgment by default, see post, § 723.

[a] (U. S. 1824) Where an appeal from a justice of the peace is prayed on the day of the trial before him, a notice of appeal is not necessary under Geyer's Dig. Ark. p. 391.—Billingsley v. Bell, Fed. Cas. No. 18,237 (Hemp. 24).

[b] (U. S. 1825) The opposite party is entitled to notice of an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, when not taken on the day of trial.—Sinclair v. McElmurry, Fed. Cas. No. 12,895a [1 Hemp. 28].

[c] (Ala. 1893) Under Code, § 3403, relating to notice of appeal from justices' courts, which provides that the justice must issue a notice of the appeal to the appellee, which must be executed by personal service five days before the return term of the appeal, and returned to the clerk of the court to which the appeal is taken, it was error to dismiss a suit for want of prosecution on appeal by defendant to the circuit court, taken two weeks after such court convened, in the absence of proof of service on appellee of such notice.—Murphy v. Wood, 103 Ala. 638, 16 South. 22.

[d] (Ill. 1874) Where an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is taken and perfected before the justice, no summons or other notice to the appellee is required.—Fix v. Quinn, 75 Ill. 232.

[e] (Ill. 1878) On a plaintiff's appeal, perfected before the justice, from a judgment dismissing the suit, no notice to the defendant is necessary.—Reiman v. Ater, 88 Ill. 299.

[f] (Iowa, 1858) To give the district court jurisdiction of the appeal, it must appear either that the appellee had notice of the appeal, according to Code, §§ 2341, 2342, or that he voluntarily appeared.—Quillan v. Windsor, 6 Iowa (6 Clarke) 396.

[g] (Iowa, 1873) The statute relative to appeals does not require notice to the appellee to perfect an appeal from a justice; nor does a failure to give such notice authorize a dismissal of the appeal.—Bond v. Davis, 37 Iowa, 163.

[h] (Minn. 1876) Under Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 104, which provides that no appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace shall be allowed unless certain requisites are complied with, including the filing of an affidavit, the execution of a bond, service of a notice of appeal, and the filing of such notice with proof of service within 10 days, such filing of the notice and proof of service is jurisdictional, and an appeal appearing from the justice's docket to have been allowed on the affidavit and bond alone is ineffectual.—Marsile v. Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co., 23 Minn. 4.

[i] (Mo. 1851) Under Rev. Code 1845, notice of an appeal from a justice's court is still necessary, although a continuance has been granted at the first term in the court of common pleas for the want of it. An appeal is never properly ready for trial until notice thereof has been given to the appellee, or he has done some act from which such notice may be presumed, or the want of it is waived.—McCabe v. Lecompte, 15 Mo. 78.

[j] (Mo. 1874) Where an appeal is taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace on a day subsequent to the date of the judgment, the appellant will not be excused for failure to notify the appellee by reason of irregular entries made by the clerk at the return term of the circuit court, where no appearance is entered by the appellee and no record entry made to that effect.—McGregor v. Leighton, 57 Mo. 597.

[k] (Mo. 1891) When an appeal from a justice is not allowed on the same day the judgment is rendered, appellant must notify the other party of the appeal before the second term of the circuit court thereafter; otherwise, the appeal should be dismissed, or the judgment affirmed.—Crosby v. Clary, 43 Mo. App. 222.

[l] (Mo. 1894) Under Rev. St. 1879 § 6337, the failure of a justice of the peace to file his transcript does not affect an appeal taken from his judgment, or excuse appellant for failing to give notice of the appeal as required by sections 6342, 6344.—Studer v. Federle, 57 Mo. App. 534.

[m] (Neb. 1894) On an appeal to a district court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, appellant need not give notice of the appeal to his adversary.—McBrien v. Riley, 38 Neb. 561, 57 N. W. 385.

[n] (N. Y. 1848) Code, § 304, requiring the appellant, on appeal from a judgment of a justice, to serve with the affidavit of appeal a notice thereof and of the hearing before the county judge, must be complied with to make an appeal effectual.—Purdy v. Harrison, 1 Code Rep. 54.

[o] (N. C. 1882) An appeal must be taken to the next term of the appellate court; and it is therefore error to proceed in a case on appeal from a justice's court taken after that time, in the absence of notice to the appellee that he may show cause against it.—Hahn v. Guilford, 87 N. C. 172.

[p] (Pa. 1864) Where defendant in an action before a justice of the peace is appellant on appeal from the judgment, and plaintiff appears neither by counsel nor in person, actual notice of the appeal must be given him before a judgment can be taken against him for want of a declaration.—Henry v. Rowe, 1 Woodw. Dec. 173.

[q] (Pa. 1864) Where plaintiff appeals from a judgment of a justice, defendant must be brought into the appellate court by notice of appeal before any step beyond the filing of the declaration can be taken in the action.—Henry v. Rowe, 1 Woodw. Dec. 173.

§ 580. Authority to give notice.

[a] (Cal. 1887) Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 842, 974, which provide that the party, or any person he may select for the purpose, may sign the notice, a notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice's court may be signed by other attorneys than those who appeared for appellant in the justice's court.—Totton v. Sonoma County Superior Court, 72 Cal. 37, 13 Pac. 72.

[b] (N. Y. 1866) A notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice's court to the county court, signed, "M. S., Defendant, by W. J. S., His Attorney," is valid, though W. J. S. is not an attorney at law.—Hall v. Sawyer, 47 Barb. 116.

[c] (N. Y. 1881) Under Code, § 3046, a notice of appeal from a justice's judgment is properly entitled as a mandate in the county court, and may be signed by the appellant's attorney at law without proof of his authority; but it cannot be signed by his attorney in fact, or agent, as such.—Bishop v. Van Vechten, 62 How. Prac. 261, 10 Abb. N. C. 220.

[d] (Wis. 1869) That a statute requires notice of an appeal from a justice of the peace or an affidavit to be executed for appellant by some one "by him authorized" does not of necessity require proof of the authority of the agent or attorney on the face of the papers.—Benjamin v. Houston, 24 Wis. 309.

[e] (Wis. 1884) On an appeal from a justice of the peace, the notice of appeal must be signed by the appellant, or some one in his behalf, or, if not signed, the record must show that the notice was presented to the justice by the appellant or some one authorized by him.—Evangelical Lutheran St. Peter's Soc. v. Koehler, 59 Wis. 650, 18 N. W. 476.

§ 581. Parties entitled to notice.

[a] (Cal. 1895) On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace by defendants against whom the judgment was rendered, other defendants jointly liable, but not served, are not adverse parties, on whom the notice of appeal must be served.—Terry v. Superior Court of San Diego County, 110 Cal. 85, 42 Pac. 464.

[b] (Tex. 1885) Rev. St. art. 1638, providing for notice in the county court of an appeal from justice court, applies alone to the party against whom the appeal is taken.—Curtis v. Bernstein, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 673.

§ 582. Filing and service of notice.

Service of petition for appeal, see ante, § 521.

[a] (Cal. 1887) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 974, which provides that an appeal from a justice's court to the superior court shall be taken "by filing a notice of appeal with the justice, and serving a copy on the adverse party," and section 978, which relates to the undertaking on such appeal, it is not necessary that the notice and undertaking should be filed before service thereof.—Hall v. El Dorado County Superior Court, 71 Cal. 550, 12 Pac. 672.

[b] (Mo. 1887) The notice required by Rev. St. §§ 3055, 3057, in the case of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, is not process in any legal sense; and, since the statute does not devolve on the sheriff the duty to serve the notice and make return, or declare what force and effect such return should have, the return of such a notice by the sheriff is not even prima facie evidence of the facts recited by him in the return.—Horton v. Kansas City, Ft. Scott & Gulf R. Co., 26 Mo. App. 349.

[d] (Neb. 1871) On appeal from a mayor to a district court, a statement in the mayor's transcript of the proceedings, which states that after rendition of judgment the appellant "gave notice of an appeal to the district court the same day," is sufficient to establish a notice given in open court at the time of the rendition of the judgment.—Newcomb v. Boulware, 1 Neb. 428.

[e] (N. Y. 1886) The tender of a notice of appeal to a justice, who refuses to receive it, but who accepts it as sufficient service, is good ground for an order of the county court permitting appellant to perfect his appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 3049; the tender of the notice in such case being sufficient to save the right of appeal.—Gray v. Wolcott, 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 129.

[f] (N. C. 1891) Service of the notice of appeal was made by one not an officer. Code, § 597, regulates the manner of service of notices, and subdivision 4 provides that a subpœna may be served by a person not an officer. Held, that service of the notice should have been made by an officer.—State v. Johnson, 109 N. C. 852, 13 S. E. 843.

[g] (Or. 1887) Under the state practice, upon an appeal from a justice's court the appellant cannot personally serve the notice of appeal.—Williams v. Schmidt, 14 Or. 470, 13 Pac. 305.

[h] (Or. 1888) Under Hill's Code, § 2119, requiring the notice of appeal to be filed with the justice "with the proof of service indorsed thereon," filing a notice without such proof of service is ineffectual for any purpose.—Henness v. Wells, 16 Or. 266, 19 Pac. 121, following Briney v. Starr (1876) 6 Or. 207.

[i] (Wash. 1869) An appeal from a justice's court will not be dismissed because of slight discrepancies between the notice of appeal served on the justice and the copy served on the appellee.—McKilver v. Manchester, 1 Wash. T. 255.

§ 583. —— Persons to be or who may be served.

Retroactive effect of statutes relating to service of notice of appeal, see ante, § 466.

[a] (Cal. 1856) Notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace may be served on the attorney of the adverse party.—Welton v. Garibardi, 6 Cal. 245.

[b] (Cal. 1889) Code Civ. Proc. § 974, providing that a notice of appeal from a justice to a superior court shall be served on the adverse party, is complied with by service on the manager of a corporation, for the corporation itself, as such notice is analogous to a summons which, under section 411, may be served on the managing agent of a corporation; the terms "manager" and "managing agent" being synonymous.—Pacific Coast Ry. Co. v. Superior Court of San Luis Obispo County, 79 Cal. 103, 21 Pac. 609.

[c] (Ill. 1894) On appeal from a justice's court, a notice served on the attorneys for the parties below is sufficient where the relation of attorney and client at the time of the service is not denied by affidavit, and the parties appear in the court without other notice.—Vallens v. Hopkins, 51 Ill. App. 337.

[d] (Ill. 1894) Where an attorney appeared for a party in a justice court, no formal retainer is necessary to constitute him the attorney for such party on appeal to the county court, since his retainer may be implied and notice of appeal may be served on him.—Johnston v. Brown, 51 Ill. App. 549.

[e] (Minn. 1891) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 114, providing that notice of appeal from justice's court shall be served by delivering to the opposite party a copy of the notice, or by leaving a copy at his residence, an affidavit of service of notice is sufficient which states that it had been served on the respondent "by delivering to and leaving with him, personally, a copy thereof, at his residence, in said township, by delivering to and leaving with his father" a true copy thereof.—Toner v. Advance Thresher Co., 45 Minn. 293, 47 N. W. 810.

[f] (Minn. 1892) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, allowing service of the notice of appeal from a justice's court to be made otherwise than personally, by leaving a copy of the notice "at the residence" of the person to be served, and making the filing of proof of service of the notice essential before the appeal can be allowed, such proof is insufficient and of no effect if it merely shows the delivery of a copy of the notice to the wife of the person to be served, without showing that such delivery was made at his residence.—Stolt v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 49 Minn. 353, 51 N. W. 1103.

[g] (Mo. 1890) Rev. St. § 3055, provides, with respect to notices of appeal from a judgment of a justice, that "the notice may be served in like manner as an original writ of summons; * * * and when the appellee does not reside in the county, and has no agent in the suit therein within the knowledge of the justice, the service may be by leaving a copy of such notice with the justice." Held, upon appeal from a judgment on a motion to quash a return, that service upon a person shown by the evidence to have been the attorney for the appellee in such motion was sufficient, the attorney being the agent of appellee, within the meaning of said statute.—Bensberg v. Turk, 40 Mo. App. 227.

[h] (Mo. 1891) Under Rev. St. 1879, § 3055, providing that on appeal from the justice's court, if appellee does not reside in the county, "and has no agent in the suit therein within the knowledge of the justice," notice of appeal may be served by leaving a copy with the justice, a notice of appeal left with the justice when he knows that appellees have an attorney attending to their interests in the suit is insufficient. The justice's act, in such case, is not judicial, but ministerial. He is a mere custodian of the notice.—Southard v. Nelson, 43 Mo. App. 210.

[i] (Mo. 1891) Rev. St. 1889, § 6342, provides that a notice of appeal from a judgment in a justice's court may be served in like manner as an original writ or summons, or by delivering a copy of the same to the appellee by any person competent to be sworn as a witness, or, "if the appellee shall have appeared to the suit before the justice, either by agent or attorney, said notice may be served on said agent or attorney." Held, that where a notice of appeal was served on an attorney employed to conduct the case for appellee in the circuit court, but who had not entered a general appearance, the notice gave the circuit court no jurisdiction.—Ellis v. Kyes, 47 Mo. App. 155.

[j] (N. Y. 1832) Notice of appeal, required to be served on a justice on making an appeal, may be served, in his absence, on a member of his family of suitable age.—People v. Ulster Common Pleas, 7 Wend. 492.

[k] (N. Y. 1849) On an appeal from a justice's court, it is not sufficient evidence of the nonresidence of a respondent that she could not be found at her place of residence, and that she could not be found by diligent search for 20 days; and service of notice of appeal on respondent's attorney was not sufficient.—Duffy v. Morgan, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 631.

[l] (N. Y. 1852) An appeal from the justice court is perfected by the service of the affidavit and notice of appeal on the justice, and service of appeal on the respondent, or his attorney, if the respondent is a nonresident.—Schermerhorn v. Golief, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 290.

[m] (N. Y. 1865) Where a notice of appeal from a justice's judgment, specifying the particulars in which the judgment should have been more favorable to the appellant, is served upon the respondent, the respondent, in serving his offer of acceptance, must not only serve it upon the party, but also upon the justice.—Smith v. Hinds, 30 How. Prac. 187.

[n] (N. Y. 1869) Code Civ. Proc. § 354, authorizing service of a notice of appeal on respondent's attorney or agent, if respondent does not reside or cannot be found in the county, permits such service only where the attorney or agent resides in the county where the judgment was rendered.—Lake v. Kels, 11 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 37.

[o] (N. Y. 1870) Notice of appeal from a justice's court must be served upon all the members of the board of commissioners of excise of a county, in order to constitute a legal service on the board, within section 354 of the Code of Civil Procedure.—Metcalf v. Garlinghouse, 40 How. Prac. 50.

[p] (N. Y. 1874) Where respondents in an appeal from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace are partners, service of notice of appeal upon one is notice to both.—Miller v. Perrine, 1 Hun, 620; Perrine v. Miller, 4 Thomp. & C. 36.

[q] (N. Y. 1884) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3048, providing that service of notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice must be made upon the respondent personally, if he is a resident of the county, an order by respondent, who is a resident of the county, permitting appellant to serve a notice of appeal upon his attorney, is of no avail, since it could not enlarge or limit the scope of the statute.—Andrews v. Snyder, 6 Civ. Proc. R. 333.

[r] (N. Y. 1884) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3048, requiring the notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice to be delivered to the respondent personally, or at his residence with a person of suitable age and discretion, if he is a resident of the county, service on his attorney, who appeared for him in the court below, is insufficient, although the appellant was of the opinion that he was not a resident of the county.—Andrews v. Snyder, 6 Civ. Proc. R. 333.

[s] (N. Y. 1886) The statute designates no person on whom notice of appeal from a justice's judgment may be served, after the appellee's death and before the appointment of an administrator. Held, that service on the widow, the justice, the county clerk, and the attorney who appeared before the justice is not legal service.—Clark v. Snyder, 40 Hun, 330.

[t] (N. Y. 1887) A judgment of the county court, rendered on appeal from a justice, will not be set aside because service of the notice of appeal was made merely on the appellee's attorney, where at the close of the trial before the justice appellant stated in the presence of appellee and his attorney that the case would be appealed, and the appellee told his attorney to attend to it, and the latter gave appellant a notice of retainer and appeared for the appellee on such appeal.—Bennett v. Kenyon, 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 496.

[u] (N. C.) Service of the notice of appeal on the justice did not obviate the necessity of service on defendant.—(1876) Green v. Hobgood, 74 N. C. 234; (1891) State v. Johnson, 109 N. C. 852, 13 S. E. 845.

[v] (Or. 1869) Under Code, p. 595, § 66, providing that the appeal in justice court shall be taken by serving a notice thereof on the adverse party and filing the original, the notice may be served either upon the party or on the attorney who appeared for him in the action, if such attorney resides in the county where the trial was had.—Carr v. Hurd, 3 Or. 160.

[w] (Or. 1886) On appeal from a justice's judgment, notice of the appeal need not be served on the attorney who represented the appellee before the justice.—Byers v. Cook, 13 Or. 297, 10 Pac. 417.

[x] (Or. 1895) Under Hill's Code, § 2119, which provides that notice of appeal from a judgment of a justice shall be served upon the adverse party, a notice served on his attorney is sufficient.—Dryden Printing Co. v. Reeves, 26 Or. 1145, 38 Pac. 622.

[y] (Or. 1895) A return of service of notice of appeal from a justice's judgment, which shows that the notice was served on appellee's attorney, established a valid service, in the absence of anything to show that such attorney was not a resident of the county in which the judgment was rendered.—Hughes v. Clemens, 28 Or. 440, 42 Pac. 617.

[z] (S. C. 1894) Code, § 360, provides that a notice of appeal from a justice of the peace must be served, in case respondent is not a resident of the county, on the agent, if any, "who is a resident of such county," and appeared for respondent on the trial, etc. Held that, where respondent was a nonresident, service of the notice on the agent who appeared for respondent, but who was also a nonresident of the county, was insufficient.—Sheldon v. Pearson, 42 S. C. 111, 20 S. E. 26.

§ 584. —— Time of giving or serving notice of appeal.

[a] (U. S. 1835) Where an appeal from a justice is not taken on the day of trial, 10 days' notice before the sitting of the next court authorized to try the same must be given to the opposite party.—Kirk v. Armstrong, Fed. Cas. No. 7,838a [Hemp. 283].

[b] (Idaho, 1886) To effectuate an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the notice of appeal must be filed with the justice, a copy of the same served on the adverse party, and the undertaking must be filed, and all these things must be done within 30 days after the rendition of the judgment, but the mere order in which they are done is not material.—Salt Lake Brewing Co. v. Gillman, 2 Idaho, 180, 10 Pac. 32.

[c] (Iowa, 1883) Under Code 1873, § 4691, providing that a prosecuting witness before a justice of the peace may appeal to the district court, "by there giving notice to the justice that he claims such appeal, and the fact of giving such notice shall be entered on his record by the justice," such notice must be given at the time the judgment is rendered.—State v. Knapf, 61 Iowa, 522, 16 N. W. 590.

[d] (Mo. 1883) Under Rev. St. § 3056, providing that if, on appeal from a justice of the peace, the appellant fail to give notice of his appeal at least 10 days before the first day of the term at which the cause is to be determined, the case may be tried at the option of the appellee, "but no appeal shall be dismissed for want of such notice," and section 3057, providing that, on failure to give such notice at least 10 days before the second term of the appellate court, after the appeal is taken the judgment shall be affirmed, it is error to affirm the judgment for want of such notice before the second term at which the cause is triable.—Davis v. Schields, 14 Mo App. 397.

[e] (Mo.) Under Rev. St. § 3056, providing that if appellant fail to give notice of appeal, when such notice was required, the cause shall, at the option of appellee, be tried at the first term, if he shall enter his appearance on or before the second day thereof, or at his instance shall be continued as a matter of course until the succeeding term, at cost of appellant, and section 3057, providing that, if appellant shall fail to give such notice at least 10 days before the second term of the appellate court after the appeal is taken, the judgment will be affirmed or the appeal dismissed, at the option of appellee, where appellant fails to give notice, and appellee enters his appearance on or before the second day of the term, the circuit court has no authority to affirm the judgment at the first term without giving appellant an opportunity to try the cause. It can only do so at the second term, where appellant fails to give such notice 10 days before the beginning of the term.—(1884) Dooley v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 83 Mo. 103; (1885) Priest v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 85 Mo. 521.

[f] (Mo. 1894) Where a change of venue of a case appealed from the justice's court was taken at the first term, after the appeal, of the court to which such appeal was returnable, and the first succeeding term of the court to which the venue was changed began several months afterwards, the latter constituted the second term of the appellate court for the purpose of notice of the appeal.—Evans v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 58 Mo. App. 427.

[g] (N. Y. 1848) Code, tit. 9, c. 5, provides the only mode of reviewing a judgment in a justice's court. Section 303 requires notice of appeal to be served within 10 days before the time for hearing the appeal. Held, that the words "therein designated" cannot be interpolated after the word "time," and hence the copy affidavit of the appellant and notice of appeal must be served within at least 10 days before the hearing of the appeal, and not 10 days merely before the time for the hearing designated in the notice; and, where a notice of appeal designates the time for the hearing within 10 days of the serving of a notice, the court will appoint another time, that due notice may be given.—Tullock v. Bradshaw, 1 Code Rep. 53.

[h] (N. Y. 1853) Notice of an appeal may be served as soon as the justice renders his judgment.—Griswold v. Van Deusen, 2 E. D. Smith, 178.

[i] (N. Y. 1879) Under the Code, as amended in 1851, notice of appeal is required to be served in 20 days to render effectual an appeal from a justice to the county court.—Thomas v. Thomas, 18 Hun, 481.

[j] (Or. 1890) Code, § 2119, providing that "an appeal [from a justice of the peace] is taken by serving a notice thereof on the adverse party, and filing the original, with proof of service indorsed thereon, with the justice, and by giving the undertaking for the costs of the appeal," does not in terms require that the notice of appeal be first filed; and hence an appeal is sufficient where the undertaking is filed before the notice, both being filed within 30 days after entry of judgment, as required by section 2118.—Brown v. Jessup, 19 Or. 288, 24 Pac. 232.

[k] (S. C. 1882) In order to perfect an appeal from a trial justice, notice of appeal must be served on the justice within the statutory five days.—Foot v. Williams, 18 S. C. 601.

[l] (Tex. 1881) A party cannot give notice of appeal from a justice's judgment after the court has adjourned and during vacation, though the motion for new trial was overruled in vacation; Rev. St. art. 1639, requiring the notice of appeal to be given at the same term at which the judgment is rendered.—Williams v. Dennis, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1233.

[m] (Tex. 1881) The requirement of Rev. St. art. 1639, that a notice of appeal should be filed within 10 days after the rendition of a judgment in a justice's court, is not affected by article 1622, giving the justice such time within which to act on a motion for new trial.—Bach v. Ginacchio, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1310.

§ 585. Effect of failure to give notice.

[a] (Ala. 1893) Code, § 3403, providing that notice of appeal from a justice must be served on appellee, is mandatory; and a judgment by default against the appellee will be reversed, unless the record affirmatively shows that such notice was given.—Hightower v. Crow, 102 Ala. 584, 15 South. 350.

[b] (Cal. 1885) If service of notice of appeal from a justice court was not made within the statutory time, and as required by statute, the appellate court has no jurisdiction, and may dismiss the appeal ex mero motu.—Dalzell v. San Benito County Superior Court, 67 Cal. 453, 7 Pac. 910.

[c] (Iowa, 1851) If an appeal from a justice is not taken on the day judgment is rendered, no valid judgment can be given in the district court without notice to the appellee or a waiver of it by his appearance.—McCormick v. Bishop, 3 G. Greene, 99.

[d] (Iowa, 1854) Where a decision of a justice of the peace was taken to the district court by writ of error, without any notice to the defendant, it was held that the judgment in the district court was a nullity.—Sprote v. Marshall, 4 G. Greene, 344.

[e] (Mo. 1847) Where an appeal is taken after the day of trial before a justice of the peace, and no notice given to the appellee, the cause will not be for trial at the first term, unless the appellee enters his appearance on the first day of the term.—Slater v. The Convoy, 10 Mo. 513; Masterson v. Ellington, Id. 712.

[f] (Mo. 1873) Under 2 Wag. St. p. 850, § 22, regulating appeals from justices' courts, where appellant fails to give notice of his appeal, the cause shall, at the option of the appellee, be decided at the first term, if he shall enter his appearance on or before the second day thereof, or, at his instance, may be continued as a matter of course.—Blake v. Downey, 51 Mo. 437.

[g] (Mo. 1873) Where, on appeal from the judgment of a justice, the appellant fails to give the assignee the notice required by 2 Wag. St. p. 850, § 21, judgment for want of prosecution cannot be taken at the return term of the appeal, unless the appellee enter his appearance on or before the second day thereof.—Nay v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 51 Mo. 575.

[h] (Mo. 1873) Where an appeal is allowed from a justice of the peace, and appellant fails to give notice of his appeal, as required by 2 Wag. St. p. 850, § 21, before the second ensuing term of court, the appellee is entitled to an order of affirmance.—Nay v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 51 Mo. 575.

[i] (Mo. 1875) Where an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace is not taken on the day when the judgment is rendered, and notice thereof is not given before the second term of the circuit court after that at which the case is to be determined, such omission will be held to be a failure to prosecute the appeal, authorizing an affirmance of the judgment.—Page v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 61 Mo. 78.

[j] (Mo. 1876) Where appeal from judgment in a justice's court is not taken on the day of its rendition, and no notice of appeal is given before the second term thereafter, at which the case is triable in the circuit court, the judgment below may be affirmed on motion; and it is immaterial that, after filing, and before hearing of the motion, such notice is given.—Town of Brownsville v. Rembert, 63 Mo. 393.

[k] (Mo. 1876) A judgment of a justice of the peace must be affirmed, where a notice of appeal is not given before the second term after judgment, although the appellant may have been unable after diligent search to discover appellee's residence before that time.—Thurston v. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co., 1 Mo. App. 400.

[l] (Mo. 1887) It is not enough, in order to overthrow a judgment of the circuit court affirming a judgment of a justice court, when notice of appeal to the circuit court was not given, that the objection in the justice's court is defective in form and substance. If the appellant fail to prosecute his appeal, he is not in a situation to raise the question in the circuit court.—Horton v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co., 26 Mo. App. 349.

[m] (Mo. 1887) An omission by appellant from a justice's judgment to give the 10 days' notice of appeal, as required by Rev. St. 1879, § 3057, does not constitute a failure of jurisdiction, but is only a failure to prosecute the appeal.—Holdridge v. Marsh, 28 Mo. App. 283.

[n] (Mo. 1891) When an appeal from a judgment of a justice is taken on a day subsequent to its rendition, and no notice thereof is given 10 days before the second term of the appellate court thereafter, as required by Rev. St. 1889, § 6342, then the judgment of the justice shall be affirmed at the election of the appellee as required by section 6344. In the absence of such notice and the appearance of the appellee, the circuit court has no jurisdiction to enter any other judgment than that of affirmance or dismissal of the appeal.—Wolff v. Coffin, 46 Mo. App. 190.

[o] (N. J. 1860) The plaintiffs paid the amount of a judgment recovered against them before a justice, and, without giving any notice afterwards, appealed. The judgment of the court of pleas was reversed in the supreme court for want of notice.—Apgar v. Degraw, 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 527.

[p] (N. C. 1873) An omission to give the notice of appeal required by Code Proc. § 535, limited strictly within the 10 days, is not so serious a default as will preclude a party from the right to have his case reheard.—Marsh v. Cohen, 68 N. C. 283.

[q] (S. C. 1878) Where no notice of an appeal to the circuit court from the judgment of a trial justice is given within the time fixed by statute, the circuit court acquires no jurisdiction.—Scott v. Pratt, 9 S. C. (9 Rich.) 82.

[r] (Tex. 1881) An appeal from a justice's court to a county court will be dismissed, where no notice of appeal appears in the record.—Harris v. Credille, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 562.

§ 586. Requisites and sufficiency of notice.

[a] (Cal. 1855) A notice of appeal from a justice's to the county court, stating that he appealed from the "whole judgment," is a definite notice.—Price v. Van Caneghan, 5 Cal. 123.

[b] (Cal. 1863) A notice of appeal from a justice of the peace from a judgment in an action of forcible entry and detainer is not invalid because it contains the clause, "This appeal is taken on questions of law alone."—Zoller v. McDonald, 23 Cal. 136.

[bb] (Cal. 1885) The omission of the persons signing to designate themselves as attorneys for the appellant will not render the notice of appeal from a justice's judgment ineffectual.—Rutledge v. Humboldt County Superior Court, 67 Cal. 85, 7 Pac. 144.

[c] (Dak. 1887) Where the caption and venue in the notice of an appeal show that the appeal is taken from a judgment rendered in Hand county, by a justice of the peace in and for such county, the fact that the notice is directed to such justice "of the county of Hughes" is immaterial.—Kirkpatrick v. Dakota Cent. Ry. Co., 4 Dak. 481, 33 N. W. 103.

[d] (Dak. 1887) A notice that the defendant "appeals from the judgment entered" in an action is a sufficient compliance with the provision of Justices' Code, § 89, requiring the notice to state whether the appeal is taken from the whole or a part of the judgment.—Kirkpatrick v. Dakota Cent. Ry. Co., 4 Dak. 481, 33 N. W. 103.

[e] (Dak. 1887) Justices' Code, § 89 (Amend. Sess. Laws 1881, c. 4), provides that the notice of appeal from a justice's court to the district court must state whether the appeal is taken from the whole or a part of the judgment, and whether the appeal is taken on questions of law or fact, or both. Section 91 (Amend. Sess. Laws 1879, c. 31, § 2) provides that when a party appeals to the district court on questions of fact, or on questions of both law and fact, and demands in his notice of appeal a new trial in the district court, no statement must be made, but the action must be tried anew in that court. Held that, where the notice stated that the appeal was from the judgment entered therein on the questions of both law and fact therein, it was error to dismiss the appeal for failure of the notice to demand a new trial, and that it should have been entertained for the determination of the questions of law.—Karr v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 6 Dak. 14, 50 N. W. 125.

[f] (Dak. 1887) Under Justices' Code, § 89, providing that "any person dissatisfied with a judgment rendered in a civil action in a justice's court may appeal therefrom. * * * The notice must state whether the appeal * * * is taken on questions of law or fact, or both"; and section 91, providing that when the appeal is taken on questions of both law and fact, and a new trial is demanded in the district court, the action must be tried anew in that court,—an appeal must be entertained by the district court, and a trial granted there, where the notice stated that the appeal was on questions of law and fact, and demanded a new trial in the district court, though the justice merely sustained a demurrer to the counterclaims, and entered judgment for the amount demanded in the complaint.—Purcell v. Booth, 6 Dak. 17, 50 N. W. 196.

[g] (La. 1865) A citation of appeal to the supreme court from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace should issue as if rendered in a district court, or the appeal will be dismissed.—Carrollton v. Gailliard, 17 La. Ann. 120.

[h] (Minn. 1870) Where, in a return on appeal from a justice, the transcript recites that notice of appeal was served and filed, but the papers returned by the justice show the notice void for want of signature, the papers qualify the statement in the transcript, and the return shows a want of jurisdiction to allow the appeal.—Larrabee v. Morrison, 15 Minn. 196 (Gil. 151).

[i] (Minn. 1890) Under Sp. Laws 1889, c. 351, § 28, which provides that on appeal from a justice of the peace to the municipal court of St. Paul, the appellant shall serve on the respondent a notice of trial at least three days before the term at which the appeal is to be heard, such a notice, dated May 26th, and stating that the action would be brought to trial at the next general term of the court on May 3d, is fatally defective.—Marcotte v. Fitzgerald, 45 Minn. 51, 47 N. W. 316.

[j] (Mo. 1828) Under Act Feb. 21, 1825, providing that a party appealing from a judgment in a justice's court shall notify the other party, where the appeal is not prayed for on the day of the trial, a notice on the day of the trial by one of the parties that he "intends" to appeal at a subsequent date is insufficient.—Hempstead v. Darby, 2 Mo. 25.

[jj] (N. Y. 1874) A notice of appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, which was not signed at the bottom by the appellant or his attorney, but was indorsed on the outside: "Notice of Appeal. H. N. Warner, Appellant's Attorney,"—is sufficient.—Burrows v. Norton, 2 Hun, 550, 5 Thomp. & C. 97.

[k] (N. Y. 1887) Where a notice of appeal from a justice's judgment to a county court is sufficient and regular, it should not be dismissed on the ground that a new trial is demanded, and the case is not one in which he is entitled to a new trial; the sum demanded being less than $50.—Dudley v. Brinckerhoff, 13 Civ. Proc. R. 92.

[l] (N. Y. 1868) Under Code Civ. Proc. c. 19, tit. 8, relating to appeals from justices of the peace, an appeal, in a case where a new trial cannot be had in the appellate court, will not be dismissed because appellant, in his notice of appeal, demands a new trial, but the appeal will be heard on the law.—Kimball v. Rich (Super. Buff.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 248.

[m] (N. C. 1876) A verbal notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice, given to the appellee by the justice in the presence of both parties at the trial, is sufficient.—Richardson v. Debnam, 75 N. C. 390.

[n] (N. C. 1892) Under Code, § 876, giving a defendant who was not personally served with process, and did not appear, in a suit before a justice, the right to appeal from a judgment, on serving notice thereof, such defendant cannot appeal by serving a "limited notice of appeal in the nature of a special appearance."—Clark v. Deloach Mill Mfg. Co., 110 N. C. 111, 14 S. E. 518.

[o] (Pa. 1864) A statement to plaintiff, before the justice, that defendant intends to appeal from a judgment of the justice, is insufficient as a notice of appeal.—Henry v. Rowe, 1 Woodw. Dec. 173.

[p] (Wash. 1893) A notice of appeal from a justice, entitled: "State of Washington, County of Spokane—ss.: Before C., Justice of the Peace,"—is not objectionable as not entitled in a court.—State v. Spokane County Super. Ct., 7 Wash. 223, 34 Pac. 922.

[q] (Wis. 1879) The affidavit and notice of appeal from a justice of the peace failed to show that they were made by or on behalf of defendant, or by any person authorized by him, and were in fact made by one having no authority. Held, that the circuit court acquired no jurisdiction of the appeal, and that jurisdiction thereof could not be conferred by consent.—Palmer v. Peterson, 46 Wis. 401, 1 N. W. 73.

§ 587. —— Description of judgment.

[a] (Minn. 1880) A notice of appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, which fails to show by what justice or in what county the judgment was rendered, is fatally defective.—Pettingill v. Donnelly, 27 Minn. 332, 7 N. W. 360.

[b] (Mo. 1889) Where a notice of appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered June 4, 1887, described the judgment as rendered June 21, 1887, the appeal was properly dismissed for want of a sufficient notice.—Hammond v. Kroff, 36 Mo. App. 118.

[c] (Mo. 1891) After service of notice of appeal, the justice of the peace, without rule of court, filed an amended transcript of the judgment which varied the amount thereof from that given in the original transcript, which the notice described with sufficient accuracy. Held that, in passing upon the sufficiency of the notice, the court cannot consider the amended transcript, as the justice had no power to file such transcript without an order of court.—Thomas v. Moore, 46 Mo. App. 22.

[d] (Mo. 1892) Where a notice of appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace correctly states the style of the cause, the name of the justice, and the month, the fact that it incorrectly states the day of the month does not render it insufficient, in the absence of a claim that any other judgment was rendered between the parties in that month.—Holschen Coal Co. v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 48 Mo. App. 578.

[e] (Or. 1871) Where the notice of appeal specified a judgment for $57.75, and the transcript disclosed a judgment for $52.50, held, that the appeal should be dismissed. As the court acquires jurisdiction through the notice of appeal, it is necessary that the notice should identify the case with reasonable certainty. The identification should be such that, when the record is made up, the notice will of itself show that this is the same cause that was pending in the court below. It may not be necessary in all cases to state the amount of the judgment appealed from; but, if it is stated, it should be stated correctly.—Chipman v. Bronson, 3 Or. 320.

[f] (Or. 1886) Where the notice of an appeal from a judgment by a justice of the peace alleges that it was rendered on the 22d of December, and the transcript shows that it was rendered the 22d of November, this error is not sufficient to warrant the dismissal of the appeal by the circuit court, where it appears to have been a mere clerical oversight, and that the respondent could in no way have been injured thereby.—Moorhouse v. Donica, 13 Or. 435, 11 Pac. 71.

[g] (Or. 1886) Under the practice a notice of appeal from a justice's court properly entitled as to court and names and parties, and headed "Civil Action to Recover Money," and which describes the judgment as "given and entered therein in the above-entitled action on the 4th day of August, 1885, in favor of the above-named plaintiff, and against the above-named defendant," sufficiently describes the judgment.—Lancaster v. McDonald, 14 Or. 264, 12 Pac. 374.

[h] (Or. 1886) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace, the plaintiff, in the complaint and answer, is described as "Amanda H. Starks," and in the notice of appeal to the circuit court as "A. H. Starks," such a discrepancy is no cause for dismissal.—Starks v. Stafford, 14 Or. 317, 12 Pac. 670.

[j] (Wis. 1861) An appeal from the decision of a justice is not invalidated by the fact that the notice of appeal served on him, which is sufficiently accurate in other respects to identify the judgment, is faulty in describing it as a judgment for the value of the property found by the jury, when technically it was for nominal damages and costs; there being an order for the delivery of the property.—Hills v. Miles, 13 Wis. 625.

[k] (Wis. 1863) A notice of appeal, and an accompanying affidavit, as required by law, in both which the cause was entitled "J. W. against 'William' W.," were held not sufficient to constitute an appeal from the judgment in an action by "J. W. against 'David' W."—Widner v. Wood, 19 Wis. 190.

[l] (Wis. 1884) A notice of appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace gives the circuit court no jurisdiction where it fails to identify the parties and the case, and states that a certain party appeals, although signed by the other party, and fails to state that the persons signing take the appeal.—Morris v. Brewster, 60 Wis. 229, 19 N. W. 50.

[m] (Wis. 1892) A notice of appeal by defendant from a justice's court to the superior court, in an action by an infant by his next friend, which fails to recite in the title of the action the name of the next friend in addition to that of the infant, and which is signed by defendant as "E. M. R.," instead of "Edward M. R.," and which recites that the justice's judgment was for a certain amount as damages and $24.25 costs, instead of $30.76 costs, as was the fact, is a substantial compliance with the statute (Sanb. & B. Ann. St. § 3754) providing that appellant shall make and present to the justice having custody of the docket containing the judgment appealed from a notice of appeal.—Friemark v. Rosenkrans, 81 Wis. 359, 51 N. W. 557.

[n] (Wis. 1893) Where, in defendant's notice of appeal from a judgment of the justice's court to the circuit court, plaintiff's name was spelled "Noel" instead of "Noall," and one of the defendants' names was spelled "Manuel," instead of "Emanuel," and the amount of the judgment was therein designated as "damages" and an additional sum named as costs, such variances were not sufficiently substantial to deprive the circuit court of jurisdiction.—Noall v. Halonen, 84 Wis. 402, 54 N. W. 729.

[o] (Wis. 1895) A notice of appeal in replevin from a justice to the circuit court, which fails to mention the value of the property as determined, and that such property was ordered to be delivered to plaintiff, is sufficient if it identifies the party appealing, and the cause in which and the judgment from which the appeal is taken.—Hender v. Ring, 90 Wis. 358, 63 N. W. 282.

§ 588. —— Stating grounds of appeal.

Admission of service of void notice as waiver, see post, § 591.

Scope of review as based on statement of grounds of appeal in notice of appeal, see post, § 715.

[a] (Cal. 1858) On appeal to the county court from a judgment of the justice's court, on questions of law, appellant must set forth, in the notice of appeal, a statement of the grounds on which he intends to rely.—People v. El Dorado County Court, 10 Cal. 19.

[b] (N. Y. 1853) Where notice of an appeal from justice's court assigns no cause therefor, the appeal will be dismissed.—Schwartz v. Beudel, 2 E. D. Smith, 123; Griswold v. Van Deusen, Id. 178; Suydam v. Munson, Id. 198.

[c] (N. Y. 1855) Notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice, which fails to state the grounds thereof, is defective.—Morton v. Clark, 11 How. Prac. 498.

[d] (N. Y.) Where a notice of appeal from a judgment of a justice's court to the county court does not state the grounds upon which the appeal is founded, the county court is bound to affirm the judgment.—(1856) Derby v. Hannin, 5 Abb. Prac. 150; (1857) Id., 15 How. Prac. 82.

[e] (N. Y. 1863) In an appeal from a justice's court to the county court, where the claim exceeds $50, an allegation, in the notice of appeal, that the judgment was against law and evidence, is a sufficient compliance with the requirement of the Code that the grounds of appeal shall be stated.—Fowler v. Westervelt, 40 Barb. 374, 17 Abb. Prac. 59.

[f] (N. Y.) Under Code, § 371, requiring a party appealing from a judgment of a justice of the peace to the county court to state, in his notice of appeal, "in what particular or particulars he claims the judgment should have been more favorable to him," and providing that, unless the respondent offers to allow the judgment to be corrected in the particulars mentioned, appellant shall be entitled to costs on appeal in case the judgment of the county court is more favorable to him than the judgment below, a statement in the notice that the judgment should have been in appellant's favor, for no cause of action, is not sufficient to entitle appellant to costs.—(1863) Wynkoop v. Halbert, 25 How. Prac. 158; (1865) Id., 43 Barb. 266.

[g] (N. Y. 1865) Code, § 371, requiring a statement of particulars on notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice, when the appellant claims the judgment below should have been more favorable to him, does not require such a statement when a reversal alone is sought.—Wallace v. Patterson, 29 How. Prac. 170.

[h] (N. Y. 1872) Code Civ. Proc. p. 353, provides that, on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the appellant shall serve a notice of appeal, stating the grounds on which the appeal is founded. Held, that a party alleging want of jurisdiction in the justice, but failing to state it as a ground of error in his notice of appeal, is precluded from insisting that no jurisdiction was acquired.—Avery v. Woodbeck, 62 Barb. 557, 5 Lans. 498.

[hh] (N. Y. 1872) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 371, providing that, to entitle appellant to costs, he must specify in his notice of appeal the particulars in which he claims the judgment should have been more favorable to him, a notice stating that the judgment is against the weight of evidence, is not supported by the evidence, on the evidence the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and the judgment is contrary to law upon the evidence, is not sufficient.—Moran v. McClearns, 43 How. Prac. 77.

[hhh] (N. Y. 1872) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 371, a notice of appeal stating that the judgment should have been in appellant's favor and against the defendant, and that there was no evidence to warrant the judgment, is not sufficient; but plaintiff, being the prevailing party, was entitled to costs.—Colvert v. Hall, 43 How. Prac. 80.

[i] (N. Y. 1872) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 371, a notice of appeal by defendant, that judgment should have been in his favor, and against plaintiff, for $200, and for damages and costs, and that it should have been for a less sum against appellant, is not sufficient to entitle him to costs, where the plaintiff recovers judgment on appeal.—Wadley v. Davis, 43 How. Prac. 82.

[ii] (N. Y. 1872) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 371, a notice of appeal by defendant, that the judgment should have been more favorable to him, in that it should not have been for more than $25 damages, besides costs, is sufficient to entitle defendant to costs.—Younghanse v. Fingar, 43 How. Prac. 259.

[j] (N. Y. 1873) A notice of appeal from a justice's judgment upon the law, which assigns as grounds of appeal that the evidence "was incompetent, did not support the judgment, that on it the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and that the judgment was contrary to law," but that does not point out specifically any errors, will not sustain any appeal.—Delong v. Brainard, 1 Thomp. & C. 1.

[k] (N. Y. 1877) Where a party appeals from a justice's judgment, on the ground that it is less favorable to him than it should be, he must state in his notice of appeal what amount the judgment should have adjudged him.—Jones v. Cook, 11 Hun, 230.

[l] (N. Y. 1878) In a notice of appeal to county court, a specification that the justice rejected proper evidence offered by the appellant is sufficient to authorize an examination of the ruling rejecting the evidence.—Vedder v. Van Buren, 14 Hun, 250.

[m] (N. Y. 1878) A statement in the notice of appeal from a justice's judgment, of the grounds of appeal, as being merely "against law and evidence," is too defective to give the appellate court jurisdiction even to allow it to be amended.—Amsdell v. McCaffrey, 16 Hun, 255.

[n] (S. C. 1886) On appeal to the circuit court from a judgment by default rendered by a justice, a notice of appeal, which only states "that manifest injustice had been done defendant by the said judgment, and that defendant's default in not being present at the trial was excusable," is insufficient.—Wolfe v. Port Royal & A. Ry. Co., 25 S. C. 379.

[o] (S. C. 1887) On an appeal from a trial justice to the court of common pleas, a statement of the grounds of appeal, as follows: "On the ground of the manifest injustice done this defendant, and those set out in writing, made on the motion for a new trial before the trial justice, and the affidavits there used in behalf of said motion, and all the evidence and records in the case,"—is sufficient, in the absence of a rule of court against such form of statement.—Dargan v. West, 27 S. C. 156, 3 S. E. 68.

§ 589. Substitutes for notice.

[a] (Iowa, 1862) The mere filing of an appeal bond, without the notice required under section 5095 of the Revision, is not sufficient to entitle the defendant to an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace.—State v. Leyden, 13 Iowa, 433.

[b] (Mo. 1894) Actual knowledge of an appeal from a justice's court by the appellee does not obviate the necessity of notice of appeal as required by law.—Walker v. Carrew, 56 Mo. App. 320.

[c] (Mo. 1894) Where an appeal is taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace, and appellant takes a change of venue from the circuit court to which such appeal is returnable, notice by him to appellee of the application for such change of venue will not obviate the necessity for a notice of the appeal.—Evans v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 58 Mo. App. 427.

[d] (N. C. 1876) The attorney's asking the justice, before judgment, and in presence of the plaintiff, that he will, in case he renders judgment against defendant, make an entry that defendant prays an appeal, is not a sufficient notice of appeal to plaintiff; there being no proof that the plaintiff heard the request.—Green v. Hobgood, 74 N. C. 234.

[e] (Ohio, 1885) Under Rev. St. § 6408, providing that when a trustee, appealing from any judgment or order in his fiduciary capacity, has given bond within the state for the faithful performance of his duties, he shall not be required to give an additional appeal bond, but shall be allowed the appeal by giving written notice to the court of his intention to appeal, within the time limited for the filing of the bond, the filing within 10 days of a transcript of a judgment of a justice of the peace in the court of common pleas, by an assignee who has filed a bond within this state for the faithful performance of his duties, appeals the case, though no notice was given the justice of the intention to appeal, since the demand of the transcript was in itself sufficient notice of appeal to the justice.—Terry Clock Co. v. Mussey, 9 Ohio Dec. 449, 13 Wkly. Law Bul. 568.

§ 590. Defects and amendment of notice.

Amendment of notice of appeal as curing error in appealing before final judgment, see ante, § 490.

[a] (Minn. 1892) The filing of proof of a legally effectual service of the notice of appeal from a justice's court being by statute made necessary to give the district court jurisdiction, a failure to comply with the statute cannot be cured by amendment after the time to appeal has expired.—Stolt v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 49 Minn. 353, 51 N. W. 1103.

[b] (N. Y. 1824) A notice of appeal served on the justice did not state that the appeal was made to the common pleas. The appeal bond, however, did so state, and the justice made a return. Held to be regular.—Ex parte Clarke, 3 Cow. 379.

[c] (N. Y. 1855) Where the notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice is defective, the remedy is by motion to dismiss the appeal in the appellate court.—Webster v. Hopkins, 11 How. Prac. 140.

[d] (N. Y. 1859) When amendments are necessary to make an appeal effectual, the common pleas has authority to allow them to remedy mistakes. Even, it seems, to allow an amendment of the notice of the appeal.—Wood v. Kelly, 2 Hilt. 334.

[e] (N. Y. 1889) Where the defendant, by mistake, asked for a new trial in his notice of appeal to the county court, when he was not entitled to it, the county court could allow an amendment to the notice, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3049, providing that the court may, in its discretion, permit an omission to be supplied or an amendment to be made to a notice of appeal.—McCarthy v. Crowley, 52 Hun, 614, 5 N. Y. Supp. 675.

[f] (N. Y. 1889) The refusal of the county court to exercise its discretion to permit an amendment of a notice of appeal, which by mistake asked for a new trial, was reversible error.—McCarthy v. Crowley, 52 Hun, 614, 5 N. Y. Supp. 675.

[g] (N. Y. 1896) A notice of appeal from a justice of the peace to the county court, demanding a new trial in the county court, when appellant is not entitled thereto, may be amended by striking out such demand, where it is shown by the uncontradicted affidavit of appellant's attorney that he prepared the original notice of appeal, and erased the demand for a new trial, but that his clerk, who prepared the copy of the notice served on respondent, failed to make the erasure, and that the demand has been erased from the notice served on the trial justice.—O'Reilly v. Block (Co. Ct.) 23 N. Y. Supp. 670.

§ 591. Waiver of want of notice and defects.

[a] (Cal. 1886) The voluntary appearance of the attorney of record in an action before a justice of the peace appealed to the superior court, and his participation in the proceedings in that court, without objection to the service of notice of appeal, operates as a waiver of any defects in such notice.—Matthews v. Superior Court of Marin County, 70 Cal. 527, 11 Pac. 665.

[b] (Kan. 1868) Where the defendant in a case on trial before a justice appeals to the district court, the entering by an attorney of his name as attorney for the plaintiff, and inquiries by him in regard to the case, is not such an appearance by the plaintiff as to waive the necessity of notice of the appeal.—Halford v. Coe, 4 Kan. 561.

[c] (Minn. 1870) Admission of service of notice of appeal, void for want of signature, does not estop the party making the admission from taking advantage of the defective notice, under Gen. St. 1866, c. 66, § 104, subd. 3, which makes the jurisdiction of the justice to grant an appeal dependent on service of notice in writing signed by the applicant, etc. —Larrabee v. Morrison, 15 Minn. 196 (Gil. 151).

[d] (Mo. 1872) An appearance of the appellee in the circuit court, on appeal from a justice for the purpose of asking an affirmance, is not such an appearance as will waive the failure of appellant to give the notice of the appeal required by the statute.—Wag. St. p. 850, § 21.—Rowley v. Hinds, 50 Mo. 403.

[e] (Mo. 1879) A notice to take depositions, served, after appeal from a justice's judgment, upon the appellant, will not operate as a waiver of the notice of appeal, if the notice to take depositions does not appear to have been given by the appellee or his attorney, and the depositions taken in pursuance thereof are not filed in court.—Wolff v. Danforth Artificial Light Co., 70 Mo. 182.

[f] (Mo. 1880) Where an appellant in a suit instituted before a justice fails to give notice of an appeal before the second term of the circuit court held after the appeal was taken, the court on motion will affirm the judgment; but if it refuses, and the appellee enters into trial, he waives the error.—Parmerlee v. Williams, 71 Mo. 410.

[g] (Mo. 1889) In case of an appeal from a justice's court, a failure to give the statutory notice of appeal is waived by appellee accepting service of notice to take depositions by appellant after the appeal, appearing at the taking of the depositions, objecting to certain questions asked of witness, and having the grounds of objection noted.—Bates v. Scott, 26 Mo. App. 428.

[h] (Mo. 1889) Where notice of appeal from a justice of the peace is not given, as required by Rev. St. § 3055, the right of the appellee to an affirmance on that account is not affected by his appearance in the circuit court, for the purpose of moving for such affirmance.—Wolf v. Harrington, 38 Mo. App. 276.

[i] (Or. 1886) Parties will be deemed to have waived a defect in the notice of appeal from a justice court where they appear and have the cause continued.—Moorehouse v. Donica, 13 Or. 435, 11 Pac. 71.

[j] (Tex. 1884) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, notice of the appeal is dispensed with by the appellee appearing in the county court and consenting to a continuance to the next term.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Netherland, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 237.

[k] (Tex. 1890) An appearance by the appellee in the district court on appeal from a justice is a waiver of notice of appeal.—Hayworth v. Rogan, 77 Tex. 362, 14 S. W. 70.

[l] (Wis. 1879) Where the notice of appeal from a justice was void because given by a person without authority, consent of the parties could not give jurisdiction.—Palmer v. Peterson, 46 Wis. 401, 1 N. W. 73.

§ 592. Entry and docketing.

[a] (Ark. 1851) Until the appeal, affidavit, and the recognizance are sent up by the justice and filed, the circuit court has no jurisdiction of the case.—Poindexter v. Russell, 11 Ark. (6 Eng.) 664.

[b] (Ark. 1876) Unless an appellant appealing from a justice's judgment procures the transcript to be filed and the case docketed, the circuit court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, dismiss his appeal.—Smith v. Allen, 31 Ark. 268; McGehee v. Carroll, Id. 550.

[c] (Ga. 1892) It is the duty of the clerk of the superior court to docket appeals from justices' courts, and if this duty be omitted at the proper time he may perform it at any time thereafter without leave or direction from the court, and without notice to the appellant, whose failure to keep sight of the case, and to ascertain when it stands for trial, is negligence against which equity will not grant relief after the case has been tried ex parte, and judgment rendered for respondent.—Combs v. Choven, 89 Ga. 779, 15 S. E. 686.

[d] (Ill. 1875) Where a case is taken from a justice court to the superior court, but the appeal papers were by mistake filed in the circuit court, a transfer of such papers by the clerk of such court to the superior court was proper.—Wadhams v. Hotchkiss, 80 Ill. 437.

[e] (Ind. 1873) On an appeal from a justice of the peace by each party to a cause, only one cause should be docketed in the appellate court.—Montgomery Gravel Road Co. v. Stockton, 43 Ind. 328.

[f] (Mass. 1875) An appeal from a justice of the peace not having been entered in the superior court, that court, upon the complaint of the adverse party, rightly affirmed the judgment of the justice.—Inhabitants of Leyden v. Sweeney, 118 Mass. 418.

[g, h] (Tex. 1849) In appeals from a justice to the district court, the parties stand, not as appellant and appellee, but as plaintiff and defendant, the same as they stood before the justice; and the case should be so docketed.—Perry v. McKinzie, 4 Tex. 154.

[i] (W. Va. 1888) Where an application is made to a judge of the circuit court in vacation, who grants an appeal from the judgment of a justice, the written application and proofs, as well as the bond, and the order granting such appeal, should be transmitted to the clerk of the circuit court, and entered in the order book under the title of the case, and a copy served on the justice.—Hubbard v. Yocum, 30 W. Va. 740, 5 S. E. 867.

[j] (Wis. 1859) That the justice sent the appeal papers to the circuit court of the wrong county does not prevent the appellant from having them sent to the proper court.—Steckmesser v. Graham, 10 Wis. 37.

§ 593. —— Time for entry and docketing.

[a] (Ariz. 1881) An appeal from an order dismissing an appeal from justice's court not perfected and entered within 30 days after judgment rendered, in accordance with Act, § 1, regulating appeals from justices of the peace, will be dismissed.—Zechendorf v. Zechendorf, 1 Ariz. 401, 25 Pac. 648.

[b] (Mont. 1894) Where an appeal from a justice's court was not filed within 30 days after the appeal was perfected, as required by rule of the district court, and appellee moved to dismiss, and appellant filed and docketed his appeal before the hearing of the motion, and the case was one in which appellant was entitled to a jury, but no jury was in attendance till after the appeal was docketed, the motion should have been denied, since the rule is not jurisdictional, and should be applied with discretion.—Stevenson v. Cadwell, 14 Mont. 311, 36 Pac. 185.

[c] (N. J. 1811) The common pleas ought to receive appeal papers if they are filed during the next term after the judgment of the justice, since the act requiring them to be sent on or before the first day of the term is merely directory to the justice, and not to the court.—State v. Judges of Common Pleas of Bergen County, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 737.

[d] (N. C. 1891) Code, § 565, provides that appeals from justices of the peace shall stand for trial de novo on the dockets of the superior courts at the first term after the appeal is taken, and that, if defendant should make default, judgment should be rendered against him, final in some cases, and by default and inquiry in others. By an amendatory act (Laws 1889, c. 443) it is further provided that where the appellant failed to have his appeal docketed at the next term the appellee might file a transcript of the justice's record, and move to dismiss. Held, that where defendant failed to docket his appeal at the next term, but did so at the second term, when plaintiff, on defendant's failure to appear, took judgment by default against him, which was subsequently set aside on the ground that his failure to appear was excusable negligence, plaintiff was still entitled to move for a dismissal for failure to docket the appeal in time.—Ballard v. Gay, 108 N. C. 544, 13 S. E. 207.

[e] (N. C. 1893) Under Code, §§ 565, 876, 877, 880, requiring that where a judgment is rendered in a justice's court 10 days before the next ensuing term of the superior court an appeal therefrom shall be docketed at that term, a docketing at a subsequent term is a nullity, and does not entitle the plaintiff appellant to take a nonsuit.—Davenport v. Grissom, 113 N. C. 38, 18 S. E. 78.

[f] (Pa. 1811) Under the act of 1804, it was not necessary that an appeal should be entered on the docket of the prothonotary within 20 days from the time of the judgment. It was sufficient if it was entered before the justice and security given within that period, and if the transcript was filed with the prothonotary before the commencement of the next term after the judgment.—Beale v. Dougherty, 3 Bin. 432.

[g] (Pa. 1838) After an execution had issued immediately upon a justice's judgment, and the money had been made by a sale of personal property, it was held too late to enter an appeal, notwithstanding section 6 of the act of 1820.—Patterson v. Pelronnet, 7 Watts, 337.

[h] (Pa. 1849) An appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, if filed in the common pleas within 20 days, is in time, although a return day has intervened, prior to which the appellant had given bail, which he withdrew after the return day, and entered other bail.—Potts v. Staeger, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 363.

[i] (Pa. 1870) An appeal entered out of time may be quashed, if the appellee has done no act as a waiver of the irregularity, although a non pros. has been entered on the appeal, for want of a declaration.—Carothers v. Cummings, 63 Pa. (13 P. F. Smith) 199.

[j] (Pa.) An appeal from a judgment of an alderman is in time if the appeal is filed before the monthly return day thereafter.—(1873) Singerfield v. George, 30 Leg. Int. 321; (1877) Hartranft v. Clarke, 12 Phila. 487.

[k] (Pa. 1880) Under Act April 9, 1862 (P. L. 347), an appeal from a justice of the peace may be filed within 20 days after the appeal is taken.—Singer Co. v. Rice, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 108, 1 Del. Co. Ct. R. 63.

[l] (Pa. 1880) The act of April 9, 1862 (P. L. 347), providing "that all appeals shall be filed on or before the next return day after the taking thereof, if 20 days shall have elapsed, and, if not, then on or before the next return day thereafter" refers to the regular monthly return days, and gives at least 20 days to file the appeal after it is taken, i. e., until the next monthly return day, or, if at that time 20 days shall not have elapsed, appellant is allowed till the next monthly return day to file his appeal in the prothonotary's office.—Singer Co. v. Rice, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 108, 1 Del. Co. Ct. R. 63.

[m] (Pa. 1893) An appeal from a justice should be entered on or before the next return day of the common pleas.—Seltzer v. Schoener (Com. Pl.) 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 288.

§ 594. —— Excusing delay.

[a, b] (Pa. 1889) Under Act June 13, 1836, appeals from the orders of justices for removal of paupers must be entered in the court of quarter sessions of the peace at the next sessions after the service of the order of removal. Permission will not be granted to appeal nunc pro tunc, where the appellants had a week in which to enter an appeal, and neglected to inquire when the next court would commence.—Jenkins Tp. v. Paradise Tp., 8 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 164.

[c] (Pa. 1892) Failure to file an appeal from a justice of the peace within the time limited by law is not excused by the fact that the justice told appellant that he had a longer time in which to file his appeal.—Kichline v. Shimer (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 279, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 355.

[d] (Pa. 1892) Where an appeal was taken from a judgment of a justice of the peace, and the appellant was misinformed by the justice of the peace as to the time when it was necessary to file it in court, and for that reason did not file the same until after the first day of the next term of court, the appeal will not be stricken off.—Swinehart v. Montgomery (Com. Pl.) 1 Pa. Dist. R. 802.

[e] (Pa. 1893) Where the only reason for not filing in the court of common pleas an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in Allegheny county on or before the monthly return day next ensuing after rendition of the judgment, as required by Act May 18, 1871 (P. L. 938), is that the matter was forgotten by appellants' counsel, such appeal cannot afterwards be filed nunc pro tunc.—Ward v. Letzkus, 152 Pa. 318, 25 Atl. 778, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 412.

§ 595. Appearance.

Appeal as equivalent to appearance in appellate court, see post, § 602.

Appearance on appeal as prerequisite to judgment by default, see post, § 723.

[a] (Colo. 1877) Though defendant fail to appear before the justice of the peace, by filing his appeal bond, he enters his appearance in the appellate court.—Wyatt v. Freeman, 4 Colo. 14.

[aa] (Conn. 1865) An appellant from a judgment of a justice of the peace was allowed until the opening of court on the second day of the term to enter his appeal. The entry was made by him on the first day, but was inserted by the clerk in an unusual place on the docket. The appellee's attorney, after examining the docket for the case without success on the first day, left a memorandum with the clerk, requesting him to enter his appearance if the appeal should be entered. The clerk assented, but inadvertently neglected to do so, and the appellee was defaulted. He had no knowledge of the fact until an officer called on him with an execution issued upon the judgment. Held, that he was entitled to an injunction and a new trial.—Seymour v. Miller, 32 Conn. 402.

[b] (Ill. 1863) When an appeal from the judgment of the justices of the peace is perfected by filing the appeal bond in the office of the justice, in which case no summons is required to be issued, the appellee may, without having been served with a notice of the appeal, enter his appearance in the circuit court.—Boyd v. Kocher, 31 Ill. 295.

[c] (Ill. 1882) The delivery to the clerk of the trial notice by the appellee, on an appeal from a justice, does not amount to an entry of appearance.—McVey v. Huott, 11 Ill. App. (11 Bradw.) 203.

[d] (Ill. 1883) The mere leaving with the clerk of the circuit court a trial notice, which is neither filed nor placed among the papers, does not constitute an appearance in a case appealed from a justice.—Norton v. Allen, 12 Ill. App. (12 Bradw.) 592

[e] (Ill. 1887) Where one of two defendants appeals from a justice's judgment, a written plea of nul tiel corporation, filed in the justice's court by such defendant, which is found after the appeal among the papers, with the file mark of the clerk of the circuit court, is not an appearance by him.—Bourton v. Rathbone, 23 Ill. App. 654.

[f] (Ill. 1889) Rev. St. c. 79, § 68, which provides that "in case the appeal from the justice of the peace is perfected by filing the papers and transcript of judgment 10 days before the commencement of the term of the court to which the appeal is taken, the appearance of the appellee may be entered in writing, and filed among the papers in the case, and, if so entered 10 days before the first day of the term of court, the case shall stand for trial at that term," applies only to appeals taken by filing a bond with the clerk, and not to those taken by filing a bond with the justice.—Bessey v. Ruhland, 33 Ill. App. 73.

[g] (Ill. 1890) Where an appeal is taken from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the appearance of appellee, as an alternative for service of summons or two nihils, must be entered not less than 10 days before the first day of the term, to enable the appellee therein to proceed ex parte.—Wollman v. Greshetti, 37 Ill. App. 366.

[h] (Mo. 1871) Section 22 of the statute concerning justices (Wag. St. p. 850) construed, with reference to the duty of the appellee, in a cause carried from a justice's court to the circuit court, to enter his appearance on or before the second day of any subsequent term after the first at which the appeal is triable, in order to procure a hearing.—Hammerstein v. Haase, 47 Mo. 498.

[i] (Mo. 1874) An appeal to the circuit court, without anything further, amounts to a full appearance to the action in that court.—Blunt v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 55 Mo. 157.

[ii] (Mo. 1886) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, the appearance of the respondent on the second day of the return term gives him the right to have the cause tried or continued, but does not entitle him to an affirmance for failure to prosecute the appeal.—Smith v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 20 Mo. App. 689.

[j] (Neb. 1894) Removing a case to the district court by error to a justice's court, cross-examining a witness whose testimony was taken by deposition, waiving a jury in open court, and consenting to a trial on the merits, constitute a general appearance in the district court.—Ward v. Western Horse & Cattle Ins. Co., 42 Neb. 374, 60 N. W. 547.

[k] (Pa. 1807) On the entry of an appeal from the judgment of a justice taken by defendant, there can be no judgment for want of an appearance, the entry of the appeal being equivalent to an appearance propria persona.—Seidel v. Hurley, 1 Woodw. Dec. 352.

[l] (Pa. 1883) The rule of the court of common pleas that on appeal from a justice of the peace, if no appearance is entered within a specified time by the appellee, judgment shall be rendered against him, is void, under Act March 20, 1810, § 4 (5 Smith's Laws, p. 161), which provides that, from the entry of such an appeal upon the prothonotary's docket, the suit shall "take grade with, and be subject to the same rules as, other actions where the parties are considered to be in court."—Jones v. Brown (Com. Pl.) 1 Pa. Dist. R. 675.

§ 596. Effect of appearance as waiver of defects and objections.

Appeal as waiver of objections to jurisdiction of lower court, see post, § 601.

[a] (Ga. 1895) Where defendant in an attachment sued out in justice court appealed to the superior court, and appeared therein at the first term and filed a plea to the merits, he waived all right of objection to the legality of the levy on the ground that the levy was made by plaintiff's son.—Pickett v. Smith, 95 Ga. 757, 22 S. E. 669.

[b] (Ill. 1862) On an appeal from a justice of the peace, the circuit court may render a judgment against defendants who have been served, although service of the process issued by the justice had not been made on all, and he had rendered judgment against all. Appearance in the circuit court gave jurisdiction to that court. The proper inquiry in the circuit court was, had the justice jurisdiction over the subject-matter?—Marshall v. Pope, 29 Ill. (19 Peck) 441.

[c] (Iowa, 1840) An appearance and plea on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is a waiver of all defects of service of the original process.—Cane v. Watson, 1 Morris, 52.

[d] (Iowa. 1854) A failure of service of notice before a justice of the peace is waived by the appearance of the defendant, and his going to trial on the merits, in the district court.—Drake v. Achison, 4 G. Greene, 297.

[e] (Mich. 1859) Action in trespass brought against three in the justice's court, discontinuance as to one, and judgment against the other two, one of whom appealed, and both appeared before the appellate court, and judgment on the merits was rendered against the two before convicted, and one appealed to the supreme court. Held, that the appearance of the two in the county court cures the defect of only one appealing, and that such appearance obviates any objection which he can make on error to the jurisdiction of the justice, or to the joining of the other defendants in the county court.—Tower v. Lamb, 6 Mich. 362.

[f, g] (Miss. 1883) An appeal and appearance in the circuit court by defendant, sued in a justice's court, gives the circuit court jurisdiction, notwithstanding defendant received no copy of the summons in the justice's court.—Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Dale, 61 Miss. 206.

[h] (Ohio, 1879) Where the subject-matter of an appeal case is within the original jurisdiction of the common pleas, where it is to be tried de novo, the objection that the lower court had not such jurisdiction is waived by appearing to the action in the common pleas.—Miller v. Creighton (D. C.) 4 Wkly. Law Bul. 139.

[i] (Pa. 1889) In an action before a justice of the peace judgment was entered against two defendants, and an appeal therefrom appeared on its face to have been taken by both. One defendant moved the court of common pleas to set aside all proceedings as to him, for that the justice acquired no jurisdiction of his person, and that no appeal had in fact been taken on his part. The motion was supported by affidavit, but, being denied, defendants pleaded and went to trial. Held, that the motion was properly refused, as the alleged error could only have been reached by certiorari to the justice's court, and that, having appeared and pleaded in the court of common pleas, defendants are concluded by the judgment.—Short v. Bowell, 130 Pa. 434, 18 Atl. 621.

§ 597. —— Objections to appellate jurisdiction.

Effect of appeal as waiver of jurisdiction in attachment and garnishment proceedings, see post, § 604.

Waiver of objections and consent to appellate jurisdiction, see ante, § 475.

[a] (Cal. 1882) The voluntary appearance of a defendant in the municipal court of appeals does not give the latter jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice's court, where the appeal can only be transferred by the county court to the municipal court of appeals.—Descalso v. San Francisco Municipal Court, 60 Cal. 296.

[b] (Colo. 1888) By appearing in the county court, and, without questioning its jurisdiction on the ground of nonresidence, entering on trial on the merits, a defendant gives that court complete jurisdiction.—Reed v. Cates, 11 Colo. 527, 19 Pac. 464.

[c] (Colo. 1888) Though the justice had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action, defendant, after appearing on appeal taken by plaintiff in a court having jurisdiction, and going to trial without raising the objection, cannot question the jurisdiction of the appellate court.—Behymer v. Nordloh, 12 Colo. 354, 21 Pac. 37.

[d] (Conn. 1873) A suit before a justice of the peace for damages beyond the jurisdiction of the justice was appealed by the defendant to the court of common pleas, which had original jurisdiction of the subject-matter. At the third term after the entry of the case in that court defendant moved that it be erased from the docket, on the ground that the court had acquired no jurisdiction by the appeal. The defendant had appeared in the case at the term at which the appeal was entered, and had continued his appearance until motion to erase was filed. Held that, although the case was to be regarded as having been irregularly brought before the court, the defendant had waived this irregularity and submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court.—Cook v. Morse, 40 Conn. 544.

[e] (Ill. 1865) Where the court has no original, but only appellate, jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a suit, appellee, by appearing and moving to dismiss the appeal bond, does not waive defects therein, so as to give the court jurisdiction of the appeal.—McKoy v. Allen, 36 Ill. 429.

[f] (Ill. 1891) Upon appeal from the finding of a jury in a case tried before a justice, he failing to enter a formal judgment therein, the successful party may, for such reason, require a dismissal of the appeal, but a motion to dismiss the suit amounts to admitting jurisdiction as having been obtained by the appeal: and where the case is of such a kind that the court below had original jurisdiction, and to which such party could submit his person without process, he should not, having done so, be allowed to question the jurisdiction.—Northrup v. Smothers, 39 Ill. App. 588.

[g] (Iowa, 1849) Where no judgment has been rendered by a justice, appearance on appeal in the district court will not confer jurisdiction on it.—Kimble v. Riggin, 2 G. Greene, 245.

[h] (Kan. 1881) Under Comp. Laws 1879, p. 420, § 80, which provides that a claim against a decedent's estate may be established by an action against the personal representative in a court of record, and the presentation of a copy of the judgment to the probate court, the district court has jurisdiction of an action against an administrator on a debt of his decedent, brought there on appeal from a justice, where, after appeal, both parties enter a general appearance.—Freeman v. Waynant, 25 Kan. 279.

[i] (Minn. 1881) Const. art. 6, § 5, gives the district court jurisdiction of appeals from judgments of justices of the peace anywhere within the district. Gen. St. Minn. 1878, c. 65, provides for appeals from judgments of justices of the peace to the district court of the county in which such judgments were rendered, but does not prohibit the exercise of such jurisdiction in any other county when the consent of the parties is given. Held, that appearing and arguing such appeal in a county other than that wherein the appeal is pending, without objecting to the jurisdiction of the court, is a waiver of all objections thereto.—Chesterton v. Munson, 27 Minn. 498, 8 N. W. 593.

[j] (Mo. 1885) Where the lower court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the circuit court has only appellate jurisdiction, the circuit court acquires no jurisdiction on appeal, though the parties appear and plead.—McQuoid v. Lamb, 19 Mo. App. 153.

[k] (Ohio, 1877) On appeal from a justice's judgment in an action of trespass, the plaintiff filed his petition, claiming damages in a sum of which the court of common pleas had original jurisdiction; and the defendant, without objecting to the jurisdiction, obtained an order of the court requiring the plaintiff to amend his petition, and then demurred to the petition as amended. Held, that the defendant had thereby entered his appearance as in an original action in the court of common pleas.—O'Neal v. Blessing, 34 Ohio St. 33.

was taken to the jurisdiction. Held, that on these facts no valid objection could be taken to the jurisdiction of the circuit court.—Glass v. Stovall, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 453.

[m] (Tenn. 1868) The appearance of a party in the circuit court does not give it jurisdiction, where the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter.—White v. Buchanan, 46 Tenn. (6 Cold.) 32.

§ 598. —— To proceedings for appeal.

Appearance as waiver of delay in filing transcript, see post, § 623.

Appearance on appeal as waiver of notice of appeal, see ante, § 591.

—— of proper affidavit, see ante, § 542.

Effect of appearance on appeal as waiving delay in taking proceedings, see ante, § 528.

—— to secure affirmance for want of notice of appeal, see ante, § 591.

[a] (Cal. 1881) A defendant cannot object to the sufficiency of the notice and undertaking on appeal from the justice's court, where on appeal he appeared by counsel, and defended the action on its merits, and made no objection to the regularity of the proceedings.—Shay v. Superior Court of San Francisco, 57 Cal. 541.

[b] (Ill. 1892) Where a defendant appears in the circuit court on an appeal from a justice court, taken by his codefendant, testifies, and joins in the motion for a new trial, he waives the right to object to the jurisdiction of the court over his person, on the ground that he had never been summoned in the circuit court.—Duggan v. Smyser, 46 Ill. App. 39.

[c] (Ind. 1852) Where, on appeal by the state from a judgment of a justice, defendant has appeared and reaped the benefits of the jury trial, it is too late to object that the appeal was improperly taken.—Neff v. State, 3 Ind. 564.

[d] (Mich. 1882) On appeal from a judgment of a justice, an entry of general appearance by the appellee in the circuit court is conclusive of the jurisdiction of that court, so that thereafter a motion to dismiss the appeal because not taken in time, and because no return had been made to it, cannot be entertained.—McCombs v. Johnson, 47 Mich. 592, 11 N. W. 400.

[e] (Minn. 1893) Where an unauthorized appeal to the district court was taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace, and the parties appeared in the district court, submitted to its jurisdiction, amended their pleadings, and consented to a trial of the case on a day fixed, the district court acquired jurisdiction to hear and determine the case on its merits, notwithstanding the irregular mode in which it was brought into that court.—Wrolsen v. Anderson, 53 Minn. 508, 55 N. W. 597; Knies v. Green, 53 Minn. 511, 55 N. W. 598.

[f] (Mo. 1834) Appearance in court and acknowledgment of an agreement to refer all matters in difference to the arbitrament of certain persons are a sufficient recognition of the agency of a person who has made the affidavit and recognizance required in an appeal from a justice.—Burton v. Collin, 3 Mo. 315.

[g] (Mo. 1895) The circuit court has jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice's court which was irregularly or defectively taken, but not where no appeal has been taken or allowed, although the parties appear and participate in the trial.—Moulder & Simpson v. Anderson, 63 Mo. App. 34, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 588.

[h] (Neb. 1896) After both parties to an appeal from justice court, taken within the prescribed time, appear in the appellate court, and file pleadings, and notice the case for trial, without objections, neither can question the validity of the appeal.—Claflin v. American Nat. Bank, 46 Neb. 894, 65 N. W. 1056.

[i] (Tex. 1892) Where parties to an appeal from a justice's court to the district court have voluntarily submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the latter court, it is too late to ask for the dismissal of the appeal because of defects in the appeal bond or because the judgment of the justice was not final.—Cason v. Westfall (Sup.) 18 S. W. 668.

§ 599. Special appearance.

[a] (Ill. 1878) An appellee's appearance in the circuit court merely to move a dismissal of the appeal from a justice of the peace is no waiver of the right to have the appeal dismissed.—Lucas v. Beebe, 88 Ill. 367.

[b] (Mich. 1892) Where a writ of attachment in a justice court was not served, and defendant's attorney entered a special appearance in the justice court to object to the sufficiency of the writ, defendant's general entry on his special appeal to the circuit court from a judgment allowing the affidavit to be amended was not a waiver of the defect, and conferred no jurisdiction on the court.—Freer v. White, 91 Mich. 74, 51 N. W. 807.

[c] (Mo. 1875) On appeal to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, any appearance by the appellee in the circuit court for a special object, such as a motion to dismiss on account of defective process, or to affirm on the ground of a failure to prosecute the appeal, is not such an appearance as will confer upon the court jurisdiction to try the case. To give such jurisdiction, some act is necessary which implies that the appellee is in the circuit court for general purposes.—Page v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 61 Mo. 78.

[d] (N. Y. 1869) The mere signing of "attorney for plaintiff and respondent," on motion papers in a motion to dismiss an appeal from a judgment of a justice, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, is not such an appearance as waives the objection to the jurisdiction.—Lake v. Kels, 11 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 37.

[e] (Tex. 1895) The appearance of the appellee, on an appeal from a justice's court, to resist the substitution of certain papers, is not an appearance to answer to the merits of the case.—Wren v. Kirsey (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 252.

[f] (Tex. 1895) An appearance in the district court on an appeal thereto, although for the purpose only of questioning its jurisdiction, gives jurisdiction for all purposes.—Landa v. Mercantile & Banking Co., 10 Tex. Civ. App. 582, 31 S. W. 55.

WHEN JURISDICTION OF APPELLATE COURT ATTACHES, § 605.
SUPERSEDEAS OR STAY OF PROCEEDINGS, § 606.

§ 600. Powers and proceedings of lower court.

Authority of justice to amend transcript after appeal has been taken, see post, § 627.
Effect of failure to give bond on appeal on right of justice to issue execution, see ante, § 550.
Jurisdiction of justice to amend appeal bond as affected by transfer of cause, see ante, § 577.

[a] (Ala. 1847) After an appeal is taken by the defendant from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the justice has no authority, even before he returns the papers, to receive the amount he adjudged to the plaintiff. Yet if he receives it and pays it to the plaintiff, and the latter accepts it, and directs the appeal to be returned, that he may recover the damages which the law gives in cases where the defendant's object was delay, by thus receiving the sum due on the judgment, the plaintiff must be held to have waived all right to the damages; these being recovered as a consequence of a subsisting debt or demand.—Andress v. Longmire, 11 Ala. 166.

[b] (Conn. 1883) A justice of the peace, after appeal, may amend his record, so that it may show a final judgment rendered, the record showing a taxation of costs, and a demurrer overruled.—Rowe v. Smith, 51 Conn. 266, 50 Am. Rep. 16.

[c] (Ga. 1877) After appeal from a justice's court, the justice amended the judgment so as to charge the defendant individually instead of as administrator. The appeal had been taken without the security required upon a personal judgment. Held, that defendant's rights under the appeal were not affected by the amendment in the judgment.—Cannon v. Sheffield, 59 Ga. 103.

[d] (Iowa, 1857) A justice has no authority to enter on his docket or return in his transcript that one party accepted a certain proposition made after judgment and appeal, and that he was ordered not to send up the papers in the appeal to the district court; and, if made, such entries or return are of no effect.—Kimpson v. Hunt, 4 Iowa (4 Clarke) 340.

[e] (Iowa, 1884) When a writ of error to a justice's court is pending in a circuit court, which, under Code 1873, § 162, has exclusive jurisdiction of such writs, the justice's order of change of venue to the district court is void.—Sayles v. Deluhrey, 19 N. W. 883.

[f] (Neb. 1884) Where a party perfects his appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace by filing an undertaking, he cannot thereafter move to set the judgment aside.—Dean v. Kinman, 15 Neb. 492, 20 N. W. 112.

[g] (Nev. 1866) The filing of a notice of appeal and undertaking, on appeal in a justice's court, after verdict, but before the entry of judgment thereon, does not deprive the justice of authority to enter up judgment on the verdict.—Fugitt v. Cox, 2 Nev. 370.

[h] (N. C. 1895) A justice of the peace has no power, after he has transmitted an appeal from his judgment and all the papers to the reviewing court, to grant a motion to set aside his judgment for want of jurisdiction.—Forbes v. McGuire, 116 N. C. 449, 21 S. E. 178.

[i] (Pa. 1831) When the common pleas has possession of a case, in the shape of an appeal, though defectively entered, the functions of the justice terminate.—Robinson v. Shrouds, 1 Ashm. 168.

[j] (Pa. 1881) Where an appeal has been properly, and in due time, taken from a justice's judgment, and the transcript on the appeal shows that all the costs were paid by the appellant, the justice has no power to issue an execution to collect costs alleged to have been omitted. The appeal suspends his powers.—Hoffman v. Reber, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 240.

§ 601. Effect as waiver of objections to jurisdiction of lower court.

Appearance on appeal as waiver of defects in process, see ante, § 596.

[a] (Ala. 1844) An appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace prevents the party appealing from objecting before the higher court that the justice issued the process and determined the case in a place beyond his precinct.—Monroe v. Brady, 7 Ala. 59.

[b] (Ala. 1858) In an action commenced in a justice's court, if the defendant suffers judgment by default to be rendered against him, from which he takes an appeal to a jury, and afterwards appeals to the circuit court, he cannot there plead in abatement on account of his being a freeholder and resident citizen of another county.—Thompson v. Clopton, 31 Ala. 647.

[c] (Ill. 1877) A defendant who has removed the case to the circuit court by appeal will not be heard to insist that the justice of the peace had no jurisdiction.—Wasson v. Cone, 86 Ill. 46.

[d] (Me. 1885) Taking an appeal from a judgment of a magistrate overruling a plea in abatement made after a general continuance of the action, without pleading any general defense, brings up the one question appealed from, and is a waiver of a defense on the merits of the case.—Otis v. Ellis, 78 Me. 75, 2 Atl. 851.

[e] (Ohio, 1846) Where a cause over which a justice had no jurisdiction is begun in a justice's court, and appealed to the common pleas, the proceedings before the justice are wholly void; and the case stands in the common pleas as though issue had been joined without process. It is too late to object to the jurisdiction of the justice.—Harrington v. Heath, 15 Ohio, 483.

[f] (Tenn. 1869) A scire facias to revive a judgment is in the nature of a suit; hence an appeal from a decision of a justice of the peace, upon a scire facias issued by him, to revive a judgment previously rendered in his court, does not have the effect of removing into the circuit court the suit in which the original judgment was rendered.—Bryant v. Smith, 47 Tenn. (7 Cold.) 113.

§ 602. Effect as waiver of irregularities of summons and proceedings.

(Wis. 1860) Barnum v. Fitzpatrick, 11 Wis. 81.

[b] The taking of an appeal from a justice's judgment waives all errors in the service of process and is equivalent to a general appearance to the merits in the circuit court.

(Neb. 1884) Dean v. Kinman, 15 Neb. 492, 20 N. W. 112.

[d, e] (Ala. 1857) On an appeal from a justice's court, if the defendant pleads to the statement filed against him in the circuit court, he cannot afterwards object to any irregularities in the appeal, notice thereof, or process commencing the suit; nor can he afterwards take advantage of a previous discontinuance against a co-defendant.—McElhaney v. Gilleland, 30 Ala. 183.

[f] (Ala. 1889) By failing to object to the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace at the time of trial, and thereafter appealing to the circuit court, defendant waived, in the latter court, the question of jurisdiction, as appeals to the circuit court are triable de novo.—Western Ry. Co. v. Lazarus, 88 Ala. 453, 6 South. 877.

[g] (Ark. 1839) Where a party appeals from the decision of a justice of the peace, and afterwards brings his writ of error, he cannot assign for error any defects in the summons in the justice's court or in the service of it.—Smith v. Stinnett, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 497.

[h] (Colo. 1887) Defendant in an attachment suit objected to the jurisdiction of the county court, on the grounds that the justice, before whom the case was first tried, did not cause notice of the suit to be published as required by law; and that the constable did not retain the summons put into his hands for service until the date of the trial. Held that, by filing his appeal bond in the appellate court, the defendant waived objection to the jurisdiction of that court.—Charles v. Amos, 10 Colo. 272, 15 Pac. 417.

[i] (Colo. 1887) Error committed by a justice in continuing a case is waived by the taking of an appeal to the county court, securing a change of venue to the district court, and appearing there and trying the case on its merits.—Craig v. Smith, 10 Colo. 220, 15 Pac. 337.

[j] (Colo. 1888) An appeal by defendant from the judgment of the justice in an action against a railway company gives the county court jurisdiction of defendant, and is a waiver of a defective service of summons.—Colorado Cent. R. Co. v. Caldwell, 11 Colo. 545, 19 Pac. 542.

[k] (Colo. 1895) Where a justice, after allowing an amendment of a summons by substitution of the defendant's proper name, assumes jurisdiction, and enters judgment against the defendant as originally summoned, defendant, by appealing and participating in a trial de novo, waives the want of jurisdiction.—Union Pac., D. & G. Ry. Co. v. Perkins, 7 Colo. App. 184, 42 Pac. 1047.

[l] (Ill. 1859) The circuit court has jurisdiction on appeal from a justice of the peace, where the justice had jurisdiction, however defective the service of summons by the constable may have been; and by taking an appeal the appellant gives jurisdiction, even in cases where there was not any service.—Swingley v. Haynes, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 214.

[m] (Ill. 1861) An appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace gives the appellate court jurisdiction of the party, although he was not served with process in the case appealed from; and the appellate court can proceed to a trial on the merits.—Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McCutchin, 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 9.

[n] (Ill. 1874) Where the defendant, in an action before a justice of the peace appeals from the judgment of the justice to the circuit court and files an appeal bond, he thereby waives all informalities in the proceedings before the justice; and the suit cannot be dismissed by the circuit court, except on a showing that the justice had no jurisdiction.—Village of Coulterville v. Gillen, 72 Ill. 599.

[o] (Ill. 1894) A party, by appealing to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice, submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the circuit court, where the justice acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action.—Eckels v. Wolf, 55 Ill. App. 310.

[p] (Ill. 1895) A defendant in an action before a justice of the peace waives defects in the service of the summons by filing his appeal bond.—Willerton v. Shoemaker, 60 Ill. App. 126.

[q] (Kan. 1877) Taking and perfecting an appeal from a justice's judgment rendered upon default is a waiver of any objection to want of service of summons to commence the action.—Haas v. Lees, 18 Kan. 449.

[r] (Me. 1844) If parties go to trial on the merits, in an action before a justice of the peace, and an appeal is entered, without the addition of the similiter to the plea, the district court, nevertheless, has jurisdiction of the case.—Strout v. Inhabitants of Durham, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 483.

[s] (Mass. 1861) It is too late for a defendant to object for the first time in a superior court to the service of a writ upon him, in an action brought originally in the justice's court in Boston, in which, after a default was there entered against him, he appeared at the taxation of costs, and appealed from the clerk's taxation, and finally, upon its affirmance by the court, entered a general appeal from the judgment there rendered against him.—Briggs v. Humphrey, 83 Mass. (1 Allen) 371.

[t] (Minn. 1878) Where there is no appearance in an action before a justice, an appeal on questions of law alone, under Laws 1865, c. 22, will not preclude the defendant from availing himself of a want of jurisdiction of his person by the justice.—Craighead v. Martin, 25 Minn. 41.

[u] (Minn. 1884) A motion by defendant, in an action before a justice of the peace, for a dismissal of the action on the ground that the summons was void, was denied. After trial before the justice, defendant appealed from the judgment thereon upon questions of fact, thereby seeking a retrial in the appellate court upon the merits. Held, that the objection to the jurisdiction of the court over him was waived.—Seurer v. Horst, 31 Minn. 479, 18 N. W. 283.

[v] (Mo. 1839) In proceedings before a justice of the peace, any error is cured, by statute, on appeal to the circuit court.—Atwood v. Reyburn, 5 Mo. 555.

[vv] (Mo. 1882) By appealing and going to trial on the merits defendant waives the right to show that the justice from whose judgment the appeal was taken was not "the next nearest justice" to the one who granted a change of venue.—Spahn v. Sharp, 12 Mo. App. 123.

[w] (Mont. 1890) Irregularities in a summons issued from a justice's court, in not fully apprising defendant of the nature of the action, or of the relief that will be demanded in case of default, are waived by appealing after default, though defendant appear specially in the appellate court to move to dismiss the action.—Gage v. Maryatt, 9 Mont. 265, 23 Pac. 337.

[ww] (N. C. 1847) Where a party appealed from the judgment of a magistrate to the county court, under the act of 1831, relating to injuries done to stock in another's inclosure, and a trial was had by jury, the matter being gone through with de novo, the defects in the proceedings before the magistrate are not material, as they are vacated by the appeal.—Kearney v. Jeffreys, 30 N. C. 96.

[x] (N. D. 1891) On appeal by a defendant in justice's court, on questions of law and fact, where the notice of appeal demands a new trial, the district court has jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, though the summons was not properly served, and the defendant appeared specially before the justice and moved to set aside the service.—Lyons v. Miller, 2 N. D. 1, 48 N. W. 514.

[xx] (N. D. 1894) An objection to jurisdiction of a justice is not waived by an appeal to the district court, and subsequently to the supreme court, to review the sufficiency of the summons of the justice.—Miner v. Francis, 3 N. D. 549, 58 N. W. 343.

[y] (W. Va. 1889) Defendant who had suffered judgment by default in a justice's court appealed to the circuit court, and moved to quash the return of service of summons, on the ground that it was served by an unauthorized person. The motion was overruled, and defendant proceeded to trial on the merits. Held, that any irregularity in the service was waived.—Johnson v. MacCoy, 32 W. Va. 552, 9 S. E. 887.

[yy] (Wis. 1860) A default before a justice, followed by an appeal by the defendant without specially insisting upon defects of service, is a waiver thereof.—Barnum v. Fitzpatrick, 11 Wis. 81.

[z] (Wis. 1861) Where, in a justice's suit, judgment has been rendered against the defendant for more than $15, a defect in the process is waived by the taking by him of an appeal.—Lowe v. Stringham, 14 Wis. 222.

§ 603. Effect on Judgment.

Appeal as suspending judgment and preventing dormancy, see ante, § 413 [g].

[a] An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace vacates that judgment.
—(Ala. 1885) Lehman v. Hudmon, 79 Ala. 532;
(Me. 1860) Hunter v. Cole, 49 Me. 556;
(N. J. 1851) Vannoy v. Givens, 23 N. J. Law (3 Zab.) 201;
(N. C. 1813) Marshall v. Lester, 4 N. C. 13, 6 N. C. 227; (1853) Sturgill v. Thompson, 44 N. C. 392;
(Tex. 1885) Bender v. Lockett, 64 Tex. 566.

[b] (Conn. 1843) An appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace to the county court allowed, but not duly entered in that court, not merely suspends such judgment, but vacates it, so that an action of debt thereon cannot be sustained.—Curtiss v. Beardsley, 15 Conn. 518.

[c] (Conn. 1856) The defendants, in an action of trespass before a justice of the peace, pleaded in abatement the defective service of the plaintiff's writ, to which plea the latter demurred. The court sustained the demurrer, and ordered the defendants to answer over, which they refused to do, whereupon judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff. The defendants then appealed from the judgment upon the demurrer to the superior court. Held, that such appeal did not vacate the final judgment of the justice, and that the superior court could take no cognizance of the case.—Blackman v. Beha, 24 Conn. 331.

[d] (Conn. 1872) On appeal from a judgment recovered before a justice of the peace, on motion of the appellee, the case was stricken from the docket on the ground of an irregularity in the appeal. The judgment creditor afterwards brought an action of debt on the judgment rendered by the justice. Held, in this action, that while an appeal well taken vacates the judgment appealed from, yet that here, by reason of the judgment of the appellate court that the appeal was not legally taken, it was, as between the parties to be considered as not legally taken, without reference to the actual fact, which was not open, as between them, to inquiry, and that therefore the original judgment of the justice was in force, and would sustain the action of debt.—Cunningham v. Rogers, 39 Conn. 482.

[e] (Ind. 1872) An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace has the effect to vacate the judgment, and brings the case into court for a retrial, as if it had not been before tried. The appellate court is not a court of errors.—Britton v. Fox, 39 Ind. 369.

[f] (Ky. 1816) Though the power of the legislature to increase the jurisdiction of justices may be questionable, where it provides that on appeal to the circuit court the latter court should proceed to hear and determine the case on the merits, it renders the judgment of a magistrate by appeal null and void, and the original validity of such judgment is immaterial.—Pollard v. Holemen, 7 Ky. (4 Bibb) 416.

[g] (Mass. 1878) Under Gen. St. c. 120, § 125, and Id. c. 124, § 32, regulating appeals from a magistrate's judgment, the appeal therefrom on charges of fraud against a poor debtor vacates both the part in favor of the appellant and the part against him, and opens the case for trial in the superior court on all the charges.—Morse v. Dayton, 125 Mass. 47.

[i] (N. H. 1852) On an appeal from a justice, no objection can be made to the judgment for any cause, the effect of the appeal being to vacate, for most purposes, such judgment.—Bixby v. Harris, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 125.

[j] (N. Y. 1851) The judgment of a justice, notwithstanding an appeal from it which is pending in other courts, under the provisions of the Code, remains a fixed right, and not affected by a statute enacted pending the appeal.—Pruyn v. Tyler, 18 How. Prac. 331.

[k, l] (N. Y. 1859) The appeal, under the Code, from a justice's judgment to the county court, does not supersede the justice's judgment, nor does the county court proceed de novo with a trial; but the appellate jurisdiction is merely of errors in the court below. The judgment is merely of affirmance or reversal; and the whole proceedings are like those formerly had on certiorari. The judgment of the justice remains a valid judgment.—Pruyn v. Tyler, 18 How. Prac. 331.

[m] (Pa. 1848) Where a plaintiff, having obtained a judgment before a justice, appealed to the common pleas, and then discontinued his appeal, it was held that no action would lie upon the judgment obtained by him before the justice.—Felton v. Weyman, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 70.

[n] (Tex. 1886) A justice's judgment is annulled by an appeal therefrom, its execution not being merely suspended until the determination of the cause in the appellate court.—Moore v. Jordan, 65 Tex. 395.

[o] (Tex. 1894) Where, on appeal from a judgment of a justice against two or more persons jointly, a trial de novo is to be had, an appeal by one of such judgment debtors annuls the judgment appealed from.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Mosty, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 330, 27 S. W. 1057.

[p] (Vt. 1848) The effect of an appeal by one defendant from a judgment in a justice court, in a joint action on a promissory note against several defendants, is to vacate the judgment rendered by the justice, and remove the entire case to the appellate court.—Town of Fletcher v. Blair, 20 Vt. 124.

[q] (W. Va. 1886) An appeal from a justice's judgment to the common pleas renders that judgment ineffectual as the foundation of an action.—Evans v. Taylor, 28 W. Va. 184.

§ 604. Effect in attachment and garnishment proceedings.

[a] The giving of an appeal bond releases the lien of an attachment issued from a justice's court.

—(Ind. 1856) The Standart v. Bond, 8 Ind. 270;
(Mich. 1881) Bushey v. Raths, 45 Mich. 181, 7 N. W. 802.

[b] (Ala. 1846) After an appeal from a justice, no plea in abatement can be interposed to disclose a defect in the affidavit for the attachment, which was the process in the suit. This is a defect in the proceedings of the justice, and is cured by the statute.—Clough v. Johnson, 9 Ala. 425.

[bb] (Ala. 1875) Defects in an affidavit for attachment, or in an attachment sued out before a justice of the peace, such as an omission to name the individuals composing a partnership suing out the writ, are cured on appeal by Rev. Code, § 2772, providing that the cause should be tried "according to equity and justice, without regard to any defects in the summons or other proceedings before the justice."—Paulhaus v. Leber, 54 Ala. 91.

[c] (Colo. 1895) Where a justice of the peace fails to acquire jurisdiction in an attachment proceeding on account of irregularity in the papers, an appearance by the defendant or garnishee in the county court on appeal will not confer jurisdiction upon that court in the attachment and garnishment proceedings.—Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. v. Blair, 6 Colo. App. 40, 39 Pac. 897.

[d] (Iowa, 1851) An appeal to the district court does not release the plaintiff from responsibility on the attachment bond given before the justice.—McCall v. Bradley, 3 G. Greene, 200.

[e] (Iowa, 1873) Appeal to the circuit court, by an intervener, from a judgment rendered against him in attachment proceedings before a justice of the peace, and the execution of an appeal bond, do not entitle the intervener to possession of the other property.—Jennings v. Warnock, 37 Iowa, 278.

[f] (Iowa, 1881) Where attached property has been released by a justice of the peace as exempt, his decision is conclusive as to defendant's rights until reversed; and suing out a writ of error, if no supersedeas bond is filed, as required by Code 1873, § 3186, will not preserve the lien of attachment.—Pellersells v. Allen, 56 Iowa, 717, 10 N. W. 261.

[g] (Kan. 1880) A simple appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the district court does not authorize the latter to enter an order against a garnishee, who has been discharged by the justice, prior to the appeal.—Brown v. Tuppeny, 24 Kan. 29.

[h] (Kan. 1889) In an action before a justice, in which an attachment had issued, a motion was made by defendant to discharge the attachment, which was overruled. Afterwards a judgment was rendered in favor of defendant on the merits, and the property was ordered to be returned to defendant. Within 10 days from final judgment the plaintiff appealed to the district court, filing an ordinary appeal bond. Held, that the appeal did not carry the attachment proceedings to the district court, so as to authorize the constable, after judgment rendered by the justice, to continue to hold possession of the property.—Becker v. Steele, 41 Kan. 173, 21 Pac. 169.

[i] (Mo. 1885) The pendency of the appeal of an interpleader from a justice's judgment in attachment operates as a supersedeas, where bond is given, as to other cases.—State v. Ranson, 86 Mo. 327.

[j] (Ohio, 1890) Rev. St. § 6524, provides that any party to a suit affected by an order discharging or refusing to discharge an order of attachment shall be entitled to file a petition in error in the court of common pleas to reverse, vacate, or modify the same. Section 6506 declares that in case of appeal by either party the attachment shall be continued and determined by the court of common pleas in the same manner as though the attachment had issued from the court of common pleas. Held, that where, in an attachment before a justice of the peace, a party filed a petition in error in the common pleas from a decision of the justice overruling a motion to dissolve the attachment, and appealed the case from a final judgment of the justice, he was entitled to have the writ of error adjudicated, without waiting for the determination of the suit, since section 6506 refers only to cases where no ruling has been made by the justice as to the validity of the attachment, and was not intended to cut off the right to prosecute error to a ruling by the justice on a motion to discharge the attachment.—Nau v. Gobrecht, 4 O. C. D. 495.

[m] (Pa. 1893) In an action for the wages of manual labor, brought before an alderman by process of foreign attachment, under Act May 8, 1874, on plaintiff's affidavit that defendant is a nonresident, an objection to the jurisdiction over defendant's person because he was in fact a resident is waived by defendant's appeal from the judgment of the alderman to the court of common pleas, the entry of bail for the debt and costs, and his general appearance in the court of common pleas.—Wright v. Millikin, 152 Pa. 507, 25 Atl. 756, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 469; Wright v. Same, 152 Pa. 511, 25 Atl. 757; Cook v. Same, 152 Pa. 512, 25 Atl. 757.

[n] (Tenn. 1881) An appeal from a judgment of the justice of the peace, where an instanter execution had issued under affidavit, vacates a judgment on a garnishment levied under such execution.—Karr v. Schade, 75 Tenn. (7 Lea) 294.

[o] (Wis. 1864) Where, in an action upon a promissory note commenced before a justice of the peace, the affidavit for an attachment, which was taken for the complaint, was not sufficient to authorize the warrant which was issued, it was held that after the defendant had appeared generally, and pleaded to the merits, and appealed from the judgment of the circuit court, whether the attachment might have been dissolved or not, it was too late to dismiss the suit as a personal action, for any defect in the process or in the service of the same.—Woodruff v. Sanders, 18 Wis. 161.

§ 605. When jurisdiction of appellate court attaches.

[a] (U. S. 1832) The appeal of one party from the judgment of a justice of the peace gives the circuit court jurisdiction.—Dillingham v. Skein, Fed. Cas. No. 3,912a [1 Hemp. 181].

[b] (Ala. 1853) A defendant, against whom judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace, is regarded as the actor in the subsequent proceedings after he has removed the case by appeal to the circuit court, and is held to be constantly in court.—Martin v. Higgins, 23 Ala. 775.

[c] (Ark. 1839) Under the territorial law, the prayer and grant of an appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace gives jurisdiction to the circuit court. It does not depend upon giving bail in appeal.—Smith v. Stinnett, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 497.

[d] (Cal. 1885) The superior court obtains jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice's court, where the notice of appeal is served and filed, and the undertaking on appeal filed within the statutory time, and it cannot then dismiss for want of jurisdiction; and the fact that the acts necessary to the perfection of the appeal were not done in the order prescribed in the statute is immaterial, if they are all done within the prescribed time.—Hall v. El Dorado County Superior Court, 68 Cal. 24, 8 Pac. 509.

[g] (Ill. 1875) Where an appeal bond is taken and approved by the justice, even if it is defective, the appeal is nevertheless taken from the judgment, and the opposite party must follow the case to the appellate court.—Miller v. Superior Mach. Co., 79 Ill. 450.

[h] (Ill. 1878) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the transcript of the proceedings before the justice must be filed in the circuit court, in order to give it jurisdiction of the case. The mere filing of an appeal bond is not sufficient.—Sheridan v. Beardsley, 89 Ill. 477.

[i] (Ill. 1882) A court to which an appeal is taken from a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to dismiss the appeal without the consent of the appellant, where no transcript from the justice has been filed.—Robinson v. Allen, 11 Ill. App. (11 Bradw.) 574.

[j] (Ill. 1883) Until the transcript of the justices' proceedings is filed in the circuit court, the court has no power to make any order in the case, other than to continue it. Until the transcript is filed, jurisdiction is not obtained.—Odd Fellows' Benev. Soc. v. Alt, 12 Ill. App. (12 Bradw.) 570.

[k] (Iowa, 1861) Whenever an appeal bond or recognizance is filed in the office of the justice, with approved sureties, within the time limited for the taking of appeals, the magistrate's action over the case, beyond what is necessary to be done in order to send up a transcript of the proceedings, is suspended.—McKeever v. Horine, 12 Iowa, 227.

[l] (Iowa, 1887) Under Code 1873, § 3584, regulating appeals from justices, an appeal is deemed in the circuit court by the filing of the justice's return in the office of the clerk.—Goodman v. Allen, 72 Iowa, 616, 34 N. W. 445.

[m] (Kan. 1894) An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is complete upon the filing and approval of the appeal bond or undertaking within 10 days from the rendition of the judgment.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hurst, 52 Kan. 609, 35 Pac. 211.

[n] (Mich. 1874) The circuit court has no jurisdiction to try an appeal from a justice until a return is made to the appeal from justice court.—People v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

[o] (Mo. 1880) A cause appealed from the decision of a justice is pending in the circuit court from the time when the appeal was granted, not from the time when the transcript was filed with the clerk.—Sullivan v. Sanders, 9 Mo. App. 75.

[p] (Neb. 1891) Code, § 1007, requires the party appealing from a judgment of a justice of the peace to enter into an undertaking within 10 days. To perfect an appeal, other sections require a transcript of the judgment, including the undertaking, to be delivered to the clerk of the district court within 30 days after the judgment was rendered. Plaintiff, after recovering a judgment before a justice, filed a certified transcript with the clerk of the district court a few days after the judgment was rendered, so as to make it a lien on defendant's land. Afterwards, defendant gave an appeal undertaking in time, and filed with said clerk, but not until the 30 days had expired, another transcript of the judgment and the undertaking. Held, that the district court had jurisdiction because of the transcript filed by the appellee, since such transcript, though imperfect, gave it jurisdiction to order a perfect one, and the subsequent filing of such a transcript by appellant had the same effect as if it had been ordered.—Fulton v. Ryan, 33 Neb. 456, 50 N. W. 430.

[q] (Pa. 1870) Where an appeal from a judgment of a justice has not been perfected by reason of its being filed too late, the common pleas has no authority to issue the rule to show cause why the execution issued on the judgment should not be set aside.—Dailey v. Mayer, 2 Leg. Gaz. 223.

[r] (Pa. 1873) To complete an appeal a justice's transcript of the proceedings must be filed in the court by the principal appellant. —Dietrick v. Mann, 1 Leg. Chron. 159.

[s] (Tex. 1884) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, the appellant, by filing the proper appeal bond within the time provided by law, perfects the jurisdiction of the county court, which may issue any writ necessary to enforce its jurisdiction. compelling the justice to send up the papers.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Dyer, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 312.

[t] (Tex. 1885) Upon the filing of the appeal bond, the appeal becomes perfected upon the adjournment of that term, and the court has no further jurisdiction over the case, which thereafter attaches to the court appealed to.—Curtis v. Bernstein, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 672.

Liabilities on supersedeas bonds, see post, §§ 735–750.

[a] (Ark. 1877) The failure of the appellant, on appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, to file a supersedeas bond, is no ground for the dismissal of the appeal.—Hughes v. Wheat, 32 Ark. 292.

[b] (Iowa, 1882) Code 1873, § 3601, provides that "all proceedings in the justice's court subsequent to judgment may be stayed by a bond * * * like that required in cases of appeals." Held, that a constable levying upon goods under an execution issued upon a judgment of a justice. from which an appeal has been taken or writ of error sued out, without filing such bond, is not liable in damages for the levy.—Thomas v. Nicklas, 58 Iowa, 49, 11 N. W. 722.

[c] (Ky. 1875) Civ. Code, § 292, permitting an appeal from an order of justices' or quarterly courts sustaining an attachment to the circuit, without appealing from the personal judgment, does not prevent the creditor from collecting his judgment by execution, but stays the sale until the circuit court shall sustain the attachment or the debt be paid.—Hawkins v. Baldauf, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 624.

[d] (Md. 1889) Act 1888, c. 235, adds a new condition to replevin bonds in magistrate's cases, to the effect that the plaintiff will not only abide by and perform the judgment of the justice, but also "of the circuit court of the county or Baltimore city court, as the case may be." Held, that the giving of such a bond does not obviate the necessity for giving another bond on appeal in order to stay execution.—State v. Carrick, 70 Md. 586, 17 Atl. 559. 14 Am. St. Rep. 387.

[dd] (Mo. 1847) An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is not taken until a recognizance is entered and approved.—Adams v. Wilson, 10 Mo. 341; Slater v. The Convoy, 10 Mo. 513.

[e] (Neb. 1890) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, providing that to obtain a stay of execution on a justice's judgment the judgment debtor shall enter into an undertaking, with sufficient surety, to pay the judgment, etc., "which undertaking shall * * * be signed by the surety," it is not necessary that the judgment debtor should sign the undertaking.—State v. Cochran, 28 Neb. 798, 45 N. W. 52.

[f] (N. J. 1793) While an appeal is pending from the judgment of a justice every proceeding under the original judgment is void.—Thompson v. Thompson, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 159.

[g] (N. J. 1825) Where an appeal from a justice to the court of common pleas was dismissed, and an execution issued on the judgment, and a rule was obtained on the court of common pleas to show cause why mandamus should not issue to compel reinstatement of the appeal, the supreme court will grant a rule on the sheriff to stay proceedings under the execution.—Allen v. Joice, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 135.

[h] (N. Y. 1824) An appeal from a justice's judgment, though after transcript filed and execution issued, supersedes the execution.—Sholts v. Judges of Yates County, 2 Cow. 506.

[i] (N. Y. 1850) An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, not followed up by the undertaking required by the Code (sections 355–357), will not operate as a stay of any further proceedings which the plaintiff may elect to pursue in order to enforce the collection of the judgment.—Conway v. Hitchins, 9 Barb. 378.

[j] (N. Y. 1858) The defendant perfected his appeal from a judgment of a justice's court, after execution had been issued, and when it was in a constable's hands; but before levy he served a copy of his undertaking upon the plaintiff, though not upon the constable. After receiving the copy undertaking, the plaintiff directed the constable to levy. Held, that the levy should be set aside. as made in bad faith. —Jones v. McCarl, 7 Abb. Prac. 418.

[k] (N. Y. 1865) Where, on taking an appeal from a judgment recovered in a court of a justice of the peace, the appellant executed two undertakings, one containing the clause necessary to effect a stay of proceedings, and the other without such clause, and served the former on the justice, and filed the latter with the clerk, held, that proceedings were not stayed.—Brush v. Lee, 18 Abb. Prac. 398.

[m] (Ohio, 1832) The party interested in an appeal from the judgment of a justice, which is perfected after execution, should himself, or by his attorney, serve an order for recalling the execution.—Holt v. Bingham, Wright, 163.

[n] (Pa. 1809) Under the statute of 1804, the defendant, in a suit before a justice, might enter bail to obtain stay of execution after the expiration of the 20 days allowed for an appeal, if execution had not already been issued.—Mann v. Alberti, 2 Bin. 195.

[o] (Pa. 1824) The entry of security to obtain a stay of execution, under the act of 1806, operates as a discharge of the special bail, on an appeal from a justice of the peace.—Roup v. Waldhouer, 12 Serg. & R. 24.

[p] (Pa. 1838) After an execution had issued immediately upon a justice's judgment, and the money had been made by a sale of personal property, it was held too late to enter an appeal or bail for stay of execution, notwithstanding section 6 of the act of 1820.—Patterson v. Peironnet, 7 Watts, 337.

[q] (Pa. 1847) On appeal from a justice of the peace, the time of the stay of execution is to be computed from the first day of the term to which the appeal is taken.—Woods v. Connor, 6 Pa. (6 Barr) 430.

[r] (Pa. 1854) Where a party has entered bail before an alderman for an appeal, the magistrate may, after the expiration of the time for filing the appeal, issue execution, if satisfied that the appeal has not been perfected, without a certificate of that fact from the court of common pleas.—Setterly v. Yearsley, 1 Phila. 517.

[s] (Pa. 1857) Where an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the court of common pleas is taken, it is ineffectual to stay an execution, unless the transcript is filed within the time required by law.—Appeal of Herron, 29 Pa. (5 Casey) 240.

[t] (Pa. 1881) When an appeal has been taken from the judgment of a justice, the latter may issue execution without the production of a certificate from the prothonotary to him that the appeal taken in the case by the defendant had not been entered in the common pleas; the justice taking the risk of the legality of the execution.—Carpenter v. Mills, 2 Leg. Rec. Rep. 162.

[u] (Vt. 1879) Where no security is given for the prosecution of an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the appeal is void; and the creditor must take out execution within the statutory number of days from the date of the judgment, in order to preserve his attachment and hold the receiptors.—Bass v. Gay, 51 Vt. 581.

EVIDENCE, § 611.
CONDUCT OF TRIAL AND JUDGMENT, § 612.
PROCEEDINGS FOR APPEAL, § 613.

§ 607. In general.

[a] (Iowa, 1856) Upon writ of error to a justice, the only points as to which he is to make return are those stated in the affidavit for the writ.—Hays v. Gorby, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 203.

[b] (Iowa, 1859) A justice, commanded to certify the records and proceedings, must certify to all proceedings whatsoever stated in the affidavit on which the writ of error has been based.—Miller v. O'Neal, 9 Iowa, 446.

[c] (Minn. 1872) The return of a justice on appeal need not show of what county he is a justice.—Barber v. Kennedy, 18 Minn. 216 (Gil. 196).

[d] (N. J. 1839) On appeal from the court for the trial of small causes to the common pleas, it is no ground for dismissing the appeal that the transcript does not show in what county the cause was tried, nor that the person before whom it was tried was a magistrate.—Case v. Rowland, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 76.

[e] (N. Y. 1882) Under Code Prac. §§ 3053, 3213, a return on an appeal from a justice "must contain all the proceedings, including the evidence and the judgment."—Gardner v. Smith, 2 Civ. Proc. R. 420.

[f] (Ohio, 1832) On error, it is sufficient if the justice certify that his transcript contains the substance of his proceedings.—Brackenridge v. Husted, Wright, 70.

[g] (S. C. 1812) The district court will refuse to hear an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, unless the facts before the magistrate, and the reasons of his decision, are fully certified.—Richardson v. Johnson, 3 Brev. 51.

[h, i] (Tex. 1889) Under Rev. St. art. 1640, requiring a certified copy of the bill of costs from the justice's day book to accompany the transcript on appeal, a bill of costs in the transcript, over a certificate of the justice that the transcript is a true one of all the entries on his docket, is a substantial compliance therewith.—Forst v. Mayer, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 450.

[j] (Wis. 1850) The return of a justice, on an appeal from his judgment, touching the matters appealed from, must be such as to show that his proceedings have been regular and in conformity with law.—Hale v. Thayer, 2 Chand. 68, 2 Pin. 410.

§ 608. Jurisdiction of justice.

[a] (Ark. 1850) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the transcript showed that a summons issued 10 days before the cause of action was filed, but neither the note in suit nor the summons was sent up. Held, that the record did not show any jurisdiction in the justice, and that none could be exercised by the circuit court until the proceedings were perfected below.—Heflin v. Owens, 10 Ark. (5 Eng.) 265.

[b] (Del. 1843) On an appeal from a justice of the peace, the transcript must show the jurisdiction below and the right of appeal; and the want of this may be objected to at any time.—Townsend v. Steward, 4 Har. 94.

[c] (Mo. 1883) In an action before a justice for killing stock, it must affirmatively appear from the transcript that the animal was killed in his township, and that the justice had jurisdiction of the cause.—Matson v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 80 Mo. 229.

[d] (Mo.) The requirement of Rev. St. 1889, § 6126, that an action against a railroad company for killing live stock must be brought before a justice of the peace of the township in which the injury happened, or in an adjoining township, is jurisdictional; and the record on appeal must affirmatively show such jurisdictional fact, or a judgment against the company will be reversed.—(1885) Vaughn v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 17 Mo. App. 4; (1885) Manuel v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 19 Mo. App. 631; (1892) Nickerson v. Eddy, 50 Mo. App. 569.

[e] (Mo. 1886) On appeal, the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace must appear. It cannot be presumed.—Gideon v. Hughes, 21 Mo. App. 528.

[f] (Mo. 1889) In an action before a justice against a railway company for damages for the killing of live stock by reason of failure to fence the railroad, the transcript of the justice showed that the failure to fence and the killing of the stock occurred in a certain township, and that the suit was begun before a justice thereof. Held, that this sufficiently showed the jurisdiction of the justice.—Emmerson v. St. Louis & H. Ry. Co., 35 Mo. App. 621.

[g] (N. Y. 1831) In ejectment, a transcript of a justice's judgment is good, although it does not, on its face, show that the justice had jurisdiction.—Jackson v. Rowland, 6 Wend. 666, 22 Am. Dec. 557.

[h] (N. Y. 1857) It is not necessary that a justice's transcript of a judgment rendered by him should show the proceedings to give him jurisdiction to render a valid judgment in order to authorize it to be filed and docketed. It is for that purpose prima facie evidence that such justice had jurisdiction to the judgment.—Dickinson v. Smith, 25 Barb. 102.

[i] (Ohio, 1860) Under Swan's St. p. 332, § 327, providing that if any debtor shall appear before a justice of the peace without process, and confess that he is indebted to another, the justice may render judgment on such confession, the transcript of a justice of such judgment is erroneous, unless it shows the personal appearance and confession of defendant, and the personal application of the plaintiff for judgment.—Murdock v. Cooper, 2 Ohio Dec. 306.

[j] (Pa. 1881) It is sufficient if the record substantially shows the justice's jurisdiction.—Leamy v. McClure, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 220, 1 Del. Co. R. 100.

[k] (Pa. 1881) A record stated plaintiffs' claim as follows: "Parties appear. Plaintiff claims recovery of a note to the amount of $200, which she gave defendant for safe-keeping, which defendant denies." It further showed that the justice proceeded to hear the cause, and gave judgment for plaintiff for $185.60. Held to show an action in trover for the conversion of a note, in so far as that was necessary in the record to show the jurisdiction of the justice.—Leamy v. McClure, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 220, 1 Del. Co. R. 100.

[l] (Pa. 1891) A transcript of a justice's judgment must not only show the form of action and the fact that plaintiff testified, but must set forth the cause of action sufficiently to show that the justice had jurisdiction of the case.—Fitzgerald v. Campbell (Com. Pl.) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 396.

[m] (Pa. 1893) Under Act May 25, 1887 (P. L. 271), abolishing all distinction between forms of action, so far as procedure is concerned, a justice's transcript on appeal fails to show jurisdiction of the justice, where it designates the action substantially in the words of Act March 22, 1814 (6 Smith's Laws, p. 182) § 1, by which jurisdiction is conferred on justices in trespass for damages for injuries to real estate; but it must designate the wrongful act alleged, so as to show that it is within the jurisdiction conferred by the latter act.—Wood v. Bronson (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 746.

[a] (Ill. 1878) The jurisdiction of the circuit courts in the case of an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace is not affected by the neglect or failure of the justice to transmit the summons with the bond and transcript.—Buettner v. Norton & Dickinson Mfg. Co., 90 Ill. 415.

[b] (Ind. 1879) On appeal from the circuit court, in an action on a note which originated in a justice's court, the record showed that a summons was personally served three days before the trial in the justice's court, and that an appeal was taken from the justice's judgment to the circuit court. Held, that the circuit court had acquired jurisdiction; and in such case no copy of the summons need be set out in the record.—Baldwin v. Webster, 68 Ind. 133.

[c] (Iowa, 1856) The original notice before the justice is not necessary on appeal. Its only effect would be to show the original cause of action, and where that sufficiently appears from the proper entries on the justice's docket, not objected to for insufficiency, nothing more is needed.—Shawg v. Bruce, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 324.

[d] (Minn. 1872) It is the duty of the justice to include the summons in his return on appeal to the district court; but the fact that he did not so return the summons, to be available, should appear affirmatively on the record.—Barber v. Kennedy, 18 Minn. 216 (Gil. 196).

[e] (Ohio, 1834) Section 44 of the act defining the duties of justices of the peace, and requiring a justice on appeal to certify up all the original papers used on the trial before him, includes only such papers and instruments as were used as evidence on the trial, and does not include the original writ.—Austin v. Hayden, 6 Ohio (6 Ham.) 388.

[f] (Pa. 1882) In a suit against a turnpike company, brought under a provision of its charter, authorizing the recovery of $5 for taking toll on any part of the road out of repair, the transcript of the justice spoke of an action of debt, while the summons styled the action "penal debt." Held, that the discrepancy was immaterial.—Fetterman v. Robbins, 100 Pa. 282.

§ 610. Pleadings and demands of parties.

Stating cause of action so as to show jurisdiction of justice, see ante, § 608.

[a] (Ark. 1847) It being essential to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace that the cause of action be filed with him before suing out the summons, his transcript of a case sent up on appeal must show that it was so filed or the case will be remanded, with instructions to the justice to amend according to the facts.—Keath v. Berkley, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 469.

[b] (Ill. 1878) Where a complaint in writing, in a forcible detainer suit, is transmitted with the papers on an appeal from a justice, and his transcript shows that a complaint was filed, though his file mark is not on the complaint, this is sufficient to give jurisdiction to both the justice and circuit court.—Reynolds v. Gage, 91 Ill. 125.

[c] (Ill. 1891) A statement in the transcript that the summons was issued on complaint of the plaintiff does not warrant the conclusion that a sufficient complaint in writing was filed with the justice.—Abbott v. Kruse, 37 Ill. App. 549.

[d] (Ind. 1841) On an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the circuit court, the cause of action filed with the justice need not be copied or referred to in the justice's transcript.—White v. Fortune, 6 Blackf. 116.

[e] (Ind. 1878) An appeal from a justice's judgment on a note, which was the only cause of action filed, may be dismissed on motion, if the note is not transmitted to the circuit court with the transcript.—Tucker v. Gardiner, 63 Ind. 299.

[f] (Kan. 1866) Where an action was appealed from a justice to the district court, and only the justice's transcript was filed, the district court, on motion, should have dismissed the case, or else should have required the filing of pleadings; and this, even before the adoption of the rule requiring it.—Tarleston v. Brily, 3 Kan. 433.

[g] (Mo. 1872) Where a transcript from a justice stated that plaintiff filed his affidavit, and gave its substance, and the justice sent up, as one of the original papers in the case, a statement indorsed, "Affidavit," it sufficiently appeared that the statement had been filed at the institution of the suit, and it was error to dismiss the case on the ground that no statement had been filed.—Kruse v. Hagedorn, 50 Mo. 576.

[h] (Mo. 1893) Where it appears in the court of appeals that the justice's transcript states that an affidavit for attachment was filed with him, and that defendant's plea in abatement denies the allegations of the affidavit, it sufficiently appears that such affidavit was filed, though it is not contained in the abstract.—Pearson v. Gillett, 55 Mo. App. 312.

[i] (N. J. 1839) On an appeal from the court for the trial of small causes to the common pleas, it is no objection that the transcript of the justice does not show a state of demand, if the fact appear, or may be fairly presumed, by the proceedings and papers in the case.—English v. Bonham, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 850.

[j] (N. Y. 1836) 2 Rev. St. p. 260, § 195, directing a justice on an appeal to file all the papers relating to the case with the clerk of common pleas, does not require him to file an original note for which suit was brought.—Mappa v. Pease, 15 Wend. 669.

[k] (N. Y. 1836) A justice, stating in his return on appeal that plaintiff sued defendant on a note, and then setting out all the note, except the signature, complies with 2 Rev. St. p. 262, § 214, requiring him to return "the demand of the plaintiff."—Mappa v. Pease, 15 Wend. 669.

[l] (N. Y. 1842) A justice of the peace may return the original instead of the copy of the defendant's plea, under the statute prescribing the form of a justice's return of an appeal.—Miller v. Woodworth, 3 Hill, 529.

[m] (N. Y. 1858) On an appeal from a judgment by default, the justice must strictly comply with the statute by returning that a copy of the complaint was served, verified by the oath of the pleader or his attorney. A return that the summons was, by the constable's return, certified "to have been served with the complant verified," is insufficient.—Spring v. Baker, 1 Hilt. 526.

[n] (N. Y. 1858) The return of the justice must state that the complaint annexed is the one served and on which judgment was rendered.—Spring v. Baker, 1 Hilt. 526.

[o] (Ohio, 1818) The transcript of a justice of the peace must state the cause of action, the proceeding, and the judgment.—Means v. Stephenson, Tapp. 283.

[p] (Ohio, 1839) Under Swan's St. p. 528, § 203, the transcript of a justice must state both the filing and the nature of the plaintiff's bill of particulars or the proceedings are erroneous.—McCarty v. Blake, 2 Ohio Dec. 165.

[q] (Tex. 1887) On appeal, in a cause originating in a justice's court the cause of action must appear from the entries made on the justice's docket, from the pleadings filed in the case, or from an agreed case, as required by Rev. St. arts. 1573, 1640, since the district court can pass on no other case than the one tried in the justice's court, nor can the supreme court review the action of the district court unless the issues appear from the transcript in some of these methods.—Maass v. Solinsky, 67 Tex. 290, 3 S. W. 289.

§ 611. Evidence.

[a] (Ala.) A justice of the peace need not record any evidence in a case before him, except such as is objected to. That must appear of record, whether admitted or not.—(1827) Ward v. Lewis, 1 Stew. 26; (1830) Lecatt v. Stewart, 2 Stew. 474; (1835) Mead v. Daniel, 2 Port. 86.

[b] (Iowa, 1859) Where there is no bill of exceptions to the ruling of a justice he must certify all that he remembers; and he cannot excuse himself because he can only know by recollection the truth of the statements of the evidence made in the affidavit on which the writ of error is based.—Miller v. O'Neal, 9 Iowa, 446.

[c] (Iowa, 1859) A writ of error requires a justice to certify evidence offered at the trial only, for the purpose of enabling the court to judge of the correctness of his admission or rejection thereof.—Miller v. O'Neal, 9 Iowa, 446.

[d] (La. 1878) When the papers sufficiently present the issue involved in an appeal from a justice's court, the record need not set forth the facts.—Parish of St. Martin v. Delahoussaye, 30 La. Ann. 1092.

[e] (N. Y. 1820) By the "witnesses," whose names the justice was required by the statute to return, was intended not merely persons called to testify and sworn or rejected, in a technical sense, but evidence, and that therefore the justice must have stated in his return, not only the names of the persons offered or sworn as witnesses, but the documentary or written evidence, admitted or offered, and rejected by him; otherwise, on the trial before the court of common pleas, any documentary evidence not stated in the return could not be admitted, it being the intention of the act to confine the parties, after the appeal to that court, to the same issue and the same evidence as taken in the court below, excepting such evidence only as might have been offered and improperly rejected by the justice.—McChesney v. Lansing, 18 Johns. 388.

[f] (N. Y. 1849) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, the court below must make return of all the testimony and proceedings when a return is ordered, though the affidavits conflict in a few particulars.—McCafferty v. Kelly, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 637.

[g] (N. Y. 1856) The rule, in cases brought up to the county court from a justice's court on certiorari, that where the return does not show evidence sufficient to sustain the judgment, and where the justice does not certify that his return contains all the evidence, etc., given and had before him, the appellate court will, in support of the judgment, presume that there was other and sufficient evidence given to warrant the judgment, does not apply in cases of appeal from a justice's judgment under the Code. The return is now required to show all the testimony; and it must be presumed to be made in compliance with the law.—Calligan v. Mix, 12 How. Prac. 495.

[h] (N. Y. 1868) On an appeal from judgment in a justice's court to a county court, the justice cannot be compelled to return the evidence taken before him on the trial, where the case is a proper one for a new trial in the county court.—Hobbs v. Wetherwax, 38 How. Prac. 385.

[i] (N. C. 1877) On appeal to the superior court from a justice's judgment for $25 or less, the justice should not send up the evidence, unless there are exceptions to his rulings admitting it.—London v. Headen, 76 N. C. 72.

[j] (Tenn. 1881) Where a garnishee appeals to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace against them, neither the evidence, documentary or otherwise, nor the affidavit, if any, on which the execution was sued out, constitutes a part of the papers to be entered of record in the circuit court.—Cowan v. Lowry, 75 Tenn. (7 Lea) 620.

[k] (Wis. 1860) In those appeals from justices' decisions by justices where the Code does not allow a new trial in the circuit court, the justice's return should state the evidence, that the court may pass upon the questions of law, substantially in the same manner as upon a return to a certiorari under the old practice; if it fails to do this, this court cannot determine whether the action of the circuit court was right or not, or allow further return to be made, but must affirm the judgment below.—Pfeil v. Harboldt, 11 Wis. 9.

§ 612. Conduct of trial and judgment.

[a] (Ga. 1881) A case appealed from a justice's court to the superior court is tried de novo; and a failure of the justice to return with the papers in the case his judgment thereon is not ground for dismissal of the appeal.—Pearce v. Renfroe, 68 Ga. 194.

[b] (Iowa, 1849) Though the transcript of a justice of the peace does not set out the judgment in hæc verba, yet if it contains sufficient to show its character, its amount, and against whom rendered, it is sufficient.—Wilson v. Albright, 2 G. Greene, 125.

[c] (Neb. 1890) A transcript, on appeal from justice court decision opening a default, reciting that "defendant confessed judgment for costs awarded against him," sufficiently shows such confession; and it need not show a formal entry thereof.—Tyler v. Baxter, 29 Neb. 688, 46 N. W. 153.

[d] (N. J. 1829) If it appears by the transcript that the justice took time to advise, and it does not appear that the defendant attended at the time the judgment was rendered, the common pleas may dismiss the appeal.—Vandoren v. Vandoren, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 286.

[e] (N. Y. 1846) A justice's return must show affirmatively that the plaintiff, or some person authorized by him, appeared when the jury returned their verdict; and where it appeared that on the return of the jury the justice called the plaintiff, "and some person not known to him answered," upon which he received the verdict and rendered judgment, it was held erroneous.—Shove v. Raynor, 3 Denio, 77.

[f] (N. Y. 1891) Verdict having been rendered for plaintiffs, a return of the justice on appeal in the following words: "Jury retire, and return a verdict for plaintiffs for possession of property. Jury discharged. Judgment entered of $12 costs against defendants,"—was insufficient, by reason of its failure to show that judgment had been entered in accordance with the verdict.—Griswold v. Burroughs, 60 Hun, 558, 15 N. Y. Supp. 314.

§ 613. Proceedings for appeal.

[a] (Ark. 1847) Where the transcript of a justice states "appeal prayed and granted, affidavit and bond filed," the entry sufficiently shows that an appeal was granted.—Pryor v. Williams, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 295.

[b] (Ill. 1894) Under Rev. St. c. 79, § 102, providing that appeal may be taken from the judgment of a justice in a case of trial of right of property as in other cases, if the same is prayed on the day of entering judgment, it is not necessary that the justice's transcript should show that the appeal was prayed on such day, but it is sufficient if the fact is shown by the filing and approval of the appeal bond on such day and other satisfactory evidence.—Hughes v. Glover, 53 Ill. App. 141.

[c] (Ind. 1846) The fact that the appeal had been prayed for need not be recited in the justice's transcript.—Littell v. Bradford, 8 Blackf. 185.

[d] (Ind. 1873) Where an appeal is taken by both parties from the judgment of a justice of the peace at separate times, the justice, in order to complete the transcript, need only certify the entry relating to the second appeal and file the appeal bond.—Montmorency Gravel Road Co. v. Stockton, 43 Ind. 328.

[e] (Miss. 1872) Under Code 1857, art. 24, which directs the justice from whose decision an appeal shall be prayed to transmit to the circuit court a certified copy of all the records and proceedings, with all the original papers and records in the case, including the original appeal bond and affidavit given by the appellant, an appeal cannot be entertained where no affidavit of appeal, and no certified copy of the record of the proceedings, were filed in the circuit court.—Stevens v. Patterson, 47 Miss. 228.

[f] (N. J. 1822) Under Act Nov. 23, 1821, providing that no appeal shall be granted from a justice's judgment, etc., unless the party demanding the appeal shall, in filing the appeal bond with the justice, also file with him an affidavit that the appeal is not made for delay, but because appellant verily believes he has a good defense on the merits, the transcript of the justice's docket must show that the affidavit required by the statute was made and filed with the justice when the appeal bond was filed.—Anonymous, 6 N. J. Law (1 Halst.) 230.

[g] (N. Y. 1851) Under Code, § 360, requiring a justice of the peace, on appeal, to make a return of the testimony, proceedings, and judgment, and file the same, with the affidavits served upon him, in the appellate court, a return which contains a certificate that a portion of the affidavit served on him by respondent contains a true account of a part of the proceedings, and that the affidavit served on him by appellant is true in certain particulars, is insufficient.—Belshaw v. Colie, 3 Code Rep. 184.

[h] (Tex. 1892) Rev. St. art. 1640, requiring a justice to transmit the papers of an appealed case to the county court, includes the appeal bond.—Trial v. Lepori, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1272.

[i] (Tex. 1885) Where, on appeal from the judgment of a justice, the appeal bond is given and approved within the time prescribed by law, it becomes an original paper in the cause, and should be transmitted to the county court.—Stitt v. Barefoot, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 791.

[j] (Tex. 1885) Where the bond on appeal from the judgment of a justice was approved and filed by him, and so indorsed, it is not necessary that the transcript should show that it has been approved and filed.—Stitt v. Barefoot, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 792.

§ 614. Scope and contents of transcript or record.

[a] (Ill. 1896) A bond given upon an appeal from a justice of the peace becomes a part of the record of the court to which the appeal is taken.—Straus v. Oltusky, 62 Ill. App. 660.

[b] (Iowa, 1856) A return of a justice amending his transcript is a part of the record.—Cooper v. Woodrow, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 189.

[c] (Kan. 1875) Where a justice enters upon his docket a statement of matters other than those required by law to be entered thereon, such statement does not thereby become a part of the record, and available for review in a higher court upon petition in error.—Hagaman v. Neitzel, 15 Kan. 383.

[d] (Mich. 1848) Facts coming to the knowledge of a justice of the peace after trial should not be incorporated into his return to an appellate court; and, if so, they will be rejected.—Savier v. Chipman, 1 Mich. (Man.) 116.

[e] (Minn. 1872) The minutes taken by a justice of testimony before him are no part of his return to the district court.—Barber v. Kennedy, 18 Minn. 216 (Gil. 196).

[f] (Mo. 1890) A judgment of a justice, though it is set aside and a new trial granted, is a part of the record before the circuit court, on appeal from the second judgment, and may be considered by the appellate court.—Leith v. Shingleton, 42 Mo. App. 449.

[g] (Neb. 1882) The transcript of the record of proceedings before a justice will not be stricken from the files on appeal to the district court, on the ground that the bills of exception were not by the justice spread at length on his docket; the same not being in terms required by Code Civ. Proc. § 988.—Campbell v. Sutton, 12 Neb. 522, 12 N. W. 3.

[h] (N. J. 1836) The state of demand in the court for the trial of small causes is no part of the record.—Vandyke v. Bastedo, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 224.

[i] (N. Y. 1894) Where matter which ought to have been included in the justice's return on appeal from a court of special sessions appears in an affidavit made by the justice, and attached to his return, the affidavit will be treated as part of the return.—People v. Linzey, 79 Hun, 23, 29 N. Y. Supp. 560.

[j] (Ohio, 1834) Original process issued by a justice of the peace cannot be made part of the record, by oyer, on appeal to the common pleas.—Austin v. Hayden, 6 Ohio (6 Ham.) 388.

[k] (Pa. 1868) On appeal from a judgment of an alderman, who states in his findings that the complaint is just and correct, the allegations in the complaint will be considered as a part of the findings.—Speigle v. McFarland, 1 Walk. 354.

§ 615. Making, form, and requisites of transcript or return.

[a] (Ind. 1873) On the appeal of a cause from a justice of the peace by each party, only one transcript is necessary.—Montmorency Gravel Road Co. v. Stockton, 43 Ind. 328.

[b] (Mass. 1836) Where, on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, appellant is prevented by the death of the justice from producing in court a copy of the whole case attested by the justice, in pursuance of St. 1783, c. 42, § 6 (Rev. St. c. 85, § 15), the deficiency may be supplied by a sworn copy.—Davidson v. Slocomb, 35 Mass. (18 Pick.) 464.

[c] (Mass. 1836) Where the justice of the peace died during the pendency of an appeal taken before him, and before extending the record of the proceedings, his original minutes, containing all the material facts which the records would have comprised, are admissible as a record.—Davidson v. Slocomb, 35 Mass. (18 Pick.) 464.

[d] (Neb. 1882) The transcript of the record of proceedings before a justice of the peace cannot be any part of appellant's petition in error, and a motion to strike such transcript from the file of the district court because it appears to be no part of the petition in error must be denied.—Campbell v. Sutton, 12 Neb. 522, 12 N. W. 3.

[e] (N. Y. 1823) A justice's return need not be sealed.—Scott v. Rushman, 1 Cow. 212.

[f] (N. Y. 1852) The return of a justice is not to be treated as a bill of exceptions. It partakes more of the nature of a case to set aside a verdict or the report of referees. The whole case is to be examined; and if the court see that substantial justice has been done, notwithstanding an alleged error, they will not interfere.—Spencer v. Saratoga & W. R. Co., 12 Barb. 382.

[g] (N. Y. 1865) The return of a justice will not be set aside because drawn up by the attorney for defendant in error, where it was afterwards corrected by the justice, unless an abuse is shown.—Smith v. Johnston, 30 How. Prac. 374.

[h] (N. Y. 1896) Code Civ. Proc. § 3064, which provides that if an appeal is taken by a defendant who failed to appear, and he shows by affidavit a manifest injustice, and renders a satisfactory excuse for his default, the appellate court may set aside the judgment and direct a new trial, does not authorize the appellate court to set aside a default judgment before the trial justice has made his return to the appellate court, as such section contains no provision dispensing with the necessity of a return before the matter can be heard in the appellate court as required by sections 3044, 3053, 3062.—Kellock v. Dickinson, 5 App. Div. 515, 39 N. Y. Supp. 38.

[i] (Pa. 1821) The transcript of a suit before a justice is sufficient, if it set forth the substance of his proceedings, though inartificially.—Cochran v. Parker, 6 Serg. & R. 549.

[j] (Wis. 1878) On appeal from a justice's judgment, until the justice has made a return showing the proceedings in his court, no proceedings can be taken in the appellate court, except for a dismissal of the appeal, or for an order compelling a proper return.—Bruins v. Downey, 45 Wis. 496.

§ 616. Necessity of bill of exceptions and matters to be shown.

Exceptions to rulings in justices' courts, see ante, §§ 508–515.

[a] (Ala. 1824) Proceedings before a justice of the peace, except in cases of forcible entry and detainer by statute, are not matters of record; and their irregularities must be shown by bill of exceptions.—Gayle v. Turner, Minor, 204.

[b] (Ala. 1857) On an appeal involving less than $20, which is tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, all the evidence must be set out in the bill of exceptions.—Stein v. Feltheimer, 31 Ala. 57.

[c] (Ind. 1858) Suit upon a note, commenced before a justice, and appealed. From the evidence the defense appeared to be failure of consideration. The bill of exceptions by the plaintiff stated that no one denied that a buggy was the consideration, or pretended any other. The evidence was directed to the value of the buggy. Held that, in the absence of pleadings and direct evidence upon the point, the statement in the bill sufficiently showed that the buggy was the consideration.—Heller v. Jelly, 10 Ind. 382.

[d] (Iowa, 1859) A contradictory and ambiguous bill of exceptions from a justice's court may be disregarded, especially when unsustained by anything in the justice's return.—Bell v. Rowland, 9 Iowa, 281.

[e] (Kan. 1875) The statute directs what matters shall be entered on the docket of a justice of the peace; and if a party desires to preserve the rulings of the justice as to other matters, for review on petition in error, he must take a bill of exceptions.—Hagaman v. Neitzel, 15 Kan. 383.

[f] (Kan. 1889) When a party takes a case by petition in error from a judgment of a justice's court to the district court, the bill of exceptions should set out all the pleadings filed in justice's court.—Winter v. Shutter, 42 Kan. 544, 22 Pac. 564.

[g] (Mo. 1855) Where no bill of exceptions was preserved in a cause originating before a justice, the judgment will be affirmed.—Elliot v. Pogue, 20 Mo. 263.

[h] (Neb. 1876) To obtain a review of a judgment of the district court dismissing an appeal taken from a justice of the peace, no exception need be taken or made part of the record by a formal bill of exceptions.—Morrow v. Sullender, 4 Neb. 374.

[i] (Neb. 1891) The taking of exceptions to the opinion of a justice of the peace upon questions of law arising during the trial in cases tried by a jury, under Code Civ. Proc. § 988, which provides that "in all cases which shall be tried by a jury before a justice of the peace either party shall have the right to except to the opinion of the justice upon any question of law arising during the trial of the cause; and when either party shall allege such exception it shall be the duty of the justice to sign and seal a bill containing such exceptions,"—does not extend to or include questions touching the sufficiency of evidence to support the verdict.—Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Goracke, 32 Neb. 90, 48 N. W. 879.

[j] (N. J.) The evidence which a particular witness gave before a justice may, when such evidence may be correctly had, be brought before the supreme court by affidavit, for the purpose of showing such evidence was incompetent, or that the justice erred in admitting it.—(1817) Sockwell v. Bateman, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 364; (1825) Goldsmith v. Bane, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 87.

[k] (N. J. 1828) A refusal of a justice of the peace to give a requested charge to a jury will not work a reversal unless the bill of exceptions discloses facts in evidence warranting such charge.—Davison v. Schooley, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 145.

[l] (Ohio, 1877) Under section 93 of the Justices' Code, as amended in 1869 (66 Ohio Laws, p. 7), a bill of exceptions may be taken on a trial before a justice of the peace to bring into the record the fact that no evidence was offered on a point necessary to be established to obtain a judgment.—Kaufman v. Broughton, 31 Ohio St. 424.

[m] (Pa. 1846) Unless it appears on the face of the proceedings that the justice proceeded and rendered judgment upon the plaintiff's own oath, it must be so distinctly averred by way of exception, and shown by proof.—Wilson v. Wilson, 5 Pa. Law J. 461.

[n] (Tex. 1893) The sufficiency of oral pleadings in justice's court will not be reviewed on appeal, unless such pleadings, together with the objections interposed, and the rulings of the court thereon, are fully shown by bills of exceptions; and the brief statement of the pleadings required to be noted in the justice's docket will not supply the place of such a bill.—Williams v. Deen, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 575, 24 S. W. 536.

§ 617. Contents and making of bill of exceptions.

[a] There is no authority for the making of a bill in a cause before a justice of the peace.

(Ohio, 1847) Barto v. Abbe, 16 Ohio, 408; (1878) State v. Harmeyer, 3 Wkly. Law Bul. 570.

[c] (U. S. 1828) Upon a jury trial before a justice of the peace, under Act March 1, 1823 (3 Stat. 743), "to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the recovery of debts in the District of Columbia," the justice is not bound to sign a bill of exceptions, as no writ of error or appeal will lie in such a case.—Smith v. Chase, Fed. Cas. No. 13,022 [3 Cranch, C. C. 348].

[d] (Kan. 1868) Though a bill of exceptions in a trial before a justice of the peace must be filed during the term at which the trial is had, the time for filing may be extended by extending the "term" for that purpose.—West v. Rice, 4 Kan. 563.

[e] (Kan. 1882) Bills of exceptions may be allowed by justices of the peace in cases tried before them, either with or without a jury.—Stager v. Harrington, 27 Kan. 414.

[f] (Kan. 1883) A bill of exceptions, signed by the private clerk of a justice of the peace without the knowledge or consent of the justice, is a nullity, and is not made valid by the fact that the justice was told of it afterwards, and, without seeing the bill, made no objection, and that the parties agree that the bill speaks the truth.—Whitzell v. Forgler, 30 Kan. 525, 1 Pac. 823.

[g] (Kan. 1892) A justice of the peace may allow and sign a bill of exceptions for one party to an action, in the absence of the other, without notice.—Long v. Froman, 49 Kan. 360, 30 Pac. 461.

[h] (Kan. 1892) A bill of exceptions which shows that it has been allowed, signed, and filed by the justice of the peace is sufficient to show that it was properly filed in the office of the justice allowing the same.—Long v. Froman, 49 Kan. 360, 30 Pac. 461.

[i] (Neb. 1881) Code Civ. Proc. § 311, relating to bills of exceptions, does not apply to justices' courts; and a party cannot object that the bill, before being signed by the justice, was not submitted to him.—Leach v. Sutphen, 11 Neb. 527, 10 N. W. 409.

[j] (Neb.) A justice of the peace has no power to settle a bill of exceptions.—(1894) Real v. Honey, 39 Neb. 516, 58 N. W. 136; (1895) Vlasek v. Wilson, 44 Neb. 10, 62 N. W. 245.

[k] (Neb. 1895) A justice of the peace cannot settle a bill of exceptions preserving testimony given at a hearing on a motion to discharge an attachment.—Donaldson v. Fisher, 43 Neb. 260, 61 N. W. 609.

[l] (N. J. 1854) On trial of an appeal from a justice, the court of common pleas has no authority to seal a bill of exceptions.—Moore v. Hamilton, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 532.

[m] (N. Y. 1864) Under Judiciary Act 1847 (1 Laws 1847, p. 328), conferring the same powers on county courts to try appeals from justices' courts, and to grant new trials, that were theretofore possessed by the common pleas, the county court could incorporate a bill of exceptions, or a "case and exceptions," into a judgment roll in an action appealed thereto from a justice's court.—Monroe v. Monroe, 27 How. Prac. 208.

[n] (Ohio, 1847) A bill of exceptions, entered by a justice of the peace upon the record, will not be regarded in the higher court, on error; the law not requiring or authorizing the justice so to do.—Barto v. Abbe, 16 Ohio, 408.

[o] (Ohio, 1872) Justices' Act, § 137 (1 Swan & C. St. p. 794), authorizing the taking of exceptions to the opinion of a justice on "questions of law and evidence," does not include questions touching the weight or the sufficiency of the evidence, but only such as relate to its competency.—State v. Wood, 22 Ohio St. 537.

[p] (Ohio) Bills of exceptions taken before a justice pending trial must be entered at length on his docket, and until so done the reviewing court can take no cognizance of their contents. —(1876) Huston v. Huston, 29 Ohio St. 600; (1882) Argo v. Belsar, 8 Wkly. Law Bul. 189.

[q] (Ohio, 1895) Under Rev. St. § 6565, providing that when a party, during a trial before a justice of the peace, requires time to prepare a bill of exceptions to a ruling, the justice shall appoint a time not more than five days from the day of the trial within which to settle the bill, unless the party requiring time shall so inform the justice, and the justice shall appoint a time when the same shall be settled not more than five days from the day of trial, the justice cannot, after the trial, allow the bill.—Lewis v. Bancroft, 53 Ohio St. 92, 11 N. E. 32.

§ 618. Signing and certificate to transcript or bill of exceptions.

Amendment of certificate, see post, §§ 625–629.

[a] (Ala. 1850) When, on an appeal from a justice's court, the original papers and judgment entry are sent up properly certified by the justice, the appellate court, without other proof of their execution or identity than that afforded by the justice's certificate, will look to them as evidence of what was done before him in the cause.—Wolfe v. Parham, 18 Ala. 441.

[b] (Ark. 1846) A transcript filed by a justice of the peace in an appellate court, without authentication by him, does not give such court jurisdiction, and a judgment rendered thereon is void.—Watts v. Hill, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 203.

[c] (Ark. 1850) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the certificate of the justice to the transcript of the record that "the above is a transcript of a judgment on my docket," though not strictly technical, is sufficient.—Nevells v. Sisson, 10 Ark. (5 Eng.) 249.

[d] (Ill. 1871) On appeal from a justice's judgment, his certificate to his transcript was in these words: "That the foregoing transcript and papers contain a full statement of all the proceedings had before me." Held sufficient, although the language of the statute was that he should certify it to be "a full and perfect statement," etc.; and the omission of the word "perfect" did not, in the slightest degree, affect the meaning of the certificate. If the transcript is full, it must be perfect, in the sense in which the term is employed. In substance, the certificate was sufficient; and that is all the law requires.—Smith v. Frazer, 61 Ill. 164.

[e] (Ind. 1843) On appeal to the circuit court from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the certificate of the justice annexed to the transcript was as follows: "I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true transcript of the proceedings had before me in the above cause, as appears from my docket. Given under my hand and seal," etc. Held, that the certificate was sufficient.—Whitney v. Mills, 6 Blackf. 545.

[f] (Kan. 1888) A certificate of a justice of the peace, regular on its face, to a bill of exceptions, and bearing date within 10 days after judgment, cannot be impeached by a certificate of the same justice, made more than a month thereafter, which sets forth the circumstances under which the original certificate was made.—Fuller v. Champaign Twine & Bagging Co., 39 Kan. 492, 18 Pac. 504.

[g] (Me. 1844) A justice should certify that exceptions were allowed and were in conformity to the truth, and should affix his signature and seal thereto, in order that they may be reviewed.—Simpson v. Wilson, 24 Me. (11 Shep.) 437.

[h] (Mich. 1855) A signature by a justice, "I, A. B.," etc., "do hereby," in the caption to his returns of proceedings before him, is sufficient. It is not necessary it should be at the end.—Smart v. Howe, 3 Mich. 590.

[i] (Minn. 1883) A return of evidence by a justice of the peace to a district court was entitled "Transcript of all the evidence given upon the trial of said cause before me on," etc., and the certificate at the end of the return was: "I hereby certify that the foregoing is the testimony as given in said case, and that the same is correct, substantially as given." Held, that this sufficiently showed that all the evidence was returned, and that it might be considered by the appellate court, although there was no request to the justice to return the evidence, the appeal being on questions of law alone.—Smith v. Force, 31 Minn. 119, 16 N. W. 704.

[j] (Miss. 1894) On appeal from justice court, where the record contained a list of papers, including a copy of the judgment, with the justice's certificate that they were all the papers used in the cause, the judgment was sufficiently certified.—Coleman v. Gordon, 16 South. 340.

[k] (Mo. 1843) A justice of the peace, in certifying transcripts from his docket, may embrace several judgments in one certificate; and it will not be necessary to certify each judgment separately.—Perryman v. State, 8 Mo. 208.

[l] (N. J. 1853) The justice, in certifying a transcript from his docket, under Rev. St. p. 244, § 54, need not employ the words, "Witness my hand and seal," or otherwise certify that it is his hand and seal. The onus is on him who holds the contrary to show it.—Henry v. Campbell, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 141.

[m] (N. J. 1870) When an appeal is taken from a judgment of a justice, and the latter neglects to certify his transcript, the appellant is entitled to a rule upon him to amend.—Hockenbury v. Alpaugh, 34 N. J. Law (5 Vroom) 342.

[n] (Pa. 1895) A typewritten instrument purporting to be an appeal from a justice is a nullity where it is not certified or signed by him.—Weaver v. Russell (Com. Pl.) 1 Lack. Leg. N. 306, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 428.

(c) FILING TRANSCRIPT OR RECORD.

IN GENERAL, § 619.
TIME FOR FILING TRANSCRIPT OR RECORD, § 620.
EFFECT OF DELAY IN FILING TRANSCRIPT OR RECORD, § 621.
EXCUSING FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT OR RECORD, § 622.
WAIVER OF DELAY IN FILING OR FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT OR RECORD, § 623.

Effect of failure to pay fee for filing transcript as preventing filing, see ante, § 545.
—— of filing return as giving appellate court jurisdiction of the appeal, see ante, § 605.
Filing of transcript on appeal as notice of appeal, see ante, § 589.
—— transcript of justice's record as evidence of allowance of appeal, see ante, § 522.
Reinstatement of appeal after dismissal for failure to file transcript, see post, § 646.

§ 619. In general.

[a] (Ark. 1877) Failure, on appeal from a justice, of the circuit court clerk to mark the transcript "Filed," is no ground for dismissing the appeal.—Hughes v. Wheat, 32 Ark. 292.

[b] (Dak. 1888) Where the papers on an appeal from a justice are received by the clerk of the district court within the 15 days for filing allowed by Justices' Code, § 96, but are not marked "Filed" by the clerk because of nonpayment of his fees, the court obtains jurisdiction, and it is error to dismiss the appeal.—Harris v. Watkins, 5 Dak. 374, 40 N. W. 536.

[c] (Ill. 1878) Under Rev. St. 1874, §§ 64, 66, which require that, in all actions where an appeal is taken to the circuit court from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, the justice shall return all the papers and his transcript of the judgment to the clerk of the appellate court, the circuit court has no jurisdiction to dismiss an appeal and render judgment for damages and costs against the appellant for want of prosecution, where the appellant has filed an appeal bond in the circuit court which has been approved by the clerk, but no certified transcript of the proceedings before the justice has been filed.—Sheridan v. Beardsley, 89 Ill. 477

[d, e] (Ind. 1860) It is the duty of the justice to file a transcript of his judgment in the clerk's office, but he may employ the attorney of the party to carry it to the office for him.—Burgess v. Matlock, 14 Ind. 475.

[f] (Kan. 1862) The law does not require a justice of the peace to file the transcript in an appeal from his court; and, if he does so, he acts as the agent of the appellant, and not as an officer.—Bush v. Doy, 1 Kan. 86.

[g] (Kan. 1871) Supreme court rule 15, providing for the dismissal of an appeal from a justice's court where the notice of filing of the transcript was not served on the appellee, is not in conflict with Comp. Laws 1862, c. 121, §§ 104–106, regarding appeals.—Coleman v. Newby, 7 Kan. 82.

[h, i] (Or. 1886) The appellant alone can carry forward an appeal into the circuit court, and the action of a respondent in filing a transcript in the circuit court is without authority, and void.—Steel v. Rees, 13 Or. 428, 11 Pac. 68.

[j] (Vt. 1855) An appeal from a justice is in no sense entered when the copies required by Comp. Laws, p. 238, § 73, are never filed; the statute being mandatory.—Goodenow v. Stafford, 27 Vt. (1 Williams) 437.

[k] (W. Va. 1888) Where a justice has transmitted to the clerk of the circuit court a complete transcript of his docket, with the original papers, in an action where a circuit judge has granted an appeal after the regular 10 days, for good cause shown, under Code, c. 50, § 174, the clerk should file with them all the papers transmitted to him by the judge.—Hubbard v. Yocum, 30 W. Va. 740, 5 S. E. 867.

§ 620. Time for filing transcript or record.

[a] (Iowa, 1860) An appeal from the decision of a justice must be returned to the next regular term of the district court.—Coon v. Matthews, 10 Iowa, 290.

[b] (Iowa, 1860) Where an appeal is allowed 10 days before a term of the district court, it is the duty of the justice to make his return to the clerk's office at least 5 days before the term commences.—Fisher v. Harber, 10 Iowa, 293.

[c] (Mo. 1866) An appellant from the judgment rendered in a justice's court during term time of the appellate court must file the transcript and other papers in such court within six days after the rendition of the judgment, under Rev. Code 1855, p. 797, § 12.—Bernicker v. Miller, 37 Mo. 498.

[d] (Neb. 1879) The neglect to file a transcript in the district court, in the case of an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, within the 30 days given by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, as amended by Act Feb. 19, 1877, is no ground for dismissal of the appeal, unless continued beyond the second day of the next succeeding term. A failure to file the transcript, unless continued beyond the second day of the next succeeding term, does not prejudice an appeal otherwise regularly taken.—Roesink v. Barnett, 8 Neb. 146; Monell v. Terwilliger, 8 Neb. 360, 1 N. W. 246.

[e] (Neb. 1888) Under Code 1886, §§ 1008, 1011, an appellant had 30 days from the rendition of the judgment to file his transcript in the district court, and until the second day of the next term after the 30 days, and where a transcript is filed by either party on or before the thirtieth day the court will acquire jurisdiction.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. Marston, 22 Neb. 721, 36 N. W. 153.

[f] (Neb. 1888) Under Code 1886, §§ 1008, 1011, providing that an appellant has 30 days from the rendition of the judgment in a justice's court in which to file his transcript in the district court, and until the second day of the next term of the district court after the 30 days, the district court has jurisdiction where judgment was rendered February 15th, the term of court held March 11th, the next regular term in September, and the transcript filed April 1st.—Johnson v. Van Cleve, 23 Neb. 559, 37 N. W. 320.

[g] (N. J. 1838) Where a bond for an appeal from a justice of the peace to the common pleas is left at the house of the justice at the proper day, in his absence, so that he does not receive it until his return on the next day, it is his duty to send the appeal papers to the common pleas on the latter day.—Dyer v. Ludlum, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 531.

[h] (N. Y. 1896) Code Civ. Proc. § 3053, providing that a justice must, after 10 and within 30 days from the service of the notice of appeal from his decision, make his return to the appellate court, does not forbid him to make his return within 10 days.—Lazarus v. Ludwig, 17 Misc. Rep. 365, 40 N. Y. Supp. 63.

[i] (Ohio, 1859) Under Justice Act, § 113, providing that on appeal from the judgment of a justice the transcript, etc., shall be delivered to the clerk of the court to which such appeal may be taken on or before the second day of the term next following such appeal, the term at which a transcript must be filed to perfect such appeal is the first regular term after such judgment, and not an intervening special term.—Rea v. McColloch, 2 Ohio Dec. 169.

[j] (Ohio, 1876) Swan & S. St. p. 419, makes it the duty of one appealing from the judgment of a justice of the peace to file the transcript with the clerk of the court of common pleas "on or before the thirtieth day" from the rendition of the judgment appealed from. Held that, when the thirtieth day falls on Sunday, the transcript cannot be filed on the next succeeding day.—McLees v. Morrison, 29 Ohio St. 155.

[k] (Ohio, 1881) Rev. St. 1880, § 4951, providing that the time within which an act is to be done shall be calculated by excluding the first and including the last day, and that, if the last day fall on Sunday, it shall be excluded, applies to the filing of a transcript for appeal from a magistrate's court.—Redus v. Green, 6 Ohio Dec. 1034.

[l] (Okl. 1893) Under Code Civ. Proc. Neb. § 1008, on appeal from the decision of a county judge exercising the jurisdiction of a justice, a certified transcript of the proceedings must be delivered by the appellant to the clerk of the court to which the appeal is taken within 30 days after the rendition of the judgment.—Swope v. Smith, 1 Okl. 283, 33 Pac. 504.

[m] (Or. 1890) Hill's Code, § 2125, requiring the transcript on appeal from a justice of the peace to be filed in the circuit court on or before the first day of the term next following the allowance of the appeal, is mandatory, and the circuit court has no authority to extend or enlarge the time.—Carter v. Monastes, 19 Or. 538, 25 Pac. 29.

[n] (Or. 1895) Hill's Ann. Laws, §§ 119, 2117–2129, provide that an appeal from justice court shall be allowed on the service of notice and the giving of a bond with sureties who may be required to justify before the justice, and that, on or before the first day of the next term of circuit court, appellant shall file a transcript in the circuit court, on the filing of which the appeal shall become perfected, but prescribe no time within which exceptions to the sufficiency of the sureties must be taken. Held, that the transcript may be filed in the circuit court immediately after the allowance of the appeal by the justice.—Hughes v. Clemens, 28 Or. 440, 42 Pac. 617.

[o] (Pa. 1809) Under the act of 1804, the transcript must have been filed in the office of the prothonotary within 20 days from the time of judgment.—Newton v. Haggerman, 1 Browne, 94.

[p] (Pa. 1881) Where a defendant appeals from the judgment of a justice, he has only until the first day of the next term to file a transcript, though it be less than 20 days.—Sollenberger v. Heisker, 2 Leg. Rec. 368.

[q] (Pa. 1886) On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the appellant must file a transcript of the record in the prothonotary's office on or before the first day of the next term.—Ferry v. Wallen, 2 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 324.

[r] (Pa. 1891) The fact that a term return day intervenes between the taking of an appeal from a judgment of a justice and the filing of the transcript, does not make the appeal too late.—Care v. Atkinson (Com. Pl.) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 400.

[s] (Tenn. 1851) Though the act of 1811 makes it the duty of a justice of the peace, in case of an appeal, to return the papers to the circuit court within the first two days of the term to which the appeal is taken, yet the appellant is authorized by the second section of the act to prosecute his appeal, if they are returned at any time during the term.—Humphrey v. Humphrey, 31 Tenn. (1 Swan.) 154.

[t] (Tex. 1890) Under Sayles' Civ. St. art. 1641, requiring an appeal from a justice of the peace to be filed in the county court on the first day of the return term, which is the next term after the appeal is perfected, and providing that, if not filed on the first day of the next term after the return term, it shall be dismissed, an appeal which is not perfected until the first day of a term of the county court is not returnable to that term, and it is error to dismiss it because the transcript is not filed in the county court on the first day of the next succeeding term.—Foos Mfg. Co. v. Prather (App.) 16 S. W. 865.

§ 621. Effect of delay in filing transcript or record.

[a] (Ala. 1841) A mere omission by a justice of the peace to send a statement of a case to the appellate court does not justify a dismissal of an appeal, if the other proceedings are regular.—Larcher v. Scott, 2 Ala. 40.

[b] (Ark. 1877) Where a justice from whom an appeal is taken to the circuit court fails to file the transcript and papers in the clerk's office on or before the first day of the term, it is discretionary with the circuit court to dismiss the appeal, in the absence of any showing why they were not seasonably filed.—Hughes v. Wheat, 32 Ark. 292.

[c] (Ark. 1886) When an affidavit for an appeal from a justice of the peace is filed, and the judgment superseded, but the transcript is not filed until the time prescribed by statute (Mansf. Dig. § 4139) has expired, and appellant can give no sufficient excuse for the delay, the judgment of the justice may be affirmed by the circuit court, and judgment rendered against the sureties on the appeal bond.—Wilson v. Starks, 48 Ark. 73, 2 S. W. 346.

[d] (Cal. 1890) Code Civ. Proc. § 129, gives courts of record power to make rules for their own government, not inconsistent with the laws of the state; and section 980 provides that for a failure to prosecute an appeal from a justice's court, or unnecessary delay in bringing it to a hearing, the superior court, after notice, may order the appeal to be dismissed. Held, that the superior court has power to make and enforce a rule that the record and transcript of a case tried in a justice's court must be filed in the superior court within 10 days after the perfection of the appeal, and that if not so filed, the appeal might, on motion, with notice, be dismissed.—McKay v. Superior Court of Santa Barbara County, 86 Cal. 431, 25 Pac. 10.

[e] (Ga. 1881) The fact that the papers in a case appealed from a justice's to a superior court were not returned to the office of the clerk of the superior court 10 days before the beginning of the term was not ground for dismissal of the appeal.—Pearce v. Renfroe, 68 Ga. 194.

[f] (Ill. 1882) The circuit court acquires no right to dismiss an appeal from a justice of the peace by merely ordering appellant to file a transcript within a stated time and his failure to do so.—Schmidt v. Skelly, 10 Ill. App. (10 Bradw.) 564; Bonfield v. McGreavy, Id. 577.

[g] (Ill. 1883) The circuit court cannot dismiss an appeal without the appellant's consent, because of the want of a transcript, even though the appellant has been ruled to furnish one within a certain time.—Andrews v. Esher, 14 Ill. App. (14 Bradw.) 67.

[h] (Ind.) An appeal to the circuit court will be dismissed, unless the transcript is filed with the clerk within 20 days after the appeal bond is filed.—(1833) Barnes v. Modisett, 3 Blackf. 253; (1834) Brown v. Modisett, Id. 381; (1834) Butler v. Skomp, Id. 392.

[i] (Ind. 1870) Where a party against whom judgment has been rendered by a justice has been granted leave to appeal to the court of common pleas after the expiration of 30 days, under Gav. & H. St. p. 597, § 68, and he fails to perfect his appeal by having the order to the justice to certify of the case issued and served, and by causing the justice to make out a transcript of the proceedings and judgment before him, and file it, with the original papers, in the office of the clerk of the common pleas within a reasonable time, and until the case has been regularly called for trial, the appeal may be dismissed on motion of the adverse party.—Davis v. Luark, 34 Ind. 403.

[j] (Iowa, 1858) On an appeal from the judgment of a justice, if the justice neglects his duty in respect to returning and filing the requisite papers, the appellee cannot have the judgment affirmed as of course, on account of the neglect, but may docket the cause himself and have the judgment proper upon the merits entered.—Holloway v. Baker, 6 Iowa (6 Clarke) 52.

[k] (Iowa, 1860) Where an appeal from a justice has been taken within 10 days before the term of the district court, the failure of the justice to return the transcript at least 5 days before the term commences will not entitle appellee to judgment.—Fisher v. Harber, 10 Iowa, 293.

[l] (Iowa, 1867) The rule of practice of the district courts, providing that, if an appeal is not filed before noon of the first day of the term, the appellee may file it, and have the judgment below affirmed, does not authorize the dismissal of the appeal where the appellee has not filed a transcript.—Heiserman v. Rush, 22 Iowa, 240.

[m] (Mo. 1856) Upon an appeal from a justice's court to that of the law commissioners, it is the duty of the former to file a transcript with the commissioner within six days. If he omit to do so, the commissioner has no authority in the case to affirm the judgment upon the appellee's filing the transcript.—Grassmuck v. Atwell, 23 Mo. 63.

[mm] (Mo. 1856) The law commissioners' court cannot, in case of an appeal from a justice of the peace, where the justice fails to deliver his transcript, etc., affirm the judgment appealed from, upon the filing of a transcript by the appellee and a motion made by him for its affirmance.—Lala v. The City of Joliet, 24 Mo. 23.

[n] (Mo. 1869) Under the provisions of Gen. St. 1865, c. 188, § 12, providing that an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace rendered during the term of the circuit court shall be returnable within six days after the rendition of the judgment, and section 23, providing that the appellant shall file a transcript of the record on or before return day, an appeal from a judgment rendered before a justice during a term of the circuit court will be dismissed, as irregular, upon the omission of the appellant to file the transcript within six days after the rendition of the judgment.—Robinson v. Walker, 45 Mo. 117.

[o] (Neb. 1887) Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1008, 1011, as the same stood prior to the amendment of the latter section by the act of 1887, being in pari materia, must be construed together, and, being so construed together, held, that the transcript of the proceedings before the justice of the peace not having been presented to the clerk of the district court until after the second day of the term of the district "court next after such appeal," and more than 30 days having elapsed since the rendition of the judgment appealed from before the filing of such transcript, the dismissal of such appeal by the district court was right and must be affirmed.—Clapp v. Bowman, 22 Neb. 198, 34 N. W. 362.

[p] (Neb. 1888) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the district court, Civ. Code, § 1011, requires that appellant deliver a transcript of the proceedings to the clerk of the district court, within 30 days next following the rendition of the judgment, and if the transcript is not filed within the time the district court may dismiss the appeal at appellant's costs, and remand the cause to the justice of the peace.—Converse Cattle Co. v. Campbell, 25 Neb. 37, 40 N. W. 594.

[q] (Neb. 1892) Where a party to a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace files an undertaking for an appeal in time, but fails to file a transcript of the proceedings in the district court within 30 days after rendition of the judgment, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, the appellee may, under the express provisions of section 1011, file such transcript and have the cause docketed, and may then apply to the district court either to dismiss the appeal, or enter a judgment in his favor similar to that rendered by the justice; and such right is not affected by the fact that, after he has so filed a transcript, appellant, 3 months after rendition of the judgment by the justice, also files a transcript and petition in error.—Wilde v. Preuss, 33 Neb. 790, 50 N. W. 1125.

[r] (Neb. 1895) Where, on a failure of appellant to file a transcript on appeal from a justice's judgment, the appellee files the same, the district court can, on its own motion, either dismiss the appeal, or give judgment for the appellee.—Scott v. Burrill, 44 Neb. 755, 62 N. W. 1093.

[ss] (N. J. 1848) Where a justice has not returned papers to the court of common pleas within the statutory time, but returns them at the next term, without a rule from the court of common pleas requiring him to return such papers at such term, as permitted by a rule of court, the appeal should not be dismissed.—Ferguson v. Kays, 21 N. J. Law (1 Zab.) 431.

[ss] (N. Y. 1824) Though the justice do not file his return on the first day of the term of common pleas next after the appeal, that court should not quash the return, but proceed thereon when it comes in.—Ex parte Kellogg, 3 Cow. 372.

[t] (Pa. 1810) Under the act of 1810, the transcript must be filed on or before the first day of the next term after entering bail on the appeal; and therefore, where judgment was obtained before the justice, on the 2d of June, and on the same day the defendant entered bail for an appeal, but did not file the transcript until the 7th of June, the return day of June term being the 4th, the court dismissed the appeal, although the defendant was not bound to enter bail before the first day of June term.—Talbert v. Williams, 1 Browne, 160.

[tt] (Pa. 1871) Where, on an appeal from an alderman or a justice of the peace, the transcript is not filed in the prothonotary's office on or before the first day of the next term of the court of common pleas after the appeal is taken, the appeal will be dismissed.—Williams v. Gibbons, 2 Lanc. Bar, No. 36, p. 2.

[u] (Pa. 1878) Where the transcript on an appeal from a justice is not filed in the common pleas until after the next return day, the appeal is not valid.—Donnelly v. Purcell, 1 Sus. Leg. Chron. 47.

[uu] (Pa. 1887) Where the transcript of an alderman on appeal is defective, the plaintiffs may move for its correction; but, if he endeavors to procure a correct transcript from the alderman after the time for filing the appeal expires, the appeal will be dismissed.—Bell v. Snyder, 3 Del. Co. Ct. R. 265.

[v] (S. D. 1892) When an appeal from a justice's judgment has been perfected more than 30 days before a term of the appellate court, but the justice's return is not filed until after the commencement of the term, it is not error to dismiss the appeal if no sufficient excuse is shown for the delay, since Comp. Laws, § 6136, requiring the return to be filed within 15 days from the time the appeal is perfected, if not mandatory, at least vests the appellate court with discretion as to dismissal.—Edminster v. Rathbun, 3 S. D. 129, 52 N. W. 263.

[vv] (Tenn. 1856) Acts 1811, c. 119, § 1, makes it the duty of a justice from whose judgment an appeal is taken to transmit the papers in the cause on the second day of the term on which the appeal was made returnable. Section 2 provides that if any justice shall return the papers during the term to which the same is made returnable, and appellant shall fail to appear, plaintiff shall have judgment by default for the amount of the judgment by the justice. Held, upon an appeal from a justice's judgment, where the papers were not filed until a term subsequent to the return term, the appeal was properly dismissed.—Pierce v. Pierce, 36 Tenn. (4 Sneed) 77.

[w] (Tex. 1882) Where the transcript and papers on appeal from a justice's court are not filed within the time prescribed by Rev. St. art. 1641, the appeal will be dismissed.—Bradway v. Clipper, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 306.

[ww] (Tex. 1889) An appeal from a justice of the peace should not be dismissed for the failure of the justice to file the transcript within the time prescribed by law.—Muller v. Humphreys (App.) 14 S. W. 1068.

[x] (Tex. 1893) Where an appeal from a justice of the peace has been perfected by service of the notice of appeal, and the execution and filing in the district court of a proper appeal bond, the justice's failure to make out and transmit to the district court a transcript of his record before the first day of the second term next succeeding the rendition of judgment, as required by Sayles' Civ. St. arts. 1639–1641, is no ground for dismissing the appeal.—Petty v. Miller, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 308, 24 S. W. 330.

[xx] (Tex. 1894) Appellant perfected his appeal from the justice to the district court by filing a bond which was approved by the justice. The justice failed to transmit a transcript of the proceedings on or before the first day of the second term following, as required by law, but transmitted it during such term. Held, that appellant's failure to apply for mandamus to compel the justice to send up the transcript was not ground for dismissing his appeal.—Campbell v. Bechsenschutz, 25 S. W. 971.

[y] (Wash. 1894) While 2 Hill's Code, § 1634, requires an appellant from justice's court to furnish the superior court with a transcript of the entries in the justice's docket within 10 days after an appeal has been taken, the failure to do so will not deprive the superior court of jurisdiction, and a motion to dismiss on this ground is addressed to the discretion of the district court.—State v. Yakima County Super. Ct., 9 Wash. 307, 37 Pac. 448.

[yy] (Wis. 1843) If, on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, appellant neglects to perfect his appeal, or to take a rule against the justice requiring him to make the return within the time limited by law, the appeal cannot be entered on a subsequent day, and appellee has the right to have judgment rendered in his favor upon the judgment of the justice.—Bryant v. Barber, 1 Pin. 303.

[z] (Wis. 1862) An appeal from a justice's court should not be dismissed because the return was made within 10 days after the appeal was taken. The statute is directory, and the return is good, if made before the 10 or after the 30 days have expired; the parties being in no fault.—Demming v. Weston, 15 Wis. 236.

[zz] (Wis. 1873) Rev. St. c. 120, § 212, requiring the return of a justice of the peace to the appellate court of the testimony, etc., in the cause tried before him, to be made within 30 days after service of notice of the appeal, is directory; and a return, not otherwise defective or improper, should not be rejected because made after the time named.—Norden v. Jones, 33 Wis. 600, 14 Am. Rep. 782.

§ 622. Excusing failure to file transcript or record.

[a] On an appeal from a justice's court, neglect by the justice to transmit the transcript within the statutory time is not a ground for dismissing the appeal.

[b] (Iowa, 1854) An appellant cannot be deprived of his rights by the laches of a justice of the peace in not making his return to the district court five days before the term, as required by the Code.—Whitcomb v. Holloway, 4 G. Greene, 311.

[c] (Kan. 1862) If, under the statute regulating appeals from justices of the peace, it is in the power of the court to extend the time for filing the transcript, the neglect of the justice to file the transcript in due time, according to agreement with the appellant, is not sufficient cause to compel the court to extend the time in the exercise of a sound discretion.—Bush v. Doy, 1 Kan. 86.

[d] (Mich. 1880) Where a justice gives a receipt for a certain sum as "fees and costs of appeal," he cannot excuse himself from making return to the appeal by the fact that such amount was only the taxed costs, and did not include cost of return on appeal; and appellant will not be deprived of his right to appeal by such failure.—Stephenson v. Kent Circuit Judge, 44 Mich. 162, 6 N. W. 217.

[e] (Neb. 1888) An agreement that the justice shall file the transcript in the district court will not relieve the appellant from the consequence of the justice's neglect to do so.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. Marston, 22 Neb. 721, 36 N. W. 153.

[f] (Neb. 1889) Code, § 1011, requires the filing of a transcript from the judgment of a justice of the peace "within 30 days next following the rendition of said judgment." Held, that the fact that the transcript, after being received at the office of the attorney of the appellant, was laid aside by the one in charge of the office, who did not know its character, and that it was not discovered till too late to file within the time limited, did not excuse the delay.—Lincoln Brick & Tile Works v. Hall, 27 Neb. 874, 44 N. W. 45.

[g] (N. C. 1827) Where a justice forgets to return an appeal at the next term after the judgment, it is proper, upon notice to the appellee, to return it and place the case on the trial docket at a subsequent term.—Lamon v. Gilchrist, 12 N. C. 176.

[h] (Pa. 1833) A defendant against whom a justice had rendered a judgment appealed. The justice promised to file a transcript, but did not do it in time. Held, that the misconduct would not justify the court in sustaining an appeal entered after the first day of the next term.—Houk v. Knop, 2 Watts, 72.

[i] (Pa. 1840) Where a justice of the peace, who had given judgment against a defendant, promised him to make out a transcript and deliver it to the defendant's attorney, and the justice made out a transcript, but did not deliver it to the attorney, in consequence of which it was not filed in season, it was held that the neglect was that of the party, and not official in the justice, and therefore that the appellant was not entitled to relief.—Sherwood v. McKinney, 5 Whart. 435.

[j] (Pa. 1886) The omission of an alderman to inform a party appealing from his judgment that a transcript is necessary will not excuse the failure to file a transcript.—Wardell v. Weidner, 2 C. P. Rep. 238.

[k] (Pa. 1888) Where it appears that the failure of appellant to perfect an appeal within the proper time from the justice is due to the neglect of the justice to make the transcript promptly, the appeal will not be stricken.—Gallagher v. Silkman, 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 192.

§ 623. Waiver of delay in filing or failure to file transcript or record.

Waiver of defects in transcript or record, see post, § 630.

[a] (Ark. 1886) In the case of an appeal from a justice, where the transcript is not filed within the time prescribed by the statute, the fact that the appellee has appeared by motion to dismiss for a defect in the appeal affidavit, and an order has been made refusing such motion, and allowing the affidavit to be amended previous to the filing of a motion to affirm, does not deprive the court of its discretion to grant the motion, nor does appellee waive his right to have the action dismissed for delay in filing the transcript by appearing on such a motion.—Wilson v. Starks, 48 Ark. 73, 2 S. W. 346.

[b] (Ill. 1878) Where, on appeal from a justice, both parties appear and proceed to trial without objection to the want of service or failure to file a transcript, the defects will be considered waived.—Rosenberg v. Barrett, 2 Ill. App. (2 Bradw.) 386.

[c] (Ind. 1837) If the papers in an appeal from the judgment of a justice be not filed in time, the appellee may for that reason have the appeal dismissed on motion; but if, without making the objection, he go to trial on the merits, the objection is waived.—Dougherty v. Mason, 4 Blackf. 432.

[d] (Ind. 1873) Where, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, the parties proceed to trial before the court of common pleas, without objection that no transcript of the proceedings before the justice was filed in the court of common pleas, such objection cannot be made for the first time in the supreme court.—Cromwell v. Baty, 43 Ind. 357.

[e] (Mass. 1890) The omission of a debtor, at the trial of an appeal by him from the judgment of a magistrate upon charges of fraud, under Gen. St. c. 124, to file in court copies of charges, plea, and examination, does not entitle the creditor, after proceeding to trial without raising any objection on this ground, to have the debtor defaulted.—Morse v. Dayton, 128 Mass. 451.

[f] (Neb. 1890) Where, on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the district court, the appellee makes a general appearance, the court thereby acquires jurisdiction, though the transcript was not filed therein within 30 days after the rendition of the judgment, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1011.—Steven v. Nebraska & I. Ins. Co., 29 Neb. 187, 45 N. W. 284.

[g] (Tex. 1891) Under Rev. St. art. 1641, which provides that, on appeal from justice court, the transcript must be filed in the county court on or before the first day of the second term after such appeal is taken, an appeal is irregular where the transcript is not filed until several terms after the appeal bond was given, and a failure to move for the dismissal thereof at the second term after the filing of the bond does not waive the irregularity.—King v. Lacy (App.) 17 S. W. 143; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Lynch, Id. 144.

§ 624. Effect of defects in general.

[a] (Ark. 1855) Where the record sent up from the court below on appeal is insufficient to give the proper jurisdiction as an appeal case, the court may, in its discretion, either compel the proper record to be certified to it, or the proceedings dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—Baker v. Calvert, 16 Ark. 485.

[b] (Ill. 1874) The fact that the replevin bond is omitted from the papers filed with the transcript on appeal by the defendant to the county court from a judgment of a justice of the peace in the replevin suit is not ground for dismissing the suit on motion of the defendant. It is defendant's duty in such case to file all necessary papers with the transcript.—McArthur v. Howett, 72 Ill. 358.

[c] (Ind. 1835) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the circuit court, it must appear from the transcript of the record that the plaintiff below had filed a statement of his demand, or some note or other writing relied on as the cause of action; otherwise, the action will be dismissed.—Bell v. Trotter, 4 Blackf. 12; Denby v. Hart, Id. 13.

[d] (Ind. 1836) Where the transcript on appeal from a justice of the peace is imperfect, but shows a good cause of action, the suit should not be dismissed, but only the appeal.—Boiles v. Barnes, 4 Blackf. 176.

[e] (Iowa, 1855) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, appellant cannot have the appeal or the cause dismissed because the record is not properly certified.—Stowers v. Milledge, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 150, 63 Am. Dec. 434.

[f] (Ky. 1895) Where the transcript on appeal from a justice's judgment of restitution in forcible detainer contains all the necessary papers, properly executed, except that a traverse and bond, duly signed and filed, were not indorsed by the justice, it is error to dismiss the traverse and exclude proof that the bond and traverse were duly executed and filed as required by law, but were not indorsed, owing to the negligence of the justice.—Hicks v. Parks, 30 S. W. 202.

[g] (La. 1884) An appeal from a mayor's court will not be dismissed for irregularities and deficiencies in the transcript, if the transcript contains the ordinances on which the judgment complained of was predicated, as such defects cannot be attributed to the fault of the appellant.—City of Baton Rouge v. Cremonini, 36 La. Ann. 247.

[h] (Minn. 1870) An appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that a justice did not attach the papers in the case to the transcript, or otherwise identify them, or return them all into the district court, the court having power to compel the justice to supply such omissions.—Rahilly v. Lane, 15 Minn. 447 (Gil. 360).

[i] (Minn. 1893) On appeal to the district court on questions of law alone, a justice's judgment will not be reversed because the justice, having been requested to do so, has not returned all the evidence, the party's remedy being by proceedings to compel a full return.—Cour v. Cowdry, 53 Minn. 51, 54 N. W. 935.

[j] (Minn. 1893) A justice's judgment will not be reversed or modified because his return fails to specify the items of costs taxed, unless it appears that items not taxable have been erroneously included. The remedy is by application for an order to the justice to amend his return.—Smith v. Victorin, 54 Minn. 338, 56 N. W. 47.

[k] (N. H. 1852) Though a justice of the peace, in making up the record of his judgment, has committed an error, it will be no defense upon the trial, if the copies which are sent to the common pleas by the justice are sufficient to give that court jurisdiction of the case.—Gallup v. Mulvah, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 132.

[l] (N. Y. 1843) If a justice's return on an appeal set forth matter not required by the statute, such matter should be treated as surplusage.—Swartwout v. Roddis, 5 Hill, 118; Wood v. Randall, 5 Hill, 264.

[m] (N. Y. 1851) In appeals from justices' courts judgment will not be reversed because the return of the justice is defective.—Klenck v. De Forest, 3 Code Rep. 185.

[n] (N. Y.) Where the return from the court below to the appellate court is defective, the case must stand over for a further return.—(1853) Matthews v. Fiestel, 2 E. D. Smith, 90; (1854) Woodside v. Pender, Id. 390.

[o] (N. Y. 1895) A justice of the peace entered judgment for defendant for damages for $5.05; costs, 35 cents. In the return on appeal from the judgment, it was stated that the amount entered as damages was in reality costs, and the items making up the amount were given. Held, that the entry, "Damages, $5.05; costs, 35 cents," was a mere irregularity or clerical defect, which could be disregarded.—Tousley v. Mowers (Co. Ct.) 14 Misc. Rep. 125, 35 N. Y. Supp. 855.

[p] (Ohio, 1846) An appeal from a justice of the peace to the court of common pleas ought not to be dismissed because the transcript of the justice does not state the form of action, or because he has omitted to send up a bill of particulars.—Humiston v. Anderson's Adm'rs, 15 Ohio, 556.

[q] (S. D. 1895) The mere fact that the certified copy of the justice's docket transmitted on appeal to the circuit court fails to show the receipt of a notice of appeal, and the filing of an undertaking, does not devest the circuit court of jurisdiction.—Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Co. v. Raymond, 7 S. D. 451, 64 N. W. 525.

[r] (Tenn. 1870) Where the record shows that defendant prayed an appeal to the circuit court and the justice certifies that he took the pauper oath, but no such oath is found in the record, the appeal will be dismissed.—Jennings v. Mercer, 48 Tenn. (1 Heisk.) 9.

[s] (Wis. 1851) An obvious clerical error in an amended return of a justice of the peace as to the month in which he rendered judgment will not be regarded by the appellate court.—Caughey v. Vance, 3 Chand. 308, 3 Pin. 275.

[t] (Wis. 1851) The original return of a justice stated that the judgment appealed from was rendered June 17th. An amendment and return stated that the case was submitted on August 14th following, and that a judgment was rendered on the 17th day of the same month. The affidavit and recognizance on appeal were perfected June 27th previous, and it appeared therefrom that an adjournment of the case had taken place which could have been lawfully made to June 14th, but not to August 14th. Held, on motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that it had been adjourned beyond the jurisdiction of the justice, that the insertion of the word "August" was a clerical error, as it was apparent that the word "June" was intended.—Caughey v. Vance, 3 Chand. 308, 3 Pin. 275.

[u] (Wis. 1862) An appeal from a justice of the peace should not be dismissed, nor the case stricken from the calendar, because the return was defective, or because the testimony was not contained in it.—Demming v. Weston, 15 Wis. 236.

—— of record by justice after appeal, see ante, § 600.

[a] (Conn. 1890) In an action pending before a justice of the peace, it was agreed by the counsel for the parties that judgment on a demurrer to the complaint should be rendered for plaintiff, and that defendant should appeal to the next term of the court of common pleas. On December 10th judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and an appeal allowed, but in consequence of the agreement no counsel was present. The justice did not adjourn his court on the day the judgment was rendered, but held it open to enable defendant to give an appeal bond, which was done on January 28th, following, in time for a hearing at the next term of the common pleas, as agreed on. Held, that mandamus to compel the justice to amend his record so as to show an adjournment sine die on the day the judgment was entered would be denied, since the appeal was taken to the next term of the common pleas, as had been agreed, and there was no averment that the time from December 10th to January 29th was not reasonable and necessary for defendant to give an appeal bond.—Chesebro v. Babcock, 59 Conn. 213, 22 Atl. 145.

[b] (Ill. 1880) An appeal from a justice of the peace was entered in the superior court, and the case placed on the trial calendar. When it was reached, the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution. The transcript from the justice was filed in the superior court on the day of the dismissal; but the appellee made an affidavit that it was a new transcript, as one had been already filed and lost. Held, that the case should not have been dismissed, but continued to the next term.—McMullen v. Graham, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 239.

[bb] (Ind. 1838) After an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, judgment in the circuit court, and judgment reversed by the supreme court and remanded for another trial, it is too late for a motion in the circuit court to dismiss the appeal because the justice had not filed the papers in time.—Abel v. Burgett, 4 Blackf. 511.

[c] (Iowa, 1854) A justice of the peace, having sent up an erroneous transcript, subsequently, and within the time directed for returning a transcript, filed an amended one. Held error in the district court to exclude this latter.—Smith v. Snodgrass, 4 G. Greene, 282.

[d] (Iowa, 1854) Where the transcript sent by the justice of the peace to the district court is defective, without fault on the part of the appellant, the latter should not be allowed to be prejudiced thereby, and, upon application reasonably made, he should be allowed to perfect the record.—Atwater v. Woodward, 4 G. Greene, 431.

[e] (Iowa, 1859) If a transcript of a justice of the peace, sent to an upper court on appeal, omits any essential fact, the injured party should apply to the court for an amendment, to be made by the justice, before the court can pronounce error in the proceedings.—Lord v. Ellis, 9 Iowa, 301.

[f] (Iowa, 1860) It is the duty of a justice to write down in his docket the substance of the defendant's plea, if oral; and in doing this he should state the substance of the facts relied on, and not what he inferred was meant thereby, and, if he on appeal by an amended transcript states his opinion as to what a plea referred to, such amended transcript may be stricken.—Jordan v. Quick, 11 Iowa, 9.

[g] (Iowa, 1883) Where a defendant is in default in a justice's court, and his only right under the statutes is to appear and cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses, and the docket entries show that he was present when judgment was entered against him, it is immaterial, for the purpose of reviewing such judgment, when the witnesses were examined, or whether in his presence; and an order for an amendment to the return of the justice to show that fact should not be allowed.—Olim v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 61 Iowa, 250, 16 N. W. 124.

[h] (Iowa, 1883) A return to a writ of error made by a justice of the peace that judgment was entered "on the eleventh (10th) day of July," being evidently a clerical mistake, it is not necessary that the return should be amended when other papers in the case indicate that the judgment was entered on the 10th day of July.—Olim v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 61 Iowa, 250, 16 N. W. 124.

[i] (Miss. 1871) In case of appeal from a justice's court, the circuit court has power to protect against any apparent irregularity in the appeal by allowing the justice to amend his return according to the facts; and, if a party fail to avail himself of this power in the court, he cannot afterwards invoke the aid of a court of chancery.—Weddell v. Seal, 45 Miss. 726.

[j] (N. Y. 1849) On appeal from a justice's court, if the return of the testimony and proceedings is insufficient to present the whole case, the parties must call for a further return.—McCafferty v. Kelly, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 637.

[k] (N. Y. 1853) Where all facts occurring at the trial below are not returned, the party aggrieved should make application to compel a further return.—Capewell v. Ormsby, 2 E. D. Smith, 180; Hyland v. Sherman, Id. 234.

[l] (N. Y. 1854) Appeals from justices' courts cannot be decided, except on an original return or a certified copy. If the original is lost, the signature of justice must be obtained to the copy submitted, or a new return obtained.—Smith v. Van Brunt, 2 E. D. Smith, 534.

[m] (N. Y. 1859) Where the return of a plaintiff's appeal from a judgment of a justice court shows that it was rendered for plaintiff, the plaintiff should obtain an amended return, showing that it was in reality a judgment for defendant, to overcome the presumption that it was not.—Slaman v. Buckley, 29 Barb. 289.

[n] (N. Y. 1892) Where evidence has been lost, on appeal from justice court, the remedy is by application to produce the same by affidavits or witnesses in the appellate court, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3056, 3213.—McGovern v. Eldridge (Com. Pl.) 1 Misc. Rep. 170, 20 N. Y. Supp. 654.

[o] (N. Y. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. § 2990, relating to trials in justice courts, provides that, unless a jury trial be demanded at the time of the joining of issue, the right to trial by jury shall be deemed waived. Held, that where, on appeal from a justice's judgment, the entries in the justice's transcript leave it uncertain as to whether a jury was demanded on the day of joinder of issue, or on a subsequent day, to which the trial was adjourned, it is error for the county court to deny a motion to require the justice to amend his return so as to show exactly when the demand for a jury was made. —Sherman v. Green, 90 Hun, 462, 36 N. Y. Supp. 53, 25 Civ. Proc. R. 191.

[p] (Pa. 1834) On an appeal from a justice, the record may be amended by the transcript. —Smith v. Boyer, 2 Watts, 173.

[q] (Pa. 1838) A certificate of fact within the recollection of a justice relative to a judgment rendered by him cannot be used to amend his transcript.—Boylan v. Hays, 7 Watts, 509.

[qq] (Tex. 1891) On appeal from justice's court a motion to dismiss because the transcript was not filed by the first day of the second term is too late if not made during that term, the transcript having been filed before the making of the motion.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Conerty (App.) 15 S. W. 504.

[r] (Vt. 1876) New copies of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace cannot be filed in the county court in vacation, and after final judgment has been rendered on the copies originally filed; nor can the presiding judge allow such copies to be filed, so as to make them part of the record.—Wood v. Davis, 48 Vt. 319.

[s] (Wis. 1861) Where it does not appear from the return of the justice that notice of appeal was served, the proper course is to procure a further return.—Hills v. Miles, 13 Wis. 625.

§ 626. —— Errors and irregularities amendable.

[a] (Del. 1857) An appeal from a justice of the peace will not be dismissed for the want of a proper certificate by him of "all the docket entries in the case before him," but leave will be granted to amend the certificate.—Waters v. Kirby, 1 Houst. 364.

[b] (Ill. 1891) If, on appeal to the superior court from a justice's court, the certificate to the transcript is defective, a rule on the justice to supply a proper certificate may be obtained, but it is not proper to strike the transcript from the file.—McNichols v. Hunt, 43 Ill. App. 451.

[c] (Ind. 1858) Where defendant appealed from a judgment of a justice on a written offer to confess judgment, the court refused to grant a writ of certiorari to compel the justice to certify that defendant had verbally withdrawn his offer of confession, as that would be a matter of proof on the trial.—Lewis v. Morrison, 10 Ind. 394.

[d] (Ind. 1862) The justice should be allowed to correct a mere clerical error in his transcript.—Baker v. Chambers, 18 Ind. 222.

[e] (Iowa, 1856) The entries of oral pleadings on the docket of a justice may be corrected at the trial on appeal, by an amendment offered by the justice.—Cooper v. Woodrow, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 189.

[f] (Mo. 1834) It is the duty of justices of the peace to keep a docket, in which he shall keep fair and accurate entries of all suits instituted before him, with the proceedings thereon; and, if a justice of the peace has failed to certify to a paper intended as an affidavit, it is error in the circuit court to permit him to come into court and there to certify to the same.—Price v. Halsed, 3 Mo. 461.

[g] (Mo. 1895) On appeal from a justice, a constable's return may be amended to conform to the facts.—Godman v. Gordon, 61 Mo. App. 685, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 403.

[h] (N. J. 1822) The common pleas may, at the third term after filing the appeal, permit the transcript of a justice to be amended by affixing a seal thereto, provided no delay is occasioned thereby.—Thompson v. Sutton, 6 N. J. Law (1 Halst.) 220.

[i] (N. J.) The court of common pleas should permit a justice who is present in court to amend his transcript, by stating the time when and by whom the appeal was demanded, provided no delay is occasioned thereby.—(1825) Allen v. Joice, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 135; (1831) Camp v. Martin, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 181.

[j] (N. Y. 1805) A justice will not be required to amend his return to an appeal, so as to make it contrary to what he has already sworn to, although he gave a certificate impeaching the return.—Keeler v. Adams, 3 Caines, 84.

[k] (N. Y. 1865) A justice of the peace will be required to answer specific interrogatories by an amended reply in regard to any matters material to the case.—Smith v. Johnston, 30 How. Prac. 374.

[l] (N. Y. 1893) A justice of the peace will not be permitted to amend his return on appeal so as to absolutely contradict his original return, unless it appears that he was induced by fraud to sign a false return.—Bennett v. Taylor, 70 Hun, 51, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1094.

[m] (N. C. 1843) On an appeal from the verdict of a jury in the county court assessing damages for the erection of a mill, the superior court has a right to permit the sheriff to amend his return of the verdict of the jury, so as to set forth that they were sworn on the premises.—Harper v. Miller, 26 N. C. 34.

[n] (Ohio, 1877) Whether a defective transcript on appeal from a justice can be amended or not, a paper neither signed, certified to, nor written by him is not a transcript, and hence is not capable of amendment after the 30 days allowed for filing a transcript have expired.—Berne v. Britton (D. C.) 2 Wkly. Law Bul. 239.

[o] (Pa. 1892) Where a justice of the peace, in making out his docket and preparing a transcript for appeal, makes a mistake in designating the day on which the appeal was taken and the bail bond filed, so as to endanger appellant's right of appeal, it is proper to allow the justice to correct the error in both the docket and the transcript.—Kearney v. Pennock (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 37, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 32.

[p] (Tenn. 1838) The omission of a justice to enter a party's prayer for an appeal, and the grant of the appeal, may be amended by the justice, upon motion in the circuit court, by supplying the omitted entry by means of the recitals in the appeal bond.—Turner v. Lumbrick, 19 Tenn. (1 Meigs) 7.

[q] (Wash. 1890) On appeal from a justice of the peace, it is not error for the district court to refuse to allow an amendment of the return in aid of the justice's jurisdiction.—Knoff v. Puget Sound Co-op. Colony, 1 Wash. St. 57, 24 Pac. 27.

[r] (Wis. 1884) Where the record is silent in case of an unsigned notice of appeal from a justice of the peace, the justice may be required to amend his record so as to show by whom the notice was presented; it being required to be signed or presented by appellant or some one authorized by him.—Evangelical Lutheran St. Peter's Soc. v. Koehler, 59 Wis. 650, 18 N. W. 476.

§ 627. —— Authority to make amendments.

Power of justice to amend papers after appeal has been taken, see ante, § 600.

[a] (Mo. 1876) It is the duty of a justice, ruled to return a transcript of the proceedings in an action, to furnish a faithful transcript; and he cannot, of his own motion, make amendments in it.—Norton v. Porter, 63 Mo. 346.

[b] (Mo. 1879) A justice of the peace can only file an amended transcript by order of the circuit court, and any amendment not directed by such order will be void.—Smith v. Chapman, 71 Mo. 217.

[c] (Mo. 1886) After an appeal has been taken from a justice, and the papers filed with the circuit court, the justice cannot make an amendment or alteration therein without the consent of the parties and under the direction of the circuit court.—Horton v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 21 Mo. App. 147.

[d] (N. Y. 1895) A special term of the supreme court has no power to order the amendment of the return of a justice of the peace on which a cause was heard in the county court on appeal.—Pratt v. Baker, 88 Hun, 301, 34 N. Y. Supp. 766.

[e] (N. C. 1880) Where an action was brought in a justice's court against two defendants and an appeal was taken from the judgment recovered, but no memorandum thereof entered on the justice's docket, it was competent for the superior court, upon proof, to amend the record, to show that in fact only one of the defendants appealed.—People's Nat. Bank v. McArthur, 82 N. C. 107.

[f] (N. C. 1891) On appeal from a justice of the peace, an additional return will not be recognized, unless filed by consent of parties, or made pursuant to a recordari.—Beville v. Cox, 109 N. C. 265, 13 S. E. 800.

[g] (Tenn. 1850) Where, on an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace to the circuit court, there is a formal appeal bond attested by the justice, but no other entry or allowing of an appeal appears, it is competent for the circuit court to allow an amendment of the record, so as to show the entry of an appeal by the justice, and such amendment will be presumed by the supreme court to have been made by the justice, where there is nothing shown to the contrary.—Hall v. Bewley, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 106.

[h] (Tex. 1894) After an appeal is taken from a judgment in a justice's court, the justice, or his successor in office, has still jurisdiction to correct clerical errors in the transcript.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Gill, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 189, 28 S. W. 911.

[i] (Wis. 1873) If the return of a justice of the peace to the appellate court be defective, and a further return be made by the justice, which is received and acted upon by the appellate court, the fact that the amendment was made without any order of the appellate court is no ground of objection.—Norden v. Jones, 33 Wis. 600, 14 Am. Rep. 782.

§ 628. —— Proceedings for amendment.

[a] (Iowa, 1847) On an affidavit made in the district court that the transcript from a justice of the peace is erroneous in setting forth the day upon which the affidavit for an appeal was made, it is proper to rule the justice to file an amended transcript; and such amended transcript must be regarded as so much of the record in the case.—Cook v. United States, 1 G. Greene, 39.

[b] (Kan. 1864) The way to obviate an objection "that the record of the justice," sent up on appeal, "is defective in substance and form," is by suggesting a diminution of the record.—Reedy v. Gift, 2 Kan. 392.

[c] (Mich. 1889) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, in an action on a note against the indorser, the justice's return set out a declaration which contained no reference to any note on file, and which did not aver that notice of dishonor had been served on defendant. The return contained no recital of service of process, or of defendant's appearance or default; nor was it accompanied by any summons or proof of service, nor any evidence or copy of any note filed with the justice. Held, that defendant was not bound to plead in the circuit court, as the return showed no jurisdiction, and it was error to allow the return to be amended without a proper application and showing, and an opportunity to defendant to be heard on the motion.—Moore v. Hanson, 75 Mich. 564, 42 N. W. 981.

[d] (N. Y. 1851) A justice's return on appeal is conclusive of the facts in the case, and, if important matter is omitted, affidavits may be used as the foundation of an order directing a more full or specific return.—Lynsky v. Pendegrast, 2 E. D. Smith, 43.

[e] (Ohio, 1876) On petition in error to reverse a judgment of a justice of the peace in a civil action on the ground that the record fails to show either legal service or voluntary appearance of the plaintiff in error, an answer by the defendant in error alleging a voluntary appearance, and that the transcript is imperfect and defective in failing to show such appearance, may be regarded as a suggestion of diminution of record, sufficient to authorize the court to order the justice to furnish a complete and valid transcript of the proceedings and judgment in the action.—Godfred v. Godfred, 30 Ohio St. 53.

[f] (Pa. 1821) The transcript of a suit before a justice is sufficient, if it set forth the substance of his proceedings, though inartificially; and, if the transcript be defective, the court of common pleas may receive an additional return from the justice, or examine him on oath.—Cochran v. Parker, 6 Serg. & R. 549.

[g] (Tex. 1884) Under Const. art. 5, § 16, authorizing county courts to issue all writs necessary to the enforcement of their jurisdiction, writs of certiorari may issue therefrom to justices' courts to complete defective records on appeal, sent from the justices' to the county courts.—Brown v. Grinnan, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 413.

[h] (Tex. 1884) On appeal from a judgment of a justice, where the record sent to the county court is imperfect, that court may avail itself of a writ of certiorari, or any other writ to have the record perfected, so as to enforce its jurisdiction.—Brown v. Grinnan, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 413.

§ 629. —— Time for amendment.

Continuance to procure proper transcript of record, see post, § 654.

[a] (Ark. 1846) The transcript on appeal from a justice cannot be amended after judgment, so as to give it validity. It should be amended before judgment by a rule upon the justice.—Watts v. Hill, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 203.

[b] (Ind. 1836) If the transcript sent up by a justice of the peace on appeal be imperfect, a motion for a rule against the justice to certify to the court a full and correct transcript should be granted, although not made until after a motion to dismiss the suit by the appellee.—Boiles v. Barnes, 4 Blackf. 176.

[c] (Iowa, 1858) The transcript sent up by the justice may be amended, if erroneous, after a trial above, and a new trial allowed to give the appellant the benefit of the amendment.—Clark v. Barnes, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 6.

[d] (Mo. 1889) Rev. St. § 3049, provides that, whenever the circuit court is satisfied that the return of a justice is substantially erroneous or defective, the court may, by rule and attachment, compel him to amend the same. Section 3580 provides that all returns made by any sheriff or other officer, or by any court or subordinate tribunal, to any court, may be amended, in matters of form, by the court to which returns shall be made, as well before as after judgment. Held, that a motion in the circuit court for a rule on a justice to amend his return in matter of form may be made during the term, during the trial, or after judgment.—Hill v. Patterson, 34 Mo. App. 169.

[e] (N. Y. 1891) On appeal from a judgment of a New York City district court, the judgment was reversed on the ground that the justice had proceeded after his jurisdiction was arrested by an application for removal of the cause to the common pleas, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3216, allowing such removal on application of the defendant, "after issue is joined, and before an adjournment has been granted on his application." Held that, after the appellate court had intimated or announced its decision, it was too late for a motion to amend the justice's return so as to show that, before defendants' application for removal, there had been an adjournment on their application, and for a reargument on such amended return.—Warren v. Campbell (Com. Pl.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 165; Persons v. Same, Id.

§ 630. Waiver of defects in transcript or record.

Waiver of delay or failure to file transcript, see ante, § 623.

[a] (Del. 1847) Though the transcript of a justice of the peace on appeal is required to be under seal, the seal is not necessary to give jurisdiction to the superior court; and the seal may be waived by pleading to an irregular transcript.—Lewis v. Hazel, 4 Har. 470.

[b] (Ky. 1829) On appeal from a justice of the peace, it is too late, after the jury is sworn, to object that the warrant and account are not sent up by the justice.—Grimes v. Dearborn, 26 Ky. (3 J. J. Marsh.) 61.

[c] (N. Y. 1854) Where a general return of a justice states that the examination of witness was stopped, because vexatious and improper, if appellant supposed that opinion erroneous, he should procure an amended return specifying particulars. Not having done so, he acquiesces in the truth of the return. If he supposes the court erred as to the pertinency of questions asked, he should obtain such a return containing them.—Peck v. Richmond, 2 E. D. Smith. 380.

[d] (N. Y. 1893) If the return on appeal from a justice's court is incorrect, insufficient, or indefinite, the remedy of the party aggrieved is by motion to correct the return, and he cannot attack the return on the hearing of the appeal.—Young v. Conklin (Co. Ct.) 3 Misc. Rep. 122, 23 N. Y. Supp. 993.

[e] (Ohio, 1876) Unless a party objects in apt time, an appeal from a justice of the peace may properly be heard on an amended transcript, and determined accordingly.—Godfred v. Godfred, 30 Ohio St. 53.

[f] (Pa. 1831) An appellee, who would avail himself of a defect appearing on the justice's transcript, must do so at the first opportunity. If he lie by and suffer an amended return to be received, and take no step for more than a year, he cannot afterwards object.—Robinson v. Shrouds, 1 Ashm. 168.

[g] (Wis. 1861) It did not appear from the return of the justice that notice of appeal was ever served. The court decided that this might be shown by affidavit, to which no exception was taken, and the affidavit was waived. Held, that the proper course would have been to have procured a further return; but, as no exception was taken and the affidavit was waived, the defendant was not entitled to a dismissal of the appeal in the court below on that ground.—Hills v. Miles, 13 Wis. 625.

§ 631. Requiring justice to send up transcript or record.

Compelling amendment of transcript or return, see ante, § 628.

Failure to pay costs as ground for refusal to make transcript, see ante, § 543.

Jurisdiction of appellate court on filing appeal bond to compel justice to make a return, see ante, § 605.

[a] Where, on appeal from a justice of the peace, the appeal and recognizance were properly taken, on refusal of the magistrate to make out a copy of the recognizance in due form, mandamus will issue.
—(Mass. 1811) Johnson v. Randall, 7 Mass. 340;
(N. H. 1854) Ballou v. Smith, 29 N. H. (9 Fost.) 530.

[b] (Ala. 1878) A refusal to award a certiorari to a justice of the peace to send up the original papers, together with the statement required on appeal to the circuit court, is not ground for reversal, when it appears from the whole record that awarding the writ would not have affected the result; the appeal bond being sufficiently formal to give jurisdiction, and it not being stated that the original papers would show a departure in the circuit court, or any other reason shown why the writ should have been granted.—South & North Alabama R. Co. v. Pilgreen, 62 Ala. 305.

[c] (Cal. 1858) When a party carried up a cause by appeal from a justice's court to the county court, and the justice neglected to send it up, the county court should give the appellant the opportunity to move for an order compelling the justice to send it up.—Sherman v. Rolberg, 9 Cal. 17.

[d] (Cal. 1864) The county court has no power to grant a writ of mandamus commanding a justice of the peace to file with the clerk of that court the papers necessary in the appeal of a case, in which the justice has issued a search warrant for stolen property and ordered it to be delivered to the owner, and has filed with the clerk of the county court the papers required by law.—People v. Halloway, 26 Cal. 651.

[e] (Cal. 1887) On an appeal from a justice's court to a superior court, where all the papers in the case have been transferred, except a copy of the justice's docket, the superior court has jurisdiction to order the transfer of a copy of the justice's docket, under Code Civ. Proc. § 975, relating to appeals from justice's or police courts.—Burgess v. Superior Court, 13 Pac. 166.

[f] (Conn. 1871) In mandamus to a justice to compel him to make a true record of a judgment rendered by him, and to furnish a copy to a party claiming to be aggrieved thereby, the superior court has jurisdiction to determine whether such record or copy is correct.—Smith v. Moore, 38 Conn. 105.

[g] (Ill. 1843) Where a justice of the peace neglects to return an appeal bond, appellant should apply to the circuit court to compel him to make the return.—Little v. Smith, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 400.

[h] (Mich. 1874) Where it is claimed that an appeal has been duly taken, but that the justice has failed to make his return, it is proper to call on the justice, under a showing by affidavit, to state the facts.—People v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

[i] (Mo. 1859) Where a judgment is rendered on default by a justice of the peace, and defendant, without moving to set aside the default, appeals, and the justice files a transcript before the appellate court, and afterwards the defendant, within the time allowed by law, moved to set aside the default in the justice court, and, on refusal, made application for an appeal, the appellate court should have granted a motion to compel the justice to amend his return, showing such application and refusal, so that appellants may have had a trial on the merits.—Dermody v. The Maria Denning, 28 Mo. 284; Grant v. Same. Id.

[j] (N. Y. 1828) Where a justice refused to give plaintiff a transcript in a case requiring one, mandamus will lie compelling him to do so.—People v. Lynde, 8 Cow. 133.

[k] (N. Y. 1846) The court of common pleas cannot compel a return by the justice, where there is a defective appeal bond served on him.—People v. Judges of Steuben County Common Pleas, 2 How. Prac. 248.

[l] (N. Y. 1848) The court will not order a return, under Code, § 310, in case of the omission of appellant to set forth the judgment appealed from, where respondent has filed no affidavit, since such section does not apply, except in cases where counter affidavits are filed by respondent.—Davis v. Lounsbury, 1 Code Rep. 71.

[m] (Tenn. 1883) A petition for certiorari to compel a justice to send a record to the circuit court, the appeal having been perfected by taking the pauper oath, need not state that it is the first application for the writ.—McGhee v. Grady, 80 Tenn. (12 Lea.) 89.

[n] (Tenn. 1883) A petition for certiorari to the circuit court, on the ground that the justice before whom the case was tried, and who had granted an appeal, had promised to bring up the papers, but subsequently refused to do so unless required by the circuit judge, is not a petition for certiorari in lieu of an appeal.—McGhee v. Grady, 80 Tenn. (12 Lea) 89.

[o] (Tex. 1887) Where the appellant filed his appeal bond within proper time, he cannot be bound by the justice's failure to transmit the papers to the county court; but, if the papers and transcript be not filed before the first day of the second term after the appeal is perfected, it is the duty of appellant to apply for a writ of certiorari to compel the justice to perform his duty.—Jones v. Spann, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 283.

§ 632. Objections to transcript or record.

[a] (Kan. 1887) Where facts material to appear in the record of a justice of the peace are untruthfully stated therein, they cannot be disposed of in a summary manner in the district court by affidavits upon a motion to dismiss the appeal.—Struber v. Rohlfs, 36 Kan. 202, 12 Pac. 830.

[b] (Mo. 1844) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, an objection to the transcript in general terms that it contains irrelevant matter is not sufficient. The irrelevant matter should be pointed out.—Palmer v. Hunter, 8 Mo. 512.

[c] (N. Y. 1891) Where a justice of a district court avails himself of an order to show cause why his return on an appeal should not be amended, the amended return, when made, cannot be vacated because of fraud or irregularity in the procurement of the order; the remedy of the party aggrieved being to move for a further amended return, or to proceed against the justice for a false return.—Thomas v. Whitlegge (Com. Pl.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 779.

(e) CONCLUSIVENESS OF TRANSCRIPT AND QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW.

CONCLUSIVENESS OF TRANSCRIPT OR RECORD, § 633.
ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE TO CONTRADICT OR IMPEACH, § 634.
—— TO SUPPLY OMISSIONS, § 635.
QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW, § 636.

§ 633. Conclusiveness of transcript or record.

[a] (Ark. 1860) A transcript of proceedings before a justice, sent up to a higher court, is a record, and conclusive of the facts that were or should have been therein mentioned.—Moehring v. Kayser, 21 Ark. 457.

[b] (Ind. 1873) The record of a justice of the peace is conclusive evidence of the facts set forth therein, and such record cannot be contradicted by a pleading.—Larr v. State, 45 Ind. 364.

[c] (Iowa, 1862). A justice's amended transcript, unless stricken from the files, must be regarded as the true record.—Brown v. Beesett, 13 Iowa, 185.

[d] (Kan. 1884) The transcript filed is not conclusive evidence of what was done in the justice's court. It may be shown that the justice altered the record after the appeal was perfected, and, on such showing, he may be ordered to send up a transcript of the record as it stood at the time the appeal was perfected.—Stuttle v. Bowers, 2 Pac. 806.

[e] (Mich. 1890) Where erasures appeared on the margin of a justice's docket given in evidence, and, although the justice testified in the case, defendant asked no questions as to such erasures, he cannot, on appeal, question the validity of the entries on that ground.—Whitworth v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 81 Mich. 98, 45 N. W. 500.

[f] (Mich. 1890) The docket entries of a justice showed simply that plaintiffs appeared by attorney, and that, "defendants making no defense to the merits," judgment was entered against them. In answer to the affidavit on appeal to the circuit court, the justice, in his return, certified the circumstances under which the judgment was rendered. Held, that the matters so returned cannot be taken to impeach the docket entries.—Hodges v. Bagg, 81 Mich. 243, 45 N. W. 841.

[g] (Mo. 1890) Who are parties plaintiff and defendant in an action instituted in a justice's court, and appealed to the circuit court, is to be determined prima facie from the justice's entries on his docket.—Clements v. Greenwell, 40 Mo. App. 589.

Digitized by Google

[h] (Mo. 1892) The official character of a justice of the peace, before whom an action for the killing of stock has been instituted, is established prima facie by a recital thereof in the transcript on appeal.—Burger v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. Ry. Co., 52 Mo. App. 119.

[i] (Neb. 1892) The transcript of a justice's docket, from which it appears that he did not enter judgment immediately upon the rendition of the verdict, as required by Code, § 1002, is conclusive upon the district court out of which a writ of error is prosecuted, and it should not, upon affidavits being made that the judgment was in fact entered immediately, allow a rule to require the justice to correct the journal entry.—Worley v. Shong, 35 Neb. 311, 53 N. W. 72.

[j] (N. Y. 1849) On appeal from the judgment of a justice the appellate court can look to the return alone, and not to the affidavits. —McCafferty v. Kelly, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 637.

[k] (N. Y. 1850) On appeal from a justice's court, the appellate court can look only at the return of the justice for the facts of the case and the proceedings in the court below.—De Courcy v. Spalding, 3 Code Rep. 16.

[l] (N. Y. 1857) Where the affidavits of the parties to an action differ as to which of two days it was continued to, the return of the justice must govern.—Kelly v. Brower, 1 Hilt. 514.

[m] (N. Y. 1887) Where the return of a justice before whom four actions were pending between the same parties states that on the return day of the summons the parties appeared by their respective attorneys, and issue was joined, making the complaint and answer in the first suit by stipulation the same in the others, and in like manner applying the evidence in that action to them, it must, for the purposes of review, be taken as true.—Village of Suspension Bridge v. Bedford, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 850.

§ 634. Admissibility of evidence to contradict or impeach.

[a] (Conn. 1786) Averments in a writ of error to review a judgment of a justice of the peace, which are contrary to the record, are inadmissible.—Wight v. Mott, Kirby, 152.

[b] (Iowa, 1862) The district court, on appeal, may hear testimony to explain and correct a mistake in a justice's record.—Brown v. Beesett, 13 Iowa, 185.

[c] (Me. 1839) Where the justice of the peace certifies, at the bottom of a paper purporting to be the record of a judgment rendered before him, that it is "a true copy," he will not be allowed to testify that he made no record of the judgment in such case.—Wheeler v. Lothrop, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 18.

[d] (Me. 1855) Under the statute requiring the appellant from a decision of a justice of the peace to produce a copy of the record and of all the papers filed in the case, a regularly authenticated copy of the record is the legal and best evidence of it, and cannot be explained or contradicted by parol testimony or extraneous documents.—Holden v. Barrows, 39 Me. 135.

[e] (Mass. 1869) In an action on an amended recognizance given on appeal from a magistrate, oral evidence is not admissible to contradict or vary a copy of the recognizance certified to by the magistrate, as it appears of record, by showing the contents of the original recognizance, since the magistrate's certificate is conclusive as to what the contract of the parties really was.—Cook v. Berth, 102 Mass. 372.

[f] (Neb. 1895) The record of the proceedings in a justice court, as embodied in a duly-certified transcript, imports absolute verity, and cannot be contradicted by extrinsic evidence in the appellate court.—Dryfus v. Moline, Milburn & Stoddard Co., 43 Neb. 233, 61 N. W. 599.

[g] (N. J. 1806) On appeal from a justice, a return denying certain facts on which plaintiff relied for a reversal cannot be contradicted by the affidavits of bystanders.—Prall v. Waldron, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 145.

[h] (N. J. 1810) A mistake of a justice in entering the Christian name of a witness in his record on an appeal to the common pleas may be explained on appeal by parol testimony.—Crane v. Ward, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 650.

[i] (N. J. 1854) A rule to take affidavits to contradict the return of a justice is irregular. The return is conclusive.—Paterson & R. R. Co. v. Ackerman, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 535.

[j] (N. Y. 1857) An erroneous return by the justice on an appeal from a district court cannot be impeached by counter affidavit. It must be corrected by motion.—Spence v. Beck, 1 Hilt. 276.

[k] (N. Y. 1878) Justice's return on appeal cannot be contradicted by affidavits on the appeal. The remedy of the party aggrieved by defect in it is an action for a false return.—Barber v. Stettheimer, 18 Hun, 198.

[l] (N. Y. 1893) A recital in the return on appeal from a justice's court, that the "parties stipulated to adjourn this matter to July 2d," cannot be contradicted by extrinsic evidence; the return being a record, and therefore conclusive.—Young v. Conklin (Co. Ct.) 3 Misc. Rep. 122, 23 N. Y. Supp. 993.

[m] (N. C. 1878) Parol evidence is admissible, on appeal to the superior court from the judgment of a justice of the peace, to explain the meaning of an entry on his docket.—Evans v. Williamson, 79 N. C. 86.

[n] (Ohio, 1844) Where the title of a case on the docket of a justice of the peace is against one as principal and another as bail, it may be treated on appeal as a mere description, and the true position of the parties may be shown by parol.—Golden's Adm'r v. McConnell, 1 Ohio Dec. 58.

[o] (Pa. 1846) The transcript of a justice on appeal cannot be altered by parol evidence, except in case of fraud.—Halliday v. Mills, 3 Clark, 394, 5 Pa. Law J. 416.

[p] (Pa. 1880) Wherever a justice's transcript shows the cause of action, it cannot be supplemented or changed in the appellate court by parol evidence, so as to deprive a party of a trial by jury.—Foss v. Bogan, 92 Pa. 296.

[q] (Pa. 1887) The docket of a justice of the peace is the best evidence of what transpired before him, and parol evidence is not admissible on appeal to vary or contradict it.—Fenstemacher v. Lilly, 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 44.

[r] (S. C. 1882) Where the judgment of a justice of the peace is invalid on its face for want of service, the transcript filed in the circuit court can give no life to the judgment, and the plaintiff cannot be permitted to show in the circuit court that the defendant in fact appeared.—Barron v. Dent, 17 S. C. 75.

[s] (S. D. 1892) If the justice has failed to make the entries in his docket which by law he is required to make, though the appellate court may, in a proper application, direct the docket to be amended, the certified copy of the docket cannot be attacked collaterally, and its correctness determined upon ex parte affidavits.

—Mouser v. Palmer, 2 S. D. 466, 50 N. W. 967.

[t] (Vt. 1847) Judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace by default, and the justice certified in his record that notice to defendant of the pendency of the suit was proved. Held, that defendant, on petition to the county court, founded on Rev. St. c. 33, § 8, might prove by parol evidence that he did not in fact have any notice of the suit prior to the rendition of the judgment.—Mosseaux v. Brigham, 19 Vt. 457.

§ 635. —— To supply omissions.

[a] (U. S. 1831) Defects in the transcript, certified by a justice of the peace to the circuit court, cannot be supplied by him, by certificate or otherwise, nor by the testimony of persons present at the trial; nor can anything in any way be added to it.—Jacobs v. Jacobs, Fed. Cas. No. 7,161a [Hemp. 101].

[b] (Ark. 1892) It having been adjudged that suits against railway companies for injuries to cattle and other stock must be brought in the county where the injury was inflicted, the venue of such suits can be established in the circuit court on appeal from a justice's judgment by proof aliunde the justice's record; Mansf. Dig. § 4140, providing that on such appeals the cause shall be tried anew, "without any regard to any error, defect, or other imperfections in the proceedings of the justice."—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Lindsay, 55 Ark. 281, 18 S. W. 59.

[c] (Mich. 1875) Where a transcript of a justice's judgment is entered and docketed by the clerk of the circuit court without an affidavit of amount due, as required by law, and no showing is made that such affidavit has been searched for, or is lost or destroyed, testimony of the deputy clerk that an affidavit of amount due was brought to the office after the transcript of the judgment was left, and that he filed it, but the contents of which he was unable to tell, or who made it, or the title of the case in which it was used, or the amount the affidavit stated to be due, is inadmissible.—Monaghan v. McKimmie, 32 Mich. 40.

[d] (Minn. 1891) The return of a justice of the peace on appeal cannot be disputed or supplemented by affidavits, and where only a part of the evidence is reduced to writing by the justice, and, in addition to that, he certifies that his return contains all the evidence given on the trial according to his best recollection, it will be construed as containing substantially all the evidence in the case, so that if either party claims that any evidence is omitted, a further return should be applied for.—Plymat v. Brush, 46 Minn. 23, 48 N. W. 443.

[e] (Pa. 1849) Where the justice's docket contained no entry of an offer to confess judgment for a particular sum, that fact cannot be proved by his certificate accompanying the transcript; it being no part of the transcript, and no better than the unofficial assertion of the justice.—Clemens v. Gilbert, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 255.

[f] (Pa. 1873) Where a justice's transcript on a defendant's appeal did not show that the action was brought under a certain act, which would have made it apparent that the recognizance was insufficient, and the appeal incomplete for want of a required affidavit, it cannot be made to appear by the plaintiff's affidavit, made after the appeal was taken.—Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Loftus, 71 Pa. (21 P. F. Smith) 418.

[g] (S. D. 1892) In appeals from justice court judgments the appellate court must learn the status of the case from the transcript and papers transmitted by the justice, and, if such transcript is imperfect or insufficient, a further return may be required; but affidavits of parties cannot be used to supply what should, but does not, appear in the transcript.—Mouser v. Palmer, 2 S. D. 466, 50 N. W. 967.

[h] (Tex. 1895) Since, in an action in a justice court, the pleadings may be oral, the justice merely being required to enter a brief notice in his docket thereof, on appeal it may be shown by parol evidence what the pleadings were, where they have been omitted from the transcript sent up by the magistrate.—Gholston v. Ramey (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 713.

[i] (Vt. 1826) If, on an appeal from a justice, his record does not show that a plea in abatement was pleaded before him, such fact cannot be proved by parol evidence. Diminution of the record should be alleged, and a mandamus moved for on the justice to certify more fully.—Martin v. Blodget, 1 Aikens, 375.

[j] (Wis. 1853) The county court has no authority to examine a witness, who testified at the trial before the justice, to supply an alleged defect in the return of the justice.—Talbot v. White, 1 Wis. 444.

§ 636. Questions presented for review.

[a] (Conn. 1787) On error from a justice of the peace, the court refused to reverse the judgment because it did not appear from the record what, or in whose favor, the judgment was, or whether any had been rendered.—Butler v. Scovel, Kirby, 352.

[b] (Iowa) The averments in an affidavit for a writ of error amount to nothing, unless there is a response to the same in the return of the justice.—(1856) Stone v. Murphy, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 35; (1865) Vance v. Kirfman, 20 Iowa, 13.

[c] (Iowa, 1856) On writ of error only those points are open to review which are included in the return of the justice and are responsive to the affidavit on which the writ was issued.—Hays v. Gorby, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 203.

[d] (Iowa, 1867) When the return of a justice to a writ of error completely negatives the errors alleged in the affidavit, the writ will not be sustained by the district court.—Lane v. Goldsmith, 23 Iowa, 240.

[e] (Mo. 1890) On appeal from a justice of the peace, the appellate court will not consider grounds of appeal not embraced in the abstract of the record.—Bensberg v. Turk, 40 Mo. App. 227.

[f] (N. Y. 1889) An objection that the summons was not properly served, which is overruled, the defendant answering over, is not available on appeal to the county court for a new trial, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3053, which provides that the justice's return in such case shall contain the summons, with the proof of service, the pleadings, the proceedings upon the trial, the judgment, and a brief statement of the amount and nature of the claim litigated, such return not embracing objections taken before the justice to the process or its service.—Pearce v. Nester, 50 Hun, 546, 3 N. Y. Supp. 720.

9. ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS AND BRIEFS.

§ 637. Assignment of errors and briefs.

[a] (Conn. 1843) But where it appeared from the record of a justice of the peace that he was present on the 7th of August, and adjourned the cause until the 14th, when he rendered judgment against the defendant by default, and it was alleged in the assignment of errors that the defendant attended on the 7th of August, from 9 o'clock until 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and the justice did not appear, it was held that such assignment was not inconsistent with the record.—Burgess v. Tweedy, 16 Conn. 39.

[b] (N. Y. 1822) The practice of the common pleas of proceeding on appeal from a justice by a general assignment of errors was incorrect.—Reab v. Moor, 19 Johns. 337; Breese v. Williams, 20 Johns. 280.

[c] (N. Y. 1850) An assignment of errors of fact is not abolished by the Code.—Craw v. Daly, 2 Code Rep. 118.

[b] (Iowa, 1875) An appeal from the judgment in a justice's court may be withdrawn, and an application to set aside the judgment be made, within the time fixed by statute for making such application, provided the appeal has not been perfected or the transcript sent up.—Park v. Ratcliffe, 42 Iowa, 42.

[c] (Kan. 1881) An appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace may be waived by the party appealing at any time before trial begun in the district court.—Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Hammond, 25 Kan. 208.

[d] (Mich. 1896) Under How. Ann. [g] (N. C. 1841) Where an appeal was taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace, it was held that the parties might by consent, while the papers remained in the hands of the magistrate, set aside the appeal and have a new trial.—Wardens of Poor v. Cope, 24 N. C. 44.

[h] (Pa. 1885) A defendant has a right to abandon his appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace before perfecting it by filing his transcript, and to elect his remedy by writ of certiorari within the period allowed by statute.—Wilcox v. Fowler, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 497.

[a] An appeal from a justice of the peace, if not taken in literal compliance with the statute, will be stricken from the docket of the appellate court.
—(Wis. 1850) Clark v. Miles, 2 Chand. 94, 2 Pin. 432; (Wyo. 1875) Ivinson v. Pease, 1 Wyo. 277; Jenkins v. City of Cheyenne, 1 Wyo. 287.

[b] Whenever it is made to appear to the circuit court that an appeal from a justice of the peace is improperly depending before it, it is the duty of that court to dismiss it.
—(Ill. 1852) Edwards v. Vandemack, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 633;
(N. J. 1829) Vandoren v. Vandoren, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 286.

[c] (Ala. 1840) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, where the trial is to be had de novo on the merits, it is error to quash the proceedings for a defect in the warrant.—McCrory v. Smith, 1 Ala. 157.

[cc] (Cal. 1855) Where the parties are in the county court on appeal for the purpose of trying the case de novo, it is the duty of the court to proceed with the trial on the merits of the case, and a judgment of dismissal, upon the ground that it did not appear that the defendants had notice of the trial before the justice of the peace, is erroneous and will be reversed. —Coyle v. Baldwin, 5 Cal. 75.

[d] (Cal. 1886) When the question heard and determined in the justice's court is made the subject of appeal, the appeal gave the court jurisdiction of the case, and, upon a sufficient showing in the statement, it must be considered, and not dismissed on the ground that "the appeal ought to have been taken on questions of law and fact."—Carlson v. Alameda County Superior Court, 70 Cal. 628, 11 Pac. 788.

[e] (Ind. 1838) Where judgment had been rendered by a justice for the plaintiff, a new trial granted, an appearance by the parties, a continuance at the instance of the plaintiff, judgment again for the plaintiff, and an appeal by the defendant, the court refused to set aside the appeal on the affidavit of the plaintiff that the first judgment was rendered in his absence and that the new trial was granted without his knowledge.—Jones v. Rodman, 4 Blackf. 492.

[f] (Ind. 1863) An appeal from a justice's decision to the circuit court will not be dismissed because the justice has not copied the plaintiff's cause of action on the docket.—Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Wilsey, 20 Ind. 229; Same v. Toon, Id. 230; Same v. Brinkman, Id.

[g] (Ind. 1870) Where judgment defendant makes application to the common pleas to be allowed to appeal from a justice, under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 597, § 68, more than 30 days after the judgment, and fails to perfect his appeal by having the order to the justice to certify up the case issued and served, and by causing the justice to make out a transcript of the proceedings and judgment before him, and file it, with the original papers, in the office of the clerk of the common pleas, within a reasonable time, and until the case has been regularly called for trial, the appeal may be dismissed on motion of the adverse party.—Davis v. Luark, 34 Ind. 403.

[h] (Ind. 1875) Where, on appeal to the circuit court from a justice's judgment, there is a ground on which the appeal may be dismissed, and also a ground on which, if the appeal was properly perfected, the action might be dismissed, the court should dismiss the appeal, and not the action.—Hunter v. Thomas, 51 Ind. 44.

[i] (Ind. 1878) Where a justice of the peace made his finding and rendered judgment in a case before him more than four days after the trial of such case, it was held that when the case was appealed the judgment was opened and the case left pending, as if no judgment had ever been rendered, and that the rendition of a wrong judgment by a justice is no ground for dismissing a case on appeal.—State v. Brewer, 64 Ind. 131.

[j] (Ind. 1893) As objection to a justice's trial of a cause because of his disqualification may be waived, a motion in the circuit court to dismiss an appeal from the justice's judgment is properly denied, where the record does not show when defendant first acquired knowledge of the facts.—Baldwin v. Runyon, 8 Ind. App. 344, 35 N. E. 569.

[k] (Miss. 1847) It is error for an appellate court to dismiss an appeal from the judgment of a magistrate, unless it is shown affirmatively that the magistrate had exclusive jurisdiction of the case.—Agnew v. City of Natchez, 17 Miss. (9 Smedes & M.) 104.

[l] (Miss. 1867) Acts 1863, pp. 155, 156, § 18, providing for an appeal to the circuit court from a justice, requires the circuit court at the return of the appeal "to impanel a jury and hear and determine the cause anew on its merits in a summary way." Held, that under said act the circuit court cannot quash an appeal bond and dismiss a cause on account of errors in the trial before a justice.—Porter v. Fooshee, 41 Miss. 337.

[m] (Mo. 1866) Upon an appeal from a justice of the peace, the justice is required to file with the clerk of the appellate court a transcript of his docket entries and all the process and other original papers relating to the suit; and if the papers are filed, and afterwards lost, the appellant may have the lost record supplied, if he desires to prosecute his appeal, and if he fails to do this the other party will be entitled to an affirmance of his judgment; but it is error to dismiss the appeal because the original papers are not on file, when they have been lost.—Fanning v. Voelker, 39 Mo. 120.

[n] (Mo. 1892) Where, on appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, the record does not show that any bond was given or affidavit made, as required by Rev. St. §§ 6328, 6330, or that any appeal was allowed by the justice, or that there was any effort to have an appeal allowed by the circuit court under section 6333, the circuit court has no jurisdiction to dispose of the case on its merits, and it should be stricken from the docket of that court.—Devore v. Staeckler, 49 Mo. App. 547.

[o] (N. Y. 1828) If the common pleas allow a justice to amend his judgment so as to make it conform to the appeal bond, the supreme court, on proper affidavit, will issue a manda-mus to quash the appeal.—People v. Tioga Common Pleas, 1 Wend. 291.

[p] (N. Y. 1837) Where, after a judgment in a justice's court and previous to an appeal, the suit between the parties is settled, but the defendant prosecutes an appeal, the plaintiff cannot allege the accord and satisfaction by way of plea puis darrein continuance. The common pleas, on motion, will dismiss the appeal.—Schenck v. Lincoln, 17 Wend. 506.

[q] (N. C. 1870) An appeal from an approved judgment of a justice, if regular, should not be dismissed. There should be a judgment of affirmance.—Barringer v. Holbrook, 64 N. C. 540.

[r] (N. C. 1877) An appeal from a justice is properly dismissed, where appellant's ground of appeal is simply that the only notice he had of the action was the service of the summons.—Sparrow v. Davidson College, 77 N. C. 35.

[s] (Pa. 1873) The appellee has no control over proceedings relating to an appeal, and an appeal which has been perfected by him, and not by appellant, will be dismissed.—Dietrick v. Mann, 1 Leg. Chron. 159.

[t] (Pa. 1882) Though it appear on an appeal from a justice court that the defendant understood the justice to refuse to allow him to appear by counsel on the trial of the cause, the appeal will not be dismissed for this act of the justice.—McIlvane v. Moran, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 458.

[u] (Tex. 1847) Where judgment was confessed in a suit on a note before a justice of the peace, and an appeal was taken to the district court, by whom it was dismissed and a procedendo awarded, it was held to be error to dismiss the appeal; but the district court should have rendered judgment according to section 58 of the act of 1846.—Wahrenberger v. Horan, 2 Tex. 291.

[v] (Tex. 1877) A trial in a county court on appeal from a justice's court is de novo, and hence it is error to dismiss because of defective service in the justice's court.—Boaz v. Paddock, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 39.

[w] (Vt. 1846) An action was commenced against an infant before a justice of the peace, and judgment was rendered against him, and he appealed. The case was entered in the county court, and a judgment was there rendered against him. The infant had appeared by himself before the justice, and by attorney before the county court, and not by guardian. On writ of error brought for this cause, the supreme court vacated the judgment, and remanded the case to the county court, and a guardian ad litem was then appointed by the county court, who moved to dismiss the appeal, for the reason that it was taken and entered in the county court by attorney, and not by guardian. Held, that the appeal should not be dismissed.—Barber v. Graves, 18 Vt. 290.

[x] (Vt. 1876) A defendant's appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace will not be dismissed, on motion, because the copies of appeal do not show a right of appeal. The right of appeal may grow out of the character of the defense, and not appear of record. The presumption is in favor of the regularity of an appeal; and, if the appellee alleges a want of right to appeal not apparent of record, he must plead such facts as, in connection with the record, will show such want of right.—Johnson v. Williams, 48 Vt. 565.

[y] (Wis. 1870) An appeal from the judgment of a justice's court cannot be dismissed, for the reason that the appellant failed to prove any cause of action in the court below.—Hicken v. Alden, 26 Wis. 40.

Dismissal for want of prosecution where appellee has not been summoned, see post, § 658.

Failure to file new pleadings on appeal as failure to prosecute appeal, see post, § 687.

—— to prosecute appeal as ground for affirmance of judgment, see post, § 728.

[a] (Ga. 1886) An appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace should not be dismissed for nonappearance of appellant, as the appeal is a de novo investigation.—Griffin Marble, etc., Works v. Padgett, 77 Ga. 497; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Walker, Id. 649.

[b] (Ill. 1859) If the appellant fails to appear, the appeal may be dismissed, and the judgment of the justice of the peace affirmed.—Shook v. Thomas, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 87.

[c] (Ill. 1863) Where an appeal has been perfected, but no notice has been given, the appellee, on entering his appearance, may have the appeal dismissed for want of prosecution.—Boyd v. Kocher, 31 Ill. 295.

[d] (Ill. 1877) Appellees are not entitled to a dismissal on appeal from a justice to the circuit court for failure to enter appellant's attorney's name on the docket, where appellant states that he is ready to try his own case.—Gregson v. Allen, 85 Ill. 478.

[e] (Ill. 1880) Under Rev. St. 1874, p. 648, on appeal from a justice of the peace, the trial should proceed in the circuit de novo. The appeal cannot be dismissed for want of prosecution, without requiring the plaintiff to prove a cause of action.—Eichelberger v. Garvin, 7 Ill. App. (7 Bradw.) 129.

[f] (Ill. 1880) It is error to dismiss an appeal from a justice on a preliminary call of the docket, in the circuit court, in the absence of any rule providing for such preliminary calls.—Goode v. LeClair, 10 Ill. App. (10 Bradw.) 647.

[g] (Ill. 1891) Where counsel appears for appellant on appeal from a judgment of a justice for plaintiff, it is error to dismiss the appeal, with procedendo, for want of prosecution, against the objection of appellant's counsel. Plaintiff should be required to prove up his case.—Brown v. Cook, 37 Ill. App. 608.

[h] (Ill. 1895) Under a published notice that a general call of cases would begin on a certain day, and that when a case was called it might be stricken from the docket or dismissed for want of prosecution, there was no authority for dismissing an appeal from a justice of the peace.—Gottschalk v. Lembke, 61 Ill. App. 236.

[i] (Ill. 1895) Where it appears from the record that on appeal from justice's court the party appealing was duly called in court, and failed to appear, an order dismissing such appeal will be affirmed.—Cronin v. Sullivan, 61 Ill. App. 338.

[j] (Mich. 1873) A rule of the circuit court which provides for the dismissal of appeals from a justice court on motion, where the cause has not been noticed for trial for some term not later than the fourth term after the entry of the cause in the circuit, does not apply to a case which has once been duly noticed within the prescribed time, though there has subsequently been a delay without notice for the time prescribed.—Willis v. Gimbert, 27 Mich. 91.

[k] (N. J. 1837) On an appeal from the small cause court to the common pleas, the appellant, although defendant below, must appear and prosecute his appeal, or it will be dismissed. —Lum v. Price, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 195.

[l] (N. C. 1878) Defendant, who had appealed from a justice's judgment in open court, afterwards caused the justice to delay in sending up the papers by telling him not to send them. Finally he determined to prosecute the appeal, and filed the necessary bond. Held, that his acts did not show an intention to abandon the appeal, and the refusal to dismiss on that ground was not error.—Suttle v. Green, 78 N. C. 76.

[m] (Wis. 1862) An appeal from a justice of the peace was properly dismissed on motion of the appellee, under Rev. St. 1858, c. 120, § 216, when two terms of the circuit court had passed after return made without the case being noticed for trial by either party.—Vibbert v. Shepard, 15 Wis. 106.

[n] (Wis. 1884) Rev. St. § 3766, provides that an appeal from a justice's court, not brought to a hearing before the end of the second term, shall be dismissed. Respondent noticed for trial a case thus appealed, and appellant made an attempt to change the venue, which attempt was ineffectual, because the papers were not transmitted within the time required by statute. At the third term respondent again noticed the case for trial, and, when it was called for trial, moved its dismissal on the ground that it had not been brought to a hearing before the end of the second term. Held, that respondent had not waived his right so to move, and that the appeal was properly dismissed.—Holt v. Coleman, 61 Wis. 422, 21 N. W. 297.

[o] (Wis. 1885) Under Rev. St. 1878, § 3766, providing for dismissal of an appeal if the cause is not brought to a hearing before the end of the second term after the filing of the justice's return, unless the court shall continue the same for good cause shown, where the cause is continued on stipulation because of the sudden death of one of the attorneys for appellee, the appeal is saved.—Platto v. Western Union Tel. Co., 64 Wis. 341, 25 N. W. 421.

[p] (Wis. 1886) Under Rev. St. § 3766, providing that, "if neither party shall bring the appeal to a hearing in the appellate court before the end of the second term after filing the return therein," the appeal shall be dismissed, an appeal by defendant from a judgment by default before a justice should be dismissed for such failure, notwithstanding that at the first term plaintiff procured a continuance upon defendant being permitted to answer, neither party noticing the case for trial at the following term.—Bates v. Steele, 65 Wis. 355, 27 N. W. 42.

[q] (Wis. 1889) An appeal from a justice was noticed for trial at the first term by appellant, and after the evidence was given, and argument made, respondent moved to dismiss because the return showed that the appeal was not taken in time. The jury was discharged, and cause continued, with leave to procure an amended return, which was procured, and showed that the appeal was in time. Held that, though the appeal was not brought to trial at the following term, appellant had complied with Rev. St. § 3766, which requires the appeal to be brought to a hearing before the end of the second term.—Newman v. Board, 74 Wis. 303, 41 N. W. 961.

[r] (Wis. 1892) On motion in the superior court to dismiss an appeal from a justice's court, where it appeared that appellant served due notice of trial for the third term of court after the hearing before the justice; that service thereof was admitted; that appellant's attorney failed to notice the cause for trial sooner because of statements of appellant that he believed the matter would be discontinued or settled; and that appellant was given no encouragement by respondent that the case would be so disposed of,—the court properly granted the motion, under Rev. St. § 3766, requiring appeals from justices' courts to be brought to a hearing before the end of the second term.—Fred Miller Brewing Co. v. Quirk, 82 Wis. 197, 52 N. W. 93.

[s] (Wis. 1892) Where an appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court is continued on application of the plaintiff, and at the next term the case was not brought to trial, and the appeal was dismissed for that reason under the statute, the order dismissing the appeal should be set aside, where the failure to notice the case for trial was on account of plaintiff's attorneys believing that an understanding had been made in open court with the opposing counsel that the case should not be brought to trial at that term, but await the determination of another action between the same parties then pending.—Stone v. Halpin, 88 Wis. 483, 53 N. W. 691.

§ 641. —— Want of jurisdiction of justice.

[a] (Ill. 1850) By the statute regulating appeals the circuit court cannot dismiss an appeal from a justice of the peace, unless it appears from the evidence that the justice had no jurisdiction of the matter in controversy; and in all cases the court must hear the case appealed on its merits, unless the want of jurisdiction appears from the evidence.—Ballard v. McCarty, 11 Ill. (1 Peck) 501.

[aa] (Ill. 1861) Upon an appeal from a justice of the peace, the circuit court should try the cause de novo, and it is error to dismiss the suit because the justice rendered judgment against two defendants, when he had only obtained jurisdiction over the person of one of them.—Stephens v. Cross, 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 35.

[b] (Ill. 1891) A complaint in writing in forcible detainer before a justice being jurisdictional, where it does not appear on appeal that the complaint was filed, the case will be dismissed. It is erroneous in such case to dismiss the appeal.—Abbott v. Kruse, 37 Ill. App. 549.

[c] (Mass. 1860) If a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of any one of the causes of action counted upon, the action, after the defendant's appeal, cannot be dismissed by the superior court for want of jurisdiction.—Harris v. Doggett, 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 118.

[d] (Mich. 1880) A case commenced before a justice by warrant, under which defendant was brought into court, was by stipulation adjourned to a certain time, without the appearance of either party. The return showed that the parties appearing at the hearing were attorneys. Judgment for defendant was rendered after a four days' adjournment from the hearing. No objection to adjournment was made. Held that, as it did not appear that defendant was in custody at the time of the hearing, it could not, in the absence of a return of the justice showing that fact, be assumed that he was, so as to authorize a dismissal of plaintiff's appeal on the ground that the justice lost jurisdiction by delaying his decision while defendant was in custody.—Barker v. Wheeler, 44 Mich. 176, 6 N. W. 234.

[e] (N. Y. 1888) Code Civ. Proc. § 3062, provides for dismissal of an appeal from a justice's court only in case the action is not brought to a hearing before the end of the second term after appeal taken. Section 3063 provides that the judgment may be either affirmed or reversed in whole or in part. Held, that such appeal cannot be dismissed on the ground that the justice had no jurisdiction to enter judgment at the time he entered it.—Kuklo v. Kleis, 50 Hun, 600, 2 N. Y. Supp. 358, 15 Civ. Proc. R. 431.

[g] (Wis. 1861) Where a judgment of a justice is invalid by reason of having been rendered at an improper adjournment of the court, the remedy of the defendant is by certiorari, or a suit to enjoin its collection; and if the record on appeal showed a proper adjournment, he could not then move to dismiss, and sustain his motion by affidavits.—Mahr v. Young, 13 Wis. 634.

§ 642. Proceedings for dismissal.

[a] (Ill. 1859) On a motion to dismiss an appeal for want of jurisdiction in the justice, evidence must be heard, before it can be determined that a justice of the peace had not jurisdiction.—Swingley v. Haynes, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 214.

[b] (Ill. 1876) It is the duty of one appealing from a justice's judgment to cause the papers in the case to be deposited in the office of the clerk of the circuit court, and to advance such fees as are required by statute to be prepaid; and upon his failing to do so the adverse party may file the papers and advance the fees, and upon due notice obtain a rule requiring the fees so advanced to be refunded by the appellant, whose appeal may be dismissed for a disobedience of the rule.—Garrity v. Bash, 84 Ill. 73.

[c] (Ill. 1876) Under Rev. St. 1845, §§ 60, 62, regulating proceedings before justices of the peace, making the transcript on appeal take the place of a declaration, if the papers have been lost, a party wishing to dismiss the appeal must first have the judgment restored.—Reed v. Driscoll, 84 Ill. 96.

[d] (La. 1886) On motion to dismiss an appeal from a justice's judgment to the district court, on the ground that the matter in dispute is below the jurisdiction limit, the appellant should be allowed to offer evidence to maintain his appeal, unless his want of right to the appeal conclusively appears from the face of the papers.—State ex rel. Fontenot v. Judge of Thirteenth Judicial Court, 38 La. Ann. 718.

[f, g] (Minn. 1866) On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, plaintiff made a motion to dismiss the appeal, which was granted. Butler, 11 Minn. 72 (Gil. 42); Id., 11 Minn. 77 (Gil. 44).

[h] (Or. 1890) Where respondents filed a motion to dismiss an appeal, on the ground of an alleged defect in the undertaking, and the certificate of the clerk of the circuit court to the transcript showed that an undertaking had been given, with a surety named therein, and that the undertaking was given for an appeal, and for a stay of proceedings also, as provided by Code, subd. 1, § 514, and there was no authenticated proof as to the terms and conditions of the undertaking, the motion will not be considered.—Bilyeu v. Smith, 18 Or. 335, 22 Pac. 1073.

[i] (Pa. 1880) Where the record of a justice of the peace fails to show that the costs have been paid, which payment is a prerequisite to the right of appeal, the affidavit of a justice is admissible, on motion to dismiss the appeal, to show that the costs have been paid.—Ober v. Koser, 12 Lanc. Bar, 104.

[j] (Pa. 1883) An appeal allowed nunc pro tunc will not be stricken off on affidavits.—Smith v. Finn, 5 Law T. (N. S.) 78; Lowery v. Collins, Id. 97.

East Finley Tp., 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 209.

[l] (Pa. 1887) On a motion to strike off an appeal from the justice court on the ground that the set-off by defendant was not offered in good faith, but for the purpose of securing an appeal, the court will not pass on the merits of the set-off, but only on the question of its effect.—Baldwin v. Burgess, 1 Wilcox, 223.

[m] (Pa. 1893) On appeal by defendant from a justice, a judgment of non pros. by the court of common pleas, in default of appearance and affidavit of claim, without notice to plaintiff, is irregular.—Hubert v. Weger (Com. Pl.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 128.

[n] (Pa. 1896) The record of a magistrate showed an agreement to submit matters to referees, and abide their decision. From this defendant appealed, and plaintiff took a rule to show cause why the appeal should not be stricken off. Defendant filed a denial on oath of his attorney that he agreed to abide the decision of the referees. Held, that it was error to discharge the rule to show cause.—Hindman v. Doughty, 172 Pa. 573, 33 Atl. 563, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. 440.

[o] (S. D. 1890) If, on appeal from a justice of the peace, the appellant does not appear when the case is called for trial, the adverse party may proceed with the case, and take a dismissal of the complaint or verdict or judgment, as the case may require, under Comp. [s] (W. Va. 1888) The opposite party to the one who has obtained an appeal from a justice's judgment to a circuit judge, may move to have it dismissed, as improvidently awarded, because good cause was not shown for not having taken such appeal within said 10 days, by the written proof, including the affidavits in writing on which the judge acted in granting such appeal.—Hubbard v. Yocum, 30 W. Va. 740, 5 S. E. 867.

In the district court the defendant's motion to dismiss on the ground of a variance between the petition and notice was granted, though not made until after a change of venue, a continuance, and other proceedings in which the defendant had appeared had been had. Held, that the motion was made too late, and that the order granting it must be reversed.—Frink v. Whicher, 4 G. Greene, 382.

[g] (Mass. 1850) Where, in an action pending in the court of common pleas on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, it appears that the justice had an interest in the suit and instigated its prosecution, it should be dismissed, though the motion therefor is not made until the case is open to the jury, and the ground of the motion was known to the defendant and his attorneys four days before.—Richardson v. Welcome, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 331.

[h] (Mass. 1857) A motion to dismiss an action in the court of common pleas, for the refusal of the justice of the peace before whom it has been commenced to order a jury, cannot be entertained after the first term, even if a similar motion has been made before the justice.—Trees v. Davis, 52 N. C. 218.

[m] (N. C. 1860) Where a plaintiff in a warrant failed to appeal on a judgment rendered against him before a justice, at the rendition of such a judgment, or to make application for time to appeal, but appealed several days afterwards, it was held that a motion to dismiss the appeal at the second term after it was returned to the court was in apt time.—Council v. Monroe, 52 N. C. 396.

[f] (Mo.) It is error for the circuit court to dismiss an appeal, and to reverse the judgment of a justice; for, by dismissing the appeal, the court loses cognizance of the subject, and the judgment of the justice stands in full force.—(1831) Barns v. Holland, 3 Mo. 47; (1833) Runkle v. Hagan, 3 Mo. 234; (1848) Manion v. State, 11 Mo. 578.

[j] (Tenn. 1880) Where, in the circuit court, an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is dismissed because the record shows no appeal prayed or granted, the proper judgment is a procedendo, and not an affirmance.—Jackson v. Baxter, 73 Tenn. (5 Lea) 344.

[k] (Tenn. 1890) Where an appeal is taken from the judgment of a justice, but not within two days, as required by the statutes, so that the appellate court acquires no jurisdiction, the proper judgment therein is a "dismissal for want of jurisdiction," and costs, as provided by Mill. & V. Code, § 3940; and section 3861, which provides that "if the appeal is dismissed for any cause the appellee is entitled to an affirmance of the judgment below, with costs," does not apply to such a dismissal.—Douglass v. [m] (Tex. 1893) Though a county court, on dismissing an appeal from a justice of the peace, is not authorized to award a writ of procedendo, an order in its judgment that "the justice court proceed with the execution of its judgment" is mere surplusage, and harmless error, and does not vitiate the rest of the judgment.—Llano Improvement & Furnace Co. v. White, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 109, 23 S. W. 594.

§ 645. Effect of dismissal and acts constituting dismissal.

[a] (Ark. 1856) Where a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace is brought into the circuit court by appeal, and that court adjudges that the appellant has lost his right of appeal by his own laches, and dismisses the case, there is no mode provided by which the appellant can obtain a trial de novo.—Hill v. [e] (Kan. 1880) Where the plaintiff put in evidence a judgment in replevin rendered before a justice and an appeal therefrom, and a subsequent dismissal at the costs of the plaintiff were also shown, held, that the court erred in refusing to instruct that the appeal and dismissal operated to vacate the justice's judgment.—Hodgin v. Barton, 23 Kan. 740.

[g] (Ky. 1867) The dismissal of an appeal by the court of common pleas per se deprives that court of jurisdiction over the case, and remits it to the magistrate whose judgment has been appealed from; and thereafter that court should refuse a writ of prohibition against an enforcement of the judgment.—Olmstead v. Mason, 66 Ky. (3 Bush) 603.

Bernstein, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 671.

[b] (Ill. 1888) A complaint that the circuit court irregularly dismissed an appeal from a justice for want of prosecution comes too late at a subsequent term.—Hunt v. Baldwin, 27 Ill. App. 446.

[c] (Ill. 1889) When a county court sets aside an order dismissing an appeal from a justice, it may require the costs for the term to be paid 10 days before the first day of the next term.—Buettner v. Village of Percy, 31 Ill. App. 389.

[d] (Kan. 1889) Where defendant appeals from the judgment of a justice to the district court, and does not prosecute his appeal, and the case remains on the docket for more than eight months, when it is called for trial and the appeal dismissed, and afterwards defendant moves to set aside the order of dismissal, and shows that he was necessarily absent from the state, on account of sickness in his family, but it appears that he left 17 days before the case was called for trial, without employing any one to take charge of his case, depending upon a newspaper to give him the necessary information, an order of the district court overruling defendant's motion is not error.—Byington v. State Journal Co., 40 Kan. 622, 20 Pac. 514.

[e] (Mich. 1883) Where an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace has been dismissed for nonpayment of the entry fee, it may be reinstated, in the discretion of the circuit judge, upon satisfactory excuse for the default, notwithstanding the filing of a transcript of the judgment and the issuance of execution thereon.—Aldrich v. Clinton County Circuit Judge, 49 Mich. 609, 14 N. W. 565.

[f] (Mo. 1887) An appeal from a justice having been properly dismissed by the circuit court on the record before it, it is not error to refuse to reinstate the appeal, on a showing that the record was not correct, where the facts claimed as showing indulgence in the prosecution of the appeal are controverted by opposing affidavits.—Bullock v. Cook, 28 Mo. App. 222.

[g] (N. J. 1848) Where an appeal from a justice has been dismissed because of failure of appellant to rule the justice to return the appeal papers at the next term, but the justice returns them without a rule at such term, mandamus will issue to restore the appeal.—Ferguson v. Kays, 21 N. J. Law (1 Zab.) 431.

[h] (N. J. 1870) Where an appeal is taken from a judgment of a justice who neglects to certify his transcript, and appellant is prevented by surprise, and without fault on his part, from obtaining a rule on the justice requiring him to amend, and the appeal is dismissed, mandamus lies to compel the reinstatement of the appeal.—Hockenbury v. Alpaugh, 34 N. J. Law (5 Vroom) 342.

[i] (Tex. 1878) Mandamus will not lie to compel a county judge to vacate a judgment rendered by him, dismissing an appeal from a justice's court.—Porter v. Klahn, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 528.

§ 647. Proceedings preliminary to hearing.

[a] (Ala. 1844) Where several suits are depending between the same parties on appeal or by certiorari from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the court may, at the instance of either party, direct a consolidation, unless the party objecting can show that he will in some way be prejudiced thereby.—Cooper v. Maddan, 6 Ala. 431.

[b] (Mo. 1893) On appeal to the circuit court from a justice's judgment on a note, against a person whose name is on the back of the note above the payee's name, plaintiff may be required to elect, if he has not done so, whether he will seek to charge defendant as joint maker, indorser, surety, or guarantor, and he will be bound by such election.—Barnett v. Nolte, 55 Mo. App. 184.

[c] (N. Y. 1827) The common pleas may appoint a guardian ad litem for infants, on appeal, though none was appointed in the justice's court.—Moody v. Gleason, 7 Cow. 482.

§ 648. —— Change of venue.

Notice of motion for change of venue on appeal as substitute for notice of appeal, see ante, § 589.

[a] (Ark. 1893) A change of venue may be had in an action pending in the circuit court on appeal from a justice of the peace.—Hurley v. Bevens, 57 Ark. 547, 22 S. W. 172.

[b] (Cal. 1886) Const. art. 6, § 5, enacting that the superior courts in California "shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in justice's and other inferior courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law," confers no jurisdiction on a superior court to which an action has been appealed from a justice's court in the same county, where it was properly commenced, to change the place of trial to the superior court of another county of which defendant is a resident.—Gross v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 382, 12 Pac. 264.

[c] (Cal. 1887) Under Const. art. 6, § 5, which provides that the superior courts "shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in justices' and other inferior courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law," that part of Code Civ. Proc. § 980, which declares that "the provisions of this Code as to changing the place of trial * * * are applicable to trials on appeal to the superior court," is unconstitutional; and where an action tried in a justice's court of a county is appealed to the superior court thereof, an application to transfer the cause to the superior court of another county, on the ground that the defendants are residents of such other county, cannot be granted.—Luco v. Superior Court of Tuolumne County, 71 Cal. 555, 12 Pac. 677.

[d] (Ind. 1881) Plaintiff, in an action before a justice of the peace appealed by defendant, is entitled to have a motion by him for a change of venue from the county granted, upon the costs of the change being paid or replevied; and defendant's motion to tax to plaintiff all the costs that have accrued up to the granting of a change, on the ground that they are governed by the provisions of the justices' act on that subject, is properly overruled.—McDonough v. Kane, 75 Ind. 181.

[e] (Iowa, 1883) Under Code 1873, § 162, providing that the circuit court has "exclusive jurisdiction in all appeals and writs of error from inferior courts," and Id. § 2592, that when a change of venue is granted "the action shall be transferred to the district or circuit court," a replevin appeal of which the circuit court had exclusive jurisdiction could not be transferred to a district court.—Schuchart v. Lammey, 62 Iowa, 197, 17 N. W. 467.

[f] (Iowa, 1885) Under Miller's Code, § 2590, providing for a change of venue where the judge is prejudiced, excepting cases of appeal from a justice of the peace, a change from the county in such excepted cases will not be allowed, although prejudice be alleged on the part of both the circuit and district judges.—Ardery v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 65 Iowa, 723, 23 N. W. 141.

[g] (Iowa, 1886) A suit in a justice's court for rent under a lease was appealed to the circuit court, and there consolidated, by consent, with another suit there pending on the same lease, and motions for a change of place of trial, which were pending when the order for consolidation was made, were decided by sending the consolidated cause to the district court for trial. Held, that the change of venue to the district court was proper, although that court has no jurisdiction of appeals from a justice's court.—Browne v. Hickie, 68 Iowa, 330, 27 N. W. 276, distinguishing Schuchart v. Lammey (1883) 62 Iowa, 197, 17 N. W. 467.

[h] (Iowa, 1886) Under Miller's Code, § 2590, which provides that no change of venue from the county shall be allowed in case of an appeal from a justice of the peace, no such appeal can be sent out of the county for any cause whatever.—Boileau v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 69 Iowa, 324, 28 N. W. 621.

[i] (Ky. 1877) In case of an appeal pending in the circuit court from an order rejecting a claim against the county, 10 days' notice of a motion for a change of venue of such appeal given the county judge is sufficient, under Gen. St. art. 3, c. 27, § 11, without serving it on all the justices.—Washington County Court v. Thompson, 76 Ky. (13 Bush) 239.

[j] (Md. 1857) The circuit court has no power to grant a change of venue in a proceeding pending before it on appeal, under Const. art. 4, § 28, providing for change of venue in cases "instituted" in certain courts.—Hoshall v. Hoffacker, 11 Md. 362.

[k] (Md. 1879) The provision in the constitution relating to the removal of causes has been altered by Acts 1874, c. 364, and does not extend to the case of an appeal from a justice of the peace pending in the circuit court.—Geekie v. Harbourd, 52 Md. 460.

[l] (Mo. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1879, § 3729, providing that "a change of venue may be awarded in any civil suit to any court of record," the right to a change of venue is not limited to causes where the suit was originally brought in a court of record, but extends to causes appealed to the circuit court from the judgment of a justice of the peace.—Clements v. Greenwell, 40 Mo. App. 589.

[m] (Wis. 1854) Previous to the act abolishing the civil jurisdiction of the county court, the venue in appeals from justices of the peace could only be changed from the county to the circuit court by order showing cause according to the statute, and not by the mere consent of parties.—Dykeman v. Budd, 3 Wis. 640.

[n] (Wis. 1874) Laws 1872, c. 8, entitling a defendant on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to a change of venue "to the circuit court of the county in which he resides," does not apply where there is another but resident defendant, though the latter does not object to such change.—Campbell v. Chambers, 34 Wis. 310.

[o] (Wis. 1881) Since the provision of Rev. St. § 2624, that pending an appeal in an action "commenced before a justice of the peace, by process personally served," the circuit court shall change the place of trial "to the county in which the defendant resides," is made applicable to actions in the municipal court of Dare county, defendant, on an appeal from an action therein, was entitled to such change of venue, regardless of the convenience of witnesses.—Van Kleck v. Hanchett, 51 Wis. 398, 8 N. W. 236.

Amendment of pleading by striking out parties defendant, see post, § 679.

Imperfect transcript on appeal as ground for dismissal of action, see ante, § 624.

Judgment of reversal as dismissal of action, see post, § 730.

—— on nonsuit, see post. § 723.

Want of jurisdiction of justice as ground for dismissing action on appeal, see ante, §§ 472–474.

[a] (Del. 1845) The plaintiff, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, cannot take a non pros. at pleasure.—Prettyman v. Waples' Ex'r, 4 Har. 299.

[b] (Ill. 1852) The judgment of a justice of the peace is opened by appeal therefrom, and the judgment falls by dismissal of the case by the plaintiff.—Shaffer v. Currier, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 667.

[c] (Ill. 1852) A party who commences suit before a justice of the peace may dismiss his suit after appeal in the circuit court, even though the defendant obtained a judgment in his favor against the plaintiff; but he must dismiss the suit at his own costs.—Shaffer v. Currier, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 667.

[d] (Ill.) Where some of defendants appeal from a justice's judgment, and plaintiff proceeds to trial in the appellate court without bringing the other defendants into court, the suit is dismissed as to such defendants.—(1878) Callaghan v. Myers, 89 Ill. 566; (1894) Smith v. Hyde Park Portland Cement Paving Co., 55 Ill. App. 282.

[e] (Iowa, 1850) In an action commenced before a justice of the peace, a misnomer may be taken advantage of by motion, as well as by plea, after appeal taken.—Hall v. Bennett, 2 G. Greene, 466.

[f] (Ky. 1838) A dismissal of the suit, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, for want of jurisdiction in the justice, annuls the judgment and abates the suit.—Bassett v. Oldham, 37 Ky. (7 Dana) 168.

[g] (Md. 1861) On an appeal from a justice, the court may reverse the judgment of the justice for the plaintiff, without prejudice, upon a non pros. by the plaintiff, who may then bring in a new action.—Borden Min. Co. v. Barry, 17 Md. 419.

[h] (Minn. 1858) A dismissal, by the district court, of the cause and proceeding on appeal from justice court, is a dismissal of the action, and not merely the appeal, and cures a previous error in refusing to grant a motion to quash proceedings.—Fallman v. Gilman, 1 Minn. 179 (Gil. 153).

[i] (Minn. 1858) Upon appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace in favor of plaintiff, the proceedings are mere lis pendens in the district court, and the relations of the parties are the same as they were at the commencement of the trial in the justice's court; and where no provisional remedy has been allowed, and there is no pleading by defendant, plaintiff has an absolute right to dismiss the cause before trial, under Rev. St. c. 70, § 162, subd. 1, without leave of court or of defendant; but defendant, in such case, is entitled to a judgment for costs.—Fallman v. Gilman, 1 Minn. 179 (Gil. 153).

[j] (Mo. 1845) A plaintiff may discontinue his suit at any time, as well after an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace as before.—Turner v. Northcut, 9 Mo. 251.

[k] (N. J. 1828) If plaintiff appeals from a judgment rendered against him in favor of the defendant, he cannot, on appeal, move the court for a judgment of nonsuit, and thereby get rid of the judgment against him.—Reed v. Rocap, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 347, 350.

[l] (N. Y. 1828) The plaintiff, appellant or appellee, in the common pleas, may submit to be nonsuited, as in other cases.—People v. Judges of Tompkins County, 8 Cow. 131.

[m] (N. Y. 1846) Where defendant, in an action in the supreme court on a justice's judgment, pleads to the merits, and then appeals the justice's judgment to the common pleas, and plaintiff fails to notice the cause for trial, plaintiff will be permitted to stipulate for a discontinuance, as in case of nonsuit, on payment of costs of a motion for such discontinuance.—Hibbard v. Hoag, 2 How. Prac. 186.

[n] (Tex. 1887) Plaintiff brought suit in justice court to recover a phaeton or its value. He sued out a writ of sequestration, which was quashed, and the suit dismissed. On appeal to the county court the sequestration proceedings were quashed and dismissed, but plaintiff recovered judgment for the phaeton, or its value, and costs. Held, that the suit was properly treated in the county court as an action for the recovery of the phaeton or its value; and the quashal of the sequestration proceedings did not dispose of the suit upon its merits.—Brown Mfg. Co. v. Watson, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 329.

[o] (Vt. 1872) A trustee suit appealed from a justice and continued at the first term, without an affirmance against the principal defendant, who died before the next term, is thereby discontinued.—Dow v. Batchelder, 45 Vt. 60.

[p] (Wis. 1856) A nonsuit for an irregularity in an appeal from a justice is error.—Cavenaugh v. Titus, 5 Wis. 143.

§ 650. —— Condition of cause.

[a] (Ill. 1854) A judgment for trespass to personal property had been rendered by a justice against four defendants, one of whom appealed. Summons was not issued to the others from the circuit court, and a nolle prosequi was entered as to them. Held that, as to the defendant served, a nonsuit could not be entered after the jury retired.—Flinn v. Barlow, 16 Ill. (6 Peck) 39.

[b] (Ill. 1866) A motion to dismiss for the want of a cost bond, in a prosecution before a justice of the peace, is dilatory, and is too late, when made for the first time after appeal to the circuit court.—Yocum v. Town of Waynesville, 39 Ill. 220.

[c] (Mo. 1887) Where an appeal by plaintiff to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace has been dismissed for want of prosecution, and afterwards reinstated, plaintiff may dismiss his cause in the circuit court.—Holdridge v. Marsh, 28 Mo. App. 283.

[cc] (Mo. 1893) A demurrer, improperly filed in a suit instituted before a justice of the peace, may be treated, on appeal, as a motion to dismiss, if properly preserved by bill of exceptions.—Langford v. City of Doniphan, 53 Mo. App. 62.

[d] (N. J. 1829) If, from a judgment rendered by a justice in favor of a defendant, the plaintiff appeal, and on the trial of the appeal submit the cause to a jury, he cannot, by voluntarily withdrawing or neglecting to appear when called, obtain a nonsuit, or prevent a verdict being rendered against him.—Williamson v. Brown, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 296.

[e] (N. J.) Under sections 19 and 51 of the small cause act (Rev. St. pp. 235, 244), the justices in the original suit, and the common pleas, on the appeal, are prohibited from granting a nonsuit after the merits of the cause on either side have been submitted to the jury. —(1852) Doremus v. Howard, 23 N. J. Law (3 Zab.) 390; (1853) Bogert v. Chrystie, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 57.

§ 651. —— Grounds for dismissal or nonsuit.

[a] (Ala. 1833) Under a statute which requires that on appeal from a justice the cause shall be tried according to the justice and equity of the case, regardless of any defects or informality in the proceedings before the justice, a motion to quash the proceedings should be granted where, on appeal to the county court, it appears that the justice entirely disregarded the general course of law in the trial before him.—Hemphill v. Coats, 4 Stew. & P. 125.

[b] (Cal. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 976, providing that on appeals from a justice to the superior court on questions of fact, or law and fact, the action must be tried anew, on such appeals it is proper for the superior court to first determine defendant's plea to the jurisdiction, in that the action was brought in the wrong county, before considering the merits; and, on the plea being sustained, the action is properly dismissed.—Holbrook, Merrill & Stetson v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 106 Cal. 589, 39 Pac. 936.

[c] (Ind. 1875) Where, on an appeal by the defendant to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the original papers have been lost from the files, and leave has been granted each party to substitute copies therefor, after the lapse of a reasonable time, without substitution of the copies, a motion by the defendant to dismiss the action should be denied, and a motion by the plaintiff to dismiss the appeal should be granted.—Hunter v. Thomas, 51 Ind. 44.

[d] (Iowa, 1866) If the district court has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice, the cause should not be dismissed, but only the appeal.—Ely v. Dillon, 21 Iowa, 47.

[e] (Mass. 1850) It is a sufficient ground for dismissing an action pending in the court of common pleas, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, that the justice had an interest in the suit, and instigated the prosecution of the same.—Richardson v. Welcome, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 331.

[f] (Mich. 1871) When a plaintiff appeals from the judgment of a justice of the peace, in a case where a set-off was established against him, and does not appear for trial in the circuit court, that court cannot try the cause, nor render any judgment but one of nonsuit or discontinuance.—People v. Judge of Wayne Circuit Court, 22 Mich. 408.

[g] (Mo. 1845) An improper refusal to grant a continuance by a justice of the peace is no ground for dismissing the action on appeal.—Harper v. Baker, 9 Mo. 116.

[h] (Mo. 1875) Where a transcript from a justice's court shows judgment rendered against two or more defendants without sufficient service, the cause may be dismissed by the circuit court on motion as to those who appeal, but not as to those not appealing.—Urton v. Sherlock, 61 Mo. 257.

[i] (Neb. 1886) Where plaintiff fails to prosecute his appeal from a justice of the peace to the district court by filing his petition in time, it is not error for the court, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1010, 1011, providing that, if plaintiff on appeal fail to file his petition within 20 days, judgment shall be entered against him, to render judgment of nonsuit; the plaintiff showing no excuse for the delay.—Jacoby v. Mitchell, 19 Neb. 537, 26 N. W. 255.

[j] (N. H. 1852) A case will not be dismissed on appeal, on motion of the appellant, because the amount of damages awarded by the justice of the peace exceeds a justice's jurisdiction, nor because it exceeds the ad damnum of the writ.—Wallace v. Brown, 25 N. H. (5 Fost.) 216.

[k] (N. C. 1844) On appeal to the county court by defendant, from a judgment rendered against him by a justice in an amount beyond the justice's jurisdiction, defendant can there take advantage of the objection only by plea in abatement, or under the established course of the courts under a general issue, and not by dismissal.—Morgan v. Allen, 27 N. C. 156.

[l] (Vt. 1843) Where an appeal had been taken by the defendant from a justice's judgment, and the defendant neglected to enter the appeal in the county court, and the plaintiff entered the action for an affirmance of the judgment, it was held no cause for dismissing the action that the defendant, more than 12 days before the term to which the appeal was taken, tendered a confession of judgment, under the statute, before the justice who rendered the original judgment, and that the justice, being then out of office, refused to accept the same.—Smith v. Fisher, 17 Vt. 117.

[m] (Vt. 1847) A justice's writ filled up by a constable is void, and will be dismissed by the county court on motion, though the case may have come to that court by appeal, and though the defect was not pleaded in abatement until too late.—Winchell v. Pond, 19 Vt. 198.

§ 652. Hearing in general.

Injunction against hearing of appeal, see "Injunction," vol. 27, c. 1545, § 53 [e].

[a, b] (N. Y.) Appeals from judgments of justices of the peace, which the county judge is incapable of deciding, by reason of his relationship to the parties (2 Laws 1847, p. 643, c. 470, § 31), or for other causes, must be heard in the first instance at a special term of the supreme court instead of the general term.—(1853) Sheldon v. Albro, 8 How. Prac. 305; (1858) Davis v. Stone, 16 How. Prac. 538.

[c] (N. Y. 1858) Where an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace is transferred from the county court to the supreme court, because the county judge is disqualified to hear the appeal, it must be heard in the county in which the county court is. The code requires it to be heard on the original papers. These are on file with the county clerk, and he should not permit them to be removed, except when required by the court to produce them at the court house within his county.—Wiles v. Peck, 16 How. Prac. 541.

[d] (N. Y. 1878) Where an appeal has been taken from a judgment of a justice court, involving questions of law only, and the case has been regularly noted for argument and placed on the calendar of the county court, the case will remain upon the calendar at a subsequent term without any further notice by either party, but it cannot be brought on for argument except by motion, of which eight days' notice must be given, as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 364.—Matthews v. Arnold, 14 Hun, 376.

§ 653. Time of hearing.

[a] (Ill. 1857) When an appeal from a justice has been taken less than 10 days before the sitting of the circuit court, and the appellee has not been served with process, he cannot force the appellant to trial, for he cannot be forced to trial himself. Rev. St. c. 59, § 64.—Hooper v. Smith, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 53.

[b] (Ill.) Unless the transcript is filed 10 days before a term of court, an appeal from a justice is not triable at that term, under Rev. St. p. 648, § 68 (justice act), providing that where the transcript is filed 10 days before the term of court to which the appeal is taken, and the appearance of the appellee entered in writing 10 days before the first day of the term, the case shall stand for trial at that term.—(1874) Hayward v. Ramsey, 74 Ill. 372; (1887) Ogden v. Danz, 22 Ill. App. 544; (1890) Van Stavern v. Sears, 35 Ill. App. 546; (1894) Armstrong v. Crilly, 152 Ill. 646, 38 N. E. 936, affirming (1894) 51 Ill. App. 504.

[c] (Ill. 1894) Where an appeal from a justice's court is perfected by filing the bond in the justice's court 11 days before the term of the court to which it is taken, it may be placed on the trial docket for that term.—Vallens v. Hopkins, 51 Ill. App. 337.

[d] (Ill. 1895) Under Rev. St. 1893, c. 79, § 68, which provides that, "in case the appeal from the justice of the peace is perfected by filing the papers and transcript of judgment 10 days before the commencement of the term of the court to which the appeal is taken, the appearance of the appellee may be entered in writing, and filed among the papers in the case; and if so entered 10 days before the first day of the term of court, the case shall stand for trial at that term," the court has no jurisdiction to hear the cause on appeal, unless the transcript has been filed 10 days before the term, even in cases where the appeal is taken by filing the appeal bond with the justice.—Vallens v. Hopkins, 157 Ill. 267, 41 N. E. 632, reversing (1894) 51 Ill. App. 337.

[e] (Iowa, 1860) Under Laws 1858, c. 127, an appeal from a justice's to the district court could not be tried at the first term after the transcript was filed.—Mediken v. Mason, 10 Iowa, 406.

[f] (Iowa, 1880) On appeal to the circuit court from a judgment rendered by default before a justice, the court cannot, in the absence of any general rule of court regulating appeals from a justice, try such appeal before it is reached in regular order on the docket, under Code 1873, § 3587, which provides that appeals "must be tried when reached, unless continued for cause."—Harty v. D. M. & M. R. Co., 54 Iowa, 327, 6 N. W. 545; Berry v. Same, Id.

[g] (Kan. 1887) Where, on appeal from a justice court, the respondent appeared at an adjourned term of the term in session when the summons in error was returned and presented his case without objection, he cannot object that the case did not properly stand for trial until the next regular term of the court.—Sawyer v. Forbes, 36 Kan. 612, 14 Pac. 148.

[h] (Ky. 1847) The statute of 1802, requiring writs of error coram vobis to be tried at the first term, does not apply to an appeal from the justice on such writs.—Breckinridge v. Coleman, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 331.

[i] (Minn. 1881) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 123, which provides that all appeals from the judgments of justices "allowed 30 days before the first day of the term of the district court next after the appeal allowed shall be determined at such term, unless continued for cause," an appeal which is properly on the calendar may be heard though 30 days have not elapsed since the decision by the justice.—Chesterton v. Munson, 27 Minn. 498, 8 N. W. 593.

[j] (Minn. 1893) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 66, § 244, any issue or question of law alone, such as an appeal from a justice of the peace on questions of law alone, may be brought on for hearing before the court at any time.—Rollins v. Nolting, 53 Minn. 232, 54 N. W. 1118.

[k] (Mo. 1862) Where an appeal from a justice is taken within less than 10 days before the first day of the term of the appellate court, the case is not triable at that term, except by consent of parties.—Knapp v. Skeele, 31 Mo. 434.

[l] (Mo. 1882) A rule preventing a case from being tried, on appeal from a justice, at the first term, is waived by the fact that the appellant gave, and appellee accepted, notice to take depositions, and the depositions were taken and filed before the return term, and by the further fact that appellee took out subpœnas for witnesses on the third day of the return term.—Berry v. Union Trust Co., 75 Mo. 430.

[m] (Mo. 1883) An appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, not taken on the same day that the judgment was rendered, no notice of the appeal being given, cannot be tried at the first term of the appellate court, except by consent of both parties, or unless the appellee shall enter his appearance on or before the second day of such term.—Blakely v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 79 Mo. 342.

[n] (Mo. 1883) Under Rev. St. § 3056, an appeal must be continued where no notice has been given and no appearance entered before the second day of the term. Held error to hear the case and render judgment at the first term.—Hawley v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 80 Mo. 540.

[o] (N. J. 1896) Under Supp. Revision, p. 404, art. 4, § 15, when an appeal to the court of common pleas is taken from a judgment of the court for the trial of small causes within five days prior to the beginning of the next term, and the papers are not filed with the clerk of the court three days prior to the beginning of such term, the appeal cannot be placed on the list for trial at such term, but must go over, and be put on the list for trial at the next term thereafter.—Matthews v. Rankin, 58 N. J. Law (29 Vroom) 584, 33 Atl. 1052.

[q] (N. C. 1892) Under a rule providing that appeals from justices of the peace in civil actions will not be tried unless docketed 10 days before the term, it was error in the superior court to try, against defendant's objection, an appeal from a justice which was docketed on the first day of the term.—State v. Edwards, 110 N. C. 511, 14 S. E. 741.

[r] (N. C. 1892) A bastardy proceeding, being essentially a civil action, is within the purview of a rule providing that appeals from justices of the peace in civil actions will not be tried unless docketed 10 days before the term.—State v. Edwards, 110 N. C. 511, 14 S. E. 741.

[s] (R. I. 1883) Under the statute regulating appeals from justices' courts, an appeal is to be taken to the term of the appellate court next to be held after 10 days from the time of perfecting the appeal, not from the time of taking it.—McCaffrey v. Doyle, 14 R. I. 313.

[t] (S. D. 1890) An appeal from a justice of the peace stands for trial at an appointed term as if it were a regular one, under Comp. Laws, § 426, providing that an appointed term shall be "in all respects the same as the general terms provided for in this act."—Myers v. Mitchell, 1 S. D. 249, 46 N. W. 245.

[u] (Tenn. 1895) On appeal from a judgment of a justice it was not error to require a party to proceed to trial at the first term after the appeal was taken, though the papers were not filed until the second day of the term.—Rogers v. Hollingsworth, 95 Tenn. 357, 32 S. W. 197.

[v] (Tex. 1881) Rev. St. art. 1641, requiring the transcript and papers of a case appealed from a justice's court to be transmitted to the clerk of the county court before the first day of the next term, if practicable, otherwise, before the first day of the second term, precludes the trial of an appeal in the county court at a term after the first day of which such papers and transcript were filed.—Cowart v. Oram, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 183.

[w] (Tex. 1884) Under Rev. St. art. 1641, providing that on appeals from justice courts the transcript and papers shall, if practicable, be transmitted to the county court on or before the first day of the next term of such court, but, if there be not time to make out and transmit to the first term, they may be so transmitted on or before the first day of the second term, where the appeal papers do not reach the county court until the third day of the first term, the case is not properly before the court for disposition until the first day of the succeeding term.—Henson v. Martin, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 272.

[x] (Tex. 1894) Under Sayles' Civ. St. tit. 82, c. 17, relating to appeals from justice courts to a district or county court, and Id. art. 1294, contemplating that the cause shall there be tried de novo, a case so appealed is an "appearance case," and should not be called for trial before appearance day.—Hadden v. Smith (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 458.

[y] (Vt. 1830) An appeal from an order of removal must be taken to the next term of the court in the same county, if there be sufficient time after service of the order.—Strafford v. Hartland, 2 Vt. 565.

§ 654. Continuances.

Continuance as waiver of plea in abatement, see post, § 691.

—— on allowing amendments to pleadings, see post, § 686.

Procuring continuance as complying with requirement to prosecute appeal to avoid dismissal, see ante, § 640.

Right to continuance on appeal for want of notice of appeal, see ante, § 585.

[a] (Ark. 1850) A refusal of a continuance on appeal from a justice, where the transcript was filed only three days before the term, and the affidavit showed the witness to be a material one, and that he lived more than 60 miles from the place of trial, was an abuse of the discretion of the court.—Hensley v. Tucker, 10 Ark. (5 Eng.) 527.

[b] (Ark. 1850) It is no ground for refusing a continuance of a case by the circuit court, brought there by appeal, because of the absence of a witness, that a continuance has been granted by the justice of the peace for the same cause.—Hensley v. Tucker, 10 Ark. (5 Eng.) 527.

[c] (Ga. 1880) A party, who had exhausted his continuances in a justice court, moved for a continuance on account of the sickness of a material witness. The presiding justice stated that no subpœna had been asked for to bring in the witness, but that he had been at the store of the justice shortly before court, apparently well. Held, that there was no error in refusing a continuance.—Rivers v. Hood, 65 Ga. 302.

[d] (Ind. 1851) In an action on a promissory note before a justice, the plea was that the note was given for a clock, which the plaintiff warranted would prove a good timekeeper, and that the clock was worthless. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, and an appeal taken. The defendant then filed a bill of discovery against the plaintiff to obtain proof of warranty. The plaintiff was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and did not answer. The defendant moved for a continuance on affidavit filed, setting forth these facts, which was refused. He then moved to take his bill as confessed, or to suspend the further proceedings in the cause until the plaintiff should answer, which were also overruled. Held, that there was no error in overruling these motions, as the defendant might have examined the plaintiff before the justice, by having him subpœnaed.—Noble v. Tillotson, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 553.

[e] (Ind. 1864) A party appealing from a judgment of a justice's court is not entitled to a continuance in the circuit court, because the justice has not filed a complete transcript.—Mitchell v. Stephens, 23 Ind. 466.

[f] (Ind. 1872) An application for a continuance, in a cause appealed from a justice of the peace, on the ground of the absence of the justice, by whom the applicant proposes to prove that the transcript is not complete, should not be sustained.—Whaley v. Gleason, 40 Ind. 405.

[g] (Iowa, 1859) Action commenced before a justice of the peace in April, 1856, to which the defendant made no defense, and judgment was rendered against him. On appeal, and in September, 1857, the defendant filed in the district court an affidavit for a continuance, on the ground of the absence of a witness, stating in his affidavit "that said witness resides somewhere in the state of Illinois, but the county I am not able to state, at present." Held, that the continuance was properly refused.—James v. Arbuckle, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 272.

[h] (Mich. 1889) Where, on an appeal from a justice, it appeared that one of plaintiffs was a minor, and the court appointed the other plaintiff as guardian, it was not error to refuse to grant a continuance, without terms, though defendant asked therefor, on the ground that he was not prepared for defense on the merits, having relied on the fact of infancy.—McDonald v. Weir, 76 Mich. 243, 42 N. W. 1114.

[i] (Mo. 1894) Rev. St. 1889, § 2128, provides that when a party amends any pleading or proceeding, and the court is satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise, that the opposite party cannot be ready for trial, in consequence thereof, a continuance may be granted. Held, that where, on an appeal to the circuit court from a justice's court, plaintiff filed an unimportant amendment to his statement, the court properly refused a continuance because of such amendment.—Pifer v. Stanley, 57 Mo. App. 516.

[j] (N. J. 1894) When, on appeal from a justice's court, 10 days' notice is given of an intention to produce new evidence, it is the duty of the common pleas to postpone the trial of the appeal, so that the new evidence may be received.—Johnson v. O'Neil, 46 N. J. Law (17 Vroom) 510.

[k] (Tex. 1887) Where an action for damage by fire has been brought before a justice of the peace against a railroad company, and appealed by defendant to the district court, and the case is not called for trial till 13 days after taking the appeal bond, and defendant applies for a continuance in order to secure the testimony of a witness in defendant's employ, which is refused, the appellate court will not hold such refusal to be erroneous; it appearing that by proper diligence defendant could have obtained the testimony.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ragsdale, 67 Tex. 24, 2 S. W. 515.

[l] (Vt. 1860) The defendant appealed from the judgment of a justice, but neglected to enter his appeal. The plaintiff, at the next term of the county court following the appeal, caused a copy of the justice's record, certified by the county clerk (the justice, though out of office, still continuing to reside in the same county), to be entered for affirmance. The defendant moved to dismiss the suit, on account of the defective mode of certifying the records and consequent want of jurisdiction. Held, that it was not error for the county court, pending this motion, to continue the cause to enable the plaintiff to file a properly certified copy of the record, and, upon its being filed, to proceed and try the cause upon its merits.—Carruth v. Tighe, 32 Vt. 626.

[m] (Wis. 1866) Under Rev. St. c. 120, § 216, the circuit court, for sufficient cause shown, may continue an action, on appeal from a justice of the peace, which has not been noticed for trial at the first or second term after the appeal was taken.—Wilcox v. Holmes, 20 Wis. 307.

[n] (Wis. 1888) Rev. St. § 3766, requiring an appeal from justice's court to be brought to a hearing before the end of the second term after the filing of the justice's return, does not deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction to continue the appeal by an order made after the expiration of the second term; the application for the order of continuance having been made during the term.—Sutton v. Wegner, 72 Wis. 294, 39 N. W. 775.

[o] (Wis. 1895) Rev. St. § 2831, provides that the court may, on good cause shown, allow any proceedings in any action to be taken after the time limited by statute or by order of court has expired. Section 3766 provides that if neither party shall bring an appeal from justice court to a hearing in the appellate court "before the end of the second term after filing the return of the justice therein, such court shall dismiss the appeal, unless it shall continue the same by special order for cause shown." Held, that the appellate court has discretion, on a proper showing, to allow a continuance after the second term from the filing of the return has expired, though neither party has previously brought the appeal to a hearing, and its refusal to exercise such discretion is reversible error.—Whitham v. Mappes, 89 Wis. 668, 62 N. W. 430.

[b] (Ala. 1836) Where garnishment proceedings in justice court are removed to the circuit court by appeal they are triable de novo.—Colman v. Waters, 3 Port. 381.

[c] (Ala. 1885) On appeal from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, the case stands on the process and pleadings, and is triable de novo on the merits, under Code, §§ 3121, 3122.—Lehman v. Hudmon, 79 Ala. 532.

[d] (Cal. 1881) Defendant in the justice's court appeared specially, and moved that the service be set aside; he having been served with a summons only, and not with a copy of the complaint. The motion was granted, judgment entered against the plaintiff, and an appeal taken. In the superior court defendant appeared specially and moved to dismiss the appeal, but the court, without disposing of the motion, ordered defendant to answer and proceed to trial. Held, that the court was without power to make such order, that it could only affirm or reverse the judgment of the justice's court.—Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Kern County Superior Court, 59 Cal. 471.

[e] (Colo. 1871) Rev. St. c. 50, § 46, providing that on appeal from the judgment of a justice no exception shall be taken to the form or service of the summons issued by the justice, nor to any of the proceedings before him, but the appellate court shall hear and determine the cause in a summary way, without pleadings in writing, applies to cases arising under the ordinances of a city before the police magistrate of such city.—Deitz v. City of Central, 1 Colo. 323.

[f] (Colo. 1888) Upon appeal in the county court the case stands as it stood in the justice's court, and the claim of exemption is to be passed on like any other defense.—Bassett v. Inman, 7 Colo. 270, 3 Pac. 383.

[g] (Colo. 1890) Where, in an attachment before a justice of the peace, the issues in attachment and upon the merits are tried at the same time, and judgment on both issues is rendered for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals, the county court should retry the issues in attachment, as well as on the merits, under Gen. St. §§ 1979, 1987, providing for the right of appeal from all judgments rendered by justices, and that the rights of the parties shall be the same as in the original action, and shall be determined in a summary way.—Hurtgen v. Kantrowitz, 15 Colo. 442, 24 Pac. 872.

[h] (Ill. 1852) The right of appeal from an inferior to a superior tribunal, for the purpose of obtaining trials de novo, is unknown to the common law, and only exists where it is expressly given by statute.—Edwards v. Vandemack, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 633.

[i] (Mo. 1834) An appeal regularly in the circuit court must be tried, unless there was no legal cause before the justice.—Myers v. Woolfolk, 3 Mo. 348.

[j] (Mo. 1892) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 6339, which provides for a trial de novo of cases appealed from justices' courts, on appeal from a judgment, under section 2613, allowing an attorney's fee as costs to plaintiff in a suit for injury to stock resulting from the failure of a railroad company to fence its track, the value of such attorney's fee should be tried anew.—Briggs v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 111 Mo. 168, 20 S. W. 32.

[k] (N. Y. 1859) An appeal from a justice's judgment, under the Code, is not to be tried de novo in the county court. The appellate jurisdiction is merely of errors in the court below.—Pruyn v. Tyler, 18 How. Prac. 331.

[l] (Ohio, 1885) Where a judgment has been rendered against the defendant, and he does not appeal, but files a petition in error to reverse such judgment, he cannot have such petition amended, by assigning errors of fact, and secure a retrial of the case.—Bruder v. Biehl, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 85.

[m] (W. Va. 1885) Const. art. 8, § 13, as amended in 1880, providing that "no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any case than according to the rules of common law," applies to trials by a jury of six before a justice, and prevents a trial de novo on appeal therefrom.—Barlow v. Daniels, 25 W. Va. 512.

[n] (W. Va. 1887) No fact tried in a civil action by a jury of six persons before a justice can be retried de novo by the circuit court, or otherwise than according to the rules of the common law.—Hall v. Wadsworth, 30 W. Va. 55, 3 S. E. 29.

[o] (W. Va. 1887) The judgment of a justice rendered on the verdict of six jurors in an action for damages, in which no defense was made, cannot be tried de novo on appeal.—Hickman v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 30 W. Va. 206, 4 S. E. 654, 7 S. E. 455; Vandervort v. Fouse, 30 W. Va. 326, 4 S. E. 660.

[p] (Wis. 1867) Where a statute gives an appeal from a justice, but says nothing as to how the cause shall be tried in the appellate court, the fair implication is that there is to be a new trial.—Vroman v. Dewey, 22 Wis. 323.

[q] (Wis. 1882) On appeal from a justice's court in a case where, by Rev. St. § 3767, the same is required to be "heard on the original papers and the return of the justice containing all the material evidence," etc., the court cannot take authority, from a stipulation of the parties, to try the case de novo, as if originally brought in that court; and a judgment rendered upon such a trial is void for want of jurisdiction.—Bullard v. Kuhl, 54 Wis. 544, 11 N. W. 801.

§ 656. Amount and nature of cause of action.

[a] (Ill. 1876) On the trial of an appeal from a justice, in an action to recover for stock injured by the defendant's railroad, it being made to appear that the justice had jurisdiction, the cause will be determined on the proof.—Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Murray, 82 Ill. 76.

[b] (Neb. 1894) On appeal from a judgment entered by a justice on an award of arbitrators, assessing damages by trespassing animals, under Comp. St. 1893, c. 2, § 3, trial must be had de novo on a petition alleging the damages.—Holub v. Mitchell, 42 Neb. 389, 60 N. W. 596.

[c] (N. Y. 1864) Under Code, § 352, which provides that, on appeal from a justice's judgment to a county court, a new trial shall be had in the appellate court, "when the amount of the claim or claims of either party litigated in the court below shall exceed $50," it is not the amount of the verdict or recovery in the court below, nor the amount which any evidence goes to show the plaintiff entitled to, which controls, but the amount of the claim made and put in issue by the pleadings.—Ovenshire v. Adee, 27 How. Prac. 368.

[d] (N. Y. 1869) The law allowing appeals from justices' courts to the county courts "when the amount of the claim or claims for which judgment was demanded by either party in his pleadings in the court below shall exceed $50" will not permit a new trial in the county court, unless judgment for a sum exceeding $50 is demanded in good faith and in a proper case. Defendant has a right to so draw his answer in the justice's court as to have a new trial in the county court, if unsuccessful, provided his defenses are not sham or false, are proper and in good faith. If clearly sham and false, they will be stricken out by the county court on motion, and the appeal ordered to be heard by argument upon the justice's return.—Houghton v. Kenyon, 38 How. Prac. 107.

[e] (N. Y. 1870) A retrial may be had in all cases brought into the county courts by appeal, without reference to the form of the action, when the claim or claims for judgment made by the pleadings of either party shall exceed the sum of $50; and also in actions for the recovery of specific personal property, where no claim or claims exceeding that amount may be made, provided the damages actually recovered, added to the assessed value of the property, shall exceed that sum.—Merrill v. Pattison, 44 How. Prac. 289.

[f] (N. Y. 1877) The right of plaintiff, upon appeal from the judgment of a justice, to a new trial in the county court, depends upon the amount claimed in the pleading.—Hayes v. Kedzie, 11 Hun, 577.

[g] (N. Y. 1883) It is not in every case where the defendant demands in his answer judgment for more than $50 that he may have a new trial in the appellate court, but only in those cases where, from the nature of the action and the condition of the pleading, it can be seen that the demand has some basis in fact or law in its support.—Harvey v. Van Dyke, 66 How. Prac. 396.

[h] (N. Y. 1884) Under Code, § 3068, providing for a new trial in the county court, on appeal from a justice, where judgment is demanded for a sum exceeding $50, a new trial cannot be had where the proceeding is to recover possession of land.—Brown v. Cassady, 34 Hun, 55.

[i] (N. Y. 1885) On the question of the value of the property in controversy, in an action before a justice, although the justice does not fix the value, if it can be gathered from the record, the effect is the same on the question of the right to a new trial above.—Reynolds v. Swick, 35 Hun, 278.

[j] (N. Y.) Where the answer in an action before a justice alleges a breach of contract by which defendant lost more than $50, but does not demand judgment, or set up a counterclaim, it will be treated as a defense merely, and defendant cannot avail himself of Code Civ. Proc. § 3068, authorizing a new trial in the county court, "where the amount of the judgment demanded by either party exceeds $50."—(1887) Dudley v. Brinckerhoff, 13 Civ. Proc. R. 92; (1888) Royce v. Gibbons, 50 Hun, 341, 3 N. Y. Supp. 106.

[k] (N. Y. 1888) Where defendant, in a justice's court, pleads a set-off for $55, though his bill of items is only for $50, he is entitled to a new trial, on appeal to the county court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3068, which provides that, where the sum for which judgment was demanded by either party in his pleadings exceeds $50, the appellant shall be entitled to a new trial.—Dudley v. Brinckerhoff, 48 Hun, 618, 2 N. Y. Supp. 321.

[l] (N. Y. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. § 3068, provides that when, in an action brought in a justice's court, judgment for more than $50 is demanded in either pleading, appellant shall be entitled to a new trial, if in his notice of appeal he demands one. Held that, where the answer contains a counterclaim sufficient on its face, the question whether it was pleaded merely to obtain a new trial on appeal could not be tried on motion in the county court, on appeal thereto.—Baum's Castorine Co. v. Thomas, 92 Hun, 1, 37 N. Y. Supp. 913.

[m] (N. C. 1873) Upon an appeal to a superior court by plaintiff, in an action commenced before a justice, for the recovery of an amount due by a former judgment, he is entitled to have the case heard de novo, and for that purpose it should be entered on the civil issue docket.—Wells v. Sluder, 68 N. C. 156.

[n] (S. C. 1880) On an appeal from the decision of a trial justice, the amount involved exceeding $10, the trial must be de novo, unless the notice of appeal states that the appeal is on questions of law only.—Sternberger v. McSween, 14 S. C. 35.

[o] (Wis. 1864) In replevin before a justice of the peace where the justice fails to find the value of the property, the statement of its value in the affidavit for the writ must be taken as true, for the purpose of determining whether there shall be a trial de novo in the appellate court in case of an appeal.—Shaw v. Webster, 18 Wis. 498.

[p] (Wis. 1867) In replevin, when the value of the property is stated in the affidavit, and not found by the justice, on appeal the value so stated must govern in determining whether there shall be a trial de novo.—Bradley v. Morse, 21 Wis. 680.

§ 657. —— Nature and validity of judgment below.

[a] (Ala. 1827) Although the county court is required to try appeals from the judgment of justices of the peace according to the justice and equity of the case, without regarding any defects in the warrant, capias, summons, or other proceedings, it cannot entertain a case where there is a misjoinder of parties.—Smith v. Cobb, 1 Stew. 62.

[b, c] (Cal. 1858) Defendant, on appeal to the county court from a judgment in the justice court, on questions of both law and fact, is not entitled to a trial de novo, where he was properly served with process, and allowed judgment to be taken against him by default.—People v. El Dorado County Court, 10 Cal. 19.

[d] (Cal. 1885) Where an action is dismissed without trial by the justice, on the ground that the complaint was not indorsed, the upper court cannot try the issue of fact, but should reverse the case.—Myrick v. Superior Court of Contra Costa County, 68 Cal. 98, 8 Pac. 648.

[e] (Cal. 1894) On appeal from a justice of the peace to the superior court, the latter court, on determining that the justice had no original jurisdiction, because title to land was involved, may properly try such question of title as a court of original jurisdiction.—Hart v. Carnall-Hopkins Co., 103 Cal. 132, 37 Pac. 196.

[f] (Ind. 1877) Upon default in the circuit court of a party who has appealed from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the court may try the case or dismiss the appeal, in its discretion.—Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Nicholson, 56 Ind. 261.

[g] (Mass. 1853) On an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit by a justice, the whole case is to be tried on the merits in the appellate court.—Ball v. Burke, 65 Mass. (11 Cush.) 80.

[h] (Minn. 1892) An appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace on questions of law and fact brings the case before the appellate court for trial de novo on its merits, irrespective of whether the judgment appealed from was valid or not.—Finke v. Lukensmeyer, 51 Minn. 252, 53 N. W. 546.

[i] (Miss. 1884) A case from a justice of the peace may, as to defense, but not as to set-off, be tried de novo in the circuit court, though the appeal was from a judgment by default.—Callahan v. Newell, 61 Miss. 437.

[j] (Mo. 1856) On appeal from a justice's court, the circuit court should proceed to try the cause anew, and not dismiss it on account of irregularities in the justice's proceedings.—Maltock v. King, 23 Mo. 400.

[k] (Mo. 1885) Rev. St. § 3052, relating to appeals from justices' courts, provides that, on the return of a justice being filed in the clerk's office, the circuit court shall be possessed of the cause, and shall proceed to hear, try, and determine the same anew, without regarding any error or defect in the original summons, or in the service thereof, or on the trial, judgment, or other proceedings of the justice or constable in relation to the cause. Held that, where the justice's transcript shows that the justice acquired jurisdiction of the defendant by its having filed a motion to set aside the judgment by default, the circuit court should proceed to try the cause de novo, though an agreed statement of facts shows that defendant was served in the wrong township, and the justice had no jurisdiction of his person.—Kelly v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 86 Mo. 681.

[l] (Ohio, 1861) Where a justice had no jurisdiction, and the case is appealed to the common pleas, the case must be stricken from the docket without any judgment, unless the court has original jurisdiction, and an appearance is entered, from which time it becomes an original case in the common pleas.—Place v. Welch, 2 Ohio Dec. 542.

§ 658. Summons.

Appearance as alternative for service of summons, see ante, § 595.

—— as waiver of summons on appeal, see ante, § 598.

Reversal of justice's judgment as to defendant not brought into appellate court, see post, § 729.

[a] (Ill. 1848) The circuit court has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice of the peace, unless appellee has been served with process, or has entered an appearance in the circuit court.—Smith v. Irwin, 10 Ill. (5 Gilman) 268.

[b] (Ill. 1858) Where judgment for plaintiff has been rendered in a justice's court, in an action brought by A. for the use of B. on a promissory note, and an appeal taken to the circuit court, A., the nominal plaintiff, must be served with summons (Rev. St. p. 324); and a summons to B. is not sufficient, unless there has been an assignment of the note to the latter.—McCormick v. Fulton, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 570.

[c] (Ill. 1863) If an appeal be perfected, under Rev. St. 1845, c. 59, § 61, by filing the bond in the office of the clerk of the circuit court, a summons must issue to the appellee; in that case, the appellant using proper diligence in procuring process, the appellee, if not served with the process, would have no right, by entering his appearance, to have the appeal dismissed for want of prosecution.—Boyd v. Kocher, 31 Ill. 295.

[d] (Ill. 1863) Where an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the circuit court is perfected according to the provisions of Rev. St. 1845, c. 59, § 60, by filing the appeal bond in the office of the justice, no summons is required to be issued to the appellee. Each party is bound to follow up the appeal.—Boyd v. Kocher, 31 Ill. 295.

[e] (Ill. 1864) Section 64 of the act relative to justices of the peace provides that when an appeal is taken by one of several parties from a judgment of a justice of the peace the clerk of the circuit court shall issue a summons against the other parties, notifying them to appear and abide by the judgment of the court on the appeal, and, in case it is not served, that the cause shall stand continued at the first term, but shall be tried at the second term. Held, that where no summons was issued for those of the defendants who did not join in the appeal, and they did not enter their appearance, it was error to try the appeal at the first term.—Stewart v. Peters, 33 Ill. 384.

[f] (Ill. 1864) Where several defendants are sued before a justice of the peace upon a joint liability, all having been served with process, and an appeal is taken by one of them to the circuit court, judgment must be rendered upon the appeal against all the defendants, or none. To render a judgment against all, it is necessary that all of the defendants should be in court by actual or constructive notice.—Stewart v. Peters, 33 Ill. 384.

[g] (Ill. 1871) One of two defendants, against whom a judgment had been rendered in a justice's court, took an appeal therefrom to the circuit court. That court, at the next term after the appeal was perfected, upon the motion of the party who recovered the judgment, without any summons having been issued to bring in the other defendant, or his appearance having been entered, dismissed the appeal, with a procedendo, and rendered judgment against both defendants "for damages in the delay in taking said appeal," and for costs. Held error, as the circuit court had no jurisdiction, under the statute, to render judgment against the defendant in joining in the appeal without summons issued against him, notifying him of the appeal, and requiring him to appear.—Walter v. Bierman, 59 Ill. 186.

[h] (Ill. 1874) Where an appeal is taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace, and perfected by filing an appeal bond with the circuit clerk, it is error to dismiss the appeal, or do anything else in the case, without the consent of the appellant, until the appellee is in court in one of the ways provided by statute, namely, by service of summons, by return of two nihils, or by the entry of his appearance, in writing, filed with the papers in the case 10 days before the commencement of the term of court at which the motion to dismiss is entered.—Camp v. Hogan, 73 Ill. 228.

[i] (Ill. 1877) Where one of two defendants appeals from a judgment of a justice to a superior court, but no summons is issued in such court to the appellee or to the defendant not joining in the appeal, and no appearance is made by the appellee in writing within 10 days before the beginning of the term, a judgment by default in the superior court was unwarranted.—Lehman v. Freeman, 86 Ill. 208.

[j] (Ill. 1878) Where, on an appeal from a justice, there has been no service upon the appellee, nor a return of two nihils, nor an appearance entered by him, the court cannot dismiss, but only continue the case until it acquires jurisdiction.—Pratt v. Bryant, 2 Ill. App. (2 Bradw.) 314.

[k] (Ill. 1881) The circuit court has no jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice of the peace, where there are several codefendants, one of whom appeals, until the others are before the court, either by service, under the statute, or by appearance.—Steinborn v. Thomas, 8 Ill. App. (8 Bradw.) 515.

[l] (Ill. 1881) Upon an appeal taken by one of two joint defendants from the judgment of a justice of the peace, a summons must issue from the circuit court to the defendant not appealing, before that court can acquire jurisdiction.—Humphreys v. Rodgers, 9 Ill. App. (9 Bradw.) 281.

[m] (Ill. 1882) The circuit court has no power to either dismiss or try an appeal without the consent of the appellant, unless the appellee has been brought into court 10 days before the term, either by service of summons, the return of two nihils, or voluntary appearance; and the delivery to the clerk of the trial notice by the appellee does not amount to an entry of appearance.—McVey v. Huott, 11 Ill. App. (11 Bradw.) 203.

[n] (Ill. 1882) Upon appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, no appeal summons was served upon the appellee, nor was there a return of two nihils, or any appearance in writing or otherwise by the appellee. Held, that the circuit court had no jurisdiction in the case, and could not dismiss the suit.—Chicago Dredging & Dock Co. v. McCarty, 11 Ill. App. (11 Bradw.) 552.

[o] (Ill. 1887) On appeal by one of two defendants from a justice's judgment, where the other has not appeared, and no process has issued against him, the circuit court cannot overrule a motion for a continuance, and enter judgment against both defendants.—Bourton v. Rathbone, 23 Ill. App. 654.

[p] (Ill. 1888) An appeal by part of the defendants from a justice's judgment, when the appeal is perfected by filing bond, does not stand for trial until the other defendants have been brought in or have entered their appearance.—Fergus v. Lohman, 27 Ill. App. 448.

[q] (Ill. 1889) On appeal from the decision of a justice, where less than the full number of defendants appeal, those not appealing must be summoned, or a return of "Not found" made, before the case can be tried.—Howard v. Costello, 31 Ill. App. 611.

[r] (Ill. 1890) Where an appeal is taken from a justice of the peace, by filing the bond with the clerk of the court appealed to, the appellee must be summoned or appear, or two nihils be returned, before the court can proceed; and, if one of two or more defendants against whom judgment has been entered appeals, there must be summons to those not appearing.—Norton v. Coggswell, 35 Ill. App. 566.

[s] (Ill. 1895) Where a bond on appeal from a justice of the peace is filed with the circuit court clerk, and appellee is not summoned and does not enter appearance in such court, it is error to dismiss the appeal for want of prosecution.—Sutherland v. Lawrence, 60 Ill. App. 331.

[t] (Ill. 1896) Where an appeal from a justice of the peace is taken by one of two defendants, the neglect to bring in the other defendant by summons is not error, where the parties go to trial without objection.—Straus v. Oltusky, 62 Ill. App. 660.

[u] (Kan. 1864) Where, on appeal from a justice's judgment of dismissal, the plaintiff filed a sufficient petition, setting forth a cause of action on a bond, and a summons was regularly issued thereon and served on defendants, who answered, and the plaintiff replied, it was held that a subsisting right of action on the bond, of which the district court had original jurisdiction, existed, and that the proceeding was valid as, in effect, the commencing of a new action in the district court.—Reedy v. Gift, 2 Kan. 392.

§ 659. Noticing cause for trial.

Noticing cause for trial as an appearance, see ante, § 595.

[a] (Ill. 1895) Under a rule of court that only actions at issue may be noticed for trial on the "short-cause calendar," an appeal from a justice cannot be so noticed unless the appeal papers were filed 10 days before the term.—Vallens v. Hopkins, 157 Ill. 267, 41 N. E. 632, reversing (1894) 51 Ill. App. 337.

[b] (Mich. 1869) 2 Comp. Laws, § 4347, requires all issues of fact to be noticed for trial, and circuit court rule No. 10 provides that "in cases of appeal, where the party upon whom notice is to be served has not appeared by attorney or agent, and his place of residence cannot be ascertained, notice may be served by posting it in some conspicuous place in the office of the county clerk. Held, that a judgment recovered in the circuit court against an absent defendant, by posting notice on appeal from a justice's judgment, should be vacated, where it was entered without proof that the notice was posted in a "conspicuous" place in the clerk's office.—People v. Bacon, 18 Mich. 247.

[c, d] (Mich. 1869) 2 Comp. Laws, § 4347, requires all issues of fact to be noticed for trial, and circuit court rule No. 10 provides that "in cases of appeal, where the party upon whom notice is to be served has not appeared by attorney or agent, and his place of residence cannot be ascertained, notice may be served by posting it in some conspicuous place in the office of the county clerk. Held, that a judgment recovered in the circuit court against an absent defendant, by posting notice on appeal from a justice's judgment, should be vacated, where the affidavit of the plaintiff as to notice, while it alleges diligence in and inability to ascertain the defendant's residence inferentially, shows that his residence was known to plaintiff.—People v. Bacon, 18 Mich. 247.

[e] (N. Y. 1848) In order to bring on an appeal ex parte appellant must produce, in addition to the affidavit stating the proceedings in the court below, his notice of appeal served with the affidavit, and proof of due service of the affidavit and notice in the time and manner prescribed for instituting the appeal; and, if the appeal be not moved on the day specified in the notice as the day on which the appeal will be heard, appellant must also state that he has given the notice prescribed by section 310, or, if there has been a return from the justice ordered, the notice prescribed by section 315, and a compliance with the seventh rule of the court, made in June, 1848; and in addition thereto he should show whether there has been any counter affidavit served, or any return made, and whether respondent has appeared on the appeal.—Bellamy v. Alexander, 1 Code Rep. 64.

[f] (N. Y. 1859) An appeal from a justice's judgment does not require to be noticed for trial by either party after it has been regularly placed upon the calendar. Code, § 304.—Townsend v. Keenan, 2 Hilt. 544.

[g] (Wis. 1862) Notice of trial of an appeal from a justice of the peace is premature when given before the justice's return is made, and the case should be stricken from the calendar, on motion.—Demming v. Weston, 15 Wis. 236.

[h] (Wis. 1862) Only one notice of trial is required in appeals from justices of the peace, and it may be given by either party, and under it the appeal may be brought to a hearing without further notice.—Webster v. School Dist. No. 4, 16 Wis. 316.

[i] (Wis. 1869) An affidavit stating that affiant's attorney was unavoidably absent from home, and that he had written to another attorney to notice an appeal for trial at the coming term of court, but, through error or mistake, such notice had not been given, was sufficient to excuse a neglect to notice the cause for trial at the proper time, under the provisions of Rev. St. c. 120, § 216, requiring appeals from a justice of the peace to be noticed for trial within two terms succeeding the return.—Howe v. Elliott, 24 Wis. 677.

[j] (Wis. 1879) Where, on appeal from a justice, both parties, before the return is filed, notice the cause for trial, and it remains on the calendar over one term without objection, such notices operate as a mutual stipulation to put the cause on the calendar, and a motion to strike, therefore, made at a subsequent term, on the ground that the cause had not been regularly noticed, should be denied.—Gorton v. Bailey, 46 Wis. 638, 1 N. W. 217.

Amending pleading so as to change issue, see post, § 665.

[a] (Ark. 1875) On appeal from a justice of the peace, the same cause of action must be tried in the circuit court as was tried before the justice.—Chowning v. Barnett, 30 Ark. 560.

[b] (Cal. 1858) The "trial anew" of Prac. Act, § 626, means only a retrial of such issue as was actually tried below; and, if issue was not there taken on the facts, it cannot be taken on the appeal.—People v. El Dorado County Court, 10 Cal. 19.

[c] (Del. 1854) On an appeal from a justice, in an action against a constable for money collected by him for plaintiff, the officer can be charged only with a neglect of duty for which suit was brought below.—Lord v. Townsend, 5 Har. 457.

[d] (Kan. 1873) A defendant having filed an answer to a bill of particulars in a justice's court, and no new pleadings having been filed, the district court, in the trial of the case on appeal, may limit the investigation to the issues made by the pleadings in the justice's court.—Donnel v. Clark, 12 Kan. 154.

[e] (Md. 1834) Under Act 1791, c. 68, § 4, relating to the filing of appeals from judgments of magistrates, the county court may inquire into the want of consideration of a note, if such defense had been set up before the justice, since such courts have both law and equity jurisdiction.—Gott v. Carr, 6 Gill & J. 309.

[f] (Mass. 1845) When a plaintiff in a justice's court duly files a bill of particulars, in an action of general indebitatus assumpsit, and an appeal is taken from the justice's judgment, and he transmits to the court of common pleas a copy of the record and of the papers filed in the case, the trial in that court, on the appeal, must be confined to the matter set forth in the bill of particulars, unless the plaintiff obtains leave to amend it.—Smith v. Kirby, 51 Mass. (10 Metc.) 150.

[g] (Mass. 1856) At the trial, in the court of common pleas, of an action brought before a justice of the peace upon a bond for the prison limits, the plaintiff may prove any act of escape specified in his bill of particulars filed before the justice, although not relied upon at the trial there.—Kennedy v. Gooding, 73 Mass. (7 Gray) 417.

[h] (Mich. 1885) On the trial in the circuit court of a case appealed from a justice of the peace, the plaintiff should be restricted to the particulars of his claim as they stand of record.—Button v. Russell, 55 Mich. 478, 21 N. W. 899.

[i] (Minn. 1858) Under Act Minn. T. "Concerning Justices," art. 4, § 7, providing that "pleadings" shall be put in before justices when required by them or the opposite party, and article 13, § 5, providing that, on appeal from a justice's decision, the "issue before the justice shall be tried before the court above, without other or further new declaration or pleading" except as otherwise directed by the court, the issues on such appeal must be confined to the pleadings in the case, and it is error to charge that, if the evidence for plaintiff is sufficient to warrant a recovery, the verdict should be in his favor, "without reference to the declaration," on the ground that Laws Minn. T. c. 50, §§ 4, 7, 8, allow the declaration to be amended to conform to the proof.—Desnoyer v. L'Hereux, 1 Minn. 17 (Gil. 1).

[j] (Mo. 1885) The statutory rule that in appeals from justices' courts the same cause shall be tried as was tried below has no application to the case of a third person asserting independent rights, a claimant of credits, for instance, in a garnishment suit.—Wolff v. Vette, 17 Mo. App. 36.

[k] (Neb. 1884) The issues in the district court, on appeal from a justice, will be the same as before the justice.—Baier v. Humpall, 16 Neb. 127, 20 N. W. 108.

[l] (Neb. 1892) On appeal from a justice of the peace to the district court, the case must be tried on substantially the same issues as were presented to the justice, unless some matter such as payment, release, etc., has arisen since the former trial.—Lee v. Walker, 35 Neb. 689, 53 N. W. 597; Clarke v. Same, 35 Neb. 693, 53 N. W. 598.

[m] (N. Y. 1848) On appeal from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, the common pleas is restricted to the issue or issues of law or fact framed in the court below and appearing upon the record.—Ross v. Hamilton, 3 Barb. 609.

[n] (N. Y. 1876) Where a new trial is to be had in the county court, on appeal from a justice's court, the county court must pass on all questions raised on the trial before the justice as to the regularity of process, its service and return, as to the jurisdiction of the justice, and as to whether proper parties have been brought in.—Maxon v. Reed, 8 Hun, 618.

[o] (Pa.) It is error if, on an appeal from a magistrate, the case tried is different from that in which the appeal is entered.—(1807) Moore v. Waite, 1 Bin. 219; (1819) Stehley v. Harp, 5 Serg. & R. 544.

[p] (Pa.) The proceedings in the common pleas, on an appeal, are de novo only as to the declaration, pleadings, and evidence; but the cause of action must continue the same.—(1810) Owen v. Shelhamer, 3 Bin. 45; (1895) Ripple v. Keast (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp. 109, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 548, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 31, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 205.

[q] (W. Va. 1884) An appeal from the judgment of a justice made by law triable de novo in the appellate court is not a new action, but the continuation of the old one.—Bratt v. Marum, 24 W. Va. 652.

§ 661. Errors and irregularities.

[a] On the trial of an appeal from a justice court to the district court, the defendant cannot set up any defense that does not go to the merits.

(1884) Fulton v. Thomas, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 244.

[b] The appeal takes the case up for trial de novo, rather than for the correction of the justice's errors.

(Tex. 1860) Sheldon v. City of San Antonio, 25 Tex. Supp. 177.

[d, e] (Ark. 1838) The statute which provides that, on appeal from a justice of the peace, "a case shall be tried on its merits," cures only irregularities and formal defects. It does not cure the admission of improper testimony.—Jeffery v. Underwood, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 108.

[f] (Dak. 1877) Justices' Code providing that, on appeal from a justice of the peace, the parties shall proceed in all respects as though the action had been brought in the district court, the judgment of the justice cannot be reversed for errors committed at the trial, but the case must be retried de novo.—Bonesteel v. Gardner, 1 Dak. 372, 46 N. W. 590.

[g, h] (Ill. 1853) On appeal, the circuit court will give the parties a trial upon the merits of their controversy, without regard to forms or technicalities, except in cases where the justice has no jurisdiction.—Vaughan v. Thompson, 15 Ill. (5 Peck) 39.

[i] (Ind. 1862) Causes appealed from a justice of the peace are not tried upon errors in the transcript, but on the merits, upon the original papers.—Baker v. Chambers, 18 Ind. 222.

[j] (Ind. 1864) Errors that occur in the trial of a case in a justice's court are waived by a submission to a trial de novo in the circuit court.—Harrington v. Luddington, 23 Ind. 542.

[k] (Ind. 1867) The court of common pleas cannot review the action of a justice in rejecting any part of the pleadings; and where the justice on motion rejected the answer filed before him, held, that it did not make any part of the files in the case on appeal, and that the defendant should refile it, if he desired to avail himself of its benefit.—Hunter v. Thomas, 28 Ind. 448.

[l] (Ind. 1877) That the complaint, in an action originating before a justice of the peace and appealed to the circuit court, is not signed by either the plaintiff or his attorney, is an informality which cannot be reached by demurrer or a motion in arrest of judgment.—Hewett v. Jenkins, 60 Ind. 110.

[m] (Iowa, 1857) By section 2341 of the Code, an appeal brings up a cause for trial on the merits and for no other purpose. All errors and irregularities are to be disregarded.—Gilson v. Johnson, 4 Iowa (4 Clarke) 463.

[n] (Kan. 1877) Where a bill of particulars in a justice's court omits a fact essential to a cause of action, and the case is tried without objection, as though such fact was duly proved, the omission will, on appeal, be considered as waived.—Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 17 Kan. 566.

[o] (Ky. 1820) On appeal, no advantage can be taken of irregularity before the justice.—Bledsoe v. Cassady, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 459.

[p] (Mass. 1875) An appeal from a justice's judgment opens to the appellant in the superior court the whole case as to the law, the facts, and the judgment, and renders immaterial any irregularities in the judgment appealed from.—Inhabitants of Leyden v. Sweeney, 118 Mass. 418.

[q] (Minn. 1859) Under Pub. St. c. 59, § 189, which provides that, on appeal from a justice's court to a district court, the case shall proceed in the latter court as near as may be, as in actions originally brought therein, the case is thereby brought into that court in the same condition as it stood before the trial in the justice's court.—Hooper v. Farwell, 8 Minn. 106 (Gil. 58).

[r] (Minn. 1888) An appeal from a judgment of a justice on both law and fact brings the case up for a trial de novo upon the merits, irrespective of errors or irregularities occurring in the course of the trial in the court below, or in the judgment rendered therein, under Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 117.—Welter v. Nokken, 38 Minn. 876, 37 N. W. 947.

[s] (Mo. 1844) Where judgment by default is improperly entered by a justice of the peace, and an appeal is allowed, although not authorized in such case, the circuit court should proceed to try the cause de novo, disregarding any error or imperfection in the proceedings before the justice.—Ser v. Bobst, 8 Mo. 506.

[u] (Mo. 1886) Though judgment was erroneously rendered before the maturity of a note to recover on which suit by attachment was brought in a justice's court, yet this defect will not prejudice the case of plaintiff in the circuit court, under section 3052, Rev. St., by which the circuit court is directed to try cases coming to it from justice's courts de novo, without regard to defects in the proceedings before the justice.—Musgrove v. Mott, 90 Mo. 107, 2 S. W. 214.

[v] (Mont. 1893) Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 730, 731, 822–826, providing that on appeal from a justice's court the cause shall be tried de novo in the district court, the latter court cannot review the action of the justice in rendering judgment five days after hearing instead of within four days, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 794.—Missoula Electric Light Co. v. Morgan, 13 Mont. 394, 34 Pac. 488.

[w] (N. H. 1861) An appeal after judgment by a justice on the merits does not open the question of the propriety of the decision upon a motion to quash the writ.—Parker v. Barker, 43 N. H. 35, 80 Am. Dec. 130.

[ww] (N. H. 1861) An appeal after judgment by a justice on the merits does not open the question of the propriety of an amendment of process.—Parker v. Barker, 43 N. H. 35, 80 Am. Dec. 130.

[x] (N. Brabston, 49 N. J. Law (20 Vroom) 629, 9 Atl. 769.

[xx] (N. M. 1857) The transcript is to be resorted to only to ascertain that the case originated and was tried in such justice's court, a judgment rendered, and an appeal properly taken, and it is not error for the court to refuse to dismiss the case for errors apparent in the transcript, as the court tries the case de novo.—Archibeque v. Miera, 1 N. M. 160.

[y] (N. Y. 1855) The notice of appeal from the judgment of a justice is no part of the papers upon which the appeal is to be heard in the appellate court, and its defects cannot be considered where the appeal is brought to hearing upon its merits.—Webster v. Hopkins, 11 How. Prac. 140.

[yy] (Pa. 1833) An informality in the plaintiff's name, in the justice's court, will be disregarded in the court appealed to.—Graham v. Vandalore, 2 Watts, 131.

[z] (S. D. 1896) When an appeal is taken from a justice's court upon questions of both law and fact, and the case is tried anew in the appellate court, and no statement of the case is provided for, the appellate court cannot review alleged errors of the justice's court.—City of Yankton v. Douglass, 8 S. D. 441, 66 N. W. 923.

[zz] (Tenn. 1858) On appeal from a justice the case comes before the court not for revision, as on a writ of error, but for trial de novo on the merits, and the court should give judgment on the merits, regardless of defects in the justice's judgment.—Allen v. Wood, 88 Tenn. (1 Head) 436.

§ 662. Defects in process.

[a] (Ala. 1822) The court to which an appeal is taken is to try it according to equity and justice, without regarding any defect in the warrant, summons, or any other proceeding of the justice. No demurrer, nor motion to quash, in the appellate court, ought to be sustained.—Perry v. Brown, Minor, 55.

[b] (Ala. 1830) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, no exception can be taken on account of the warrant on which suit was commenced, not being under seal.—Rutledge v. Rutledge, 2 Stew. 400.

[c] (Ala. 1840) A defect in the summons, in a case before a justice of the peace, cannot be taken advantage of on an appeal.—Hill v. White, 1 Ala. 576.

[d] (Ala. 1849) In the trial of an appeal, in the circuit or county court, from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the appellate court is required by the statute to try the same, according to the justice and equity of the case, without regard to defects in the warrant, capias, summons, or other proceedings of the justice, before whom it was originally tried.—Hart v. Turk, 15 Ala. 675.

[e] (Ala. 1849) On the trial of an appeal from a justice of the peace, the appellate court, being required by statute to try the case de novo and to give judgment according to its justice and equity, etc., should, in a case where the plaintiff could maintain trespass or assumpsit, disregard the form of the warrant designating the proceeding as an action of debt.—Catterlin v. Spinks, 16 Ala. 467.

[f] (Ala. 1877) A justice's judgment, when appealed from, the cause being triable de novo, will not be vacated on motion merely because no service of process appears.—South & North Alabama R. Co. v. Seale, 59 Ala. 608.

[g] (Ala. 1880) On appeal from the judgment of a justice in a summary proceeding against a constable, the case is required to be tried "according to equity and justice, without regard to any defects in the summons or other process before the justice." Code, § 3121. Consequently, defects in the notice are not available.—Abrams v. Johnson, 65 Ala. 465.

[h] (Colo. 1871) Rev. St. c. 50, § 46, providing that on appeal from the judgment of a justice no exception shall be taken to the form or service of the summons issued, nor to any of the proceedings before him, an objection in the district court that the summons was returnable on the day it was issued cannot be maintained.—Deitz v. City of Central, 1 Colo. 323.

[i] (Colo. 1871) Under Rev. St. p. 407, c. 50, § 46, providing that in proceedings on appeal from a justice of the peace no exception shall be taken to the form or service of the summons issued by the justice, objection cannot be made that the process was signed by the title of police magistrate, which the justice had no right to assume.—Deitz v. City of Central, 1 Colo. 323.

[j] (Idaho, 1893) While it is the general rule that a party who has objected to the sufficiency of process, by answering over, waives such objection, this rule does not apply to appeals from justice or probate courts to district courts, since Rev. St. § 4841, provides that in such appeals either party may have the benefit of all legal objections and exceptions in the court below, and the trial in the district court shall be de novo.—Chase v. Hagood, 34 Pac. 811.

[k] (Ill. 1843) Under the act of 1839, to amend the several laws in relation to appeal, on appeal by the defendant from a judgment of a justice of the peace, he cannot assign for error that the year of the return day of the process was not stated therein.—Bines v. Proctor, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 174.

[l] (Ill. 1873) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the circuit court, no advantage can be taken of any irregularity in the process issued by the justice, or in the service of such process.—City of Alton v. Kirsch, 68 Ill. 261.

[m] (Iowa, 1860) On appeal from a judgment by default before a justice, defendant, relying on the affidavit of the constable who served notice, moved to correct the original notice and the justice's transcript, on the ground that the notice when issued and served was returnable at an hour different from that named in the record. Held, that the alleged alteration was of no importance; the trial in the district court being on the merits.—Graves v. Heaton, 11 Iowa, 169.

[n] (Ky. 1823) On an appeal from a justice to the circuit court, it is immaterial whether the warrant of the justice was voidable, or void. If the plaintiff in the circuit court can give evidence supporting a cause of action cognizable by the justice, and of the same species of that in which the judgment below was rendered, it is sufficient.—Burton v. Longs, 13 Ky. (3 Litt.) 441.

[o] (Mo. 1887) The sufficiency of a constable's return of service cannot be inquired into by the circuit court on appeal from the justice's court.—Williamson v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 25 Mo. App. 481.

[p] (Tenn. 1855) After a suit commenced before a magistrate has been brought by appeal to the circuit court, it is too late to file a plea in abatement for irregularity in the process or its execution.—Childres v. City of Nashville, 35 Tenn. (3 Sneed) 347.

[q] (Tex. 1880) On an appeal from a justice's court, in an action against the indorser of a note, an exception to the citation will not be sustained on the ground that it did not allege that the maker was dead, insolvent, or a nonresident.—Kerr v. Murrell, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 891.

[r] (Tex. 1892) On an appeal by defendant from a justice's court he is not entitled to have the citation quashed, although the justice erroneously refused to do so, as he is sufficiently apprised of the nature of the action, and may make his defense de novo.—Irwin v. Davenport, 84 Tex. 512, 19 S. W. 692.

§ 663. Jurisdiction of justice.

[a] (Ala. 1886) Want of jurisdiction on the part of a justice of the peace to render a judgment can be availed of upon appeal from the judgment.—Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Christian, 82 Ala. 307, 1 South. 121.

[b] (Ky.) The validity of the statute of 1812, increasing the jurisdiction of justices, does not come in question on an appeal from a justice's judgment.—(1816) Pollard v. Holeman, 7 Ky. (4 Bibb) 416; (1827) Suter v. Cardwell, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 34.

[c] (Pa. 1823) If, on an appeal from a judgment of a justice court, it appears from the transcript that the justice exceeded his jurisdiction, defendant may take advantage of the error, though after a plea of the general issue and a trial on the merits.—Wright v. Guy, 10 Serg. & R. 227.

[d] (Pa. 1866) On appeal from a judgment of a justice, and after a trial and verdict, it is not error to refuse to inquire whether the sum demanded was not too large to give the justice jurisdiction, when it did not clearly appear that the sum was too large, and there had been no previous averment of want of jurisdiction.—Funk v. Ely, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 442.

[e] (Pa. 1890) Want of jurisdiction of an attachment by a justice may be shown on appeal in the common pleas at any time.—Curwensville Mfg. Co. v. Bloom (Com. Pl.) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 295.

[f] (Tenn. 1852) The fact that a justice was incompetent because of relationship to a party is no ground for a plea in abatement after removal to the circuit court on appeal.—Wroe v. Greer, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 172.

[g] (Utah, 1886) Where a justice has decided an action involving a question of title to land, of which, under Code Civ. Proc. § 707, he has no jurisdiction, the district court can only try, upon appeal, the question of the jurisdiction of the justice, and not the question of title.—Ducheneau v. House, 4 Utah, 369, 10 Pac. 838.

§ 664. Errors waived in appellate court.

Effect of appearance in appellate court as waiver of errors, see ante, §§ 596–598.

Objections to replevin bond after appeal, see "Animals," vol. 2, c. 651, § 410.

[a] (Ark. 1843) An agreement by the parties, on appeal from a justice of the peace, to waive all technical objections and try the cause on the merits, is a waiver of notice of a set-off which was offered in the justice's court.—Roy v. O'Connor, 5 Ark. (5 Pike) 252.

[b] (Colo. 1894) On appeal to the county court from a justice court, if defendant, after his motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction in the justice court has been overruled, enters upon a trial on the merits, objections to the jurisdiction of the justice court are waived.—Schoolfield v. Brunton, 20 Colo. 139, 36 Pac. 1103.

[c] (Ill. 1872) An objection to a justice's exercise of unauthorized jurisdiction is not waived by not being made until after appeal and trial in the circuit court, on motion for a new trial.—Taylor v. Smith, 64 Ill. 445.

[d] (Ill. 1874) Defendant appeared before a justice and went to trial without objecting to the complaint. In the circuit court he submitted to trial without objection. Held, that any defect in the complaint was waived.—Center v. Gibney, 71 Ill. 557.

[e] (Ill. 1887) Where, on appeal from a justice, the court improperly refuses a continuance over defendant's objection and exception, the error is not waived by defendant's contesting the case on its merits.—Ogden v. Dana, 22 Ill. App. 544.

[f] (Ill. 1894) The service of notice to place an appeal from a justice's court on the short-cause calendar 2 days before the transcript is filed being a mere irregularity, the delay of the party for 15 days to move to have the same stricken therefrom waives the irregularity.—Johnston v. Brown, 51 Ill. App. 549.

[g] (Ind. 1836) Where a plea to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace was not sworn to, but the plaintiff went to trial on it before the justice, and on appeal in the circuit court, without making the objection, it was waived.—McCormick v. Maxwell, 4 Blackf. 168.

[h] (Ind. 1892) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace by a partnership, only the firm name is used in the complaint, but there is no demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment, and when the cause reaches the circuit court it is docketed by setting out the full name of each member of the firm as plaintiff, and the names so appear in the subsequent proceedings, the technical omission in the complaint as originally made is cured.—Greene v. Witte, 5 Ind. App. 343, 32 N. E. 214.

[i] (Iowa, 1851) Where defendant goes to trial on the merits on an appeal from a justice, after the court has denied a motion to dismiss because of insufficient notice of trial before the justice, without excepting, he waived such objection.—Wilson v. Knight, 3 G. Greene, 126.

[j] (Kan. 1887) Where an action against a railroad company is brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 50, providing that an action for property injured may be brought in any county through which the road passes, before a justice of the peace, and judgment is rendered against said company, and on appeal taken to the district court, judgment is again rendered against the defendant, which then moves for a new trial, upon the ground, claimed for the first time, that the court has no jurisdiction, the objection comes too late.—Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. Rodebaugh, 38 Kan. 45, 15 Pac. 899, 5 Am. St. Rep. 715.

[k] (Me. 1844) In an action for damages against a town, defendant cannot, after entering an appeal and trying the case on its merits in the district court, object that the action was brought before a justice of the peace who was an inhabitant of the town.—Strout v. Inhabitants of Durham, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 483.

[l, m] (Mo. 1889) In an action for an injury which must have been committed either in the township of the justice appealed from or in an adjacent township, if the necessary jurisdictional fact is proved in the circuit court, the judgment of that court will not be reversed merely because the statement filed with the justice did not state such jurisdictional fact.—Fitzpatrick v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 34 Mo. App. 280.

[n] (N. J. 1873) In an action in a justice court on a promissory note, an appeal was taken by defendant to the court of common pleas, and there tried in his absence. No statement of demand was filed, but defendant in his offset gave plaintiff credit for the note, and it was received in evidence without objection. Held, that defendant on appeal could not raise the objection that no demand had been filed.—Steward v. Sears, 36 N. J. Law (7 Vroom) 173.

[o] (N. J. 1880) A. filed a state of demand against B., in which he declared upon a guaranty of B. to pay the amount of A.'s sale to C. On the trial before the justice, he proved a sale directly to B. B. moved for a nonsuit, which was refused, and no amendment of state of demand was made. Upon trial of an appeal, the same variance appeared, but B. raised no objection upon that ground. Held, that by his silence below he waived his right, in the hearing of the cause in the supreme court upon certiorari, to insist upon the variance as error.—Butts v. French, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 397.

[p] (Ohio, 1846) If an action for nuisance upon land be commenced before a justice and appealed to the common pleas, on issue joined in that court by declaration and plea, it is too late to object to the want of jurisdiction on the part of the justice, and the court of common pleas may proceed to trial and judgment.—Harrington v. Heath, 15 Ohio, 483.

[q] (Ohio, 1859) A case in which the common pleas would have had original jurisdiction was brought into that court by appeal from a justice. The defendant answered and went to trial. Held that, after having taken his chances as to the verdict, it was too late for him to object that the justice had no jurisdiction.—Bisher v. Richards, 9 Ohio St. 495.

[r] (Pa. 1882) A plaintiff, by ruling the cause to arbitration and proceeding to trial and award, treats an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace as valid and regular, and waives any right to strike off the appeal unless he took exceptions to the form of the transcript within a reasonable time.—Boyer v. Indiantown Gap Silver Min. Co., 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 331.

[s] (Tenn. 1891) A plea to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, because defendant is not a resident of the county, is waived if on appeal the plea is not brought to the attention of the trial court until after plaintiff's testimony and part of defendant's has been introduced.—Eller v. Richardson, 89 Tenn. 575, 15 S. W. 650.

[t] (Vt. 1861) Where a justice, not having jurisdiction of a suit by reason of the amount in controversy, tries it, and the judgment is appealed from, and referred by the parties to a referee for trial, they thereby waive the objection which they might have made to the jurisdiction, especially where by the terms of the reference the objecting party agreed to interpose no motion to dismiss if the suit was tried by the referee.—Reed v. Stockwell, 34 Vt. 206.

[u] (Wis. 1851) A party making a motion to dismiss a cause appealed from a justice court in the appellate court, on the ground that it had been adjourned beyond the jurisdiction of the justice, having at a previous term appeared and obtained a continuance of the cause, thereby waived the right to make such objection.—Caughey v. Vance, 3 Chand. 308, 3 Pin. 275.

§ 665. New and amended pleadings in general.

[a] (Ala. 1884) Under Code, § 3121, providing that, on the removal of a cause from a justice to the circuit court, it shall be tried de novo, trial may either be had on the original complaint, or it is subject to amendment.—Littleton v. Clayton, 77 Ala. 571.

[b] (Ark. 1881) Pleadings before justices, whether written or oral, may be without verification; and, when the transcript is removed to the circuit court on appeal, there is no objection to allowing amendments on the same terms, under the sound discretion of the judge.—Shinn v. Tucker, 37 Ark. 580.

[c] (Cal. 1868) Where a suit brought in a justice's court to recover a personal judgment for taxes is removed to the district court, the complaint may be amended in that court, so as to ask both a personal judgment and also one against the real estate on which the taxes were levied.—People v. Nelson, 36 Cal. 375.

[d] (Conn. 1863) A case appealed from a justice of the peace comes to the higher court as an original one, unaffected by the pleadings below, except as to preliminary pleas that may have been waived in the court below.—Phelps v. Hurd, 31 Conn. 444.

[e] (Ga. 1894) After defendant in a suit on a note, brought and tried in a justice's court, has established in that court the defense of payment, failure to reduce the defense to writing before the jury is stricken in the superior court to try an appeal taken by plaintiff will not preclude the filing of a proper plea of payment then tendered, unless it appears that some injustice will be done plaintiff by allowing the plea to be filed, but, where it appears that the same defense sought to be set up by the plea was litigated in the justice's court, it is error not to permit the plea to be filed.—Booz v. Battey, 94 Ga. 669, 21 S. E. 848.

[f] (Ind. 1857) The general issue, by statute in justice cases, in the absence of a special plea, remains on appeal.—Chapman v. Clevinger, 10 Ind. 23.

[g] (Iowa, 1860) On appeal from a justice's court, the appellant cannot set up by a new pleading a question not raised upon the pleadings below.—Craine v. Fulton, 10 Iowa, 457.

[gg] (Mich. 1872) Comp. Laws, §§ 3859, 3860, authorizing a dismissal of an appeal from a justice's court for want of jurisdiction, and proceeding as if it had not been taken, construed not to apply where the appeal record has been varied in the circuit court, as by filing a new declaration.—Fowler v. Pixley, 25 Mich. 513.

[h] (Mich. 1889) On appeal to the circuit court from the judgment of a justice in assumpsit brought on a verbal declaration, it is not error to permit the filing of a written declaration by way of amendment.—Ziegler v. Henry, 77 Mich. 480, 43 N. W. 1018.

[i, j] (N. M. 1883) Act 1876, relating to justices of the peace, contains 125 sections. Sections 48 to 55 relate to actions of replevin. Section 120 provides that in all causes removed into the district court "the courts shall allow all amendments which may be necessary in furtherance of justice." Held to apply to actions of replevin.—Martinez v. Martinez, 2 N. M. 464.

[k] (N. C. 1891) On appeals from justice court, under Code, §§ 875, 880, 881, when the return fails to show the pleadings before the justice, the superior court may allow all pleas to be filed to which either party might have been entitled.—Moore v. Garner, 109 N. C. 157, 13 S. E. 768.

[l] (Or. 1892) Under Justices' Code, c. 9, § 80, which prohibits the appellate court from amending pleadings so as to substantially change the issues tried in the justice's court, an allowance by the circuit court of a reply, which raises issues not presented in the justice's court, is ground for reversal.—Currie v. Southern Pac. Co., 21 Or. 566, 28 Pac. 884.

[m] (R. I. 1852) If no pleas are filed in the inferior court, the appellate court will not permit pleas to be filed therein, and the only matter subject to review is the assessment of damages.—Dunn v. Littlefield, 2 R. I. 97.

[n] (Tenn. 1872) A written plea of the two-year statute of limitations, filed in justice's court, may be disregarded on appeal to the circuit court, and the case may be tried on matters in controversy and the three-year statute applicable to it.—Bailey v. Brooks, 58 Tenn. (11 Heisk.) 1.

[o] (Tex. 1884) Where defendant, sued in justice court for the value of a mule, pleaded that plaintiff warranted that a wound which was on the animal would not injure it, and that it afterwards caused its death, he was properly allowed on appeal to amend the pleadings by alleging that after the mule died plaintiff purchased a horse for defendant, the purchase price of which defendant paid, since it did not contain new matter or present a counterclaim or set-off.—Green v. Malone, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 466.

[p] (Tex. 1895) New matter not constituting a new cause of action, which was not pleaded in a justice's court, may be set up by way of amendment on appeal to the county court, under Rev. St. art. 316.—City of Dallas v. McAllister (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 452.

[q] (Tex. 1895) In a suit appealed from the justice's court to the county court, the parties may, under Rev. St. art. 316, plead new matter not pleaded in the justice's court, which would have been admitted had the cause been originally commenced in the county court.—Harrold v. Barwise (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 498.

[r] (Tex. 1895) Rev. St. art. 316, though contained in the chapter relating to certiorari to a justice court, applies equally to appeals from a justice court; and therefore, on such appeals, new matter may be pleaded for the first time.—Gholston v. Ramey (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 713.

[s] (Tex. 1895) On appeal from a justice's court an amended complaint consisting of a tabulated statement of damages claimed, may be supplemented by oral pleading.—D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Ayers (Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 73.

[t] (Wash. 1862) While, on an appeal from a justice's court, the issue before the justice should be tried in the district court without other or new pleadings, unless otherwise directed by the court, still the pleadings may be amended on appeal when by such amendment substantial justice will be promoted.—Newberg v. Farmer, 1 Wash. T. 183.

[u] (Wis. 1851) On appeal from a justice of the peace the appellate court may allow the parties to plead or file new pleadings, where it appears that there was no issue joined before the justice or that the pleadings were oral.—Caughey v. Vance, 3 Chand. 308, 3 Pin. 275.

§ 666 Necessity of new pleadings on appeal.

Waiver of necessity of affidavit of defense, see post, § 691.

[a] (Ala. 1839) On appeal from a justice of the peace, if the demand which is the cause of action exceeds $20, a declaration or statement of the cause of action is necessary.—Steelman v. Owen, 8 Port. 562; Moffitt v. Bragg, 9 Port. 424.

[b] (Ala. 1845) Where, in a cause appealed from a justice of the peace, the judgment of the county court recited that the parties came by their attorneys, and thereupon came a jury, etc., who returned a verdict for the plaintiff, the absence of declaration, plea, and issue furnish no ground for reversal of the judgment.—Bancroft v. Stanton, 7 Ala. 351.

[c] (Ala. 1880) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, a written statement of the cause of action is not necessary.—Abrams v. Johnson, 65 Ala. 465.

[d] (Ala. 1893) Where an action for more than $20 is commenced in justice's court without a sufficient complaint being filed, and it is taken to the circuit court, a judgment for plaintiff by default in the circuit court, without a complaint being filed therein, is erroneous.—Simmons v. Titche, 102 Ala. 317, 14 South. 786.

[e] (Del. 1853) Rule to file a narr. on a plaintiff, against whom there were two returns of non est inventus, on appeal from a justice of the peace.—City of Wilmington v. Hedges, 5 Har. 421.

[f] (Ill. 1878) On appeal from a justice, defendant may, without formal pleadings, urge any defense he may have.—Latham v. Sumner, 89 Ill. 233, 31 Am. Rep. 79.

[g] (Ill. 1885) Upon appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, the case is to be tried de novo upon the proofs offered by the parties, without written pleadings; the circuit court having no other or more extensive power or jurisdiction in disposing of the case than the justice who had tried it below.—Dodge v. People, 113 Ill. 491, 1 N. E. 826.

[h] (Ill. 1894) In cases in the circuit court pending on appeal from a justice's court, defendant, if he wishes to avail himself of a set-off, must file his plea thereof, or give the notice thereof required by statute.—Morgan v. Campbell, 54 Ill. App. 242.

[i] (Ill. 1894) Rev. St. c. 110, § 37, preventing defendant from putting in a plea unless he shall file "with" his plea an affidavit, does not require that defendant file an affidavit on appeal in assumpsit from a justice's court, he having filed no plea at all, as the word "with" is used to denote association in respect of environment, and not simultaneously happening; and, as no plea is filed, nothing can be filed with it, and therefore defendant may defend without filing the affidavit.—Furness v. Helm, 54 Ill. App. 435.

[j] (Ind.) A defense, good, without plea, before a justice, need not be filed on appeal.—(1858) Forgey v. Tucker, 11 Ind. 320; (1858) Helfer v. Jelly, 10 Ind. 382; (1859) Riggs v. Adams, 12 Ind. 199.

[k] (Ind. 1861) The court to which an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace is taken may proceed to trial under the same rules of pleading which are allowed before a justice, and a replication is unnecessary, if not required in the court below.—Carter v. Edwards, 16 Ind. 238.

[l] (Iowa, 1861) Where, on appeal from a justice, the transcript failed to show any denial or pleadings on the part of the defendant, a decision of the district court refusing to allow him to introduce evidence was erroneous.—Weimer v. Linhard, 12 Iowa, 359.

[m] (Kan. 1880) An appeal was made from a justice's court to the district court, and the plaintiff allowed to file an amended petition, which the defendant did not answer within the time allowed him. Held, that it was error to adjudge him in default, as the case could be tried upon the same pleadings as in the justice's court.—Ziegler v. Osborn, 23 Kan. 464.

[n] (Ky. 1826) It is not necessary to file an affidavit, on appeal from a justice, to a plea that impeaches the consideration of a note.—Davis v. Young, 19 Ky. (3 T. B. Mon.) 381.

[o] (Mass. 1879) If a declaration in set-off is seasonably filed in an inferior court, and is transmitted with the other papers in the case to the superior court on appeal, it need not be filed anew in the latter court in order to warrant the admission of evidence in support of it.—Manson v. Arnold, 126 Mass. 399.

[p] (Minn. 1891) Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 117, provides that, on appeal to the district court on questions both of law and fact, the action is to be tried as if originally commenced therein. By Sp. Laws 1889, c. 351, § 28, all laws applicable to appeals to the district courts are made applicable to appeals to the municipal court of St. Paul. Held that, on appeal to such municipal court from a justice of the peace, no reply is necessary where none was necessary before the justice.—Barth v. Horejs, 45 Minn. 184, 47 N. W. 717.

[t] (Pa. 1846) On an appeal from a judgment of an alderman, before whom an action was commenced by scire facias, it is unnecessary to file a declaration, in order to take judgment for want of an affidavit of defense.—Mintzer v. Blight, 3 Clark, 433.

[u] (Pa. 1858) The parties on an appeal from a justice may go to trial without pleadings; and, if they try the case on a declaration in which important averments are left blank, this court will not for such cause reverse, but will treat the case as having been tried without a declaration.—Cunningham v. McCue, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 469.

[v] (Pa. 1876) On an appeal from a justice of the peace, the defendant can be ruled to plead to the transcript of appeal in the same manner as to a declaration, if served with a copy.—Union Transfer Co. v. Copeland, 33 Leg. Int. 391.

Moss, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. 558.

[x] (Pa. 1889) Act May 25, 1887, requiring plaintiff to file a concise statement of his demand, does not apply to appeals from judgments of the justices of the peace.—Lentz v. Sylvester, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 580.

[z] (Vt. 1881) On appeal to the county court from the judgment of a justice of the peace, a new declaration in offset is unnecessary; the pleadings having been correct before the justice.—Proctor v. Wiley, 58 Vt. 406.

§ 667. New or amended pleadings as matter of right.

[a] (Ill. 1843) On appeal from a justice of the peace, the defendant cannot, as a matter of right, in the appellate court demand to file his account for the first time, or to file additional items thereof; but the court may, in its discretion, allow such new or amended account to be filed.—Webb v. Lasater, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 543.

[b] (Ind. 1862) A material amendment, inserted without leave in a complaint after an appeal from a justice's judgment to the circuit court, forms no part of the complaint; and the court should, upon application, tell the jury to allow nothing on it.—Best v. Powers, 19 Ind. 85.

[bb] (Iowa, 1858) After default upon proper service before a justice, and judgment thereupon, the defendant cannot upon appeal file an answer as matter of right.—Ruddick v. Vail, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 44.

[d] (Iowa) While leave may be granted to file new pleadings in the district court on appeal from a justice, upon satisfactory evidence being shown to excuse the omission to plead before the justice, it seems that this cannot be demanded as a matter of right.—(1866) May v. Wilson, 21 Iowa, 79; (1871) Warren v. Scott, 32 Iowa, 22.

[e] (Iowa) While the district or circuit court may, in the exercise of a proper discretion and upon proper showing, allow amendments to pleadings after appeal from a justice of the peace, the parties cannot file them as a matter of right.—(1872) Packard v. Snell, 35 Iowa, 80; (1675) Griswold v. Bowman, 40 Iowa, 367.

[f] (Iowa, 1880) On appeal from a judgment by default before a justice, defendant has an absolute right to file pleadings in the circuit court, under Code 1873, § 3596, which provides in such case that defendant may file "any pleading necessary to properly set forth any defense he may have."—Harty v. D. M. & M. R. Co., 54 Iowa, 327, 6 N. W. 545; Berry v. Same, Id.

[g] (Mo. 1891) Plaintiff in garnishment proceedings before a justice of the peace, having failed to deny the answer of the garnishee within the time provided by statute, is not entitled as a matter of right to make such denial in the circuit court on appeal; and it is not error for the circuit court to refuse plaintiff leave to file a denial, or to strike out such denial after leave has been given to file it.—Blackstone v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 44 Mo. App. 555.

[h] (N. M. 1857) On an appeal from a justice of the peace to the district court, the case is tried de novo on its merits, and the parties may file accounts, set-offs, etc., as if the case had originated in the latter court.—Archibeque v. Miera, 1 N. M. 160.

[i] (N. C. 1895) Pleadings on appeal from a justice are in the discretion of the court, and an adjudication that the matter could be better determined upon the trial de novo upon the original appeal, made on the denial of a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction in the justice, pending an appeal from his judgment, is simply a continuance of the matter to the next regular term of the appellate court, and does not give defendant, who had not before pleaded, the right to plead to the jurisdiction.—Forbes v. McGuire, 116 N. C. 449, 21 S. E. 178.

[j] (Pa. 1884) Where plaintiff, after plea entered on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, amends his declaration, the pleadings are de novo, and defendant may file a plea in abatement at the next term of court.—Hastings v. Hastings, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 77.

in its discretion allow the defendant to amend his answer, and should decide whether or not costs shall abide the event of the suit.—Duke v. Brown, 18 Ind. 111.

[c] (Ind. 1863) On appeals from justices to the common pleas or circuit courts, it is competent for the latter courts, under Code, § 97, to permit amendments to be made to the complaint.—Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Clark, 21 Ind. 150.

[e] (Kan. 1873) An appeal was taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the district court in 1869, in accordance with the law as it then was; but the petition was not filed as required by rule 15 of the supreme court then in force. The trial was had nearly two years after the petition was filed, at which time, after the plaintiff had rested his case, the court allowed the defendant to file an answer, which did not set up anything but what the defendant had a right to prove in the justice's court. The trial then proceeded to a termination; both parties introducing evidence, and neither asking for a continuance. Held, that it was within the discretion of the court below to allow said answer to be filed, and that the court did not err in doing so.—Stevens v. Perrier, 12 Kan. 297.

[f] (Me. 1844) In an action against a town to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff, by reason of a defect in a highway within the town, commenced before a justice of the peace and carried by appeal to the district court, it is competent for that court to order a repleader or an amendment of the pleadings.—Strout v. Inhabitants of Durham, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 483.

[g] (Minn. 1869) After an appeal had been taken, on questions of law and fact, under Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, from a judgment of a justice of the peace, section 107 of that chapter was amended so as to provide, in regard to such appeals, merely that the action should be tried "in the same manner as actions originally commenced in the district court"; the proviso contained in the remaining portion of the section not being re-enacted. Held, that after such amendment the district court had full power to allow an amendment of the pleadings in the case, even though it would change the issue.—Bingham v. Stewart, 14 Minn. 214 (Gil. 153).

[h] (N. M. 1857) If it appears that the justice had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, the district court has a discretion to grant leave to amend the pleadings. A motion in the district court to dismiss the suit, because the complaint is not sworn to and is defective in other particulars, may be denied, and the plaintiff given leave to amend; no objection having been made before the justice on that ground, and plaintiff also offering to correct the defects.—Sanchez v. Luna, 1 N. M. 238.

[i] (N. M. 1857) The district court has the same power, in such a case, to permit the petition filed as an amended cause of action to be sworn to on a subsequent day, where such verification was omitted when it was first filed, as it had to permit the amendment.—Sanchez v. Luna, 1 N. M. 238.

[j] (N. M. 1890) Under Comp. Laws 1884, § 1848, which provides that "all appeals from inferior tribunals to the district courts shall be tried anew in said courts, on their merits, as if no trial had been had below," the district court has the power to allow amendments to the pleadings in a case appealed from a justice of the peace.—Sanchez v. Candelaria, 5 N. M. 400, 23 Pac. 289.

[k] (N. Y. 1855) Neither the supreme nor the county court has any power under the Code to amend the pleading in a case originating in a justice's court.—Gould v. Glass, 19 Barb. 179.

[l] (N. C. 1876) On an appeal from a justice's judgment, the superior court judge may allow a new plea to be entered, on payment of costs, but is not required to do so.—Hinton v. Deans, 75 N. C. 18.

[m, n] (Or. 1896) On appeal from a judgment of a justice, it is within the discretion of the circuit court to refuse to allow the filing of an amended complaint offered there for the first time.—Watson v. Buckler, 29 Or. 235, 45 Pac. 765.

[o] (Vt. 1858) On appeal from a justice, the power of the court to allow amendments which did not change the parties or the nature of the action, is derived from its general power to allow amendments of process and proceedings.—Stevens v. Hewitt, 30 Vt. 262.

[p] (Wash. 1892) Under Hill's Ann. Code, § 1635, providing that on appeals from justices of the peace "the issue shall be tried in the superior court without other or new pleadings, unless otherwise directed by the court," superior courts have discretionary power to permit amendments of pleadings in such cases, and a writ of prohibition will not issue to restrain such court from proceeding to trial of a case brought up on appeal from a justice, wherein the plaintiff was permitted to file an amended affidavit.—State v. Superior Court of King County, 3 Wash. St. 705, 29 Pac. 213.

[q] (Wis. 1851) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the circuit court may, in its discretion, allow the plaintiff to file a new declaration; and in such case the defendant may plead anew.—Caughey v. Vance, 3 Chand. 308, 3 Pin. 275.

[r] (Wis. 1861) After return in a case appealed from a justice's court under Rev. St. c. 120, § 204, the court can direct the defendant to serve and file his answer, and allow the issue to be made up and proceed to trial as in other cases.—Burnham v. Turner, 14 Wis. 622.

[s] (Wis. 1895) An appeal from a justice to the superior court of Milwaukee, under Rev. St. § 3768, is triable as if originally brought there; and the court, under Rev. St. § 2830, can amend the proceedings at any time.—Marlett v. Doctor, 89 Wis. 347, 61 N. W. 1125.

§ 669. Substituting lost pleadings.

[a] (Ala. 1853) In appeal cases from justices of the peace, where judgment was rendered as on issue joined, it is not error to allow the substitution of a lost statement without notice to the defendant.—Ortez v. Jewett, 23 Ala. 662.

[b] (Ill. 1889) On appeal to the county court from the judgment of a justice of the peace, if papers are missing from the record which the transcript shows were filed before the justice, the proper practice is to enter a rule upon the justice to send them up, or, if there is reason to believe that they have been lost or destroyed, plaintiff may be required to furnish copies.—Ritchie v. Village of Warrensburg, 32 Ill. App. 181.

[c] (Mich. 1886) Where it appears on an appeal from a justice's court that the complaint has been lost, it is not error to allow the plaintiff to file a copy to complete the record.—Bauer v. Wasson, 60 Mich. 194, 26 N. W. 877.

[d] (Tex. 1889) Where, on an appeal from the judgment of the justice against a garnishee defendant, it appeared that the original papers have been lost, and no substitution has been made, it was error to proceed to try the cause, since the application under oath for the writ of garnishment is the basis of the proceedings, and is indispensable.—Smissen v. Lee, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 449.

§ 670. Pleading new cause of action.

Waiver of objection to amended pleading setting up new cause of action, see post, § 691.

[a] A complaint in a justice's court cannot on appeal be so amended as to add a new and independent cause of action.

—(Pa. 1887) Depew v. Scism, 3 Del. Co. R. 275;

(Wis. 1895) Carlson v. Stocking, 91 Wis. 432, 65 N. W. 58.

[b] (Ark. 1885) On an appeal from a justice, plaintiff may amend his action by adding a claim which was not included in the original action.—Birmingham v. Rogers, 46 Ark. 254.

[c] (Colo. 1889) Where a statutory action against a railroad company for stock killing is brought before a justice of the peace under Gen. St. c. 93, div. 5, and defendant appeals to the county court, it is error to allow plaintiff to amend in that court by adding a count for damages to grass land caused by fire; that being a new cause of action, and requiring different proof from the statutory action.—Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Sternberg, 13 Colo. 141, 21 Pac. 1021.

[d] (Conn. 1893) Gen. St. § 893, provides that no attachment shall be granted against the body unless each cause of action in the complaint be such that execution may issue against the body of defendant on the judgment founded thereon. Section 1023 allows plaintiff to amend by inserting new counts which might have been originally inserted. Section 879 provides that, on appeal from a justice, either party may amend by introducing any equitable right, cause of action, defense, or set-off. Held, that on appeal from a judgment of a justice for plaintiff in an action in which defendant's body was attached, where no release of the attachment was made, there could not be an amendment by the introduction of a cause of action which would not authorize attachment or execution against the body.—Allen v. Woodruff, 63 Conn. 369, 28 Atl. 532.

[e] (Ill. 1839) Where a case commenced before a justice of the peace is carried to the circuit court, an additional bill of particulars cannot be filed, setting forth other claims, different from those declared on.—Brookbank v. Smith, 3 Ill. (2 Scam.) 78.

[ee] (Ill. 1844) On appeal to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, where plaintiff has been allowed to file and prove additional accounts, such accounts, after the offsets are deducted, must not exceed the original demand indorsed on the process.—Waterman v. Bristol, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 593.

[f] (Ill. 1879) On an appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, no amendment can be permitted which will make an entirely new case against entirely new parties to the record.—Douglas v. Newman, 5 Ill. App. (5 Bradw.) 518.

[g] (Iowa, 1882) Where an action is brought before a justice of the peace, who, under the laws, has no chancery jurisdiction, on an alleged promissory note which omits to mention the amount in the body of the instrument, on appeal to the circuit court it is error to allow an amendment to the petition, stating that the amount was omitted by mistake, and praying that it be inserted; for Code 1873, § 3591, prohibits the introduction of "any new demand" after the case comes into the circuit court.—Hollen v. Davis, 59 Iowa, 444, 13 N. W. 413, 44 Am. St. Rep. 668.

[h] (Kan. 1883) Plaintiff's bill of particulars in an action against a railroad company for killing a cow stated a case at common law, and also under the statute, except that there was an omission to state the want of a fence. Held, that the defect in the bill might be supplied by amendment allowed by the district court after an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in the justice's court.—Kansas City, Ft. Scott & G. R. Co. v. Hays, 29 Kan. 193.

[i] (Mo.) Upon an appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, the case must be tried de novo upon the same cause of action that was tried before the justice, and the plaintiff cannot in the circuit court, by amendment, wholly change the cause of action.—(1838) Smith v. Anthony, 5 Mo. 504; (1867) Clark v. Smith, 39 Mo. 498.

[j] (Mo. 1869) H. commenced an action before a justice of the peace against a railroad company for damages for the killing of stock, and filed a declaration at common law. A trial was had, and judgment rendered in his favor. The defendant appealed, and the plaintiff filed an amended statement under Rev. Code 1855, c. 51, § 5. Held, that there was no error in striking out the amended statement.—Hansberger v. Pacific R. Co., 43 Mo. 196.

[k] (Mo. 1883) Under Rev. St. 1879, § 3060, permitting amendments in the circuit court on appeal from a justice of the peace, where the cause of action is not changed, a statement in an action for killing live stock might be amended so as to bring it plainly under the statute, and show that the killing was in consequence of defendant's failure to fence.—Dryden v. Smith, 79 Mo. 525; King v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 79 Mo. 328.

[l] (Mo. 1884) Rev. St. 1879, § 2851, provides that, before any process shall be issued in a suit before a justice, the plaintiff shall file the instrument sued on, or a statement of the account, or the facts constituting the cause of action. Held that, where no such statement was filed before the justice, an amended statement could not be filed in a circuit court on appeal from the judgment.—Peddicord v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 85 Mo. 160.

[m] (Mo.) Rev. St. § 3060, relating to amendments in the circuit courts on appeals from justices of the peace, will not justify an amendment changing the cause of action.—(1887) Sturges v. Botts, 24 Mo. App. 282; (1888) Rankin v. Fairley, 29 Mo. App. 587.

[n] (Mo. 1888) Rev. St. § 3060, allows a plaintiff to amend his statement in the circuit court after an appeal from a justice "when, by such amendment, substantial justice will be promoted," provided that "no new cause of action not embraced or intended to be included in the original account or statement shall be added by such amendment." Held, that it was proper to allow an amendment when it appeared that the item or cause of action introduced by the amended statement was intended to be embraced in the original statement.—Heman v. Fanning, 33 Mo. App. 50.

[o] (Mo. 1896) Where a statement filed before a justice states a common-law action, it is error to permit it to be amended on appeal so as to state a cause of action under a statute.—Evans v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 67 Mo. App. 255, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 504.

[p] (Ohio, 1876) In a suit before a justice of the peace to recover of the defendant, on his liability as husband, the principal and interest on a note made by his wife before marriage, the plaintiff failed to recover judgment by reason of a divorce decreed between the defendant and his wife before trial. He then appealed to the court of common pleas, and there filed a petition on a special contract, alleging a promise by the defendant to pay a part of the sum due on the note in full satisfaction of the entire note, and upon the performance by the plaintiff of certain conditions precedent. Held, that the court of common pleas acquired no jurisdiction by the appeal to try the new cause of action.—Wilson v. Wilson, 30 Ohio St. 365.

[q] (Ohio, 1878) A petition on an appeal from a justice which states a different cause of action from that tried before the justice should be struck from the files on motion, but with leave to file another petition.—Ballou v. Farnsworth, 4 Ohio Dec. 88, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 17.

[r] (Pa. 1829) The form of action may be sometimes changed; the cause of action, never.—Caldwell v. Thompson, 1 Rawle, 370.

[s] (Pa. 1889) Though on appeal from a justice of the peace to the common pleas in Pennsylvania the proceedings are de novo, the cause of action must remain the same, and, where an action before a justice for killing a horse is changed by amendment in the common pleas into an action for breach of contract in not maintaining a fence along defendant's right of way, a nonsuit is proper.—Reitze v. Meadville & L. Ry. Co., 126 Pa. 663, 17 Atl. 663.

[t] (Tenn. 1865) By section 4177 of the Code, the circuit court has the power and it is its duty to permit an original motion against an officer, brought into court by appeal, to be so amended as to make the suit one as well for the delinquency for which it was brought before the justice, as for all insufficient returns on the same executions.—King v. Breeden, 42 Tenn. (2 Cold.) 455.

[u] (Tex. 1882) Where, after judgment in a justice's court, the case is appealed or taken to the county court by certiorari, the parties cannot plead causes of action or defenses not pleaded in the justice's court.—Curry v. Terrell, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 239.

[v] (Tex. 1885) Where, after appeal from justice court of proceedings to replevin an animal, there is an increase, an amendment by adding a demand for the offspring does not introduce a new cause of action.—Hodges v. Peacock, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 825.

[w] (Tex. 1889) Plaintiff in an action on an account in justice court cannot on appeal set up a cause of action upon a written obligation.—Laing v. St. Louis Type Foundry Co., 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 463.

[x] (Tex. 1890) Where an action is brought in justice's court on a claim for witness fees, independent of the judgment in the case in which the fees accrued, no amendment is allowable on appeal to the county court, whereby it is sought to recover under and by virtue of the judgment.—Ballard v. Murphy (App.) 15 S. W. 42.

[y] (Tex. 1892) Plaintiff sued in a justice's court on an open account for rent. The justice rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed to the county court. In the latter court plaintiff filed an amended petition, alleging that defendant had given a note in liquidation of the account; that the note had been lost after maturity, while plaintiff was the legal owner and holder thereof; that the balance due on the note was $125; and that it was given for the same debt as that stated in the account on which the suit was originally based. Held, that the amendment did not set up a new cause of action, since the debt, the amount, and the transaction were the same.—Roe v. Holbert (App.) 18 S. W. 417.

§ 671. Dismissal of part of cause of action.

[a] (Mo. 1886) Plaintiff may dismiss a part of his cause of action, notwithstanding the statute which requires that the same case which was tried before the justice shall be tried on appeal.—Gerber v. McCoy, 23 Mo. App. 295.

[b] (N. C. 1880) Plaintiff brought suit before a justice of the peace, claiming a debt of $50, and also possession of a horse and wagon under a certain mortgage. On appeal from the justice's judgment to the superior court, plaintiff offered to remit his claim for the personal property, and declare only for the debt. Held, that he had a right to take such a course, in his discretion, and that the court erred in denying him that privilege.—Jones v. Palmer, 83 N. C. 303.

[c] (N. C. 1894) In an action against R. and D. before a justice, the summons stated the cause of action to be for nonpayment of $70.80 "due by account and contract." The justice's return on appeal stated that plaintiff claimed $70.80 for breach of contract in not delivering tobacco bought of R., and asked to subject that sum out of the proceeds of the tobacco in the hands of D., to whom R. had sold it. Held, that the superior court properly allowed an amendment submitting only the issue as to whether there was a breach of contract by R., and, if so, plaintiff's damages.—Starke v. Cotton, 115 N. C. 81, 20 S. E. 184.

§ 672. Increasing amount demanded.

[a] (Ark. 1881) Under Gantt's Dig. § 4616, an affidavit in replevin may, on appeal from a justice to the circuit court, be amended so as to enlarge the damages.—Hanf v. Ford, 37 Ark. 544.

[b] (Ill. 1844) On appeal to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the court may, in its discretion, allow amendments, not only of the appeal bond, but also of the original accounts filed in the case, and either party may file additional accounts upon such terms as the court may direct.—Waterman v. Bristol, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 593.

[c] (Ind. 1866) Where a case has been appealed from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, it is not error to allow the plaintiff in the latter court to amend his complaint by increasing the amount of his demand, provided it is not increased to an amount beyond the jurisdiction of the justice.—Miller v. Beal, 26 Ind. 234.

[d] (Ky. 1860) On appeal from the decision of a justice, a plaintiff is not authorized to increase the amount of his demand. The same cause of action must be tried anew, and a new action is not to be substituted.—Burbage v. Squires, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 77.

[dd] (Mich. 1889) Where, on appeal from a justice, defendant objected to the admission of evidence because no bill of particulars had been filed, it was not error to permit a bill of particulars to be filed for a larger amount than the one in the justice's court when the amount claimed was no greater.—McDonald v. Weir, 76 Mich. 243, 42 N. W. 1114.

[e] (Miss. 1877) In trespass for the recovery of the statutory penalty for cutting trees, an itemized bill of particulars filed in the justice's court, embracing three trees, may, under Code, § 621, be amended in the circuit court by adding two trees.—McCleary v. Anthony, 54 Miss. 708.

[f] (Mo. 1886) Where a transcript from a justice of the peace shows that the case was tried before him on an account showing a balance of a certain sum, plaintiff cannot amend his cause of action on the appeal in the circuit court by filing an account showing a balance of a larger sum.—Wehringer v. Ahlemeyer, 23 Mo. App. 277.

[g] (Mo. 1887) Where the recovery before the justice was for the amount sued for, under a statement showing quantity and price of the goods sold, the plaintiff cannot so amend his statement in the circuit court as to enable him to recover a judgment for more than double that amount.—Boughton v. St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Ry. Co., 25 Mo. App. 10.

[h] (N. Y. 1889) On an appeal from a justice of the peace the court cannot allow an amendment demanding judgment for more than $50, so as to entitle appellant to a new trial, as allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 3068, where more than that sum is demanded by the pleadings of either party, as the case must be disposed of on the pleadings as they left the trial court.—Longrill v. Downey (Super. Buff.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 503.

[i] (Ohio, 1876) Where, on appeal from a justice's judgment, items not appearing in the bill of particulars are added to the petition without leave, a judgment by default for the full amount is erroneous.—Hannon v. Tallman, 7 Ohio Dec. 45, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 79.

[j] (Tex. 1884) On appeal from the judgment of a justice on a suit based on an account containing four items, the plaintiffs will not be allowed in the county court to amend their claim by adding another item.—Texas & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Melear, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 457.

[k] (Tex. 1885) On appeal from a justice court in an action for damages for breach of warranty, an amendment to the complaint adding an additional item of damages arising from the breach is permissible.—Cullers v. Wilson, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 818.

[l] (Tex. 1887) Where plaintiff sued in justice court for the amount due on a promissory note, and obtained judgment, he cannot on appeal amend his claim by claiming 10 per cent. of the amount of the note for collection expenses, as stipulated therein, since it presents a new cause of action.—Hendricks v. Cameron, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 261.

[m] (Tex. 1890) In an action for damages to a horse and wagon caused by collision with a street car, the pleadings may be amended on appeal from a justice of the peace to the county court so as to claim, as additional damages, the full value of the horse, which had died, and other expenses accrued since the trial in the justice court.—North Side St. Ry. Co. v. Want (App.) 15 S. W. 40.

[n] (Wis. 1895) A complaint in a justice's court cannot, on appeal to the superior court, be so amended as to increase the amount of damages claimed.—Carlson v. Stocking, 91 Wis. 432, 65 N. W. 58.

[o] (Wis. 1896) Under Rev. St. § 2896, providing that the relief granted plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint, where, in a replevin suit commenced in justice court, defendant, after appeal of plaintiff to the circuit court, withdrew his answer, plaintiff was not entitled to amend his complaint (which, by section 3739, is the affidavit) so as to increase the amount alleged therein as the value of property, and to judgment, in case of nondelivery of the property, to the amount of the amended complaint.—Geer v. Holcomb, 92 Wis. 661, 66 N. W. 796.

§ 673. Pleading matters not within jurisdiction of justice.

Pleading set-off or counterclaim beyond justice's jurisdiction, see post, § 678.

[a] As, in an action of trespass, appealed from a justice of the peace, the issues to be tried are those joined in the justice's court, it is not error for the appellate court to refuse to allow defendant to amend his plea of the general issue by setting up title to the locus in quo in himself.

(N. H. 1834) Flagg v. Gotham, 7 N. H. 266; (1851) Johnson v. Gould, 23 N. H. (3 Fost.) 251.

[b] (Conn. 1892) On appeal from a justice of the peace all the counts on which the case has been tried cannot be stricken out, and a count substituted which is not within the jurisdiction of the lower court.—Colvin v. Peck, 62 Conn. 155, 25 Atl. 355.

[c] (Ky. 1825) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, plaintiff cannot, without defendant's consent, file a declaration on a cause different from that set up in the warrant of the justice, and of which the justice would have no jurisdiction.—Kirk v. Williams' Ex'x, 18 Ky. (2 T. B. Mon.) 135.

[d] (Mo. 1888) Rev. St. § 3060, relating to amendments in the circuit courts on appeals from justices of the peace, will not justify an amendment giving jurisdiction over the subject not had by the justice when the suit was instituted.—Rankin v. Fairley, 29 Mo. App. 587.

§ 674. Increasing demand beyond jurisdiction of justice.

Increasing demand beyond justice's jurisdiction as release of surety on appeal bond, see post, § 741.

Waiver of objections to amended pleading setting cause beyond justice's jurisdiction, see post, § 691.

[a] Where the district court acquires jurisdiction on appeal from justice's court upon law and fact, the trial proceeds de novo, and the appellate court may allow an amendment of the complaint increasing the amount of plaintiff's claim beyond that to which the jurisdiction of the justice is limited.

[b] (Ind. 1846) Under statutory restrictions limiting the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in cases of tort to $20 where the cause of action set forth in the declaration in a justice's court is a tort, and on appeal to the circuit court the declaration is so amended that the aggregate of damages claimed is $100, the court has no jurisdiction.—White Water Val. Canal Co. v. Boden, 8 Blackf. 130.

[c] (Ind. 1848) Justices of the peace have not jurisdiction of an action of tort where the claim is for $100 or more; and where the claim was for a less sum than $100 before the justice of the peace, and afterwards, in the circuit court, the plaintiff amended his writ and claimed $100, it was held that the process was void ab initio.—White Water Val. Canal Co. v. Dow, Smith, 62.

[d] (Ind. 1863) The court of common pleas on appeal from a justice's decision may authorize an amendment increasing the amount sought to be recovered, though it be enlarged beyond $100, and may make the proper order respecting costs, and also as to the defendant's reforming his defense.—Bogys v. Near, 20 Ind. 395.

[e] (Ind. 1873) Error in overruling a motion to dismiss an action instituted before a justice of the peace, made after the amendment of the complaint in the circuit court by which the amount demanded exceeds the jurisdiction of a justice, cannot be cured by an offer to remit the excess of the judgment over the amount claimed before the justice.—Pritchard v. Bartholomew, 45 Ind. 219.

[f] (Ind. 1873) A motion by defendant to dismiss the action on the ground that the amount claimed is beyond the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, made pending an appeal in the circuit court from a justice's judgment, after plaintiff has, by leave of court, filed a second paragraph to his complaint, demanding judgment for $300, should be sustained, under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 576, § 67, providing that on appeal from a justice's judgment the cause shall be tried under the same rules and regulations prescribed for trials before justices.—Pritchard v. Bartholomew, 45 Ind. 219.

[g, h] (Kan. 1884) The district court, on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, cannot allow claims to be presented which would bring the amount in controversy up to a sum greater than that within the jurisdiction of the justice.—Wagstaff v. Challiss, 31 Kan. 212, 1 Pac. 631.

[i, j] (Miss. 1856) The rule that the circuit court, upon appeal from a justice of the peace, has no other jurisdiction than the justice of the peace had, does not preclude the circuit court from consolidating cases arising upon the same facts and coming before it by appeal, although the aggregate amount in suit exceeds the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Ammons v. Whitehead, 31 Miss. 99.

[k] (Neb. 1882) Where, pending an appeal in replevin to the district court, the property in controversy has materially increased in value, the appellate court may allow the petition to be amended so as to show the increased value, and the appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that the value of the property had increased to an amount which was beyond the jurisdiction of the justice's court, from which the appeal was taken.—Deck v. Smith, 12 Neb. 389, 11 N. W. 852.

[l] (N. Y. 1888) Code Civ. Proc. § 3071, relative to appeals from justices' to county courts, provides that, after the expiration of 10 days from the filing of the justice's return, the action is to be deemed an action at issue in the county court, and all the proceedings therein are the same as if the action had been commenced in the county court. Section 348 confers upon the county court the same jurisdiction, power, and authority over actions which the supreme court possesses. Held, that the county court has power, on the trial of an action appealed from a justice's court, to allow an amendment of the complaint increasing the demand for judgment from $200 to $1,000.—Simpson v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co., 48 Hun, 113.

[m] (Ohio, 1871) In an action commenced in justice court, it is error, on appeal to the common pleas, to allow plaintiff to amend his account so as to increase it beyond a sum that would have been within the justice's jurisdiction, since without consent of the parties, the appellate court is only authorized to allow such an amendment as might have been allowed by the justice.—Bickett v. Garner, 21 Ohio St. 659.

[n] (Pa.) On appeal to the common pleas from a judgment of a justice of the peace the amount demanded by plaintiff cannot be increased beyond the limits of the justice's jurisdiction, except so far as to embrace interest accruing after the suit is brought.—(1881) Linton v. Vogel, 98 Pa. 457; (1893) Shaw v. Squires, 153 Pa. 150, 26 Atl. 252.

[o] (Pa. 1887) On appeal from the judgment of an alderman, the declaration cannot be amended so as to recover damages in excess of the jurisdiction of the alderman.—Depew v. Seism, 3 Del. Co. R. 275.

[p] (Tex. 1881) An appeal by plaintiff from a justice's court will not be dismissed because he filed an amendment increasing his demand to an amount exceeding the jurisdiction of the justice's court.—Ross v. Anderson, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1032.

[q] (Wis. 1875) In general, on appeal from a judgment of a justice's court the jurisdiction of the circuit court is limited to that of the justice; and, although an increase of the claim for damages beyond the amount of a justice's jurisdiction may be made by leave of the court, yet without leave the general rule governs.—Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216.

[c] (Colo. 1883) The dissolution of an attachment by the county court, on appeal from a justice's court, on the ground that the property attached was exempt from such process, was not error, where defendant's claim of exemption was made in the form of an affidavit describing the property, and reciting the taking thereof under the writ in question, though no notice of the filing of such affidavit was given to plaintiff, and though such claim was made after defendant had traversed the attachment on other grounds, as the trial in the county court was de novo, in which such claim was a legitimate matter of defense.—Bassett v. Onman, 7 Colo. 270, 3 Pac. 383.

[d] (Colo. 1886) Upon appeal from a justice's court to the county court, defendant asked leave to file his affidavit denying the genuineness of the signatures to the notes upon which the judgment had been obtained, which defense he did not make before the justice. The county court denied the application. Held error, as there are no pleadings in cases appealed from justices of the peace, and the affidavit properly raised the issue of the genuineness of the signatures.—Assig v. Pearsons, 9 Colo. 587, 13 Pac. 719.

[e] (Conn. 1795) Where, in an action of trespass in justice court, defendant sets up a plea of title, he cannot on appeal amend his plea to set up another defense.—Matson v. Meach, 1 Root, 344.

[f] (Fla. 1853) There being no time limited within which a plea denying the execution of a bond, note, or other writing sued upon shall be filed in a justice's court, it may be filed on the entry of the appeal in the circuit court.—Davis v. Fitchett, 5 Fla. 261.

[g] (Ga. 1842) On appeal from a justice in actions on several notes, the defendant will not be allowed to set up the defense in superior court that the notes were all given as consideration of the same contract, where it was not set up as a defense below.—Jack v. Watson, Ga. Dec. 168, pt. 1.

[h] (Ill. 1845) Where the defense of usury was not set up at the trial before a justice of the peace, in an action on a promissory note it is too late to allege it in the appellate court, after a motion to dismiss the case has been overruled.—Bates v. Bulkley, 7 Ill. (2 Gilman) 389.

[i] (Ind.) A defense filed before a justice of the peace cannot be amended in substance, nor essentially varied, on an appeal.—(1832) Nelson v. Zink, 3 Blackf. 101; (1834) Bastion v. Dalrymple, Id. 365.

[j] (Iowa, 1853) The defense of tender, not having been urged before a justice of the peace, is inadmissible on appeal in the district court.—Johnson v. Triggs, 4 G. Greene, 97.

[k] (Iowa, 1883) On appeal from a justice's court, the circuit court may allow an answer to be so amended as to set up a defense of payment not pleaded before the justice; payment being neither a new demand nor a counterclaim, in contemplation of Code, 1873, § 3591.—St. Louis Type Foundry v. Medes, 60 Iowa, 525, 15 N. W. 424.

[l] (Minn. 1861) Since a justice of the peace has nothing to do with actions or defenses of a purely equitable nature, a party sued before a justice, and having an equitable defense, may appeal to the district court, and then interpose his equities by way of answer, as if the suit had been originally brought there, the refusal of the court to permit him to set up such a defense does not enable him to make his equities the subject of another action.—Fowler v. Atkinson, 6 Minn. 503 (Gil. 350).

[m] (Mo. 1885) On appeal from the decision of the justice of the peace, defendant cannot set up equitable defenses.—Gruenewald v. Schaales, 17 Mo. App. 324.

[n] (Mo. 1887) Where a justice of the peace treats a plea in abatement in an attachment suit as one to the merits, defendant's remedy is by appeal from the final judgment, when the cause will be tried de novo in the circuit court, and defendant will be allowed to file an amended affidavit or to plead in that court.—Hubbard v. Quisenberry, 28 Mo. App. 20.

[o] (N. J. 1870) A defendant in an action of trespass, brought in the New Jersey court for the trial of small causes, pleaded liberum tenementum, and, on judgment being given against him, took an appeal to the supreme court, where he pleaded justification by right of private way. Held, that the defendant was not confined, in the supreme court, to precisely the same plea filed before the justice; he was only restricted to a plea of title. And it was immaterial that the title set up before the justice was to the soil and freehold, and in the supreme court to an easement therein.—Hawk v. Segraves, 34 N. J. Law (5 Vroom) 355.

[p] (N. Y. 1804) Where defendant in an action of trespass commenced before a justice of the peace under the "act for the more speedy recovery of debts to the value of twenty-five dollars" (1 Rev. Laws, p. 491) relies on his title, he admits the trespass, and cannot, on moving the cause into the supreme court, plead the general issue.—Strong v. Smith, 2 Caines, 28.

[q] (N. Y. 1864) Where a case is in the county court on appeal from a justice, and the new trial, under Code, § 366, subd. 3, is of the issues of fact joined in the justice court, and the action below was for money due, and the answer was a general denial, defendant cannot amend so as to set up payment.—Savage v. Cock, 17 Abb. Prac. 403.

[r] (N. Y. 1878) Under Code, § 366, subd. 5, authorizing the county court, upon an appeal from a justice's court, to allow either party to amend his pleading upon such terms as shall be just, in cases where a new trial may be had in that court, the court cannot allow an answer interposed in the justice court, consisting of a general denial, to be amended by inserting therein new and affirmative defenses.—Reno v. Millspaugh, 14 Hun, 229.

[s] (N. Y. 1886) A defendant in a district court filing a general denial in an action to recover rent and for money expended on defendant's account cannot so amend his answer on appeal to the court of common pleas as to allege payment.—Fagan v. Poor, 11 Civ. Proc. R. 220.

[t] (Or. 1892) Under Hill's Code, § 2130, which prohibits the appellate court from allowing amendment of pleadings so as to change the issues tried in the justice's court, where a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint is reversed on appeal defendant is not entitled to answer.—Forbis v Inman, Paulson & Co., 23 Or. 68, 31 Pac. 204.

[u] (Or. 1893) Laws 1893, p. 88, authorizing the substitution of formal pleadings on appeal from justice's court when required by the court or either party, does not change the established rule of practice prohibiting the filing of amendments or new pleadings changing the issues on which the case was tried below; and where a demurrer to a complaint or bill of items was sustained by the justice, but overruled on appeal, the defendant is not entitled to answer.—Waggy v. Scott, 29 Or. 386, 45 Pac. 774.

[uu] (Tex. 1877) A meritorious defense is as available on an appeal from a justice's court, in which the service was defective, as it would be if the case was remanded to the justice's court.—Boaz v. Paddock, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 40.

[v] (Tex. 1883) The law precluding a defendant from pleading a set-off or counterclaim on an appeal from a justice's court, if it was not pleaded in such court, does not preclude him from first making an affidavit denying the correctness of an account sued on, after an appeal.—Texas & P. [vv] (Tex. 1884) Where the defendant in justice court in an action on a promissory note pleads failure of consideration, and then abandons the plea, he cannot upon appeal rely upon it in the county court.—Rush v. Lester, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 442.

[w] (Tex. 1885) In an action on an injunction bond given upon enjoining the sale of property under execution, defendant cannot, on appeal, claim that the property levied upon was exempt, when such defense was not presented in the justice court.—Bridges v. [ww] (Tex. 1891) Suit was brought in justice's court on this writing: "In regard to the Woodale reaper. I will keep the reaper, and will pay all on it I agreed to pay, which is $120. I will not go back on a fair trade on account of the weather. I want you to come Monday, and set it up for me." In the county court the defendant pleaded orally that he did not agree absolutely to buy the reaper, but only to take and pay for it when it was made to run by the plaintiff. Held that, this plea not having been made in justice's court, it could not be made in the county court on appeal.—McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Slover (App.) 16 S. W. 105.

[x] (Tex. 1893) Under the rule that on appeal to the county court the trial shall be de novo, subject only to the limitation that plaintiff can set up no new cause of action—or defendant, any set-off or counterclaim—not pleaded in the court below, in an action for wrongful seizure, on execution against another, of property alleged to have been transferred to plaintiff, the fact that, in the justice's court, defendant relied on the evidence that there was no such transfer, did not prevent him from showing in the county court that if there was a transfer it was fraudulent and void.—Milam v. [xx] (Tex.) Under 1 Sayles' Civ. [y] (Tex. 1895) The plea of payment may be pleaded, on appeal from a justice court, for the first time in the district court, under Rev. [yy] (Tex. 1895) Under Rev. St. art. 316 (providing that no counterclaim can be pleaded in the county court unless it had been relied on in the justice's court), in an action for a balance due on contract for pasturing cattle, defendant cannot, in the county court, for the first time set up a claim for breach of such contract, and an agreement that, if plaintiff violated the contract, he would forfeit his pasturage.—Good v. Caldwell, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 515, 33 S. W. 243.

[z] (Tex. 1895) In an action commenced in the justice court for loss of goods consigned to a railroad company for shipment over its own and connecting lines, defendant may, for the first time on appeal to the county court, deny an allegation of partnership between it and the connecting roads.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Crossman, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 622, 33 S. W. 290.

[zz] (Tex. 1896) Under Rev. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co., 12 Tex. Civ. App. 446, 34 S. W. 1055.

[b] (Colo. 1896) A party who has defaulted in justice court cannot, on appeal, interpose a plea raising a new issue, to oust the county court of its jurisdiction on the ground that the justice had no jurisdiction, though such plea if raised below, would have been good.—Hamill v. Paxton, 36 Minn. 532, 32 N. W. 749.

[j] (Tex. 1894) On appeal to the district court from a judgment by default in a justice's court, defendant may plead a general denial, as the cause is to be tried de novo, under Rev. St. art. 316, prohibiting the pleading of new causes of action, set-offs, and counterclaims.—St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Denson, 26 S. W. 265.

[k] (Tex. 1894) On appeal from a justice to the county court, defendant may rely on the general denial in the county court, though he made no plea in the justice court.—McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Slover (Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 1054.

(Vt. 1826) Martin v. Blodget, 1 Aikens, 375;
(1876) Hopkins v. Town of Elmore, 49 Vt. 176.

[b] (Ala. 1874) Where a plea in abatement in a justice's court was waived because not filed at the first term at which the case stood for trial, the right to plead it could not be revived on appeal.—Noles v. Marable, 50 Ala. 366.

[c] (Ala. 1893) On appeal from justice's court to city court, defendant cannot set up the summons, complaint, and judgment in the justice's court, and plead in abatement, as the case is to be tried de novo.—McConnell v. Worns, 102 Ala. 587, 14 South. 849.

[d] (Ga. 1842) Where the defendant in an action in justice's court intends to rely on a former recovery, he must plead it in the justice's court in order to make it available on appeal.—Jack v. Watson, Ga. Dec. 168, pt. 1.

[e] (Ind. 1875) Where, in an action for the recovery of the possession of personal property before a justice of the peace, there has been a trial without any answer filed or objection made by the defendant, upon appeal to the circuit court an answer alleging the justice's want of jurisdiction, because the replevin bond filed before him was executed on Sunday, is bad on demurrer.—Davis v. Brinker, 50 Ind. 25.

[f] (Iowa, 1867) It is not error, on an appeal from a justice, to allow the defendant to amend his answer and plead a former adjudication not pleaded below.—Nettman v. Schramm, 23 Iowa, 521.

[g] (Mo. 1862) Upon appeal from a justice in an attachment suit the defendant may in the circuit court plead in abatement of the attachment, although he may have defended upon the merits before the justice. Rev. Code 1855, p. 975.—Phillips v. Bliss, 32 Mo. 427.

[h] (Mo. 1896) In an attachment proceeding commenced before a justice of the peace, where there is no trial on the merits, but on a plea in abatement, a mere omission to note the plea on the justice's docket will not preclude the circuit court from permitting defendant to file a formal plea in that court.—Robinson v. Taylor, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1180.

[i, j] (Tex. 1894) One who, in an action in justice's court, does not plead the statute of limitations, cannot do so on appeal to the district court.—Pickett v. Edwards, 25 S. W. 32.

[k] (Tex. 1894) The fact that, after the filing by defendant of a plea to the venue in a justice court, the case was continued by consent, was not ground for striking out such plea when again made on defendant's appeal to the county court.—Mahoney v. Cope (Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 157.

[l] (Tex. 1895) In a suit on a note which shows on its face that it was barred, brought in a justice's court, where defendant pleaded payment only, the defense of limitation is new matter, and is not too late because pleaded by special exception for the first time in the district court on appeal from the justice's judgment in favor of plaintiff.—Nunn v. Edmiston, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 502, 29 S. W. 1115.

[b, c] (Mich. 1889) Where, on appeal from a justice, plaintiff had been permitted to file a bill of particulars for a larger amount than one before the justice, though claiming no more, it was not error to give defendant time to file a set-off except on payment of costs.—McDonald v. Weir, 76 Mich. 243, 42 N. W. 1114.

[d] (Miss. 1874) Where, on appeal from the judgment of a justice, defendant obtained leave to file a set-off not filed in the justice's court, it was not error, under Rev. Code, §§ 1305, 1306, 1334, to refuse to permit any proof to be offered in support of the set-off.—Marx v. Trussell, 50 Miss. 498.

[e] (Neb. 1892) Where defendant, in an action before a justice of the peace, failed to appear on the day to which the cause was continued, he cannot on appeal plead a counterclaim.—Carr v. Luscher, 35 Neb. 318, 53 N. W. 144.

[g] (Ohio, 1852) Where an action is appealed from a justice of the peace to the common pleas, defendant can only prosecute a counterclaim in the latter court in such sum as that of which the former had jurisdiction, unless the plaintiff answers such counterclaim, or in some other way submits to the jurisdiction.—Bill Pub. Co. v. Curtis, 1 Ohio Dec. 476.

[h] (Pa. 1828) Where defendant, sued in a justice court, first pleaded a set-off after plaintiff's appeal from the judgment of the justice, the jurisdiction of the appellate court is not limited to that of the justice, but it has jurisdiction of the set-off, though the justice had not.—Boone v. Boone, 17 Serg. & R. 386.

[j] (Pa. 1865) In an action on a book account before a justice of the peace, a note exceeding $100 (the extent of the magistrate's jurisdiction) was offered in defalcation. On appeal by the defendant the plaintiff filed his statement and copy of book entries, against which, in his affidavit of defense, the defendant claimed to defalcate his note. Held, that proceedings on appeal were not de novo as to jurisdiction, and that therefore the entry of judgment in the common pleas for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense was not error.—Walden v. Berry, 48 Pa. (12 Wright) 456.

[k] (Pa. 1888) Where, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, defendant in the appellate court pleads as a set-off a contract of which a justice has not jurisdiction, the appellate court acquires none.—Deihm v. Snell, 119 Pa. 316, 13 Atl. 283.

[l] (Tenn. 1837) Upon an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the circuit court, the defendant may, in the latter court, prove his account by his own oath, as an offset, though he did not make, or offer to make, such defense before the justice.—Clark v. St. art. 316, in an action in a justice's court, to which a counterclaim has been filed, and judgment rendered in the whole case, and an appeal taken to a district court, the party filing the counterclaim will not be allowed in the latter court to enlarge the counterclaim, by adding items of damages not embraced in the pleadings in the justice's court, which amounted to a sum greater than the justice's court would have jurisdiction of.—Boudon v. Gilbert, 67 Tex. 689, 4 S. W. 578.

[n] (Tex. 1893) Rev. St. art. 316, prohibiting any set-off or counterclaim from being set up in the county court which was not pleaded in the justice's court, in cases brought up by certiorari, applies also to cases brought up by appeal.—Downtain v. Connellee, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 95, 21 S. W. 56.

[o] (Tex. 1894) On appeal from a justice's judgment an answer cannot be amended so as to set up in reconvention an amount in excess of a justice's jurisdiction.—Ostrom v. Tarver (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 701.

[p] (Vt. 1842) Where, in book account before a justice, the debit side of defendant's account exceeds $100, and he appeals to the county court, he may there plead his account in offset to plaintiff's, though he could not have done so before the justice.—Temple v. Bradley, 14 Vt. 254.

[q] (Wis. 1870) Under Laws 1864, c. 262, providing for appeals from a justice of the peace, the circuit court has power to allow an amendment of the answer setting up a counterclaim, although amendment has been refused by the justice.—Richardson v. Chynoweth, 26 Wis. 656.

[n] (Ind. 1873) If a judgment has been rendered by a justice of the peace, and, before an appeal has been taken by the defendant, the plaintiff assigns the judgment on the docket of the justice, a motion made by the defendant in the court to which he appeals to dismiss the cause as to the original plaintiff, and to substitute the assignee, should be overruled.—Peterman v. Ott, 45 Ind. 224.

[o] (Ind. 1877) The circuit court, on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, may properly allow the complaint to be amended by changing the name of the plaintiff to correspond with his name as given in the appeal bond.—Hayden v. Souger, 56 Ind. 42, 26 Am. Rep. 1.

[rr] (Mo. 1875) Where suit before a justice is brought in the name of a firm, the cause may be amended on appeal in the circuit court by inserting the names in full of the members composing the firm. This is not the introduction of any new parties, and does not change the cause of action, within the meaning of the statute.—Beattie v. Hill, 60 Mo. 72.

[s] (Mo. 1885) Nothing in the statutes before or since the revision of 1879 permits the bringing in of other parties by amendment on appeal from a justice's court.—Thieman v. Goodnight, 17 Mo. App. 429.

[ss] (Mo. 1889) In an action in a justice's court for the price of a cow, the defense was false representations by plaintiff as to the cow's condition, and the evidence showed that both parties dealt with each other in proper person. On appeal to the circuit court, defendant filed an application to be made a defendant as administrator of the partnership estate of himself and another, who was his partner at the time of the purchase. Held, that it was proper to overrule the application; for, if granted, the effect would have been to deprive the court of jurisdiction, for the reason that under Rev. St. 1879, § 2837, justices of the peace are not permitted to try causes against an administrator.—Ingalls v. Averitt, 34 Mo. App. 371.

[t] (Mo. 1891) Rev. Teuscher, 47 Mo. App. 284.

[tt] (N. M. 1857) On appeal from a judgment of the justice the plaintiff may amend his pleadings by striking out some of the defendants if the subject-matter of the controversy remains the same.—Sanchez v. Luna, 1 N. M. 238.

[yy] (Tex. 1891) Where, on appeal from a justice, the defendant pleads nonjoinder of plaintiffs in abatement in the district court, he cannot object to an amendment making the person named in the plea a party plaintiff.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Smith (Sup.) 16 S. W. 803.

[e] (Ky. 1879) Under Code, § 726, allowing trial de novo on appeal from a justice's judgment, the appellee may file an amendment to his demand after such appeal has been taken; this going to the form, rather than to the substance.—Puff v. Huchter, 78 Ky. 146.

[f] (Mich. 1894) How. Ann. St. § 9035, prohibits justices and others from taking greater than legal fees. Section 9037 makes them liable for treble damages to the person aggrieved, and section 9044 requires one receiving official fees, on request, to make out, receipt, and deliver to the payor a particular account of them; otherwise, to be liable to him for thrice the payment. Plaintiff declared orally before a justice on the common counts, and especially for money had and received for official fees, and refusing plaintiff a particular account of them; and, by bill of particulars, alleged money demanded and received by defendant, as justice, for costs in transferring a certain suit against plaintiff pending before him, and recovered judgment for thrice the damages sustained. Held that, on appeal in the circuit court, plaintiff could amend and declare separately on section 9044, this introducing no new cause of action.—Vreeland v. Loeckner, 99 Mich. 93, 57 N. W. 1093.

[g] (N. Y. 1896) A complaint alleging false and fraudulent representations by defendants as to their responsibility, made with intent to deceive plaintiff, whereby he, relying upon such representations, was induced to loan defendants money, taking their note (which was set out in the complaint), is an action for fraud; and therefore, on appeal by defendants to the county court from a judgment of the justice court for plaintiff, plaintiff should not be allowed to recover in contract, on the note.—Smith v. Smith, 4 App. Div. 227, 38 N. Y. Supp. 551.

[h] (Ohio, 1834) In case before a justice for killing a hog, plaintiff, on appeal to the common pleas, may declare in trespass without violating the statutory requirement that the parties shall proceed in the common pleas in all respects and in the same manner as though the suit or action had been originally commenced in said court.—Austin v. Hayden, 6 Ohio (6 Ham.) 388.

Gilchrist, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 470.

[m] (Pa. 1892) On appeal from justice's court in an action to recover for timber sold defendant, plaintiff can amend his pleadings by adding a count on the note given by defendant for the purchase price.—Boner v. Luhman, 148 Pa. 591, 24 Atl. 90, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 110.

[n] (S. C. 1882) A complaint in an action before a trial justice alleged the taking by defendant of plaintiff's personal property, and asked judgment for the thing taken, or for damages "in case such possession cannot be had." The form of the summons was adapted to an action for the recovery of damages, and said nothing about recovering possession of the property. Held, that the plaintiff could elect to treat the case as an action for damages, merely, after appeal to the court of common pleas, in which case no affidavit was necessary that the value of the property did not exceed $100.—Williams v. Irby, 16 S. C. 371.

[o] (Vt. 1848) Where an action upon a promissory note is commenced before a justice, the plaintiff may file a declaration in form of a count for money had and received on appeal.—Town of Fletcher v. Blair, 20 Vt. 124.

by the circuit court to which the case has been appealed, and where the officer's return is to be used in evidence.—Fee v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 58 Mo. App. 90.

[f] (N. C. 1877) Error in one of the initials of defendant's name in a justice's summons, if the right man is served, and is not misled, does not vitiate judgment by default, and may be amended on an appeal.—Clawson v. Wolfe, 77 N. C. 100.

[g] (N. C. 1882) An amendment of a summons in the superior court that would, if made in the justice's court, have given the justice jurisdiction of the action, is properly refused. —Allen v. Jackson, 86 N. C. 321.

[h] (N. C. 1886) The superior court, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, has power to make such amendment to the summons as will show the action to be within the jurisdiction of the court where it originated.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Barrett, 95 N. C. 36.

[i] (N. C. 1894) Where a summons issued by a justice failed to show the amount claimed, the insertion of such amount was properly permitted upon appeal to the superior court, and such amendment was retroactive.—McPhail v. Johnson, 115 N. C. 298, 20 S. E. 373.

§ 682. Making pleading more definite and certain.

[a] (Colo. 1883) In an appeal from a justice court, though there be no written pleadings, a motion for a rule for a more specific bill of particulars should be entertained.—De Lappe v. Sullivan, 7 Colo. 182, 2 Pac. 926; Id., 7 Colo. 184, 2 Pac. 927.

[b] (Miss. 1885) On appeal from an attachment case before a justice of the peace by the judgment defendant, plaintiff should have been allowed to file an itemized account of his demand, the amount of which was stated in his affidavit for attachment.—Boisseau v. Kahn, 62 Miss. 757.

[c] (Mo. 1887) Under Rev. St. § 3060, allowing amendments on appeal from justices' courts to supply deficiencies or omissions in the statement, "when by such amendment substantial justice will be promoted," an amendment in the circuit court which merely amplifies the statement, without changing the cause of action, is properly allowed.—Eubank v. Pope, 27 Mo. App. 463.

[d] (Mo. 1888) In a suit brought before a justice of the peace for a "balance on settlement," it is not error for the circuit court, on appeal, to refuse to strike out an amended statement giving the items of the account, but stating the same balance originally sued for.—Lee v. Dunn, 29 Mo. App. 467.

[e] (Mo. 1890) The statement before a justice of the peace, "For the services of the season of 1887, two mares, balance eighteen dollars," while stating no cause of action, being apparently intended as a statement, is amendable by stating a cause of action on account for the services of a stallion to two mares.—Nutter v. Houston, 42 Mo. App. 363.

[f] (Mo. 1892) Rev. St. 1889, § 6347, provides that amendments may be made in the appellate court to supply any deficiency or omission therein, "but no new item or cause of action not embraced or intended to be included in the original account or statement shall be added by such amendment." Held that, in an action instituted in a justice's court for the price of a buggy and harness, it is proper, on appeal to the circuit court, to permit plaintiff to amend the statement by adding the words "and harness," which had been omitted by oversight.—Huffer v. Riley, 47 Mo. App. 479.

[g] (Mo. 1895) A plaintiff may be permitted, under Rev. St. 1889, § 6347, to amend his statement by more fully stating, without changing, the cause of action, after the case has been appealed to the circuit court.—Green v. Southwest Missouri Electric Ry. Co., 60 Mo. App. 311, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 130.

[h] (Mo. 1895) The statement in an action before a justice of the peace, charging in general terms negligence on the part of defendant railroad company in killing plaintiff's stock, may be amended so as to show specifically of what the negligence consisted.—Norville v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co., 60 Mo. App. 414, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 171.

[i] (Mo. 1895) An amended complaint may be filed in the circuit court on appeal from a judgment of a justice's court where it merely states in a correct and formal manner the true nature of the demand in suit.—Bradley v. Sweiger, 61 Mo. App. 419, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 644.

[j] (N. Y. 1890) Even if a wrongful taking should have been more fully alleged, the county court, on appeal from the justice, has power to allow an amendment to that effect, as such amendment will not introduce a new cause of action.—Button v. Lusk, 57 Hun, 589, 10 N. Y. Supp. 582, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 111.

[k] (Tenn. 1891) Under Mill. & V. Code, § 4952, allowing amendments in cases appealed from a justice of the peace, in a suit by subcontractors to enforce a mechanic's lien, where the warrant embraced, as subject-matter of litigation, both the debt and the lien, an amendment, on appeal to the circuit court, for the purpose of more particularly describing the property, is proper.—Reeves v. Henderson, 90 Tenn. 521, 18 S. W. 242.

[l] (Tex. 1883) Upon appeal from a justice court, a party may be allowed to file a pleading which merely amplifies or amends his cause of action as stated in a general way in his claim affidavit, and which does not set up a new cause of action.—Durham v. Flannagan, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 23.

[m] (Tex. 1894) In an action against a railroad company for injuries to horses from negligence in loading them in defendant's cars, appealed to the district court, the district court, on appeal from a justice, may allow plaintiff to file a trial amendment to his complaint by adding thereto, "defendant then and there being a common carrier of live stock, and then and there receiving said stock to be carried thence to M."—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Herring (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 580.

[n] (Wis. 1863) Where an action comes from a justice's court to the circuit or county court by appeal, in which the complaint is oral, and it is vague and uncertain, the defendant may, if in doubt as to what constitutes the plaintiff's cause of action, require a written complaint sufficiently definite and certain to inform him.—Swineford v. Pomeroy, 16 Wis. 553.

[o] (Wis. 1875) The complaint in justice's court alleged merely that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum for the services of A. M., a qualified teacher, plaintiff's daughter, and a minor. On the trial in the circuit court an amendment was allowed, alleging that such services were rendered in pursuance of a certain described contract, being one which had been put in evidence and relied on throughout the proceedings. Held no error.—Monaghan v. School Dist. No. 1 of Town of Randall, 38 Wis. 100.

§ 683. Amendments as to jurisdictional facts.

[a] (Ark. 1881) An affidavit for attachment in a suit before a justice may be amended during the trial in the circuit court on appeal, no ground of attachment being stated in the amendment that did not exist at the commencement of the suit.—Sherrill v. Bench, 37 Ark. 560.

[b] (Ill. 1875) A plaintiff in replevin has the right to amend his affidavit so as to make it conform to the statute, and the fact that leave was granted to amend it before the justice of the peace, which was not done, affords no reason for refusing leave to amend on appeal.—Kirkpatrick v. Cooper, 77 Ill. 565.

[c] (Ind. 1865) Suit before a justice of the peace to recover the possession of real estate which was alleged to be "unlawfully detained." On appeal to the court of common pleas, pending a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction in the justice of the cause of action, the plaintiff asked leave to amend the complaint, by inserting after "unlawfully" the words "forcibly and with strong hand." Held, that the objection to the jurisdiction of the justice was not waived by the failure to make the objection sooner, and that, as the justice had no jurisdiction of the cause of action made by the complaint, his proceedings were a nullity, and there was nothing to amend in the common pleas.—Kiphart v. Brennemen, 25 Ind. 152.

[d] (Ind. 1877) A motion to dismiss on appeal from a justice to the circuit court is properly overruled where plaintiff, while it is pending, files a substituted and sufficient complaint in the place of the insufficient one upon which the motion was based.—Evansville & C. R. Co. v. Murphy, 59 Ind. 515.

[e] (Ind. 1892) Where an action to recover a penalty for obstructing a highway was commenced in justice court, and the complaint was fatally defective by reason of its failure to allege that the obstruction was "unnecessary and a hindrance to passengers," on appeal to the circuit court it was no abuse of discretion to allow an amendment.—Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. v. Stevenson, 131 Ind. 203, 30 N. E. 1082.

[f] (Mo.) The affidavit of the plaintiff in an action before a justice of the peace under Wag. St. 817, relative to the claim and delivery of personal property, omitted to state that the property claimed "had not been seized under any process, execution, or attachment against the property of the plaintiff." Held, that an amendment to supply the omission could not be made in the circuit court on appeal.—(1875) Gist v. Loring, 60 Mo. 487; (1877) Madkins v. Trice, 65 Mo. 656.

[g] (Mo. 1876) In an action before a justice for the killing of stock, the omission to show in the statement in what township the killing occurred cannot be cured by making an amended statement.—Haggard v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 63 Mo. 302.

[h] (Mo. 1884) Under Rev. St. § 3060, providing that on appeal plaintiff's statement before the justice may be amended to supply any deficiency or omission, where substantial justice will be promoted, but that no new item or cause of action not intended to be included in the original statement shall be added, held that, in an action for double damages for killing stock, the statement might be so amended as to allege that the killing occurred in a township adjoining that in which suit was brought.—Mitchell v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 82 Mo. 106; Kitchen v. Same, Id. 686.

[i] (Mo. 1888) Rev. St. § 3060, which provides that the statement of plaintiff's cause of action may be amended, upon appeal to the appellate court, to supply any deficiency or omission therein, does not authorize the addition of the affidavit in replevin required before the issue of process in the action, where none exists.—Turner v. Bondalier, 31 Mo. App. 582.

[j] (Mo. 1889) On appeal of an action begun before a justice of the peace to foreclose a mechanic's lien, defendant moved to dismiss for want of jurisdiction because the statement contained no averment that before bringing suit plaintiff had filed with the clerk of the circuit court a notice showing when and before what justice such suit would be begun, as required by Rev. St. § 2874. The motion to dismiss was granted, and plaintiff, on request, was allowed to supply the omitted allegation by amendment. Held proper, under Rev. St. § 3060, allowing amendments on appeal from justices of the peace, to supply any deficiency, when by such amendments substantial justice would be promoted.—Fathman & Miller Planing Mill Co. v. Ritter, 33 Mo. App. 404.

[k] (Mo. 1889) In replevin before a justice of the peace, the statement and affidavit contained all the averments required by Rev. St. § 2882, but neither was signed by the plaintiffs, or either of them, though the justice's jurat to the affidavit certified that both had sworn to it. On appeal to the circuit court, and on motion to dismiss for this defect, the evidence showed that plaintiffs had not signed because the justice had advised that it was unnecessary. Held, that the defect was formal, and it was subject to amendment, there being no question of jurisdiction raised; and it was proper to allow plaintiffs to sign the statement, and to overrule the motion to dismiss.—Crum v. Ellis-ton, 33 Mo. App. 591.

[l] (Mo.) Upon an appeal from a justice of the peace, an amendment averring a jurisdictional fact may be made in the circuit court.—(1889) Keltenbaugh v. St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co., 34 Mo. App. 147; (1896) Kincaid v. Griffith, 64 Mo. App. 673, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1135.

[m] (Mo. 1890) In an action of replevin upon appeal the statement and affidavits before the justice, when defective, may be amended, if not absolute nullities.—South Missouri Land Co. v. Jeffries, 40 Mo. App. 360.

[n] (Mo. 1890) The failure of plaintiff to state a jurisdictional fact in an action of replevin begun before a justice of the peace cannot be remedied, under Rev. St. 1879, § 3060, which provides that the statement of plaintiff's cause of action filed before a justice may be amended on appeal to supply any deficiency therein.—Dowdy v. Womble, 41 Mo. App. 573.

[o] (Mo. 1891) In an action under Act March 27, 1888, to recover double the costs of repairs of crossings of public roads over a railroad, on failure of the company to make such repairs after notice, the statement filed before the justice may be amended on appeal in the circuit court, and jurisdictional defects may be supplied by such amendment, so long as the cause of action is not changed.—Henry v. Wabash Western R. Co., 44 Mo. App. 100.

[p] (N. M. 1890) On an appeal to the district court from a justice of the peace, under Comp. Laws 1884, § 1848, providing that such appeals shall be tried on their merits as if there had been no trial below, where the justice had jurisdiction, but the complaint failed to allege the jurisdictional facts, it is error for the district court to refuse to allow an amendment adding the necessary averments.—Sanchez v. Candelaria, 5 N. M. 400, 23 Pac. 239.

[q] (N. M. 1892) Under Laws 1889, c. 28, § 7, which provides that where the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace actually existed, though not affirmatively appearing on the face of the papers transmitted on appeal, the district court must allow any amendment necessary to set forth correctly the fact of jurisdiction, an affidavit in replevin may be amended in the district court so as to show the value of the property in question.—Romero v. Luna, 6 N. M. 440, 30 Pac. 855; following Martinez v. Martinez (1883) 2 N. M. 464, and Sanchez v. Candelaria (1890) 5 N. M. 400, 23 Pac. 239.

[r] (N. C. 1892) Where an affidavit for attachment in a justice's court, on the ground that defendant is a nonresident, is defective in failing to state that the amount claimed is due on a justice's judgment, or that defendant cannot be found in the state after due diligence, the superior court, on appeal, may amend so as to state such facts, under Code, § 908, providing that in such cases the court may amend "either in form or in substance."—Sheldon v. Kivett, 110 N. C. 408, 14 S. E. 970.

[s] (Ohio, 1894) Where defendant in replevin appeals from the judgment of a justice of the peace, who has no jurisdiction because of defective affidavit, and obtains from the court of common pleas an order to sell the property then in his possession under a redelivery bond, and also answers to the merits after a motion by him to dismiss is overruled, the court should not dismiss the action for want of sufficient affidavit after it has heard the case on the pleadings and evidence, but should permit plaintiff to amend the affidavit.—Gaiser v. Heim, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 120.

§ 684. —— Bringing action within justice's jurisdiction.

[a] When the damages claimed in the justice's court were not within the jurisdiction of that court, the defect cannot be cured by an amendment in the appellate court.

—(Mass. 1858) Ladd v. Kimball, 78 Mass. (12 Gray) 139;

(Mo. 1860) Webb v. Tweedie, 30 Mo. 488.

[b] The circuit court cannot acquire jurisdiction on appeal from a justice of the peace in an action in which the justice has no jurisdiction by permitting the plaintiff, without the defendant's consent, to so amend his complaint as to state a cause of action within the justice's jurisdiction.

—(Ind. 1891) Goodwine v. Barnett, 2 Ind. App. 16, 28 N. E. 115;

(Mich. 1882) Fowler v. Hyland, 48 Mich. 179, 12 N. W. 26;

(Vt. 1834) Thompson v. Colony, 6 Vt. 91.

[c] (Ala. 1873) On appeal from a justice's judgment in an action to recover personal property in specie, if the complaint in the circuit court alleges a value of the property greater than the sum of which a justice has jurisdiction it may be amended by substituting a smaller amount, so as to bring the case within the justice's jurisdiction.—House v. Lassiter, 49 Ala. 307.

[d] (Cal. 1856) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace on an action brought for the recovery of a mining claim and damages, it is error to refuse to allow plaintiff to strike out his claim for damages, without regard to the purpose which may influence him, since the justice had no jurisdiction thereof.—Grass Val. Quartz Min. Co. v. Stackhouse, 6 Cal. 413.

[e] (Ky. 1824) A party may, in the discretion of the appellate court, file a declaration containing a cause of action cognizable by a justice.—Condict v. Stevens, 17 Ky. (1 T. B. Mon.) 73.

[f] (Mo. 1845) Where a set-off offered before a justice of the peace is rejected, as exceeding his jurisdiction, it cannot on appeal be reduced by a credit so as to be within the jurisdiction of the justice.—Robinett v. Nunn, 9 Mo. 246.

[g] (Pa. 1896) Where, on trial of an appeal from a justice in the common pleas, plaintiff's demand exceeds the amount for which the justice had jurisdiction, plaintiff cannot reduce the claim by allowing a credit of a distinct and independent debt.—Antes v. Antes (Com. Pl.) 12 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 86.

§ 685. Amendments to conform to case or proof.

[a] (Ala. 1887) If a complaint in justice's court is filed in debt or assumpsit, while the summons and other proceedings show that the action is in detinue, a proper complaint may be filed in the circuit court on appeal.—Freeman v. Speegle, 83 Ala. 191, 3 South. 620.

[b] (Conn. 1895) Where the real cause of an action begun before a justice of the peace was a sale by defendant of goods pledged to it, and its appropriation of the proceeds after its right to the benefit of the pledge had ceased, a complaint erroneously describing the action as one for goods sold and delivered and a loan of money was properly allowed to be amended, on appeal to the court of common pleas, by substituting a cause of action for conversion of money.—Lovell v. Hammond Co., 66 Conn. 500, 34 Atl. 511.

[c] (Ill. 1873) In an action of forcible detainer before a justice of the peace, permitting an amendment of the complaint, not calculated to surprise the defendant, after a submission of the cause to the superior court, to which the case has been taken by appeal, is not error.—Snowell v. Moss, 70 Ill. 313.

[d] (Kan. 1878) When a bill of particulars filed before a justice of the peace contains a copy of the note sued on, and a statement that defendant placed his name on the back thereof before delivery and at the time it was made, and then, with the maker, delivered it to the payee, and that defendant is an indorser, and that demand has been made on the maker, and notice of protest has been given, it may be amended on appeal to the district court so as to allege that defendant is liable as a guarantor.—Sarbach v. Jones, 20 Kan. 497.

[e] (Mich. 1874) To allow an amendment to the declaration, after the evidence is all in, merely to avoid a variance as to some circumstances connected with the cause of action, where evidence of the whole transaction has been given, and it discloses or refers to but the one contract, and the amendment cannot tend to defeat the purposes of justice or operate as any real hardship or surprise upon the defendant, is within the discretion of the court.—Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 Mich. 165.

[f] (Mo. 1881) Where a statement filed under section 43 of the railroad law inferentially refers to that section, it may be amended on appeal to the circuit court so as to conform to the requirements of that act.—Rowland v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 73 Mo. 619.

[g] (N. Y. 1874) Where, in an action in justice's court, a counterclaim, good if it had been properly pleaded, was introduced in evidence without objection, the pleadings will be treated as amended on appeal so as to contain it.—Williams v. Wieting, 3 Thomp. & C. 439.

[h] (N. Y. 1889) A complaint in justice's court charged an assault on plaintiff "by defendant and his dog," but the case was tried on the theory that defendant was liable for negligently keeping a vicious dog. Held, that on appeal to the county court an amendment of the complaint so as to charge that defendant's dog, being vicious and known to be so by defendant, bit plaintiff, was proper, as the amendment did not change the "claim" actually tried, but simply conformed the complaint to it, within the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 723.—Argersinger v. Levor, 54 Hun, 613, 7 N. Y. Supp. 923, 17 Civ. Proc. R. 352.

[i] (Vt. 1858) If, in an action of debt upon judgment before a justice of the peace, the judgment is described erroneously by giving a wrong initial of the justice's name, and by stating the aggregate amount of the debt and costs, instead of reciting each of them separately, the plaintiff, after the action has been appealed to the county court, may be allowed to file a new declaration, properly describing the judgment in those particulars.—Stevens v. Hewitt, 30 Vt. 262.

§ 686. Proceedings for allowance of amendments.

[a] (Iowa, 1860) Where a judgment by default was entered before a justice of the peace, and an appeal was taken to the district court, and it appeared on appeal that the original notice and justice's transcript erroneously stated that when the notice was issued and served it was returnable at an hour different from that named in the record, defendant may base an application for leave to file an answer on a statement of such error, without first correcting it.—Graves v. Heaton, 11 Iowa, 169.

[b] (Iowa, 1866) Leave may be granted to file new pleadings in the district court in a cause brought up by appeal from a justice's court, upon satisfactory evidence being shown to excuse the omission to plead before the justice.—Stanton v. Warrick, 21 Iowa, 76; May v. Wilson, Id. 79.

[c] (Iowa) A defendant may be allowed to amend his answer in the circuit court on appeal from the judgment of a justice, under equitable circumstances, upon proper terms, and after a showing of excuse for failure to plead before the justice.—(1871) Warren v. Scott, 32 Iowa, 22; (1873) Ping v. Cockyne, 37 Iowa, 211.

[d] (N. Y. 1889) After an action against a village for an accident caused by a defective highway has been tried in the justice's court, and thence appealed to the county court, it is proper to refuse a motion to amend the answer by setting up want of funds with which to repair the defect, where the moving papers do not show that the needed repairs would cost any money.—Cook v. Village of Waterford, 53 Hun, 634, 6 N. Y. Supp. 616.

[e] (Wash. 1862) On an appeal from a justice's court, if a defendant in the district court proposes to amend his answer by including new matter in set-off, the proposed amendment must show the nature and character of such new matter.—Newberg v. Farmer, 1 Wash. T. 183.

[f] (W. Va. 1892) If a party during trial of an appeal from a justice is entitled to amend his pleadings, that right cannot be made to depend on whether the adverse party is then ready to proceed with the trial; but, if the amendment would be a surprise to the other party, it should nevertheless be allowed, and a continuance granted.—Powell v. Love, 36 W. Va. 96, 14 S. E. 405.

[g] (Wis. 1866) The affidavits in this case were held to show a sufficient cause for leave to file an answer and continue the action.—Wilcox v. Holmes, 20 Wis. 307.

[h] (Wis. 1870) In determining the question of the allowance of an amendment on appeal from justice court by the setting up of a counterclaim by defendant, affidavits tending to disapprove the counterclaim should not be considered.—Richardson v. Chynoweth, 26 Wis. 656.

§ 687. Time of pleading anew and notice.

[a] (Ala. 1893) A complaint filed in the circuit court on appeal before the trial was entered upon is in time.—Kuhl v. Long, 102 Ala. 563, 15 South. 267.

[b] (Conn. 1884) The right to ask for an amendment of pleadings exists after as well as before the expiration of the first term of court, in a civil case appealed from a justice of the peace.—Bennett v. Collins, 52 Conn. 1.

[c] (Ga. 1885) Where, on appeal to the superior court from judgments of a justice of the peace, no plea was filed at the first term, but at the second term after the appeal, the defendant having died, his executors filed a plea of non est factum, without any sufficient cause being shown for the delay, such plea is properly stricken out.—Searcy v. Tillman, 75 Ga. 504.

[d] (Ill. 1869) An affidavit of merits filed after the expiration of the rule to plead comes too late to prevent a dismissal of the appeal.—Bell v. Nims, 51 Ill. 171.

[e] (Ill. 1874) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in an action of trover to the superior court of Cook county, appellant is not required by law to file an affidavit of merits, as a precedent to his right to trial on the appeal.—Wayne v. Stern, 75 Ill. 313.

[f] (Ill. 1888) On appeal to the circuit court from a justice of the peace, where plaintiff has only filed his affidavit of claim, the defendant is not required to file an affidavit of merits until the cause is reached for trial; neither chapter 79, § 34, nor chapter 110, § 37, Rev. St., requiring in terms that the affidavit shall be filed at any specified time.—Martin v. Hochstadter, 27 Ill. App. 166; World's Soap Mfg. Co. v. Woltz, Id. 302.

[g] (Ill. 1889) It is error to dismiss an appeal from the justice's court for failure to comply with an order, entered at the same term that the justice's transcript was filed, requiring appellant to file an affidavit of merit, as he is not required to file such affidavit, under Rev. St. c. 79, § 34, until the cause is reached for trial.—Jensen v. Fricke, 35 Ill. App. 23, following Martin v. Hochstadter (1887) 27 Ill. App. 166.

[h] (Ill. 1890) On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, defendant is not required to file an affidavit of merits until the cause is reached for trial; and there is no distinction in this respect between an appeal perfected by entering into bond before the clerk of the circuit or superior court, and one where the bond is approved by the justice.—Reid v. Cisler, 35 Ill. App. 572.

[i] (Iowa, 1887) The circuit court may, in the exercise of its discretion, permit an answer in an action appealed from a justice's court to be filed after the cause is reached for trial; but, where no showing is made to excuse the failure to file such pleading within the proper time, there is no abuse of discretion in refusing leave to permit it to be filed at such a stage of the cause.—McDowell v. Booth, 72 Iowa, 141, 33 N. W. 463.

[j] (Iowa, 1887) Although, under Code 1873, § 3596, a defendant in justice's court, who has filed no pleading there, is entitled, on appeal to the circuit, to file any pleading necessary to any defense he may have to the action, an offer to file such answer, made for the first time after the jury had been called and sworn as to qualifications, comes too late. Id. § 2636, provides that all pleadings must be filed by the time the cause is reached for trial.—McDowell v. Booth, 72 Iowa, 141, 33 N. W. 463.

[k] (Mich. 1874) To permit an amendment of the declaration in an action originally commenced before a justice to be made at the commencement of the trial on appeal in the circuit, upon the objection being then raised that the declaration discloses no cause of action, which amendment simply changes the statement of the consideration for the defendant's alleged promise from an executed to an executory consideration, viz., that plaintiff "would convey," instead of "had conveyed," cannot mislead or surprise defendant, and is not error. And on allowing such an amendment, it is not error to refuse time to plead, as provided by rules for pleading in vacation to an original declaration.—Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 Mich. 165.

[l] (Neb. 1887) Under section 1008 of the Code as it existed in 1885, a party appealing from the judgment of a justice of the peace had until the second day of the succeeding term of the district court in which to file the transcript, and the plaintiff had 20 days thereafter in which to file his petition. Therefore, where an appeal has been properly taken by a defendant, a motion made by him on the first day of such term to dismiss the cause for want of prosecution was premature, and should have been overruled.—Smith v. Borden, 22 Neb. 487, 35 N. W. 218.

[n] (Pa. 1865) An appeal from the judgment of a justice is an "action brought," within the meaning of a rule of court requiring a declaration to be filed in 12 months from the first day of the term to which it is entered.—Craig v. Brown, 48 Pa. (12 Wright) 202.

[o] (Pa. 1889) Under Act May 25, 1887, § 1, the notice of filing of the statement of claim on appeal from a justice of the peace must be in writing, and served on defendant in like manner as the service of summons.—Connolly v. Wilson, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 421.

§ 688. Sufficiency of pleadings.

[a] On appeal from the justice's court to the district court, the justice's court rules of pleading apply, and not the rules of pleading for the district court.

—(Ark. 1880) Heartman v. Franks, 36 Ark. 501;

(Tex. 1891) Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Ivy, 79 Tex. 444, 15 S. W. 692.

[b] (Ala. 1830) An omission to state the term of the court in a declaration on an appeal from a justice does not thereby make it demurrable.—Spann v. Boyd, 2 Stew. 480.

[c] (Ala. 1848) A statement in an appeal case brought against an indorser, which alleges that A., the payee, indorsed the note to the plaintiffs, and that they sued the maker thereon within 30 days after its maturity, recovered a judgment in that suit, on which a fieri facias was issued, and placed in the hands of a constable of the county of the maker's residence, which has been returned no property found, is sufficient.—Schaefer v. Adler, 14 Ala. 723.

[d] (Ala. 1851) On an appeal from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, a statement of the cause of action in the appellate court which does not set forth the amount sued for is defective.—Jones v. Buckley, 19 Ala. 604.

[e] (Ala. 1875) The statement which plaintiff, on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, is required to file in the circuit court, is not subject to the technical rules of pleading, but is sufficient if it discloses a substantial cause of action.—Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Williams, 54 Ala. 168.

[f] (Ga. 1877) A defendant cannot be requred to make oath of an issuable defense in the appellate court, where none is required in the justice's court.—Howell v. Glover, 59 Ga. 774.

[g] (Ill. 1888) On appeal from a justice of the peace, a bill of particulars as follows: "To one mowing and reaping machine, $185,"—is sufficient to enable plaintiff to recover damages for breach of a special contract for payment in notes.—Dunsworth v. Walter A. Wood Machine Co., 29 Ill. App. 23.

[h] (Ill. 1889) On appeal from a justice of the peace, where one of the defendants has filed a plea denying execution of the joint note sued on, it is error to render judgment against him on default, without a trial by jury, or any waiver thereof by him.—Barnett v. Craig, 38 Ill. App. 96.

[i] (Ind. 1835) A statement of the cause of action in the transcript on appeal from a justice, however short or informal, will support the judgment on appeal.—Denby v. Hart, 4 Blackf. 13.

[j] (Ind. 1884) Where a case is in the circuit court on appeal from a justice, and the complaint is amended, the rules of pleading before justices will be applied to the amended complaint.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Rusie, 95 Ind. 236.

[k] (Ind. 1888) A complaint in an action originating in a justice court, after appeal to the circuit court and a finding there in plaintiff's favor, cannot, on motion to arrest judgment, be assailed as not stating a cause of action, where it fully informs defendant of the nature of the alleged cause of action, and is so explicit in its statement of facts that a judgment thereon in plaintiff's favor could be used by defendant as an absolute bar to another suit.—Anderson v. Lipe, 114 Ind. 464, 16 N. E. 833.

[l] (Ind. 1894) A pleading which is sufficient in a justice's court is sufficient in the circuit court on appeal.—Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Jarvis, 9 Ind. App. 438, 36 N. E. 774.

[m] (Iowa, 1854) In a suit for trespass and damages before a justice of the peace, a petition was filed, but was mislaid during the trial. Afterwards the justice sent it up to the district court. Held that, since the petition and docket showed a cause of action, it was sufficient.—Boon v. Orr, 4 G. Greene, 304.

[n] (Kan. 1892) Where a case is tried in a justice's court on a bill of particulars which sets forth two causes of action without separately stating and numbering them, and which is not as definite and certain as a petition in the district court should be, and defendant appeals to the district court from a judgment against him, it is not error for the district court to overrule a motion there made by him to require plaintiffs to separately state and number their causes of action, and to make their bill of particulars more definite, both for the reason that, from the trial before the justice, defendant must have learned what plaintiffs relied on, and because Justices' Act, § 122, requires the case to be tried de novo in the district court on the original papers on which it was tried before the justice, unless the district court, in the furtherance of justice, allows amended or new pleadings to be filed.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Curtis, 48 Kan. 179, 29 Pac. 146; Same v. McMullen, 48 Kan. 281, 29 Pac. 147.

[o] (Ky. 1835) In appeal from a justice to a circuit court, the defendant may plead in writing, and the circuit court is not bound to reject any pleas that present an appropriate issue.—Wheatly v. Phelps, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 302.

[p] (Mass. 1846) It seems that the rules of the court of common pleas, established at July term, 1837, respecting specifications of defense, do not apply to cases of appeal from a justice of the peace.—Holman v. Sigourney, 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 436.

[q] (Miss. 1846) Though the proceedings on appeal from justices of the peace to the circuit court are de novo, and can be conducted without any pleadings whatever, yet, if the parties undertake to conduct and carry on the case by means of written pleadings, they will be held to the rules of pleading.—Atkinson v. Fortinberry, 15 Miss. (7 Smedes & M.) 302.

[r] (Mo. 1893) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 2113, providing that a judgment shall not be reversed for omitting an averment, without proof of which the verdict ought not to have been given, a statement of suit brought in justice's court on a bill of exchange is good, after verdict in the circuit court, if it specify the drawee and payee and amount, though it omit the name of the drawer.—Lockhart v. Moss, 53 Mo. App. 633.

[s] (N. H. 1862) On appeal from the judgment of a justice, a replication to a plea of release, seeking to avoid it by setting up an attorney's lien on the judgment below, and an absolute assignment of the claim to the attorney, must be regarded as containing but one answer to the plea; and a traverse of the assignment, without noticing the rest, is good.—Jordan v. Gillen, 44 N. H. 65.

[t] (N. M. 1857) A petition filed in the district court, on an appeal from a justice's court, under a grant of leave to amend the cause of action, will be deemed sufficient, notwithstanding informalities, if it contains all the substantial elements to place fully and clearly before the court the cause of action which leave was granted to amend.—Sanchez v. Luna, 1 N. M. 238.

[u] (N. Y. 1845) The defendant in a justice's court pleaded the general issue and for special pleas, each of which set up new matter, and the plaintiff put in a replication containing an answer to one of the special pleas, though designed as an answer to them all; and, without further pleadings, the parties went to trial on the merits before the justice, and the plaintiff recovered, and the defendant appealed to the common pleas. On the trial the court refused to hear the plaintiff's evidence, and gave judgment for the defendant, on the ground that the special pleas, which were unanswered, set up a good defense and stood admitted. Held erroneous, and that the common pleas should have heard and determined the cause on its merits.—Beardsley v. Jacobs, 1 Denio, 504.

[v] (Ohio, 1885) On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace to the common pleas, the petition need not allege that the case came into the latter court by appeal.—McCullough v. Cramblett, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 330.

[w] (Pa.) If the declaration lay the cause of action to have accrued on a day subsequent to the commencement of the suit before the justice, it is error.—(1815) Miller v. Ralston, 1 Serg. & R. 309; (1817) McLaughlin v. Parker, 3 Serg. & R. 144; (1822) Langer v. Parish, 8 Serg. & R. 134; (1824) Roud v. Griffith, 11 Serg & R. 130.

[x] (Pa. 1875) In an appeal from a justice of the peace, the affidavit alleged that the plaintiffs had purposely reduced their claim below $100 in order to give the court jurisdiction. Held insufficient, in not setting forth the facts to prove want of jurisdiction.—Williams v. Shields, 2 Wkly. Notes Cas. 176.

[y] (Pa. 1893) On appeal from a justice's court a statement signed by plaintiff or his attorney, and followed by a copy of note, with indorsements, etc., not signed by plaintiff or his attorney, is not such a statement as is required by Act May 25, 1887, and it will not entitle plaintiff to judgment.—Medler v. Madlinger (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 473.

[yy] (Pa. 1893) The rule of court that in all cases of appeal from justices the issue shall be raised by a declaration for money had and received, and the plea of nonassumpsit thereto, and the cause shall be tried on the merits without regard to form, applies to suits against married women.—Kooker v. Williams (Com. Pl.) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 446.

[z] (Tex. 1895) On appeal from a judgment in a justice's court to the county court, it is error to strike out an oral plea to the jurisdiction, and the evidence thereunder, as the strict rules of pleading are not applicable to justice courts.—Schwartz v. Frees (Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 214.

[zz] (W. Va. 1889) Where, on appeal to the circuit court in an action commenced before a justice of the peace, the defendant files an informal plea which sets up a valid defense to the action, the circuit court should not deny him the benefit of his defense, when the plea is such that a person of common understanding may know what is intended by it.—Jones v. Browse, 32 W. Va. 444, 9 S. E. 873.

§ 689. Departure in pleadings in appellate courts from those in justice courts.

Waiver of departure between pleadings on appeal and in justice court, see post, § 691.

[a] (Ala. 1887) In an appeal from a justice's court, if the complaint filed is a departure from the original cause of action, the objection is not available on demurrer, but must be taken by motion to reject the complaint or strike it from the files.—Freeman v. Speegle, 83 Ala. 191, 3 South. 620.

[b] (Ala. 1892) On appeal from a justice's court to the city court, the proper mode of raising the question of departure from the case as made in the justice's court is by motion to reject the complaint in the city court, or to strike it from the files, and the question cannot be raised by demurrer or plea in abatement.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barker, 96 Ala. 435, 11 South. 453.

[c] (Ala. 1893) Plaintiff brought attachment for rent in a justice court. On appeal to the city court, plaintiff amended a complaint by counting on three notes executed by defendant, and alleging that they were given for installments of rent for a house belonging to plaintiff. Held not a departure from the original suit.—Lagerfelt v. McKie, 100 Ala. 430, 14 South. 281.

[d] (Del. 1857) Where a suit is instituted before a justice of the peace in the name of a husband by his wife, and the declaration on appeal gives the names of both husband and wife as those of the plaintiffs, the variance is fatal to the appeal, and may be taken advantage of by a motion to set aside the declaration for irregularity; but it is not a proper ground for a plea in abatement or in bar.—McDowell v. Simpson, 1 Houst. 467.

[e] (Ky. 1845) In trespass, on appeal by defendant from a justice to the circuit court, plaintiff need not allege his cause of action in the declaration in the same terms used by him in the warrant before the justice. There is no variance unless a new cause of action is described.—Blassingame v. Glaves, 45 Ky. (6 B. Mon.) 38.

[f] (Neb. 1883) Plaintiff's petition in replevin in a justice's court described the property as "one school house, about 14x24 ft. in size, composed of sod and lumber." On appeal to the district court, the petition described the property as "all the boards, planks, and lumber, and windows, benches, doors, and desks, which form a part of a certain school house, composed partly of sod and dirt and partly of lumber." Held, that the descriptions were substantially similar, and that there was no departure.—School Dist. No. 36, York County, v. McIntire, 14 Neb. 46, 14 N. W. 656.

[g] (Neb. 1884) In replevin in a county court, the petitioner claimed the possession of a frame building and its appurtenances, and, upon removal of the cause to the district court, the petition filed therein claimed all the lumber, materials, etc., on certain land, "being the same chattels and personal property mentioned and described in the original petition filed in this cause, which petition is hereby made a part hereof." Held, that the petition did not state such a different cause of action from that alleged in the original petition as to warrant the sustaining of a motion to strike it out.—Waters v. Reuber, 16 Neb. 99, 19 N. W. 687, 49 Am. Rep. 710, following School Dist. No. 36, York County, v. McIntire (1883) 14 Neb. 46, 14 N. W. 656.

[h] (Neb. 1891) In an action for work and labor, begun in justice's court, the fact that, on appeal to the district court, plaintiff alleges in his petition that defendants are partners, while no such allegation was contained in his bill of particulars in justice's court, does not constitute such a departure in pleading as to require the petition to be stricken from the files of the district court.—Baldwin v. Rhea, 33 Neb. 319, 50 N. W. 1.

[i] (Neb. 1894) While, on appeal to the district court from a justice's court, plaintiff must prosecute the same cause of action, yet he need not make the same allegations as those contained in his pleading below, so long as the identity of the original cause of action is preserved.—Levi v. Fred, 38 Neb. 564, 57 N. W. 386.

[j] (Vt. 1835) A variance between the declaration before the justice and the new declaration filed in the county court is no cause of abatement.—Way v. Wakefield, 7 Vt. 223.

[k] (Vt. 1843) The variance between the declaration in the justice court and the new declaration in the appellate court should be taken advantage of by a motion to dismiss the new declaration.—Blodget v. Skinner, 15 Vt. 716.

§ 690. Pleas puis darrein continuance.

[a] (Ala. 1835) A payment made after the rendition of a judgment by a magistrate is available on appeal without a special plea puis darrein continuance.—Hagen v. Thompson, 2 Port. 48.

[b] (Mo. 1843) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, a set-off cannot be pleaded puis darrein continuance.—Chase v. Chase, 8 Mo. 103.

[c] (N. Y. 1828) The common pleas are bound, ordinarily, to try an appeal case on the pleadings and issue joined before the justice; but, when new matter of defense arises after the justice's judgment is given, it may be pleaded puis darrein.—People v. Ontario Common Pleas, 1 Wend. 80.

[d] (N. Y. 1895) Reply not being necessary in an action before a justice of the peace, and such action, on appeal to the county court, being triable anew on the issues formed by the pleadings in the justice court, payment of a counterclaim subsequent to such an appeal may be shown on retrial in the county court, without amendment of the pleadings.—Utter v. Nelligan, 92 Hun, 185, 36 N. Y. Supp. 591.

[e] (Tenn. 1855) If plaintiff in a suit before a justice for a contract debt accepts a sealed note in satisfaction, but allows judgment also to be rendered against defendant, the latter may be allowed, on appeal to the circuit court, to plead the satisfaction by an oral plea puis darrein continuance.—Campbell v. Reeves, 35 Tenn. (3 Sneed) 52.

§ 690½. Demurrers on appeal.

[a] (Ind. 1854) In an appeal from a justice of the peace, the plaintiff, by withdrawing a demurrer sustained to a plea filed with the justice, did not, under Rev. St. 1843, render himself liable to pay costs from the time the demurrer was sustained.—Tyner v. Cory, 5 Ind. 216.

[b] (Iowa, 1859) An action before a justice of the peace, in which the plaintiff claimed to recover for the work and labor of his son, for 5½ months, at $10 per month, etc. The defendant answered in writing, denying the plaintiff's claim, and averring that he contracted with plaintiff, for the hire of the services of his son, for a specified time, and that there had been a breach of the contract, and claiming an offset in damages therefor. On appeal the plaintiff demurred in the upper court to this part of the answer. Held, that a decision sustaining the demurrer was erroneous, as it deprived the defendant of the right to show and set off such damages by way of defense.—Lowen v. Crossman, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 325.

[c] (Me. 1844) Where the defendant has pleaded an immaterial plea, tendering an issue, in an action before a justice of the peace, and an appeal has been entered to the district court without any joinder of the issue, and the defendant has refused to amend his plea, it is competent for the latter court to permit the plaintiff to demur to the plea.—Strout v. Inhabitants of Durham, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 483.

[d] (Mo. 1892) Since statements of cause of action in justice's court are not demurrable, the circuit court, on appeal, cannot enter judgment on demurrer to the statement.—Kane v. Dauernheim, 51 Mo. App. 635.

[e] (Mo. 1894) Though the law does not contemplate a demurrer to a statement filed in justice court, either there or in the circuit court on appeal, still such a pleading, having been filed in the circuit, and having been preserved in the bill of exceptions on appeal from the circuit court, will be treated by this court as a motion to strike out the complaint because not stating a cause of action.—Anderson v. McClure, 57 Mo. App. 93.

[f] (Nev. 1885) An objection that jurisdiction of an action transferred from a justice's court was irregularly acquired cannot be taken by demurrer, under the practice act (Comp. Laws, § 1103).—James v. Leport, 8 Pac. 47, 19 Nev. 174.

§ 691. Waiver of pleas and objections to amendment of pleading.

[a] (Del. 1843) If the declaration in an appeal from a justice of the peace does not correspond with the statement filed before the justice, this cannot be objected to after pleading to issue.—Townsend v. Steward, 4 Har. 94.

[b] (Ind. 1834) If on an appeal the defendant file additional pleas in the circuit court without objection, the filing thereof cannot be assigned for error by the plaintiff.—Tyler v. Denson, 3 Blackf. 347; Abel v. Burgett, Id. 502.

[c] (Ind. 1861) An objection that plaintiff was allowed to amend her complaint in the common pleas, on appeal from a justice, as to the name in which she sued, thereby causing a variance, cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court.—Smith v. Allen, 16 Ind. 316.

[d] (Ind. 1875) In an action brought before a justice and appealed by defendant to the circuit court, wherein defendant amends his counterclaim so as to claim judgment against plaintiff for $700 after satisfying plaintiff's claim, and in which, on plaintiff's not objecting to the amendment, or taking any steps in relation thereto, the cause is, by agreement after issue joined upon the answer, referred to arbitrators under a stipulation that their decision is to be final, judgment to be rendered thereon, plaintiff will be deemed to have waived the objections to the amount claimed by defendant's amendment after the arbitrators have reported to the court a finding in defendant's favor for $397.—Jackson v. Swope, 49 Ind. 398.

[e] (Ind. 1879) Plaintiff in a replevin suit before a justice, in which issues are formed in the circuit court on appeal, who stands upon his demurrer to plaintiff's reply upon the overruling thereof without objecting to the rendition of the judgment on his demurrer, thereby waives his right to have such issues tried.—Roberts v. Norris, 67 Ind. 396.

[f] (Kan. 1891) Where an action is appealed from a justice of the peace to the district court, and the plaintiff, with the consent of the defendant, filed in the district court a new petition, setting up a claim exceeding $300, the jurisdictional limit of the justice, and the defendant voluntarily appears and files his answer thereto, the district court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the action upon the pleadings filed in that court, the same as if there had been no appeal.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Lea, 47 Kan. 268, 27 Pac. 987.

[g] (Mich. 1873) The statute permitting amendments to the pleadings upon an appeal to the circuit from the justice's court does not warrant an increase of the ad damnum beyond the limit of the justice's jurisdiction. But a defendant who has stipulated for such amendments "as either party may desire," and made no objection to the plaintiff's declaration as amended, but pleaded to the merits, cannot, after verdict against him, object, in order to limit the costs, that it was not an amendment in the appeal case, but the institution of a new suit.—Evers v. Sager, 28 Mich. 47.

[h] (Neb. 1883) Where, in replevin brought in a justice's court, defendant waives a bill of particulars by not requiring it, he cannot, on appeal to the district court by plaintiff, object that a different description of the property is given by plaintiff in his petition filed in the district court from that contained in his petition filed in the justice's court.—School Dist. No. 36 of York County v. McIntire, 14 Neb. 46, 14 N. W. 656.

[i] (Neb.) On removal of an action of replevin from a county court to a district court, an objection that the petition filed in the district court describes the property differently from the bill of particulars filed in the county court, and states a different cause of action, is waived by answer.—(1883) School Dist. No. 36 of York County v. McIntire, 14 Neb. 46, 14 N. W. 656; (1884) Waters v. Reuber, 16 Neb. 99, 19 N. W. 687, 49 Am. Rep. 710.

[j] (Neb. 1885) Where, on appeal to the district court, the defendant answers the cause of action set forth in the plaintiff's petition without objection that it is not the same as was tried in the court from which the appeal is taken, he will be deemed to have waived all objections upon that ground.—Sawyer v. Brown, 17 Neb. 171, 22 N. W. 355.

[k] (Neb. 1894) On appeal from a justice of the peace, an objection that the issues are not the same as below is waived if not made before trial.—Robertson v. Buffalo County Nat. Bank, 40 Neb. 235, 58 N. W. 715.

[l] (Ohio, 1837) It is too late to allege a variance between the party plaintiff in the transcript and in the declaration after a general plea to the action.—Wilson v. Trustees of No. 16, 8 Ohio (8 Ham.) 174.

[m] (Pa. 1853) On appeal from a justice's judgment, if the parties voluntarily try an action of tort under pleadings applicable only to an action ex contractu, it is a waiver of all objections to the form of the action, and also to any variance between the form of proceeding before the justice and that tried on appeal in the common pleas.—Steckel v. Weber, 20 Pa. (8 Harris) 432.

[n] (Pa. 1892) Under rules of court that if, on appeal from a justice's court, a defendant enters a rule for a more specific statement, he shall reply thereto by affidavit as in other cases, a failure to file a sworn answer authorizes the entry of judgment in plaintiff's favor, and a notice to plead, required by the rule does not operate as a waiver of an affidavit of defense.—Horner v. Horner, 145 Pa. 258, 23 Atl. 441, 29 Wkly. Notes Cas. 420.

[o] (Tenn. 1836) On appeal from a justice, matter in abatement cannot be taken advantage of in the appellate court unless it be pleaded in writing and verified at the first term of the court to which the appeal is taken.—Grove v. Campbell, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 7.

[q] (Tex. 1893) The fact that plaintiff, on appeal from a justice to the county court, has been permitted (defendant making no objection) to amend his claim by adding new items, is no ground for overruling his objection to defendant's adding new items to his counterclaim, contrary to Rev. St. art. 316.—Downtain v. Connellee, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 95, 21 S. W. 56.

[r] (Tex. 1893) On appeal from a judgment by default rendered by a justice of the peace, it is not error for the county court to strike out defendant's answer for its failure to plead in justice's court, notwithstanding two trials had taken place in the county court on defendant's pleading.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Dromgoole (Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 372.

[s] (Vt. 1843) If the plaintiff in an action commenced before a justice of the peace, and appealed to the county court, files a new declaration in the county court for a different cause of action, and the defendant, without objection to its being received, takes issue under it, either upon matter of law or matter of fact, it will be considered as a waiver of the variance between the old and the new declaration.—Blodget v. Skinner, 15 Vt. 716.

§ 692. Matters admitted and to be proved and variance.

Departure between pleadings in appellate and justices' courts, see ante, § 689.

[a] (Ala. 1845) On an appeal from a justice the county court may require a defendant who has pleaded a tender to prove everything necessary to constitute a good plea of tender, including proof of the presence of the money in court.—Harbin v. Knox, 7 Ala. 675.

[b] (Del. 1836) On appeal from a justice in an action of trespass, the proof must establish a trespass prior to the commencement of the action before the justice, and not merely before filing the appeal.—Salmons v. Collins, 2 Har. 45.

[c] (Del. 1851) On appeal from a justice's court to the superior court, where the action may be tried de novo, plaintiff must show a right of action at the time when the suit was commenced below.—Norton v. Janvier, 5 Har. 346.

[d] (Ill. 1860) On appeal from a justice to the circuit court, the case is tried de novo, all formal objections being overlooked, so that it is immaterial that the note put in evidence differs from that set out in the justice's transcript.—Frye v. Tucker, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 180.

[e] (Ind. 1859) As no replication is needed before a justice, so none is required when the case is appealed. If the plaintiff upon leave reply an offset to the defendant's counterclaim, he does not thereby admit matter in the answer not replied to.—Turner v. Simpson, 12 Ind. 413.

[f] (Iowa, 1851) A variance between the note set out in the justice's return and the one offered in evidence, which is corrected by an amended return, is no ground for a nonsuit.—Higley v. Bryan, 3 G. Greene, 284.

[g] (Iowa, 1857) Where, in an action before a justice of the peace on an account, the defendant filed a set-off of a like nature, and the transcript of the justice returned to the district court did not show any oral or written pleadings in the cause, but stated that the plaintiff did not object to the defendant's bill of particulars or set-off, and where on the trial of the cause in the district court the court ruled that the set-off was admitted by the state of the pleadings, the ruling of the court was correct.—Brock v. Manatt, 5 Iowa (5 Clarke) 270.

[h] (Iowa, 1858) On the trial of an appeal from a justice of the peace in the district court, if it appears from the transcript that before the justice the parties had a full trial, the demand of the plaintiff is not to be taken as admitted by the district court.—Heath v. Coltenback, 5 Iowa (5 Clarke) 490.

[i] (Mich. 1890) How. Ann. St. § 6928, relating to trials in justice court, which provides that when an instrument in writing, purporting to be executed by one of the parties, is declared on, it may be used in evidence without proving its execution, unless its execution has been denied by oath at the time of declaring or pleading, "if such instrument shall be * * * filed with the justice," does not relieve plaintiff, in an action on a note against the maker, on appeal to the circuit court, from proving the execution of the note, unless the return of the justice shows that the note was filed with him.—Newton v. Principaal, 82 Mich. 271, 46 N. W. 234.

[j] (Mo. 1875) A plea of the general issue by defendant in a suit by a corporation before a justice of the peace is an admission of the plaintiff's corporate capacity; and therefore, on appeal to the circuit court, the plaintiff will not be required to prove the fact of its incorporation.—Farmers' & Drovers' Bank v. Williamson, 61 Mo. 259.

[k] (Pa. 1823) Though the cause of action must appear to be the same, yet where the transcript stated that the suit was on a promissory note, and on the appeal the evidence was of a sealed instrument or bill obligatory for the sum stated in the transcript, it was held that the variance was not material, the cause of action being evidently the same.—Bechtol v. Cobaugh, 10 Serg. & R. 121.

[l] (Pa. 1853) On appeal from the judgment of an alderman on a scire facias alleged to have been brought upon a recognizance of bail for stay of execution, a plea of nul tiel record will prevail, if it appears that the recognizance filed with the transcript is entirely different from that stated in the writ.—Kirk v. Aechternacht, 1 Phila. 426.

§ 693. Evidence admissible under pleadings.

[a] (Ark. 1846) Where the summons issued by a justice of the peace does not designate the nature of the instrument sued upon, but it is in fact a bond, it should not be excluded from the jury as evidence in a trial on appeal to the circuit court because in his transcript the justice calls it a "promissory note."—Patterson v. Wilson, 6 Ark. (1 Eng.) 476.

[b] (Ind. 1871) Under the statutes, an appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court must be tried as an original case, except that the informal pleadings before a justice may stand for the more formal pleadings in an original case in a higher court. Hence, where a suit is brought before a justice of the peace against two persons on an account, and judgment is recovered against both, if one of the judgment defendants appeals, evidence showing his separate liability for the claim may be introduced on the trial of the appeal.—Carmien v. Whitaker, 36 Ind. 509.

[c] (Iowa, 1868) Where in an action before a justice of the peace the defendant appears, but files no plea or general denial of the plaintiff's claim, either in writing or orally, and a trial is had on the merits under testimony on both sides, and an appeal is taken by the defendant to the district court, the defendant has the right, on the trial of the appeal, to introduce testimony in denial of the right of the plaintiff to a recovery against him.—Richman v. Brown, 25 Iowa, 33.

[d] (Kan. 1877) On appeal each party may, without filing new pleadings, prove any cause of action or defense and introduce any evidence which might have been proper upon the trial before the justice.—Stanley v. Farmers' Bank, 17 Kan. 592.

[e] (Kan. 1890) Where a case against a railroad company, tried before a justice without a pleading by defendant, was removed to the district court, where no pleading was filed or demanded, but trial was had upon the merits, it was error to exclude, for want of a pleading, evidence that defendant did not own or operate the road by which the cause of action arose.—Denver, M. & A. Ry. Co. v. Cowgill, 44 Kan. 325, 24 Pac. 475.

[f] (Kan. 1895) In an action in justice court for the value of corn wrongfully seized by a sheriff under a levy, where no answer was filed and no bill of particulars of a set-off was demanded by plaintiff, and, on appeal, trial was had without new pleadings, defendant may show that, after the levy, part of the corn was used with plaintiff's consent, and that he had used part of it for his own benefit.—Frankhouser v. Neally, 54 Kan. 744, 39 Pac. 700.

[g] (Mass. 1828) Where, in trespass quare clausum fregit before a justice of the peace, defendant pleads only the general issue, evidence in the common pleas that plaintiff was not possessed of the land is precluded by St. 1783, c. 42, § 2.—Lynch v. Rosseter, 23 Mass. (6 Pick.) 419.

[gg] (Mass. 1857) Where a case is carried by appeal from a justice to the court of common pleas, and no further pleading is ordered, the same evidence is admissible there under the pleadings as would have been admissible in the court below.—Wilbur v. Taber, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 361.

[h] (Mich. 1883) Where plaintiff's statement of his claim was sufficient in a justice's court, it was sufficient on appeal to the circuit court; and it was error to exclude as evidence a writing upon which the action was founded, which had been filed with the justice as a specification of the nature of the action.—Soper v. Mills, 50 Mich. 75, 14 N. W. 704.

[hh] (N. Y. 1848) Where a defendant, in a suit before a justice of the peace, pleads his discharge under the bankrupt act in bar, and the plaintiff goes to trial without replying to the plea, he cannot, on appeal to the court of common pleas, be permitted to prove a new promise subsequent to the discharge.—Ross v. Hamilton, 3 Barb. 609.

[i] (N. Y. 1891) A complaint in an action appealed from a justice of the peace stated that plaintiff was in possession of a farm through which the waters of the inlet to a lake were allowed to pass; that defendant raised the upper dam of the outlet of the lake, so that the waters of the lake and inlet backed up and overflowed plaintiff's farm, damaging his crops. Defendant attempted to oust the justice of jurisdiction by raising the issue of title to real estate, filing bond for removal, etc., and in addition pleaded the general issue. Held that, even if under the steps taken by defendant an issue as to title could not be tried on appeal to the county court, defendant was entitled, under his general issue, to show that the legislature had appropriated the dam for the use of the Erie Canal, and authorized the canal commissioners to increase its height, and to appropriate lands and water rights necessary for the purpose, and that his actions with respect thereto were under authority of the state superintendent of public works, and that consequently plaintiff's remedy, if any, was against the state.—Shaver v. Eldred, 61 Hun, 623, 15 N. Y. Supp. 930.

[j] (Ohio, 1834) The bill of particulars filed in the justice's court must be certified to the court above, on appeal, and the evidence confined to such particulars.—McCoy v. Thompson, Wright, 649.

[k] (Pa. 1892) The fact that a transcript on appeal from a justice court shows merely that the suit was brought "for timber sold" the defendant does not preclude the offer in evidence of a note given for the purchase money, when made not for the purpose of contradicting the record, but of showing that the claim was the same as that before the justice.—Bower v. Luhman, 148 Pa. 591, 24 Atl. 90, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 110.

[l] (Tex. 1882) In a case tried in a justice's court and appealed to the county court, plaintiff is entitled to prove payment or settlement of a counterclaim, without pleading the same in writing in either court.—Whitley v. Jackson, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 576.

[m] (Vt. 1848) Where an action upon a promissory note is commenced before a justice of the peace and appealed to the county court, the plaintiff may, by the rules of court, file a new declaration in the form of a count for money had and received; and there will be no error in receiving under such count any evidence which would have been competent under a count declaring specially upon the note in suit.—Town of Fletcher v. Blair, 20 Vt. 124.

[a] (Ky. 1827) On appeal by the defendant, the cause is in the same condition as if brought into court by the original plaintiff, and he must prove his demand.—Suter v. Caldwell, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 34, 35.

[b] (Mo. 1873) On the trial of an appeal from a justice's judgment to the circuit court, plaintiff should not be allowed to recover upon any less evidence than would have been necessary if he had brought suit in the circuit court in the first instance.—Stout v. St. Louis Tribune Co., 52 Mo. 342.

[c] (Mo. 1890) In an action against a railroad company under Rev. St. 1879, § 809, for double damages for injuries to stock, the fact that the justice of the peace before whom the case was tried was a justice of the township or of the county need not be proved, where it appears by recitals in the record.—Duke v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 39 Mo. App. 105.

§ 695. Evidence admissible.

[b] (Ill. 1861) On appeal to the circuit court from the judgment of a justice, the defendant may give anything in evidence which goes to show that the plaintiff has no existing cause of action.—Minard v. Lawler, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 301.

[c] (Ill. 1878) On the trial in the circuit court of an appeal from a justice's court, a deposition taken upon proper notice while the action was pending before the justice may be read in evidence.—Jarrett v. Phillips, 90 Ill. 237.

[d] (Ind. 1833) The admissions made by a party in a justice's court (the party being a competent witness by statute) on his oath cannot be proved in the appellate court, he being in court and not examined.—Carter v. Buckner, 3 Blackf. 315.

[e] (Iowa, 1850) On appeal from a justice of the peace, it is error to receive notes in evidence not marked as filed by the justice, nor otherwise identified by the transcript.—Graft v. Diltz, 2 G. Greene, 570.

[f, g] (Iowa, 1860) On the trial of an appeal from a justice's court, it may be shown that a written instrument which was the basis of the action was offered in evidence in the court below, and that the justice neglected to file it, and then it may be introduced in the trial in the appellate court.—Eggleston v. Collis, 10 Iowa, 554.

[h] (Mass. 1860) An auditor's report to the justice's court of Suffolk county may be recommitted to the auditor for amendment by an order of the superior court, after the case has been taken there by appeal, and the amended report may be used as evidence at the trial in that court.—Webber v. Orne, 81 Mass. (15 Gray) 351.

[i] (Mich. 1873) An oral admission made as evidence, merely, in a justice's court, is not a matter of record, and, while conclusive for the purpose of the trial, does not preclude an appeal, on the trial whereon it would be the subject of evidence, the same as any other oral confession.—Morrison v. Riker, 26 Mich. 385.

[j] (Mich. 1886) On appeal from a justice's court in a suit on a bond which was not filed with the justice, it is error to allow the bond to be introduced in evidence without first proving its execution.—Bauer v. Wasson, 60 Mich. 194, 26 N. W. 877.

[k] (Mich. 1890) Testimony of the improper conduct of a witness on the trial before the justice of the peace is properly admitted on the trial in the circuit court on appeal.—Hunt v. Rumsey, 83 Mich. 136, 47 N. W. 105, 9 L. R. A. 674.

[l] (Mich. 1893) In an action for the price of goods, brought in a justice's court, and appealed by defendant to the circuit court, where a bill of particulars filed by plaintiff in the circuit court is objected to as too general, plaintiff may testify that he furnished an itemized statement and bill of particulars in the justice's court, and that he is unable to make another itemized statement.—Rossman v. Bock, 97 Mich. 430, 56 N. W. 777.

[m] (Miss. 1847) The same species of evidence is admissible in the court above as was admissible before the justice of the peace, and either party may be examined under oath in the same manner as he could have been examined before the justice.—Russell v. Moore, 16 Miss. (8 Smedes & M.) 700.

[n] (Mo. 1838) Where a plaintiff in an action before a justice of the peace examines the defendant, he cannot, on appeal to the circuit court, be allowed to prove the declarations of the defendant in testifying before the justice of the peace.—Martien v. Barr, 5 Mo. 102.

[o] (Mo. 1839) On appeal from a justice of the peace the rules of evidence in the circuit court are the same as in the justice's court.—Atwood v. Reyburn, 5 Mo. 555.

[p] (N. J. 1839) An execution is not admissible in evidence on an appeal to show a sale of property, without proof of a judgment, although not objected to in the justice's court.—Glenn v. Garrison, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 1.

[q] (N. J. 1842) On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the question whether documentary evidence was offered or admitted may be determined by certificate of the justice or by witnesses.—Ramsey v. Dumars, 19 N. J. Law (4 Har.) 66.

[r] (N. J. 1864) It is competent for an appellant, upon trial of the appeal, to prove that the appellee and one of his witnesses testified upon the trial below to a fact which, if true, would defeat him in the suit.—Ramsden v. Bryden, 31 N. J. Law (2 Vroom) 27.

[s] (N. Y. 1822) If a party in a justice's court serves a notice on the other party to produce a paper at the trial, or that parol evidence will be given of its contents, and parol evidence is given accordingly, such notice is available on the appeal, and will entitle the party who gave it to give the parol evidence in the appellate court if the paper be not produced.—Read v. Moor, 19 Johns. 337.

[t] (N. Y. 1845) Where the trustees of a school district had recovered a judgment before a justice of the peace against the commissioners of the town for the school moneys apportioned to their district, but withheld from them, an order made by the superintendent of common schools after the recovery of such judgment cannot be given in evidence upon the trial of the cause upon appeal in the court of common pleas.—Bennett v. Burch, 1 Denio, 141.

[u] (N. Y. 1865) An offer by the respondent to let a justice's judgment appealed from be corrected by deducting therefrom a specified sum cannot be given in evidence on the hearing of the appeal, where it is used for a purpose wholly unauthorized, and well calculated to prejudice the appellant's case, as where, previous to the introduction of the offer, the counsel for the respondent stated to the jury that the offer was made because the appellant had no confidence in his case, and neither the court nor the counsel informed the jury of the proper effect of the offer upon the question of costs.—Finney v. Veeder, 45 Barb. 388, 31 How. Prac. 14, 1 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 366.

[v] (N. C. 1854) Where an appeal is taken from the judgment of a justice by one of two defendants, but by mistake it is sent up as the appeal of both, and on the trial admissions of the party who did not appeal were given in evidence against the defendant who did appeal, and after a trial and verdict for plaintiff the magistrate is permitted, by consent of parties, to amend his proceedings, it is error to permit the verdict to stand; for by the amendment the admissions of the dismissed party were rendered incompetent.—Wilfong v. Cline 46 N. C. 499.

[w] (Wis. 1875) The minutes of a justice of the peace of testimony taken at the trial before him are not admissible, except by stipulation, at the trial of the same cause on appeal in the circuit court, either as evidence of the facts at issue, or to impeach or sustain the credibility of a witness by showing what he testified before the justice.—Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216.

§ 696. Transcript or record as evidence on appeal.

Sufficiency of transcript as evidence of justice's jurisdiction, see ante, § 694.

[a] (Del. 1843) The transcript filed before a justice of the peace in an action of trespass is not evidence on an appeal; it being filed as the initiative of proceedings in the appellate court, where the cause proceeds on the pleadings had in the latter court.—Townsend v. Steward, 4 Har. 94.

[b] (Del. 1846) On the trial of an appeal, the record of the justice's judgment is not admissible in evidence; but, if read without objection, it is not sufficient ground to set aside the verdict and for a new trial.—Hudson v. Pettijohn, 4 Har. 356.

[c] (Ind. 1841) On appeal from a judgment of the justice of the peace a transcript and sci. fa. issued against bail for stay of execution are not evidence of the truth of the matters alleged in the sci. fa.—Burger v. Becket, 6 Blackf. 61.

[d] (Iowa, 1856) A return of a justice amending his transcript, being a part of the record, may be read to the jury to show the matters in issue.—Cooper v. Woodrow, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 189.

[e] (Mass. 1840) On an appeal taken from the decision of a justice of the peace to the court of common pleas, copies duly certified by the justice are the only competent evidence of the proceedings below.—Commonwealth v. Doty, 43 Mass. (2 Metc.) 18.

[f] (Mich. 1890) The return of the justice on an appeal is not evidence on the new trial in the circuit court.—Ockenfells v. Moeller, 79 Mich. 314, 44 N. W. 790.

[g] (N. Y. 1819) Where the justice stated in his return that the parties before him mutually admitted certain facts which he specified, it was held that these admissions might be embraced in the words of the act, requiring justices to state "the demands of the parties, and the issue joined," and that the return so far was admissible evidence.—Rawson v. Adams, 17 Johns. 130.

[h] (N. Y. 1819) Under the repealed statute of April, 1818, extending the jurisdiction of justices, the return of the justice in a case appealed from him to the common pleas was conclusive only as to those particulars which by the eighteenth section of the act he was required to return; and it could not be received as evidence, on a trial before a jury in the common pleas, of any other facts.—Rawson v. Adams, 17 Johns. 130.

[i] (S. C. 1896) It was not error to admit in evidence the return of the justice, under Code Civ. Proc. § 369, providing that to every judgment on appeal there shall be annexed a "return," on which it was heard, etc., and all orders and papers involving the merits and affecting the judgments, which shall be filed with the clerk, and "constitute the judgment roll."—Cothran v. Knight, 47 S. C. 243, 25 S. E. 142.

[j] (Wis. 1851) It is not necessary on appeal to introduce the affidavit on which a writ of attachment and garnishee process were issued by a justice of the peace, in order to render a transcript of the justice's docket admissible; the transcript itself being competent proof of the jurisdiction of the justice, so far as it recites facts necessary to give jurisdiction.—Rector v. Drury, 4 Chand. 24, 3 Pin. 298.

§ 697. Evidence not admissible or given before justice.

[a] (Colo. 1887) Where an action is commenced in a justice's court, and taken by appeal to the county court, it is not error in that court to refuse to exclude evidence because it was not introduced in the justice's court.—Brown v. Landon, 11 Colo. 162, 17 Pac. 515.

[b] (Ind. 1882) Where an appeal to the circuit court is taken from a justice's judgment, such court is not precluded from receiving evidence relating to the title to land merely because the justice could not receive such evidence.—Miller v. Cheney, 88 Ind. 466.

[c] (Mass. 1840) On the trial in the court of common pleas of an appeal from a justice of the peace, a defendant cannot, under Rev. St. c. 85, give in evidence as a defense his title to real estate, unless it appears by the pleading or by a statement on the justice's record that such title was concerned or brought in question before the justices.—Hunt v. Wilson, 42 Mass. (1 Metc.) 309.

[d] (Mich. 1869) When nothing appears in a justice's court to impeach the jurisdiction in a replevin case, and the affidavit has made out a proper showing, evidence on appeal that the property was of greater value than $100 will not be allowed to overthrow the jurisdiction and prevent the appeal from being decided on the merits.—Dinnen v. Baxter, 18 Mich. 457.

[e] (Mo. 1855) Where the plaintiff sued the defendant before a justice for the value of rails converted to his use, it was held that it was competent for the defendant to show in the district court on appeal that the land on which the rails were cut belonged to himself.—Wilson v. Petty, 21 Mo. 417.

[f] (N. H. 1851) On the trial of a cause brought before a justice of the peace and appealed, no evidence can be received that could not have been received before the justice.—Johnson v. Gould, 23 N. H. (3 Fost.) 251.

[g] (N. Y. 1846) On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace the defendant may give evidence drawing in question the title to lands, where the same is generally admissible under the pleadings, though such evidence could not have been received before the justice.—Whitcomb v. Green, 2 Denio, 113.

[h] (Pa. 1889) If an action is begun before a justice, in which both plaintiff's claim and defendant's offsets exceed the jurisdiction of the court, and on appeal to the common pleas both parties desire to dispose of the case on its merits, regardless of the jurisdictional amount, as if the action had been brought in court, it is too late to request the exclusion of evidence admitted for defendant without objection, on the ground that it tended to establish a demand beyond the jurisdiction of the justice.—O'Ferrall v. Moore, 127 Pa. 234, 17 Atl. 891.

[i] (S. C. 1880) On trial de novo of an appeal from a justice, the parties are not restricted to the evidence introduced before the justice.—Sternberger v. McSween, 14 S. C. 35.

[j] (Tenn. 1804) On appeal from a justice, a contract not within his jurisdiction cannot be given in evidence.—Wallen v. Lane, 1 Tenn. (1 Overt.) 74.

§ 698. Witnesses.

Witnesses in general, see "Witnesses."

[a] (Ala. 1832) While parties are allowed to give testimony in their own cause when the matter in controversy is not over $20, yet a defendant will not be permitted, after judgment has been rendered against him for more than $20 by a justice of the peace, to pay a part, so as to reduce the claim below that amount, and then take the case into the county court by appeal, and there on the trial de novo claim the benefit of his oath so as to swear off the balance, since on the trial de novo no evidence is admissible which would not have been admitted before the justice of the peace.—Thompson v. Jones, 2 Stew. & P. 46.

[b] (Ala. 1840) The statute authorizing either party to testify in his own behalf in appeal cases from a justice's court where the amount in controversy exceeds $20 does not apply to suits by or against corporations aggregate.—Alabama & T. R. Co. v. Oaks, 37 Ala. 694.

[c] (Ala. 1853) In appeal cases, where the amount in controversy is less than $20, the failure of the plaintiff to be present at the trial cannot deprive the defendant of his legal right to testify.—Wheeler v. Stockdale, 22 Ala. 658.

[d] (Ala. 1854) Where the demand in suit is under $20, both parties being competent witnesses for every purpose, it is discretionary with the court to permit the plaintiff to be reexamined for the purpose of rebutting the testimony of one of the defendant's witnesses.—Stein v. McArdle, 24 Ala. 344.

[e] (Ala. 1861) Code, § 2779, relating to the competency of parties as witnesses in appeal cases from a justice's court to the circuit court where the amount in controversy does not exceed $50, does not apply where pending an appeal to the supreme court the accrued interest has increased the amount beyond $50, and the cause is remanded for a second trial.—Hamblin v. McLendon, 37 Ala. 711.

[f] (Ala. 1863) In an action on an open account against an administrator, commenced in a justice's court, and removed by appeal to the circuit court, the plaintiff, by remitting all of his demand over $19.50, may become a general witness in the cause.—Deming's Adm'r v. Hamil, 38 Ala. 686.

[g] (Ark. 1854) Where competent witnesses enter into a recognizance to prosecute an appeal from a justice's court, the admission of their testimony in the appellate court is error, as they have a direct pecuniary interest in the event of the suit.—Hershy v. Clarksville Institute, 15 Ark. 128.

[h] (Ark. 1854) The statute enabling either party to make a witness of the adverse party to establish the demand sued for, or set-off, in suits before justices of the peace, applies to the same cause of action and set-off when removed into the circuit court by appeal for a trial de novo.—Drennen v. Lindsey, 15 Ark. 359.

[i] (Ark. 1856) Under the statute of this state allowing one party to call the opposite party as a witness, if such opposite party is called he is made a witness in the whole case, and not merely to establish the points sought to be proved by the party calling him, as well on appeal as in the justice's court.—Adkins v. Hershy, 17 Ark. 425.

[j] (Ind. 1859) From a judgment rendered against two defendants before a justice, where one appeals to the circuit court the one not appealing is a competent witness for the appellant.—Goodhue v. Palmer, 13 Ind. 457.

[jj] (Miss. 1847) On appeal from a justice either party may be examined under oath in the same manner as he could have been examined before the justice.—Russell v. Moore, 16 Miss. (8 Smedes & M.) 700.

[k] (Mo. 1839) Where the surety on an appeal bond is a material witness for appellant, it is error for the circuit court, after being satisfied as to the materiality of the witness, and after sufficient surety has been tendered in lieu of the original bond, to refuse to cancel such bond.—Thomas v. Alton, 5 Mo. 534.

[l] (Mo. 1845) The provision of the statute relating to justices' courts that either party to an action on a contract may call the adverse party as a witness, and, if the adverse party refuses to testify, the party calling him may testify in his own behalf, applies in the circuit court on appeal from a justice court.—Grigg v. Bodrio, 9 Mo. 223.

[m] (N. J. 1823) In order to introduce the testimony of a witness on the appeal who was not examined before the justice, his name, and the points and materiality of his testimony, must be set out in the reasons assigned for a new trial under the statute.—Hoagland v. Nevius, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 75.

[n] (N. J.) A witness not sworn before the justice could not be received in the common pleas to prove the interest of another witness who was sworn below.—(1824) Price v. Ward, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 127; (1825) Dunlop v. Patterson, 5 Cow. 243.

[o] (N. J. 1831) Though the appellant make the affidavit required by statute to enable him to examine a witness on the appeal who was not examined before the justice, yet, if it appear from the proceedings in the cause that the witness must have been known to the appellant before the time of the trial below, such witness ought not to be received on trial of the appeal.—Gulick v. Thompson, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 149.

[p] (N. J. 1834) The statute requiring a case on appeal to be tried on the same evidence which was offered before the justice means only that new witnesses shall not be introduced except to prove newly-discovered facts.—Sherron v. Humphreys, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 217.

[q] (N. J. 1836) On appeal either party has a right to call a witness examined below.—Nicholson v. Wood, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 403.

[r] (N. Y. 1824) On appeal from a justice the court at the trial is bound to discharge a surety for a prosecution, on motion, and substitute other competent security so that the first may be a witness for the appellant.—Tompkins v. Curtis, 3 Cow. 251.

[s] (Tex. 1848) The provision of the statute which gives a party the right, in a certain event, to testify in his own case before a justice of the peace, is equally applicable to that case when tried on appeal in the district court.—Hipp v. Ingram, 3 Tex. 17.

[t] (Wis. 1850) A notice that a party will be required as a witness, given under the statute relating to the swearing of parties as witnesses for a trial in justice's court, will not suffice, in case an appeal is taken, for the purposes of a trial in the appellate court. A new notice must be given.—Greene v. Holley, 2 Chand. 168, 2 Pin. 488.

[u] (Wis. 1875) On trial in the circuit court of a case appealed from a justice of the peace, such justice may be examined to show what the witness testified to on the trial before him.—Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216.

[v] (Wis. 1875) On trial in the circuit court of a case appealed from a justice's court, where the justice is examined to show what the witness testified to on the trial before him, he may refer to his minutes to refresh his memory.—Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216.

Necessity of submission of case to jury on default in appeals, see post, § 723.

§ 699. Mode and conduct of trial in general.

Reference of case on appeal as releasing surety on appeal bond, see post, § 741.

[a] (Ill. 1859) On appeal from a justice of the peace, a trial cannot be had on the transcript of the justice of the peace without further proof.—Shook v. Thomas, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 87.

[b] (Kan. 1875) Where a case is appealed from a justice's court to the district court, it should be tried in the district court, so far as the statute of limitations is concerned, in the same manner as if tried in the justice's court.—Sanford v. Shepard, 14 Kan. 228.

[c] (Kan. 1895) Where defendant, in an action on appeal from justice's court, stated that he would prove two defenses which were inconsistent, it was proper for the court to require him to elect on which defense he would rely, and confine his evidence thereto.—Ferguson v. Prince, 2 Kan. App. 7, 41 Pac. 988.

[d] (Mo. 1857) Trials in the circuit court of appeals from a justice of the peace must conform to the practice which prevailed before the enactment of the statute concerning practice, now in force.—Coffman v. Harrison, 24 Mo. 524.

[e] (Mo. 1875) Where a note sued upon before a justice of the peace is lost after appeal taken to the circuit court, the affidavit of loss contemplated by the statute (Wag. St. p. 81, § 10) is not required.—Lemon v. Cross, 60 Mo. 173.

[f] (N. J. 1877) On appeal the cause is tried de novo by the common pleas on its merits, and evidence admitted or excluded by the justice must be passed upon by the common pleas if offered, and judgment be given upon the proof made the same as though the cause had originally been brought in that court.—Burk v. Shreve, 39 N. J. Law (10 Vroom) 214.

[g] (N. Y. 1822) Where there was an appeal after a trial of an issue in fact, there should have been a new trial by jury, on the testimony of the same witnesses, of such issue, taken upon proper pleadings, in the court of common pleas.—Breese v. Williams, 20 Johns. 280.

[h] (N. Y. 1823) Under the act to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace (section 19), providing that on appeal from a justice court to the court of common pleas the latter shall proceed to hear the cause and examine the witnesses named in the return of the justice, and to hear such other witnesses as may be offered, the common pleas has no jurisdiction to refer a cause appealed from a justice court.—People v. Judges of Washington County Court of Common Pleas, 20 Johns. 363.

[i] (N. Y. 1827) Where there is a trial before the justice as to part only of the defendants, and an appeal by all, the common pleas should continue the cause and assess damages against those who did not plead below, though the defendants who did plead are acquitted in the common pleas for want of evidence.—People v. Judges of Onondaga County, 7 Cow. 492.

[j] (N. Y. 1866) Code, § 270, authorizes the county court to order a reference of a cause brought into it by appeal from a justice's court where there is an issue of fact joined, and the cause is referred by the latter court upon a written stipulation of the parties.—Hyland v. Loomis, 48 Barb. 126.

[k] (N. Y. 1888) Where two separate suits were commenced in a justice's court for trespass of cattle, in which plaintiff in one was defendant in the other, and the parties agreed that the cases should be tried together, and the cause of action in one was treated as an offset against the other, a similar manner of trying the cases should be pursued on appeal to the county court.—Carr v. Smith, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 466.

[l] (N. C. 1875) Upon judgment being rendered against the defendant in a suit before a magistrate's court, he prayed an appeal to the superior court, but took no further steps to prosecute it. The superior court submitted the case to a jury, who found a verdict for the plaintiff in the same sum for which the magistrate had rendered judgment. Held not error.—Thornburg v. Herron, 73 N. C. 281.

[m] (Ohio, 1858) A suit in case before a justice for obstructing a highway may, on appeal, be prosecuted as a civil action under the Code.—Hill v. Stonecreek Tp. Sup'rs, 10 Ohio St. 621.

§ 700. Right to open and close, and statements of counsel.

[a] (Ind. 1867) In a suit before a justice of the peace upon a promissory note, the defendant pleaded affirmative defenses only, and at the beginning of his answer admitted the execution and delivery of the note. On appeal, the issues remaining the same, the defendant orally admitted the execution of the note, and disclaimed all benefit of the general issue provided by the statute, and claimed to open and close the case. Held, that the burden of the issue was upon the defendant, and that he was entitled to open and close the case.—Blackledge v. Pine, 28 Ind. 466.

[b] (S. C. 1884) Defendant does not admit "by his pleadings" any part of plaintiff's case, so as to have the right to open and close, by an oral admission on appeal from the justice's court; he having made no admission below, where pleadings may be oral or written.—Mitchell v. Fowler, 21 S. C. 298.

[c] (Tex. 1895) Since an action by a county judge on a county convict labor bond running in his name is necessary for the benefit of the county, it was not error to allow counsel to state on the trial on appeal to the county court that the suit was in behalf of the county.—Johnson v. Johnson (Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 682.

[d] (Tex. 1895) Where an action on county convict-labor bonds was begun in the justice's court, and the transcript of the justice, by showing judgment against sureties only, shows that the death of the principal must have been suggested in such court, it was not error on appeal to the county court to allow counsel to state that the principal was dead.—Johnson v. Johnson (Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 682.

§ 701. Instructions.

[a] (Ill. 1878) The question of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is one of law and fact, and on an appeal from a justice's court, in an action of replevin, where the jurisdiction of the court in such cases is limited to property which does not exceed in value a specified sum, it is proper to instruct the jury, left to find a general verdict, what the conclusion of law is, if they find that the value of the property exceeded such specified amount.—Kirkpatrick v. Cooper, 89 Ill. 210.

§ 702. Verdict and findings.

[a] (Pa. 1813) In trover upon an appeal from a justice of the peace the jury in the common pleas may find to a greater amount than was within the jurisdiction of the justice.—McKinley v. McCalla, 5 Bin. 600.

§ 703. Trial by court.

[a] (Ala. 1857) Though by the Code an appeal from a justice is required to be tried according to equity and justice, on an issue to be made up under the direction of the court, and tried by a jury, yet the parties may, by agreement, waive these statutory rights, and submit the case to the decision of the court.—Stein v. Jackson, 31 Ala. 24.

[b] (Ind. 1851) If neither party on appeal to the circuit court require a jury, the cause may be tried without a jury, though the amount in controversy exceed $20.—Lane v. Leet, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 535.

[c] (Mo. 1853) No finding of fact is necessary in the trial of appeals from justices' courts by the court without a jury.—Haase v. Stevens, 18 Mo. 476; Sickles v. Patterson, Id. 479.

[d] (Mo.) Cases which come by appeal from justices of the peace are not regulated by the Code, in respect to finding facts by the court, when the trial is without a jury, and hypothetical instructions or declarations of law by the court is the practice to be pursued in such cases.—(1853) Soutier v. Kellerman, 18 Mo. 509; (1853) Clemens & Broomfield, 19 Mo. 118; (1855) Clohecy v. Ragan, 20 Mo. 453.

[e] (Tenn. 1845) In case a motion against a sheriff for the nonreturn of an execution is commenced before a justice of the peace and carried by appeal to the circuit court, it is not necessary that the facts be submitted to a jury, but the court should hear the evidence as if the cause had been commenced in the circuit court.—Clingman v. Barrett, 25 Tenn. (6 Humph.) 20.

§ 704. Attachment and garnishment proceedings.

[a] (Ala. 1885) Where a garnishee appeals from a judgment rendered against him on his answer denying the indebtedness, the case stands in the circuit court as if there had been no judicial action on the contest, and the plaintiff must tender an issue in writing. He cannot claim a judgment by default.—Lehman v. Hudmon, 79 Ala. 532.

[b] (Ala. 1887) Where the garnishee, on an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, fails to appear at the time of hearing, the court need not order a continuance, but may submit the issues to a jury, and enter judgment against him.—Lehman v. Hudmon, 85 Ala. 135, 4 South. 741.

[c] (Ill. 1856) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, further interrogatories may be propounded to a garnishee.—Oliver v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 587.

[d] (Ill. 1861) On appeal from the judgment of a justice the defendant may show in defense that, having been garnished on account of his indebtedness on such judgment, he has made payments on the judgments against him as garnishee, and such payment will furnish a defense pro tanto, and no notice of such defense is necessary.—Minard v. Lawler, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 301.

[e] (Ill. 1879) On appeal from the justice of the peace in proceedings against a garnishee, the transcript of the proceedings before the justice is not competent evidence to show an indebtedness from the garnishee.—Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Killenberg, 92 Ill. 142.

[f] (Kan. 1889) A bond releasing garnishment proceedings in a justice court, and binding the obligor to pay any judgment which might be rendered against defendant on the final hearing of the case, binds them to pay a final judgment rendered against defendant in the district court on appeal by plaintiff; and the fact that after judgment for defendant in the justice court the garnishment proceedings could, but for the bond, have been revived by appeal or error, constitutes sufficient consideration for continuing the obligation of the bond after such judgment for defendant.—Washer v. Campbell, 40 Kan. 747, 21 Pac. 671.

[g] (Mich. 1859) A plaintiff is not at liberty to controvert the statement of a garnishee either in justice court or on appeal, but he may examine the garnishee anew in the circuit court for the purpose of a more full discovery.—Newell v. Blair, 7 Mich. 103.

[h] (Mich. 1859) A garnishee may be permitted to correct under oath in the circuit court a mistake made by him on his examination before the justice.—Newell v. Blair, 7 Mich. 103.

[i] (Mich. 1859) The examination of the garnishee before the justice, taken in writing and subscribed by him, is legitimate evidence against him on appeal.—Newell v. Blair, 7 Mich. 103.

[j] (Mich. 1859) Where the garnishee on his examination before a justice admitted that he had money in his hands collected for defendant, but stated that he had been informed that these moneys had been assigned before service of the garnishee process, he was entitled to introduce evidence of such assignment on removal of the cause to the circuit court by appeal.—Newell v. Blair, 7 Mich. 103.

[k] (Mich. 1885) A garnishee's disclosure filed in justice's court, or the justice's written minutes of his disclosure, cannot be contradicted on appeal by the oral testimony of the justice or of any one else as to what he disclosed; nor can it be so supplemented as to increase the liability admitted thereby.—Isabelle v. Iron Cliffs Co., 57 Mich. 120, 23 N. W. 613.

[l] (Mich. 1890) In garnishment proceedings before a justice the garnishee may show on appeal that a disclosure made by him, as taken down in the minutes of the justice and signed by the garnishee, was not the disclosure actually made, as the minutes of the justice did not import absolute verity.—Sutherland v. Burrill, 82 Mich. 13, 45 N. W. 1122.

[m] (Mo. 1882) On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace against a garnishee, the parties stipulated that any facts appearing in the transcript of said justice in this case, or in the papers transmitted to the superior court, and not inconsistent with the facts agreed to, should be considered by the court. Held, that the answers of the garnishee, which had been traversed by plaintiff, could not be considered as facts appearing in the case.—Clark v. Kinealy, 13 Mo. App. 104.

[n] (Tenn. 1874) A garnishee may, in the circuit court, dispute the facts recited in a justice's judgment against him, where his answer has not been reduced to writing and signed by him.—Taylor v. Kain, 67 Tenn. (8 Baxt.) 35.

[o] (Tenn. 1888) On appeal from a justice's judgment against a garnishee, the judgment and unsatisfied execution against the debtor in the original proceedings must be produced, to enable the circuit court to render judgment against the garnishee; and proof of such judgment cannot be rested on the garnishee summons, duly served, reciting therein an unsatisfied execution against the judgment debtor, or on the justice's judgment against the garnishee, though it appears that the justice had jurisdiction of the garnishee.—Miller v. Wilson, 86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 495, 7 S. W. 638.

[p] (Wis. 1893) The writ of attachment cannot issue in an action pending in the circuit court, on appeal by plaintiff from a justice's judgment in his favor for a sum less than that claimed by him, since such action, on appeal, is not an action ex contractu to recover money.—Zechman v. Haak, 85 Wis. 656, 56 N. W. 158.

§ 705. Presumptions in general.

[a] (Ala. 1847) Where it appears from the papers sent up by a justice of the peace to the circuit court that three judgments had been rendered by him against a garnishee, and the condition of the appeal bond recites that an appeal was taken in "the three different cases," but the transcript of the justice contains the papers in but one only, it cannot be intended that all the cases were consolidated by the justice.—Carter v. Pickard, 11 Ala. 673.

[b] (Ark. 1849) In an action before a justice of the peace the defendant moved that the case be dismissed because the justice had forfeited his office by accepting that of deputy sheriff, which motion was overruled. After judgment the defendant applied to the supreme court to have the judgment superseded for the same cause, but the supersedeas was refused because the transcript of the case contained no evidence of the fact that the justice had accepted the office of deputy sheriff.—State Bank v. Curran, 10 Ark. (5 Eng.) 142.

[c] (Conn. 1838) Where an action at its commencement is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, every act of the court subsequently done will be presumed to have been rightfully done, till the contrary appears.—Fox v. Hoyt, 12 Conn. 491, 31 Am. Dec. 760.

[d] (Conn. 1867) There is no presumption that a court of a justice of the peace was adjourned to a certain day from the fact that an appeal was allowed on that day.—Jackson v. New Milford Toll Bridge Co., 34 Conn. 266.

[e] (Ind. 1876) In an action on a replevin bond taken before a justice, which does not exceed double the sum of which a justice has jurisdiction, the supreme court will presume that the value of the property replevied was within a justice's jurisdiction.—Tyler v. Bowlus, 54 Ind. 333, 601.

[f] (Iowa, 1872) Where the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is by consent of the parties (Revision, § 3850) extended to a case involving a sum greater than $100, an appellate court will presume that such consent was given before the institution of the suit and the issuing of an attachment therein. The rule that courts and officers are presumed to act rightly is extended to inferior courts.—Hodge v. Ruggles, 36 Iowa, 42.

[g] (Me. 1844) In order to obtain the reversal of the judgment of a justice by a writ of error, sufficient cause for the reversal should appear either upon the record or upon legal exceptions.—Simpson v. Wilson, 24 Me. (11 Shep.) 437.

[h] (Minn. 1871) In a case where a justice has jurisdiction the same presumptions prevail as to the regularity of proceedings therein as in the case of courts of record.—Clague v. Hodgson, 16 Minn. 329 (Gil. 291).

[i] (Mo. 1880) It will be presumed, in the absence of evidence, that a justice who entered a judgment was the proper custodian of the records thereof, and the proper person to certify to a transcript thereof.—State, to Use of Lalley, v. Carroll, 9 Mo. App. 275.

[j] (Mo. 1890) Where a justice makes and certifies a copy from the docket of his predecessor in office, the act raises a presumption that he is lawfully in possession of the docket, which will continue until the contrary appears.—Powers v. Braley, 41 Mo. App. 556.

[k] (Mo. 1892) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 6337, requiring that in appeals from justices the original papers shall be sent to the circuit court, and, with the justice's transcript, shall constitute the record, where plaintiff's petition states three causes of action, and defendant alleges a counterclaim, and the judgment is for the amount of the third cause of action, but neither the other two causes nor the counterclaim are mentioned in the transcript, the court may nevertheless presume that these were tried below, and admit evidence on the first two counts.—Medart v. Baker's Eureka Hot Air & Stove Burner Mfg. Co., 51 Mo. App. 19.

[l] (Mo. 1894) Where the record shows that a person acted officially as a justice of the peace, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he held such office at the time.—McHoney v. Kerwin, 56 Mo. App. 459.

[m] (Neb. 1884) Where the transcript of a justice's docket shows that the parties were present at the trial, the supreme court will not presume that judgment was rendered by default.—Rawalt v. Brewer, 16 Neb. 444, 20 N. W. 391.

[n] (N. J. 1884) Every intendment should be made in favor of the orders of the justices, if jurisdictional facts can be gathered therefrom.—Schomp v. Tompkins, 46 N. J. Law (17 Vroom) 608.

[o] (Ohio, 1859) Where a justice is required to enter on his docket the fact that certain things were done in the progress of a case pending before him, in the absence of such entry it will be presumed that they were not done.—McCarty v. Blake, 2 Ohio Dec. 155.

[p] (Ohio, 1861) Where jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter affirmatively appear, every other matter necessary to support a judgment of a justice will be presumed, unless the statute requires it to appear of record, or unless it is preliminary and necessary to the right to exercise jurisdiction.—Howell v. Jenkins, 2 Ohio Dec. 552.

[q] (Ohio, 1880) Where it appears that a justice of the peace has taken and approved bail for stay of execution, on a judgment on his docket, by which execution was stayed for the time provided by the statute, it will be presumed, on proceedings in error by the judgment debtor, to reverse said judgment, that the same was stayed at his instance.—Shafer v. Hockheimer, 36 Ohio St. 215.

[r] (Pa. 1831) In examining formal exceptions to the proceedings of justices, every fair presumption is to be made in their favor.—Cornish v. Young, 1 Ashm. 153.

[s] (Pa. 1873) The court will make every reasonable presumption in favor of a justice's proceeding consistent with the record.—Com. v. Myers, 5 Lanc. Bar, No. 2, p. 1.

[t] (Pa. 1886) In proceedings by an administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. to recover possession of premises leased from his intestate under Act March 21, 1772, if the record of the magistrate trying the case avers that the jurors were 12 "substantial freeholders" a presumption is raised that there was sufficient evidence to correct the sheriff's return; such return not showing that the sheriff had summoned "twelve substantial freeholders."—Appeal of Mullin, 5 Atl. 738.

[u] (Pa. 1895) In an action in a justice's court for failure to complete a building according to contract, plaintiff demanded $300, and the justice gave judgment for $194.05. After appeal the parties submitted the controversy to three persons, whose award was to be final. They awarded plaintiff $214. In support of exceptions by defendants, they testified that plaintiff claimed before the arbitrators $478. Held, that it did not appear that the sum in controversy exceeded $300.—Kuhn v. Eggers (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 155, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 156.

[v] (Wis. 1862) To justify the reversal of a justice's judgment for an improper taxation of costs, error must be affirmatively shown, and no presumption will be allowed against the regularity of the proceedings.—Meyer v. Foster, 16 Wis. 294.

§ 706. —— Process and appearance.

[a] (Iowa, 1859) Suit was brought before a justice against two defendants, one of whom resided in another town in the county. The nonresident moved to dismiss, and sustained his motion by affidavit. The motion was overruled, and on error to the district court the return of the justice to the writ showed the defendant's nonresidence, but did not show where the service was made. Held, that the want of jurisdiction was not shown by the return, and that there was no error in affirming the judgment of the justice.—Johnson v. Ryan, 10 Iowa, 588.

[b] (N. Y. 1859) In the return day of a summons in justice's court, the president of a corporation put in an answer, and the case was adjourned. On the adjourned day, judgment was taken by default. Held, on appeal, that it was to be presumed that the appearance of the president was authorized, and that the judgment was regular.—Oakley v. Workingmen's Union Benev. Soc., 2 Hilt. 487.

[c] (N. Y. 1863) Where it appears in the return of a justice of the peace that he issued a summons, no informality being affirmatively shown, the court will presume that the summons was in the proper form. If there is any informality, the party objecting should make it appear.—Potter v. Whittaker, 27 How. Prac. 10.

[d] (N. Y. 1871) A short summons, being an extraordinary process, can only issue on proper preliminary proof; and, as jurisdiction is not obtained without such proof, a judgment in a justice's court is to be presumed void on appeal until the party on whom the onus is thrown supplies that proof, and a mere memorandum, "affi. short summons," on the justice's docket, is not sufficient evidence that the justice had jurisdiction.—Rue v. Perry, 41 How. Prac. 385.

[e] (N. C. 1861) Where there was a trial before a justice of the peace and an appeal, and no objection to the service of the warrant appears on the face of the proceedings, the appellate court will presume that the objection was waived.—Taylor v. Marcus, 53 N. C. (8 Jones, Law) 402.

[f] (Wis. 1863) Where the return of a justice states that the parties "appeared," this, in the absence of any qualification, must be taken to have been a general appearance, and a waiver of process.—Cron v. Krones, 17 Wis. 401.

§ 707. —— Pleadings.

[a] (U. S. 1880) Under a statute allowing justices of the peace jurisdiction in actions to recover possession of personal property claimed, the value of which, as stated in the affidavit of plaintiff, his agent or attorney, shall not exceed the sum of $200, and providing that before process shall issue the plaintiff or agent shall make proof by affidavit showing the "actual value" of the property claimed, the fact that the justice of the peace, with the consent of the parties, tried the case, and that it did not affirmatively appear by proof that there was no affidavit, does not raise a presumption in support of the judgment that there was such affidavit.—Daily v. Doe (D. C.) 3 Fed. 903.

[b] (Ark. 1892) Mansf. Dig. § 4050, provides that, in a suit before a justice where the defense is oral, the justice shall enter the substance thereof on his docket. Held, where the record shows that issue was joined in the justice court, but affords no means of ascertaining what it was, that the appellate court will not hold that any fact necessary to make out plaintiff's case was admitted, the defendant not being prejudiced by the failure of the justice to make the proper entries.—School Dist. No. 7 v. Reeve, 56 Ark. 68, 19 S. W. 106.

[c] (Ill. 1859) The statute of frauds, etc., is presumed to have been pleaded in an action before a justice of the peace.—Comstock v. Ward, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 248.

[d] (Ill. 1861) Upon an appeal from a justice before whom there were no written pleadings, the plaintiff will be presumed to have averred in the verbal statement of his case that the writing upon which the suit was brought was signed by the defendant.—Griswold v. Trustees of Peoria University, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 41, 79 Am. Dec. 361.

[e] (Ind. 1841) Where, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, his transcript stated that a plea had been filed, without showing what it was, it must be presumed to have been a statutory plea allowed in actions before justices of the peace requiring proof of the demand.—Burger v. Becket, 6 Blackf. 61.

[f] (Ind. 1854) In a cause commenced before a justice of the peace, where the record does not disclose a cause of action, it will be presumed on error that none was filed.—Beaird v. United States, 5 Ind. 220.

[g] (Iowa, 1854) In the absence of anything to the contrary, the court on appeal will presume that there was a general denial of indebtedness at a trial before a justice of the peace.—Sinnamon v. Melbourn, 4 G. Greene, 309.

[h] (Iowa, 1858) On an appeal after a trial before a justice, a general denial will be presumed to have been made unless the contrary appear.—Hall v. Denise, 6 Iowa (6 Clarke) 534; Clark v. Barnes, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 6.

[i] (Mich. 1870) On appeal from a justice of the peace, where an affidavit for a special return by the justice states the time of making a motion, the denial of which is alleged to be error, and the return shows the motion, but does not specify the time when it was made, it will be presumed to have been made at the time stated in the affidavit, in the absence of an application by the opposite party for a further return.—Brown v. Kelley, 20 Mich. 27.

[j] (Mich. 1896) Under How. Ann. St. § 7008, requiring a justice of the peace, in his return to the circuit court in case of appeal, to give copies of the pleadings, if in writing, where the return does not show and the record does not state whether the pleadings were written or verbal it will be presumed that they were verbal.—Kerr v. Bennett, 109 Mich. 546, 67 N. W. 564.

[k] (Minn. 1871) Where, on appeal, the transcript of a justice shows the affidavit and bond in replevin to have been duly filed, but they are not included in the return, it will be presumed that the affidavit was in due form.—Hecklin v. Ess, 16 Minn. 51 (Gil. 38).

[l] (Minn.) Where the record in a justice's court is silent upon the question of verification of the complaint, it will be presumed to have been verified.—(1872) Tyrrell v. Jones, 18 Minn. 312 (Gil. 281); (1875) Burt v. Bailey, 21 Minn. 403.

[m] (Neb. 1887) Where, in an action for money before a justice of the peace, it is shown by the docket of the justice that prior to the day of trial the defendant offered to confess judgment in favor of the plaintiff for a certain sum, which the plaintiff refused to accept, there is no presumption that the offer was not in writing, as required by Civ. Code, § 1004; and in such case the decision of the district court on a motion to tax costs to plaintiff for the reason that the judgment did not exceed the offer will not be molested.—Underhill v. Shea, 21 Neb. 154, 31 N. W. 510.

[n] (Neb. 1887) Where, in an action tried before a justice of the peace, no bill of particulars is set out in the record, but there is a finding of the justice that "there is due and owing from defendant to plaintiff, upon the account sued upon, the sum of $52.77, with interest from June 1, 1885," it will be presumed that the account was before the justice when he rendered judgment.—Bell v. White Lake Lumber Co., 21 Neb. 525, 32 N. W. 561.

[o] (Tenn. 1871) The rule that every fair presumption will be adopted in support of a justice's judgment applied where there were no written pleadings, and where the docket entries, though inaccurate, were sufficiently intelligible to identify the cause.—Hutchinson v. Fulghum, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 550.

[p] (Tenn. 1873) On appeal from the judgment in an action on an account begun before a justice of the peace, the justice's warrant showed merely an action for "a debt due by account, under $250," but did not show whether such account was an open or a liquidated account. The bonds for appeal to the circuit and the supreme courts were such as were required for appeals from judgments on liquidated accounts. Held that, in the absence of contrary evidence, it should be presumed that the account was a liquidated account signed by the debtor.—Mason v. Anderson, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 40.

[q] (Tex. 1895) On an appeal from a justice court, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the pleadings are the same as those in the justice court.—Porter v. Russek (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 72.

[r] (Tex. 1895) Though the transcript on an appeal by plaintiff from a justice court fails to show that any plea was made, it will be presumed that a general denial was entered.—Fessman v. Seeley (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 268.

[s] (Tex. 1895) Where, on appeal from a justice, his transcript fails to show that he noted the pleadings on his docket, appearance in the transcript of a general denial filed by defendant does not raise a conclusive presumption that he filed no other pleading there, or prevent the showing by parol of what pleadings were filed there.—Howard v. Faggard (Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 188.

§ 708. —— Correctness of rulings or decision.

[a] (Ark. 1885) Where, on the pleadings, the justice of the peace could not have done otherwise than sustain the attachment, it will be presumed, in favor of his judgment, that he did so.—Giles v. Hicks, 45 Ark. 271.

[b] (Conn. 1846) In assumpsit before a justice of the peace, where the declaration contained a third count, which was outside the justice's jurisdiction, and entirely separate and distinct from the other counts, on appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff the county court may consider the third count as matter with which the justice had nothing to do, and presume that he correctly disregarded it on the trial before him.—Lyon v. Alvord, 18 Conn. 66.

[c] (Iowa, 1856) On an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the burden of showing that a ruling complained of was erroneous rests upon the appellant, as it is presumed that the ruling of the justice was correct.—McKinney v. Hartman, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 344.

[d] (Iowa, 1859) The upper court on appeal will not presume that plaintiff below was allowed to introduce an account book to prove a settled account.—Lord v. Ellis, 9 Iowa, 301.

[e] (Mich. 1859) In an action brought in justice's court under the statute giving treble damages for trespass on lands and cutting and carrying off timber, etc., where the proof given in such action without objection only shows plaintiff to own one undivided half of the premises, but no plea in abatement has been interposed, the nonjoinder of the other owner as plaintiff only goes to apportion the damages; and in error, where it is not claimed or objected that entire damages were assessed, the court will not presume that they were not apportioned.—Achey v. Hull, 7 Mich. 423.

[f] (Mich. 1873) Where the return of the justice to the appeal sets forth that the cause was tried by him without a jury on the 12th, and that he rendered judgment on the 17th, it will not be presumed, in support of the judgment, in the absence of anything showing that to be the fact, that the cause was not finally submitted to him until the 13th.—Harrison v. Sager, 27 Mich. 476.

[g] (Mich. 1873) Where the justice, in his return to a special appeal, states that he refuses to allow an amendment to a pleading, without giving the grounds for such ruling, it is error for the circuit court to assume that the ruling was made upon any particular and erroneous ground, when another and admissible ground is equally consistent with the return.—Albert v. Sutton, 28 Mich. 2.

[h] (Mich. 1885) Where, on appeal in an action before a justice, the testimony has not been reduced to writing, and it does not appear that either party requested it, and the justice returns that he is unable to return the whole of the testimony, the presumption is that there was sufficient evidence to support his judgment.—Gray v. Wilcox, 56 Mich. 58, 22 N. W. 109.

[i] (Minn. 1877) Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 106, as amended by Laws 1872, c. 66, and Laws 1873, c. 66, provides that a justice, upon request of either party to a suit, shall return a transcript of the evidence to the district court. Held, where no such request is made, and it is not shown by the magistrate's return that all the evidence is in fact returned, it must be presumed that there was sufficient evidence to support the judgment of the justice.—Hinds v. American Exp. Co., 24 Minn. 95.

[j] (Minn. 1882) Where the record on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace does not purport to contain all the evidence, nor show that either party requested a full return, it must be presumed that there was sufficient competent evidence to warrant the judgment.—Warner v. Fishbach, 29 Minn. 262, 13 N. W. 47.

[k] (Mo. 1842) On appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace refusing to consolidate suits and dismiss for want of jurisdiction, it must clearly appear, to support the appeal, that several suits were pending before the justice.—Sykes v. Planters' House, 7 Mo. 477.

[l] (Mo. 1892) In garnishment proceedings before a justice of the peace, where the answer of the garnishee alleges that the situs of the debt was outside the justice's jurisdiction, which answer is denied, and it appears from the record that a trial of the issues thus raised was had, and found against the garnishee, it will be presumed on appeal that the matters alleged in the answer were not proven on the trial.—Martin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 50 Mo. App. 428.

[m] (Neb. 1896) Where a transcript shows the filing before a justice of a bill of particulars, accompanied by a demand for judgment, and an acknowledgment by defendant, in writing, of the indebtedness, with a request for entry of judgment therefor, the assent of plaintiff will be presumed.—Spaulding v. Johnson, 48 Neb. 830, 67 N. W. 874.

[n] (N. J. 1808) Although a judgment rendered by a justice in the absence of defendant, without proof of plaintiff's claim, is error, yet where defendant was present it will be presumed that the justice rendered the judgment after having the plaintiff's case fully established, although the docket does not disclose the examination of any witnesses.—Fleming v. Newman, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 419.

[o] (N. J. 1828) The supreme court will not reverse the judgment of a justice on account of an omission to charge the jury upon a specific proposition stated by counsel, unless it be made clearly to appear that the proposition was warranted by the evidence, and necessarily involved in the verdict to be rendered.—Davison v. Schooley, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 145.

[p] (N. Y. 1839) In trespass in justice's court against the collector of a school district, who was alleged to have made a levy previous to a demand of payment of the taxes, a judgment in defendant's favor will not be reversed merely because it does not appear from the justice's return that it was proved that a demand was made previous to levy.—Oakley v. Van Horn, 21 Wend. 305.

[q] (N. Y. 1853) Where evidence is admitted by the justice after objection, and it appears from the return that the objection was general, and the court can see that the subject-matter of the evidence was proper, and the manner of proving such facts only was objectionable, it will presume that no objection was made to the manner of proving the fact, but that it was made to any proof of such fact.—Bellows v. Sackett, 15 Barb. 96.

[r] (N. Y. 1853) Where evidence offered before a justice is objected to and excluded, and neither the grounds of the objection nor the object of the proof is stated, and the court can see that a good objection might have been taken, it will presume that the proper objection was taken, and the decision made on that ground.—Bellows v. Sackett, 15 Barb. 96.

[s] (N. Y. 1859) In an action in a justice's court for taking personal property, the justice's return shows that he rendered a judgment for damages, with costs,—$2.74. Held, that the legitimate inference to be drawn from the return was that he rendered a judgment against the defendant for some amount of damages, with $2.74 costs; no claim being alleged or proved to authorize the justice to award damages to the defendant.—Slaman v. Buckley, 29 Barb. 289.

[t] (N. Y. 1887) The rule that reasonable intendments go in support of a judgment applies to a justice's judgment, because the affirmance of the judgment of the county court must depend on errors committed in that of the justice.—Village of Suspension Bridge v. Bedford, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 850.

[u] (N. C. 1831) In reviewing a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, every fact necessary to support it is to be taken as found, unless the contrary appears.—Haines v. Dalton, 14 N. C. 91.

[v] (Ohio, 1860) In support of the judgment of a justice, it will be presumed, on error, that every fact necessary to authorize it was proved.—Niven v. Smith, 2 Ohio Dec. 337.

[w] (Ohio, 1861) A judgment rendered by a justice under Justice Code, § 7, providing that if a debtor shall appear before a justice without process, and confess that he is indebted to another, such justice, on the application of the creditor, may render judgment thereon, will not be reversed, on petition in error filed by the judgment debtor, because the justice's docket does not show that it was rendered on the application of the creditor, as such fact will be presumed.—Wilson v. Wickersham, 2 Ohio Dec. 545.

§ 709. —— Conduct of hearing.

[a] (Mich. 1848) Under Sess. Laws 1842, p. 135, § 4, prohibiting justices from holding court in any place where intoxicating liquors are sold, it will not be presumed that spirituous liquors are sold in the barroom of a tavern where a justice court is held, unless by law every license to keep a tavern authorizes the sale thereof.—Savier v. Chipman, 1 Mich. (Man.) 116.

[b] (Minn. 1871) Where a justice's docket recites that a jury retired under charge of a constable, were sworn, returned into court, etc., it will be presumed that they were duly kept together, agreed, and delivered their verdict in due form.—Clague v. Hodgson, 16 Minn. 329 (Gil. 291).

[c] (Mo. 1863) The statute concerning practice in justices' courts provides that on default in that court the justice shall hear the plaintiff's proofs, and judgment be rendered accordingly. Upon appeal from such judgment, the record omitting to show that the preliminary proof was made, the court will assume that the necessary proceedings were had before the justice.—Hendrickson v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co., 34 Mo. 188, 84 Am. Dec. 76.

[d] (Neb. 1891) Where the transcript of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace on the verdict of a jury gives the names of the jurors, and shows that no objection was made to the manner of selecting the jury, it will be presumed that the jury was selected in the mode pointed out in the statute.—Gapen v. Bretternitz, 31 Neb. 302, 47 N. W. 918.

[e] (N. Y. 1842) It is no ground for reversing the judgment of a justice of the peace that his report does not state whether the plaintiff was present or called when the verdict was rendered by the jury.—Baum v. Tarpenny, 3 Hill, 75.

[f] (N. Y. 1863) A judgment of a justice's court will not be reversed on appeal on the ground that the justice improperly denied an application for an adjournment of the cause, not giving any reasons for it at the time, unless the error affirmatively appears. It will be inferred, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the justice openly stated his reasons for refusing the adjournment.—Decker v. Hassel, 26 How. Prac. 528.

[g] (N. Y. 1888) On appeal from a judgment in a justice's court on default, it will not be presumed that the justice did not wait an hour before proceeding to trial, in the absence of any return respecting any such matter.—Crown Point Iron Co. v. Fitzgerald, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 427.

[h] (N. Y. 1880) It is not necessary that a justice's return should affirmatively show that the justice waited an hour after the time mentioned in the summons before proceeding with the cause in defendant's absence, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2893, as the court will intend that the proceedings were regular until the contrary plainly appears.—Knight v. Wilson, 55 Hun, 559, 9 N. Y. Supp. 20.

[i] (Wis. 1862) Where the return of a justice on appeal does not show that the jury left the court to consider of their verdict, the judgment of the justice will not be reversed because it does not appear that an officer was sworn to take charge of them.—Meyer v. Foster, 16 Wis. 294.

[j] (Wis. 1864) After a cause was submitted by both parties, the justice took time to consider, and made the entry on his docket that the cause was continued to a specified time and hour, but without mentioning any place. Held, that it would be presumed that the decision was rendered where the cause was tried.—Wheeler v. Smith, 18 Wis. 651.

[k] (Wis. 1882) A cause was adjourned by a justice to a certain day, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and was called on that day at 2 o'clock. At 3 o'clock the plaintiffs appeared and filed proof of publication of notice. The defendant was not present. The docket recited that an amended complaint was filed, and that thereupon judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs. Held, that it will be presumed on appeal that the case was held open without judgment for one hour after the time fixed for appearance.—Storm v. Adams, 56 Wis. 137, 14 N. W. 69.

[l] (Wis. 1883) Though the failure of a justice of the peace to enter in his docket the place, as well as the time, to which a cause pending before him is adjourned, defeats his jurisdiction, unless the parties voluntarily appear in the action subsequently, and renders all subsequent proceedings therein void, this failure must be clearly shown by the return of the justice before the judgment will be reversed on that account alone.—Witt v. Henge, 58 Wis. 244, 16 N. W. 609.

[m] (Wis. 1883) Where the docket of a justice shows that a case was called on the return day of the summons, it will be presumed that it was called at the hour named in the process.—Driscoll v. Smith, 59 Wis. 38, 17 N. W. 876.

§ 710. —— Proceedings for appeal and transcript.

[a] (Fla. 1856) In appealing from the judgment of a justice court, where the record furnishes no evidence at what time the court adjourned, the presumption at law is that in approving the bond he did his duty, and that the same was perfected within the time prescribed by the statute.—Summerlin v. Tyler, 6 Fla. 718.

[b] (Minn. 1866) Under Pub. St. c. 59, § 139, providing that, on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, he shall return to the district court "all the process and other papers" relating to the suit filed with him, where this return does not include the affidavit for appeal required by Pub. St. c. 59, § 136, it will be presumed that none was filed, and the district court has no jurisdiction.—McFarland v. Butler, 11 Minn. 72 (Gil. 42); Id., 11 Minn. 77 (Gil. 44).

[c] (Minn. 1870) A written admission of service of notice of appeal will be presumed to have been made on the day of its date; and it is immaterial that the transcript does not show when the notice was filed, and that there is no evidence as to when the admission of service was indorsed on the notice.—Rahilly v. Lane, 15 Minn. 447 (Gil. 360).

[d] (Mo. 1885) The allowance of an appeal by a justice of the peace does not justify a presumption that an application had been made to set aside the default, although such an application is an essential prerequisite to the right of appeal.—Graves v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 18 Mo. App. 647.

[e] (Mo. 1893) A transcript of a justice's judgment showed that the defendant prayed an appeal and signed a bond upon the day the judgment was rendered, and that the bond was approved and the appeal allowed on the following day. Held, that under a statute which provided that no appeal should be allowed by a justice unless bond, with surety, should be given, the presumption was that the appeal bond was not completed until the day on which it was approved.—Hammel v. Weis, 54 Mo. App. 14.

[f] (N. Y. 1824) On appeal from the judgment of the justice, appellee cannot object to the hearing on the ground that the justice had not indorsed his approbation on the appeal bond, or omitted to file it within the time required by statute, as his approval will be presumed from a subsequent filing.—Sholts v. Judges of Yates County, 2 Cow. 506.

[g] (N. Y. 1862) A justice's return, made under section 360 of the Code of Procedure, setting out testimony in detail, should be understood as stating the whole of the evidence, in conformity with the requirement of the statute, without an express averment to that effect, unless the contrary distinctly appears.—Orcutt v. Cahill, 24 N. Y. 578.

[h] (N. Y. 1863) The return of a justice of the peace to an appeal from the judgment, under the Code, setting forth the evidence in detail, is to be considered as stating the whole testimony, unless the contrary distinctly appears.—Hance v. Cayuga & S. R. Co., 26 N. Y. 428.

[i] (Tex. 1881) A bond marked "Filed" by a justice of the peace, and appearing in the record as an appeal bond, will be presumed by the county court on appeal to have been approved by the justice.—E. L. & R. R. Co. v. Davis, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 563.

[j] (Tex. 1885) Where the bond on appeal from a justice has been filed by him, a formal approval thereof is unnecessary, or will be presumed from the filing and the return of it to the proper court.—Whitman Agricultural Co. v. Voss, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 548.

[k] (Tex. 1886) Within two days after the rendition of a judgment in justice court, appellant delivered to the justice an appeal bond in due form for the purpose of removing the cause to the county court. At the time the bond was delivered the justice was sick, and in a few days thereafter died. His successor in office forwarded the papers in the cause to the county court, among which was the appeal bond, but which had no file or approval mark upon it. Held that, the bond having been found with the papers in the cause, it would be presumed that the justice approved it when he received it.—Jones v. Wells, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 94.

[l] (Wis. 1881) On an appeal from a justice's to a county court under Rev. St. §§ 3763, 3769, where the case is to be heard in the appellate court on the evidence taken by the justice and the proceedings in his court, it is not necessary that the justice should certify that the evidence returned as taken before him is all of the evidence in the case; but, in the absence of any motion for a further return, that fact will be presumed.—Bruins v. Downey, 51 Wis. 120, 8 N. W. 110.

§ 711. Harmless error.

Errors not considered on trial de novo, see ante, § 661.

[a] A judgment of a justice will not be reversed by reason of an error in taxing costs.—(N. Y. 1838) Fuller v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 351; (1884) Irr v. Schroeder, 6 Civ. Proc. R. 253.

CONTRA, see
(Ohio, 1896) Crull v. Morgan, 11 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 537, 5 O. C. D. 274.

[b] (U. S. 1822) In Arkansas, it is no ground of reversing the judgment of a justice rendered on a specialty that neither plaintiff nor his agent appeared at the trial.—Taylor v. Hogan, Fed. Cas. No. 13,794a [1 Hemp. 16].

[c] (Ala. 1878) A judgment by a city court, where the presiding judge decided both the law and fact on waiver of a jury, will not be reversed because of erroneous rulings on defective counts filed on appeal from a justice, where there is one good count, and the judgment is right on the evidence.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Meyer, 61 Ala. 158, 32 Am. Rep. 1.

[d] (Cal. 1860) Pleadings in justices' courts should be liberally construed; and, to authorize the reversal of a judgment for errors in this respect, it should appear that the defects complained of were calculated to mislead the adverse party.—Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 372, 76 Am. Dec. 538.

[e] (Ind. 1873) In an action commenced before a justice of the peace, sustaining a demurrer to a good paragraph of an answer that is not a plea in abatement, an answer of set-off, or an answer of the statute of limitations, is harmless error.—Bernhamer v. Conard, 45 Ind. 151.

[f] (Ind. 1876) On a trial before a justice, any matter of defense, except the statute of limitations, set-off, or ground of abatement, may be given in evidence without a plea; hence an error of a justice in sustaining a demurrer to an answer not involving either of the excepted defenses cannot prejudice defendant, and is no ground of reversal.—Cincinnati, H & I. R. Co. v. Ridge, 54 Ind. 39.

[g] (Ind. 1881) There is no available error, in a suit commenced before a justice of the peace, in excluding matters of defense which were provable without plea.—Lawless v. Harrington, 75 Ind. 379.

[h] (Ind. 1882) In an action originating before a justice of the peace, where all the defenses specially pleaded are admissible in evidence without plea, there is no available error in overruling a demurrer to a special plea in the answer.—Powers v. Fletcher, 84 Ind. 154.

[i] (Ind. 1894) A plaintiff suing in justice court to recover real estate, as provided by Rev. St. 1894, § 7106 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5225), failed to allege that defendant was his tenant unlawfully holding over; and defendant appeared specially and moved to dismiss for want of jurisdiction in the justice. Held that, though the justice was without jurisdiction, it was harmless error to overrule the motion and permit plaintiff to insert the necessary allegations.—Blair v. Porter, 12 Ind. App. 296, 38 N. E. 874, 40 N. E. 81.

[j] (Kan. 1872) Though it is error for a justice to enter judgment against a defendant on an amended bill of particulars without notice to defendant of the amendment, where the amendment is immaterial the judgment will not be reversed.—Alvey v. Wilson, 9 Kan. 401.

[k] (Kan. 1880) In a trial before a justice of the peace of the truth of a garnishee's answer, under Comp. Laws, p. 709, § 44, the justice sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence. Held that, as his decision was not final as to the liability of the garnishee, it was immaterial whether such a demurrer was permissible or not in his court.—Fitch v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co., 23 Kan. 366.

[l] (Kan. 1892) Plaintiff commenced an action before a justice of the peace upon an account duly verified, and no denial of the account, verified by affidavit or otherwise, was ever interposed; so that, under Justices' Code, § 84, the only judgment that could have been rendered was for plaintiff. The justice, in the absence of plaintiff, sustained a motion of defendant to dismiss the action for want of prosecution, but within five minutes thereafter, and before he entered the order of dismissal upon his docket, set it aside and overruled the motion, and set the case for trial at a later hour of the same day; and defendant's attorney had full notice thereof. The justice afterwards rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount of the account. Held, that no material error was committed.—Sullivan v. S. A. Brown & Co., 47 Kan. 708, 28 Pac. 1008.

[m] (Mich. 1881) The failure of a justice of the peace to record the place of adjournment is not ground for reversal, where the person against whom the judgment is subsequently rendered was present when the adjournment was had.—Whelpley v. Nash, 46 Mich. 25, 8 N. W. 570.

[n] (Neb. 1892) Code Civ. Proc. § 1001, provides that a judgment rendered against a defendant in his absence may be set aside on condition (1) that motion therefor be made in 10 days from entry of the judgment; (2) that defendant pay or confess judgment for the costs awarded against him; and (3) that he notify the opposite party. Held that, where a motion to set aside a judgment made before a justice of the peace is denied by the justice, and the only reason assigned by him for such denial is that the judgment was not rendered by default, but that defendant in fact appeared on the day set for trial, his judgment will not be disturbed on appeal, though it appears that the judgment was rendered by default in defendant's absence, if it does not further appear affirmatively that defendant paid or offered to confess judgment for the costs.—Leake v. Gallogly, 34 Neb. 857, 52 N. W. 824.

[o] (N. Y. 1815) A judgment of a justice will not be reversed because he had previously expressed an opinion in the case.—McDowell v. Van Deusen, 12 Johns. 356.

[p] (N. Y.) The jury in a justice's court having found for the defendant in a case where the plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages only, the judgment of the justice should not be reversed, although the verdict was against the evidence.—(1820) Cady v. Fairchild, 18 Johns. 129; (1865) Stephens v. Wider, 32 N. Y. 351.

[q] (N. Y. 1839) A justice's judgment will not be reversed for an omission to call the plaintiff before receiving the verdict, if he is present when it is received, and does not submit to a nonsuit.—Oakley v. Van Horn, 21 Wend. 305.

[r] (N. Y. 1850) On appeal from a justice's court, a judgment will not be disturbed for error in the charge to the jury, where it is apparent, notwithstanding, that justice has been done.—Needles v. Howard, 1 E. D. Smith, 54.

[s] (N. Y. 1866) On appeal from a judgment of a justice's court, where material but incompetent evidence upon the issue was admitted on the trial, the county court will not refuse to reverse on the ground there was other evidence, sufficient and competent, to the same effect.—Decker v. Myers, 31 How. Prac. 372.

[t] (N. Y. 1867) Where a resident of a county is sued before a justice of that county by short summons, as if a nonresident, and is defaulted and appeals, the judgment of the justice is not to be reversed by the county court on affidavits showing defendant's residence.—Tanner v. Marsh, 36 How. Prac. 140.

[u] (N. Y. 1881) The issuing of an attachment by a justice of the peace on an insufficient affidavit is an error of law affecting the substantial rights of defendant, for which the judgment must be reversed.—Fritze v. Pultz, 2 Civ. Proc. R. 142.

[v] (N. Y. 1891) The judgment of a justice of the peace will not be reversed on account of the admission of incompetent evidence when there is other evidence in the case to sustain his finding; Code Civ. Proc. § 3063, requiring an appellate court to render judgment upon an appeal from a justice's court without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect the merits.—Lockwood v. Lockwood, 60 Hun, 581, 14 N. Y. Supp. 831.

[w] (N. Y. 1891) Under the provision that in reviewing the judgment of justices of the peace "the appellate court must render judgment according to the justice of the case, without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect the merits" (Code Civ. Proc. § 3063), where, in an action against a town supervisor for services rendered in assessing taxes, the minutes of a meeting of the town board were improperly admitted to show defendant's admission of his liability and his reimbursement by the town, such error is no ground for reversal if sufficient unobjectionable evidence to prove that fact remains.—Jackson v. Collins, 62 Hun, 618, 16 N. Y. Supp. 651.

[x] (N. Y. 1892) While the grounds of objection are not required, as a rule, to be stated on trials before justices of the peace, yet, where the trial was conducted by counsel, and certain grounds of objection were in fact stated, an objection to the admission of certain evidence not made at the trial cannot be raised on appeal, where it is clear that such evidence did not cause the rendition of the judgment.—Brewer v. Delafield, 63 Hun, 636, 18 N. Y. Supp. 329.

[y] (N. Y. 1892) In an action in a justice's court to recover the amount of a loan alleged to have been induced by the fraudulent representations of defendant as to his worth, plaintiff and two witnesses testified that the loan was made, and that it was induced by the alleged representations. Held that, although the justice erred in admitting the testimony of plaintiff's attorney as to defendant's representations made to him as attorney for a mercantile agency, yet such error did not require the reversal of a judgment for plaintiff, since Code Civ. Proc. § 3063, provides that, on appeal from a judgment of a justice's court, judgment shall be rendered "according to the justice of the case, without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect the merits."—Davison v. Luckman, 63 Hun, 636, 18 N. Y. Supp. 663.

[z] (N. Y. 1893) In an action in a justice's court to recover on an open account, plaintiff was permitted to testify as to the amount of his claim, without producing his books which contained the account. Held, that the admission of such evidence was reversible error, and could not be justified, even under Code Civ. Proc. § 3063, which provides that technical defects or errors in investigations before a justice of the peace must be disregarded on appeal, when they do not affect the merits.—Halter v. Shaffer, 66 Hun, 636, 21 N. Y. Supp. 824.

[zz] (Pa. 1884) In a case originating before a justice of the peace, the form of action is not of controlling importance on appeal.—Dunn v. McCord, 2 Atl. 863.

§ 712. —— Technical defects and errors.

[a] (Ala. 1832) Error will not lie to reverse the judgment of an inferior court on the merits of a case because the defendant has merely stated the names of his pleas, without writing them out in full.—Clark v. Bostick, 2 Stew. & P. 66.

[b] (Ala. 1840) If the proceedings before the justice on a contract for the delivery of specific articles are regular, they should not be quashed in the county court on the ground that plaintiff declared in detinue, though a justice has no jurisdiction over actions of detinue.—Williams v. Hinton, 1 Ala. 297.

[c] (Ind. 1866) When a case has been tried before a justice of the peace upon the merits, judgment will not be reversed on account of an uncertainty in the averments of the pleadings which could not have misled appellant.—Roseberry v. Shields, 26 Ind. 153.

[d] (Iowa, 1868) In an action of account before a justice of the peace, where full and formal pleadings are not required, a judgment will not be disturbed because payments have been allowed which were not formally pleaded; there being a denial of plaintiff's account, and the parties on each side, and without objection, having gone into a full investigation of the state of their accounts.—Miller v. Cassady, 25 Iowa, 323.

[e] (Kan. 1873) Where the record of a justice showed that on September 2d, the time to which a case was adjourned, he was engaged in other official business, and that "the case was not called until the Monday following, August 4th," the clerical error in the writing of "August" for "September" did not constitute an error upon the face of the record, for which the judgment should be reversed.—Kaub v. Mitchell, 12 Kan. 57.

[f] (Mich. 1843) The supreme court will overlook matters of form in proceedings before justices of the peace, and regard them according to the merits.—People v. Foote, 1 Doug. 102.

[g] (Mich. 1875) Mere irregularities in proceedings before a justice of the peace cannot be considered on special appeal.—Deitz v. Groesbeck, 32 Mich. 303.

[h] (Mich. 1894) Where, in an action by the next friend of an infant in his own name, the judgment of the justice was in favor of plaintiff, but the record shows it was in the infant's interest, the circuit court on appeal could not reverse; How. Ann. St. § 7044, empowering it to give judgment without regarding technical defects in the proceedings before the justice not affecting the merits.—Kees v. Maxim, 58 N. W. 473, 99 Mich. 493.

[i] (Mo. 1873) A plea in abatement in attachment before a justice putting in issue the truth of the grounds for attachment on the day of making the plea, instead of on the day the affidavit for attachment was made, was such an inaccuracy as might have been corrected at the proper time, and will not be interfered with on appeal to the supreme court.—Hamblin v. Dunn, 53 Mo. 137.

[j] (N. J. 1808) If the justice, in entering the finding of the jury, misuses the word "damage" for "debt," or vice versa, the court will not reverse for that reason.—Carmichael v. Howell, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 375.

[k] (N. J. 1808) Slight irregularities in pleading before justices will not be ground of reversal.—Brinley v. Wurts, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 432.

[l] (N. J. 1831) The supreme court will not reverse a judgment confessed in the court for the trial of small causes because the state of demand is defective.—Branson v. Eayre, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 127.

[m] (N. Y. 1804) Where on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace a return shows only a part of the oath of the constable to keep the jury as required by statute, and does not show that the remaining portion was not given, the defect will be overlooked.—Day v. Wilber, 2 Caines, 134.

[n] (N. Y. 1829) A plea of privilege by an attorney in a justice's court will be construed liberally on an appeal, and without regard to technical forms and rules.—Van Alstyne v. Dearborn, 2 Wend. 586.

[o] (N. Y. 1847) Where a summons issued on the 3d day of January, 1846, and made returnable on the 10th day of January, instant, before a justice of the peace, was by mistake dated January 3, 1845, and was personally served on the day it was issued, and the plaintiff obtained judgment without an appearance on the part of the defendant, it was held that the defect, having been overlooked by the justice, should be disregarded by the common pleas and the supreme court.—Arnold v. Maltby, 4 Denio, 498.

[p] (N. Y. 1869) The supreme court reviews proceedings in a justice's court liberally, and will not reverse a judgment rendered therein, except for manifest error.—McNall v. McClure, 1 Lans. 32.

[q] (N. Y. 1884) A judgment of a justice in replevin, where the summons was properly issued and personally served, will not be reversed because rendered on an insufficient affidavit and undertaking, where there is no ground for reversing on the merits.—Irr v. Schroeder, 6 Civ. Proc. R. 253.

[r] (N. Y. 1889) On appeal from a justice of the peace to the county court on questions of law only, the county court may give judgment according to the merits without regard to technical errors.—Purdy v. Dinkle, 53 Hun, 633, 6 N. Y. Supp. 158.

[s] (N. Y. 1892) The judgment of a justice's court, if in conformity with law and justice, cannot be invalidated by technical errors of no moment to the other substantial merits of the case.—Cambeis v. Third Ave. R. Co. (Com. Pl.) 1 Misc. Rep. 158, 20 N. Y. Supp. 633.

[t] (N. Y. 1893) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3063, relating to appeals from justice's court in civil actions, which provides that the appellate court must render judgment according to the justice of the case, without regard to technical errors, it is error for the county court to reverse a judgment of a justice of the peace because he allowed plaintiff a small amount more interest than he may have been entitled to.—Kilmer v. Messling, 70 Hun, 582, 24 N. Y. Supp. 343.

[u] (N. Y. 1893) Code Civ. Proc. § 3063, providing that in appeals from justices the appellate court "must render judgment according to the justice of the case, without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect the merits," does not authorize the affirmance of a judgment of default rendered by a justice, where there was no service on defendant.—Kingsford v. Butler, 71 Hun, 598, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1094, 23 Civ. Proc. R. 228.

[v] (N. Y. 1896) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3063, providing that, on appeal from a justice court, "the appellate court must render judgment according to the justice of the case, without regard to technical defects which do not affect the merits," a judgment should not be reversed for technical defects in the papers, or because a verified copy of a document, instead of the original, was received in evidence.—Marble v. Towman, 5 App. Div. 613, 39 N. Y. Supp. 350.

[w] (Ohio, 1860) The judgment of a justice will not be reversed, if the bill of particulars shows a cause of action, though all the facts necessary to show a right of recovery thereon are not stated in the bill.—Niven v. Smith, 2 Ohio Dec. 337.

[x] (Tex. 1853) In proceedings before inferior tribunals, such as justices' courts, all that a revising court will look to is the substance of their acts, and not forms, and, if justice has been done between the parties, will very rarely disturb their judgments.—Kellers v. Reppien, 9 Tex. 443.

[y] (Wis. 1894) Rev. St. § 3769, as amended, providing that the circuit court shall give judgment on appeal from justice's court according to the merits of the case, extends, by its terms, to all cases "where there is no new trial in the appellate court," whether the trial was by justice or jury.—Silvernail v. Rust, 88 Wis. 458, 60 N. W. 787.

§ 713. Parties entitled to allege error.

Appearance in justice's court as precluding objections to jurisdiction of justice on appeal, see ante, § 267.

[a] (Ill. 1868) The rule that accepting the benefit of a judgment or decree is a release of errors does not apply to an appeal from a justice's judgment by the party prevailing, the hearing in the circuit court being de novo on the merits.—Kasting v. Kasting, 47 Ill. 438.

[b] (Iowa, 1856) In an action before a justice on a penal bond to secure the payment of attorney's fees, plaintiff filed the bill of items with the bond, and defendant procured the bill to be dismissed as bad, whereupon plaintiff proceeded on the bond and oral pleadings. Held, that if the justice, by his ruling on the defendant's motion, committed error against plaintiff, defendant could not complain.—Stone v. Murphy, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 35.

[c] (Neb. 1887) A cause was transferred to a justice of the peace, upon a change of venue, who was disqualified, by reason of bias and prejudice, to try the case. The defendant filed a motion to dismiss for said cause, which motion being overruled, he filed a motion, supported by affidavits, for a second change of venue, which was sustained. Held, that he could not predicate error upon the ground that his own motion was sustained.—Hitchcock v. McKinster, 21 Neb. 148, 31 N. W. 507.

[d] (N. Y. 1810) Though plaintiff in error appeared by attorney in violation of St. 10th Sess. c. 10, § 10, he could not allege it for error.—Smith v. Goodrich, 5 Johns. 353.

[e] (N. Y. 1852) Where a defendant in a justice's court, on the decision of a demurrer against him, puts in an answer, he thereby waives the demurrer, and the supreme court on appeal cannot review the decision of the justice in overruling the demurrer.—Irvine v. Forbes, 11 Barb. 587.

[f] (N. Y. 1854) Where a plaintiff voluntarily brought his suit before a justice in a district where neither he nor the defendant resided, and a trial was had (it not appearing at the trial that the parties did not reside within the district), and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, but for a less amount than he demanded, and the plaintiff appealed, it was held that he could not by such appeal require the appellate court to reverse the judgment on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction on account of the nonresidence. The trial having been had without objection, it was not the duty of the justice to make any inquiry of his own motion into the residence of the parties.—Fairbanks v. Corlies, 3 E. D. Smith, 582.

[g] (N. Y. 1858) After having placed on the record the grounds for reversal on appeal from a justice, appellant is estopped to assert other grounds at the argument.—Cristman v. Paul, 16 How. Prac. 17.

[h] (N. Y. 1864) Rev. St. c. 2, art. 3, tit. 4, § 42, providing that the constable serving the original process in a justice's court should not appear and advocate for either party at the trial, does not enable a defendant, on appeal, to object that the constable who served the summons on him advocated his cause, in his absence, with plaintiff's consent.—Eldredge v. McNulty, 45 How. Prac. 440.

[i] (N. Y. 1865) A defendant in proceedings in a justice's court who does not appear before the justice on the return day of the summons is precluded from objecting on appeal to the regularity of the proceedings.—People v. Powers, 19 Abb. Prac. 99.

[j] (N. Y. 1873) Where a justice of the peace renders judgment upon the verdict of a jury, but fails to include costs in such judgment, the unsuccessful party cannot allege error on appeal for such failure, as he is not prejudiced thereby.—Schneider v. Armstrong, 1 Buff. Super. Ct. 379.

[k] (Pa. 1825) Where defendants admitted they were in court, pleaded to the declaration, and went to trial in their character of overseers of the poor, they cannot complain on appeal that they were originally sued before a justice of the peace in their individual characters.—Overseers of Roxborough v. Bunn, 12 Serg. & R. 292.

[l] (Pa. 1883) Where the record shows a judgment for an amount within the justice's jurisdiction, and that no more was demanded on the trial, one who went to trial without objection cannot, on appeal, urge that the record is defective in not showing the sum demanded.—Weidenhamer v. Bertle, 103 Pa. 448.

[m] (S. C. 1880) Only the party affected by errors and irregularities in the proceedings in a trial justice's court will be heard to object to them.—Glenn v. Shannon, 12 S. C. 570.

[n] (Tex. 1883) An appellee, in a case appealed from a justice's court, cannot object that appellant failed to notify him of his motion for new trial as required by Rev. St. art. 1621, where the motion was overruled.—Horton v. McKeehan, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 466.

[o] (Wis. 1854) In an action before a justice of the peace an adjournment was had, on application by the defendant, before issue formally joined. Held, that the defendant could not be allowed to allege this as error.—Roberts v. Warren, 3 Wis. 786.

§ 714. Discretion of lower court.

[a] (Cal. 1859) Amendments to complaints are within the discretion of the justice, which cannot be reviewed without an affidavit of their materiality.—Canfield v. Bates, 13 Cal. 606.

[b] (La. 1883) A charge that a justice's court has illegally, but not arbitrarily, refused to issue its process on a call in warranty, involves a matter of legal discretion, not revisable by the supreme court.—State ex rel. Unbehagen v. Nephler, 35 La. Ann. 365.

[c] (N. Y. 1811) Where a justice has a discretion as to adjourning a cause, nothing but an abuse of such discretion will be regarded as error.—Pease v. Gleason, 8 Johns. 409.

[d] (N. Y. 1847) Error will not lie to a refusal by a justice to permit an amendment in a pleading, it being a matter within his discretion.—White v. Stevenson, 4 Denio, 193.

[e] (N. Y. 1847) Though a justice has a right to permit a defendant who has omitted to appear at the return day of the summons to plead on a day to which the cause has been adjourned, upon a proper excuse for the default being shown, still, it being a matter of discretion, the common pleas are not authorized to reverse the judgment, where the application has been refused, though they should be of opinion that the application ought to have been granted.—Sammis v. Brice, 4 Denio, 576.

[f] (N. Y. 1851) The refusal of a justice to allow a plaintiff to give additional evidence after a nonsuit forms no ground for reversing his judgment on appeal, the matter being within the discretion of the justice.—Reed v. Barber, 3 Code Rep. 160.

[b] (Cal. 1888) An appeal on questions of law and fact from a justice's judgment, there having been no trial on issues of fact, must be entertained and decided by the superior court as on questions of law alone.—Fabretti v. Santa Clara County Super. Ct., 77 Cal. 305, 19 Pac. 481.

[c] (Ind. 1883) The insufficiency of the summons in a justice's court will not be considered on appeal if the specific objections to it are in no way pointed out to the appellate court.—Sargent v. Flaid, 90 Ind. 501.

[d] (Iowa, 1860) An issue of fact found by a justice will not be reviewed on error in the district court, but the remedy is by an appeal, upon which the case may be tried de novo.—Taylor v. Rockwell, 10 Iowa, 530.

[e] (Kan. 1877) The district court cannot, on petition in error, revise a judgment of a justice on a verdict of a jury, upon alleged partiality or error in the justice's rulings. The only review is by the statutory appeal.—Rice v. Harvey, 19 Kan. 144.

In appeals from decisions of justices of the peace, in cases involving the constitutionality or legality of a municipal ordinance imposing any tax, fine, or impost, the power of the court is limited to the question of the constitutionality or legality of the ordinance.—(1846) Municipality No. 3 v. Blanc, 1 La. Ann. 385; (1847) Municipality No. 1 v. Pease, 2 La. Ann. 538; (1849) Penn v. Municipality No. 1, 4 La. Ann. 13; (1850) Charity Hospital v. Lammerman, 5 La. Ann. 380.

[h] (La. 1853) The supreme court is without jurisdiction to decide an exception taken to the trial of a case before a justice of the peace on the ground that the justice was interested in the case.—Parish of West Baton Rouge v. Robertson, 8 La. Ann. 69.

[i] (La. 1890) Mandamus does not lie to compel a district judge, who has affirmed a judgment sustaining a plea to the jurisdiction, to pass upon the merits of the controversy in the suit brought before the lower court. Such merits are not before him for review on an appeal from a judgment on the plea by the inferior tribunal.—State ex rel. Freret v. King, 42 La. Ann. 77, 7 South. 72.

[j] (Me. 1850) No error of fact having been assigned, and no fact annexed to the record having been proved, the charge will be considered as an error of law; and a refusal to allow costs to the amount claimed, when some amount is allowed, is not error in law.—Reed v. Tay, 32 Me. 173.

[n] (Mich. 1887) On a special appeal to a circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the question of his jurisdiction to render a judgment for the amount recovered may be raised.—Rosevelt v. Hanold, 65 Mich. 414, 32 N. W. 443.

[o] (Mich. 1888) The action of a justice in allowing, after the evidence is all in, and the cause submitted to him, an amended declaration to be filed, setting out an assignment of the debt sued on from a former partnership to the present plaintiffs, cannot be reviewed on special appeal.—Webster v. Williams, 69 Mich. 135, 37 N. W. 62.

[v] (Minn. 1889) On an appeal from a justice on questions of law alone, the district court is not called on to consider the evidence, except so far as to determine whether from it the justice might find facts that would justify the judgment.—Croonquist v. Flatner, 41 Minn. 291, 43 N. W. 9.

[w] (N. Y. 1859) A notice of appeal from a justice's court, stating any ground on which the appeal is founded, confers jurisdiction on the county court to examine the whole case as set forth in the justice's return; and the judgment should be reversed for any substantial error, whether stated in the notice or not.—Forman v. Forman, 17 How. Prac. 255.

[x] (N. Y. 1866) One of the grounds of appeal from a justice's judgment was that the summons had no stamp, but the notice of appeal did not specify this as one of the grounds of error. Held, that the point involved a question of jurisdiction, and could be raised at any time during the progress of the action.—Cole v. Bell, 48 Barb. 194.

[y] (N. Y. 1872) Under section 353 of the Code of Procedure, which requires that upon appeal from a justice's court the appellant shall, within 20 days after judgment, serve a notice of appeal, "stating the grounds upon which the appeal is founded," the appellate court cannot reverse the judgment upon grounds not stated in the notice.—Avery v. St. § 6560, providing that in all cases before a justice of the peace either party may except to the opinion of the justice on any point of law, a bill of exceptions on a question of the weight of the evidence cannot be considered by a reviewing court.—Yager v. Greiss, 1 O. C. D. 296.

[z] (Ohio, 1892) On a proceeding in error from the refusal of a justice of the peace to discharge an attachment, though the reviewing court cannot consider the weight of the evidence, it may consider whether there was any evidence to sustain the ruling of the justice.—Willenger v. Bramsche, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 208.

[zz] (Ohio, 1893) Instructions given to the jury by a justice of the peace in the course of the trial of an action before him are reviewable on error.—Hirth v. Graham, 50 Ohio St. 57, 33 N. E. 90, 40 Am. St. Rep. 641, 19 L. R. A. 721.

§ 716. Review on questions of fact.

[a] (Ala. 1880) The finding of facts by a justice's court, where the amount involved is less than $20, is the same as a jury verdict, and to be disturbed only for the same reasons.—Dargan v. Harris, 68 Ala. 144.

[b] (Kan. 1878) A finding by a justice of the peace upon a question of fact is as conclusive on appeal as the verdict of a jury.—Central Branch R. Co. v. Phillipi, 20 Kan. 9.

[c] (Mass. 1808) On review of a judgment of a justice of the peace by writ of error, the appellate court cannot take any notice of an error in fact assigned, and not appearing on the record.—Winslow v. Anderson, 4 Mass. 376.

[d] (Mass. 1839) The supreme court cannot revise the judgment of a justice, on the evidence submitted to him, on a complaint to recover a militia fine.—Cousins v. Cowing, 40 Mass. (23 Pick.) 208.

[e] (N. Y.) The phrase "errors of fact" as ground for reversing the judgment in Code Civ. Proc. § 366, regulating appeals, has no reference to an erroneous finding of the court or jury upon the evidence, but refers to errors of fact not appearing from the record or evidence, such as infancy and coverture.—(1852) Adsit v. Wilson, 7 How. Prac. 64; Kassen v. Mills, 8 How. Prac. 377; (1856) Biglow v. Sanders, 22 Barb. 147.

[f] (N. Y. 1859) A nonresident, sued in a justice's court by long summons, on the return day appeared, and after stating that he did not appear in the action, that he was a nonresident, and that he declined further to plead, left the court room. The plaintiff obtained an adjournment, and on the adjourned day took judgment. The defendant appealed to the county court, and there offered affidavits to prove his nonresidence; but the court disregarded them on the ground that they should have been offered below, and affirmed the judgment. Held, that the defect in the process was an error in fact, which should be reviewed on appeal, under Code, § 366.—Willins v. Wheeler, 17 How. Prac. 93, 8 Abb. Prac. 116.

[g] (N. Y. 1859) On appeal from a justice's court under sections 353 and 366 of the Code, the county court must hear at the same time and pass upon all the questions,—both those of error in law and of error in fact, and of a motion for a new trial.—Cook v. Swift, 18 How. Prac. 454, 10 Abb. Prac. 212.

[h] (N. C. 1871) Decisions of justices of the peace upon questions of fact are not, under the law and practice, subject to review in the appellate court.—Street v. Bryan, 65 N. C. 619.

[i] (N. C. 1877) On appeal from a justice's judgment for $25 or less, the superior court does not revise the justice's findings of fact.—London v. Headen, 76 N. C. 72.

[j] (Ohio, 1860) On petition in error from the judgment of a justice of the peace, no statement of evidence can be considered, except such as is authorized to be inserted in the transcript.—Niven v. Smith, 2 Ohio Dec. 337.

[k] (Ohio, 1860) A petition in error does not reach the erroneous finding of a justice upon a question of fact.—Strausburgh v. Doran, 2 Ohio Dec. 402.

[l] (Ohio, 1885) A defendant properly summoned and appearing and making defense before a justice of the peace, and against whom a judgment is rendered, and who does not appeal, cannot, on a petition in error to reverse such judgment, have a retrial of the case on the facts, since, having exercised his election not to appeal, but to prosecute error, he cannot convert his petition in error to a pleading of fact, to retry the same matter on the evidence which he tried before the magistrate, and from which he took no appeal.—Bruder v. Biehl, 1 O. C. D. 51.

[m] (Ohio, 1888) An order of a justice of the peace refusing to discharge an attachment may, under Rev. St. § 6524, be reviewed by petition in error in the court of common pleas on a bill of exceptions embodying all the evidence on the hearing of the motion to discharge, together with the ruling of the justice and the exceptions thereto.—Seville v. Wagner, 46 Ohio St. 52, 18 N. E. 430.

[n] (S. C. 1891) Code, § 358, providing that appeals from trial justices to the circuit court shall be heard upon all the papers in the case, including testimony taken in writing on the trial, "and the grounds of exception made," confines the circuit court, on the hearing, to the consideration of such questions only as are raised by the exceptions.—Burns v. Gower, 34 S. C. 160, 13 S. E. 331.

[o] (S. C. 1892) Code Proc. § 368, subd. 6, relating to appeals to the circuit court from an inferior court, provides that the provisions of the Code of Procedure relative to decisions of the court and motions for new trial are applicable to all appeals "brought up for trial as in this chapter provided." Code Proc. § 368, subd. 1, provides that the circuit court shall have power to affirm or reverse "judgments" of the inferior courts "for errors of law or fact." Held, that the circuit court has power to review errors of fact in an order of a trial judge granting a new trial, the Code making provision for appeals from orders granting or refusing new trials, and the word "judgment," in section 368, not being used in its technical sense of a final determination.—Redfearn v. Douglass, 35 S. C. 569, 15 S. E. 244.

[p] (Wis. 1862) On an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace for less than $15, the circuit court sits in review of the record, which includes the evidence, and is not bound to file a statement of the facts found by it and its conclusions of law.—Hassa v. Junger, 15 Wis. 598.

§ 717. —— Findings on conflicting evidence.

[a] (Ind. 1878) Although in replevin before a justice of the peace there be a preponderance of evidence that the property was worth more than $200, which is the limit of his jurisdiction, under 2 Rev. St. p. 605, § 10, the supreme court, on appeal from the circuit, will not disturb a finding to the contrary if there be any evidence to sustain it.—Deam v. Dawson, 62 Ind. 22.

[b] (N. Y.) The finding of a justice of the peace on a question of fact upon which the evidence was conflicting will not be disturbed.—(1847) Moak v. Foland, 3 How. Prac. 84; (1859) Barber v. Arnoux, 18 How. Prac. 285; (1886) Roosevelt v. Strohkoefer, 3 N. Y. St. Rep. 578.

[c] (N. Y.) Where there is conflicting testimony, or in a question of credibility, the finding of the justice below is not interfered with on appeal.—(1850) Decker v. Jaques, 1 E. D. Smith, 80; (1854) McLaughlin v. Barnard, 2 E. D. Smith, 372; (1854) Mellon v. Smith, Id. 462; (1855) Cannon v. Van Wagner, Id. 590.

[d] (N. Y. 1852) On appeal from the justices' courts this court will not reverse a judgment on the ground that a preponderance of evidence (although conflicting) appears to be against the verdict, when the case is not so clear as to warrant the presumption of bias, partiality, or obvious misapprehension or mistake on the part of the jury.—Easton v. Smith, 1 E. D. Smith, 318.

[e] (N. Y. 1856) A justice has the right, in the trial of a cause, to regard those admissions of the defendant which are unfavorable to his defense, and disbelieve those which are in his favor, and a judgment founded on such of these admissions as are believed will not be disturbed.—Penfield v. Jacobs, 21 Barb. 335.

[f] (N. Y. 1857) Where the amount of the accounts is a question of fact, and the evidence conflicting, the determination of the justice is necessarily as conclusive on such question of fact as upon any other, where his jurisdiction is not affected by his finding.—Parker v. Eaton, 25 Barb. 122.

[g] (N. Y. 1865) So long as there has been legal evidence on both sides of the question adjudicated upon, the county court should not reverse the judgment, even if it arrives at a conclusion as to the facts different from that adjudged by the justice.—Burnham v. Butler, 31 N. Y. 480.

[h] (N. Y. 1871) If there was sufficient evidence, if believed by a justice of the peace, to sustain a judgment, such judgment will not be reversed on appeal because it was given without sufficient evidence to sustain it. When there is a conflict in the evidence, it is for the justice to determine which is most credible; and when the judgment of a justice is sustained by positive, direct, and corroborating evidence, sufficient to uphold a judgment, it is not the duty of the reviewing court to measure in nice scales the weight of conflicting testimony.—Alford v. Stevens, 63 Barb. 29.

[i] (N. Y. 1886) Where defendant's counsel, in an action before a justice on a verbal contract, admitted: "There is a certain amount due. I don't know the amount. There is the sum of $94 to be paid,"—a judgment for that amount will not be disturbed, the evidence as to the terms of the contract being conflicting.—Meehan v. Butler, 3 N. Y. St. Rep. 556.

[j] (N. Y. 1891) Plaintiff testified that defendant agreed to move her furniture in one load for $5, and that when one-third of the property arrived at the place of delivery defendant demanded $5 therefor. Defendant gave evidence tending to show, and the justice found, that the contract was for $5 a load; that the load carried was a full load; that there was more furniture to be carried; and that defendant demanded that the whole should be carried for $5. Held, that the county court was bound by these findings, and erred in reversing the judgment of the justice and entering judgment for plaintiff.—Aller v. O'Reilley, 62 Hun, 619, 16 N. Y. Supp. 831.

[k] (Ohio, 1880) In proceedings in error to reverse a judgment of a justice of the peace rendered on conflicting evidence, the judgment will not be reversed, where there is evidence tending to support it.—Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wright, 8 Ohio Dec. 105, 5 Wkly. Law Bul. 647.

[l] (Wis. 1857) Where there is some evidence to sustain a verdict of a justice, the judge of the county court should not set it aside because in his opinion the evidence is insufficient.—Dexter v. Cole, 6 Wis. 319, 70 Am. Dec. 465.

§ 718. —— Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

[a] (Kan. 1874) Where an action has been tried before a justice of the peace, and a judgment rendered for the plaintiff, and no motion made for a new trial, the district court cannot, upon a petition in error, re-examine the evidence introduced on the trial before the justice, for the purpose of determining whether the judgment rendered by the justice is sustained by sufficient evidence or not.—Ayres v. Crum, 13 Kan. 269.

[b] (Me. 1832) The judgment of a justice of the peace upon the evidence before him is not to be reversed unless clearly against the weight of the evidence.—Bullen v. Baker, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 390.

[c] (Mich. 1863) The judgment of a justice cannot be reversed by the circuit court for insufficient evidence, except where there is a total want of evidence to prove some fact necessary to sustain the action.—Welch v. Bagg, 12 Mich. 41.

[d] (N. J. 1881) Where there is in the court below on one side direct testimony as to the existence of a fact, and there is no counter testimony offered upon the other side, and the testimony of the witnesses offered to prove such fact is not impeached by proof of character, or shaken upon cross-examination, or rendered suspicious by the inherent improbabilities of the story, then, upon review, the legal inference will arise that such fact exists, and a judgment in opposition thereto will be reversed.—Cooley v. Barcroft, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 363.

[e] (N. Y. 1806) A judgment by a justice will not be reversed because the evidence to support the judgment was light.—Fisher v. Chandler, 1 Johns. 505.

[f] (N. Y. 1815) Where the whole evidence was not returned by the justice before whom a judgment was obtained on a promissory note given for a deputy sheriff's fees, and the cause was fairly submitted to the jury, who found for the plaintiff, the court will not reverse the judgment, though there is some reason to believe that a larger sum was included in the note than was warranted by law.—Woodin v. Hoofut, 12 Johns. 298.

[g] (N. Y. 1852) The county court cannot, on appeal from a justice court, review the evidence to see whether the judgment is supported thereby.—Adsit v. Wilson, 7 How. Prac. 64; Kasson v. Mills, 8 How. Prac. 377.

[h] (N. Y. 1853) Where a justice of the peace issued an attachment and summons under the nonimprisonment act, having evidence before him of intent in the defendant to dispose of property to defraud creditors, his proceedings ought not to be reversed for insufficiency of proof.—Rosenfield v. Howard, 15 Barb. 546.

[i] (N. Y. 1865) The judgment of a justice of the peace should not be reversed by the county court unless it clearly appear that the judgment of the justice could not have been justified by the evidence.—Burnham v. Butler, 31 N. Y. 480.

[j] (N. Y. 1892) In replevin, involving the title to a chattel, in which the controversy is a mere question of fact, a finding of the justice in accordance with the probabilities of the case will not be disturbed.—Phillips v. Phillips, 64 Hun, 634, 18 N. Y. Supp. 886.

[k] (N. Y. 1892) Where there is any evidence to support a judgment of a justice of the peace, the supreme court cannot disturb it as being contrary to the weight of evidence.—Bailey v. Gluth, 65 Hun, 620, 19 N. Y. Supp. 945.

[l] (N. Y. 1895) A verdict rendered in a justice's court will not be reversed on appeal to the county court, unless it was manifestly and clearly against the weight of the evidence.—Halsey v. Hart, 85 Hun, 46, 32 N. Y. Supp. 665.

[m] (Ohio, 1886) The judgment of a justice of the peace cannot be reviewed by the court of common pleas on the ground that it is against the weight of evidence.—Yager v. Greiss, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 531.

[n] (Ohio, 1894) The court of common pleas, on petition in error to reverse an order of a justice of the peace refusing to dissolve an attachment, will look into the bill of exceptions to see whether such order was sustained by the evidence.—Hoyman v. Beverstock, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 473.

[o] (Wis.) Where an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is heard on the original papers and his return, under Rev. St. §§ 3767, 3768, a reversal of the judgment can only be sustained on the ground that the findings of fact by the justice are clearly unsupported by the evidence.—(1881) Campbell v. Babbetts, 53 Wis. 276, 10 N. W. 400; (1882) Neave v. Arntz, 56 Wis. 174, 14 N. W. 41.

[p] (Wis. 1888) On appeal from a justice's court, where a trial on the merits is waived in the circuit court, the same rule should be applied in reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict as obtains in the supreme court.—West v. Vandenbrook, 71 Wis. 469, 37 N. W. 832.

§ 719. —— Verdicts.

[a] (N. Y. 1813) In an action for a penalty before a justice, judgment for the defendant will not be reversed merely because the verdict was clearly against evidence.—Comfort v. Thompson, 10 Johns. 101.

[b] (N. Y. 1849) Where there is a conflict of evidence upon a trial in a justice's court, so far as all the questions of fact are concerned the verdict of the jury is conclusive, and cannot be reviewed elsewhere, however much against the weight of evidence.—McDonald v. Edgerton, 5 Barb. 560.

[c] (N. Y. 1854) Where, in a justice's court, there is a fair question for the jury, though their decision is against the weight of evidence, still it is conclusive; and the county court cannot, on appeal, properly disturb the verdict. It is only when the facts of a case are undisputed, or the evidence is not conflicting and is free from reasonable doubt, that the verdict of a jury in a justice's court can be set aside as contrary to or against evidence.—Bennett v. Scutt, 18 Barb. 347.

[d] (N. Y. 1856) Where there is evidence on both sides, the judgment rendered in the justice's court cannot be reversed by the county court, although the judgment or verdict of the jury was against the weight of evidence; and if, in such case, the county court reverses the judgment of the justice, the judgment of reversal will be reversed by the supreme court.—Rogers v. Ackerman, 22 Barb. 134; Biglow v. Sanders, Id. 147; Wiley v. Slater, Id. 506.

[e] (N. Y. 1861) Unless the evidence is clear, positive, and uncontradicted upon the point which it is claimed the justice's jury have wrongly decided (in this case, negligence in not keeping a turnpike in repair), their verdict should not be interfered with by the county court.—Cox v. Westchester Turnpike Road, 33 Barb. 414.

[f] (Tex. 1859) The court will not disturb the verdict of a jury in a case instituted before a justice of the peace, where there is no error in the charge of the court, unless it is plain that the law has been violated and injustice has been done.—Ogden v. Cox, 23 Tex. 22.

§ 720. —— Hearing on affidavits on review.

[a] (N. Y. 1854) Code 1852, § 366, after declaring that the appellate court, upon an appeal from a justice of the peace, shall give judgment according to the justice of the case, without regard to technical errors not affecting the merits, and that the judgment below may be affirmed or reversed in whole or in part, and as to any or all of the parties, and for errors of law or fact, provides that if the appeal is founded on an error in fact in the proceedings, not affecting the merits of the action, and not within the knowledge of the justice, the court may determine the alleged error in fact on affidavits, and may, in its discretion, inquire into and determine the same upon examination of the witnesses, and that "if the defendant fails to appear before the justice," and it is shown by the affidavits served, or otherwise, that manifest injustice has been done, and defendant satisfactorily excuses his default, the court may, in its discretion, set aside or suspend the judgment, and order a new trial before the same or any other justice at such time and place and on such terms as the court may deem proper. Held, that defendant fails to appear, within the meaning of such section, not only where he does not answer on the return of the summons and plaintiff takes judgment, but also where he does not attend on a day to which the case has been adjourned, and the trial proceeds without him.—Armstrong v. Craig, 18 Barb. 387.

[b] (N. Y. 1856) Affidavits in addition to the return cannot be referred to in the decision of an appeal from a justice's judgment to the common pleas.—Kilpatrick v. Carr, 3 Abb. Prac. 117.

[c] (N. Y. 1872) Where summons is served by copy, and defendant appeals from the judgment of a justice "on errors of fact to be established by affidavits and other proofs" (Code, § 366), and relies on want of authority to appear for him below, he must show such fact by affidavits or testimony.—Sperry v. Reynolds, 5 Lans. 407, reversed (1875) 65 N. Y. 179.

[d] (N. Y. 1886) Where the jurisdiction of a justice depends on the nonresidence of defendant, and defendant is not in fact a nonresident, judgment in favor of plaintiff is erroneous; and, if the proceedings before the justice show nothing on the subject, the case on appeal is within Code Civ. Proc. § 3057, providing that where an appeal is founded on an error in fact in the proceedings not affecting the merits of the action, and not within the knowledge of the justice, the court may determine the matter on affidavits, or, in its discretion, upon examination of witnesses, or in both methods.—Griffin v. Norton, 5 N. Y. St. Rep. (3 Sandf.) 812.

[e] (N. Y. 1888) Code Civ. Proc. § 3057, relating to appeals from justices' courts, which provides that "where an appeal is founded upon an error of fact in the proceedings not affecting the merits of the action, and not within the knowledge of the justice, the court may determine the matter upon affidavits," etc., does not authorize the use of affidavits on appeal to show alleged misconduct of the justice after the case was submitted to him for decision, inasmuch as the matters alleged in such affidavits, if they existed, must have been wholly within the knowledge of the justice.—Vallen v. McGuire, 49 Hun, 594, 2 N. Y. Supp. 381.

[f] (N. Y. 1890) On appeal from the judgment of a justice in a case in which he had no jurisdiction on account of the residence of the defendant, affidavits of defendant, showing the residence of the parties, are competent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3057, providing that, upon appeal, errors in fact not affecting the merits of the action, and not within the knowledge of the justice, may be determined upon affidavits.—Larocque v. Harvey, 57 Hun, 366, 10 N. Y. Supp. 576, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 109.

[g] (N. Y. 1892) Code Civ. Proc. § 3057, providing that where an appeal is founded on an error in fact not affecting the merits of the action, "and not within the knowledge of the justice," the court may determine the matter on affidavits and on examination of witnesses, refers exclusively to appeals from justices' courts, and is not applicable to a denial of a motion for an adjournment to procure an absent witness, which is a matter "within the knowledge of the justice."—Jourdan v. Healey (Com. Pl.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 240, 22 Civ. Proc. R. 157.

[h] (N. Y. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. § 3057, providing that where an appeal from a justice of the peace is founded on an error in fact not affecting the merits of the action, and not within the knowledge of the justice, the matter may be determined on affidavits, applies to the district courts of New York City.—Jennings v. Miller (Com. Pl.) 10 Misc. Rep. 762, 31 N. Y. Supp. 814.

[i] (N. Y. 1895) Where the return shows that appellant was in court at the trial of the cause, and was examined as a witness "for the defendants," there being only one other defendant besides himself, an unauthorized appearance for appellant does not bring the case within Code Civ. Proc. § 3057, providing that an appeal founded on alleged error in fact not within the knowledge of the justice may be determined on affidavits.—Jennings v. Miller (Com. Pl.) 10 Misc. Rep. 762, 31 N. Y. Supp. 814.

AMOUNT OF JUDGMENT, § 724.
SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT AND NEW TRIAL, § 725.

§ 721. In general.

[a] (Ala. 1880) After judgment by a justice of the peace and removal to the circuit court, the case is triable de novo, and the judgment of the court should not be of affirmance or reversal, but an entirely new one on the merits.—Burns v. Howard, 68 Ala. 352.

[b] (Ill. 1822) The statute regulating appeals from justices of the peace, and providing that no continuance shall be allowed to either party after the second term, does not prohibit the court from taking such cases under advisement after the trial.—Johnson v. Ackless, 1 Ill. (1 Breese) 92.

[c] (Ill. 1889) The appeal from a justice's decision on proceedings to recover a penalty or fine for violating a municipal ordinance is not to correct errors of law, but for a trial de novo, and the court has no power to determine whether the justice had jurisdiction of the subject-matter until the evidence is heard.—City of Chicago v. Kenney, 35 Ill. App. 57.

[d] (Ind. 1854) In trespass against several defendants, where one of them was not served with process, and, on trial before a justice of the peace, judgment was rendered against those who had been summoned, and, on an appeal taken by them to the circuit court, judgment was rendered not only against them, but also against the defendant not summoned, it was held that as to him the judgment was a nullity.—Prichard v. Campbell, 5 Ind. 494.

[e] (Iowa, 1854) If, on appeal to the district court, there is no paper on file in the case, and no statement in the justice's transcript showing the nature and amount of the plaintiff's demand, a judgment for the plaintiff is erroneous.—Sears v. Tubbs, 4 G. Greene, 409.

[f] (Iowa, 1877) A judgment rendered by the circuit court on appeal cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that the justice of the peace had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter.—Finch v. Hollinger, 47 Iowa, 173.

[g] (Iowa, 1879) It is proper for the circuit court, on appeal from a justice of the peace, to render such judgment as the justice should have rendered.—Hawthorn v. Unthank, 52 Iowa, 507, 3 N. W. 518.

[h] (Ky.) Where the justice had no jurisdiction, on appeal judgment will be against the plaintiff.—(1822) Lane v. Young, 11 Ky. (1 Litt.) 40; (1827) Kirk v. Williams, 20 Ky. (4 T. B. Mon.) 413; (1827) Mitchell v. Warden, 21 Ky. (5 T. B. Mon.) 261; (1829) Stephens v. Boswell, 25 Ky. (2 J. J. Marsh.) 29.

[i] (Ky. 1830) Where the circuit court has not jurisdiction of an appeal from a justice of the peace, it is erroneous to render judgment against the appellant.—Church v. Church's Ex'rs, 27 Ky. (4 J. J. Marsh.) 13.

[j] (Ky. 1873) Under Civ. Code, § 849, requiring an action, on appeal from a justice's court, to "be tried anew," etc., in the appellate court, the latter cannot merely adjudge that the judgment "be reversed," but must either render judgment for some amount due the plaintiff, dismiss the action, or dismiss the appeal.—Bennett v. Thompson, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 365.

[k] (Mich. 1882) On an appeal to the circuit court from a judgment rendered in a justice's court, the jurisdiction acquired is appellate, and the circuit court cannot render any judgment on such appeal which the justice's court could not have rendered.—Cross v. Eaton, 48 Mich. 184, 12 N. W. 35.

[l] (Miss. 1848) Where, in a suit before a justice of the peace, the plaintiff claimed to recover $20 for rent of a house and lot, and the defendant admitted that he owed $20 for a ground rent, but claimed to own the house himself, it was held on appeal that on the merits the plaintiff was entitled to recover.—Stier v. Surget, 18 Miss. (10 Smedes & M.) 154.

[m] (Mo. 1896) On appeal from a judgment in attachment rendered in a justice court, the circuit court may order the constable holding the proceeds of the attached property to pay the same to the successful party.—Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Glazier, 65 Mo. App. 616, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1177; Id., 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1341.

[n] (Neb. 1887) An offer to confess judgment, duly made in the justice's court where the action is brought, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1004, need not be renewed in the district court on appeal in order to make it available to the party making it on final judgment.—Underhill v. Shea, 21 Neb. 154, 31 N. W. 510.

[o] (N. H. 1850) Though neither the trustee nor the party defendant has appealed from the judgment of the justice of the peace charging the trustee, the court of common pleas will discharge such trustee on an appeal by the claimant if it appears that such trustee should have been discharged in the justice court.—Barker v. Garland, 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 103.

[p] (N. J. 1809) On an appeal from the judgment of a justice to the court of common pleas, judgment is to be rendered accordingly, regardless of the judgment below.—Woodruff v. Carnes, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 505.

[q] (Vt. 1846) A trustee who appeals, in pursuance of the provisions of the statute of 1842, from the judgment of a justice of the peace charging him as trustee, cannot render a confession of judgment more than 12 days before the term of the court to which the appeal was taken, as might be done in the case of a party appellant; but the same proceedings must be had in the county court as if the suit had originally been brought there, or, in default of prosecution of the appeal by the trustee, the judgment against him must be affirmed by the county court.—Sanford v. Huxley, 18 Vt. 170.

§ 722. Parties.

[a] (Ind. 1866) A plaintiff in an action of contract commenced before a justice of the peace against two or more defendants may have judgment on appeal against a part only of the defendants.—Fitzgerald v. Genter, 26 Ind. 238.

[b] (Minn. 1859) Under Pub. St. c. 59, § 139, which provides that on appeal from a justice's court to a district court the case shall proceed in the latter court as near as may be as in actions originally brought therein, where, in a justice's court, judgment is rendered against one of two defendants, and the action dismissed as to the other, upon appeal by the defendant against whom judgment was rendered the action in the district court should proceed, and judgment may be entered, against both.—Hooper v. Farwell, 3 Minn. 106 (Gil. 58).

[c] (N. Y. 1827) Where on a trial before a justice a portion of the defendants appeal, and the defendants who appeal are acquitted, error in quashing the appeal in toto, without rendering up judgment against the defendants who did not appeal, constitutes a mistrial, and it should be set aside and the case tried de novo.—People v. Judges of Onondaga County, 7 Cow. 492.

[d] (Or. 1879) In a joint action before a justice for a wrongful conversion of property, wherein all the defendants answer, and a general verdict is rendered, judgment cannot properly be rendered against one only. But if, on appeal by him to the circuit court, all the defendants appear and defend, and the verdict is against them all, judgment may thereupon be rendered against all.—Cauthorn v. King, 8 Or. 138.

[e] (Pa. 1819) A judgment of the common pleas tried on a declaration in the name of a certain person as assignee of another, the case being brought to the common pleas by appeal from a justice's judgment in favor of the assignor to the use of the assignee, cannot be sustained, on error.—Stehley v. Harp, 5 Serg. & R. 544.

§ 723. On default or nonsuit.

Dismissal of action or nonsuit, see ante, §§ 649–651.

Judgment by default for want of sufficient plea in defense on appeal, see ante, § 688.

[a] (Ala. 1872) A judgment by default rendered by the circuit court, on trial of an appeal from a justice, against the appellee, who has not been notified of the appeal, is void, and will be reversed.—Steadman v. Seawell, 48 Ala. 519.

[b] (Ala. 1879) On appeal from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, although the defendant fails to appear, it is error to render judgment final by default, without the intervention of a jury, for the amount of the justice's judgment; that being vacated by the appeal, and Code, § 3121, requiring that the trial shall be de novo on the merits.—Abraham v. Alford, 64 Ala. 281.

[c] (Ark. 1844) On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace on an account, the circuit court cannot render final judgment on default without a writ of inquiry, or trying the cause on its merits.—Hamilton v. Hamphries, 5 Ark. (5 Pike) 640.

[d] (Ill. 1887) Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 79, § 34, provides that where "the plaintiff in any suit upon a contract * * * for the payment of money shall file with the justice, at the time of commencing such suit, an affidavit showing the nature of his demand," etc., "he shall be entitled to judgment in case of default," and, further, that on appeal "such affidavit shall have the same force and effect in the appellate court as if the suit had been commenced" therein. Held, that this does not authorize the filing of the affidavit after appeal to the circuit court so as to entitle plaintiff to judgment by default for want of an affidavit to the merits.—Mason v. Mandl, 24 Ill. App. 154.

[e] (Ind. 1850) An appellant subpœnaed an appellee, who resided in another county, to testify as a witness upon an appeal from a justice's judgment to the circuit court. On service of the subpœna the appellee demanded his fees, which were not paid. He did not appear at the trial, and the appellant claimed to have his pleas taken as true, which the court refused. Held, that by Rev. St. § 247, the appellant could not have compelled the appellee's attendance as a witness, he not having paid his fees when demanded, and therefore the defense set up could not have been taken as confessed.—Wayman v. Hazzard, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 165.

[f] (Iowa, 1871) A nonsuit of a plaintiff on appeal from justice court does not entitle the defendant to take, without proof, a judgment on a set-off pleaded by him, on which judgment has been rendered below.—Joy v. Huit, 31 Iowa, 22.

[g] (Mich. 1889) Where, on appeal from a justice, defendant had asked for time to file a set-off, and the court refused to grant it, except on the payment of costs, which defendant refused to do, and made no further defense, it was not error to enter judgment against him.—McDonald v. Weir, 76 Mich. 243, 42 N. W. 1114.

[h] (Mo. 1845) On appeal from a justice's court, judgment by default cannot be entered against the appellee unless the appeal was taken on the day of the trial, or notice has been served upon him 10 days, at least, before the first day of the term.—Pratte v. Corl, 9 Mo. 163.

[i] (N. C. 1851) There cannot properly be a final judgment by default upon an appeal from a justice of the peace, but the matter must be determined upon proofs, either by a court or by a jury.—Williams v. Beasley, 35 N. C. 112.

[j] (N. C. 1857) An action of assumpsit was brought before a justice on an unliquidated account, a judgment given against the defendant, and an appeal taken to the county court. On a default in that court, it was held error to give final judgment there without inquiry of damages.—Hartsfield v. Jones, 49 N. C. 309.

[k] (Pa. 1867) In a case appealed from a justice of the peace by defendants, on rule for judgment for want of a plea, held no other remedy was available; a judgment for want of an appearance being out of the question, since the entry of the appeal was equivalent to an appearance in propria persona.—Seidel v. Hurley, 1 Woodw. Dec. 352.

[l] (Pa. 1873) Judgment for want of an affidavit of defense on appeal to the common pleas of Schuylkill county from a justice of the peace in an action founded on contract, express or implied, can only be taken in that class of cases mentioned in Act April 14, 1851, § 14 (P. L. p. 625), extending the affidavit law to that county, and rule 49 of the common pleas of that county, relating to such judgments, applies only to such cases.—Feist v. Prince, 1 Leg. Chron. 135.

[m] (Pa. 1874) Judgment by default on failure to file an affidavit of defense on an appealed case, not taken in accordance with the rules of court in such cases, for the amount of the judgment of the justice, but for an amount to be ascertained by assessment, is of no validity, and will be set aside.—Saylor v. Morris, 2 Leg. Chron. 231.

[n] (Pa. 1877) B., the defendant in an action before a justice of the peace, was not notified by her counsel as to the time of trial on an appeal. In her absence the judgment was affirmed by the court. It appeared that she had not given her address to her counsel, and he, not knowing her residence, was unable to notify her. On a rule to open the judgment, held, that the attorney was not responsible for the consequences.—Harris v. Govett, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. 560.

[o] (Pa. 1888) Under the act of May 23, 1887, a judgment for want of an affidavit of defense on an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace cannot be granted.—Marshall v. Neiman, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 176.

[p] (Pa. 1893) Act May 25, 1887, relative to judgment for want of affidavit of defense, does not apply to a case appealed from a justice of the peace.—Craig v. Tamaqua Knitting Co. (Com. Pl.) 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 444.

[q] (Tex. 1889) On an appeal by the plaintiff from a justice of the peace, no judgment by default is authorized unless the defendant has entered an appearance, or been served with notice of the appeal, under Sayles' Civ. St. art. 1639, providing that no judgment by default shall be rendered against an appellee who has not entered an appearance unless notice of such appeal has been served on the appellee, his agent or attorney, at least five days before the first day of the term.—Parks v. Igo (App.) 14 S. W. 1069.

[r] (Tex. 1895) Under Sayles' Civ. St. art. 1639, providing that on appeal from a justice's court, if the appellee fails to appear on appearance day, the case shall be continued unless it be shown that notice of appeal was given, proof of service of the notice of appeal upon the appellee is a prerequisite to a default judgment against him.—Wren v. Kirsey (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 252.

§ 724. Amount of judgment.

[a, b] On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the judgment in the appellate court must not exceed an amount within his jurisdiction.

—(Mo. 1871) Shields v. Stillman, 48 Mo. 82.

CONTRA, see

(N. Y. 1822) Palmer v. Wylie, 19 Johns. 276.

[c] An appeal from a justice's judgment in ordinary cases is triable de novo on the facts, and the recovery, even when the appeal is by the defendant, may be larger than the amount of the justice's judgment.

—(Ala. 1854) Waring v. Gilbert, 25 Ala. 295; (1860) Brooks v. Carter, 36 Ala. 682.

CONTRA, see

(Pa. 1881) Linton v. Vogel, 98 Pa. 457.

[d] Plaintiff obtained judgment in a justice's court for $20, from which defendant appealed to the circuit court, where he filed a set-off in an amount exceeding the jurisdiction of the justice after deducting plaintiff's demand. Held error for the circuit court to give affirmative judgment for defendant in such amount, its jurisdiction in the case being measured by that of the justice's court.

—(Miss. 1888) McLeod v. Gray, 4 South. 544;

(Pa. 1817) Laird v. McConachy, 3 Serg. & R. 290;

(Tenn. 1858) Gray v. Jones, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 542.

[e] Where an action on a note is appealed from the justice's court to the circuit court, the judgment rendered in the latter court may include interest accruing since the judgment in the justice's court.

(Ind. 1873) Bargis v. Farrar, 45 Ind. 41;

(Pa. 1868) Trego v. Lewis, 58 Pa. (8 P. F. Smith) 463; (1881) Linton v. Vogel, 98 Pa. 457; (Tenn. 1872) Patterson v. Sheffield, 54 Tenn. (7 Heisk.) 373.

[f] (Ala. 1843) A justice's jurisdiction being limited to $50, recovery on appeal should not exceed that sum, with interest from the rendition of the primary judgment; but, where the judgment on appeal is consequent on a verdict, it will not be reversed on error because rendered for a greater sum, with interest from the time stated. It should be set aside or corrected below.—Pruitt v. Stuart, 5 Ala. 112.

[g] (Ala. 1846) On appeal from a justice of the peace the same rules will control which govern causes in justices' courts, and judgment cannot be rendered in the appellate court for a set-off which exceeds $50, against the consent of the plaintiff.—Smith v. Fleming, 9 Ala. 768.

[h] (Ala. 1846) But if the plaintiff does not require the court thus to limit its judgment, where the jury certifies a sum greater than $50, he will, upon error, be presumed to have assented to the utmost exercise of the court's jurisdiction.—Smith v. Fleming, 9 Ala. 768.

[i] (Ala. 1872) Where, on appeal to the circuit court from the justice's court, the proof shows a larger sum due the plaintiff than is claimed in his complaint, and the defendant proves a set-off less than the amount of plaintiff's claim, the measure of recovery is the sum left after deducting the amount of the set-off from the amount claimed, and not from the greater amount proved to be due the plaintiff.—Long v. Bakefield, 48 Ala. 608.

[j] (Ala. 1892) An appellant from a judgment of a justice's court cannot complain that the circuit court rendered judgment against him in an amount exceeding the penalty of the appeal bond, where such judgment is authorized by the complaint, since the penalty in the bond is intended to limit the recovery against the sureties alone.—Casey v. Coker, 11 South. 742.

[k, l] (Colo. 1887) Plaintiffs, in an action of replevin before a justice of the peace, recovered judgment for $265. Defendant appealed to the county court, where a verdict was rendered for plaintiffs for $365, an amount in excess of the justice's jurisdiction. Plaintiff did not offer to remit the excess. Held, that the court should have dismissed the action.—Thornily v. Pierce, 10 Colo. 250, 15 Pac. 335.

[m] (Colo. 1893) Where, in a suit before a justice, the amount of the claim is indorsed on the summons by the justice, as provided by Gen. St. 1883, § 1938, the county court on appeal cannot enter judgment in excess of such amount.—Meyer v. Helland, 3 Colo. App. 536, 34 Pac. 482.

[n] (Ga. 1885) Where three suits in a justice's court, two of which are on notes for $100 each and 10 per cent. attorney's fees, the third being for $75 and 10 per cent. attorney's fees, are consolidated and tried together on appeal to the superior court, and a verdict rendered for plaintiff for the full amount of the three notes, a motion in arrest of judgment is properly granted as to the two larger notes and refused as to the smaller.—Searcy v. Tillman, 75 Ga. 504.

[o] (Ill.) On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the circuit court should give judgment for the amount that may be due, although that amount may exceed the jurisdiction of a justice, provided the justice had jurisdiction at the time of the commencement of the suit.—(1834) Tindall v. Meeker, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 137; (1835) Mitcheltree v. Sparks, Id. 198.

[p] (Ill. 1851) On appeal to the circuit court from the judgment of a justice, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff exceeding $100. The plaintiff offered to remit and reduce the verdict to that sum. Held, that the circuit court was not bound to enter a judgment for the $100, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment. The proper practice in such case would be for plaintiff to move for a new trial.—People v. Skinner, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 287, 54 Am. Dec. 432.

[q] (Ill. 1871) In a suit upon an account before a justice of the peace, the plaintiff recovered a judgment for the full amount indorsed on the summons. The defendant appealed to the circuit court, where the plaintiff recovered a judgment for the full amount of his claim with the addition of interest thereon and 10 per cent. damages for the delay in taking the appeal. Held, the fact that the judgment exceeded the amount indorsed on the summons by the amount allowed for interest and damages did not vitiate it.—Welch v. Karstens, 60 Ill. 117.

[r] (Ill. 1874) On appeal to the circuit court from a justice's court, recovery cannot exceed the amount of the demand indorsed on the summons in the justice's court.—Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. McClenahan, 74 Ill. 435.

[s] (Ill. 1889) On an appeal from a justice's decision, the nature of the action is determined, in the court to which the appeal is taken, by the evidence introduced at the trial, without any reference to what the action may have been called in the justice's court; but, if the case is tort, the recovery is limited to the amount of the justice's jurisdiction.—Steele v. Hill, 35 Ill. App. 211.

[t] (Ill. 1893) On appeal from a justice of the peace in an action of replevin, the circuit court may render judgment for damages in excess of the jurisdictional limit of justices, where such excess accrued after the justice rendered his judgment, since, where the justice had jurisdiction in the first place, facts subsequently arising cannot affect that jurisdiction.—Alley v. McCabe, 35 N. E. 615, 147 Ill. 410, affirming (1892) 46 Ill. App. 368.

[u] (Ind. 1878) A plaintiff cannot recover, upon an appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace, more than the amount over which the justice had jurisdiction, and where a plaintiff who had recovered a verdict on appeal for a larger amount than that over which the justice had jurisdiction remitted the excess, and judgment was given for him for the balance, it was held that the verdict did not oust the jurisdiction, and the remission and judgment were proper.—Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Breckenridge, 64 Ind. 113.

[uu] (Kan. 1892) On appeal by defendant from a judgment of a justice of the peace, where the bill of particulars on which the case was tried before the justice, and on which it is tried de novo in the district court, only claims $20 as a reasonable attorney's fee, it is error for the district court to give judgment for a larger attorney's fee.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Curtis, 48 Kan. 179, 29 Pac. 146; Same v. McMullen, 48 Kan. 281, 29 Pac. 147.

[uuu] (Md. 1878) On an appeal from a justice of the peace the defendant may recover an amount beyond the justice's jurisdiction.—Zitzer v. Jones, 48 Md. 115.

[v] (Minn. 1858) Where, on a trial in the district court of a case appealed from a justice's court, the verdict is for a sum greater than the amount laid in the declaration before the justice, a judgment cannot be entered thereon without a remittitur of the excess.—Elfelt v. Smith, 1 Minn. 125 (Gil. 101).

[vv] (Mo. 1868) Where two suits before a justice of the peace were erroneously consolidated so as to make the amount claimed more than the limit of the justice's jurisdiction, but judgment was rendered for the plaintiff for a sum within such jurisdiction, it was held to be error, on appeal by the defendant, to enter judgment for more than the judgment below.—Bridle v. Grau, 42 Mo. 359.

[w] (Pa.) Nothing can be recovered on an appeal which could not be recovered before a justice, except the intermediate interest.—(1807) Moore v. Wait, 1 Bin. 219; (1810) Owen v. Shelhamer, 3 Bin. 45; (1823) Wright v. Guy, 10 Serg. & R. 227.

[ww] (Pa. 1814) Where the judgment of a justice is for a sum within his jurisdiction, and, on appeal to the common pleas, judgment is given for a sum above his jurisdiction, the judgment will not be arrested, unless it appears that the cause of action was different.—McEntire v. McElduff, 1 Serg. & R. 19.

[x] (Pa. 1846) On an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in an action of trover, neither party is bound by the damages stated on the docket of the justice. They are only confined to the same cause of action.—Millar v. Criswell, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 449.

[xx] (Pa. 1849) Where an action was brought before a justice, which was within his jurisdiction, and upon appeal a declaration was filed for a sum beyond such jurisdiction, and a rule of reference was entered into, and an award made for a sum within the justice's jurisdiction, it was held that the judgment was not erroneous.—Hoffman v. Dawson, 11 Pa. (1 Jones) 280.

[y] (Pa. 1867) On the trial of an appeal from the judgment of a justice, plaintiff's possible recovery, in the absence of explanatory evidence, is limited by the extent of its claim before the justice.—Kurr v. Brobst, 2 Woodw. Dec. 187.

[yy] (Tenn. 1868) In cases of appeals from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, the jurisdiction of the circuit court is limited to the jurisdiction of the justice, and if the justice has no jurisdiction to render a judgment for more than a certain sum, on the matter of a set-off, the circuit court has no power to render judgment for a greater amount, and the fact that the cause was heard de novo in the circuit court, and that the plea of set-off entered in that court was not relied on in the justice's court, makes no difference.—Crow v. Cunningham, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 255.

[z] (Utah, 1895) On appeal from a justice court the district court may allow interest on the sum claimed from the time the suit was brought, though the judgment, on account of such allowance, exceeds the amount for which the justice court could have rendered judgment.—McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Marchant, 11 Utah, 68, 39 Pac. 483.

[zz] (Wis. 1859) Where, on appeal, the judgment is for an amount exceeding the jurisdiction of the justice before whom the suit was originally brought, it must be reversed, unless the plaintiff will remit the excess and pay the costs of the defendant's appeal.—Dunbar v. Bittle, 7 Wis. 143.

§ 725. Setting aside judgment and new trial.

Payment of costs as requisite for setting aside dismissal of appeal, see ante, § 646.

[a] (Cal. 1887) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 980, which defines the powers of the superior court on appeal from a justice of the peace, the superior court, after a nonsuit in the trial of an appeal from a justice's court, can grant a new trial.—Massman v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 582, 12 Pac. 685.

[aa] (Ill. 1867) In an action to recover for services in herding cattle, it appeared, on the trial in the district court on appeal from a justice's court, that on their being returned in the fall 3 head of the cattle were missing; that defendant then claimed but 55, which were returned, and plaintiff claimed that there were but 55 in all, and he offered to return another to defendant, who declined to receive it, as he believed it was not his; and that on the next day he concluded it was his, but when they searched for it in the herd it could not be found. Defendant claimed the value of the missing cattle should be allowed as a set-off, and that he should recover the balance above a sum sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's account. Held, that where the evidence satisfactorily showed that plaintiff received 57 head of cattle, and actually returned but 54, and there was no evidence from which it could reasonably be inferred that the missing cattle were lost by reason of defendant's negligence, a verdict in favor of plaintiff should be set aside as manifestly against the evidence.—Ray v. Bullock, 46 Ill. 64.

[b] (Ill. 1895) Where an attorney for the plaintiff, in an appeal from a justice of the peace, served a notice on the defendant in person, no attorney having appeared, and he threw the notice aside without examination, or giving his actual attorney any notice of the matter, afterwards, upon his motion to set aside the judgment entered, it was held that he was guilty of inexcusable negligence and inattention.—Oliver v. Gerstle, 58 Ill. App. 615.

[c] (La. 1890) Since Code Prac. art. 1129, declares that appeals from a justice of the peace to the district court are "to be tried in the appellate court de novo," the latter has the same authority to amend a judgment which it has affirmed on such an appeal as it has to amend a judgment rendered by it in the first instance; and certiorari does not lie to it on account of such amendment.—State ex rel. Ducote v. Coco, 42 La. Ann. 408, 7 South. 620.

[d] (Miss. 1878) The fact that a judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace in the absence of the defendant, caused by the plaintiff's having induced him to believe that the action would be dismissed, is ground for granting a new trial.—Barkley v. Hanlan, 55 Miss. 606.

[e] (Mo. 1890) Where plaintiff's judgment before a justice of the peace is affirmed on appeal for failure of the defendant to give notice of appeal, and the court sets aside such affirmance and reinstates the appeal, an objection thereto is waived by proceeding to trial.

Plaintiff should refuse to proceed to preserve his exception.—Edwards v. Albrecht, 42 Mo. App. 497.

[f] (Mo. 1894) An action begun before a justice of the peace was dismissed in the circuit court for failure of the plaintiff to appear. Afterwards, in defendant's absence, and without notice to him, the court, at plaintiff's request, set aside the order of dismissal, and rendered judgment for costs against the defendant. In a proceeding to enjoin the enforcement of the latter judgment the evidence tended to show that the defendant was liable for such costs. Held, that no ground for equitable interference was shown.—Davis v. Wade, 58 Mo. App. 641.

[ff] (Mont. 1893) Where a verdict is rendered in favor of plaintiff in justice's court, and also on appeal in the district court, for a balance due on an account, and there is ample evidence to support the verdicts, it is an abuse of discretion in the trial court to set aside the latter verdict on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence.—Falk v. Brown, 13 Mont. 125, 32 Pac. 492.

[g] (N. J. 1822) The common pleas have a right to set aside verdicts, and grant new trials, as well in cases of appeal as in other cases.—Squere v. Gale, 6 N. J. Law (1 Halst.) 157.

[h] (N. J. 1859) The appellate powers of the court of common pleas are fixed by statute, and the have no power to grant a new trial or reinstate a cause which they have once disposed of, by judgment on the merits or by nonsuit.—Schuyler v. Mills, 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 137.

[i] (N. C. 1877) Defendant appealed from the judgment of a justice's court to the superior court, where judgment was rendered against him; he making no defense to the action. More than a year afterwards, the court ordered the judgment set aside, and the case reopened, on the ground that the defendant had no notice of the judgment. Held error.—McDaniel v. Watkins, 76 N. C. 399.

[j] (Ohio, 1869) Where the defendant, on an appeal in an action before a justice of the peace for surgical services, set up a counterclaim for damages in an amount beyond the justice's jurisdiction, on which the plaintiff took issue, resulting in a judgment for the defendant on the counterclaim, held, that the incidents of a case of original jurisdiction in the court of common pleas followed, including the right of the plaintiffs to a second trial.—Wood v. O'Ferrall, 19 Ohio St. 427.

[k] (Pa. 1881) Where the attorney for the defendant requested the clerk to enter an appearance in an ejectment action, and it did not go upon the continuance docket before judgment and execution, the court will not reopen the judgment, especially after execution, because, even if an affidavit and a recognizance on defendant's behalf ousted an alderman's jurisdiction, defendant should have appeared at the next term of the common pleas and pleaded.—Alexander v. Jones, 13 Lanc. Bar, 43.

[l] (Pa. 1888) Where, under a rule of court on appeal from an alderman, judgment of non pros. was entered for failure to file a declaration and statement within proper time after appeal filed, and it appears that the failure arose through no default of plaintiff, but from neglect of his counsel, due to sickness, the judgment will be stricken off, but not if the default arose from mere neglect of counsel.—Sander v. Beilstine, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 579.

[m] (R. I. 1888) An appeal to the common pleas from a justice's court was dismissed because the appeal bond was not duly executed. On defendant's petition for a new trial, held, that a new trial cannot be granted in the common pleas. Pub. St. c. 221, § 2, authorizes the supreme court to grant a new trial in a suit which has been tried or decided in the court of common pleas within one year, and this case never was tried or decided in that court.—Brayton v. Dexter, 16 R. I. 70, 12 Atl. 132.

REVERSAL, § 730.
—— GROUNDS FOR REVERSAL, § 731.
—— PROCEEDINGS ON REVERSAL, § 732.
MODIFICATION OF JUDGMENT ON APPEAL AND REHEARING, § 733.
REMAND AND NEW TRIAL BEFORE JUSTICE, § 734.

§ 726. Decision in general.

[a] (Iowa, 1885) Where a justice of the peace rendered judgment for plaintiff for the amount claimed on a verdict which stated no amount, the judgment should be set aside on writ of error, and the cause remanded, and it is error to render judgment against defendant for costs.—Bartle v. Planee, 68 Iowa, 227, 26 N. W. 88.

[b] (Mich. 1878) An appeal from a justice was dismissed for being taken too late. A special appeal was then allowed on a showing that the judgment had been fraudulently antedated; and, as it appeared on this appeal that the judgment was void for being entered more than four days after the hearing, a perpetual stay of proceedings was granted.—Hall v. Howard, 39 Mich. 219.

[c] (Nev. 1884) District courts have no power to directly, and without trial, reverse or affirm judgments brought by appeal from justice's courts. Such cases must be tried anew.—State v. Fifth District Court, 18 Nev. 286, 3 Pac. 417.

[d] (N. J.) The judgment on an appeal should be specific, both as to damages and costs. Not only a reversal or affirmance is required, but such judgment as the justice ought to have given.—(1819) Hendricks v. Craig, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 567; (1830) Jones v. Pitman, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 93; (1831) Woodruff v. Badgley, Id. 367.

[e] (N. Y. 1869) A judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff upon a trial in a county court, of an action coming there upon appeal from a justice's court, involving a disputed question as to an agreement by the defendant to allow plaintiff to saw a certain quantity of wood on the farm of the defendant for about two months after the lease from the defendant to the plaintiff of said premises was surrendered and given up, was sustained, as a conclusive determination of the facts, notwithstanding the objection taken by defendant on trial in the justice's court that plaintiff, by his own showing, had brought title to land in question.—Balja v. Rawley, 37 How. Prac. 120.

[f] (N. Y. 1896) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3063, requiring an appellate court, on appeal from a justice's judgment, to render judgment according to the justice of the case, without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect the merits, an appellate court should enter a single judgment for plaintiff, less costs accruing to defendant after his offer of judgment, where a justice entered one judgment for plaintiff for damages and for costs accruing prior to the offer, and a separate one for defendants for costs accruing after such offer.—Southard v. Becker (Co. Ct.) 15 Misc. Rep. 436, 37 N. Y. Supp. 927.

[g] (Ohio, 1892) The common pleas cannot, on finding that a judgment of a magistrate was not appealable, enter judgment against plaintiff in error for the amount of the magistrate's judgment, and costs on appeal. It can only dismiss the appeal.—Stoffregen v. Biederman, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 55.

[h] (S. D. 1895) On appeal from justice to county court on questions of law only, the appellate court may "set aside, affirm, or modify" the judgment appealed from, or may order a new trial in the justice court (Comp. Laws, § 6136), but cannot set aside the judgment, and render a new judgment on the merits against the opposite party.—Coughran v. Wilson, 7 S. D. 155, 63 N. W. 774.

[i] (Wis. 1871) Under Rev. St. 1855, on appeal from a justice's court, where there is no trial de novo in the appellate court, it can only affirm or reverse the judgment of the justice, in whole or in part, and cannot render judgment upon the merits.—Mock v. Erdmann, 28 Wis. 113.

[j] (Wis. 1882) Under Rev. St. § 3769, relating to appeals from justices of the peace, which provides that "in giving judgment the appellate court may affirm or reverse the judgment," the judgment of that court must be one of affirmance or reversal, and not an ordinary judgment for one of the parties.—Gunsolus v. Lormer, 54 Wis. 630, 12 N. W. 62.

[k] (Wis. 1894) The failure of the circuit court to decide an appeal from justice's court at the term at which it is heard does not deprive the circuit court of jurisdiction.—Silvernail v. Rust, 88 Wis. 458, 60 N. W. 787.

§ 727. Affirmance.

Affirmance of judgment of justice on dismissal of appeal, see ante, § 644.

Liability of surety on appeal bond on affirmance of judgment, see post, § 740.

[a] (Cal. 1892) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 980, providing that, on appeal from a justice's court heard upon a statement of the case, the superior court "may review all orders affecting the judgment appealed from, and may set aside or confirm or modify any or all proceedings subsequent to and dependent upon such judgment, and may, if necessary or proper, order a new trial," the superior court, on appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of a justice for defendant setting aside a judgment previously rendered for plaintiff, and dismissing the action, cannot reverse the judgment appealed from, and affirm the judgment set aside, but can only reverse said judgment and order a new trial, since the last judgment is the only one appealed from, and the former judgment does not affect it, and for the further reason that, when the judgment was set aside, it ceased to exist, and there is no such judgment to affirm.—Sherer v. Lassen County Superior Court, 94 Cal. 354, 29 Pac. 716.

[b] (Iowa, 1856) An entry of "judgment below affirmed" is "a final judgment," which may be rendered on appeal, wanting the appropriate, though not necessary, form.—Cox v. Graham, 6 Iowa (3 Clarke) 347.

[c] (Iowa, 1860) An affirmance of the justice's judgment at a special term of the district court, and before the next regular term, is an irregularity for which the judgment of the district court will be reversed.—Fisher v. Harber, 10 Iowa, 296.

[d] (Mass. 1875) Under Gen. St. c. 112, § 17, and Id. c. 114, § 15, regulating the practice on appeals to the superior court, a judgment of affirmance, rendered at the second term after the defendant's appeal, is not erroneous for want of a separate petition for leave to enter the complaint, or of notice to the appellant, or of a recital that the omission to enter the complaint at the first term was by accident or mistake.—Noyes v. Sherburne, 117 Mass. 279.

[e] (Mass. 1875) Where the record of an appeal from a justice of the peace shows the appeal to have been taken by the town, and not by a person unauthorized to represent it, the appeal is properly before the court, and a judgment of affirmance will not be disturbed.—Inhabitants of Leyden v. Sweeney, 118 Mass. 418.

[f] (Mo. 1838) On appeal from a justice of the peace, it is error for the circuit court to affirm simply. A new judgment should be entered.—Cates v. Akerd, 5 Mo. 124.

[g] (Mo. 1890) Rev. St. 1879, § 1000, provides that, in cases of appeal from the judgment of a justice, if the appellant fails to prosecute the appeal according to law, the judgment of the justice shall be affirmed. Held, upon appeal from a judgment of a justice in an action of replevin, that the court is not bound to affirm the judgment as entered by the justice, but may enter judgment de novo in the alternative form, as prescribed by statute, after hearing evidence as to the value of the property.—Munley v. King, 40 Mo. App. 531.

[gg] (N. Y. 1891) Code Civ. Proc. § 1319 (in chapter 12, the title of which relates only to appeals to superior city courts, the supreme court, and the court of appeals), providing that, where a judgment from which an appeal has been taken from one court to another is wholly or partly affirmed, it must be enforced by the court in which it was rendered, to the extent permitted by the determination of the appellate court, as if the appeal therefrom had not been taken, does not apply to appeals from a justice's court to the county court.—Ryan v. Parr, 61 Hun, 624, 16 N. Y. Supp. 829.

[h] (Tex. 1856) An action was instituted before a justice of the peace, and judgment rendered, from which an appeal was taken to the district court. In the latter, judgment was rendered, "that the judgment of the court below be affirmed," without stating the amount. Held, that a sale under it was valid.—Luter v. Rose, 16 Tex. 52.

[i] (Vt. 1859) In an appeal by defendant from the judgment of a justice of the peace, who has adjudged that the cause of action arose from the willful or malicious act or neglect of the defendant, and that the defendant ought to be confined in close jail, if the defendant neglect to enter his appeal in the county court, and the plaintiff enter the case for affirmance, and the judgment is affirmed, the adjudication of the justice as to the origin of the cause of action is also affirmed, and it is the duty of the county court to issue a certified execution.—Reynolds v. Provan, 31 Vt. 637.

[j] (Wis. 1887) A judgment by the circuit court on appeal from a judgment in a justice's court, not exceeding $15, ordering that plaintiff recover of defendant the amount of the judgment in the justice's court, viz., $14.87, with interest thereon from the rendition of said judgment, amounting to $3.50, making, together, $18.37; that he also recover his costs, —is a mere affirmance of the judgment below, and cannot be regarded as a new judgment, in contravention of Rev. St. §§ 3767, 3769, providing that on such appeals from judgments not exceeding $15 there shall be no new trial, but the judgment of the justice shall be affirmed or reversed in whole or in part.—Wold v. Ordway, 68 Wis. 176, 31 N. W. 759.

[k] (Wis. 1892) Rev. St. § 3768, provides, in effect, that an appeal from a justice's court "shall be tried in the appellate court as actions originally brought there," whenever "plaintiff appeals from a judgment against him, * * * if, at the time of appealing, he shall make an affidavit that he has a valid claim, as he verily believes, against the defendant, as set forth in his complaint, exceeding the sum of fifteen dollars." Held, that where plaintiff, in an action for $60 in justice's court, refused to give security for costs, and judgment was rendered against him for costs, and the case dismissed, it was error for the superior court, on appeal thereto and the filing of the required affidavit by plaintiff, to affirm the judgment of the justice on the ground that he had not abused his discretion, since plaintiff was entitled to have the case tried in the superior court as if originally brought there.—Steinam v. Schulte, 88 Wis. 567, 53 N. W. 844.

§ 728. —— Grounds for affirmance.

Failure to enter appeal as grounds for affirmance of judgment, see ante, § 592.

—— to file transcript on appeal as ground for affirmance of judgment, see ante, § 621.

—— to give notice of appeal as ground for affirmance, see ante, § 585.

—— to make objection below as ground for affirmance of judgment, see ante, § 508.

—— to pay costs as grounds for affirmance of judgment, see ante, §§ 543–549.

—— to pay costs on appeal as ground for affirmance, see ante, § 545.

[a] (Ariz. 1873) Where the only error disclosed by the justice's return is a defect in the issuance and service of the summons, which is cured by a stipulation that the summons was properly served, and there is no special assignment of errors, the district court properly affirmed the judgment, without trying the case de novo.—Irvine v. Lopez, 1 Ariz. 81, 25 Pac. 799.

[b] (Ill. 1894) Rev. St. c. 79, § 71, providing that on appeals from justice court the circuit court may, on failure of appellant to prosecute the appeal, at the election of appellee, affirm the judgment, with 10 per cent. damages, without a trial de novo, is constitutional.—Fergus v. Haupt, 54 Ill. App. 190.

[c] (Iowa) On the default of the appellant, on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the judgment may be affirmed.—(1849) Wright v. Clark, 2 G. Greene, 86; (1849) Taylor v. Barber, 2 G. Greene, 350; (1859) Atkins v. McCready, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 214.

[d] (Iowa, 1874) A rule of the circuit court provided that in all appeals from inferior tribunals, if the appellant failed to docket his appeal and pay the docket fees by noon of the second day of the term at which the appeal was triable, the appellee might have the appeal docketed, and the judgment affirmed. It appeared that the appellee did not pay the docket fees and procure an affirmance until the ninth day of the term; the appellant and his attorneys being in court during the time, and might have prevented the affirmance by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Held, that a motion to set aside the affirmance was properly overruled.—Heald v. House, 39 Iowa, 198.

[e] (Iowa, 1880) A party to an action of tort, in default in a justice's court, may appeal, and without filing any pleading in the circuit court may appear and demand that testimony be introduced so that he may cross-examine the witnesses; but, where he also makes default in the circuit court, judgment may be affirmed without again introducing evidence.—Harty v. D. M. & M. R. Co., 54 Iowa, 327, 6 N. W. 545; Berry v. Same, Id.

[f] (Mass. 1875) Where an appeal taken from a justice's judgment, in an action against a town, is not entered or prosecuted in the superior court, the judgment appealed from is properly affirmed, under Gen. St. c. 120, § 27, upon complaint of the adverse party.—Inhabitants of Leyden v. Sweeney, 118 Mass. 418.

[g] (Mo.) When an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace or county court is not prosecuted, the judgment will be affirmed.—(1847) Martin v. White, 11 Mo. 214; (1853) Starr v. Stewart, 18 Mo. 410; (1853) State v. Thevenin, 19 Mo. 237; (1854) Milligan v. Dunn, 19 Mo. 643.

[h] (Mo. 1865) On an appeal from a justice of the peace, where both parties appeared at the trial, the appellate court must try the case upon the merits; and the judgment cannot be affirmed upon motion, unless the appellant fails to prosecute his appeal.—McDowell v. Strong, 35 Mo. 505.

[i] (Mo. 1882) Where an appellant from the judgment of a justice gave, and appellee accepted, notice to take depositions, and the depositions were taken and filed before the return term, and the appellee issued subpœnas for witnesses on the third day of the return term, judgment cannot be affirmed for failure to prosecute the appeal.—Berry v. Union Trust Co., 75 Mo. 430.

[ii] (Mo. 1887) If the appellant refuses to prosecute the appeal, after making an unsuccessful motion to dismiss the same, the circuit court, to which an appeal is taken from a decision of a justice of the peace, may, under the Missouri statutes regulating proceedings after appeal taken, render judgment of affirmance at the first term of said court. Rev. St. 1879, § 3057, providing that, if notice is not given at least 10 days before the second term of the appellate court, the judgment may be affirmed or appeal dismissed, on appellee's motion, has no application to such a case.—Holloman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 92 Mo. 284, 5 S. W. 1.

[j] (Mo. 1887) Whenever the appeal is reached for trial, and the appellant fails to prosecute the same, the appellee is entitled to a judgment of affirmance, whether the appeal stood for trial at the demand of either party, or at the option of the appellee only, under Rev. St. § 3056, relating to appeals from justices of the peace.—Holloman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 92 Mo. 284, 5 S. W. 1.

[k] (Mo. 1887) Where defendant's motion that plaintiff shall be compelled to elect on which trespass he will proceed is overruled, and defendant stands on his motion, the court cannot affirm the justice's judgment appealed from without hearing the evidence. Defendant's action is not an entire failure to prosecute his appeal.—Ray v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 25 Mo. App. 104.

[l] (Mo. 1892) Under Rev. St. § 6342, requiring service of notice of appeal at least 10 days before the first day of the term when the cause is to be determined, and section 6343, providing that no appeal shall be dismissed for want of said notice, but when appellee appears and demands trial, and appellant fails to appear, the judgment shall be affirmed on motion, where notice is not served in time, but appellant appears and obtains a continuance, appellee is not entitled to an affirmance. Section 2930 providing that, when appeals from justices shall not be prosecuted according to law, judgment shall be affirmed, with costs, is a rule of costs, and does not enlarge appellee's rights.—Meitz v. Koetter, 51 Mo. App. 370.

[m] (Mo. 1893) Where the appeal from the justice's judgment is taken on the day of trial, which is more than 10 days before the next succeeding term of the circuit court, and the appellant fails to prosecute his appeal, the judgment should be affirmed.—Horn v. Excelsior Springs Co., 52 Mo. App. 548.

[n] (Neb. 1888) Under Civ. Code, § 1011, providing that on appeal from justices' courts, where appellant fails to deliver to the clerk of the district court on or before the second day of the term following the rendition of the judgment a transcript of the proceedings, appellee may, at the same term, file such transcript, and on motion have the appeal docketed and judgment entered as in the justice's court, such filing and motion need not be made at the same term.—Wilson v. Wilson, 23 Neb. 455, 36 N. W. 661.

[o] (Vt. 1832) The submission of a case to arbitrators after an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace therein does not deprive plaintiff of his right to enter his complaint for affirmance, unless there is an award made before court, or unless the terms of the submission allow a time in which to make an award, which extends beyond the term of court to which the appeal is taken.—Hayes v. Blanchard, 4 Vt. 210.

[p] (Vt. 1874) Acts 1866, No. 37, relating to appeals from judgments of justices of the peace, does not abridge the right of the appellee, secured by Gen. St. c. 31, § 64, to enter the appeal for affirmance.—Ide v. Story, 47 Vt. 62.

[q] (Wis. 1850) The return of a justice, on an appeal from his judgment, must be in conformity with the statute, and show the proceedings had before him, in order to confer jurisdiction upon the appellate court to render a judgment of affirmance, under the statute, for want of prosecution.—Hale v. Thayer, 2 Chand. 68, 2 Pin. 410.

§ 729. Modification.

[a] (Ala. 1886) An entry of judgment by default by a justice against one or more defendants not served with process, and who did not appear by attorney or otherwise, is a clerical error, which the court will correct on the appeal of the other defendants, and at their costs.—Neff v. Edwards, 81 Ala. 246, 2 South. 88.

[b] (Ga. 1877) The answer of a garnishee admitted the possession of notes belonging to the defendant, but did not admit that he had any of defendant's money in his possession, and the justice's court awarded judgment against the defendant and the garnishee personally. Held, that the superior court should have decided the case finally by ordering the judgment against the defendant to stand, setting aside the personal judgment against the garnishee, and ordering the notes to be brought into the superior court, and proceedings to be had thereon, as directed in Code, § 3305.—Hallett v. Blain, 58 Ga. 142.

[c] (Ill. 1861) Judgment having been rendered in justice's court against two defendants, only one of whom had been brought into court, the defendant who was served appealed the case, but failed to prosecute his appeal. Held, that the circuit court might affirm the judgment as to him, and reverse it as to the other who has not been served.—Stephens v. Cross. 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 35.

[d] (Kan. 1875) In an action of replevin, tried by a justice of the peace, where it is difficult to determine from the record in whose favor the justice found, or intended to find, and where the justice rendered judgment in favor of the defendant for three dollars damages, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for costs, and did not render any judgment concerning the property in controversy, and the district court, on petition in error by defendant, reversed the judgment of the justice of the peace, and then rendered judgment in favor of said defendant for his costs both in the district court and the justice's court, held, that the judgment of the district court would not be disturbed on the application of the plaintiff.—Cartright v. Smith, 15 Kan. 224.

[e] (Kan. 1880) Where, in replevin, the justice modified the judgment in favor of the defendant, and the district court affirmed his action, even if such modification was erroneous, the defendant could not complain, as the district court had power to make the modification.—Starr v. Hinshaw, 23 Kan. 532.

[f] (Minn. 1869) Where, in replevin, a justice enters judgment for the value of the property taken, and not for the alternative value, the district court should, upon an appeal involving questions of law alone, under Gen. St. 1866, c. 65, § 107, as amended by Laws 1868, p. 135, providing that, in such case, the appeal shall "be tried in the district court upon the return of the justice," instead of reversing the judgment, modify it, so as to make it read in the alternative.—Kates v. Thomas, 14 Minn. 460 (Gil. 343).

[g] (Minn.) Gen. St. 1878, c. 65, § 117, provides that, on appeal to the district court from the judgment of a justice of the peace on questions of law alone, "the action shall be tried in the district court on the return of the justice." Chapter 66, § 214, declares that "a trial is the judicial examination of the issues between the parties, whether they are issues of law or of fact." Held, that on an appeal from the judgment of a justice on questions of law alone the judgment may be modified by correcting errors of law appearing on the return, if the erroneous part of the judgment is separable from the rest.—(1880) Watson v. Ward, 27 Minn. 29, 6 N. W. 407; (1882) Closen v. Allen, 29 Minn. 86, 12 N. W. 146; (1893) Meister v. Russell, 53 Minn. 54, 54 N. W. 935.

[h] (N. Y. 1846) Where a justice of the peace renders judgment in favor of a defendant for a sum adjudged to be due him from the plaintiff, and for costs, in a case where the judgment should have been generally for the defendant with costs, the common pleas should reverse the erroneous part, and affirm the judgment as to the residue.—Kast v. Kathern, 3 Denio, 344.

[i] (N. Y. 1862) Where a recovery in a justice's court was composed of items of damages, and there was no dispute as to the evidence, and the justice, by mistake in adding the items, rendered judgment for too great a sum, the county court may, on appeal, reverse the judgment as to the excess, and affirm it as to the correct aggregate.—Fields v. Moul, 15 Abb. Prac. 6.

[j] (N. Y. 1862) A county court has authority on appeal, under the Code, to reverse in part and affirm in part a judgment of a justice's court for entire damages, where it clearly appears that there are two or more independent causes of action, and the judgment is right as to one and erroneous as to the others.—Staats v. Hudson River R. Co., 23 How. Prac. 463.

[k] (N. Y. 1864) A county court, on appeal from a justice of the peace, has authority, under Code, § 366, to modify the judgment, according to the justice of the case, without regard to technical errors.—Brownell v. Winnie, 29 N. Y. 400, 86 Am. Dec. 314.

[l] (N. Y. 1884) Where, in replevin before a justice, the affidavit and undertaking are insufficient, but proper personal service was had, and judgment for plaintiff was entered on the merits, the judgment will be modified by setting aside the writ of replevin, but affirming the judgment as to the value and disposition of the property.—Irr v. Schroeder, 6 Civ. Proc. R. 253.

[m] (N. Y. 1891) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3063, providing that the county court "may affirm or reverse the judgment of the justice in whole or in part, and as to any or all of the parties, and for errors of law or of fact," the county court, on appeal from a justice in an action where an attachment was granted by the justice after personal service of process on defendant, but on an insufficient affidavit, may affirm the judgment on the merits, and at the same time declare the attachment invalid.—Bump v. Dehany, 59 Hun, 619, 12 N. Y. Supp. 901.

[n] (N. Y. 1891) On a trial before a justice of the peace plaintiffs presented a bill of items of goods sold to defendant, amounting to $103, with credits indorsed thereon of $47, leaving a balance of $56. Plaintiffs testified, without objection, to a sale of goods to the amount of the bill, and to the credits thereon indorsed, and the jury returned a verdict for the balance. Plaintiffs remitted $6, and took a judgment for $50. The bill contained credits of "1,734 hay," and "1,890 hay," with no value carried out, and for which defendant contended no allowance had been made by the judgment. Held, that defendant's remedy was by an appeal to the county court for a new trial, and on an appeal on questions of law was not entitled to have the judgment modified so as to give credit for the hay; there being no data from which the judgment could be modified.—Huested v. Bliss, 62 Hun, 619, 16 N. Y. Supp. 644.

[o] (N. Y. 1894) In an action in a justice's court by an assignee a verdict was rendered in favor of the assignor, and judgment was entered thereon. The record showed the assignee as plaintiff, and there was no change of parties. Held, that an order of the county court, on appeal taken by plaintiff, modifying the judgment so as to read in favor of plaintiff instead of the assignor, did not prejudice defendant, as plaintiff was entitled to such modification on appeal.—McAleer v. Warren, 77 Hun, 589, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1000.

[p] (Wis. 1872) Under the practice, there can be no partial affirmance or partial reversal of a justice's judgment for costs.—Detling v. Weber, 29 Wis. 559.

[q] (Wis. 1885) Rev. St. 1878, § 3772, providing that if a justice's judgment, or any part thereof, be collected, and the judgment be afterwards reversed, the appellate court shall order the amount collected to be restored, with interest, does not apply to a case where the appellate court simply cuts down the amount of the judgment.—Sutton v. Chapman, 64 Wis. 312, 25 N. W. 207.

§ 730. Reversal.

Necessity of transcript to enable a judgment by default to be set aside by appellate court, see ante, § 615.

Reversal of judgment of justice on dismissal of appeal, see ante, § 644.

—— on a non pros. by plaintiff on appeal, see ante, §§ 649–651.

Effect of judgment reversed on appeal, see "Judgment," vol. 30, c. 2624, § 1497 [i].

Release of part of justice's judgment to save a reversal as release of claim on new trial after reversal, see "Release," I.

[a] (Minn. 1875) Where the justice in garnishment proceedings gives the claimant full opportunity to establish his claim, and he omits to do so, and the justice discharges the garnishee, upon an appeal by the plaintiff on questions of law alone, the appellate court may, on reversing the judgment, render judgment on the disclosure against the garnishee, and the claimant will be bound by such judgment.—Donnelly v. O'Conner, 22 Minn. 309.

[b] (Minn.) Upon an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in favor of plaintiff, on questions of law alone, a simple judgment of reversal has the effect of a dismissal of the action.—(1880) Terryll v. Bailey, 27 Minn. 304, 7 N. W. 261; (1889) Daley v. Mead, 40 Minn. 382, 42 N. W. 85.

[c] (Mo. 1836) Where a case is carried up to the circuit court from a justice's court, a trial should be had de novo, and it is error to reverse the judgment below and give judgment against the party recovering below.—Duncan v. Travis, 4 Mo. 369.

[d] (N. J. 1835) On appeal from the justice's court, if the error is of such a nature as not to prevent a fair trial in the appellate court, such new trial ought to be had; but if the error ought to have arrested or put an end to the action before the justice, such should be its operation in the court above.—Johnson v. Pennington, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 188.

[e] (N. Y. 1881) It is the duty of the county court to reverse a judgment of a justice's court, if erroneous, although for nominal damages only.—Countryman v. Lighthill, 24 Hun, 405.

[f] (N. Frost (Co. Ct.) 16 Misc. Rep. 430, 39 N. Y. Supp. 856.

Desnoyer, 1 Minn. 41 (Gil. 25), following Philips v. Geesland (1849) 1 Chand. 59, 2 Pin. 120.

White (Com. Pl.) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 504.

[x] (Utah, 1894) Comp. Laws 1888, § 3595, making the wrong overruling of an objection to the venue in justice court cause for reversal on appeal, and section 3659, giving either party on appeal to the district court the benefit of all legal objections made below, obliges the district court to reverse on finding such objection to the venue well taken.—Kansas City Hardware Co. v. Neilson, 10 Utah, 27, 36 Pac. 131.

[y] (Wis. 1861) In a suit before a justice of the peace to recover personal property valued at $14, the justice rendered no findings whatsoever, but simply ordered the defendant to deliver the property and pay the costs. Held, that the county court could not, on appeal, disregard this as a mere technical defect, but must reverse the judgment.—Carney v. Doyle, 14 Wis. 270.

Judgment was given against him by the justice, and he appealed to the county court, which set aside the judgment and ordered a transfer of the case to the district court. Held, that the appeal vested the county court with authority to make all orders necessary for the determination of the case, and that the order for transfer was proper, necessary, and within the power of the court.—Cullen v. Langridge, 17 Cal. 67.

[d] (Cal. 1883) Where, in a justice's court, defendant, by his answer, denies the allegations of the complaint, but fails to appear at the trial, and the court, without hearing evidence, gives judgment against him, and he appeals on questions of law alone, the superior court may properly order a new trial at its bar.—Curtis v. Babbott, 14 Neb. 517, 16 N. W. 845.

Brackley, 1 Hilt. 447; (1859) Howe v. Julien, 2 Hilt, 453.

San Francisco County Superior Court, 71 Cal. 491, 12 Pac. 306.

[b] (Cal. 1888) The court having properly decided an appeal from a justice's judgment, a subsequent order on a petition for a rehearing, setting aside its decision on the ground that it had no jurisdiction, is coram non judice, and void, as a rehearing is not authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 980, prescribing the power of the superior court on appeal.—Fabretti v. Santa Clara County Superior Court, 77 Cal. 305, 19 Pac. 481.

[c] (Minn. 1893) On an appeal from a justice on questions of law alone the district court may, after a decision, reconsider and modify its first decision of the case.—Meister v. Russell, 53 Minn. 54, 54 N. W. 935.

[d] (Mo.) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 5156, providing, on appeals to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, that the judgment may be affirmed or the appeal dismissed, does not authorize the circuit court, after the rendition of a judgment of affirmance on default, to grant a new trial.—(1895) Schwoerer v. Sanford, 60 Hun, 356, 14 N. Y. Supp. 840.

[f] (Vt. 1861) The county court having dismissed the complaint of the appellee for the affirmance of a justice's judgment, the appeal from which the appellant had neglected to file, the appellee, at the next term of the county court, presented a petition setting forth that the appellant, by false statements and ex parte affidavits in support thereof, had induced the court erroneously and inadvertently to dismiss the complaint for affirmance, and praying that such judgment of dismissal be vacated and the suit reinstated upon the docket. The county court, on motion, dismissed the petition on the ground of a want of power to grant the prayer thereof upon the facts therein stated. Held, that it was competent for the county court to allow the appellant to show cause why the affirmance should not be granted, and that the present petition was in effect only a petition for a new trial, which could not be entertained by the county court, unless made at the same term in which the judgment objected to was rendered.—Foster v. Austin, 33 Vt. 615.

[b] (Ala. 1844) Where the judgment of the justice is reversed by the circuit court, because the lands are not sufficiently described in the complaint, the cause should be remanded for the purpose of amendment.—McRae v. Tillman, 6 Ala. 486.

[c] (Cal.) If an appeal has been taken from a justice's court on questions of law and fact, the superior court must proceed with the trial of the cause de novo (Code Civ. San Francisco County Superior Court, 68 Cal. 245, 9 Pac. 109; (1886) Id., 68 Cal. 245, 10 Pac. 416.

Rome Iron Co., 96 Ga. 756, 22 S. E. 314.

[f] (Iowa, 1877) Under Code 1873, § 3603, providing that on appeals from justices' courts the circuit court may render final judgment, or remand the case to the justice for a new trial, the case should be remanded to the justice's court in case of a reversal, if any issue of fact remains for trial and cannot be tried in the circuit court.—Swan v. Bournes, 47 Iowa, 501, 29 Am. Rep. 492.

[g] (N. H. 1838) Where a trustee, in an action before a justice of the peace, failed by accident to appear at the hour set, and his default was entered, but appeared in the course of the same day, and, in the presence of a justice and plaintiff's attorney, denied his liability, and asked for a trial, which was refused, the court of common pleas, on writ of review, will grant a new trial.—Rigney v. Hutchins, 9 N. H. 257.

[h] (N. J. 1862) If the judgment of a justice in an attachment case is removed to the supreme or circuit court, and reversed, and the record remitted to the justice, to proceed according to law, he cannot retry the case. He has no authority after reversal.—Flanagan v. Jerome, 29 N. J. Law (5 Dutch.) 391.

[i] (N. Y. 1854) Under Code 1852, § 366, providing that if the defendant fails to appear before the justice, and shows by affidavit or otherwise that manifest injustice has been done, and defendant satisfactorily excuses his default, the appellate court may set aside or suspend the judgment and order a new trial, a defendant who failed to appear at the time of trial, by reason of a belief that adjournment had been agreed to, must show that manifest injustice has been done, the facts in regard to which must be set out.—Armstrong v. Craig, 18 Barb. 387.

[j] (N. Y. 1854) A defendant cannot, on appeal from a judgment rendered against him in a justice's court, have the judgment set aside, on the ground that after his appearance the case was adjourned, and he failed to appear on the trial because he mistook the hour to which the adjournment had been ordered.—Williams v. McCauley, 3 E. D. Smith, 120.

[l] (N. Y. 1867) Where a resident of a county is sued before a justice of that county by short summons, as if a nonresident, and is defaulted, and appeals, and it is shown by affidavits or otherwise that manifest injustice has been done, and the default is satisfactorily excused, the county court, in its discretion, may set aside or suspend the judgment, and order a new trial before the justice who rendered the judgment, or some other justice in the same county. Code, § 366.—Tanner v. Marsh, 36 How. Prac. 140; Id., 53 Barb. 438.

[m] (N. Y. 1873) Code Civ. Proc. § 366, provides, in cases of appeal from justice court, that if "the defendant failed to appear before the justice," and it is shown by affidavits served or otherwise that manifest injustice has been done, and the defendant satisfactorily excuses his default, the court may, in its discretion, set aside or suspend the judgment and order a new trial. Held, that the appellant, on a motion for a new trial under such section, must disclose in the moving affidavits facts and circumstances which show that the default occurred through excusable mistake, where default is alleged to be due to mistake as to the hour of trial, and that the court must be informed of the grounds thereof to determine on the good faith of the excuse, and to adjudge that a default occurred through circumstances which naturally would have induced a prudent person to have been mistaken, or prevented appearance.—Samo v. Morrison, 1 Sheld. 382.

[n] (N. Y. 1873) Code Civ. Proc. § 366, provides in cases of appeal from justice court that if "the defendant failed to appear before the justice," and it is shown by affidavits served or otherwise that manifest injustice has been done, and defendant satisfactorily excuses his default, the court may, in its discretion, set aside or suspend the judgment and order a new trial. Held, that a motion for a new trial, under such section, would be entertained, though defendant's default in appearing occurred on a day subsequent to the return day of the summons.—Samo v. Morrison, 1 Sheld. 382.

[o] (N. Y. 1886) Under Code, § 3064, providing that, on appeal from a justice court, the appellate court may, in its discretion, set aside the judgment and direct a new trial at such time and place as it deems proper, the county court has jurisdiction to set the time for such a new trial, when it has set aside the judgment in the justice court, and has been affirmed in that action by the general term.—Velsey v. Velsey, 40 Hun, 471.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) A defendant on the return day of a summons asked the justice issuing it to wait until she could obtain a lawyer or adjourn the hearing; but, though she could not find an attorney after diligent search, the justice allowed the plaintiff to take judgment by default. Held, that defendant "failed to appear," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 3064, providing that, if the appeal is taken by a defendant who failed to appear before the justice either upon the return of the summons or at the time to which the trial of the action is adjourned, the appellate court may, in its discretion, set aside the judgment.—McCarthy v. Crowley, 52 Hun, 614, 5 N. Y. Supp. 675.

Y. 1890) In an action for trespass in a justice's court, where the admitted acts of defendant are such that the action is not vexatious, and a verdict in his favor is groundless, it will be set aside on appeal, and a new trial granted, where plaintiff shows some damages, though small.—Smith v. Bingham, 55 Hun, 612, 9 N. Y. Supp. 97.

[r] (N. Y. 1893) Plaintiff in summary proceedings, having given a stipulation in order to a speedy hearing of its appeal, obtained a reversal. When the case was again set down before the justice, plaintiff moved to set aside the stipulation, on the ground that the amendment of 1893 to Code Civ. Proc. § 1310, staying such proceedings pending appeal, applied to the case, which motion was granted. Held, that the supreme court could properly refuse plaintiff a mandamus to the justice to proceed with the case, asked on the ground that the statute was not retroactive, and so did not apply.—People v. Jeroloman, 139 N. Y. 14, 34 N. E. 726, affirming order (1893) 69 Hun, 301, 23 N. Y. Supp. 512.

[s] (N. Y. 1893) Code Civ. Proc. § 3064, provides that if an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace is taken by a defendant who failed to appear before the justice, and he shows that injustice has been done, and renders a satisfactory excuse for his default, the appellate court may set aside the judgment. Held, that a judgment will not be set aside where the moving affidavit does not show what the defense is to plaintiff's claim, or that there is any defense at all.—Young v. Conklin (Co. Ct.) 8 Misc. Rep. 122, 23 N. Y. Supp. 993.

[t] (N. Y. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3064, authorizing the county court to grant a new trial on appeal from a judgment by default rendered by a justice, where appellant renders a satisfactory excuse for his default, a new trial cannot be granted unless an excuse is given by appellant for not appearing before the justice.—De Bevoise v. Ingalls, 88 Hun, 186, 34 N. Y. Supp. 413.

[u] (N. C. 1878) Where it appeared, on appeal to the superior court from a judgment of a justice of the peace, that the written answer filed by the defendant in the justice's court had been lost, it was error to remand the case to the justice that the pleadings might be perfected. It was the duty of the court to perfect the pleadings and proceed to trial.—Faison v. Johnson, 78 N. C. 78.

[v] (N. C. 1884) Where a justice refuses to set aside a judgment entered without notice to defendant, the court on appeal should not reverse the judgment, but direct the justice to enter a judgment vacating it.—McKee v. Angel, 90 N. C. 60.

[w] (Or. 1892) The reversal of a judgment in a justice's court on appeal does not entitle the parties to a remand of the case for a new trial.—Forbis v. Inman, Paulson & Co., 23 Or. 68, 31 Pac. 204.

[x] (S. C. 1831) The common pleas are not restricted to a simple affirmance or reversal of a justice's judgment, but may remand the case for a new trial, with instructions.—Harris v. Ferguson, 2 Bailey, 397.

[y] (S. C. 1888) A jury in a trial justice's court, in claim and delivery, found the property for plaintiff, "upon payment of $35 to defendant." Such verdict not being in the form required by the Code, nor in such form that by amendment the court could bring it into proper form, under Code, § 368, which provides that in cases of appeal from trial justices' courts the appellate court shall give judgment according to the justice of the case, without regard to technical errors and defects not affecting the merits, the circuit court properly sent the case back for new trial.—Du Bose v. Armstrong, 29 S. C. 290, 6 S. E. 934.

[z] (S. C. 1890) Circuit courts having only appellate jurisdiction in actions originating in trial justices' courts, a motion for a new trial in the justice court on the ground of after-discovered evidence cannot be entertained by a circuit court on appeal from the justice court.—Sams v. Hoover, 33 S. C. 401, 12 S. E. 8.

[zz] (Tex. 1873) In a case taken by plaintiff from a justice to a district court, and in which a motion for a new trial has been overruled, an original bill for a new trial may be entertained, and from an action of the court on such a bill an appeal lies to the supreme court.—Bell v. § 735. Sufficiency of bond in general.

[a] (Ark. 1892) Mansf. Dig. § 4135, provides that an appeal bond from a justice must be conditioned to perform the judgment appealed from in case of affirmance, or, if on a new trial in the circuit court judgment goes against appellant, to pay such judgment. Section 4153 provides that, if the judgment be affirmed, such judgment shall be rendered against appellant and his sureties on the bond. Held, where on appeal from a judgment entered on attachment before a justice of the peace, appellant executed a bond conditioned that the surety will satisfy the judgment of the circuit court to the extent of the value of the goods attached, that such bond was not a sufficient compliance with section 4135, and could not be enforced against the surety under section 4153.—Martin v. Tennison, 56 Ark. 291, 19 S. W. 922.

[b] (Ill. 1843) The letters "J. P.," affixed to the certificate of recognizance, mean justice of the peace. They are abbreviations which are well known and in common use.—Shattuck v. People, 4 Scam. 477.

[c] (Ind. 1877) The fact that, in taking an appeal to the circuit court from a joint judgment rendered against several defendants by a justice of the peace, part only of the judgment defendants execute the appeal bond, does not invalidate it, and is not ground of demurrer to the complaint in an action thereon.—Covert v. Shirk, 58 Ind. 264.

[d] (Iowa, 1859) Where an action was commenced before a justice of the peace against the makers of a joint promissory note, one of whom was served with notice, and against whom judgment was rendered for want of an appearance; and where a bond for an appeal was filed, signed by the makers of the note and another party, and recited that W., against whom the judgment was rendered, had appealed from a judgment, etc., in an action wherein A. is plaintiff and M. are defendants; and where the justice certified that defendant filed their appeal bond, with J. M. as surety, which was approved by me, and appeal allowed; and where it was objected that it was error to render judgment against M., for the reason that he was not served with notice, and there was no judgment against him before the justice, and that no sufficient appeal bond was ever filed,—it was held that, as M. was one of the sureties upon the appeal bond, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against him, and that while the bond did not refer to the proceedings with critical accuracy, yet that there was no irregularity that could prejudice the appellants.—Atkins v. McCready, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 214.

[e] (Mass. 1862) If a recognizance contains enough upon its face to show that the case in which it was taken belonged to a general class of cases of which the court had jurisdiction, it is not necessary for it to show in detail that the case did not fall within certain exceptions to that class of cases, of which the court had no jurisdiction.—Peck v. Thompson, 87 Mass. (5 Allen) 388.

[f] (Mass. 1876) The certificate of a recognizance, to prosecute an appeal from the judgment of a justice, recited that the connusee recovered judgment against the connusor "for her title and possession in and to certain land, with the buildings thereon," describing them, in a personal action brought by the connusee against the connusor. Held sufficient to show that the case was under Gen. St. c. 137, §§ 5–9, and that the magistrate had authority to take a recognizance.—Martin v. Campbell, 120 Mass. 126.

[g] (N. H. 1856) It is no defense to a scire facias upon a recognizance entered into by the appellant to the adverse party, upon an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, in a civil suit, that the recognizance was taken with one surety only; it appearing that the parties agreed that it should be so taken.—Dickey v. Livermore, 34 N. H. 199.

[h] (N. Y. 1851) On an appeal made in June, 1848, from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the county court, the bond was drawn as if on an appeal to the common pleas, but the appeal was made, in fact, to the county court, and tried and decided there, without objection being made to the sufficiency of the bond. Held, in an action on the bond, that it was sufficient in form to charge the obligors.—Teall v. Van Wyck, 10 Barb. 376.

[i] (Pa. 1829) Where bail, on an appeal from the judgment of a justice, entered into a recognizance as follows: "Now, November 21, 1826, defendant appeals from the annexed judgment against him to the next court of common pleas in and for the county of Philadelphia. Recognizance by the defendant and J. U., each in the sum of $90, conditioned that the defendant prosecute his appeal with effect,"—it was held by the court that the recognizance was sufficient in law to enable the plaintiff to recover upon it.—Stroud v. Ukel, 2 Ashm. 122.

[j] (Pa. 1845) The following minute made by a justice of the peace upon an appeal: "W. S. appears and enters into recognizance in double the debt and costs, as special bail in the above suit, for an appeal, according to the act of assembly of 1842,"—was held to be sufficient to support a scire facias, reciting a recognizance, in the form prescribed by the act.—Okeson v. Shirlock, 9 Watts & S. 142.

[k] (Pa. 1860) In an action before a justice of the peace against a constable for a false return, a recognizance, in the following words: "Defendant gives bail, which is entered on the docket, for the sum of $100, J. W. B., Bail,"—cannot be supported as a recognizance of bail for an appeal.—Meeker v. Brackney, 35 Pa. (11 Casey) 276.

[l] (Vt. 1845) A justice's record of a recognizance, on appeal, that the connusors "jointly and severally recognized in the sum of $100 for the prosecution of the appeal in due form of law," is a sufficient recognizance.—McGregor v. Balch, 17 Vt. 562.

§ 736. Insufficient, informal, and defective bonds.

[a] (Ala. 1843) Under the statutory provision that a party against whom a judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace may appeal to the circuit court, on giving bond with surety, an appeal bond which does not show that the judgment was rendered against the principal, nor the amount of the judgment, nor to what court the appeal was taken, is a nullity, and will not authorize judgment against the sureties therein, although the principal voluntarily appear in the circuit court, and judgment be rendered against him.—Wetumpka & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 5 Ala. 657.

[b] (Ala. 1895) In an appeal from a justice's court to the circuit court, an acknowledgment that a person becomes surety "for all costs and damages as may be sustained by defendant by reason of the appeal" does not comply with Code, § 3399, providing that in such case the appeal bond must be on condition "to pay such judgment as may be rendered" against the appellant; hence the circuit court could not render a summary judgment against the surety.—Reynolds v. Cox, 108 Ala. 276, 19 South. 393.

[c] (D. C. 1893) Where an undertaking on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the supreme court was "to satisfy and pay all the intervening damages and costs arising on this appeal," and contained no provision whatever for submission to the appellate court, a judgment by default in the supreme court against appellant and his surety was void, as against the surety, for want of jurisdiction over his person.—Tenney v. Taylor, 1 App. D. C. 223.

[d] (Ga. 1843) In a justice's court, a surety on appeal, not signing or sealing the recognizance, is not bound by an entry of his suretyship, made by the magistrate, on his verbal authority.—Whelan v. Sherron, Ga. Dec. 54, pt. 2.

[e] (Ill. 1848) An appeal bond contained a condition to "pay and satisfy whatever judgment might be rendered by the circuit court of Hancock county, upon the dismissal or trial" of the appeal, etc., while the statute required a bond to pay whatever judgment might be rendered "by the court," upon the dismissal or trial, etc.; and the bond omitted the condition, "to prosecute the appeal with effect," required by the statute. After the entry of the appeal, the venue was changed to another county, and the judgment of the justice below was affirmed. Held, that the appeal bond could not be enforced.—Sharp v. Bedell, 10 Ill. (5 Gilman) 88.

[f] (Iowa, 1856) Where an appeal bond on appeal from a justice is not in form and substance such a recognizance as is provided for in Rev. St. p. 334, §§ 2, 3, judgment (page 336, § 16) cannot be rendered against the sureties on appeal.—Wilson v. Knight, 3 G. Greene, 126.

[g] (Mo. 1847) A recognizance for an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is void, unless approved by the justice.—Cockrill v. Owen, 10 Mo. 287.

[h] (N. Y. 1830) In an action on an appeal bond, the misrecital of the day of the rendition of judgment is fatal.—People v. Monroe Common Pleas, 3 Wend. 426.

[i] (N. Y. 1879) On an undertaking given in an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the names of the sureties were written in the body of the instrument and subscribed to the affidavit of justification; they also acknowledging themselves before the notary to have executed the undertaking. Held a sufficient execution.—Weisbrod v. Marquardt, 8 Abb. N. C. 248.

[j] (N. C. 1823) The security on an appeal from a justice's court is not liable as such unless the justice signed his name as witness to such security's signature.—Picot v. Hardison, 9 N. C. (2 Hawks) 532.

[k] (Pa. 1823) A recognizance on appeal from a justice of the peace, conditioned for the payment of the debt, instead of being in the nature of special bail, is void.—King v. Culbertson, 10 Serg. & R. 325.

[l] (Pa. 1829) A recognizance in an appeal from a justice conditioned to pay "a sum sufficient to cover all costs," without stating the amount of such sum, being void, the surety is not liable thereon.—Williamson v. Mitchell, 1 Pen. & W. 9.

[m] (Pa. 1847) The statute of 1842, prescribing the condition of a recognizance to be given by an appellant from a justice of the peace, repealed that of 1810, so far as it prescribed such condition; and a recognizance entered into since the statute of 1842, conditioned as required by the former statute, is void.—Donley v. Brownlee, 7 Pa. (7 Barr) 109.

[n] (Tenn. 1834) An appeal bond from a judgment rendered by a magistrate conditioned that the appellant shall prosecute an appeal by him, prayed and obtained to the next circuit court, is insufficient to authorize a judgment rendered against the sureties in the bond, since it did not undertake that the appeal would be prosecuted with effect.—Albertson v. McGee, 15 Tenn. (7 Yerg.) 106.

[o] (Tex. 1893) Where the bond given on appeal from a justice's judgment does not comply with the statute, and plaintiff has the appeal dismissed on that ground, he cannot sue on the bond, on failure to collect the judgment, since an action could be maintained on it, if at all, only as a common-law bond, and it is not good, as such, because never agreed to or ratified by plaintiff.—Gregory v. Goldthwaite, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 287, 21 S. W. 413.

§ 737. Unnecessary or excessive bond.

[a] (Kan. 1891) Code Civ. Proc. § 577, provides that executors, administrators, and guardians who have given bond in the state are not required to give an undertaking on appeal or proceedings in error. Held, that this section applied to justices' courts, and that an appeal bond filed by an executor before a justice of the peace was not good as a statutory bond, nor as a common-law obligation.—Freeman v. Hill, 45 Kan. 435, 25 Pac. 870.

[b] (Me. 1856) By Rev. St. c. 116, § 10, a magistrate has no authority to require a bond on appeal conditioned for the personal appearance of an appellant, at the appellate court, or the payment of intervening damages and costs; and the bond is invalid.—Lane v. Crosby, 42 Me. 327.

[c] (Pa. 1895) A recognizance on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, conditioned for the payment of the debt as well as the costs, cannot be enforced as a statutory obligation requiring bail for costs only, nor is it good as a voluntary obligation at common law.—Wattles v. Fuller (Com. Pl.) 2 Lack. Leg. N. 117.

§ 738. Void or defective appeal or other proceeding.

[a] (Ala. 1844) The omission, by a justice of the peace, to render a judgment of condemnation against a steamboat, where an appeal is taken by the owners, is not an error of which the parties to the appeal bond can complain.—Monroe v. Brady, 7 Ala. 59.

[b] (Ill. 1886) Where the supervisor of a town has appealed from a judgment against the town in a justice court, which was not appealable, the bond given on such appeal is absolutely void, and the obligors may deny its recitals.—Lamonte v. Town of Montebello, 21 Ill. App. 186.

[c] (Iowa, 1883) When an appeal has been taken from a justice of the peace after the statutory time from judgment, and an appeal bond filed, and an order dismissing the appeal made, the court has no jurisdiction to render judgment on the bond; there being in effect no appeal.—Martin v. Croker, 62 Iowa, 328, 17 N. W. 533.

[d] (Kan. 1894) Where the bond on appeal from a justice's court is not filed within the required 10 days after judgment, no appeal is perfected; hence an action will not lie on the bond.—McCarthy v. Holden, 54 Kan. 313, 38 Pac. 261.

[e] (Mich. 1880) Under an appeal bond from a justice court, providing that appellant should perfect and prosecute to effect his appeal, the neglect of the justice to make return to the circuit within the statutory period does not prevent recovery on the bond; the default in prosecuting the appeal resting on appellant, and not on appellee.—Nowlin v. Tibbits, 44 Mich. 77, 6 N. W. 118.

[f] (Mo. 1873) Where the record in a case coming from a justice of the peace does not show that the justice ever rendered any judgment, or that any appeal was ever taken, a judgment against the sureties on the appeal bond cannot be sustained.—Seaton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51 Mo. 500.

[g] (Mo. 1873) An appeal bond filed with a justice, on a judgment by default before him, is void, unless a motion is, at the same time, made to set aside the default.—Garnet v. Rodgers, 52 Mo. 145.

[h] (Mo. 1884) Rev. St. 1879, § 3040, provides that no appeal shall be taken from a judgment before a justice, by default or nonsuit, unless, within 10 days after the judgment is entered, application to set it aside has been made and refused. Held that, where an appeal has been granted contrary to the provisions of such statute, the appeal bond is void as to the sureties, and that the only valid judgment to be entered by the circuit court is a dismissal of the appeal, with judgment for costs against the appellant.—Brown v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 85 Mo. 123.

[i] (Mo. 1888) Where an appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court was dismissed on appellee's motion for want of a sufficient affidavit for an appeal, this did not estop appellee to sue on the appeal bond filed in the same cause.—Skidmore v. Hull, 33 Mo. App. 41.

[j] (Neb. 1886) A person who voluntarily becomes security for a losing party, in an action before a justice of the peace for the purpose of enabling such party to appeal, upon the failure of such appeal on account of the same not having been taken within the time limited by law, will be held to the terms of such suretyship, notwithstanding such failure of the appeal.—Adams v. Thompson, 18 Neb. 541, 26 N. W. 316.

[k] (N. Y. 1830) The dismissal of an appeal in the common pleas on the ground of variance between the judgment recited in the bond and the justice's return will not authorize a recovery on the bond for breach of its condition that the appeal shall be prosecuted with due diligence.—Beach v. Springer, 4 Wend. 519.

[l] (Ohio, 1861) Under Justice's Code, § 112, requiring that one of the conditions of an undertaking for an appeal to the common pleas shall be "that the appellant will prosecute his appeal to effect, and without unnecessary delay," there is no breach of the condition, unless, after an appeal is perfected, there is a failure to prosecute the action appealed to judgment in favor of appellant, or unless appellant unreasonably delays the prosecution; and a failure to perfect the appeal is not a breach.—Burris v. Peacock, 2 Ohio Dec. 482.

[m] (Tex. 1880) The obligors on an appeal bond from a justice's court, which is void for want of a motion for new trial, are not liable on the bond.—Hutcheson v. Wells, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 953.

[n] (Tex. 1889) Plaintiff recovered judgment in a justice court, and defendant appealed to the county court, where the appeal was dismissed and judgment rendered against defendant and his sureties on his appeal bond for costs of both courts. The appeal was dismissed, on the ground that, the judgment appealed from not being a final judgment, the court was without jurisdiction. Held, that the county court not having acquired jurisdiction, and having no authority to render any other judgment than the one dismissing the appeal, the judgment rendered on the appeal bond was void.—Parrott v. Craig, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 453.

[o] (Wis. 1850) Where an appeal from a justice of the peace is dismissed because no affidavit was filed with the justice, as required by statute, appellant and the sureties on his bond are immediately liable thereon for the amount of the judgment rendered by the justice; one of the conditions of the bond being that apppellant shall pay the amount of the judgment rendered against him before the justice, including costs of appeal, with interest, in case his appeal shall be dismissed or discontinued.—Clark v. Miles, 2 Chand. 94, 2 Pin. 432.

§ 739. Accrual of Liability.

[a] (U. S. 1840) If the appellant from the judgment of a justice of the peace of the District of Columbia die pending the appeal, and no further proceedings are had in the cause for two terms thereafter, the sureties in the appeal bond are not liable for the appellant's not having prosecuted his appeal with effect.—Jeffers v. Forrest, Fed. Cas. No. 7,251 [5 Cranch, C. C. 674].

[b] (Ill. 1890) On appeal by plaintiff from a justice of the peace the county court allowed him to join another with him, and then the cause was discontinued as to the original plaintiff, and judgment entered on a verdict for the new one. The court then issued procedendo to the justice to enforce the judgment in the case of the original plaintiff, as upon failure to prosecute the appeal; and, the execution being returned "No property found," an action was brought on the appeal bond. Held, that the procedendo was without jurisdiction, for in this collateral proceeding the substitution of the new plaintiff in the county court must, under Prac. Act, § 23, be deemed conclusive evidence of the identity of the cause in the county court with that before the justice; and hence there was no failure to prosecute the appeal.—Butler v. Ritter, 38 Ill. App. 189.

[c] (Ind. 1842) In an action of debt on a bond conditioned to prosecute with effect an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the breaches assigned were: (1) That the appellant wholly failed to prosecute the appeal; (2) that he failed to cause a transcript of the judgment to be filed in the clerk's office within 20 days after taking the appeal; (3) that he did not prosecute the appeal with effect, but, on the contrary, the appeal was dismissed because the transcript of the judgment was not filed in the clerk's office within 20 days, etc. Held, on general demurrer, that the first and third breaches were good, and the second bad.—Rock v. Gordon, 6 Blackf. 192.

[d] (Ind. 1848) Failure to file a further bond, upon being required, is a breach of an appeal bond filed according to Rev. St. §§ 159, 160, 168.—Davis v. Sturgis, 1 Ind. (1 Cart.) 213.

[e] (Ky. 1827) Where the judgment of the justice against an executor is de bonis propriis, and he appeals, and judgment is rendered against him for the same sum de bonis testatoris, the condition of the appeal bond is not forfeited.—Bowman v. Green, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 339.

[f] (Miss. 1885) Where defendant appeals from a justice of the peace, and in the appellate court dismisses his appeal, plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the appeal bond.—Pass v. Payne, 63 Miss. 239.

[g] (Pa. 1831) Bail on an appeal from a justice must surrender on or before the first day of the next term after judgment is entered against the appellant.—Siter v. Welford, 1 Ashm. 61.

[h] (Tex. 1890) Where a bond on appeal from a justice of the peace is conditioned for its prosecution to effect and for the payment of any judgment rendered against the appellant on such appeal, an order dismissing the appeal, and awarding a writ of procedendo, is a breach of the bond, rendering the sureties liable in an action thereon for the amount of the original judgment and costs, though the order was made on motion of the appellee; the appellant consenting.—Wooldridge v. Rawlings (Sup.) 14 S. W. 667.

[i] (Wis. 1879) In the absence of statutory provision for security for costs on appeal from a justice to the circuit court, if such appeal is dismissed, there is no liability attaching to a surety on the appeal bond on the dismissal of the appeal.—Sengpiel v. Spang, 47 Wis. 28, 1 N. W. 463.

§ 740. —— Affirmance of judgment.

[a] (Ill. 1843) The condition of a bond given upon an appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court is forfeited the moment judgment is recovered by the appellee, unless the amount thereof is immediately paid; and an action lies immediately.—Gregory v. Stark, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 611.

[b] (Mo. 1889) On judgment by a justice against V. & C., V. filed an affidavit of appeal in which he used the words "this appeal." The bond recited, "Whereas V. & C. have appealed, they shall satisfy." The docket entries of the justice in regard to the appeal used the plural "defendants," and on trial in the circuit court the verdict was for defendant V., but against defendant C., and the circuit court treated C. as having appealed and rendered judgment against him for the amount of the verdict. Held, that the judgment should also have been entered against the obligors in the appeal bond.—Milburn Mfg. Co. v. Wilfong, 33 Mo. App. 561.

[c] (Mo. 1889) In an attachment suit before a justice, judgment was rendered for plaintiff both on a plea in abatement and on the merits. Defendant appealed to the circuit court without signifying that his appeal was merely from the sustaining of the attachment. The circuit court sustained the plea in abatement, and gave judgment for plaintiff on the merits. Held, that it did not err in also entering judgment against defendant and his sureties on the appeal bond.—Nolte v. Farrelly, 34 Mo. App. 671.

[d] (Neb. 1896) Judgment was recovered before a justice of the peace against two makers of a promissory note, who jointly appealed to the district court. The undertaking of the surety on the appeal bond was to pay any judgment rendered against the appellants. Held, that the surety is liable, notwithstanding judgment in the appellate court was against only one of the appellants.—Johnson v. Reed, 47 Neb. 322, 66 N. W. 405.

[e] (N. Y. 1857) On an appeal taken from the decision of a justice, sureties entered into a bond, conditioned that if judgment should be rendered on the appeal against the appellant, and execution returned unsatisfied, the obligors would pay the amount unsatisfied, and in the county court the judgment was reversed, but, on appeal, the supreme court affirmed the judgment of the justice, held, that the sureties were liable for the full amount recovered in the supreme court.—Smith v. Crouse, 24 Barb. 433.

[f] (N. Y. 1875) The parties to an undertaking upon appeal from a justice's court, given pursuant to Code, § 356, covenant for the final result of the action, and if ultimately a final judgment is rendered against the appellant, upon which an execution may and is issued and returned unsatisfied, they are liable. Therefore, where the appeal to the county court resulted in a judgment in favor of the respondent, which was reversed by the general term of the supreme court, and the cause certified into the supreme court and there tried, resulting in a judgment for respondent, upon which execution was issued and returned unsatisfied, held, that the surety on the undertaking, given on appeal to the county court, was liable.—Humerton v. Hay, 65 N. Y. 380.

[g] (N. C. 1883) An undertaking on appeal from a justice of the peace to the superior court, conditioned that "appellant shall pay all costs that may be awarded against him on such appeal, and that if the judgment or any part thereof be affirmed, or the appeal be dismissed, the appellant shall pay the amount directed to be paid by the judgment, or the part of such amount, as to which the judgment shall be affirmed," binds the signers thereof to pay such judgment as may be rendered in the superior court against appellant, and not merely to pay the judgment only if it is ultimately affirmed as rendered in the justice's court.—Walker v. Williams, 88 N. C. 7.

[h] (Ohio, 1875) A surety on an appeal bond may stand upon the very terms of his undertaking. Where two defendants in a justice's judgment appealed, and a surety undertook that, if judgment went against them on the appeal, they would satisfy such judgment, and, on the appeal, the plaintiff obtained judgment against one only, the surety was not liable.—Lang v. Pike, 27 Ohio St. 498.

[i] (Tex. 1883) Where two defendants, against whom a joint judgment is rendered in the justice court, make a joint appeal, and the plaintiff recovers judgment against one of them alone, the sureties on the joint bond are liable for the judgment recovered.—Moore v. Gore, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 75.

[j] (Tex. 1890) Though on appeal from a justice of the peace to the district court, in an action on a contract and to foreclose a chattel mortgage, defendants are successful to the extent of the mortgage, the sureties on their appeal bond are liable on the judgment, under Rev. St. art. 1639, which requires the appeal bond to be conditioned that the appellant shall prosecute the appeal to effect, "and" shall satisfy the judgment rendered against him.—Cotulla v. Goggan, 77 Tex. 32, 13 S. W. 742.

§ 741. Release or discharge of sureties.

Defenses to actions on bonds, see post, § 747.

[a] (U. S. 1822) Where judgment is rendered only against an appellant from a judgment of a justice of the peace, who has given security to prosecute his appeal, no scire facias can thereon issue against the security, though he is equally liable with the principal to a judgment; the provision being for the benefit of the plaintiff, and held to be waived by him.—Hodge v. Plott, Fed. Cas. No. 6,561a [1 Hemp. 14].

[b] (U. S. 1826) A bond on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, conditioned on payment if the judgment of the justice is affirmed or more recovered on a trial de novo, is discharged, where a judgment for a less sum is recovered.—Swanson v. Ball, Fed. Cas. No. 13,676a [Hemp. 39].

[c] (Ala. 1845) A payment by sureties to the clerk of the court of the amount secured by an appeal bond, on appeal of a defendant from a judgment in justice's court, does not absolve the sureties from liability, unless the payment is with the assent of the plaintiff, or the money paid over to him.—Windham v. Coates, 8 Ala. 285.

[d] (Ala. 1845) The clerk of a court is not authorized, without the consent of the plaintiff, to receive before judgment the amount for which the sureties on defendant's bond, on appeal from a justice's court, are liable, and thus discharge them.—Windham v. Coates, 8 Ala. 285.

[e] (Del. 1856) A surety in a recognizance on an appeal from a justice of the peace is not discharged from his liability thereunder by a reference of the case without his consent, under a rule of court, after entry of the appeal.—McColley v. Hickman, 1 Houst. 234.

[f] (Ill. 1889) A bond on appeal from a judgment in trover, rendered in the justice court, is not discharged because the form of action was changed to assumpsit in a higher court.—Block v. Blum, 33 Ill. App. 643.

[ff] (Mich. 1893) A circuit judge has no power to extend the liability of a surety on a bond executed on an appeal from justice's court by a stay of execution made for that express purpose, and on his own motion.—Gildersleeve v. Adsit, 97 Mich. 606, 57 N. W. 187.

[g] (Miss. 1876) The sureties in an appeal bond, from the judgment of a justice of the peace, must interpose in the circuit court their discharges in bankruptcy acquired after the execution of the bond; and, if they do not, they cannot be relieved in chancery from a judgment upon the bond.—Jones v. Coker, 53 Miss. 195.

[h] (Mo. 1892) Where a defendant appeals from a judgment rendered against him in a justice's court, he cannot avoid a judgment against himself and his sureties in the appellate court by dismissing his appeal in that court without plaintiff's consent.—Williams v. Lewis, 47 Mo. App. 657.

[i] (N. Y. 1845) The provision requiring execution upon judgments rendered on appeals from justices' courts to be issued "within" 30 days, in order to render the sureties liable upon the appeal bond, is not abrogated by section 24 of the act concerning costs and fees, etc. (Laws 1840, p. 334), which authorizes executions only "after" 30 days.—Lipe v. Becker, 1 Denio, 568.

[j] (Ohio, 1879) The surety on a bond given on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the common pleas, where a like judgment was rendered, was not discharged by the fact that an execution thereafter levied on the judgment debtor's personal property was abandoned, because the necessary advertising fees were not paid to the officer, and possession of the property resumed by the judgment debtor.—Poll v. Murr (D. C.) 3 Wkly. Law Bul. 1141.

[k] (Wis. 1862) Where a judgment was rendered in the circuit court, on an appeal from a justice's court, against the appellant and his surety in such appeal, and execution is not issued thereon within 30 days thereafter, the surety is discharged.—Herrick v. Graves, 16 Wis. 157.

[l] (Wis. 1884) The surety in an undertaking on an appeal from a justice's court is not released by an amendment to the complaint in the appellate court, increasing the damages claimed to an amount beyond the jurisdiction of the justice.—Hare v. Marsh, 61 Wis. 435, 21 N. W. 267, 50 Am. Rep. 141.

§ 742. Extent of liability.

[a] On appeal from a justice, judgment cannot be rendered in the circuit court, against the surety on the appeal bond, for more than the penalty thereof.

(Mich. 1894) Vreeland v. Loeckner, 99 Mich. 93, 57 N. W. 1093.

[b] (Ark. 1889) On appeal from an order of a justice of the peace, denying a motion to quash an execution on the ground that it had been paid, judgment should be rendered against the appellant and the sureties on the appeal bond for costs only, and not for the amount of the original judgment on which such execution was issued.—Woolum v. Kelton, 52 Ark. 445, 13 S. W. 78.

[bb] (Ark. 1895) On appeal from a justice's court, the circuit court, in dismissing an attachment, cannot give judgment on the attachment bond in an amount exceeding the jurisdiction of the justice.—Norman v. Fife, 61 Ark. 33, 31 S. W. 740.

[c] (Colo. 1894) Under Gen. St. 1883, § 1990, which declares that "the security in any appeal bond shall be liable thereon for the amount of the original judgment and all costs thereon in case the said appeal be dismissed," the surety in an appeal from a justice of the peace is liable for the judgment appealed from on dismissal of the appeal, although the condition of the bond is merely that the principal obligor "shall prosecute this appeal with effect, and shall pay whatever judgment may be rendered by the court upon dismissal or trial of said appeal," since the statutory provision enters into, and becomes a part of, the condition of the bond.—Lux v. McLeod, 19 Colo. 465, 36 Pac. 246.

[d] (Ga. 1893) On the withdrawal of a claim in the superior court, on appeal from a justice's court, claimant being appellant, no judgment can be rendered on the appeal bond except for costs; and to include in the judgment the amount due on the execution which was levied on the property is error.—Bryan v. Simpson, 92 Ga. 307, 18 S. E. 547.

[e] (Ind. 1855) Defendant, in an action before a justice, pleaded a set-off, and recovered judgment. Plaintiff appealed, but the court above dismissed the action. Defendant sued him and his surety on the appeal bond. Held, that he was entitled to only nominal damages, unless special damages were alleged and proven.—Reeves v. Andrews, 7 Ind. 207.

[f] (Ind. 1859) On appeal from a justice of the peace, if the bond is conditioned to pay the appellate judgment, and that judgment is for costs, the appeal having been dismissed, the obligors on the appeal bond are not liable for the original judgment, as it forms no part of the appellate judgment.—Keitzinger v. Reynolds, 11 Ind. 545.

[g] (Iowa, 1883) Under Code 1873, § 3594, providing that, on appeal from a justice, a judgment in a circuit court against an appellant shall be entered up against him and his sureties jointly, such a judgment on an appeal bond for more than the penalty is erroneous, but not void, since the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties.—Freeman v. Hart, 61 Iowa, 525, 16 N. W. 597.

[h] (Iowa, 1884) Where an appeal from a justice's court is dismissed by the circuit court as not involving the jurisdictional amount, such court has jurisdiction to render judgment against the appellant and his sureties, not only for the costs of such court, but also for the amount of the judgment before the justice.—Prescott v. Bacon, 64 Iowa, 702, 21 N. W. 151.

[i, j] (Kan. 1887) Where a judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace against defendant, and he appeals to the district court, and afterwards dismisses his appeal, the sureties on the appeal bond are liable for the amount of the judgment rendered in the justice's court, and not merely for the amount of the judgment for costs rendered in the district court.—Fitzgerald v. Wellington, 37 Kan. 460, 15 Pac. 582.

[k] (Miss. 1874) Where, on appeal from a justice by defendant, the verdict is for plaintiff, the 10 per cent. damages, under Code 1871, § 1334, should be included in the judgment rendered against the principal and his sureties on the appeal bond.—Prewett v. Nash, 50 Miss. 584.

[l] (Mo. 1886) A judgment for $147 against the defendant and his surety on appeal from a justice, the penalty of the bond being $75, in a suit for a claim of $90, cannot be allowed to stand.—Pendergast v. Hodge, 21 Mo. App. 138.

[m] (Pa. 1881) The bail is responsible for all the subsequent costs, including those of an arbitration and of the execution.—Connell v. Flynn, 8 Law T. (N. S.) 42.

[n] (Tenn. 1850) On appeal from a justice of the peace by defendant, if the appellee is required, on motion, to give surety for the costs of the suit, such surety is not liable for the amount of a judgment given for appellant on his set-off.—Bolinger v. Gordon, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 61.

§ 743. Judgment against sureties on appeal.

[a] On the dismissal of an appeal, the court has no authority to enter judgment on the recognizance against the appellant and his security.

(Mo. 1876) Hooker v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 63 Mo. 449.

[b] Where an action on an account is tried before a justice of the peace, and appealed to the district court, the court, on affirming the judgment, should render judgment against both the principal debtor and the surety on the appeal undertaking, since the latter, by becoming surety, has submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court.
—(Miss. 1843) Wright v. Simmons, 9 Miss. (1 Smedes & M.) 389;

Edwards, 81 Ala. 246, 2 South. 88.

[d] (Ark. 1874) On appeal from a justice of the peace to the circuit court, with supersedeas, the circuit court has jurisdiction to render judgment against the sureties on the appeal bond.—Callahan v. Saleski, 29 Ark. 216.

[e] (Ark. 1880) Where, on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, respondent has judgment against appellant and his sureties, the failure of the clerk to include the sureties in the entry of the judgment may be cured by the entry of a nunc pro tunc judgment, at a subsequent term, without notice to the sureties.—Freeman v. Mears, 35 Ark. 278.

[f] (Iowa, 1884) Under Code 1873, § 3580, making the filing of a bond a condition precedent to appeal from a justice of the peace, and providing that if the judgment be affirmed, or if the appeal be dismissed, judgment shall be rendered against the principal and surety in the bond, and Id. § 3594, providing that any judgment in the circuit court against the appellant shall be entered up against him and his sureties jointly, where an appeal is dismissed by the circuit court as not involving the jurisdictional amount, it has jurisdiction to render judgment against appellant and his sureties.—Prescott v. Bacon, 64 Iowa, 702, 21 N. W. 151.

[g] (Miss. 1895) Where a defendant appealed from the judgment of a justice court to the circuit court, an entry by the judge of that court, in his docket, of "judgment against defendant," carried judgment against the sureties on the appeal bond.—Harper v. Barnett, 16 South. 533.

[h] (Tex.) Where defendant appeals from a judgment of a justice of the peace to the county court, and plaintiff again recovers judgment, the latter judgment is properly entered also against the sureties on defendant's appeal bond.—(1890) Cotulla v. Goggan, 77 Tex. 32, 13 S. W. 742; (1892) Franks v. Ware (Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 349.

[i] (Wash. 1890) On an appeal from a justice of the peace to the district court, the sureties, by signing the appeal bond, submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the court, and are concluded by the judgment against them without further notice.—Cline v. Mitchell, 1 Wash. St. 24, 23 Pac. 1013.

[j] (W. Va. 1891) In detinue tried on appeal by the defendants from justice's court, judgment for the property or its value may be entered against the sureties on the appeal bond, under Code, c. 50, § 172, providing that when the judgment appealed from is against the appellant for a sum of money, and an equal or greater sum is found due by the appellant, judgment shall be rendered against the appellant and the sureties on the appeal bond.—Arthur v. Ingels, 34 W. Va. 639, 12 S. E. 872, 11 L. R. A. 557.

§ 744. —— Enforcement of judgment.

[a] (Ala. 1888) Code 1886, § 2251, providing that, if a judgment is rendered against an estate shown to have been declared insolvent, an order shall be entered that no execution shall issue thereon, but the same shall be certified to the probate court, does not prevent judgment being rendered and execution being issued thereon against the sureties on a bond taken on an appeal by the administratrix to the circuit court, from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, where the condition of the bond is to pay such judgment as may be rendered against the appellant.—Mount v. Stewart, 86 Ala. 365, 5 South. 582.

[b] (Mich. 1883) Comp. Laws, § 5433, providing for appeals from justices' courts, requires a bond conditioned that appellant, if judgment is against him, shall pay the amount thereof, including costs. Held, that an execution is not, until taxation of costs, "legally issuable," within the meaning of Comp. Laws, § 5462, forbidding the levy of an execution on the property of the surety on an appeal bond unless the execution is issued within 30 days from the time when it shall be "legally issuable."—Weiss v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 50 Mich. 158, 15 N. W. 63.

§ 745. Actions.

[a] (Me. 1834) In an action of debt, on a recognizance to prosecute an appeal, taken before a justice of the peace, it must appear that the recognizance was returned to, and entered of record in, that court to which the appeal was allowed.—Libby v. Main, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 344.

[b] (Me.) In an action of debt on a recognizance to prosecute an appeal, taken before a justice of the peace, it must appear from the record that the justice had jurisdiction of the cause in which the recognizance was taken. —(1834) Libby v. Main, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 344; (1836) Dodge v. Kellock, 13 Me. (1 Shep.) 136.

[c] (Me. 1844) In a suit on a recognizance to prosecute an appeal from a judgment of a justice, it should appear from the record that the recognizance was entered into before the same justice who rendered the judgment.—Green v. Haskell, 24 Me. (11 Shep.) 180.

[d] (Me. 1860) To sustain an action on a recognizance taken to prosecute an appeal from a justice's judgment, it need not be recorded at length in the appellate court. The clerk's certificate upon it, showing it to have been filed before suit brought, is a sufficient record. —Leathers v. Cooley, 49 Me. 337.

[e] (Ohio, 1893) A judgment was recovered before a justice, and appeal taken, and bond given. Judgment was again rendered in the common pleas in favor of plaintiff, and error was instituted in the district court, where the judgment of the common pleas was affirmed and a petition in error filed to the supreme court. No supersedeas bond was given. Thereafter action was begun before a justice on the bond for appeal filed in the justice court. On the same day, pending the trial, the defendant filed in the proper court a supersedeas bond, and moved before the justice to dismiss the action. The motion was denied, and verdict rendered for plaintiff, who filed a transcript in the court of common pleas, and thereupon an execution issued. Held, that the supersedeas bond operated, and that the execution was wrongfully issued.—Wooster v. Schaaf, 4 Ohio Dec. 561, 2 Cleve. Law Rep. 379.

§ 746. —— Jurisdiction and conditions precedent.

[a] (Mich. 1880) To authorize an action upon an appeal bond, given on an appeal from a justice, appeal having been dismissed, it is not necessary that an effort be made to collect the judgment from real estate, by causing a transcript to be filed in the circuit court and an execution to issue from there, it being provided by Comp. Laws, § 5457, only that the bond cannot be prosecuted until an execution on the judgment appealed from has been returned that goods and chattels to satisfy the same could not be found.—Nowlin v. Tibbits, 44 Mich. 77, 6 N. W. 118.

[b] (N. H. 1859) Where an appeal was taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the court of common pleas, which had jurisdiction of the appeal, and a recognizance was entered into before the justice to prosecute the appeal in that court, and the recognizance was there forfeited, and a scire facias was afterwards brought on the recognizance in the supreme court, it was held that, the record being in the common pleas, the action could not be maintained in the supreme court.—State v. Kinne, 39 N. H. 129.

[c] (N. Y. 1828) On appeal from justices' judgments, whenever there is a recovery in favor of the appellee in the common pleas, the condition is absolute to pay the amount of such recovery, provided an execution has been first issued on the judgment, and the same, or any part thereof, be returned unsatisfied. A fi. fa. will satisfy the words and intent of the statute. A ca. sa., in such a case, appears not in the contemplation of the statute. The clause in the condition of the bond "that appellant will surrender his body in execution," applies only to the case where the appeal is not prosecuted with due diligence. —Allison v. Wilkin, 1 Wend. 153.

[d] (N. Y. 1830) Where an appeal to the common pleas is dismissed on account of variance between the judgment recited in the appeal bond and the justice's return, an action will not lie on the bond for the breach of a condition to pay the judgment rendered by the justice, unless an execution issue and is returned non est inventus.—Beach v. Springer, 4 Wend. 519.

[e] (Pa. 1812) An alderman has no authority to issue a scire facias on the recognizance, after judgment recovered on the appeal in the appellate court.—Smith v. Wilds, 2 Browne, 190.

[f] (S. C. 1818) An action may be brought on an appeal bond taken before a justice of the peace without final process having been issued against the party appealing.—Kirkpatrick v. McWilliams, 2 Mill, Const. 312.

§ 747. —— Defenses.

[a] (Md. 1845) In an action on an appeal bond, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, it is no defense, since Act 1829, c. 236, that the bond was executed more than 60 days after the date of the judgment therein recited, and from which the appeal was taken.—Brewer v. Smith, 3 Gill, 299.

[b] (Mo. 1847) A failure to enter judgment in the circuit court against the sureties in a recognizance for an appeal from a justice of the peace is no bar to a suit on the recognizance.—Unterrein v. McLane, 10 Mo. 343.

[c] (Neb. 1883) In an action on an undertaking for an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the district court, a defendant will not be permitted to deny that the appeal had been taken as the statute directs, nor that, in fact, no appeal lay from such judgment.—Gudtner v. Kilpatrick, 14 Neb. 347, 15 N. W. 708.

[d] (N. H. 1856) It is not a defense to a scire facias on a recognizance on appeal from a justice that, after the appeal was entered in the court of common pleas, the parties made an agreement in writing to refer the action, and have it dismissed from the docket of the court; it appearing that the agreement was not filed with the clerk until after two continuances of the cause in that court, and a trial by jury and verdict returned subsequent to the making of the agreement.—Dickey v. Livermore, 34 N. H. 199.

[dd] (Ohio, 1876) The parties purporting to have signed an undertaking for appeal from a justice's judgment are not precluded from denying the execution thereof, by the justice's approval of such undertaking and the entering thereof on his docket.—Ford v. Albright, 31 Ohio St. 33.

[e] (Pa. 1846) Where, in conformity with a well-established practice, under an agreement of 30 years standing among the members of the bar, and filed of record, a plaintiff in an action on a recognizance filed a declaration for money had and received, it was proper to reject a plea in bar, averring that the day on which the promise was made was a Sunday. —Hallowell v. Williams, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 339.

[f] (Pa. 1888) Any misunderstanding by the surety on a bail bond as to the liability of the bail, on appeal from a justice judgment, or any misrepresentation by the justice, not brought to the notice of the judgment creditor, cannot defeat his right to recover against the bail.—Davenport v. Searfoss, 13 Atl. 956.

[g] (Utah, 1895) It is no defense to an action on a bond on an appeal from a justice that it was delivered in violation of an understanding between the sureties and the appellant's agent that it was not to be delivered until the signature of the appellant thereto had been obtained.—Butterfield v. Mountain Ice & Cold Storage Co., 11 Utah, 194, 39 Pac. 824.

[h] (Vt. 1847) On defendant's appeal to the county court from the judgment of a justice of the peace, final judgment was rendered against him. In the original suit plaintiff had caused to be attached personal property sufficient to have paid his final judgment; but, through the negligence of the sheriff, his property was eloigned, and plaintiff had duly taken out execution on his final judgment, and perfected his right of action against the sheriff for such negligence, by causing the proper demand to be made. At the time defendant appealed he had property, other than that attached, sufficient to pay the judgment, but lost it all before final judgment was rendered against him. Held, that the existence of the right of action against the sheriff constituted no bar, either absolute or temporary, to plaintiff's right to bring sci. fa. against the recognizor upon the appeal, though it might be considered in mitigation of damages, to the extent of its probable value to plaintiff, had he pursued it with reasonable diligence.—Holmes v. Woodruff, 20 Vt. 97.

§ 748. —— Pleading.

[a] In an action of debt on a recognizance taken by a justice of the peace, conditioned to prosecute an appeal from his judgment to the common pleas, it must be alleged that the recognizance was returned to and made a record of that court.

—(Me. 1822) State v. Smith, 2 Me. (2 Greenl.) 62; (1833) Dodge v. Kellock, 10 Me. (1 Fairf.) 266;

(Mass. 1810) Bridge v. Ford, 7 Mass. 209; (1810) Prescott v. Tufts, Id.; (1855) Tarbell v. Gray, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 444; (1855) Bowler v. Palmer, Id. 445, note.

[aa] In debt on a recognizance taken before a justice, conditioned for the prosecuting of an appeal, the declaration must show that the justice had jurisdiction of the action, and the condition must be set forth, and the breach alleged.

—(Me. 1822) State v. Smith, 2 Me. (2 Greenl.) 62;

(Mass. 1808) Bridge v. Ford, 4 Mass. 641; (1810) Id., 7 Mass. 209.

[b] (Cal. 1891) A complaint in an action on an appeal bond which alleges that defendant, in an action in the justice court, "appealed to the superior court of said county from said judgment," is a sufficient averment that an appeal was taken, and it is unnecessary to set out the several acts performed in taking it.—Moffat v. Greenwalt, 90 Cal. 368, 27 Pac. 296.

[c] (Cal. 1893) In an action on a bond given to stay, pending appeal, execution on a justice's judgment for the return of personal property or its value, where the appeal has been dismissed by the superior court, the complaint need not allege that execution was issued and returned unsatisfied, or that notice of the dismissal of the appeal was given, or that demand was made before the action was brought, or that a delivery of the property could not be had, or that appellant had refused to obey an order of the superior court, unless a recovery is sought on such order.—Pieper v. Peers, 98 Cal. 42, 32 Pac. 700.

[d] (Del. 1856) The declaration, in an action against a surety in a recognizance, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, need not show that the justice had jurisdiction, either of the cause of action or of the person of the defendant, further than by setting forth the recovery of a judgment before him for a cause of action within his jurisdiction.—McColley v. Hickman, 1 Houst. 234.

[e] (Ill. 1849) In an action in debt on an appeal bond given before a justice of the peace, where the declaration set forth the execution and contents of the bond, and then alleged the trial of the case in the circuit court, the affirmance of the judgment, and the nonpayment thereof with reasonable certainty, it was held that this was sufficient, and that it was not necessary to aver that the justice had jurisdiction, or that the bond was filed in the circuit court clerk's office, as the bond became operative upon its execution, and the affirmance of the judgment completed the liability of the defendant.—Smith v. Whitaker, 11 Ill. (1 Peck) 417.

[f] (Me. 1860) To sustain an action on a recognizance taken to prosecute an appeal from the judgment of the justice, a final judgment for plaintiff must be proved.—Leathers v. Cooley, 49 Me. 337.

[g] (Mo. 1847) A recognizance for an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is not a penal bond, and breaches should not be assigned in an action thereon.—Cockrill v. Owen, 10 Mo. 287.

[h] (N. Y. 1828) If a surety on an appeal bond from a justice of the peace wishes to avail himself of any deficiency in the appeal bond, he must show it specially and at large, or it will not be noticed.—Allison v. Wilkin, 1 Wend. 53.

[i] (Ohio, 1882) A petition on an appeal bond which merely states that the bond was executed and approved by the magistrate, and that the judgment was rendered in favor of appellee against the appellant, but which contains no averment that there was a suit in the magistrate's court, is demurrable.—Marks v. Harris, 6 Ohio Dec. 1101.

[j] (Vt. 1845) In debt upon a recognizance for the prosecution of an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, it must appear from the declaration that the recognizance was entered into before the justice who rendered the judgment appealed from, or the declaration will be bad upon demurrer.—Needham v. Heath, 17 Vt. 223.

§ 749. —— Evidence.

[a] (Ind. 1841) In sci. fa. against bail, for stay of execution, a return of the constable to the execution against the original debtor cannot be controverted.—Burger v. Becket, 6 Blackf. 61.

[b] (Ind. 1895) In an action on a bond on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, it was not necessary that the evidence show what disposition the judgment debtor had made of his property. It was sufficient to show that at the date of appeal he had sufficient property subject to execution to satisfy the judgment, and that at the determination of the appeal he was insolvent.—McFadden v. Lovitt, 13 Ind. App. 281, 41 N. E. 554.

[e, f] (Ohio, 1876) The fact that a person's name, given in the body of an appeal bond executed under section 12 of the justices' act, is not subscribed thereto, is presumptive evidence that he did not join in the undertaking.—Ford v. Albright, 31 Ohio St. 33.

[g] (Pa. 1843) Upon a plea of nul tiel record to a sci. fa. upon a recognizance of bail, on appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the issue must be tried by inspection of the transcript and recognizance filed, and not the docket of the justice.—Bell v. Murphy, 6 Watts & S. 50.

[h] (Vt. 1845) A justice's record of a recognizance on appeal, that the connusors "jointly and severally recognized in the sum of $100, for the prosecution of the appeal in due form of law," is competent evidence, under a declaration which alleges that the condition of the recognizance was that the appellants "should prosecute their said appeal to effect, and answer and pay all intervening damages occasioned by delay to the said plaintiff, with additional costs, if judgment be affirmed."—McGregor v. Balch, 17 Vt. 562.

[i] (Vt. 1878) In debt upon a recognizance on appeal from a justice of the peace, copies of the appeal entered in the county court, containing a minute of the recognizance, are inadmissible under the plea of nul tiel record.—Murdock v. Hicks, 50 Vt. 683.

§ 750. Appeal and error.

[a] (Neb. 1886) On error to review the action of the court in overruling a demurrer to a petition upon an undertaking given on appeal from a justice's decision, where no defects are pointed out by plaintiff in error, and the petition apparently alleges all the substantial and essential facts, setting out a copy of the bond and the final judgment, and the officer's return to the execution, showing that he can find no property whereon to levy it, the judgment will be affirmed.—Pratt v. Smith, 20 Neb. 48, 28 N. W. 849.

[a] (Conn. 1834) If not guilty and a justification are pleaded in trespass qu. cl. fr. before a justice, where the damages demanded are seven dollars, and the justice find the defendant guilty, and assess damages, without any notice of the special plea, and the defendant appeal to the county court, and thence to the superior court, without any intermediate judicial act, this last appeal is coram non judice.—Fuller v. Topliff, 10 Conn. 60.

[b] (Ind. 1873) Where a judgment has been rendered by a justice of the peace, and the defendant has applied for an order to allow an appeal, which order has been refused, from which refusal an appeal has been taken to the supreme court, an order made in the court below, while the appeal is pending, setting off the judgment from which an appeal is sought against a like amount due on a judgment in favor of the defendant in the former judgment, and against the plaintiff in said judgment, will have no effect on the appeal.—Brooks v. Harris, 42 Ind. 177.

[c] (Ind. 1895) Under Rev. St. 1894, § 644 (Rev. St. 1881, § 632), allowing an appeal to the supreme court from the circuit court in cases originating before a justice of the peace only when the amount in controversy exceeds $50, where the amount claimed by plaintiff exceeds $50, but the amount of the verdict against defendant, added to a set-off filed by him, is less than $50, an appeal will not lie by defendant from an order retaxing costs.—Kahl v. Madison Brewing Co., 14 Ind. App. 78, 42 N. E. 492.

[d] (Iowa, 1859) An appellant, who has in other respects used all diligence to get his papers in an appeal case from a judgment of a justice, but who has neglected to take measures to compel the justice to furnish a further return of the papers which have been lost, and to have an order in the appellate court, affirming the judgment below, for want of prosecution of the appeal, set aside, is not entitled to a writ of error.—Whitmore v. Divilbis, 10 Iowa, 68.

[e] (Mich. 1869) A motion to dismiss an appeal from a justice of the peace, because the sureties in the appeal bond did not justify, cannot be brought up to the supreme court on a writ of error.—Conrad v. Freeland, 18 Mich. 255.

[f] (Mich. 1873) Error, and not certiorari, is the proper remedy to review a joint judgment against a principal and his sureties, upon a point on an appeal of the cause from a justice's court.—Evers v. Sager, 28 Mich. 47.

[g] (N. Y. 1842) The certificate required of the judge of common pleas, for a writ of error from his decision to the supreme court, by Laws 1836, p. 794. § 2, is regular, though obtained before the filing of the judgment record. —Moot v. Parkhurst, 2 Hill, 372.

[h] (N. Y. 1859) Where a judgment is merely reversed by the general term of the marine court, this is not an "actual determination," within Code, § 352, from which an appeal lies to the court of common pleas.—Howe v. Julien, 2 Hilt. 453.

[i] (N. Y. 1865) Where the county court refuses to dismiss an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace for alleged irregularity in serving notice of appeal, such refusal can only be reviewed in the supreme court by appeal from the order of the county court, denying the motion to dismiss.—Armstrong v. Smith, 44 Barb. 120.

[j] (Ohio, 1855) A judgment of the supreme court on circuit, overruling a refusal of the court of common pleas to allow a motion for a jury to try the damages in an action for forcible entry and detainer, when the decision of a justice had been overruled there on certiorari, and awarding a writ of procedendo, is no bar to a writ of error to reverse said judgment.—Aubrey v. Almy, 4 Ohio St. 524.

[k] (Tex. 1873) Appeal will not lie to the supreme court from a judgment rendered in a civil action which originated in the justice's court.—Greer v. Osborne, 37 Tex. 430.

[l] (Tex. 1882) The court of appeals has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal of a case appealed from the justice's court, where plaintiff demanded $175, the county court judgment was $32, and the costs in the justice's court were $30.25.—Jones v. Jones, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 202.

[m] (Tex. 1895) Where an appeal from a justice to the district court is dismissed, a motion to have the judgment of dismissal set aside, and for a new trial, made within two days after the judgment is filed, is a "motion for a new trial," and gives further time for notice of appeal.—Welge v. Jackson (Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 371.

[n] (Vt. 1832) An action brought in the county court by appeal, on having an offset filed there, which could not be filed were it not for the act of 1811, is open to review by virtue of that act; and its provisions are not repealed by Act 1826, which provides that no review shall be allowed in any action brought to the county court by appeal.—Bloss v. Kittridge, 4 Vt. 272.

—— of objections to appeal to appellate court, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 2, cc. 1819–1823, §§ 1374–1381.

[a] (Ala. 1856) A defendant, after having a trial and a judgment against him before a justice, and some other proceeding there which had the effect to render the judgment nugatory, appealed to the circuit court, where the plaintiff appeared and filed his claim, and, on trial by the jury, obtained a verdict. The defendant then objected that the circuit court had no jurisdiction; the judgment from which the appeal was taken not being valid. Held, that this objection could not be raised for the first time on error.—Gresham v. Tucker, 28 Ala. 611.

[b] (Cal. 1855) An objection that the county court has no jurisdiction, because there was no appeal bond, as required by statute, on appeal from a justice of the peace, should be made in the intermediate court. It is too late in the supreme court.—Howard v. Harman, 5 Cal. 78.

[c] (Iowa, 1851) An objection of form to an action commenced before a justice, not raised in the district court, will not be ground for reversal in the supreme court.—Packer v. Cockayne, 3 G. Greene, 111.

[d] (Iowa, 1873) An appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace was taken to the district court before the act creating the circuit court went into operation. The appellee afterwards filed the transcript in the circuit court and obtained judgment thereon against the defendant and his surety in the appeal bond. At the following term, defendant made application to set the judgment aside for reasons assigned, but made no objection to the jurisdiction. Held that, by appearing and failing to object to the jurisdiction of the circuit court, he was thereby estopped from urging it for the first time on appeal to the supreme court.—Iowa Northern Cent. Ry. Co. v. Ritter, 36 Iowa, 568.

[e] (Kan.) Where an action for the recovery of money only has been commenced before a justice of the peace, and is afterwards appealed to the district court, and the defendant, with the consent of all the parties, files an answer setting up a counterclaim exceeding $300, and the plaintiff and defendant voluntarily appear and proceed to trial, and no objection is made at any time before the trial court to the counterclaim, or to the jurisdiction of the court to hear and dispose of the same, the plaintiff cannot, in the supreme court, for the first time, object to the jurisdiction of the trial court to hear and determine such counterclaim.—(1877) Shuster v. Finan, 19 Kan. 114; (1885) Gregg v. Garverick, 33 Kan. 190, 5 Pac. 751.

[f] (Kan. 1896) When the district court, on a petition in error from a justice of the peace, reverses the judgment of the justice, it is not necessary for the aggrieved party to file a motion for a new trial in order to have the decision of the district court reviewed on petition in error.—Shaffer v. Hoenschild, 2 Kan. App. 516, 43 Pac. 979.

[g] (Ky. 1844) Where, on the trial of an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, in attachment, a jury has intervened, neither party objecting, no advantage can be taken thereof in the court of appeals.—Kennedy v. Aldridge, 44 Ky. (5 B. Mon.) 141.

[h] (Mich. 1859) After a trial in the justice's court on the merits, and an appeal therefrom, and trial in the circuit court on the merits, defendants' objection that the damages claimed were beyond the jurisdiction of the justice's court is made too late, not being raised in the appellate court.—Tower v. Lamb, 6 Mich. 362.

[j] (Mo. 1855) Causes taken by appeal from a justice's court to the circuit court must be tried under the old law, and not under the new practice act of 1850; and exceptions to the evidence must be taken, and instructions asked, to entitle the parties to a review of the circuit court decision.—Terrell v. Hunter, 21 Mo. 436.

[k] (Mo. 1870) The objection made in the supreme court, for the first time, that the complaint which should have been filed in the justice court, where the action originated, does not appear in the transcript, comes too late.—Fisher v. Pacific R. R., 46 Mo. 304.

[l] (Neb. 1888) Appellant from a justice's judgment cannot assign error for failure of the district court to try the cause, where no application is made for leave to answer, or to vacate the judgment rendered, under Code, § 1011, providing for the rendition of judgment for the appellee, on failure of the appellant to file transcript with the clerk, within 30 days after judgment by the justice.—Slaven v. Hellman, 24 Neb. 646, 39 N. W. 843.

[m] (Neb. 1894) An objection that a petition in a district court, on an appeal from a justice's court, stated a new cause of action, cannot be raised for the first time on an appeal to the supreme court.—Levi v. Fred, 57 N. W. 386.

[n] (N. J. 1827) Where a justice has refused an adjournment to which a party was entitled, but the party fails to seek such relief on appeal to the common pleas, he cannot obtain it in the supreme court.—Gould v. Brown, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 165.

[o] (N. C. 1881) The correct practice in a case of a refusal of the superior court to dismiss an appeal from a justice's judgment is to reserve the exception and proceed with the trial, so that, on appeal, the supreme court may dispose of the whole case.—Spaugh v. Boner, 85 N. C. 208.

[p] (Ohio, 1860) When the parties on an appeal from a justice of the peace proceed to trial before a jury, upon the transcript of the justice, without pleadings, and, no objection being taken, there is a verdict and judgment, the judgment will not be reversed on error for such irregularity.—Hallam v. Jacks, 11 Ohio St. 692.

[q] (Pa. 1889) An objection that a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action against a township for injuries caused by a defective highway may be taken for the first time in the supreme court after the trial of an appeal to the common pleas.—Hill v. Tionesta Tp., 129 Pa. 525, 19 Atl. 855.

[r] (Tex. 1891) Failure of the district court, on appeal from justice's court, to marshal assets cannot be assigned as error on appeal to the supreme court, in the absence of anything to show that such relief was asked in justice's court.—Silberberg v. Trilling, 82 Tex. 523, 18 S. W. 591.

§ 753. Review in general.

Scope and extent of review in general, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 3, cc. 1110–1153, §§ 3279–3341.

[a] (Ala. 1853) The notice to the appellee, required in appeal cases from justices of the peace, is intended solely for his benefit; and the appellant cannot complain on error that it was not given.—Martin v. Higgins, 23 Ala. 775.

[aa] (Ill. 1859) On a hearing in the supreme court to revise the judgment of a justice of the peace, by appeal, a judgment rendered on a certiorari to the justice of the peace cannot be examined.—Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 337.

[b] (Ill. 1879) Where the jury in a justice court, as well as that in a circuit court, found the same verdict, on conflicting evidence, it will not be disturbed on appeal.—Howitt v. Estelle, 92 Ill. 218.

[c] (Ill. 1887) Defendant in replevin not having attacked the jurisdiction of the county court on appeal from a justice, and having waived proof of "the contents of the writ," the affidavit for the writ stating the value of the property at $60, a judgment for plaintiff will not be reversed on the ground that the value of the property, and consequently the jurisdiction of the justice, was not shown.—Cox v. McGuire, 26 Ill. App. 315.

[d] (Iowa, 1859) Where a defendant appeals from a justice's judgment, and appears in the district court, he cannot, on appeal from the district court's judgment, affirming the justice's judgment on plaintiff's motion therefor, for default of defendant to appear, urge error in sustaining plaintiff's motion, where he failed to demand in the district court a trial on the merits.—Atkins v. McCready, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 214.

[e] (Iowa, 1859) Error of a justice in overruling a motion to dismiss an action, on the ground that defendant is not a resident of the township over which the justice has jurisdiction, will not, on appeal from a judgment of the district court, approving the justice's judgment for plaintiff, be considered, when the record shows that the motion is not verified, and does not show that the defendant was not a resident of said township.—Shellenberger v. Ward, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 425.

[f] (Iowa, 1886) When the amount in controversy before a justice of the peace exceeds his jurisdiction, the supreme court will entirely disregard the justice's certificate of appeal, and try the case on the record from the circuit court, without regard to such certificate.—Brock v. Barr, 70 Iowa, 399, 30 N. W. 652.

[g] (Minn. 1872) Where an objection to the jurisdiction, on the ground that the justice of the peace who transferred the cause to the one who tried it did not do so by an order entered in his docket specifying the justice to whom the transfer was made, is taken in the supreme court for the first time, the party must show the omission affirmatively by the record. It is not shown by a paper in the record, purporting to be a transcript from the docket of the first justice, but not certified so to be, nor by proof of recitals in the docket of the justice trying the cause.—Barber v. Kennedy, 18 Minn. 216 (Gil. 196).

[h] (Mo. 1886) Where a judgment in default is entered in an action before a justice of the peace, and the defendant appeals to the circuit court, but fails to appear, he cannot complain that the circuit court, instead of dismissing the appeal or affirming the judgment, orders a trial de novo, upon which the plaintiff again has judgment.—Hill v. [j] (N. C. 1872) Although a defendant who has confessed judgment has no right, by the North Carolina statutes, to appeal from such judgment, yet where an appeal has been allowed in such case by a justice of the peace, and the plaintiff has failed to move to dismiss the appeal in the superior court, the supreme court may pass by the irregularities, and, regarding the proceedings as in the nature of a writ of false judgment, consider the errors assigned upon the record.—Rush v. Halcyon Steamboat Co., 67 N. C. 47.

[k] (Ohio, 1876) Where an action in a justice court is taken to the common pleas on error, and thence to the district court, a transcript filed, but not attached, to the petition in error, or made a part of the record, will not be considered.—Hartman v. White, 7 Ohio Dec. 45, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 79.

[l] (Tex. 1856) Suit for $55 before a justice. Attachment of a mule. Leave to attach being granted on the allegation that the debtor was about to quit the state. Plea of reconvention for fraudulently obtaining leave to attach. Damages demanded $100. Verdict for defendant for $100 and judgment. On appeal, nearly the same judgment in the district court; there being evidence to warrant it. On appeal, this court refused to reverse the judgment.—Monroe v. Watson, 17 Tex. 625.

[m] (Wis. 1874) On appeal from an order of the circuit court denying a motion to reinstate an appeal from a justice's court, dismissed at a former term, the supreme court cannot consider whether the order of dismissal was prematurely made. That question could be presented here only by an appeal from the order of dismissal itself.—Pinger v. Vanclick, 36 Wis. 141.

Presumptions on appeal, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 8, cc. 1399–1602, §§ 3667–3806.

[a, b] (Ala. 1885) Under Code, § 3122, providing that appeals from a justice court when the sum claimed exceeds $20 shall be tried on an issue to be made up under direction of the court, the record need not show that the issue was made up under direction of the court, but, when pleas to the merits are found in the record, it will be presumed, on appeal from the upper court, that the case was tried on them without objection.—Jones v. Collins, 80 Ala. 108.

[c] (Ark. 1842) On an appeal from a justice of the peace, in an action on account, final judgment by the circuit court, the record finding that there was no appearance by the defendant, and not finding that there was a writ of inquiry, will be reversed; the presumption in favor of it being contravened by the record.—Pirani v. Allhime, 4 Ark. (4 Pike) 440.

[d] (Ark. 1850) In such case, where the appellant takes a rule upon the justice to amend his transcript, and the cause is afterwards dismissed, the supreme court will presume, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the appellant had the benefit of his rule, and that the justice could not amend so as to perfect the jurisdiction of the circuit court.—Heflin v. Owens, 10 Ark. (5 Eng.) 265.

[e] (Ind. 1837) On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, if no objection to the irregularity of the appeal is taken in the circuit court, the supreme court will presume it to have been regularly taken.—Maxam v. Wood, 4 Blackf. 297.

[f] (Ind. 1848) An appeal may be taken from the judgment of a justice of the peace within 30 days of right, and after that time by permission of the court for certain reasons; and where an appeal is allowed after the 30 days have elapsed, and the reason therefor does not appear on the record, it will be presumed that it was allowed for legal cause.—Inhabitants of Congressional Tp. No. 7 v. Clark, Smith, 41; Inhabitants of Congressional Tp. No. 19 v. Clark, 1 Ind. (1 Cart.) 139.

[g] (Ky. 1839) Upon the trial of an appeal in the circuit court from a justice of the peace, where the warrant was for $50 due by acceptance for hardware, as the jury might give damages for the detention of the debt, and as the verdict was for $54.50, it will be presumed that the excess was for interest, not that the original demand exceeded the justice's jurisdiction.—Clagget v. Blanchard, 38 Ky. (8 Dana) 41.

[h] (N. C. 1872) Where a defendant confessed judgment before a justice on a note given to the plaintiff, as administrator, for the rent of a house, and then appealed and objected in the superior court that the plaintiff had no right of action, held, on appeal to the supreme court, the record showing nothing to the contrary, that it must be presumed that the plaintiff's intestate had an estate for years, and not an inheritable estate in the premises.—Rush v. Halcyon Steamboat Co., 67 N. C. 47.

[i] (Pa. 1888) Where, on appeal from a justice of the peace to the court of common pleas, the justice's jurisdiction is called in question, and, on error, no copy of the transcript is exhibited, the supreme court must assume that the plaintiff's demand was within the justice's jurisdiction.—Wise v. Allen, 13 Atl. 544.

[j] (Tex. 1891) A bond, on appeal from a justice, was made payable to but one of the appellees. The appeal was dismissed on motion of the appellee named in the bond, based on the insufficiency of the bond, but not specifying such defect. The other appellee had also moved to dismiss, on the ground that the bond was not payable to him, but the motion was not called to the attention of the court. Held fair to infer that such motion was not insisted on, and that the court did not dismiss the appeal because of the defect in naming the obligees.—Cason v. Laney, 82 Tex. 317, 18 S. W. 667.

§ 755. —— Discretion of lower courts.

Discretion of lower court, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 8, cc. 1603–1751, §§ 3807–3892.

[a] (Mich. 1868) The fact of excess in a justice's judgment not appearing on the record, the court will not inquire into the discretion exercised by the circuit judge in awarding costs, in order to determine on the power of the court to review it.—Mitchell v. Shuert, 16 Mich. 444.

[b] (Mich. 1889) The discretion of the circuit court, given by How. Ann. St. § 7005, to allow a party in an action before a justice of the peace to appeal, where he has failed to do so within the time prescribed by law, will not be reviewed on writ of error.—Vincent v. Bowes, 78 Mich. 315, 44 N. W. 276.

[c] (Neb. 1881) When, on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the appellee answers and goes to trial in the district court, he cannot assign it as error that he was required by the court to do so before the time required by law, although he objected at the time.—Cobbey v. Burks, 11 Neb. 157, 8 N. W. 386, 38 Am. Rep. 364.

[d] (N. Y. 1887) It is discretionary with the county court whether it will allow a defective notice of appeal from a decision of the justice of the peace to be amended, and no appeal will lie from its decision.—Reilly v. Murray, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 720.

[e] (Ohio, 1884) Appeals from justices must be entered in the court of common pleas within the two first days of the next term; and, if that court has a discretionary power to enlarge the time, the refusal to exercise it cannot be controlled by the supreme court.—Price v. Orange, Wright, 568.

[f] (Vt. 1838) A petition to the county court for a new trial after default before a justice of the peace is an appeal to the discretion of the court; and, so long as the court keep within the limits of their authority, their proceedings are not subject to be revised or controlled by writ of error, certiorari, or appeal.—Houghton v. Slack, 10 Vt. 520.

[g] (Vt. 1860) No error can be predicated upon the court's refusal to set aside the judgment of a justice, in a case within the purview of Comp. St. c. 36, § 8, unless it appear that such refusal was put upon some other ground than the exercise of the discretion of the court upon the facts presented.—Downs v. Reed, 32 Vt. 785.

Harmless error, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 3, cc. 1923–2260, §§ 4029–4252.

[a] (Ala. 1884) On appeal from a justice's judgment to the circuit court, the appellee's counsel, in his argument to the jury, referred to the fact that his client was successful in the justice's court, and repeated such remark to the jury, and also to the court in the presence of the jury. The court rebuked the counsel, and in charging the jury withdrew from their consideration the fact of the justice's ruling. Held, that the conduct of the attorney, though improper, was not prejudicial.—Harsh v. Heflin, 76 Ala. 499.

[b] (Ga. 1884) Where the suit was for damages to personal property, and the verdict on appeal was within the justice's jurisdiction, the fact that the summons failed to specify the amount of damages claimed will not require a reversal.—Farkas v. Stewart, 73 Ga. 90.

[c] (Ill. 1888) In an action for services as a physician, originally brought in a justice's court, it was stipulated on appeal that the sole defense was that the services were rendered upon an express contract to effect a perfect cure, which had not been effected. After defendant had testified, plaintiff was permitted to prove, as in rebuttal, that on the trial before the justice he did not admit a special contract, and also what would be the proper treatment in the cases put to the experts, although no such matter had been introduced by defendant. Held, that the admission of such testimony was not prejudicial error.—Shea v. Wagner, 29 Ill. App. 193.

[d] (Ind. 1858) Where a defendant appealed from a justice, on a written offer to confess judgment, and offered no witnesses to prove his claim that he had verbally withdrawn his offer to confess, a dismissal of the appeal, instead of trial of the cause anew, was harmless error.—Lewis v. Morrison, 10 Ind. 395.

[e] (Iowa, 1851) Error in allowing a new and insufficient bond, on appeal from a justice of the peace, to be substituted in the district court, was harmless, where the principal therein succeeded in said court.—Hammitt v. Coffin, 3 G. Greene, 205.

[f] (Minn. 1890) Where, upon appeal to the district court from the judgment of a justice of the peace, no error can be found in the record, it a harmless error to dismiss the appeal, instead of affirming the judgment.—Schroeder v. Harris, 43 Minn. 160, 45 N. W. 4.

[g] (Mo. 1892) Where, after appeal from the judgment of a justice, in an action on an account, plaintiff amended his account by additional items, if error, it was harmless, since he entered a remittitur after judgment for the amount of the items so added.—Wenzell v. Erath, 48 Mo. App. 476.

[h] (W. Va. 1885) In the absence of any objection in the lower court, or showing of prejudice, a judgment rendered in an unlawful entry and detainer suit, tried on its merits in the circuit court on appeal from a justice, will not be reversed because the jury were sworn to "try the issue joined," instead of being sworn "to try whether the defendant unlawfully withholds the premises in controversy."—Chancey v. Smith, 25 W. Va. 404, 52 Am. Rep. 217.

[i] (W. Va. 1889) A summons issued by a justice in a civil suit was served by delivery of a copy to the defendant by a private individual, as shown by his affidavit, and judgment was rendered against defendant by default. On appeal to the circuit court, he moved to quash the return on the ground that the person so serving had not been appointed a special constable, and the court overruled the motion to quash. Defendant then made full defense before a jury, and there was judgment upon the verdict against him for $107.85. Held, that the judgment would not be reversed for error in overruling the motion to quash.—Johnson v. MacCoy, 32 W. Va. 552, 9 S. E. 887.

§ 757. Determination and disposition of cause.

Determination and disposition of cause, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 3, cc. 2372–2843, §§ 4380–4723.

[a] (Conn. 1893) Where, on appeal from a justice's court, the complaint has been amended, so as to include a distinct cause of action, a new trial will be granted on appeal, although the amount involved is small, since it affects the right of recovery, and not the amount thereof.—Allen v. Woodruff, 63 Conn. 369, 28 Atl. 532.

[aa] (Mo.) The judgment of the court above, on an appeal from a justice, must be affirmed in the supreme court, if there is no statement or bill of exceptions or error apparent on the record.—(1854) Moore v. Turner, 19 Mo. 642; (1855) Elliott v. Pogue, 20 Mo. 263; (1855) Aiken v. Todd, Id. 276; (1855) Heath v. Walther, 21 Mo. 169; (1855) Sickles v. Abbott, Id. 443; (1855) Southerland v. Warner, Id. 512.

[b] (Mo. 1857) Where a judgment for the plaintiff, obtained before a justice of the peace, has been reversed on appeal to the circuit court, the supreme court, on further appeal, will reverse the decision of the circuit court, if it appear that the justice of the peace had no jurisdiction in the case.—Glasby v. Prewitt, 26 Mo. 121.

[c] (N. Y. 1846) Where a justice rendered a judgment in favor of defendant for the sum adjudged to be due him from plaintiff, and for costs, in a case where the judgment should have been generally for defendant, with costs, though the common pleas should have reversed the erroneous part, and affirmed the judgment as to the residue, yet, as the common pleas reversed the whole judgment, the appellate court should reverse that judgment, and render such judgment as the common pleas should have done, denying costs to either party in the common pleas.—Kast v. Kathern, 3 Denio, 344.

[d] (N. Y. 1853) An affidavit to ground a motion to dismiss an appeal from the supreme court to the court of appeals, because the suit in the supreme court is a continuation of one commenced before a justice, must show in terms the fact that the justice was ousted of jurisdiction by the giving of the undertaking required by Code, § 56.—Lalliette v. Van Keuren, 7 How. Prac. 409.

[e] (N. Y. 1876) On appeal from a justice's court to the county court, where a new trial is to be had, and the county court refuses to pass on all questions raised at the trial before the justice, and an appeal is taken to the supreme court, the judgment will be reversed, without looking into the merits of the objections.—Maxon v. Reed, 8 Hun, 618.

[f] (Pa. 1822) On reversing a common pleas judgment, rendered on appeal from justice court, the record will be sent back for amendment only where the error is clerical and trifling.—Langer v. Parish, 8 Serg. & R. 134.

[g] (S. D. 1893) When an appeal from a justice's court has been dismissed by the circuit court for lack of a proper appeal bond, and the order affirmed by the supreme court, the jurisdiction of the circuit court over the case is at an end; and a motion made thereafter to such court by the appellant, for leave to file a new or amended bond, is properly denied.—Rudolph v. Herman, 4 S. D. 203, 56 N. W. 122.

[h] (Wis. 1853) The finding of the county court on appeal from a justice is equivalent to the verdict of a jury, and, having been entered of record, the appellate court cannot enlarge it by intendment, and, where it is insufficient, judgment will be reversed.—Heerou v. Beckwith, 1 Wis. 17.

§ 758. Certiorari.

Certiorari to appellate court, see "Certiorari," vol. 9, cc. 1718–1958.

[a, b] (N. J. 1828) When proceedings of the common pleas are removed, in a case appealed from a justice of the peace, the court may inspect the transcript sent up by the justice, in order to ascertain a fact that occurred before him.—Dancer v. Patterson, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 255.

[c] (N. J. 1851) The supreme court, on writ of certiorari to the common pleas, after an appeal, cannot review the judgment of the justice, and reverse for error by him. The writ brings up the judgment on the appeal merely.—Vannoy v. Givens, 23 N. J. Law (3 Zab.) 201.

[d] (N. J. 1854) A judgment of the common pleas for a less amount than the amount recovered before a justice of the peace may be amended on certiorari.—Cheeseman v. Cade, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 632.

[e] (N. J. 1896) Upon a certiorari directed to the court of common pleas to review a judgment of that court, founded on an appeal from the court for the trial of small causes, only the errors of the common pleas can be considered.—Moore v. Johnson, 58 N. J. Law (29 Vroom) 586, 34 Atl. 396.

[b] (N. J. 1807) A court of common pleas, on certiorari from a justice, does not sit as a court of error.—Clark v. Fulse, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 263.

[d] (Or. 1886) If the judgment of the justice is void, remedy may competently be obtained by writ of review.—Prickett v. Cleek, 13 Or. 415, 11 Pac. 49.

[e] (Pa. 1867) Where a writ of certiorari is issued against a magistrate who is proceeding under a new jurisdiction, the proceeding by certiorari is summary.—Wilt v. Philadelphia & L. Turnpike Co., 1 Brewst. 411.

[i] (Tenn. 1852) Where the writ of certiorari is resorted to merely for the purpose of correcting an abuse of the execution issued by a justice of the peace, it is in the nature of an audita querela.—Jones v. Williams, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 105.

[j] (Tenn. 1854) In view of the extension of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, by which a new trial by jury has become a matter of greater importance to the rights and interests of parties than heretofore, the courts will rather relax than render more stringent the practice regulating the remedy by certiorari, where merit exists and no real fault or negligence can be imputed to the party.—McCormack v. Murfree, 34 Tenn. (2 Sneed) 46.

[k] (Tex. 1904) The office of a writ of certiorari is simply to bring up to the district court from the justice's court the case tried by the justice, that it may be tried de novo. —Hill v. Faison, 27 Tex. 428.

[l] (Wis.) The object of the writ of certiorari is to confine inferior tribunals within their jurisdiction, not to correct errors in their execution of their proper powers.—(1860) Tallmadge v. Potter, 12 Wis. 317; (1865) Combs v. Dunlap, 19 Wis. 591.

§ 760. Statutory provisions.

[a] (Ala. 1852) Act 1850 (Pamph. Acts, p. 81), requiring a trial de novo on certiorari to the circuit court from a justice of the peace, does not apply to cases which were pending in the circuit court at the date of the passage of the act.—Mahan v. Lester, 20 Ala. 162.

[b] (Colo. 1893) The remedy by certiorari provided by Gen. St. 1883, § 1995, being in the chapter regulating justices, is exclusive, and the general provisions of the Code relative to certiorari are not applicable.—Wood v. Lake, 8 Colo. App. 284 33 Pac. 80.

[c] (Pa. 1818) Act March, 1810, § 22, which declares that the judgment of the court of common pleas shall be final on all proceedings removed by certiorari from before justices of the peace, and that no writ of error shall issue thereon, is confined to certiorari issued under it, and does not extend to a case which was removed prior to the passage of the act. —Love v. Barton, 4 Serg. & R. 269.

[d] (Tenn. 1892) Mill. & V. Code, § 3843, provides that "two justices of the peace may, within 20 days after judgment, grant a certiorari and supersedeas to remove the proceedings of a justice of the peace to the circuit court." Section 4093 provides that the proceedings of a justice, in actions of forcible entry and detainer, "may, within thirty days after the rendition of judgment, be removed to the circuit court by writs of certiorari and supersedeas, which it shall be the duty of the judge to grant, on petition, if the merits are sufficiently set forth." Held, that the provision of section 4093 did not affect the authority of the two justices in actions of forcible entry and detainer to grant the writ, if applied for within the shorter time permitted by section 3843. —Fisher v. Baldridge, 91 Tenn. 418, 19 S. W. 227.

[e] (Minn. 1879) Const. art. 6, § 5, gives the district courts original jurisdiction in "all civil cases," and "such appellate jurisdiction as may be prescribed by law." The only appellate jurisdiction to review judgments of justices of the peace given by law to the district courts is by appeal. Held, that the district court cannot review the judgment of a justice on certiorari.—Goar v. Jacobson, 26 Minn. 71, 1 N. W. 799.

[k] (N. Y. 1832) Though a commissioner should not allow a certiorari, yet, where he does so, and the supreme court directs a supplementary return, this is a ratification of the act, and the certiorari will not be quashed.—Caledonian Co. v. Trustees of Hoosick Falls, 7 Wend. 508.

[l] (N. Y. 1832) A commissioner cannot allow a common-law certiorari. Its issuing can be only by order of the court on cause shown, except when it issues ex debito justitiæ.—Bradner v. Superintendent of Poor of Orange County, 9 Wend. 433.

The common pleas' jurisdiction is exclusive.—Evans v. Commonwealth, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 362.

[y] (Wis. 1849) The supreme court has authority to grant the common-law writ of certiorari, returnable before itself, on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, and will grant it, on good cause shown why the application is made to it and not to the circuit court.—May v. Certiorari will not lie, as in the case of proceedings by a justice of the peace.—Town of St. Paul v. The Dr. Franklin, 1 Minn. 97 (Gil. 76).

[c] (N. Y.) By a statute now repealed the proceedings of justices of the peace were removed into the supreme court by certiorari. Onondaga Court of Common Pleas, 4 Wend. 212.

[d] (Pa. 1872) Where a judgment rendered before a justice of one county is transferred by a transcript to the docket of a justice of another county, certiorari will lie to the justice in whose court the transcript is filed for jurisdictional defects appearing on the face of the judgment.—Adams v. Leisman, 3 MacArthur, 6.

Ann. St. § 7031, providing that all judgments rendered by a justice of the peace, whether issue was joined or not, may be removed into the circuit or district court by either party, by writ of certiorari. The circuit court subsequently dismissed the writ as having been improvidently issued. Held that, as the justice had committed an error, which was substantial and affected the merits of the case, plaintiff was entitled to the writ, although a better remedy would have been a special appeal to the circuit.—Proper v. Conkling, 67 Mich. 244, 34 N. W. 560.

[n] (Tenn. 1852) Where property which is exempt from execution has been levied on under an execution issued by a justice of the peace, a proper remedy for the defendant in the execution is to remove the proceeding into the circuit court by certiorari and there have the levy quashed.—Jones v. Williams, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 105.

[o] (Tex. 1852) Where a justice of the peace issues an execution after the expiration of 12 months without a revival of the judgment, a certiorari to bring up the case for a new trial is not the proper remedy.—Wood v. Rich, 8 Tex. 280.

[a] (U. S. 1832) When the transcript of the record of a justice contains nothing in the form of a judgment, but only the assertion that he gave one, the proceedings are a nullity, and a certiorari to reverse them may be sued out.—Camp v. Price, Fed. Cas. No. 2,347a [1 Hemp. 174].

[b] (Ark. 1879) Where a justice renders judgment without evidence, the same is not void, or so irregular as to be quashable on certiorari. The error should be corrected by appeal.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Barnes, 35 Ark. 95.

[c] (Cal. 1888) A judgment rendered on default by a court having jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter cannot be questioned on writ of review.—Reagan v. Justice's Court, 75 Cal. 253, 17 Pac. 195.

[d] (Cal. 1892) A justice of the peace has jurisdiction to entertain a motion to set aside service of a summons, and pass upon the truth of the allegations of the complaint on which jurisdiction of defendant is based, and his decision cannot be reviewed on certiorari.—History Co. v. Light, 97 Cal. 56, 31 Pac. 627.

[e, f] (Ga. 1880) Under Const. 1877 and Acts 1879, one whose appeal from a justice's judgment not exceeding $50 to a jury has been dismissed on trial thereof is precluded from the remedy by certiorari on the original judgment, even though applied for within three months from rendition thereof.—Miller v. Hensley, 65 Ga. 556.

[g] (Ill. 1886) A cause can be removed from a justice by certiorari only where an appeal would lie. Therefore, where the decision of a judge is made final, the cause cannot be carried up by certiorari.—Yunt v. Brown, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 264.

[h] (Ill. 1890) Where a defendant has appeared in an action before a justice of the peace, but fails thereafter to attend the proceedings therein, or to take an appeal from the judgment, a writ of certiorari will not be issued to review the judgment.—Rielly v. Prince, 37 Ill. App. 102.

[i] (Nev. 1865) Certiorari lies from the probate court to a justice's court to review a judgment rendered therein by default, or on confession when there was no answer or issue.—Paul v. Armstrong, 1 Nev. 82.

[j] (N. J. 1877) Where a justice has jurisdiction, a judgment by confession is reviewable by certiorari only, and other judgments by appeal to the common pleas. Where he has no jurisdiction, the remedies by appeal and certiorari are concurrent.—Ritter v. Kunkle, 39 N. J. Law (10 Vroom) 259.

[k] (N. Y. 1847) Where a justice returned to a certiorari that on a demurrer to a plea in abatement in the cause before him he decided that the plea was sufficient, "and discharged the defendant from arrest, and entered the proceedings in my docket as above stated, and on the margin thereof noted my costs, 50 cents," it was held that there was no judgment which could be affirmed or reversed.—Nellis v. Turner, 4 Denio, 553.

[l] (N. Y. 1879) The provision of 2 Rev. St. p. 391, § 15, that no certiorari shall be allowed until final determination, does not apply to those cases in which an appeal from the justice might have been, but was not, taken.—People v. Perry, 16 Hun, 461.

[m] (Or. 1887) Under Hill's Code, § 2117, providing that judgments rendered in justices' courts for want of an answer are not appealable, judgments on demurrer are appealable, and a writ of review does not lie thereto.—Kearns v. Follansby, 15 Or. 596, 16 Pac. 478.

[n] (Or. 1888) A writ of review under the Code is the proper remedy to obtain a review of a judgment of a justice of the peace rendered against plaintiff in the writ for the want of an answer.—Union County v. Slocum, 17 Pac. 876.

[o] (Pa. 1873) Where a judgment is erroneously entered up against defendant and garnishee jointly, though no appeal be taken, the garnishee, on the subsequent revival of the judgment against him, may have the judgment reviewed on certiorari.—Masters v. Turner, 30 Leg. Int. 337.

[p] (Tenn. 1874) The remedy against a justice's judgment on notes not due when the judgment was rendered is by appeal, and not by quashing the judgment as void in a proceeding in the circuit court by certiorari and supersedeas, instituted by the judgment defendant.—Simmons v. Harris, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 325.

[q] (Tex. 1855) A certiorari to a justice's court will be dismissed, if it does not appear from the justice's return that there had been a final judgment.—Kirk v. Graham, 14 Tex. 316.

§ 766. Issues of law or fact.

Review of questions of law or fact dependent on amount in controversy, see post, § 767.

[a] (Ga. 1875) When a question of fact is involved in the judgment of a justice of the peace, and the amount in controversy exceeds $50, the proper mode of having his decision reviewed is by appeal. If questions of law are alone involved, the remedy is by certiorari.—Wynn v. Knight, 53 Ga. 568.

[b] (Ga. 1883) Certiorari to review a justice's judgment will lie in all cases where facts are not in controversy.—Boroughs v. White, 69 Ga. 841.

[c] (Ga. 1883) Where, in an action in a justice court, facts are to be considered, the right of appeal should be exercised, either to the superior court or to a jury in the justice court; and, if error be committed in the latter court, certiorari will lie to the verdict.—Western & A. R. Co. v. Dyar, 70 Ga. 723.

[d] (Ga. 1883) An express company was garnished by one holding a judgment against a person whose property the express company had in its possession, subject to a foreign judgment and its charges. The plaintiff appeared by counsel, and the company by its superintendent, in the justice's court, where judgment was rendered against the garnishee, except that it was allowed to recover its charges. The company removed the case to the superior court by certiorari. Held that, the question involved being one of law, there was no error in overruling the plaintiff's motion in that court for dismissal.—Cruse v. Southern Exp. Co., 72 Ga. 184.

[e] (Ga.) Where the issues tried in a justice's court were of fact, a review of the same is by appeal, rather than by certiorari.—(1883) Savannah, G. & N. A. R. Co. v. Holcombe, 72 Ga. 206; (1891) Johnson v. Cummings, 88 Ga. 12, 13 S. E. 819; (1894) Samuels v. Briscoe, 94 Ga. 425, 19 S. E. 245.

[f] (Ga. 1883) Where there has been no appeal to a jury in a trial before a justice, certiorari taken from the judgment, assigning errors of judgment as to facts, will be dismissed on motion.—Goss v. Lord, 72 Ga. 206.

[g] (Ga. 1891) Where the facts are not disputed, certiorari is the proper remedy to review the judgment of a justice of the peace on questions of law.—Greenwood v. Boyd & Baxter Furniture Factory, 86 Ga. 582, 13 S. E. 128.

[h] (Ga. 1892) Where there was no question of fact before a justice of the peace, but only one of law, the remedy by certiorari is available, and the superior court should make a final disposition of the case.—North & S. St. R. Co. v. Spullock, 88 Ga. 283, 14 S. E. 478.

[i] (Ill. 1859) The question of liability of a corporation for committing a trespass would depend upon a fact as to the orders and directions of the company to commit or not the act complained of, and a certiorari, therefore, is not a proper remedy to authorize a review of the judgment of a justice of the peace in a case of trespass.—Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Fell, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 333.

[j] (Mich. 1871) Upon certiorari from the circuit court to a justice of the peace, the affidavit and return must show that some question of law was raised and objection made on the trial. An averment that the testimony demanded a different verdict, though sufficient for a general appeal, furnishes no basis for a certiorari.—McGraw v. Schwab, 23 Mich. 13.

[k] (Pa. 1892) In trespass quare clausum fregit before a justice for injuries done by cattle, in case of alleged injustice done by the finding on the facts of the case the remedy is by appeal, and not by certiorari.—House v. Ziegler (Com. Pl.) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 159.

§ 767. Amount or value in controversy.

[a] (U. S. 1873) The writ of certiorari lies from the supreme court of the District of Columbia to justices of the peace in civil actions before judgment, in all cases where the amount in controversy exceeds the sum of $50.—Coleman v. Freedman, 1 McArthur, 160.

[b] (Ala. 1851) A certiorari from the county court does not lie to review the judgment of a justice of the peace in a proceeding instituted under the act of 1841 (Clay's Dig. p. 358, § 3) to recover damages, where the amount claimed does not exceed $20.—Winn v. Freele, 19 Ala. 171.

[c] (Ga. 1874) Where the plaintiff in a suit in a justice's court for $55 damages abandons the claim as to $5 of the amount, he has the right to carry the case by writ of certiorari to the superior court for review.—Wright v. Rutledge, 51 Ga. 194.

[d] (Ga.) Certiorari is the proper remedy to review the judgment of a justice court for an amount exceeding $50, where no question of fact is involved.—(1875) Reedy v. Helms, 54 Ga. 121; (1879) Dexter v Glover, 62 Ga. 312; (1891) Greenwood v. Furniture Factory, 86 Ga. 582, 13 S. E. 128; (1895) Blalock v. Smith, 95 Ga. 557, 22 S. E. 282.

[e] (Ga. 1877) When the amount claimed in a suit in a justice's court is over $50, and either party is dissatisfied with the judgment rendered therein, the remedy is by appeal, and not by certiorari, especially when questions of fact are involved.—McDonald v. Dickens, 58 Ga. 77.

[f] (Ga. 1877) When the case is in the superior court, it is not allowable for a party to write off from his claim an amount sufficient to reduce it below $50 for the purpose of giving that court jurisdiction by certiorari.—McDonald v. Dickens, 58 Ga. 77.

[g] (Ga.) Certiorari will not lie from a justice's judgment, where the amount involved is less than $50, until after an appeal to a jury in the justice's court.—(1888) Wynne v. Darden, 80 Ga. 730, 6 S. E. 470; (1890) Thompson v. Dodd, 84 Ga. 264, 10 S. E. 739; (1890) Brooks v. Baker, 85 Ga. 515, 11 S. E. 840.

[h] (Ga. 1890) Certiorari will not lie to the judgment of a justice of the peace for $50, or under, where questions of fact are involved, or questions of both law and fact.—Central Railroad v. White, 86 Ga. 202, 12 S. E. 365.

[i] (Ga.) Where the amount involved in an action in a justice's court is less than $50, and there are questions of fact involved, the remedy in the first instance for errors is not by certiorari.—(1891) Bernstein v. Clark, 87 Ga. 148, 13 S. E. 336; (1895) Brice v. Chapman, 95 Ga. 799, 22 S. E. 525.

[j, k] (Miss. 1843) The circuit court has jurisdiction of a cause removed from a magistrate's court by certiorari, although the principal sum in controversy does not exceed $50.—Hurd v. Tombes, 8 Miss. (7 How.) 229; Same v. Germany, Id. 675.

[l] (Wis. 1853) Under the laws of this state, a party aggrieved by the judgment of a justice of the peace in an action of replevin, when the value of the property exceeds $15, must seek his remedy by appeal, and certiorari to reverse the judgment will not lie.—McCaffrey v. Nolan, 1 Wis. 361.

[m] (Wis. 1853) Appeal, and not certiorari, is the proper practice to review the decision of a justice in replevin in the county court, when the property recovered or the value and damages exceed $15.—Dykens v. Munson, 2 Wis. 245.

3. GROUNDS, DEFENSES, AND RIGHT OF REVIEW.

FAILURE OR INABILITY TO DEFEND, § 769.
ACTS WITHOUT JURISDICTION, § 770.
ERRORS AND IRREGULARITIES, § 771.
DEFENSES AND GROUNDS OF OPPOSITION, § 772.
RIGHT OF REVIEW IN GENERAL, § 773.
EXISTENCE OF REMEDY BY APPEAL, § 774.
LOSS OF RIGHT TO OTHER REMEDY, § 775.

§ 768. Grounds in general.

[a] (Ga. 1875) Where a judgment of a justice of the peace is without evidence to support it, it is error to dismiss a writ of certiorari thereto.—Howard v. Strickland, 54 Ga. 112; Same v. Trout, Id.

[b, c] (N. J. 1854) Where the judgment of a justice of the peace is not docketed in the manner required by statute, the plaintiff may, on certiorari, claim judgment of the supreme court as to the validity of the docketing without waiting until his lands are sold under it.—Roller v. Roller, 46 N. J. Law (17 Vroom) 511.

[d] (N. Y. 1845) The plaintiff in a justice's court declared for the breach of a "verbal contract" in a case where the statute of frauds required a contract in writing, and the defendant pleaded specially, instead of demurring. Held that, a motion in arrest of judgment not being allowed in that court, the defendant could take advantage of the invalidity of the contract on certiorari, where there was a recovery before the justice.—Green v. Armstrong, 1 Denio, 550.

[e] (N. C. 1849) Where a wife joined with her husband in a bond, which was prosecuted and judgment rendered, after which, and before satisfaction, the husband died, and the wife was not present at the rendition of judgment, and the execution was levied on the wife's land, and an order of sale made by the county court, it was held that the wife was entitled to a writ of certiorari to the superior court.—Lassiter v. Harper, 32 N. C. 392.

[f] (N. C. 1856) Where the merits of a case tried before a justice of the peace are clearly and decidedly for the party cast in the trial, and there were circumstances tending to show fraud and collusion between the successful party and the magistrate, who were brothers, to deprive the former of a fair trial and of the right to appeal, it was held that a recordari should issue and new trial be had.—Lancaster v. Brady, 49 N. C. 79.

[g] (Pa. 1875) If a judgment of a justice, a transcript of which has been filed in the common pleas, was improperly entered against one of the defendants, the proper remedy therefor is by certiorari.—Rice v. Kitsleman, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 173.

[h, i] (Tex. 1857) Where a justice of the peace refuses to issue execution on a judgment recovered against him in the same court before his appointment, and takes an assignment of a judgment which he himself had rendered against such judgment plaintiff, and proceeds to enforce the same, a writ of certiorari and supersedeas will lie for such plaintiff, and the two judgments may be set off in the district court.—Duncan v. Bullock, 18 Tex. 541.

[j] (Tex. 1857) The absence of a material witness at the trial is no ground for a certiorari, unless it appears that a continuance was demanded for that cause.—Robinson v. Lakey, 19 Tex. 139.

[k] (Tex. 1866) Certiorari, not an injunction, is the remedy against a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace on a promissory note not due when the suit was begun, although the plaintiff had answered that he wished it treated as a nullity. It was erroneous, but not void.—McNeill v. Hallmark, 28 Tex. 157.

[l] (Tex. 1880) The fact that petitioner's adversary made a motion for a new trial and afterwards abandoned it is no excuse for applying for certiorari to review such judgment, instead of appealing therefrom.—Miner v. Gose, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 73.

[m] (Tex. 1884) Plaintiff's cause of action in a justice's court was not an account, within the meaning of Rev. St. art. 2266, and therefore was not admissible in evidence, although verified by affidavit, and it was shown by the petition for a writ of certiorari that defendant had a valid and meritorious defense to appellee's action, and it was not shown that defendant attempted to avail himself of his defense in the justice's court, or gave any reason why he did not do so, but it was shown by the petition that plaintiff did not prove any cause of action against him by legal evidence. Held, that the petition showed sufficient cause to entitle defendant to the certiorari.—Lindheim v. Davis, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 108.

[n] (Tex. 1891) A petition for certiorari alleged that, upon a trial before the justice of the peace for the recovery of a bale of cotton, plaintiff therein proved, by true testimony, that B. ginned for him cotton raised by him on his farm, and that on B.'s premises he packed and branded the bale, took possession thereof, and rolled it to a particular place in the gin yard, from which defendant took it, without his consent, and that the justice refused to give judgment for him upon the sole ground that, as a question of law, the ginner, B., was alone entitled to possession of the bale. Held, that the court erred in dismissing such petition.—Carroll v. Gilbert (App.) 17 S. W. 1086.

[o] (Wis. 1849) The supreme court will allow a common-law writ of certiorari, returnable before it, to a justice of the peace, where an execution has issued on the judgment, returnable before the next term of the circuit court in that county; security being first filed with the clerk.—May v. Keep, 1 Chand. 285, 2 Pin. 301.

[a] (Ill. 1889) The statute relating to the granting of certiorari to review a judgment of a justice of the peace after the time for taking an appeal has expired provides that the application must show that the judgment was erroneous, and was not entered through the negligence of defendant. Held, that when, pending a suit in the county court, against a defendant that understood English imperfectly, she was approached by an officer, when about to take a train, who read to her a summons in a justice court in an action to recover on the same demand, the import of which she did not comprehend, and she wrote her attorneys, who replied that her cause was continued, and the second summons was not necessary, the writ should issue.—Heep v. Burr, 34 Ill. App. 70.

[b] (Ill. 1890) Petitioner, on being served with garnishment summons, appeared before the justice, and answered that he was not indebted to defendant. Plaintiff's attorney, wishing to contest the same, asked and obtained a continuance. Petitioner did not again appear in the case, and plaintiff obtained a default against him. Scire facias was issued and served on petitioner, but he, supposing that the answer which he had filed was sufficient, paid no attention to it. After the time for appeal had expired, execution was issued, and petitioner obtained a writ of certiorari, on a petition setting forth that he was not indebted to defendant in the garnishment action. Held, that the writ was properly quashed.—Rielly v. Prince, 37 Ill. App. 102.

[c] (Mich. 1891) Certiorari from the supreme court does not lie to remove an action from a justice court, where personal service was had and defendant appeared on the return day, but did not appear at the trial or appeal.—White v. Boyce, 88 Mich. 349, 50 N. W. 302.

[d] (Pa. 1888) Where defendant is summoned and appears before a justice of the peace, but neglects to present his defense, he will not be permitted to show, on certiorari to reverse the judgment, that plaintiff's claim had been adjudicated before another justice.—Pifer v. Loose, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 657.

[e] (Tenn. 1851) If a justice of the peace, on the day appointed for trial, continues the case without notifying the defendant, and afterwards renders judgment against him in his absence, it is a good cause for granting a certiorari, but not for quashing the execution issued on the judgment.—West v. Williamson, 31 Tenn. (1 Swan) 277.

[f] (Tex. 1851) A. brought a suit against B. for $100. B., supposing A. would ask for but $30, made no defense, and judgment was rendered on default for $100. It being shown to the court that B. had good reason to suppose that no more than $30 would be asked for, the court granted him a writ of certiorari.—Weihl v. Davy, 6 Tex. 168.

[g] (Tex. 1853) Where the party applying for a certiorari to a justice's court made affidavit that he did not owe anything to the plaintiff in the suit which had been decided against him in that court, and that he was prevented from making his defense there, it was held that this was sufficient to entitle him to the writ.—Ahrens v. Giesecke, 9 Tex. 432.

[h] (Tex. 1854) The defendant in a judgment obtained before a justice of the peace cannot have a certiorari to the district court for the revision of the judgment, or a new trial thereon, for matters which might have been urged in defense, unless he can show a good excuse for not urging them.—Haley v. Villeneuve, 11 Tex. 617.

[i] (Tex. 1855) Where the petition for a certiorari alleged that the defendant (the petitioner), being about to be absent, received assurance of a continuance from the justice of the peace, who notwithstanding gave judgment against him, that he had no notice of it till too late to move to set it aside or for a new trial, that it was rendered without evidence, and that there was no justice in the plaintiff's demand, it was held that a motion to dismiss the certiorari was rightly overruled.—Darling v. Neill, 15 Tex. 104.

[j] (Tex. 1855) Where a party, sued on an account for "cash acknowledged," failing to attend, applied for a certiorari, alleging that he mistook the day of trial from an error in the copy of the citation (though he cannot state this point with certainty, said copy being destroyed), and also that the account sued on had no existence in justice, equity, or law, it was held that the certiorari was properly dismissed.—Inge v. Benson, 15 Tex. 315.

[k] (Tex. 1856) A party, having moved for and obtained a new trial in a justice's court, and afterwards dismissed his own motion, is not entitled to a writ of certiorari from the appellate court.—McDonald v. Cross, 16 Tex. 562.

[l] (Tex. 1856) Where a petitioner for a certiorari averred that the cause of action in the justice's court was barred by the statute, and did not show that he there pleaded the bar, which he might have done, it was held no ground for granting the writ.—Huntsman v. Jarvis, 17 Tex. 161.

[m] (Tex. 1857) Certiorari will not lie to remove a case which has been adjudged by a justice of the peace to the district court for any matter which might have been availed of at the trial before the justice.—Peabody v. Buentillo, 18 Tex. 313.

[n] (Tex. 1860) In an action on an account, judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace against the defendant, who carried the case on certiorari to the district court, and there pleaded payment by tender of a steer. Held, that there was no error in dismissing the petition for certiorari, as it did not show that the tender was made before or at the time the debt became due, or under such circumstances as to discharge it.—Arnold v. Raines, 25 Tex. Supp. 244.

[o] (Tex. 1860) A party who has neglected to urge in the justice's court matter relied upon in his application for a certiorari to remove the case into the district court will there be refused the writ; and the supreme court will also refuse it, unless it appears that the justice's court exceeded its jurisdiction in rendition of judgment.—White v. Casey, 25 Tex. 552.

[p] (Tex. 1878) A judgment obtained before a justice of the peace recited that the parties appeared ready for trial, and defendant in open court confessed that he was indebted to plaintiff in the sum claimed. Defendant sued out a certiorari to remove the case to the county court, stating that he had a good defense to the suit, which was set out, and stating that he went with his attorney to the office of the justice at the time appointed for trial, and while there a compromise was agreed on, and plaintiff agreed to dismiss the cause, without costs to defendant; that he confided in the agreement, and left the place; and that after he had done so plaintiff caused the judgment to be entered by the justice, which he did not discover until it was too late to move for a new trial in the justice court and give notice of appeal. Held, that defendant was entitled to a trial of the case in the county court.—Smith v. Thomas, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 677.

[q] (Tex.) A party is not entitled to have a writ of certiorari to a justice court on account of any matter of which he might have availed himself before the justice, but which without any apparent excuse he neglected to urge.—(1881) Wilson v. Griffin, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1313; (1884) Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Simon, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 99.

[r] (Tex. 1893) Where a railroad, though appearing, offered no evidence in an action against it, in a justice's court, for damages resulting from its refusal to accept, for transportation over its road, a ticket tendered by plaintiff, a sufficient excuse for its failure to make a defense in such action was not shown by its petition for certiorari, alleging that, prior to the trial in the justice's court, it had no information of the character of plaintiff's claim, save such as it could obtain from an inspection of the account as filed in the justice's court; that, from an inspection of such account, it was justified in believing that the claim was based upon the refusal of its servants to accept a ticket purchased in S. from another road; that, as it knew it had no agent in S. for the sale of tickets, it had no reason to suspect that plaintiff would testify at such trial, as he did, that he purchased the ticket from its agent; and that it was surprised at such testimony.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Coleman, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 548, 21 S. W. 936.

§ 770. Acts without jurisdiction.

[a] Certiorari is the proper proceeding to set aside a void judgment.
—(Mich. 1895) Harbour v. Eldred, 107 Mich. 95, 64 N. W. 1054; (Wis. 1866) Crandall v. Bacon, 20 Wis. 639, 91 Am. Dec. 451.

[b] (Ala. 1893) Where, in an action in justice's court against a corporation, the return of the constable is "executed by summons," a judgment by default against defendant, which contains no entry showing who was served with notice, as required by Code 1886, § 2657, is void, and certiorari is the proper remedy.—Independent Pub. Co. v. American Press Ass'n, 102 Ala. 475, 15 South. 947.

[c] (Ga. 1871) Certiorari will lie to review the action of a justice in rendering judgment upon a claim of which he had no jurisdiction.—Marble v. Laney, 41 Ga. 624; McCardle v. Fogarty, Id. 626.

[d] (Mont. 1894) Where a justice, eight days after rendering judgment in accordance with the verdict of the jury, changes the judgment, as to costs, without having jurisdiction to do so, certiorari is the proper remedy.—State v. Case, 14 Mont. 520, 37 Pac. 95.

[e] (N. J. 1880) Certiorari may issue to a justice of the peace to determine whether the justice had authority to render any judgment between the parties, where there was a set-off filed and discontinuance had without defendant's consent; an order for hearing being made on the request of defendant at a time subsequent to that to which adjournment was had.—Drake v. Berry, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 60.

[f] (N. J. 1886) Where a judgment is rendered by a justice in trespass quare clausum in plaintiff's favor, and it appears that the title was involved, a certiorari will lie to review the judgment as one rendered without jurisdiction.—Hillman v. Stanger, 49 N. J. Law (20 Vroom) 191, 6 Atl. 434.

[g] (N. Y. 1848) Where a judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace, not residing in the same town with either of the parties nor in an adjoining town, in violation of the statute, and there has been no waiver of the error by an appearance, and an omission of the defendant to take the objection before the justice, a certiorari will lie to reverse such judgment, upon an assignment of error in fact.—Tiffany v. Gilbert, 4 Barb. 320.

[h] (N. C. 1893) Code Civ. Proc. § 545, provides that writs of recordari, etc., are hereby authorized as heretofore in use. At common law, prior to the adoption of the Code, recordari was used either as a substitute for an appeal lost without fault of the party, or as a writ of false judgment when the justice was without jurisdiction. Held that, where judgment is entered in justice's court without service of summons on defendant, recordari lies to review such judgment in the superior court.—King v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 112 N. C. 318, 16 S. E. 929.

[i] (Pa. 1858) Where a judgment is given by a justice against a defendant without service of summons or notice to him of any kind, a certiorari will be allowed.—Stedman v. Bradford, 3 Phila. 258.

Henningsen, 11 Wash. 12, 39 Pac. 243.

§ 771. Errors and irregularities.

[a] (Ga. 1884) Where the verdict of the jury in a justice's court failed to allow defendant credit for the partial payment by him to the officer levying a distress warrant, certiorari was his proper remedy.—White v. Mandeville, 72 Ga. 705.

J. 1832) Where the defendant was present at the trial until the case was given to the jury in the court for the trial of small causes, but was absent when the verdict was rendered and judgment entered thereon, it was held that this was not such an absence as would entitle the defendant to a certiorari.—Perrine v. Little, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 248.

before the commissioners' court, as required by statute, does not affect the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to entertain an action thereon, and hence, though the judgment in such action be erroneous, the error can be taken advantage of only by appeal, and not by certiorari.—Dimmit County v. Salmon (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 752.

§ 772. Defenses and grounds of opposition.

[a] (Ala. 1884) It is no objection to certiorari that it was sued out to review a judgment by a justice of the peace after the expiration of the five days allowed for taking an appeal by Code, § 3654.—Grantham v. Payne, 77 Ala. 584.

[aa] (Ala. 1884) Plaintiff is not barred from suing out certiorari to review a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace by a payment thereof to such justice by the defendant; plaintiff not having accepted the money.—Grantham v. Payne, 77 Ala. 584.

Ernst, 54 Miss. 642.

[c] (N. J. 1891) A judgment in a justice's court, in a suit against a foreign corporation, of which a justice has not jurisdiction, is reviewable either by certiorari or by appeal; and the dismissal of an appeal, because the papers are not sent up by the justice, does not bar the remedy by certiorari.—Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Carty, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 336, 21 Atl. 851.

[d] (N. Y. 1823) Paying a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace does not prevent the issuing of a certiorari to reverse it, nor supersede one already issued.—Clark v. Ostrander, 1 Cow. 437, 13 Am. Dec. 546.

§ 773. Right of review in general.

[a, b] (Mich. 1895) Where a garnishee appeals from a judgment against him in a justice court, the principal debtor cannot also bring up the garnishee proceedings for review by certiorari.—Lichtenberg v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 106 Mich. 38, 63 N. W. 963.

[c] (Mont. 1896) Pending a right of appeal from a judgment of the district court quashing a writ of review to a justice's judgment denying a change of venue, certiorari will not lie to the supreme court to review the justice's judgment.—State v. Lenahan, 17 Mont. 518, 43 Pac. 712.

J. 1891) On certiorari from a justice of the peace the record showed that, after a mistrial by reason of a disagreement of the jury, an adjournment was had by consent, that another venire was issued forthwith, returnable at a specified time and place, and that at such time and place defendant's counsel appeared and stood by until a jury was sworn, and then arrested further proceedings by presenting the writ of certiorari. Held, that defendant could not object that, after the disagreement, no adjournment to any place was made, the jurisdiction over the parties both by regularity of adjournment and by general appearance having been complete.—Frost v. Chandler, 54 N. J. Law (25 Vroom) 128, 22 Atl. 1084.

[e] (N. Y. 1810) The successful party in an action before a justice of the peace may bring a certiorari, if the justice, by erroneously rejecting evidence, has diminished the amount which he was otherwise entitled to recover.—Bissell v. Marshall, 6 Johns. 100.

[g] (Pa. 1874) Where a justice entered judgment by default against a defendant, and within 20 days defendant entered bail for an appeal, such conduct waived irregularities in the proceeding, and 6 months afterwards, the appeal not having been prosecuted, certiorari would not lie on the ground that the record showed that service of summons had been defective.—Jones v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 31 Leg. Int. 173.

[h] (Pa. 1892) A mere allowance of an appeal from a justice to the court of common pleas, which is never perfected, does not defeat the right of the same party to a writ of certiorari.—Wilcox v. Knoxville Borough (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 721.

[i] (Tex.) The writ of certiorari is not a writ of right, but dependent on the sound discretion of the court or judge granting it.—(1851) O'Brien v. Dunn, 5 Tex. 570; (1881) Wilson v. Griffin, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1313.

[c] (Ala.) Under Code 1886, § 3405, providing that on appeal from a justice of the peace the case shall be tried de novo without regard to any defect in the summons or other process, or proceedings before the justice, an appeal is not an adequate remedy where the contention is that the justice's court obtained no jurisdiction of defendant's person under the process served, and therefore certiorari will lie.—(1892) Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Brannum, 96 Ala. 461, 11 South. 468; (1893) Independent Pub. Co. v. American Press Ass'n, 102 Ala. 475, 15 South. 947.

Mason, 47 Cal. 7.

[g] (Ga. 1887) Defendant obtained judgment before a justice on a note of plaintiff's. Plaintiff sued out a writ of certiorari, which was refused on the ground that it was premature. Held, that the writ was properly refused, and that there should have been an appeal to the jury in the justice's court, and a trial, before the certiorari was brought.—Shirley v. Rounsaville, 78 Ga. 708, 3 S. E. 660.

[h] (Mich. 1882) Certiorari to a justice is a remedy that will not be encouraged where the alleged errors are such as might be obviated on a trial de novo in the circuit, and no intendments will be made in favor of errors assigned on it.—Howell v. Shepard, 48 Mich. 472, 12 N. W. 661.

[i] (Minn. 1884) The writ of certiorari will not lie where there has been an opportunity for appeal.—State v. Hanft, 32 Minn. 403, 23 N. W. 308.

[j] (N. J. 1834) Certiorari will not lie to remove a cause from a justice's to the supreme court, where plaintiff in certiorari was present at the rendition of the judgment, since Rev. Laws, p. 629, § 36, gives an appeal to the court of common pleas in such case.—Bartow v. Smyth, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 286.

[k] (N. Y. 1825) Where the defendant in a justice's court pleaded in abatement, upon which issue was taken, but the justice denied an adjournment to the defendant for the purpose of obtaining evidence to prove his plea, whereupon he pleaded the general issue and went to trial on the merits, on which judgment was against him, and then brought a certiorari to correct the error of refusing to adjourn, and an appeal to the common pleas upon the merits, held, that the appeal only would lie, and the certiorari was quashed.—Baldwin v. Goodyear, 4 Cow. 536.

[l] (N. Y. 1827) A trial as to part of the defendants puts the whole to the remedy by appeal, though some do not appear, or where some, being infants, appear by attorney; and in neither case will a certiorari lie.—Moody v. Gleason, 7 Cow. 482; People v. Judges of Onondaga County, Id. 492.

[m] (N. Y. 1888) Assuming that a police justice has the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace over suits between private parties, the statutory provisions for appeals from justices of the peace must apply to his judgments, and hence certiorari is not the proper remedy.—People v. Moore, 48 Hun, 619, 1 N. Y. Supp. 405.

[n] (N. D. 1896) Where defendant appeared by attorney before a justice of the peace on the return day, and the attorney asked to have his appearance entered on the justice's docket, and the justice refused to do so, and entered judgment against defendant as for a default, the action of the justice was reviewable on appeal on questions of law, after settling and filing a statement with the justice setting out the facts of the appearance, and hence certiorari will not lie.—Lewis v. Gallup, 5 N. D. 384, 67 N. W. 137.

[o] (Or.) Under Civ. Code, § 575, and Gen. Laws, p. 478, § 119, providing that a writ of review will lie from a justice's court to the circuit court in cases where there is no appeal, a review will not be allowed where an appeal could have been taken, but the party seeking a review neglected to take an appeal within the time limited therefor.—(1886) Ramsey v. Pettengill, 14 Or. 207, 12 Pac. 439; (1887) Summers v. Harrington, 14 Or. 480, 13 Pac. 300.

[p] (Pa. 1824) Where a suit had been instituted before a justice of the peace, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff, from which the defendant appealed, but neglected to file the transcript, and subsequently a scire facias was issued against the bail, on which judgment was obtained, and execution issued and placed in the hands of a constable, who received the debt and costs from the bail, and returned the writ to the justice, with an indorsement of satisfaction on the back by the plaintiff, and afterwards the bail issued a scire facias on the original judgment, in the name of the plaintiff, against the defendant, to obtain reimbursement, on which he obtained judgment for the debt and interest, and costs of all the suits, it was held that the court, on certiorari, would not interfere and arrest the proceedings.—Stewart v. Thompson, 2 Ashm. 120.

[s] (Pa. 1887) Where an alderman has rejected a set-off for an amount which would entitle defendant to appeal, his right to appeal is not defeated by the alderman rendering judgment for the plaintiff in an amount below such sum, and hence certiorari will not lie to retry such case.—Brown v. Lacier, 1 Wilcox, 184.

[t] (S. D. 1895) Since Comp. Laws, § 6129, authorizing one against whom a justice of the peace has rendered a judgment to appeal therefrom, permits an appeal from a default judgment, and since section 6065 authorizes a justice to set aside a judgment by default, certiorari does not lie to review a default judgment rendered by a justice.—Perrott v. Owen, 7 S. D. 454, 64 N. W. 526.

[v] (Utah, 1886) Where a justice is acting within his general jurisdiction as to the subject-matter, but exceeds his jurisdiction as to a party by rendering judgment against him before the time to answer has expired, certiorari will not lie, since Code Civ. Proc. § 951, provides for the issue of such writ when there is no appeal, and section 854 allows any party dissatisfied with the judgment of a justice to appeal to the district court.—Ducheneau v. House, 4 Utah, 363, 10 Pac. 427.

[w] (Utah, 1890) Under section 3719, which provides that "a writ of review may be granted when an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer, and there is no appeal, nor * * * any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law," certiorari will not lie to review a judgment by default rendered by a justice, since an appeal lies therefrom.—Saunders v. Sioux City Nursery & Seed Co., 6 Utah, 431, 24 Pac. 532.

[x] (W. Va. 1884) Certiorari will not lie after judgment before a justice, and no effort made by the party for an appeal till after the expiration of the time for an appeal, even though the judgment was erroneous, if it appear that the justice had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the party applying for certiorari.—Poe v. Marion Mach. Works, 24 W. Va. 517.

§ 775. Loss of right to other remedy.

[a] (Ark. 1869) Where a party neglects to appeal from the judgment rendered by a justice in a garnishment proceeding, and shows no excuse for such neglect, a writ of certiorari to bring up the record is improvidently issued.—Smith v. Parker, 25 Ark. 518.

[b] (Colo. 1894) Where plaintiff, in an action before a justice, agrees, for a consideration, to dismiss, and, notwithstanding his agreement, takes judgment without defendant's knowledge, withholding execution until too late for an appeal, certiorari, under Gen. [c] (Ga. 1887) In an action in a justice's court to recover possession of property, in which bail was required, the justice failed to comply with the statute in making out and serving the bail process, and a motion made before him to dismiss the action on this ground was sustained. Held that, after such judgment of dismissal, no case being in court, an appeal could not be taken, and that certiorari was the proper remedy.—Rogers v. Bennett, 78 Ga. 707, 3 S. E. 660.

[d] (Ill. 1838) Absence from the county and ignorance of the rendition of judgment by a justice of the peace against a plaintiff upon a note lodged with the justice for collection are not a sufficient excuse for not taking an appeal in the ordinary way, and do not authorize the allowance of a writ of certiorari.—Cushman v. Rice, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 565.

[e] (Ill. 1845) It was held not a sufficient ground for a certiorari to a justice that the petitioner was a poor man, that it took him several days after the rendition of judgment to procure sureties, and that he called twice at the justice's office to procure the papers for an appeal, once within 15 days and once on the last day allowed by law, but he was not in, and the petitioner was unable to find him after diligent inquiry, as it did not appear that the petitioner did not live in the same town, or might not have written to the justice, or was prevented from calling at other times.—White v. Frye, 7 Ill. (2 Gilman) 65.

[f] (Ill. 1851) A party who has not been guilty of negligence by omitting to take an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in proper time is entitled to take the cause to the circuit court by certiorari.—Cook v. Hoyt, 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 144.

[h] (Ill. 1865) Where a petition for a certiorari under the statute shows that the petitioner had been summoned as garnishee in a number of cases before the same justice of the peace, and was discharged after examination by the justice, and had no knowledge a judgment was rendered against him until it was too late to take an appeal, and that the judgment was unjust, there is no error in refusing to dismiss the certiorari.—McNerney v. Newberry, 37 Ill. 91.

[i] (Ill. 1886) Where a garnishee appeared before a magistrate, and after answering was told by the magistrate that he might go, as the magistrate had no further use for him, and he supposed that he was discharged, whereas in fact he was charged, it was a proper case for a certiorari.—Pierce v. Wade, 19 Ill. App. (19 Bradw.) 185.

[j] (Ill. 1891) The justice before whom a case was tried announced his judgment in the hearing of the parties, but subsequently, and by mistake, entered it for $100 less, of which plaintiff had no knowledge until after time to appeal had expired. Held, that there was no lack of diligence, and certiorari should be granted.—McDonald v. Williams, 41 Ill. App. 378.

[k] (Mass. 1864) A review of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace may be granted on the ground that the party against whom it was rendered intended to appeal and thought he had appealed.—Hutchinson v. Gurley, 90 Mass. (8 Allen) 23.

Southworth, 26 Mich. 381.

[m] (N. M. 1895) Laws 1889, c. 48, providing a distinct remedy where a justice shall wrongfully refuse to grant an appeal where it is permitted by law, does not repeal or amend Comp. Laws 1884, § 2442, authorizing a writ of certiorari where judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace, and, from any cause, a party is prevented or unable to appeal in 10 days.—Lockhart v. Woollacott, 6 N. M. 21, 41 Pac. 536.

[n] (N. Y. 1874) A common-law certiorari held not to be allowable to review a justice's court judgment, for the reason that the time for appealing had expired. The only mode of reviewing such judgments is by appeal, as provided by Code, § 351.—People v. Sleight, 2 Hun, 632, 5 Thomp. & C. 167.

[r] (N. C. 1860) Where the president of a railroad company was informed that a suit was about to be brought against his company before a justice of the peace, and, believing that a recovery in such suit would be unjust, gave instructions to the most convenient station agent to attend the trial, and, in case of a recovery against the company, to appeal to court, and such agent was a diligent and faithful officer, but from ignorance of the law failed to procure security for the appeal, it was held that there was no such laches on the part of the president as deprived the company of a right to a recordari.—North Carolina R. Co. v. Vinson, 53 N. C. 119.

[rr] (N. C. 1870) Judgment was rendered by a justice against defendant in his absence and without his knowledge, and he was deprived of an appeal on account of the irregularity of his proceedings therefor. Defendant made affidavit setting forth merits, and was not chargeable with unreasonable delay in applying for relief. Held, that he was entitled to a recordari; the law favoring trials upon the merits.—Critcher v. McCadden, 64 N. C. 262.

[s] (N. C. 1873) On an application for a recordari, it appeared that A. was informed by a justice of the peace that B. had obtained before the justice a judgment against A., and A. at the time notified the justice of his intention to appeal, and, in order to stay proceedings pending the appeal, filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court an undertaking, before one whom he supposed to be a deputy of the clerk, who approved the same and issued a supersedeas. It further appeared that the judgment was not given against A. at the time he was informed by the justice it was so given, but was rendered after he had filed the undertaking. Held, that although the clerk, when informed of the act of his deputy, notified the justice and the defendant that he did not approve the undertaking, and revoked the supersedeas, and though it further appeared that 10 days' notice of the appeal had not been given, as required by Code Proc. § 536, A. was not in default, and that the judge below committed no error in granting the recordari.—Marsh v. Cohen, 68 N. C. 283.

[ss] (N. C. 1879) A writ of recordari is properly granted, where the defendant had merits, and lost his right to appeal without fault, having erroneously supposed that relief had been arranged with the plaintiff's attorney.—Carmer v. Evers, 80 N. C. 55.

[t] (N. C. 1880) On petition for writ of recordari, it appeared that the petitioner was one of the defendants against whom judgment was recovered in a justice's court, and lived in a county other than that of the justice, 40 miles from the place of trial; that he was making preparations to attend the trial, but failed to do so, and lost his appeal by reason of sickness and his consequent inability to procure the services of an agent to represent him. Held a proper case for the aid of such remedial process, though there was no evidence of efforts made to get an agent.—Koonce v. Pelletier, 82 N. C. 236.

[tt] (N. C. 1888) A party is not entitled to a writ of recordari as a substitute for an appeal from a justice's court which was lost by delay through the negligence of his attorney.—Boing v. Raleigh & G. R. Co., 88 N. C. 62.

[u] (Tenn. 1844) A party was held entitled to a writ of certiorari where he failed to give an appeal bond within the two days prescribed by statute in consequence of a remark of the justice of the peace before whom the case was tried that it could be done at a later period.—Smith v. White, 24 Tenn. (5 Humph.) 46.

[uu] (Tenn. 1847) Where a justice of the peace informed a plaintiff, against whom he had rendered a judgment for costs, that he need not appeal, and that he could sue again before a justice of the peace, it was held that this was a sufficient reason why the plaintiff did not appeal within the time required by law, and that it laid a proper foundation for a writ of certiorari.—Chappell v. Jones, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 107.

[v] (Tenn. 1852) The remedy by writs of certiorari and supersedeas can be resorted to as a substitute for an appeal only when it is stated in the petition for the writs that an appeal has been defeated by the oppressive or erroneous act of the court or justice of the peace, by the willful or negligent act of the clerk, by the contrivance or procurement of the adverse party, by inevitable accident, or by the blameless misfortune of the petitioner. Hence it is not a sufficient reason for not appealing from the judgment of a justice of the peace that the petitioner did not know or suspect, until the time within which he might have appealed had expired, that the paper on which he was sued was a forgery.—McMurry v. Milan, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 176.

[vv] (Tenn. 1852) A petitioner for writs of certiorari and supersedeas to remove a cause from before a justice into the circuit court alleged the following as reasons for not appealing: That the services of a justice of the peace had been engaged to manage the suit as the friend and agent of the petitioner (he being old, blind, and ignorant), who advised him, when he attended at the proper time to appeal, not to do so, as the case would go the same way in the circuit court. The advice was taken, but the petitioner afterwards ascertained that he sat on the case and united with the other justice in giving judgment against him. Held, that this was a sufficient reason for not appealing, and, the petition containing matters showing merit, it was proper to grant the writs.—Allen v. Primm, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 337.

[w] (Tenn. 1858) Petition for certiorari and supersedeas upon a judgment by a justice. The petition showed the judgment to be unjust, and gave a good legal reason for not appealing. Held sufficient and timely.—Nance v. Hicks, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 624.

[ww] (Tenn. 1867) Where a petition disclosed the fact that the petitioner had a meritorious defense to the action, that he was induced by the conduct and declarations of the justice on the trial to believe that the judgment was in his favor, and that he knew not otherwise until the officer called on him with an execution issued on a judgment against him, held sufficient to support the issuance of a writ of certiorari.—Evans v. Evans, 44 Tenn. (4 Cold.) 600.

[x] (Tenn. 1867) Judgment was rendered on a note given for a horse to be used in the rebel army, June 28, 1866, and execution thereon was stayed. Nearly eight months afterwards the defendant petitioned for certiorari, alleging that at the trial both the plaintiff and himself had knowledge of all the facts pertaining to the note, but that he himself did not know that he could prove the plaintiff's knowledge of the service for which the horse was bought, or he would have appealed, and, knowing now that he could prove that fact, has applied to remove the cause to the circuit court for a new trial. The circuit court dismissed the certiorari. Held not to be error.—Brinkley v. Burney, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 101.

[xx] (Tenn. 1871) A justice of the peace, after rendering judgment against a surety on a note, refused to recognize the authority of the defendant's agent to ask an appeal. Held, that a statement by the surety that he was informed and believed that the note had been in whole or in part paid was a statement of "good and sufficient cause" for issuance of certiorari and supersedeas.—Hardin v. Williams, 52 Tenn. (5 Heisk.) 385.

[y] (Tenn. 1873) A petition for a certiorari by a widow "ignorant of the forms of law" alleged that the defendant by some unknown means came into possession of a mare belonging to the petitioner; that the latter sent her son for the animal, who brought it home, but did not disclose the manner in which he had obtained possession, petitioner being led to suppose that it was obtained by "some sort of affidavit" as to the ownership; that the son had in fact brought an action of replevin in petitioner's name before a justice of the peace, making the necessary affidavit and bond, and taking the mare under the warrant; and that petitioner did not know that a suit had been brought in her name until judgment had been rendered against her and execution issued for the penalty of the bond. She further alleged that, had she known of the suit, she would have been defended, and, in case of judgment against her, would have appealed. Held, that the facts presented a sufficient excuse for failure to appeal within the statutory time to justify allowing an appeal afterwards.—Fox v. Fields, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 31.

[yy] (Tenn. 1876) It is no ground for certiorari that the petitioner believed his case to be set for trial before the justice of the peace a week later than the time actually set, and that he discovered his mistake too late to appeal.—Cox v. Kent, 68 Tenn. (9 Baxt.) 492.

[z] (Tenn. 1880) A. paid half his debt to B. B., anticipating no defense to a suit, sent the claim to an agent in the county of A.'s residence, and, upon suit before a justice of the peace, judgment was rendered against B. His agent could not procure security for the prosecution of an appeal within the two days allowed by law. Held, that the facts showed good ground for certiorari.—Snapp v. Thomas, 73 Tenn. (5 Lea) 503.

[zz] (Tex. 1851) Where, in the petition for a writ of certiorari, the only injury complained of was that the justice refused to allow the petitioner to appeal unless he complied with an oppressive condition, and he had no right to appeal, the writ was properly dismissed.—O'Brien v. Dunn, 5 Tex. 570.

[a] (Ala. 1860) After a garnishee has appeared and answered, admitting an indebtedness to the defendant, and a judgment has been thereon rendered against him, and he has transferred the cause to the circuit court by certiorari, he cannot there raise an objection for the first time either to the affidavit or to the summons of garnishment.—Gould v. Meyer, 36 Ala. 565.

[b] (Ga. 1885) Code, § 5052, provides that, when either party to a cause in a justice's court shall be dissatisfied with any decision or judgment therein, he may apply for and obtain a writ of certiorari by petition to the superior court, in which petition he shall plainly and distinctly state the errors complained of. Held, that the fact that some of the jurors sitting in a justice's court were not on the list of jurors furnished by the jury commissioners to the clerk of the superior court cannot be taken advantage of by certiorari after the verdict, where no objection was made before the trial.—Mitchell v. Bradberry, 76 Ga. 15.

[c] (Mass. 1839) A party fined by a justice of the peace for a neglect of duty in the militia cannot, on petition for a certiorari, take advantage of an objection which was not made at the trial before the justice, and which, if it had been there made, might have been obviated by proof.—Cousins v. Cowing, 40 Mass. (23 Pick.) 208.

[d] (Mich. 1892) Objection to the jurisdiction of a justice will not be considered on certiorari, when it was not raised in his court.—Hopkins v. Green, 98 Mich. 304, 58 N. W. 537.

[e] (Mich. 1895) In an action in justice's court, in the absence of an appearance or objection by defendant, where an affidavit in form sufficient to sustain plaintiff's claim is introduced, defendant cannot for the first time raise the question by certiorari that the preliminary service entitling plaintiff to make use of it was not made.—Forbes Lithograph Mfg. [f] (Mich. 1895) On certiorari to vacate a justice's judgment, errors not urged in the justice court, but alleged in the affidavit for certiorari, may be considered.—Harbour v. Eldred, 107 Mich. 95, 64 N. W. 1054.

[h] (N. Y. 1808) In an action before a justice of the peace, if no objection is made at the time to the form of the declaration, a defect in it cannot be taken advantage of on the return to a certiorari.—McNeil v. Scoffield, 3 Johns. 436.

[j] (N. Y. 1847) Where objection to a joint justification in trespass is not taken before the justice, it cannot be taken on certiorari.—Fulton v. Heaton, 1 Barb. 552.

[k] (N. Y. 1847) Where, by a justice's return on certiorari, it did not appear that any evidence was offered showing that a certain mortgage, which was read at the trial without objection, and had been filed, was filed in the town where the mortgagor resided, or where the property was situated, as required by law, it was held that the objection to the defect in the evidence could not be taken in the court of common pleas.—Jencks v. Smith, 1 N. Y. (1 Comst.) 90.

[l] (Pa. 1869) When a garnishee was present in the magistrate's court at the time alleged irregularities in proceedings before the justice were committed, and he did not appeal or take certiorari within 20 days of the entry of judgment against him as garnishee, and after the first execution was issued obtained a stay by a promise of payment, he cannot deny the authority of the magistrate to enter judgment on such irregular proceedings by certiorari taken on the issue of a second execution.—Heiler v. Spangler, 1 Leg. Gaz. 84.

[m] (Pa. 1871) Where a plea in abatement was not filed before a justice of the peace, it will not be considered on certiorari.—Douglass v. Lacey, 3 Leg. Gaz. 253.

[n] (Tex. 1857) In an action on a promissory note before a justice's court, an objection to the note produced, on the ground of variance from that set forth in the justice's citation, must be made before the justice, if at all, and, if not then made, cannot be afterwards taken in the district court on certiorari.—Huston v. Clute, 19 Tex. 178.

[c] (N. J. 1833) Where a judgment is rendered against two in a court for the trial of small causes, and one refuses to join in certiorari, the supreme court, on the return of the certiorari, will grant a rule upon the party refusing to show cause why the other should not proceed alone.—Ballinger v. Sherron, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 144.

[d] (N. J. 1895) Where one of two joint judgment debtors wishes to prosecute a certiorari to reverse the judgment, on the ground that process was not served on him, he must summon the other defendant, and, if the latter refuses to join, procure an order permitting him to prosecute the writ alone.—Hulick v. Casler, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 621, 31 Atl. 223.

[e] (Pa. 1887) A writ of certiorari to a judgment in an attachment execution will not be quashed because the garnishee is not joined therein; it appearing that the time for the allowance of the writ by the garnishee has passed.—Bloom v. Alexander, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 553.

[e] (Tenn. 1848) A certiorari to revise the judgment of a justice of the peace must be applied for before the expiration of the first term of the circuit court occurring after the rendition of the justice's judgment, unless sufficient cause be shown for the delay; and a pending proposition, made to the attorney of record of the other party, which was not answered until after the expiration of the next term, was held not to be a sufficient excuse for the delay.—Newman v. Rodgers, 28 Tenn. (9 Humph.) 120.

[f] (Tenn. 1850) A writ of certiorari to remove a judgment of a justice of the peace must be applied for, so as to be returnable to the term of the circuit court which immediately succeeds the judgment of the justice, unless cogent and satisfactory reasons are shown why it was not so returned.—Johnson v. Hammons, 47 Tenn. (7 Cold.) 132.

[i] (W. Va. 1892) In applying to the circuit court for a writ of certiorari to the judgment of a justice, the rule is that the party must present his petition within 10 days after the judgment complained of is rendered, according to the analogy of appeals, if the case has been tried without a jury.—Bee v. Seaman, 36 W. Va. 381, 15 S. E. 173.

[c] (N. Y. 1827) Where an affidavit for a certiorari under St. 48th Sess. c. 238, was made six months after the judgment was rendered by the justice, a motion to set aside the writ as irregular will not be granted on that ground.—Williams v. Quin, 7 Cow. 539.

[d] (Pa. 1824) The provision of the statute of 1810 that no judgment of a justice of the peace shall be set aside in pursuance of a writ of certiorari, unless the same be issued within 20 days after the judgment was rendered, applies only to civil actions brought according to that act.—Caughey v. City of Pittsburg, 12 Serg. & R. 53.

Hill, 1 Phila. 439.

[g] (Pa. 1869) Where the garnishee, against whom an irregular judgment has been entered by a justice of the peace, promises to pay the debt to the officer serving a first execution, he cannot take advantage of the irregularity of the judgment by certiorari, after the lapse of more than 20 days from the rendition thereof.—Heller v. Spangler, 1 Leg. Gaz. 84.

Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co., 1 Leg. Chron. 66.

[i] (Pa. 1873) An application for certiorari to a justice to bring up a judgment alleged to be void is in time, if made within 20 days after an execution has been issued on the judgment.—Masters v. Turner, 30 Leg. Int. 337.

[l] (Pa. 1882) Where defendant had notice and knowledge of the judgment against him, a certiorari issued 43 days thereafter is too late.—Lehigh Val. R. Co. v. Murphy, 2 Kulp, 60.

[qq] (Tex. 1857) Where the judgment defendant, in lieu of praying for an injunction against a judgment of a justice void for want of jurisdiction, sues for a certiorari to remove the cause to the district court, it is to the advantage of the judgment plaintiff, who cannot complain that the writ was not sued out within the statutory 90 days.—McFaddin v. Spencer, 18 Tex. 440.

[r] (Tex. 1859) The petition should be dismissed on motion, where the judgment had been stayed and more than 90 days had elapsed since its rendition before the granting of the writ.—Criswell v. Bledsoe, 22 Tex. 656.

[s] (W. Va.) Since under the Code the writ of certiorari to a judgment of a justice has the scope of an appeal, it should be applied for within the time in which an appeal can be taken, and as Code, c. 50, §§ 164–174, provide that such an appeal must be taken within 10 days after judgment, or may be granted after the expiration of 10 days and within 90 days, if appellant show good cause for not having taken the appeal within the 10 days, a writ of certiorari will be denied where the petition therefor is not filed until nearly 90 days after the judgment, and no excuse is given for the delay.—(1891) Long v. Ohio River R. Co., 35 W. Va. 333, 13 S. E. 1010; (1892) Womer v. Ravenswood, S. & G. Ry. Co., 37 W. Va. 287, 16 S. E. 488; (1893) Arnold v. Lewis County Ct., 38 W. Va. 142, 18 S. E. 476.

been commenced, and hence will not authorize the issuance of the writ after 10 days from the rendition of the judgment.—Womer v. Ravenswood, S. & G. Ry. Co., 37 W. Va. 287, 16 S. E. 488.

[u] (W. Va. 1893) In applying to the circuit court for a writ of certiorari to the judgment of a justice under Code, c. 110, the general rule is that petitioner must present his petition within 10 days after the judgment complained of is rendered (Code, c. 50, § 164), but the writ should be granted after 10 days, and within 90 days after the date of the judgment, when the party otherwise entitled to it shows, by his own oath or otherwise, good cause for not having applied for it within the 10 days.—State v. Larue, 37 W. Va. 828, 17 S. E. 397.

[v] (W. Va. 1894) When one is prevented, by circumstances beyond his control, from applying for a writ of certiorari to a judgment of a justice within 10 days after judgment is rendered, the writ may be awarded after the expiration of the 10 days and within 90 days, under Code, c. 50, § 174.—Krell Piano Co. v. Kent, 39 W. Va. 294, 19 S. E. 409.

[w] (Wis. 1845) Act Jan. 30, 1844, "concerning justices of the peace," does not repeal St. p. 340, art. 12, § 1, respecting the writ of certiorari in cases in which the recovery does not exceed $15; and the writ, if sued out more than 20 days after the rendition of judgment, will be dismissed.—Petitt v. Pritchard, 1 Pin. 484.

§ 780. —— Acts without jurisdiction.

[a] (Pa. 1831) The common pleas cannot on certiorari reverse a judgment rendered more than 20 days before the suing out of the writ, even if it does not appear from the record that the summons was served; the judgment being rendered without hearing and by default.—Dailey v. Bartholomew, 1 Ashm. 135.

[b] (Pa. 1858) Where a judgment is given by a justice against a defendant without service of a summons and without notice to him of any kind, a certiorari will be allowed, if applied for within a reasonable time, which, in general, is held to be within 20 days after the first knowledge of the judgment was obtained by defendant.—Stedman v. Bradford, 3 Phila. 258.

[c] (Pa.) Where the record fails to show that the justice in rendering judgment acted within the scope of his authority, the court will reverse the proceedings, though the certiorari was not taken within 20 days.—(1871) O'Malley v. [k] (Pa. 1886) Where a justice failed to render judgment within 10 days after hearing, as required by Act March 22, 1877, unless there is an adjournment to a day certain, his judgment will be reversed on certiorari, notwithstanding the writ was issued more than 20 days after judgment, unless it appears that defendant had notice of the entry of judgment.—Stocker v. Hall, 2 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 233.

[l] (Pa. 1887) Where the transcript of the judgment of a justice of the peace fails to show the legal liability of a married woman, judgment against her will be reversed on certiorari, notwithstanding more than 20 days have elapsed from the time of entering judgment and removing the record on certiorari.—Rodgers v. Carr, 2 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 380.

Ry. Co. v. Ballouf, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 551.

§ 782. —— Form and requisites.

[a] (Ill. 1855) To entitle a party to a certiorari to take an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, the petition must show upon the oath of the party the facts required by the statute, and it is not sufficient that these facts are merely alleged as a conclusion of the party.—Russell v. Pickering, 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 31.

[b] (Ill. 1861) The petition for a certiorari to remove a case from a justice must state the facts and be verified by the oath of the party.—Harrison v. Chipp, 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 575.

[d] (N. Y. 1824) An affidavit for a certiorari to a justice's court may be entitled in the cause in the court below, but not in the cause in the supreme court.—Whitney v. Warner, 2 Cow. 499.

[e] (N. C. 1871) Before an application for a writ of recordari can be entertained, the petitioner must aver that he has paid or offered to pay the justice's fees.—Steadman v. Jones, 65 N. C. 388.

[f] (Tex. 1851) The petition should be in all cases verified by the affidavit of the party asking the writ.—O'Brien v. Dunn, 5 Tex. 570.

[g] (Tex. 1851) In some states, the same rules are applied to a petition for a certiorari as to a motion for a new trial; but in Texas, where there is no appeal from the decision of a justice, less strictness is required.—King v. Longcope, 7 Tex. 236.

[h] (Tex. 1857) A petition for certiorari should state facts, and not the opinions or conclusions of the petitioner.—Peabody v. Buentillo, 18 Tex. 313.

[i] (Tex. 1857) Where a written agreement is set up as a ground on which to claim a writ of certiorari it should be set out, that the court may judge of its effect and construction and of its conformity with the allegations.—Martin v. Nix, 19 Tex. 93.

[j] (Tex. 1857) On a petition for certiorari to a justice of the peace, there must be such fullness and certainty in the statement of the facts as to show what the case really was, and that some material error or injustice has been done the petitioner, or that he has not been able to avail himself of a legitimate defense. The certainty required is a reasonable certainty.—McKensie v. Pitner, 19 Tex. 135.

[k] (Wis. 1865) Applications to the supreme court for writs of certiorari to justices of the peace will not be entertained, unless peculiar and satisfactory reasons are shown for not obtaining the same from a circuit court or judge.—Hurlbut v. Wilcox, 19 Wis. 419.

§ 783. —— Sufficiency of petition.

Determination of sufficiency of petition on motion to dismiss, see post, § 804.

Failure to move to dismiss as waiver of insufficiency of petition, see post, § 803.

[a] (La. 1887) If no complaint is made of the legality of a city ordinance alleged to have been violated, nor of the regularity of a judgment pronounced thereunder, and there is nothing on the face of the papers showing that the charge preferred is not an offense against said ordinance, an application for a writ of certiorari will be refused.—State v. Davey, 39 La. Ann. 992, 3 South. 181.

[b] (Mich. 1859) In an affidavit for a certiorari to a justice's court, errors were alleged: (1) That the justice erred in refusing to dismiss the cause for defective service of process: (2) that the court erred in rendering judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant: (3) that the judgment should have been rendered in favor of defendant. Held, that the second and third allegations of error were not sufficiently specific to raise any question on the merits, and must be understood as referring only to the decision of the justice on the motion to dismiss.—Fowler v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 7 Mich. 79.

[c] (Tex. 1854) A plaintiff filed a petition in the district court for a certiorari to a justice, and alleged that he had sued the defendant on a note given for a horse, and that, though the defendant did not impeach the consideration of the note, yet the justice gave judgment for the defendant. Held, that the petition did not negative all probable defenses, and was therefore deficient.—Johnson v. Lane, 12 Tex. 179.

[d] (Tex. 1857) Where a written instrument is set up as a ground for a writ of certiorari, the writ will be refused, where the averments of the petition do not show any error of law on the part of the justice, or that there might not have been satisfactory and sufficient evidence in support of the judgment.—Martin v. Nix, 19 Tex. 93.

[e] (Tex. 1858) A petition for certiorari will be dismissed which does not allege that the facts herein stated, and which are the grounds of the petition, were proved before the justice, or does not give any reason or excuse why they were not proved.—Baldwin v. Hardin, 21 Tex. 443.

[f] (Tex. 1858) In a petition for certiorari to review the judgment of a justice in favor of plaintiff for a portion of his claim, but allowing costs to defendant, it was not necessary to allege that the defendant had made no tender in the justice's court.—Jones v. Nold, 22 Tex. 379.

[g] (Tex. 1866) Where the petition for a certiorari on a justice's judgment did not purport to state all the evidence produced on the trial, or any material error or injustice done the petitioner, or that he had been unable to avail himself of any legitimate defense, it was held that the writ was properly refused.—Oldham v. Sparks, 28 Tex. 425.

§ 784. —— Setting out errors and want of jurisdiction.

[a] (Ga. 1888) Under Code, § 4052, requiring a petition for certiorari to set forth plainly and distinctly the errors complained of, a petition alleging that the justice granted leave of absence to petitioner's attorneys and while they were absent rendered judgment against petitioner, but setting forth no ground of error, is fatally defective.—Western & A. R. R. v. Jackson, 81 Ga. 478, 8 S. E. 209.

[b] (Ill. 1855) A petition for a certiorari must show wherein the judgment of the justice is unjust and erroneous; and it is not sufficient that he erred in receiving or rejecting testimony, unless the petitioners are injured in the amount of the judgment.—Hough v. Baldwin, 16 Ill. (6 Peck) 293.

[c] (Ill. 1894) The petition for a writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace must show that the judgment was unjust and erroneous, and set forth wherein the injustice and error consists.—Horrell v. Horrell, 52 Ill. App. 477.

[d] (Tenn. 1850) To authorize the removal of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace to the circuit court by writ of certiorari, the petition must show that injustice has been done the petitioner by the judgment of the justice.—Johnson v. Deberry, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 439.

[e] (Tenn. 1872) Where, owing to the absence of the justice from the county, a plaintiff was prevented from taking an appeal, it was sufficient for the petition to allege that the judgment complained of was for too little, without setting forth the particulars of the claim for more.—King v. Williams, 54 Tenn. (7 Heisk.) 303.

[f] (Tex. 1849) A party applying for a certiorari to a justice of the peace must show some irregularity in the proceedings before the justice.—Cotton v. Gammon, 4 Tex. 83.

[g] (Tex. 1851) A petition for a writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace must show on its face the injury or error complained of.—O'Brien v. Dunn, 5 Tex. 570.

[h] (Tex. 1851) The petition for a certiorari, under the sixty-seventh section of the act of 1848, to organize justice's courts, etc., must show on its face the error or illegality which the petitioner complains of, or that he had not made his defense before the justice by reason of some accident which he could not control. It must be shown that there was an attempt to make available on the trial the grounds relied on for the certiorari, or the reasons why they were not presented must be alleged.—Clay v. Clay, 7 Tex. 250.

[i] (Tex. 1852) Where a certiorari is sought on the ground that defendant was sued out of his beat, the petition should show conclusively that the justice had no jurisdiction, that this had been set up and proved, or that by collusion between plaintiff and the justice the latter had assumed a jurisdiction over one whose residence to his knowledge was beyond his precinct, and not in an adjoining precinct in which there was no justice.—Pearl v. Puckett, 8 Tex. 303.

[j] (Tex. 1880) A petition for certiorari, because defendant's true name was the "Texas & St. Louis Railway Company," and the officer's return on justice's citation showed service by delivery of a true copy to W., treasurer of the "St. Louis & Texas Railroad Company," sufficiently alleges want of jurisdiction in the justice, within Rev. St. 1879, art. 303, requiring a petition for certiorari to a justice to show that fact.—Texas & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Ballouf, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 552.

[k] (Tex. 1891) Where certiorari is prayed on the ground that the justice had no jurisdiction of defendant, the petition is properly dismissed when it fails to aver that there was any attempt to establish by evidence the plea to the jurisdiction.—Spinks v. Mathews, 80 Tex. 373, 15 S. W. 1101.

§ 785. —— Setting out evidence.

[a] (Tex. 1852) In an action for killing a mare, judgment was rendered against defendant. In his petition in a writ of certiorari, defendant alleged that he was innocent of the charge of killing the mare; that there was no evidence produced on the trial of the cause that he had killed the mare; that the evidence was merely circumstantial, and not positive, and did as strongly implicate others as it did petitioner; that since the trial of the cause he had discovered other evidence, of which he did not know at the time of trial, and that it was of the utmost importance and material to his defense; that the judgment was unjust, and contrary to law and evidence. Held, that the allegations were not sufficient to authorize the issue of a writ of certiorari under the act of 1848.—Perdew v. Steadham, 8 Tex. 274.

[b] (Tex. 1857) On a petition for certiorari to a justice of the peace, based upon the ground that he has decided unjustly on the merits, all the evidence which was before him should be reported, with an allegation that it has been done; but in a case where this was evidently the intention of the appellant, though without a distinct allegation that he has reported all the evidence, if the evidence reported shows the injustice of the judgment it will be reversed.—Phillips v. Parr, 19 Tex. 91.

[c] (Tex. 1880) A petition for certiorari to review a justice's judgment should set out the substance of the evidence adduced on the trial before the justice, in order that the merits of the application may be determined.—Miner v. Gose, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 73.

[d] (Tex. 1884) A petition for a certiorari to a justice's court, which contains mere conclusions and general assertions as to the effect and character of the evidence, is insufficient, as the evidence itself in substance must be stated, so as to enable the judge to whom the petition is presented to determine whether or not injustice has been done the petitioner.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Jackson, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 174.

[e] (Tex. 1884) Where a certiorari is sought on the ground that the justice court had decided the case unjustly on the merits, the petition must set forth substantially the evidence which was before the justice, and allege that it was all the evidence adduced on the trial, and must also show that the injustice complained of was not caused by the petitioner's own fault or negligence.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Jackson, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 174.

[f] (Tex. 1885) A petition for a writ of certiorari from a justice's to a county court, which, after stating the issues made up for trial in the justice's court, states with fullness and certainty the evidence which was adduced, is sufficient, though it does not set out in hæc verba the written instruments in evidence, nor in totidem verbis the testimony of each witness examined at the trial.—Stuart v. Mau, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 784.

[g] (Tex. 1890) A petition for a certiorari to a justice's court must purport to set out all the evidence received in the justice's court.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Odom (App.) 16 S. W. 541.

[h] (Tex. 1890) A petition for certiorari to a justice's court need not set out verbatim the testimony of each witness, nor the exact contents of written documents, but it is sufficient if it states the substance of the testimony, and alleges that no other evidence was before the court.—Beard v. Miller (App.) 16 S. W. 655.

[i] (Tex. 1893) The petition for certiorari to a justice of the peace need not, in every case, set out the entire evidence produced before said justice. It is enough if it show that injustice has been done petitioner, or that he was deprived of a legitimate prosecution or defense without fault on his part.—Nelson v. Hart (Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 831.

§ 786. —— Allegations as to defenses.

[a] (Ala. 1898) Where a transcript from a justice is made a part of a petition by defendant for certiorari to review such proceedings, and the return of the constable shows affirmatively a want of proper execution of the summons, and the judgment fails to show any proof of service on defendant, such petition is not insufficient, though it fails to show that defendant has a good defense to the action.—Independent Pub. Co. v. American Press Ass'n, 102 Ala. 475, 15 South. 947.

[b] (Ill. 1895) A petition for a writ of certiorari to remove a justice's judgment into the superior court, stating that defendant was in no manner indebted to plaintiff, and had a complete defense to the claim, and that the judgment was wholly unjust and erroneous, stated mere conclusions, not entitling petitioner to the writ.—Chicago World Book Co. v. Brewer, 57 Ill. App. 526.

[c] (N. C. 1885) The writ of recordari will not issue, unless excuse for the delay is shown and also meritorious grounds.—Pritchard v. Sanderson, 92 N. C. 41.

[d] (Tenn. 1882) Petition for certiorari and supersedeas to quash execution in a justice court must state all the defenses relied on. The plea of limitations cannot be relied on, if not set forth in the petition.—Lyles v. Cox, 78 Tenn. (10 Lea) 738.

[e] (Tex. 1854) The petitioner for a certiorari to a justice of the peace must show that he had a good cause of action or ground of defense, and that the same was properly presented to the justice, or a sufficient legal excuse must be assigned for the omission.—Hope v. Alley, 11 Tex. 259.

[f] (Tex. 1857) A petition for certiorari must ordinarily show merits; but when it is to remove a cause from before a justice of the peace who has no jurisdiction to render a judgment, and to relieve from such void judgment, no merits need be shown.—Aycock v. Williams, 18 Tex. 392; McFaddin v. Spencer, Id. 440.

[g] (Tex. 1857) A petition for certiorari, after setting forth a suit and judgment against the petitioner in a justice's court for a cow or her value, stated that the petitioner "had been in peaceable and undisputed possession of the cow for three years or over, and that he proved the same to the jury, and that yet, without any contradictory or explanatory evidence by the plaintiff on that point, the verdict was rendered against him"; but it did not state that he relied on the statute of limitations at the trial. Held, that the petition was insufficient.—Robinson v. Lakey, 19 Tex. 139.

[h] (Tex. 1867) On a petition for a writ of certiorari, by a garnishee against whom judgment has been rendered in a justice's court, it is not sufficient to aver that the garnishee was not indebted to defendant.—Cordes v. Kauffman, 29 Tex. 179.

§ 787. —— Excusing negligence or failure to defend.

[a] (Ill. 1875) The facts required by the statute to authorize a writ of certiorari to remove a cause from a justice of the peace to the circuit court must be shown by the petition, and not merely alleged as a conclusion of the party. Where the petition states that the petitioner appeared after the time he was required by law to do so, and was informed by a clerk of the justice that no judgment had been rendered, and this statement is followed by an allegation that the judgment was afterwards rendered, this allegation is but a conclusion of the party based upon such information, and is not sufficient to show that the judgment before the justice was not the result of his own negligence.—First Nat. Bank v. Beresford, 78 Ill. 391.

[b] (Ill. 1880) A petition for a certiorari to a justice's court made the following allegations: That both parties to a suit before the justice fixed upon a certain hour for trial; that the plaintiff took judgment before said hour; that the defendant (the petitioner) was punctual, found neither the justice nor the plaintiff on hand, and was told by the clerk that the case could not be disposed of that day, as the justice had gone away; that the plaintiff had no claim against the defendant. Held, that it was sufficient.—Cole v. Atkinson, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 353.

[c] (Ill. 1885) To entitle a party to certiorari it must appear from his petition that the judgment before the justice was not the result of negligence on his part, and that it was unjust and erroneous.—Darmstaedter v. Armour, 17 Ill. App. (17 Bradw.) 285.

[d] (Ill. 1889) A petition for certiorari which shows that the petitioner was not informed of the suit against her, or the rendition of the judgment, until three months thereafter, shows that the judgment was not the result of negligence.—Heep v. Burr, 34 Ill. App. 70.

[e] (Ill. 1894) The petition for a writ of certiorari to remove a cause from a justice of the peace into the circuit court for trial must show that the judgment before the justice was not due to negligence of petitioner.—Horrell v. Horrell, 52 Ill. App. 477.

[f] (Tenn. 1872) A petition for certiorari to bring up a judgment, etc., by reason of the loss of the execution, should be dismissed, where it fails to state that the execution was returned to the office of the justice, or that the loss was through no default of the petitioner.—Knox v. Carter, 58 Tenn. (11 Heisk.) 12.

[g] (Tex. 1883) Under Rev. St. 1879, art. 303, requiring a petition for certiorari to review a judgment of a justice of the peace to show either that the justice had no jurisdiction or that injustice was done petitioner by the final determination of the suit, not caused by his own inexcusable neglect, a petition showing a bona fide defense, an effort to avail himself thereof, and that through neglect of his counsel he was unable to interpose it, states a sufficient cause for certiorari.—Hail v. Magale, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 853.

§ 788. —— Excusing failure to appeal.

[a] (Ala. 1852) A certiorari should not be granted to remove into the circuit court proceedings had before a justice of the peace, when the petition does not show any reason why the petitioner did not appeal from the judgment of the justice.—Wright v. Gray, 20 Ala. 363.

[b] (Ill. 1879) A petition for certiorari alleged as reasons why an appeal from the justice was not taken in the ordinary way—First, that on the trial, where the petitioner was summoned as garnishee, he was discharged, and did not know that a judgment had been rendered against him until too late to take an appeal; second, that by the false and fraudulent representations of the plaintiff the petitioner was led to believe that the judgment would not be enforced against him until too late to take an appeal. Held, that the reasons were wholly inconsistent with each other, and that, while the first reason assigned was sufficient to authorize the granting of the writ, the second did not show sufficient excuse for not prosecuting an appeal in the ordinary way.—O'Hara v. O'Brien, 4 Ill. App. (4 Bradw.) 154.

[c] (Ill. 1885) To entitle a party to certiorari, it must appear from his petition that he could not take an appeal in the ordinary way.—Darmstaedter v. Armour, 17 Ill. App. (17 Bradw.) 285.

[d] (Ill. 1889) A petition for certiorari which shows that the petitioner was not informed of the suit against her or the rendition of the judgment until three months thereafter shows that it was without her power to take an appeal in the ordinary way.—Heep v. Burr, 34 Ill. App. 70.

[e] (Ill. 1894) A petition for writ of certiorari to remove a cause from a justice of the peace into the circuit court for trial must show that an appeal cannot be taken in the ordinary way, and must give the reasons therefor.—Horrell v. Horrell, 52 Ill. App. 477.

[f] (Tenn. 1842) The statement in a petition for a writ of certiorari that plaintiffs were absent from the place of trial, and did not know within the time allowed by law for appealing that a set-off had been pleaded, is insufficient, though the set-off had been pleaded to an account which had been verified by the oath of plaintiffs and authenticated according to the provisions of Acts 1818, c. 25, § 1, and sent to another county for suit.—Moss v. Collins, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 148.

[g] (Tenn. 1850) A petition for a writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace must show why petitioner did not exercise his right to appeal.—Johnson v. Deberry, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 439.

[h] (Tenn. 1858) If a justice exceeds his authority by rendering judgment for a sum beyond his jurisdiction, this should be taken advantage of by appeal. If, being ignorant of the judgment, the party has allowed the time allowed for appeal to pass, he should state the fact as a legal excuse for not appealing, and pray for certiorari for a new trial, and not for the purpose of quashing the judgment and execution.—Mason v. Westmoreland, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 555.

[i] (Tenn. 1872) Where a justice of the peace has rendered a judgment in excess of his jurisdiction, the defendant may bring it into the circuit court to be quashed, without giving a reason for having failed to appeal.—Houser v. McKennon, 60 Tenn. (1 Baxt.) 287; Wagstaff v. Braden, Id. 304.

[j] (Tex. 1880) Where the statute prescribes a method for appealing from a justice's judgment, a petition for certiorari to review such judgment must show an excuse for not appealing.—Miner v. Gose, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 78.

[k] (Tex. 1883) Certiorari is additional to and independent of an appeal, and, when resorted to, the petition need not show perforce good cause why the applicant did not appeal.—Hail v. Magale, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 852.

§ 789. Recognizances or bonds.

Bond or recognizance for stay of proceedings, see post, § 792.

Liability on bonds for certiorari, see post, § 829.

[a] (Ala. 1844) Where 16 judgments between the same parties were rendered by a justice of the peace and removed by certiorari to the county court, it was competent for the court to direct that but one bond should be executed, as the condition on which the certiorari and supersedeas should issue.—Cooper v. Maddan, 6 Ala. 431.

[b] (Ga. 1883) The attestation of the bond by a commercial notary, instead of by the magistrate, will not invalidate certiorari.—Hendrix v. Mason, 70 Ga. 523; Candler v. Mann, Id. 726.

[c] (Ga. 1884) A certiorari bond is sufficient if it shows on its face its acceptance and approval by the justice who tried the case, though there be no certificate of such acceptance and approval.—Lingo v. Harris, 74 Ga. 368.

[d] (Mich. 1890) Plaintiff obtained a writ of certiorari to remove a cause from a justice's court to the circuit court, but failed to serve his bond on the justice within 10 days after the writ issued, and the justice refused to make the return. Held, that the justice's refusal was proper under How. St. § 7038, providing that the certiorari, together with the bond, shall be served upon the justice within 10 days, and no certiorari shall be of any effect until these requisites have been complied with.—Sherwood v. Allegan, 80 Mich. 270, 45 N. W. 134.

[e] (N. J. 1834) The party applying for a writ of certiorari to remove a judgment of the common pleas, on appeal from a justice, to the supreme court, must present a certiorari bond, as required by Rev. Laws, p. 642, § 47.

[f] (N. M. 1895) Under Comp. Laws 1884, § 2442, authorizing the district judge to allow a writ of certiorari to a justice's judgment where an appeal could not be taken within 10 days, and fix the bond, the time of filing the bond is within the discretion of the judge.—Lockhart v. Woollacott, 8 N. M. 21, 41 Pac. 536.

[g] (N. M. 1895) Though a bond filed by plaintiff on certiorari from a justice was not in the exact statutory form, refusal of the district court to dismiss the writ will not be held error, where it was accepted by the clerk, and there was no motion asking for a new bond, and defendant did not suffer because the court rendered judgment against him.—Lockhart v. Woollacott, 8 N. M. 21, 41 Pac. 536.

[h] (N. Y. 1846) The filing of a bond and the return to a writ of certiorari by a justice is sufficient evidence of his approval of the sufficiency of the sureties thereon, since 2 Rev. St. § 172, does not require the justice to certify or file his approval as in case of appeal bonds.—People v. Judges of Rensselaer County Common Pleas, 2 How. Prac. 189.

[i] (N. C. 1879) A failure to give bond on a petition for a recordari is remediable, after a return of the writ, by a bond nunc pro tunc, at the discretion of the court.—Carmer v. Evers, 80 N. C. 55.

[j] (Pa. 1892) A recognisance is unnecessary to the issuing of a writ of certiorari by the common pleas to a justice of the peace.—Thomas v. Glasgow (Com. Pl.) 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 167, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 711.

[k] (Tex. 1849) A certiorari, when issued without a bond, will be dismissed.—Cotton v. Gammon, 4 Tex. 83.

[l] (Tex. 1857) A bond for certiorari, to which the name of the petitioner appears to have been signed by attorney, but whose authority so to sign does not appear, will be yet considered, after approval by the proper officer, prima facie the deed of the petitioner.—McAlpin v. Finch, 18 Tex. 831.

[m] (Tex. 1857) Where a certiorari bond has been lost, and the party unreasonably neglects to furnish another, after an order to that effect, the court should merely dismiss the certiorari without awarding a procedendo.—Johnson v. McKissack, 20 Tex. 160.

[n] (Tex. 1881) Where a certiorari bond described a party as "Braidford," and was signed "Braidfoot," which was the correct name, the variance was immaterial.—Braidfoot v. Taylor, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 176.

[o] (Tex. 1893) Rev. St. art. 305, requires a bond for a writ of certiorari from the county court to a justice to be conditioned that the applicant shall perform the judgment of the county court if the same be against him. Held, that a further condition, that the applicant shall prosecute his suit to effect, will be stricken out as surplusage.—Nelms v. Draub (Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 995.

[p] (Tex. 1893) Where the county clerk received the bond required to be given on the issuance of a writ of certiorari to a justice, filed it, and issued the writ, and the county judge indorsed his approval on the bond, the approval of the bond by the clerk will be presumed, and the writ will not be dismissed for failure of the clerk to indorse such approval, but it should be approved nunc pro tunc.—Nelms v. Draub (Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 995.

[q] (Tex. 1893) On motion to dismiss a certiorari to a justice of the peace because the bond fails to show in what county or before what justice the judgment was rendered, where the petition fully describes the court and suit, and there is no variance between the description of the judgment in the bond and the transcript, the dismissal will be refused.—Nelson v. Hart (Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 831.

5. ISSUANCE OF WRIT AND SUPERSEDEAS.

ISSUANCE OF WRIT, § 790.
SERVICE OF WRIT OR NOTICE THEREOF, § 791.
SUPERSEDEAS OR STAY OF PROCEEDINGS, § 792.

§ 790. Issuance of writ.

[a] (Ala. 1830) Defendant in justice court obtained a certiorari to remove the case into the county court, and filed a petition, fiat, and bond. The papers were handed in by the justice, although no writ had issued. Plaintiff moved to dismiss proceedings because no writ of certiorari had been issued. Defendant moved for a second certiorari. Held, that the certiorari should be awarded on defendant's motion, since he was not bound to recognize any proceedings returned into court, except such as were returned in obedience to a certiorari.—Farrar v. Foote, 2 Stew. 442.

[b] (Ill. 1850) The filing of the petition for a writ of certiorari, with an order allowing the writ indorsed thereon and an appeal bond approved, will give the court jurisdiction without the issuance of the writ.—Gallimore v. Dazey, 12 Ill. (2 Peck) 143.

[c] (Iowa, 1843) By statute of 1840, cases before justices of the peace may be removed to the district courts by certiorari, on the "applicant's giving bond, with sureties, within 30 days after trial or judgment." Held, that the 30 days applied as well to the issuance of the writ as to the filing of the bond, and that a certiorari issued after that time, although the bond was filed before, must be dismissed.—Snyder v. Roper, 1 Morris, 229.

[d] (N. C. 1883) On petition for a writ of recordari and notice served on the adverse party, he should be allowed to be heard in opposition without having to wait until the writ was granted and returned.—Weaver v. Vein Mountain Min. Co., 89 N. C. 198.

[e] (Tenn. 1865) The removal of a cause from before a justice to a superior court by certiorari is effected when the writ is executed and returned, and is not postponed by a failure of the justice to file the papers in the case.—Uhles v. Nolen, 42 Tenn. (2 Cold.) 529.

[f] (Tex. 1884) Under Rev. St. arts. 301–307, it was the duty of the clerk, when the petition, fiat of the judge, and bond were filed with him, to issue the writ of certiorari returnable to the next term of the county court. Held, that it not being the duty, or even the privilege, of appellant to issue or cause to be issued the writ of certiorari, he cannot be deprived of his legal remedy, on account of the neglect or refusal of the officer to discharge his duty.—Lindheim v. Davis, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 108.

[g] (Tex. 1886) Where, after granting a certiorari by a county court to review the proceedings of a justice of the peace, the justice delivers a proper transcript and original papers to the clerk of the county court, the county court has jurisdiction of the cause, though the clerk had issued no writ of certiorari requiring the justice to do as he did.—Beauchamp v. Schiff, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 170.

[h] (Wis. 1853) The clerk has no authority to issue a writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace, until the proper officer has indorsed the allowance of it on the affidavit.—Talbot v. White, 1 Wis. 444.

[i] (Wis. 1883) A writ of certiorari apprising the justice that he is required to return the record in the cause is sufficient, though it contains no express mandate to that effect.—Witt v. Henge, 58 Wis. 244, 16 N. W. 609.

§ 791. Service of writ or notice thereof.

[a] (Ala. 1851) When defendant, against whom a judgment has been rendered by a justice of the peace, removes the cause by certiorari into the county court, a judgment of non pros. cannot be rendered against the plaintiff, unless he has been notified of the issuance of the certiorari.—Crownover v. Srygley, 19 Ala. 251.

[b] (Ala. 1851) Cases removed from justice's courts by certiorari are not embraced in the statute (Clay's Dig. p. 315, § 17), which secures to the appellee a right to notice of an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace.—Crownover v. Srygley, 19 Ala. 251.

[c] (Ark. 1854) Where a writ of certiorari was issued to a justice of the peace, and the sheriff, in serving the writ, read it over to him, and then returned the writ to the clerk, who had issued it, and it did not appear that the certiorari was served on the justice in any other manner, nor that the cause was ever certified into the circuit court by the justice, a judgment de novo for debt, damages, and costs in the circuit court is erroneous.—Foster v. Foster, 15 Ark. 399.

[d] (Ark. 1854) A writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace should be served upon him by delivery, and the cause should be certified by the justice into the court issuing the writ.—Foster v. Foster, 15 Ark. 399.

[e] (Ga. 1871) Section 3987, Rev. Code, requiring the plaintiff in certiorari to give the opposite party in interest written notice of the sanction of the writ, and time and place of hearing, at least 10 days before the sitting of the court to which it is returnable, applies to certioraris from the justices' courts, and is of force under the constitution of 1868.—Sparks v. Burgheim, 44 Ga. 167.

[f] (Ga. 1871) Where no notice to the opposite party has been given 10 days before the term to which a writ of certiorari is returnable, but it is agreed in writing between the parties that the decision of the court made in the certiorari shall determine certain other cases suing on the same points, this is a waiver of the notice and an agreement that the certiorari shall be decided upon its merits.—Scott v. Patrick, 44 Ga. 188.

[g] (Ga. 1889) Code, § 4059, requires that plaintiff in certiorari shall give written notice to the opposite party of the sanction of the writ, and the time and place of hearing, at least 10 days before the sitting of the court to which the same shall be returnable; and, in default of such notice, the writ shall be dismissed. Defendant sued out certiorari to the October term, 1888, but did not give the notice required by the statute until January, 1889. Held, that the certiorari was properly dismissed, though the magistrate was not served with the writ and petition in time to answer at the October term, and was given until the April term to answer.—Anderson v. Montgomery, 84 Ga. 50, 10 S. E. 590.

[h] (Ga. 1893) Plaintiff in certiorari sent defendant in certiorari a letter as follows: "I have been waiting for an answer from you as to whether you will agree to set aside the judgment in the Vignaux case. The certiorari has been granted, and returned to the J. P. court," etc. Held that the letter was not a sufficient compliance with Code, § 4059, requiring written notice to defendant, not only of the sanction of the writ, but also of the time and place of hearing.—Snyder v. Vignaux, 93 Ga. 217, 18 S. E. 435.

[i] (Minn. 1861) Under Comp. St. c. 59, § 130, requiring that a writ of certiorari issued to a justice of the peace must be served upon him within 10 days after its allowance, the fact that a writ was allowed March 2d, and not served until March 17th, is sufficient ground for its dismissal.—Bunday v. Dunbar, 5 Minn. 444 (Gil. 362).

[j] (N. Y. 1835) A certiorari to remove a justice's judgment is good, if it is served within 30 days after the rendition of judgment.—Brown v. Burdick, 18 Wend. 511.

[k] (Pa. 1886) Failure of plaintiff in error to comply with the court rules requiring notice in writing to defendant in error, and the filing of exceptions within 20 days after the term of court to which the proceedings are returnable, will authorize a judgment of non pros.—Teter v. Cook, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 171.

[l] (Tenn. 1834) Where a justice issues execution on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace of North Carolina, it is error to quash the same on certiorari and grant a supersedeas, with costs, without notice to the judgment creditor; and such judgment for costs, and a levy and sale thereunder, are void.—Hughes v. Bryan's Lessee, 14 Tenn. (6 Yerg.) 471.

[m] (Tex. 1852) Where a case is removed by the plaintiff by certiorari from a justice's court to the district court, in order to authorize a judgment against a defendant who fails to appear, he should be served with notice of the removal.—Houston v. Ward, 8 Tex. 124.

[n] (Wis. 1855) A writ of certiorari from the circuit court to a justice of the peace must be served, according to the provisions of the statute, within 10 days after its allowance; and, if this requirement be not fulfilled, the case will be dismissed, even though the justice makes his return to the writ according to the court's order.—Robson v. Nye, 4 Wis. 217.

§ 792. Supersedeas or stay of proceedings.

Liability of justice for proceeding to judgment after service of writ of certiorari, see ante, § 45.

[a] (Del. 1840) A certiorari is no supersedeas until served on the justice, and allowed by him.—Biggs v. Rickarts, 3 Har. 283.

[b] (Ga. 1853) If a certiorari is not delivered until after a sheriff has begun the enforcement of a process of execution, he may proceed.—City of Macon v. Shaw, 14 Ga. 162.

[c] (Mich. 1892) Where one attached certain logs before a justice, and after judgment the proceedings were removed by certiorari to the circuit court, suing out the certiorari and giving the statutory bond for the payment of any judgment that might be rendered in the circuit court dissolved the attachment.—Vanderhoof v. Prendergast, 94 Mich. 18, 53 N. W. 792.

[d] (N. J. 1876) After certiorari to remove the judgment and proceedings of a justice of the peace is presented to him, any further proceedings in the matter by him is a contempt of the court allowing the writ.—McQuade v. Emmons, 38 N. J. Law (9 Vroom) 397.

[e] (N. Y. 1812) A certiorari, allowed after execution begun to be executed by the constable, is no supersedeas to it.—Blanchard v. Myers, 9 Johns. 66.

[f] (Pa. 1892) As a recognizance is required by Act June 16, 1836, in order that a certiorari from the common pleas to a justice court shall act as a supersedeas, a bond will not have that effect.—Thomas v. Glasgow (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 711.

§ 793. In general.

Failure to file bond with justice as ground for refusal to make return on certiorari, see ante, § 789.

[a] (Ala. 1830) A defendant waives all informalities in the return of a justice to a writ of certiorari sued out by him, where he goes to trial thereon without objection.—McGrew v. Adams, 2 Stew. 502.

[b] (Ala. 1837) A transcript returned to a certiorari should not be received as such, unless certified by the justice and returned with the writ.—Perryman v. Burgster, 6 Port. 99.

[c] (Ark. 1861) Upon certiorari to a justice of the peace, the case is not properly before the circuit court for final adjudication until the certified transcript of the proceedings before the justice is returned.—Dicus v. Bright, 23 Ark. 107.

[d] (Minn. 1867) Under Comp. St. c. 59, §§ 127, 130, requiring a justice, on making answer to a certiorari, to return all the testimony and proceedings in the case, it will be presumed, where nothing appears to the contrary, that his return embodies all the testimony. A statement at the end of the report of testimony that "the above is all the testimony" is sufficient as a certificate, if one were necessary.—Payson v. Everett, 12 Minn. 216 (Gil. 137).

[e] (N. J. 1818) The return to a certiorari, directed to a justice of the peace, where the justice has left the state, may be by the party's taking from the docket of the justice a true copy of the record, annexing it to the writ, returning it to the court, and proving by competent evidence that it is a copy of the record.—Ball v. Van Houten, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 32.

[f] (Pa. 1886) It is the duty of the plaintiff in error, in a writ of certiorari, to have the proceedings of the justice returned to the court at the next term succeeding the issuance of the writ.—Teter v. Cook, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 171.

[g] (Wis. 1855) On a writ of certiorari from the circuit court to a justice of the peace, it is the duty of the justice to make his return of the testimony from his minutes and his best recollection.—Martin v. Beckwith, 4 Wis. 219.

[h] (Wis. 1883) In reviewing, on certiorari, the proceedings and judgment of a justice of the peace, the circuit court can ascertain what the justice's docket contains only by having before it a regularly certified copy of such docket; and a certificate of the justice that the paper transmitted "is a true transcript of my docket, and all the papers in the case," is not sufficient.—Witt v. Henge, 58 Wis. 244, 16 N. W. 609.

§ 794. Scope and contents of return or record.

[a] (Ga. 1884) On certiorari from a justice's court, the record must somewhere show that the certiorari bond was accepted and approved by the justice.—Hester v. Keller, 74 Ga. 369; Lowe v. Wallace, Id. 402.

[b] (Ga. 1892) The original papers in an action before a justice are not to be sent up in answer to a writ of certiorari.—Barfield v. McCombs, 89 Ga. 799, 15 S. E. 666.

[c] (Ga. 1892) Since Act Oct. 8, 1885, permits a justice's court to hold from day to day until its business is disposed of, a petition for certiorari which alleges that the regular court day was on the first Monday of the month, and that the judgment was rendered on the 12th, without alleging that the court did not sit from day to day, or that its business was disposed of before such 12th, or that for some reason it was not in legal session, does not call on the magistrate to show by his answer that his court was legally in session on that day.—Ballard Transfer Co. v. Clark, 91 Ga. 234, 18 S. E. 138.

[d] (Mich.) A justice of the peace may, in connection with his answer to a writ of certiorari, return the fact that security for costs was filed, and send up the undertaking.—(1880) McLean v. Isbell, 44 Mich. 129, 6 N. W. 210; (1881) Munroe v. Heintzman, 46 Mich. 12, 8 N. W. 571.

[e] (N. J. 1894) Notes of testimony sent up by a justice of the peace with his return to a writ of certiorari, but not in compliance with any rule in the cause, form no part of the record.—Lloyd v. Richman, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 385, 30 Atl. 432.

[f] (N. Y. 1808) On certiorari from the supreme court to a justice of the peace, the supreme court may order the justice to return the evidence.—Dodge v. Coddington, 3 Johns. 146.

[g] (Ohio, 1818) A justice's transcript on certiorari must state the cause of action, proceeding, and judgment.—Means v. Stephenson, Tapp. 283.

[h] (Pa. 1831) Under Act March 20, 1810, directing a justice on certiorari to certify the whole proceedings had before him by sending up the original precept and a copy of the judgment and execution, if any, he is not bound to send up the evidence given before him as a part of the record; but, if he does send up the evidence, it is an act of supererogation, and will not be allowed to prejudice either party.—Managers for Relief and Employment of Poor of Germantown v. Zinck, 1 Ashm. 64.

[i] (W. Va. 1892) When a writ of certiorari under the statute is awarded to a justice to review his judgment, the justice must certify and send the record as the writ finds it, and cannot, after the writ reaches him, make contemplated or intended certificates of facts and bills of exception parts of such record.—Bee v. Seaman, 36 W. Va. 381, 15 S. E. 173.

§ 795. Sufficiency of return or record.

[a] (Ala. 1847) The record or proceedings are returned, or at least considered as returned, in answer to a certiorari issued by a superior to an inferior tribunal, although the return itself states that a copy only had been sent up; and under the statute, where the justice, trying a forcible entry and detainer, sends up the original papers, with a transcript of the proceedings, all duly certified, the circuit court should require the appellant to assign errors, without awarding an alias certiorari to bring up copies of the original papers.—Bell v. Killcrease, 11 Ala. 685.

[b] (Ala. 1865) When an order is made under Code, § 3786, for the delivery of property to the claimant or owner, such order loses the properties of a state prosecution, and becomes, as between the parties, a civil proceeding, and may be so described on removal by certiorari into the city or circuit court.—Sullivan v. Robinson, 39 Ala. 613.

[c] (Ga. 1870) A memorandum of evidence annexed by a justice of the peace to the papers as his answer to a certiorari is insufficient, yet not a ground for dismissal of the certiorari. The justice should have been ordered to file an answer in conformity to the law.—Wells v. Flowers, 41 Ga. 327.

[d] (Ga. 1880) Where the return of a justice of the peace to a writ of certiorari adopts the statement of the counsel incorporated in his petition for the writ, and certifies the same as a fair representation of what transpired at the trial, the return is defective; but the writ will not be dismissed, as the remedy is by filing exceptions.—Star Glass Co. v. Longley, 64 Ga. 570.

[e] (N. J. 1820) The incorrectness or incompleteness of a justice's return is not a cause for quashing a certiorari.—State v. Kirby, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 835.

[f] (N. J. 1828) A statement in the transcript of the justice, that the counsel of the defendant "relied on the statute of limitations as a bar to the demand of the plaintiffs, and that no evidence of a promise or acknowledgment had been proved to have been made by the plaintiffs within six years," is insufficient to show that no evidence of a promise or acknowledgment was proved, or to prove error in the court below in refusing the defendant the benefit of the statute of limitations.—Dancer v. Patterson, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 255.

[g] (N. J. 1881) On certiorari to a justice of the peace, the transcript stated that the constable returned the writ of attachment: "Mch. 29, 1879, I return * * *. Whereupon I appointed Friday, Apr. 18, 1879, to hear and determine the cause." Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the justice, upon the return of the attachment, appointed a day for the hearing of the cause.—Wright v. Moran, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 49.

[h] (N. J. 1881) A justice certified in his transcript that on the day of trial of an attachment suit "it appeared in evidence that notices had been posted according to law." Held, that it sufficiently appeared that plaintiff had proved to the satisfaction of the justice that he had advertised the attachment in the manner prescribed by statute.—Wright v. Moran, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 49.

[i] (Pa. 1873) Where the transcript of a justice on certiorari states that the claim before him was for work and services for a certain amount, and that plaintiff was sworn, it is a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring the nature of the evidence on the trial to be set out.—French v. Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co., 1 Leg. Chron. 66.

[j] (Wis. 1854) It is not sufficient for the justice to return to a writ of certiorari that the defendant in certiorari, being satisfied that the judgment was erroneous, has discharged the same and paid costs. He must return all the proceedings had before himself.—Cecil v. Barber, 3 Wis. 297.

§ 796. Exceptions.

[a] (Ga. 1883) Code, §§ 4062–4066, requiring that exceptions to the answer of a justice to a writ of certiorari must be in writing specifying the defects complained of, and that notice must be given to the opposite party before the case is heard, do not require that the exceptions be verified.—Rumph v. Cleveland, 72 Ga. 189.

[b] (Ga. 1892) Exceptions to the answer of a magistrate to a writ of certiorari, founded on matters not referred to in the petition and not essential to the adjudication of the errors complained of, may be overruled or disregarded.—Barfield v. McCombs, 89 Ga. 799, 15 S. E. 666.

[c] (Pa.) The courts of common pleas have a right to make a rule requiring exceptions to be filed in a limited time in all certioraris to remove the judgments of justices; and, where the judgment of a justice is affirmed in the common pleas for want of such exceptions, the supreme court will affirm the proceedings of the common pleas.—(1808) Dubosq v. Guardians of the Poor, 1 Bin. 415; (1822) Snyder v. Bauchman, 8 Serg. & R. 336.

[d] (Pa. 1822) A rule requiring exceptions to be filed within a limited time in all certioraris to remove judgments of justices applies to certioraris to remove the proceedings before two justices and a jury, under the act to enable purchasers at sheriff's sales to obtain possession.—Snyder v. Bauchman, 8 Serg. & R. 336.

[e] (Pa. 1873) On certiorari from a justice of the peace, errors not excepted to will not be noticed, unless justice requires it.—Sauser v. Werntz, 1 Leg. Chron. 249.

[f] (Pa. 1880) Where exceptions on certiorari were filed September 8th, and the argument court met September 13th, the exceptions complied with the rule of court requiring them to be filed five days before the argument day.—Commonwealth v. Savery, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 179.

[g] (Pa. 1885) Under the rule of court exceptions must be filed on certiorari on or before the first day of the next term after that to which the proceedings are returned, and additional exceptions cannot be filed after that time.—Commonwealth v. Blessington, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 153.

§ 797. Amendment of return and further return.

Remand of record for amendment of judgment below, see post, §§ 826, 827.

[a] (Ala. 1837) Where a case is removed from a justice of the peace to the circuit court by certiorari, the transcript cannot be amended upon motion, on affidavit showing the neglect of the justice to record fully the matters occurring on trial.—Perryman v. Burgster, 6 Port. 99.

[b] (Ala. 1837) Where a justice has omitted to perfect a record, the correct practice is to move for a rule on him to make certain amendments shown to be material.—Perryman v. Burgster, 6 Port. 99.

[c] (Del. 1846) Whether the court will not order up the original record of a justice of the peace, when, upon a certiorari, it is alleged that the record sent up is not the true record, and whether the court has not power to punish the misconduct of the justice, quære.—Prickett v. Herring, 4 Har. 865.

[d] (Ga. 1869) When proceedings in a justice's court are brought up for review by certiorari, the justice's return to the writ cannot be amended after the cause has been heard in the court which issued the writ.—Wyatt v. Turner, 40 Ga. 36.

[e] (Ga. 1885) An amendment to the justice's answer to a certiorari, allowed on oral motion in open court, the justice being present, will not be stricken out afterwards.—Burruss v. Smith, 75 Ga. 710.

[f] (Ga. 1886) Where, on exceptions to the return of the justice to a writ of certiorari, he files an amended return, stating that he had sent up everything and given every fact he could remember at that time, there was no error in denying a motion, made long afterwards, when the case was called for trial, to send back the return for further perfecting.—Simpson v. McBride, 78 Ga. 297.

[g] (Iowa, 1857) The district court may require a justice by way of amended return to certify the costs before him.—Acres v. Hancock, 4 Iowa (4 Clarke) 568.

[h] (Mich. 1886) Where the return of a justice to certiorari is deemed insufficient on any error alleged, the district court has power to direct a further return.—Gordon v. Sibley, 59 Mich. 250, 26 N. W. 485.

[i] (N. J. 1806) Where the justice, in making return to the appellate court on certiorari, states in his transcript that plaintiff filed a plea and demand, but omits to send it up with the proceedings, the judgment will neither be reversed nor affirmed, where there is no appearance by defendant; but plaintiff must take a rule on the justice to send up the state of demand.—Farley v. Sergeant, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 141.

[j] (N. J. 1819) After a justice has made up his record, and delivered a copy to a party, upon which a certiorari is brought, he cannot alter the record and send up a different transcript.—Searing v. Lum, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 683.

[k] (N. J. 1820) Where the justice's return to a writ of certiorari is incorrect or incomplete, it may be amended and completed by a new return, ordered on application of plaintiff.—State v. Kirby, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 835.

[l] (N. Y. 1804) On affidavit of a clerical error in copying the record, a justice's return may be amended after errors assigned, argument, and judgment thereon.—Day v. Wilber, 2 Caines, 134.

[m] (N. Y. 1811) Where a justice, after having signed a return to a certiorari, made a supplementary return, and then made another return declaring the supplementary return incorrect, the court refused to receive the supplementary returns, and expressed their strong disapprobation of the practice of preparing returns to certioraris for justices without their request, especially by the party applying or his attorney.—Rudd v. Baker, 7 Johns. 548.

[n] (N. Y. 1823) Where, on the return to a writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace, the justice fails to state the evidence, because he had no minutes of the proceedings, and an affidavit is filed asking for an amended return as to certain evidence, the court will compel the justice to state to the best of his recollection and belief whether such evidence was given or not.—Schuyler v. Warner, 1 Cow. 59.

[o] (N. Y. 1823) The court will not entertain a motion to amend a justice's return to a certiorari, unless the affidavit on which it is founded and the return, or sworn or certified copies thereof, be furnished.—Cutler v. Gidney, 1 Cow. 571.

[p] (Ohio, 1833) On certiorari from the court of common pleas to a justice of the peace, the court cannot order the justice to certify up what was said and contended for by the parties before him, under a suggestion of diminution of the record, where such statements were not made a part of the record.—Reed v. De Wolf, Wright, 418.

[q] (Pa. 1867) On certiorari diminution of record must be alleged before the commencement of the argument.—Beyerly v. Hunger, 1 Woodw. Dec. 354.

[r] (Pa. 1879) Where, in copying the transcript returned to a certiorari, the justice inadvertently omitted part of the record, the court will allow the amended transcript to be filed.—Jervis v. McFarlan, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 137.

[s] (Pa. 1891) If, on certiorari to bring up the record of a justice, plaintiff in error has reason to believe that the transcript has been altered, and is not a true copy of the docket entry, his remedy is to rule the justice to produce his docket for inspection.—Davenport v. Mahon (Com. Pl.) 6 Kulp, 350.

[t] (Tex. 1894) Where, after appeal from a justice to the county court, the certificate of the justice to his transcript, sent up in answer to a certiorari issued by the county court, is insufficient as to the bill of costs, the county court should grant an application of appellant for another certiorari to the justice, and not dismiss the appeal for want of sufficient certificate.—Shepard v. Duke (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 567.

[u] (Wis. 1854) The county court has power to compel a justice of the peace to make a full and complete return to a writ of certiorari, and has no right to proceed to judgment until a return is made, sufficient to give jurisdiction of the merits of the case.—Cecil v. Barber, 3 Wis. 207.

§ 798. Conclusiveness of return or record.

[a] (Ark. 1884) Under Gantt's Dig. §§ 1196, 1197, the return of a justice of the peace to a certiorari is not conclusive.—Hickey v. Matthews, 43 Ark. 341.

[b] (Del. 1840) On certiorari, proof is allowed, against the record, of a fact which the justice is bound, but refuses, to enter on his record, as that a party appeared, or that the cause was adjourned to another day; and proof in such case is taken by depositions.—Calaway v. Calaway, 3 Har. 84.

[c] (Del. 1845) On a certiorari to a justice's judgment by confession, the court refused to allow the defendant to contradict the record by denying the confession of judgment.—Runyan v. Dickenson, 4 Har. 243.

[d] (Del. 1848) If the justice has jurisdiction of a cause of action and of the parties, his record as to the proceedings in the cause is conclusive on certiorari.—Betts v. Warren, 5 Har. 4.

[e] (Del. 1856) A judgment by default against an administrator in an action on a proved account before a justice of the peace will not be set aside on certiorari, on the ground that it does not appear that the court heard the proofs and allegations of the plaintiff, when the record states that judgment was given after the justice had examined the plaintiff's account.—Hudson's Adm'r v. Messick, 1 Houst. 275.

[f] (La. 1891) The allegations of the relator to obtain the writ cannot prevail against the minutes of the proceedings as certified to by the respondent justice of the peace, particularly in the absence of any proof of any attempt made to correct them.—State ex rel. Houston

Cent., A. & N. R. Co. v. Riley, 43 La. Ann. 177, 8 South. 598.

[g] (Mich. 1874) Where the justice, in his return to a writ of certiorari to bring up for review his proceedings in attachment suits, states that the officer's return of service of the attachment was not in fact made until the return day, the fact that such return of service was not dated, or that the justice had erroneously entered in his docket a minute that the writ was returned on a different day, will be disregarded.—Nicolls v. Lawrence, 30 Mich. 395.

[h] (Mich. 1886) The record of a justice's judgment in his docket must control, and it cannot be contradicted by his return to a certiorari.—Weaver v. Lammon, 62 Mich. 366, 28 N. W. 905.

[i] (Mich. 1886) When the justice's return to a certiorari is as to facts and occurrences not required by the statute to be entered on the docket, the return must be taken as true.—Weaver v. Lammon, 62 Mich. 366, 28 N. W. 905.

[j] (N. J. 1894) A return of a justice to a writ of certiorari, that a certain motion was not made before him, cannot be contradicted by affidavits.—Meirs v. Bussom, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 383, 30 Atl. 433.

[k] (N. Y. 1847) The return of a justice of the peace to a certiorari, stating the fact of his relationship to one of the parties to the suit before him, sufficiently establishes the fact for the purposes of the hearing of the certiorari before the common pleas, though the matter was not proved or admitted, or even objected to, on the trial.—Post v. Black, 5 Denio, 66.

[l] (N. Y. 1865) The relator in a certiorari to review proceedings in a justice's court is concluded by the return of the justice. If the facts are not correctly stated, he should apply for a further return. He cannot correct it by affidavit or assignment of errors.—People v. Powers, 19 Abb. Prac. 99.

[m] (Pa. 1866) On certiorari, all the proceedings of the magistrate as they appear on the record are to be taken as verity.—Saul v. Geist, 1 Woodw. Dec. 306.

[o] (Pa. 1885) Where a criminal prosecution has been brought before an alderman, which he has changed to a civil action without service of summons or notice to defendant, and he alters his transcript, so as to make it appear that the civil action was commenced by a summons regularly served, it is a falsification of the record, and parol evidence is admissible to prove the facts.—Commonwealth v. Blessington, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 153.

[p] (Pa. 1892) On certiorari to a judgment of a justice, facts contradictory of the record cannot be considered.—Haggerty v. Wurzburger (Com. Pl.) 6 Kulp, 416.

[r] (Pa. 1895) Parol evidence is inadmissible, on certiorari, to contradict or vary the docket of a justice of the peace as to the cause of action tried before him.—Evans v. Brobst (Com. Pl.) 11 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 133, 1 Lack. Leg. N. 300, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 550, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 30.

[s] (Wis. 1881) On certiorari the record of a judgment in a justice's court, showing that the justice had jurisdiction, cannot be impeached by contrary statements made by him in his return.—Cassidy v. Millerick, 52 Wis. 379, 9 N. W. 165.

§ 799. Questions presented for review.

[a] (Ark. 1856) Where a case commenced before a justice of the peace is brought into the circuit court on certiorari, the court can only determine, upon inspection of the proceedings and judgment of the magistrate, whether they were valid or void, and quash or affirm.—Hill v. Steel, 17 Ark. 440.

[b] (Ark. 1860) On certiorari from a justice's court, the judgment and proceedings of the justice should be quashed or affirmed from what appears upon the papers, not upon admissions of parties in the higher court.—Miller v. McCullough, 21 Ark. 426.

[c] (Ark. 1861) Upon certiorari to a justice of the peace, matters dehors the transcript will not be considered in passing upon the validity of his judgment.—Dicus v. Bright, 23 Ark. 107.

[d] (Ga. 1879) The answer of a justice of the peace to a certiorari, when untraversed, will be the only thing considered at the hearing, in the absence of a motion for a fuller return.—Warren v. Wilson, 63 Ga. 372.

[e] (Ga. 1886) Interrogatories appended to the petition for certiorari, but not identified by the justice in whose court the case was tried, should not be considered by the superior court.—Akridge v. Watertown Steam Engine Co., 77 Ga. 50.

[f] (Ga. 1886) The superior court is governed by the return of the justice to the writ of certiorari, and not by the petition of a party.—Simpson v. McBride, 78 Ga. 297.

[g] (Ga. 1888) When complaint is made that the magistrate erred in admitting testimony over certain specified objections, but the answer of the magistrate, which is neither excepted to nor traversed, fails to disclose on what ground the testimony was objected to, or for what reason the same was ruled in, the alleged error cannot be considered.—Gartrell v. Linn, 79 Ga. 700, 4 S. E. 918.

[h] (Mich. 1871) Where neither the affidavit upon which a writ of certiorari is issued nor the return of the justice of the peace, which purports to give all the evidence in the case, shows that any objection was taken to any of the evidence introduced on the trial, or to any process, pleading, or proceeding before the justice, or that any question of law was raised on the trial, and the only error complained of is that the testimony given on the trial demanded a different verdict from the one rendered, the trial having been by a jury, and the testimony being such as to warrant the jury in finding the verdict, no question of law is presented for the circuit court to pass upon.—McGraw v. Schwab, 23 Mich. 13.

[i] (Mich. 1882) Errors in proceedings removed on certiorari from before a justice cannot be made out if they do not appear by the justice's return. Comp. Laws, § 5568.—Hobson v. People, 48 Mich. 27, 11 N. W. 771.

[j] (Minn. 1858) The district court, in its affirmance or reversal of the judgment, should be guided by what appears on the return.—Gervais v. Powers, 1 Minn. 45 (Gil. 30).

[k] (Minn. 1858) On certiorari to a justice court, the district court is confined to the facts found in the return of the magistrate, and cannot resort to facts stated in the affidavit to obtain the writ.—Taylor v. Bissell, 1 Minn. 225 (Gil. 186).

[l] (Pa. 1790) The court must take the case as stated on the justice's return to the certiorari, without going into the merits of the original question.—Overseers of Coventry v. Cummings, 2 Dall. 114, 1 L. Ed. 312.

[m] (Pa. 1846) Unless it appears on the face of the proceedings that the justice proceeded to render judgment on plaintiff's own oath, it must be distinctly averred by way of exception and shown by proof, or it will not be considered on certiorari.—Wilson v. Wilson, 3 Clark, 419.

[n] (Pa. 1882) Where there are no material errors on the face of the record, plaintiff in certiorari will not be permitted to go behind it in order to show what was the evidence on which the justice gave judgment.—Cartright v. Rooney, 1 Kulp, 493.

[o] (Pa. 1883) Where a justice has jurisdiction, and there is no evidence of corruption, or that he has refused to hear testimony, the court, on certiorari, will not inquire how he made up his record, and will not look beyond the transcript.—Schoendman v. Glanz, 2 Lanc. Law Rev. 358.

[p] (Pa. 1884) On certiorari from an alderman, the court cannot take judicial notice of an ordinance of the city, unless the transcript of the alderman sets forth such ordinance, so as to leave no doubt that the suit was brought under it.—City of Lancaster v. Hirsh, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 209.

[q] (Pa. 1893) A certiorari must be determined on the record as returned by the justice, though the latter is contradictory of a transcript furnished defendant by the justice before the writ issued.—Moore v. Messersmith (Com. Pl.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 575, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 483.

[r] (Pa. 1896) Matters of defense alleged in the way of exceptions to the sufficiency of the record of a justice of the peace will not be considered on certiorari.—Missemer v. Trout (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 317.

[s] (Wis. 1885) A writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace does not bring up the evidence, but only the record, and that only for the purpose of enabling the circuit court to determine whether the justice had jurisdiction to render the judgment complained of. The circuit court cannot render judgment on the merits.—Smith v. Bahr, 62 Wis. 244, 22 N. W. 438; Paulsen v. Ingersoll, 62 Wis. 312, 22 N. W. 477.

—— TIME FOR MOTION TO DISMISS, § 803.
—— HEARING ON MOTION TO DISMISS, § 804.
JUDGMENT ON DISMISSAL, § 805.
—— EFFECT OF DISMISSAL, § 806.

§ 800. Amendment of process or pleading.

[a] (Mich. 1882) On certiorari to a justice, defects of pleading cannot be remedied; and, as a reversal by defendant would cut off plaintiff's entire claim and remedy, he who resorts to certiorari must see that he stands on a clear and unquestionable foundation.—Ritter v. Daniels, 47 Mich. 617, 11 N. W. 409.

[b] (N. Y. 1818) Under a repealed statute, the plaintiff might assign, as error in fact, such matter as the justice, whose proceedings were removed, could not return, because they did not come under his observation.—Harvey v. Rickett, 15 Johns. 87.

[c] (Pa. 1882) On certiorari to a justice of the peace, the court has no authority to permit the constable to amend his return to the summons.—Hildreth v. Reilly, 2 Kulp, 270.

[d] (Tex. 1864) The office of a writ of certiorari is simply to bring up to the district court from the justice's court the case tried by the justice, that it may be tried de novo, and it is not proper to connect the suit before the justice with any other cause of action not within his jurisdiction; and, where the petition seeks to do this, the district court may dismiss the suit, so far as the new cause of action, not within the jurisdiction of the justice, is set up, and proceed to hear and determine the case properly brought before it by the certiorari.—Hill v. Faison, 27 Tex. 428.

[e] (Tex. 1893) Under Rev. St. art. 316, where causes are brought from the justice's court to the county court by writ of certiorari, either party may plead any new matter in the latter court which was not presented in the former.—Bergstrom v. Bruns, 24 S. W. 1098.

§ 801. Assignment of errors.

[a] (N. C. 1842) Where a recordari, in the nature of a writ of error or writ of false judgment, has been sued out, according to the practice, and the plaint returned, the petitioner or plaintiff in the writ ought to assign his errors.—Leatherwood v. Moody, 25 N. C. (3 Ired.) 129.

[b] (N. C. 1842) Where no error is assigned, or none appears, the proper course is to dismiss the recordari, and award a procedendo.—Leatherwood v. Moody, 25 N. C. (3 Ired.) 129.

[c] (N. C. 1871) When the writ of recordari is used as a writ of false judgment, the plaintiff in the writ must, upon the return thereof certifying the proceedings before the justice of the peace, assign his errors, and then the proceedings will be the same as in other writs of error.—Swain v. Smith, 65 N. C. 211.

§ 802. Quashing or dismissal of writ.

Failure to give bond on certiorari as ground for dismissal of writ, see ante, § 789.

—— to serve or give notice of writ of certiorari as ground for dismissal, see ante, § 791.

Insufficiency of justice's return on certiorari as ground for dismissal, see ante, § 795.

Ordering new trial on certiorari as refusal to dismiss the writ, see post, § 822.

Variance between bond on certiorari and transcript as ground for dismissal, see ante, § 789.

[a] (Iowa, 1851) Where the grounds of error alleged in the affidavit for a certiorari are palpably insufficient, and do not show error before the justice, the writ may be dismissed on motion before the hearing of the case.—Elliott v. Mitchell, 3 G. Greene, 237.

[b] (Miss. 1838) A certiorari improperly awarded to a justice's court may be dismissed by the circuit court.—Leech v. Irwing, 3 Miss. (2 How.) 887.

[c] (Miss. 1891) A defeated litigant in the justice court tendered an appeal bond to the justice, who promised to approve it if all right. After the time for appeal had elapsed, the litigant learned that the justice had disapproved the bond. A writ of certiorari was issued from the circuit court, but the record on appeal failed to show that it was served, or that the papers were produced. Held, that it was error to dismiss the case, since process should have been issued to produce the original papers, and the cause delayed to await the return thereof.—Robertson v. Mhoon, 68 Miss. 712, 9 South. 887.

[d] (N. M. 1895) After a case has been taken to the district court on certiorari from a justice of the peace, the contention that the writ should be dismissed because the account sued on did not contain the full first name of plaintiff cannot be raised there for the first time by motion to dismiss, but should be, according to the practice prescribed for the district court, by plea.—Lockhart v. Woollacott, 8 N. M. 21, 41 Pac. 536.

[e] (Tex. 1851) If no merits are shown in the petition, if the writ has not been taken out and returned in time, or if the conditions on which it was granted have not been complied with, such as giving bond, in any of these cases, it ought to be dismissed.—O'Brien v. Dunn, 5 Tex. 570.

[f] (Tex. 1852) Where a certiorari is improvidently issued, and the party who succeeded in the justice's court moves to dismiss on that ground, and his motion is overruled, he may abandon the case, and rely upon having a dismissal of the certiorari on appeal or writ of error.—Perdew v. Steadham, 8 Tex. 274; Wood v. Rich, 8 Tex. 280.

[g] (Tex. 1864) Where it appeared by the transcript from a justice's court that the suit was dismissed before the petition for certiorari was filed, it was held that a motion to dismiss the petition and certiorari should have been sustained.—Darby v. Davidson, 27 Tex. 432.

[h] (Tex. 1887) A certiorari cannot be dismissed for a failure of the justice who tried the case to file the original papers, in view of Rev. St. art. 311, merely specifying insufficiency of affidavit or bond as causes of dismissal.—Peck v. Reed, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 265.

[i] (Wis. 1871) On a certiorari to a justice's court, returnable to the circuit, the latter should affirm or reverse the judgment, and not dismiss the writ.—Owens v. State, 27 Wis. 456.

§ 803. —— Time for motion to dismiss.

[a] (Ala. 1833) A certiorari, brought where a writ of error is the proper remedy, will not be quashed, if the motion therefor be made after a delay of two terms. The record being before the court, and a certiorari being substantially a writ of error, the court will proceed thereon, unless the exception be taken in time.—Wheelock v. Wright, 4 Stew. & P. 163.

[b] (Ala. 1874) Where the record does not show that plaintiff had five days' written notice of the certiorari (Rev. Code, § 2778), a case commenced in a justice's court and removed by defendant by certiorari into the circuit court, should not be dismissed at the first term for want of prosecution, but should be continued until the next term, in order that the proper notice may be given.—Kane v. Gammell, 50 Ala. 492.

[c] (Mo. 1834) Justices of the peace have the first day of the term of the circuit court to make return to a certiorari. A motion to dismiss on the first day of the term for want of a return is therefore premature.—Hill v. Young, 3 Mo. 337.

[d] (Tenn. 1847) A motion to dismiss a writ of certiorari must be made at the earliest opportunity, and it comes too late after a trial on the merits.—Chappell v. Jones, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 107.

[e] (Tenn. 1858) A motion to dismiss comes too late, if made with the interval of one term after the one at which the petition was presented.—Nance v. Hicks, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 624.

[f] (Tenn. 1865) If a certiorari has been improperly obtained, or upon an insufficient ground, the party against whom it is issued must, at the return term, or, at least, at the first term after the service of the supersedeas, avail himself of the objection by rule or motion to dismiss, and his failure to do so will preclude him from objecting afterwards to such insufficiency in the petition.—Uhles v. Nolen, 42 Tenn. (2 Cold.) 529.

[g] (Tex.) A motion to dismiss a certiorari to bring a cause from a justice's court to the district court must be made at the first term.—(1853) Steinlein v. Dial, 10 Tex. 268; (1854) Mowery v. Lawson, 12 Tex. 31; (1855) Holt v. McCasky, 14 Tex. 229; (1887) Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanton, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 347.

[h] (Tex. 1886) A party whose exceptions to a certiorari are overruled is not entitled at a subsequent term to file a motion to dismiss the certiorari.—Park v. Sanger, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 196.

[i] (Tex. 1887) A motion to dismiss a certiorari, made after the first term of the court to which the certiorari is returnable, will not be entertained (Rev. St. art. 311), though the grounds specified are sufficient.—Peck v. Reed, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 265.

[j] (Tex. 1890) Where the record only shows that at the return term of a certiorari, by which a cause was removed from the justice to the county court, appellee moved to dismiss the certiorari, which motion was overruled "without prejudice," and that at the next term appellee renewed his motion to dismiss, which was sustained against appellant's objection that it came too late, the judgment of dismissal must be reversed, since the records show that the motion was made too late.—Brown v. Sphor (App.) 16 S. W. 868.

§ 804. —— Hearing on motion to dismiss.

[a] (Tenn. 1853) The whole proceedings of the magistrate, as presented in a case properly brought up by certiorari, are before the court when a motion is made to dismiss.—Edde v. Cowan, 33 Tenn. (1 Sneed) 290.

[b] (Tenn. 1858) Upon a motion to dismiss a petition for writs of certiorari and supersedeas, counter affidavits controverting the statement of the petition are not admissible.—Nance v. Hicks, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 624.

[c] (Tenn. 1871) On the hearing of a motion to dismiss a petition for writs of certiorari and supersedeas against a justice's execution, the papers of the justice may be read to negative the allegations of the petition.—McCorkle v. Brooks, 53 Tenn. (6 Heisk.) 601.

[d] (Tex.) On motion to dismiss a certiorari to a justice of the peace, the court may look to the transcript brought up from the justice's court to aid in determining upon the motion.—(1857) Crawford v. Crain, 19 Tex. 145; (1858) Jones v. Nold, 22 Tex. 379; (1864) Darby v. Davidson, 27 Tex. 432.

[e] (Tex. 1868) In determining the sufficiency of a petition for certiorari to a justice's court on a motion to dismiss, it is not proper to regard the facts as stated by the justice in his transcript, in opposition to those set forth and sworn to in the petition.—Hearn v. Foster, 21 Tex. 401.

§ 805. Judgment on dismissal.

[a] (Tenn. 1852) Where a petition for certiorari to have execution issued by a justice declared unauthorized is dismissed, a judgment for costs and awarding a procedendo to the justice should be entered, and not a judgment for the original debt, since the validity of the former judgment has not been affected by the certiorari.—Jones v. Williams, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 105.

[b] (Tenn. 1858) On dismissal of a petition for certiorari and supersedeas, wherein the judgment of the justice is complained of, the proper judgment under Code, § 3137, is for the plaintiff against the defendant and his surety to the prosecution bond to the amount of the justice's judgment, with interest at 12½ per cent. from its date, and costs.—Allen v. Wood, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 438.

[c] (Tenn. 1858) It makes no difference that the petition states that the defendant "appealed from the justice's judgment within the two days, and gave bond according to law, as he is advised."—Allen v. Wood, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 438.

[d] (Tenn. 1859) On dismissing a petition for a writ of supersedeas, the proper practice under Code, §§ 3124, 3138, is to render judgment in the higher court for the amount of the justice's judgment, with interest at 12½ per cent. per annum, against the principal and sureties in the certiorari bond.—Lownes v. Hunter, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 343.

[e] (Tex. 1853) A district court has no right, on dismissing a certiorari for insufficiency in the petition, to affirm the judgment of the justice.—Ahrens v. Giesecke, 9 Tex. 432.

[f] (Tex. 1854) The court below cannot, after dismissing a petition for a certiorari to a justice's court, render a judgment against the petitioner and his sureties for the amount of the judgment of the justice, without a hearing.—Ward v. McRimmond, 12 Tex. 314.

§ 806. —— Effect of dismissal.

[a] The quashing or dismissal of a writ of certiorari in the district court, upon motion of an appellee, after judgment below, is equivalent to a judgment that the writ ought never to have been granted, and revives the judgment of the court below.

—(Miss. 1847) Standifer v. Bush, 16 Miss. (8 Smedes & M.) 383;
(Tex. 1859) Miller v. Holtz, 23 Tex. 138.

[b] (Ga. 1878) A certiorari from a justice is a suit which, if dismissed, may be renewed within six months after the dismissal.—Smith v. Bryan, 60 Ga. 628.

[c] (Tenn. 1845) Where a joint judgment against several defendants before a justice is taken up by certiorari, which is dismissed as to all but one, plaintiff may prosecute the claim against that one in the appellate court, unless the judgment is satisfied by the other defendants.—Osborne v. Poe, 25 Tenn. (6 Humph.) 111.

[d] (Tex. 1859) The dismissal of a certiorari by a district court, because of failure on the part of a plaintiff to comply with a rule of such court ordering him to give security for costs, is not such a dismissal as revives the judgment of the court below or authorizes the issuance of execution on that judgment.—Miller v. Holtz, 23 Tex. 138.

[e] (Tex. 1859) Where the writ is dismissed on motion, because of failure to prosecute on the part of the plaintiff, such dismissal does not revive a judgment rendered in the plaintiff's favor in the justice's court.—Miller v. Holtz, 23 Tex. 138.

[a] (Ala. 1891) The issuance of execution against sureties on a forfeited claim bond by a justice of the peace not operating as a judgment, under Code, § 3405, providing that cases brought to the circuit court by certiorari from justices' judgments must be tried de novo, such action of the justice was properly ignored.—Weedon v. Clark, 94 Ala. 505, 10 South. 307.

[b] (Ga. 1891) On writ of error from an order of the superior court dismissing certiorari from a justice of the peace, where it does not appear what ground of error, if any, was set forth in the petition for certiorari, the judgment must be affirmed, since Code, § 4065, declares that no ground of error shall be insisted upon on certiorari which is not distinctly set forth in the petition therefor.—Richards v. Little, 88 Ga. 176, 14 S. E. 207.

[c] (Mich. 1881) Objections not going to the merits will be disregarded on certiorari.—Hart v. Port Huron Tp., 46 Mich. 428, 9 N. W. 481.

[d] (Mich. 1883) On review of a justice's judgment on certiorari, the circuit court is confined to the ground of error set up in the affidavit for the writ of certiorari.—Blood v. Westbrook, 50 Mich. 443, 15 N. W. 544.

[e] (Mich. 1883) Review by certiorari of a judgment of a circuit court commissioner in summary proceedings being, by the provision of Comp. Laws, § 6721, governed by the rules applicable to certiorari to a justice of the peace, substantial justice, irrespective of mere form, should be done.—Williams v. Wilkinson, 51 Mich. 155, 16 N. W. 319.

[f] (N. Y. 1809) The supreme court does not require the same technical formality and precision in the pleadings in proceedings before justices of the peace as in that court, but will determine on them, when brought up by certiorari, according to the merits of the case.—Picket v. Weaver, 5 Johns. 122.

[g] (Pa.) Where substantial and fatal errors appear on the face of proceedings in certiorari from a justice of the peace, the court will consider them, though not specially assigned in the exceptions.—(1862) Hunter v. Weidner, 1 Woodw. Dec. 6; (1872) Paine v. Godshall, 29 Leg. Int. 12; (1883) Fraelich v. Mowrer, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 49.

[h] (Wis. 1851) Though St. c. 88, § 223, provides that the county court, on appeal from the judgment of a justice, shall give judgment as the right of that matter may appear, without regard to technical errors or defects not affecting the merits, the court, on certiorari, cannot disregard a misjoinder of causes of action.—Hibbard v. Bell, 3 Chand. 206, 3 Pin. 190.

[i] (Wis. 1855) On a writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace, the court is to give judgment on the return of the justice as the right may appear.—Martin v. Beckwith, 4 Wis. 219.

§ 808. Mode of review in general.

[a] (Ind. 1854) Under Rev. St. 1843, when a judgment of a justice of the peace was brought to the supreme court by certiorari, the first duty of the court was to examine the cause as a court of error, and, if no defects appeared from the record in the justice's proceeding, to affirm the judgment, and that decision was to be certified to the justice, or judgment to be rendered for the amount of the justice's judgment and the costs taxed by him; but, if defects affecting the merits appeared in such record, then the court was to reverse the judgment, and try the cause on the merits, as in cases of appeal from such judgments.—Searl v. Richey, 5 Ind. 199.

[b] (Miss. 1843) In proceedings originating before a magistrate, and carried to the circuit court by certiorari, a judgment upon a certificate of a balance due the defendant, without a sci. fa., is correct; aliter, in an original suit.—Hurd v. Tombes, 8 Miss. (7 How.) 229.

[c] (Miss. 1891) Where, on certiorari to a justice because of his retention of and failure to approve an appeal bond, the papers are ordered sent up to the circuit court, on production of the papers it should have taken evidence as to the retention of the appeal bond and as to the solvency thereof, and, if satisfied that such retention was illegal and the bond good, should have tried the case on its merits.—Robertson v. Mhoon, 68 Miss. 712, 9 South. 887.

[d] (Pa. 1840) The common pleas have no power to direct an issue to try disputed facts arising on certiorari to a judgment of a justice of the peace.—Pool v. Morgan, 10 Watts, 53.

[e] (W. Va. 1889) Code, c. 110, § 3, provides that, upon the hearing of a writ of certiorari, the circuit court shall review the judgment, order, or proceedings of the inferior tribunal to which the writ was issued upon the merits, determine all questions arising on the law and evidence, and render such judgment upon the whole matter as law and justice may require. Held, that where a cause is so removed from a justice to the circuit court after verdict and judgment, the latter court will review the judgment upon the merits, and may direct a new trial before a jury, unless neither party requires a jury.—Natural Gas Co. v. Healy, 33 W. Va. 102, 10 S. E. 56.

[f] (W. Va. 1892) Under the statute, the writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace lies after judgment of the justice; and upon the hearing the circuit court will review such judgment upon the merits, determining all questions arising on the law and the evidence, and render such judgment or make such order upon the whole matter as law and justice may require; and it may, in a proper case, set the verdict of the jury aside, and award a new trial, in which case the case is to be retained in the circuit court, and disposed of as if originally brought therein.—Bee v. Seaman, 36 W. Va. 381, 15 S. E. 173.

[g] (W. Va. 1893) Where a record and judgment of a justice is removed and returned to the circuit court on writ of certiorari issued under Code 1891, c. 110, it is the duty of the clerk, upon receiving it, to docket the case as other cases are docketed, and on the hearing the circuit court should review such judgment upon the merits, and render such judgment or make such order upon the whole matter as law and justice may require; and it is error to have the case tried by a jury without having first reviewed such judgment.—Arnold v. Lewis County Ct., 38 W. Va. 142, 18 S. E. 476.

Parol evidence on certiorari to contradict return or record, see ante, § 798.

[a] (Pa. 1825) On certiorari, where it does not appear whether the judgment is rendered against defendant in his private or official capacity as a justice of the peace, and he assigns for error an omission of the notice allowed by law to justices of the peace before a suit is begun, parol evidence may be introduced.—Fitzsimmons v. Evans, 1 Ashm. 52, note.

[b] (Pa. 1825) On certiorari, where there is reason to infer partiality or corrupt practice on the part of the justice in rendering judgment, as when he refuses to hear material testimony, parol evidence is admissible to show that fact.—Worstall v. Meadowcroft, 1 Ashm. 52, note.

[c] (Pa. 1831) The common pleas, in order to maintain the purity of the administration of justice, will examine witnesses, on certiorari to a justice of the peace, in order to discover and prevent fraud, corruption, partiality, or excess of jurisdiction.—Dumber v. Jones, 1 Ashm. 215; Knight v. Parry, 1 Ashm. 221.

[cc] (Pa. 1831) Generally, however, objections are confined to the record, and cannot be supported or contradicted by extraneous evidence.—Curran v. Atkinson, 1 Ashm. 51; Dumber v. Jones, Id. 215.

[d] (Pa. 1865) On certiorari to a justice of the peace, the court is not to look beyond the transcript. Parol evidence of what took place before the magistrate is not admissible, except to establish his want of jurisdiction, his corruption, his refusal to hear testimony, or the fact of his having given judgment on the oath of the party alone.—Road Com'rs v. Fickinger, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 48.

[e] (Pa. 1869) The court, on certiorari to a justice, will not hear parol evidence as to the merits of the case, but only of what occurred before him.—Fisher v. Nyce, 60 Pa. (10 P. F. Smith) 107.

[f] (Pa. 1870) Where a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of a party defendant in an action before him, parol evidence may be introduced on certiorari to show such want of jurisdiction.—Shultz v. Sweigart, 2 Lanc. Bar, No. 1, p. 1.

[g] (Pa. 1873) On certiorari from a justice, the fact that the amount of the claim of plaintiff exceeded the jurisdiction of the justice may be shown, either by the record or parol testimony.—Carey v. Branch No. 2, 1 Leg. Chron. 170.

[h] (Pa. 1874) Where the jurisdiction of a justice is attacked on certiorari, evidence may be given aliunde to determine the jurisdiction.—Torbert v. Yocum, 2 Leg. Chron. 294.

[i] (Pa. 1880) Parol evidence is sometimes received on hearing of certiorari to show what took place before the justice, and his conduct.—Commonwealth v. King, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 203.

[j] (Pa. 1881) Where there is reason to infer partiality or corrupt practice on the part of a justice, parol evidence will be heard on certiorari to determine the rights of the parties, especially where the judgment is for such an amount that defendant cannot appeal.—Dunfee v. Vargason, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 207.

[k] (Pa.) On certiorari from a justice of the peace, parol evidence is admissible to show that defendant was a married woman, and that the justice, therefore, had no jurisdiction.—(1883) Graham v. James, 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. 279. CONTRA, see (1888) Parkes v. Diehm, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 146.

[l] (Pa. 1885) On certiorari from a justice of the peace, parol evidence may be introduced to show that the justice had no jurisdiction of the action.—Light v. Ringler, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 156.

[m] (Pa. 1886) Where a disqualifying relationship of the justice to one of the parties does not appear of record, it may be proved by oral evidence on certiorari.—Spidle v. Robison, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 642.

[n] (Pa. 1888) On certiorari to a judgment of a justice of the peace, parol testimony is not admissible to show that the defendant was a married woman, and that therefore the record did not affirmatively show her liability, so as to render the judgment void.—Myers v. Stauffer, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 657.

[o] (Pa. 1888) On certiorari to the judgment of a justice of the peace, parol evidence is admissible to show that the debtor's claim of exemption was made in time.—Bloom v. Alexander, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 553.

[p] (Pa. 1894) On certiorari to a justice, plaintiff in error can show by parol that the justice had once before given judgment against him on the same cause of action.—Beynon v. Peterson (Com. Pl.) 7 Kulp, 259.

[q] (Pa. 1894) On certiorari before the court of common pleas, parol evidence is admissible to show want of jurisdiction or fraud of the justice.—Fronheiser v. Werner (Com. Pl.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 522.

[r] (Pa. 1895) Parol evidence is admissible to show that the justice of the peace who tried the case below had previously acted as agent for collection of the claim on which the action was brought, and hence had no jurisdiction to enter judgment.—Johnson v. Green (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 77.

§ 810. —— Admission of affidavits and depositions.

[a] (Ill. 1889) A garnishee, in an appeal by certiorari from the judgment of a justice of the peace, alleged that he was never served with the original writ of attachment. Held, that in the absence of an original attachment writ, or a showing that it is lost, affidavits to show that it was served are not admissible.—Stroner v. Prokop, 30 Ill. App. 56.

[b] (N. J. 1833) Transactions taking place between one of the parties and the justice trying the cause, out of court, if material and proper to be inquired into, must be proven before the supreme court by affidavit on certiorari.—Olcott v. Jenkins, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 80.

[c] (N. J. 1895) On certiorari to review the decision of a justice of the peace on a motion to quash an attachment, a rule may be granted to take affidavits of the facts on which the justice decided the case.—Stafford v. Mills, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 570, 31 Atl. 1023.

[d] (N. Y. 1823) Where, on certiorari, the justice dies before he makes return, the court will hear the case on affidavits.—Seymour v. Webster, 1 Cow. 168.

[e] (Pa.) On certiorari, depositions may be taken to show that the claim made before the justice was not within his jurisdiction.—(1863) Rhoads v. Wesner, 1 Woodw. Dec. 79; (1863) Goodman v. Moyer, 1 Woodw. Dec. 92; (1887) Cummins v. Leopard, 4 Kulp, 430.

[g] (Pa. 1877) On certiorari to a magistrate's court, matters not shown by the record should be brought before the court by depositions, and not by affidavits.—Jones v. Pettit, 4 Wkly. Notes Cas. 14.

[h] (Pa. 1884) On certiorari from an alderman, defendant cannot prove by deposition that the summons was issued in the name of one person, and that afterwards the record was changed by the magistrate.—City v. Hirsh, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 209.

[i] (Pa. 1887) On certiorari to a justice of the peace, his refusal to hear the evidence offered by defendant may be shown by depositions.—Henley v. Potter, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 206.

§ 811. —— Trials de novo.

[a] (Ala.) On certiorari from the county court to review proceedings of a justice, the party complaining is entitled to a trial de novo.—(1824) Gayle v. Turner, Minor, 204; (1831) Boyd v. Woodfin, 3 Stew. 357.

[b] (La. 1887) It is only when, on examination of the record, the proceedings appear to be null and void, that they should be avoided, and the respondent directed to try them anew, in conformity with the provisions of the law.—State ex rel. Broussard v. Koenig, 39 La. Ann. 776, 2 South. 559.

[c] (Tenn. 1878) Certiorari for a new trial brings the case to the circuit court for a trial de novo on its merits, and presents for determination, not the validity of the justice's judgment, but the original liability.—Boyers v. Webb, 69 Tenn. (1 Lea) 696.

[d] (Tex. 1851) Cases removed from justices' courts to district courts by certiorari may be tried in the latter on the merits.—O'Brien v. Dunn, 5 Tex. 570.

[e] (Tex. 1858) An action before a justice of the peace, in which the time between the service and the trial was not long enough, is properly tried de novo upon certiorari to the district court, and judgment there in such case will be valid.—Perry v. Rohde, 20 Tex. 729.

§ 812. Presumptions.

[a] (Del. 1845) In a suit against two persons before a justice of the peace, the court, on certiorari, will not imply that they are partners, but will regard them as joint debtors, in order to support the judgment.—Kinniken v. Kinney, 4 Har. 313.

[b] (Del. 1871) By the record of a justice of the peace it appeared that the defendants had been duly summoned to appear on a certain day, and that on that day the cause was continued to a future day, and that on the latter day, the defendants not appearing, judgment was given by default against them. Held, on certiorari, that the court should not presume that the judgment was rendered before the hour appointed on that day.—Millaway v. Wilds, 4 Houst. 283.

[c] (Mich. 1844) If the return of a justice of the peace to a certiorari shows that the suit was commenced by writ of attachment, but does not show that any affidavit was filed, it will not be presumed that the affidavit necessary to give the justice jurisdiction was filed.—Wight v. Warner, 1 Doug. 384.

[d] (Mich. 1860) Where a justice of the peace, in return to a certiorari, certifies the evidence as follows: "I do certify the following to have been the evidence before me in the above-entitled cause,"—and the objection taken before him was that certain necessary facts had not been proved, it was held that it must be presumed that the whole evidence is returned.—Cicotte v. Morse, 8 Mich. 424.

[e] (Mich. 1879) On certiorari from a justice, it cannot be presumed that he did not have evidence to sustain his judgment upon all essential points, unless all the evidence is before the court, or his return shows affirmatively that the evidence was deficient in some essential point.—Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co. v. Morgan, 41 Mich. 296, 1 N. W. 1045.

[f] (Mich. 1888) The affidavit for certiorari to a justice, because of an improper continuance, failed to allege that the affidavit for continuance required by How. Ann. St. § 6899, had not been filed; but the justice's return stated that the continuance was "upon showing made." Held, that the action of the justice must be deemed regular.—Hatch v. Christmas, 68 Mich. 84, 35 N. W. 833.

[g] (Mich. 1893) Where a justice held a cause open only until the following morning, and defendant's counsel was present, and made no objection until the following morning, when he suggested that the justice had lost jurisdiction, the court will presume, on certiorari, that the justice had valid reasons for holding the cause open.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13, 56 N. W. 1042.

[h] [Mo. 1885) Jurisdiction of a justice will not be presumed, on certiorari or appeal, where the transcript fails to show jurisdictional facts.—McQuoid v. Lamd, 19 Mo. App. 153.

[i] (N. J. 1791) The amount of the verdict before a justice is presumed, on certiorari, to be the sum really due, in order to ascertain whether the justice had jurisdiction.—McCauley v. Barnes. 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 52.

[j] (N. J. 1831) The mere omission of a justice to state the place to which a cause was adjourned is not sufficient evidence, on certiorari, to show that the judgment was rendered at a different place, as the presumption is that the adjournment was to the same place.—Hull v. Martin, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 187.

[k] (N. J. 1880) From the entry on a justice's docket that the necessary advertisements in an attachment proceeding were put up, it will be presumed, on certiorari, that his certificate was made on proper proof.—Dodge v. Butler, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 370.

[l] (N. J. 1894) On certiorari to review a judgment of the justice court, the appellate court will presume that there was legal proof of the facts found in support of the judgment, where the complainant did not have the evidence made a part of the record.—Lloyd v. Richman, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 385, 30 Atl. 432.

[m] (N. Y. 1804) Where a return, on a certiorari to a justice's court, states that the jury heard the proofs and allegations then and there made, the court will intend that the parties were present.—Day v. Wilber, 2 Caines, 134.

[n] (N. Y. 1804) Where a return on a certiorari to a justice's court states that a warrant was issued in pursuance of the £10 act, and that defendant appeared and pleaded, the court will intend that the warrant was duly issued, or, if not so, that the irregularity was waived by defendant by his appearance and pleading.—Day v. Wilber, 2 Caines, 134.

[o] (N. Y. 1811) Though a justice before whom a trial is had cannot be sworn by another justice as a witness in the suit, if, by the return to the certiorari, it does not appear that any objection was made, it will be intended that he was admitted by consent.—Cobb v. Curtiss, 8 Johns. 470.

[p] (N. Y. 1812) On a return of a certiorari to a justice of the peace, it seems that the court will presume that the justice acted under a regular commission, and will not take notice of the objection that he was a priest or minister.—McInstry v. Tanner, 9 Johns. 135.

[q] (N. Y. 1847) A justice's judgment for the plaintiff on an action for goods sold and delivered will be held good on certiorari, where the return shows that the defendant did not appear, although the return does not state that the justice waited one hour before proceeding with the cause, and the declaration does not show a venue, a precise statement of the cause of action, and a formal promise to pay.—Stafford v. Williams, 4 Denio, 162.

[r] (N. Y. 1848) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace will not be reversed on certiorari merely for the reason that the justice's return omits to state that the plaintiff was called when the jury came into court and rendered their verdict; the presumption being that the proceedings were regular.—Warring v. Loomis, 4 Barb. 484.

[s] (N. Y. 1848) If a justice, in his return to a certiorari, omits to state that he has recited therein all the evidence given before him, the court will presume that additional evidence was given sufficient to support the verdict.—Prosser v. Secor, 5 Barb. 607.

[t] (N. Y. 1850) When the return of a justice to a writ of certiorari shows no fact authorizing the issue of a summons returnable in less time than provided in the statute (2 Rev. St. [2d Ed.] p. 228, §§ 14, 15), prima facie it was issued without authority.—Allen v. Stone, 9 Barb. 60.

[u] (N. Y. 1850) Where the return of a justice to a certiorari does not state that he has returned all the evidence before him, his judgment will not be reversed on the ground that some items of account included in the judgment do not appear to be sustained by proof.—Low v. Payne, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 247.

[uu] (Pa.) Where the jurisdiction of the justice evidently appears on the face of the record, no presumption will be made against the accuracy of his proceedings.—(1807) Gibbs v. Alberti, 4 Yeates, 373; (1812) Buckmyer v. Dubbs, 5 Bin. 29.

[v] (Pa.) On the hearing of a certiorari to a justice of the peace every reasonable presumption will be made in favor of his proceedings consistent with the record.—(1844) Brown v. Quinton, 3 Pa. Law J. 425, 2 Clark, 169; (1895) Evans v. Brobst (Com. Pl.) 11 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 133, I Lack. Leg. N. 300, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 550, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 30.

[vv] (Pa. 1871) A justice is not required to enter on his docket the evidence on which his judgment is founded, but merely the kind of evidence; and it will be presumed, on certiorari, that his judgment was founded on the proof.—Duglass v. Lacey, 3 Leg. Gaz. 253.

[w] (Pa. 1879) Where two transcripts returned to a certiorari by a justice differ, the last and corrected copy will be presumed to be correct.—Jervis v. McFarlan, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 137.

[ww] (Pa. 1881) On certiorari to set aside a magistrate's proceedings, that officer's jurisdiction must affirmatively and clearly appear; and, if it does not, no intendment or presumption will be made in their favor.—McGovern v. McTague, 13 Lanc. Bar, 119.

[x] (Tex. 1857) It is to be presumed, on certiorari, that a judgment was properly rendered until the contrary appears.—Peabody v. Buentillo, 18 Tex. 313.

[xx] (Wis. 1855) The court of review, on a writ of certiorari, to a justice of the peace, is to make every reasonable intendment in favor of the regularity of the proceeding of the court below.—Martin v. Beckwith, 4 Wis. 219.

[y] (Wis. 1871) Every reasonable intendment will be made to sustain the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace; and, where the record is silent on the subject of a second adjournment, the court on certiorari will assume that the consent of the opposite party was obtained, or the required oath made, before such adjournment was granted.—Baizer v. Lasch, 28 Wis. 268.

[yy] (Wis. 1879) On certiorari from the circuit court, a justice of the peace made return of two distinct docket records of the case, both signed by his predecessor (who rendered the judgment) and properly certified, one of which was full in its entries to show jurisdiction. Held that, in the absence of anything in the return to prove the contrary, it must be presumed that both records were kept at the same time; and an affidavit, subsequently filed in the circuit court, to show that the fuller record was not made at the time nor by the justice, could not be considered.—Healy v. Kneeland, 48 Wis. 497, 4 N. W. 586.

[z] (Wis. 1881) Where the record shows that the justice adjourned the cause to a certain time at his office, and that at the time specified he called said cause, etc., but fails to state where it was called, it will be presumed that he called it at his office; and on certiorari the contrary cannot be shown by his return, or by any evidence outside of the record.—Cassidy v. Millerick, 52 Wis. 379, 9 N. W. 165.

[zz] (Wis. 1894) A justice of the peace will be held not to have been deprived of jurisdiction by an affidavit for change of venue for prejudice, where the transcript of his docket shows that application for change was made by one, only, of two defendants, and that it was for that reason refused, though attached to his return to a writ of certiorari was a paper showing that both defendants applied for the change, as no presumption against the absolute verity of the justice's record on the question of jurisdiction can be drawn from such paper.—State v. Roberts, 87 Wis. 292, 58 N. W. 409.

§ 813. —— Burden of proof.

[a] (N. J. 1831) Where plaintiff, in certiorari, seeks to reverse the judgment of a justice on the ground that the justice adjourned the cause for the purpose of taking time to consider his judgment, without fixing any time or place to which he so adjourned, and without notifying defendant, he must make out satisfactorily those facts.—Hull v. Martin, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 187.

[b] (Pa. 1790) To establish an exception to the judgment of a justice on certiorari, the affidavit of the party, though not conclusive, will be deemed sufficient for throwing the onus probandi upon the other party.—Vansciver v. Bolton, 2 Dall. 114, 1 L. Ed. 312.

[c] (Tenn. 1848) It is not necessary for a party who brings a case into the court by certiorari to prove the facts stated in his petition, in order to entitle him to a trial in that court, where the papers do not negative the material facts stated in the petition, although there is an absence of proof of the facts stated from the papers.—Spivy v. Latham, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 708.

[d] (Tenn. 1857) Where a stay of execution purports to have been entered on the order of defendant, which is denied by him on oath in his petition for certiorari, it devolves on plaintiff to show that the justice had authority to enter defendant's name as stayor.—McDowell v. Turney, 37 Tenn. (5 Sneed) 225.

[e] (Tenn. 1872) On certiorari to quash a judgment because obtained without service, an affidavit of the justice that a duly-executed warrant was returned before him, upon which he rendered the judgment, casts upon the petitioner the burden of disproving the service.—Ezell v. Holloway, 61 Tenn. (2 Baxt.) 15.

§ 814. Parties entitled to allege error.

[a] (Ga. 1893) Where suit was brought on a promissory note in a justice's court, and plaintiff obtained judgment for the full amount sued for, it is immaterial to him that the justice may have erred in allowing a plea of non est factum to be filed after the appearance term of the case; and, although defendant may have entered an appeal to a jury in the justice's court, this does not authorize plaintiff, pending the appeal, to attempt to correct by certiorari the alleged error of the justice in allowing the plea to be filed.—Shope v. Fite, 91 Ga. 174, 16 S. E. 990.

[b] (Ga. 1893) Code, § 4052, allows the party dissatisfied with the decision in a cause tried in a justice's court to apply for and obtain a writ of certiorari for the correction of errors made on the trial; but that section does not contemplate that the party who gains his case completely and entirely in the justice's court may, by writ of certiorari, have the superior court review alleged errors committed by the justice, which resulted in no injury to the prevailing party on the trial before the justice.—Shope v. Fite, 91 Ga. 174, 16 S. E. 990.

[c] (Mich. 1893) Where the return of a justice to an action tried before him shows that both parties asked an adjournment,—defendant for 30 days, and plaintiff for 8 days,—defendant, on certiorari, cannot complain of an adjournment for 7 days on the ground that it was upon the justice's own motion, and without the consent of the parties.—Shaw v. Fortine, 98 Mich. 254, 57 N. W. 128.

§ 815. Questions reviewable.

[a] (Mich. 1871) Under Comp. Laws, §§ 3868–3884, upon certiorari from the circuit court to a justice of the peace, only questions of law, so far as they relate to the action itself, can be tried.—McGraw v. Schwab, 23 Mich. 13.

[b] (Mich. 1885) On certiorari to justice's court, all technical omissions or defects in the proceedings before him will be disregarded, and judgment will be entered on the merits.—Gray v. Wilcox, 56 Mich. 58, 22 N. W. 109.

[c] (Pa. 1868) A magistrate's errors of judgment cannot be reviewed by certiorari.—Greenleaf v. Haberacker, 1 Woodw. Dec. 436.

[d] (Pa. 1872) Only questions affecting the regularity of the proceedings in the court below can be considered on certiorari, and an order vacating an order of sequestration cannot be reviewed on the merits.—Appeal of Gidding, 4 Leg. Gaz. 114.

[e] (Pa. 1873) Upon certiorari to a magistrate, the only question before the court is that of the regularity of the proceedings as shown by the record. There can be no reversal for an error in the magistrate's judgment upon the facts or the law.—Thomas v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 2 Woodw. Dec. 104.

[f] (Pa. 1886) An error of law in the rejection of evidence or in the magistrate's conclusions cannot be considered on certiorari, and the court is confined strictly to questions of regularity.—Noel v. Brown, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 204.

[g] (Wis. 1856) The truth or falsity of an officer's return cannot be collaterally inquired into on a certiorari.—Frederick v. Clark, 5 Wis. 191.

[h] (Wis. 1874) On a common-law certiorari to a justice of the peace, the circuit court cannot review errors of the justice, but can only inquire into his jurisdiction.—Varrell v. Church, 36 Wis. 318.

§ 816. Review of evidence and questions of fact.

Certiorari to review questions of fact and law, see ante, § 766.

[a] (Ga. 1887) A general exception to the legality of the magistrate's judgment is not to be sustained merely because the return to the certiorari sets out no evidence, the case, as to matters of evidence, being one for appeal.—Western & A. R. Co. v. Pitts, 79 Ga. 532, 4 S. E. 921.

[b] (Ga. 1892) On certiorari to a justice of the peace, where the verdict is the second one in favor of the same party, and there being some slight evidence to support it, there is no abuse of discretion in overruling the certiorari, though the verdict seems strongly against the weight of the evidence.—Steele v. Cochran, 88 Ga. 296, 14 S. E. 617.

[c] (La. 1895) Where the proceedings in a justice court were regular, the judgment will not be disturbed on certiorari for want of evidence.—State ex rel. Hogsett v. Patin, 47 La. Ann. 1533, 18 South. 507.

[d] (Mass. 1830) The judgment of the justices, that the evidence shows that the debtor is "entitled to his discharge," is not subject to revision on certiorari.—In re Hayward, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 358.

[e] (Mich. 1856) A cause where there are no errors in law affecting the merits cannot be revoked on conflicting proofs by the circuit court on certiorari.—Webber v. Hanke, 4 Mich. 198.

[f] (Mich. 1860) Where, in cases removed from justices' courts by certiorari, the court below has found facts upon pertinent evidence, this court will not review that finding.—Cicotte v. Morse, 8 Mich. 424.

[g] (Mich. 1862) On certiorari to a justice, if the error relates to the total want of evidence to prove some material fact, the circuit court should look into the testimony to see whether there was such evidence or not. If there was, it should not weigh it, or inquire into its sufficiency, but should affirm the judgment. If the return shows no such evidence, and it appears that all the testimony before the justice has been returned, the judgment should be reversed, on the ground that the justice erred in law in rendering the judgment he did without such evidence.—Berry v. Lowe, 10 Mich. 9.

[h] (Mich. 1863) On certiorari, questions of law only are open, and the court cannot weigh the evidence to determine whether questions of fact have been correctly decided. It is only where there is an entire absence of proof on some material fact found that such finding becomes erroneous as a matter of law.—Hyde v. Nelson, 11 Mich. 353.

[i] (Mich. 1882) A justice's judgment on the merits should not be reversed on certiorari for the admission or rejection of evidence, unless it clearly appears that the party against whom judgment was given was injured by such ruling.—Whaley v. Gale, 48 Mich. 193, 12 N. W. 33.

[j] (Minn. 1867) Findings of fact, in a trial before a justice of the peace, will not be set aside on certiorari, if there is any testimony to support them.—De Rochebrune v. Southeimer, 12 Minn. 78 (Gil. 42).

[k] (N. J. 1854) Where a justice certifies a part of the evidence in a case decided before him, and as to the rest says that, "although unable to recapitulate it, yet enough was given to warrant him in giving judgment for the plaintiff," the court above, on certiorari, cannot say upon this return that there was not evidence to warrant the judgment.—Paterson & R. R. Co. v. Ackerman, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 535.

[l] (N. Y. 1837) A court of common pleas cannot reverse on certiorari a judgment of a justice's court rendered upon contradictory evidence, though the common pleas would have arrived at a different conclusion.—Noyes v. Hewitt, 18 Wend. 141.

[m] (N. Y. 1848) On certiorari to a justice of the peace, the county court has the right to look into the evidence before the justice; and, if there appears to be a total want of evidence to support the judgment, it will be reversed.—Bort v. Smith, 5 Barb. 283.

[n] (N. Y. 1848) The admission of incompetent evidence to a point clearly established by other evidence is not ground for reversing the judgment of a justice of the peace on certiorari.—Bort v. Smith, 5 Barb. 283.

[o] (Pa. 1812) But the court, out of which a certiorari issues, may, to prevent injustice, make inquiry into the evidence given before the magistrate.—Buckmyer v. Dubbs, 5 Bin. 29.

[p] (Pa. 1889) The ownership of property sued for by a married woman cannot be inquired into on certiorari to a justice of the peace, that being a matter of fact for the determination of the justice when the case was tried.—McManaman v. Klock (Com. Pl.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 302.

[q] (S. C. 1895) The findings of fact of a trial justice in certiorari proceedings are conclusive upon the circuit and supreme courts.—Morris v. Palmer, 44 S. C. 462, 22 S. E. 726.

[r] (W. Va. 1893) Where a justice in a suit involving a matter merely pecuniary has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person, and renders a bona fide judgment on the merits clearly wrong, but within the scope of his legitimate powers, the circuit court will not, upon a writ of certiorari issued in the exercise of its original supervisory jurisdiction conferred by the constitution, review and reverse such judgment, but will dismiss the writ as improvidently awarded.—Wilson v. West Virginia, C. & P. Ry. Co., 38 W. Va. 212, 18 S. E. 577.

[s] (Wis. 1856) A certiorari brings up the record merely. Only such questions as go to the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal can be considered, and the court will not look into the evidence.—Frederick v. Clark, 5 Wis. 191.

[t] (Wis. 1857) Where the testimony was conflicting, the judgment of the justice will not be reversed on certiorari.—Persons' Adm'rs v. Burdick, 6 Wis. 63.

[u] (Wis. 1871) A common-law writ of certiorari brings up only the record (and not the evidence), and reaches only errors appearing therein which go to the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal; and hence such writ would not reach alleged errors that the justice of the peace allowed testimony to be given when no bill of particulars had been filed by plaintiff at the time required, or that the judgment was in excess of plaintiff's demand, or that the evidence showed the judgment to be for the debt of some person other than defendant.—Baizer v. Lasch, 28 Wis. 268.

[v] (Wis. 1875) Upon a common-law certiorari to a justice of the peace, the circuit court can review those jurisdictional questions only which are presented by the docket entries and the pleadings in the cause, and cannot examine the evidence to see whether the justice has exceeded his jurisdiction, even though such evidence has been returned with the writ.—Callon v. Sternberg, 38 Wis. 539.

[w] (Wis. 1883) On certiorari to a justice of the peace, the evidence and special rulings cannot be reviewed.—Driscoll v. Smith, 59 Wis. 38, 17 N. W. 876.

§ 817. Matters of discretion and harmless error.

[a] (Ga. 1886) Although a constable signed his name to an entry of levy by using a cross mark, yet when the answer of the justice to a writ of certiorari showed that the constable was in court, and that he returned the levy as his and recognized his mark, there was no error in refusing to sustain the certiorari on that ground.—Simpson v. McBride, 78 Ga. 297.

[b] (N. Y. 1819) On certiorari to a justice's court, the judgment will not be reversed merely because the process was in one form of action and plaintiff declared in another; and this, though the objection was taken in time in the court below and overruled.—Bowen v. Ferne, 16 Johns. 161.

[c] (Pa. 1828) Opening or refusing to open a judgment by a justice of the peace is a matter resting in his discretion, the due exercise of which will not be examined on a writ of certiorari.—Galley v. Davenport, 1 Ashm. 149.

[d] (Pa. 1844) The omission of a justice in an action of trespass for injury done to real estate to set forth on his docket the county in which the estate is situated is not sufficient ground for a reversal of his judgment on certiorari.—Brown v. Quinton, 2 Clark, 169, 3 Pa. Law J. 425.

[e] (Pa. 1852) On certiorari, the magistrate's refusal to allow the case to be again heard on its merits is not a sufficient reason for reversing the judgment; it being a matter of discretion.—O'Niel v. Whitecar, 1 Phila. 446.

[f] (Pa. 1872) In certiorari to a justice of the peace, though the transcript be defective in detailing the facts found, and judgment based thereon would be defective, yet if, by reference to the complaint attached to the record, it appears that the facts stated generally in the transcript were found true, and would have been sufficient to give the magistrate jurisdiction and to form a foundation for the judgment, if found by him in detail, the want of precision in the transcript is not a ground for reversal.—Livingood v. Moyer, 2 Woodw. Dec. 65.

[g] (Pa. 1886) Where the transcript from the justice of the peace of another county shows the cause of action and that he had jurisdiction, a judgment rendered by another justice on a sci. fa. on such transcript will not be reversed, on certiorari, because he did not set out on his docket the cause of action, and that a summons was issued and a return made in the original judgment.—Grube v. Getz, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 124.

[h] (Tex. 1856) The irregular entries of continuances in the justices's court furnish no ground for a new trial in the district court on certiorari.—Huntsman v. Jarvis, 17 Tex. 161.

§ 818. In general.

[a] (Ala. 1857) On appeal from a justice's court, the judgment may be amended at a subsequent term, nunc pro tunc, by vacating it as against a party against whom it was improperly rendered as the surety on the certiorari bond.—Dumas v. Hunter, 30 Ala. 188.

[b] (Iowa, 1849) The district court, on certiorari to a justice of the peace, may affirm his judgment or render a new one, as the right of the matter may appear.—Wright v. Phillips, 2 G. Greene, 191.

[c] (N. C. 1871) When the right of a party to a recordari, as a substitute for an appeal from a justice's judgment, depends on the facts proved or admitted before the superior court, it is the duty of the judge of that court to find and state the facts on which he proceeds to act, and if, on an appeal to the supreme court, such facts do not appear to have been found and stated, that court must overrule the decision of the court below, because the supreme court cannot try any issue of fact.—Collins v. Gilbert, 65 N. C. 135.

[d] (Tenn. 1871) A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace before the return day of the writ is not void, but erroneous; and a certiorari to retry the cause does not authorize the circuit court, without a trial, to quash the execution issued thereon.—Glover v. Holman, 50 Tenn. (3 Heisk.) 519.

[e] (Wis.) The question on certiorari from the circuit court to a justice of the peace being merely of the justice's jurisdiction, the judgment of the circuit court should simply affirm or reverse that of the justice.—(1879) Healy v. Kneeland, 48 Wis. 497, 4 N. W. 586; (1881) Bandlow v. Thieme, 53 Wis. 57, 9 N. W. 920.

Affirmance of judgment on dismissal of writ, see ante, §§ 805, 806.

New or final judgment, see post, § 823.

Scire facias against sureties on certiorari bond on affirmance of judgment, see post, § 829.

[a] (Ga. 1885) There is no error in sustaining, on certiorari, a finding in the justice's court which is warranted by the evidence.—Matthews v. Dawson, 75 Ga. 889.

[b] (Ga. 1886) Where an answer of a justice to a writ of certiorari, made two or three years after the trial in his court, in response to an order to perfect his answer, stated that he remembered something about some deed, but could not then recollect it, and in respect to a motion to continue answered that as he then recollected the defendant announced ready, and, after adverse ruling, wished to change the announcement and continue the case, on such an answer there was no error in refusing to sustain the certiorari, on the ground that the justice erred in refusing to continue the case and compel the production of the deed.—Simpson v. McBride, 78 Ga. 297.

[c] (N. J.) Where a copy of account or state of demand does not appear on certiorari, judgment cannot be affirmed.—(1806) Addis v. Evans, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 142; (1807) Satterly v. Brown, Id. 162.

[d] (N. Y. 1817) Where the sole object of a certiorari to bring up a cause from a justice's court is to subject the defendant in error to the costs thereof, the latter is entitled to judgment. —Potter v. Smith, 14 Johns. 444.

[e] (Pa. 1793) Though a justice has received improper evidence, yet if the party might have appealed, and has entered into a recognizance in nature of special bail, and suffered a long time to elapse before he takes out his certiorari, the court will affirm the judgment.—Morton v. Plowman, 1 Yeates, 251.

[f] (Pa. 1831) On certiorari to a justice, if the proceedings are regular on the face of them, and the justice has kept within the sphere of his jurisdiction in general, the judgment must be affirmed without a re-examination of the merits. —Managers for Relief and Employment of Poor of Germantown v. Zinck, 1 Ashm 64.

[g] (Pa. 1831) On certiorari, if it appear from the face of the proceedings that the justice has usurped a jurisdiction not given to him by law, the court will not affirm the judgment, since an exception which goes to his jurisdiction is never too late.—Herrigas v. McGill, 1 Ashm. 152.

[h] (Pa. 1890) On certiorari to a justice of the peace to review a judgment for less than $5.33, which cannot be appealed from on account of the triviality of the sum in controversy, where it was doubtful from the record whether defendant, in such case, resided and was in another county when the summons was served, the judgment will not be disturbed. — Kaniper v. Kreidler (Com. Pl.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 91.

[i] (Wash. 1894) A justice of the peace vacated a judgment rendered by him in favor of one party as being premature, and such party removed the cause by certiorari to the superior court. On the hearing of the certiorari the vacating order was set aside, with costs, and a judgment was rendered affirming the first judgment of the justice, instead of remanding the cause, or retaining it for trial on the merits. Held, that such judgment of affirmance was erroneous, and that execution thereon should be restrained.—McEneaney v. Dart, 9 Wash. 682, 38 Pac. 764.

§ 820. Modification.

[a] (Ga. 1877) Demurrer in justice's court, where the account sued on consisted of several items, though overruled by the justice as a whole, may, in the superior court, on certiorari, be sustained as to some of the items and overruled as to others.—Hirt v. Linton, 59 Ga. 881.

[b] (Minn. 1861) Under Comp. St. c. 59, § 133, providing that on certiorari to a justice of the peace the judge of the district court may give judgment as the right of the matter may appear, etc., a mere error in computation may be corrected.—Walker v. McDonald, 5 Minn. 455 (Gil. 368).

[c] (N. Y. 1862) Where two or three independent causes of action are prosecuted in a justice's court, and the judgment is right as to one and erroneous as to the others, and that can be distinctly seen on appeal, the power of the county court to reverse as to the erroneous, and affirm as to the legal, part of the judgment, is plain, practical, and imperative.—Staats v. Hudson River R. Co., 39 Barb. 298.

[d] (Pa. 1885) Where judgment has been rendered before an alderman against husband and wife, and the record on certiorari does not make out a claim against the wife, but does show sufficient to hold the husband, the judgment will be reversed only as to the wife.—Connors v. Wonder, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 577.

[e] (Wis. 1865) Where a justice of the peace has rendered judgment for costs in a sum exceeding the amount allowed by statute, and the judgment for damages is not complained of, this court, on certiorari, will reverse the judgment as to costs, and affirm the judgment as to damages, with costs in this court to the plaintiff in error.—Hurlbut v. Wilcox, 19 Wis. 419.

New or final judgment, see post, § 823.

[a] (Ga. 1887) That counsel had professional business in two justices' courts on the same day, and was absent from one, believing he had leave of absence to attend to business in the other, is no cause for setting aside a judgment rendered during his absence, where it appears from the magistrate's return that he neither had leave of absence, nor any sufficient reason to think he had.—Western & A. R. Co. v. Pitts, 79 Ga. 532, 4 S. E. 921.

[b] (Iowa, 1849) The district court may reverse a judgment of a justice of the peace on certiorari.—Wilson v. Albright, 2 G. Greene, 125.

[c] (Mich. 1863) Whether the judgment of a justice of the peace should be reversed on certiorari, because such judgment is for a larger amount than that alleged in the ad damnum clause of the declaration, quære. — Pew v. Yoare, 12 Mich. 16.

[d] (Mich. 1884) A judgment of a justice of the peace cannot be reversed on certiorari, where the return shows nothing within his judicial knowledge which would affect the validity of the judgment.—Alt v. Lalone, 54 Mich. 302. 20 N. W. 52.

[e] (Minn. 1859) Where it appears from the record that in a trial before a justice of the peace the jury were guilty of gross misconduct, the district court should, on certiorari, reverse the judgment.—Snow v. Hardy, 3 Minn. 77 (Gil. 35).

[f] (N. J. 1831) If a summons is served on the defendant by being left at his house in his absence from the state on lawful business, and the justice, in his absence and before his return, hear the cause and render judgment against him, the supreme court, on certiorari, may reverse the judgment, if they are satisfied that injustice has been done the defendant.—Combs v. Johnson, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 244.

[g] (N. J. 1847) Where a question arises, on certiorari, whether certain credits are sufficiently specific to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the justice, the court will not reverse the judgment, unless the error is manifest.—Pinkney v. Ayres, 21 N. J. Law (1 Zab.) 694.

[h] (N. J. 1854) On certiorari from a justice's court, although no error appear in the proceedings, yet, if a plain case of surprise be shown, the court will, on affidavit of merits, reverse the judgment and direct a new trial.—Paterson & R. R. Co. v. Ackerman, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 535.

[i] (N. Y. 1807) If it appears, on the return of a certiorari, from the evidence on both sides, that the plaintiff's demand is illegal, the court will set aside the judgment, though the jury found for the plaintiff.—Nicoll v. Dunlap, 2 Johns. 195.

[j] (N. Y. 1808) Where, on certiorari from the supreme court to a justice of the peace, the evidence does not appear sufficient to support the action, the judgment will be reversed.—Dodge v. Coddington, 3 Johns. 146.

[jj] (N. Y. 1810) In an action before a justice on a contract, void as being within the statute of frauds, defendant is not precluded from taking advantage of the evidence by not objecting to it at the trial, and the court, on certiorari, will reverse the judgment.—Pease v. Alexander, 7 Johns. 25.

[k] (N. Y. 1815) Where two persons are sued by a warrant in justice's court, and only one of them appears, a judgment against both, being erroneous as to the defendant who did not appear, will be reversed as to both on certiorari.—Richards v. Walton, 12 Johns. 434.

[l] (N. Y. 1838) On a common-law certiorari, if the justice had jurisdiction, his judgment will not be reversed, though it be rendered on an insufficient declaration, or defective proof.—Johnson v. Moss, 20 Wend. 145.

[m] (N. Y. 1841) If the return of a certiorari from the common pleas to a justice's court states all the evidence, and there is nothing to sustain the judgment of the justice's court, the common pleas are bound to reverse the judgment.—Baldwin v. Delevan, 2 Hill, 125.

[n] (Or. 1888) Services performed at the request of a judge of a county, acting as a committing magistrate, in taking testimony in the case of the state against another party, do not constitute a claim against the county; and a judgment rendered against the county in justice's court on such a claim, where it has not appeared and answered in the action, will be reversed on writ of review.—Union County v. Slocum, 17 Pac. 876.

[o] (Pa. 1831) The court will not set aside, on certiorari, an execution issued by a justice, unless it is in itself void.—Garrigues v. Jackson, 1 Ashm. 218.

[p] (Pa. 1864) Where a justice, on an ex parte hearing, opened judgment for apparently sufficient cause, and afterwards entered judgment for the adverse party, the proceedings will be reversed on certiorari, as in that case there would seem to be no regular judgment in favor of either party.—Larie v. Hagerty, 5 Phila. 530.

[q] (Pa. 1888) The judgment of a justice will be reversed, on certiorari, if it appears that a debtor's claim for exemption was made in time, and the justice failed to protect the exemption.—Bloom v. Alexander, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 553.

[r] (Pa. 1893) Where on certiorari to a justice there is no allegation that proper service was not had, or that the amount and character of the claim was not cognizable before the justice, the judgment will not be reversed.—Strause v. Scheurman (Com. Pl.) 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 332.

[s] (Pa. 1894) Act March 20, 1810, § 17, provides that when one who has obtained judgment before a justice against a resident of another county desires to follow his personalty thither, the justice shall give him a transcript, and all evidence in his possession, for recovery before a justice in any county where defendant can be found, "as in cases originally brought before him." Held, that the common pleas court of the county to which the case is taken, having power, under Const. art. 5, § 10, to bring justices' proceedings before it, and "cause right and justice to be done," can, on certiorari to the justice in its county, set aside the judgment founded on a transcript which shows on its face lack of jurisdiction in the trial justice.—Rea v. Titman (Com. Pl.) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 458.

[t] (Tex. 1851) Where the plaintiff excepted to the legal sufficiency of the defendant's petition for a certiorari, and the record recited that, on hearing the case on the petition, answer, and record of the proceedings before the justice, the court considered that the judgment of the justice should be reversed, it was held that the judgment necessarily involved the overruling of the exceptions, and that they could not be considered as waived, as in cases where the final trial is on other issues.—Clay v. Clay, 7 Tex. 250.

[u] (W. Va. 1894) A judgment of a circuit court on certiorari, reversing a judgment of a justice, and granting a new trial, is a final judgment, which cannot be set aside on motion at a subsequent term, though the case is retained for retrial.—Morgan v. Ohio River R. Co., 39 W. Va. 17, 19 S. E. 588.

[v] (Wis. 1847) St. p. 340, art. 12, § 9, concerning justices of the peace, requires the district court in case of appeal from a justice, to give judgment in the case as the right of the matter may appeear, without regard to technical omissions, imperfections, or defects in proceedings before the justice which did not affect the merits, and authorizes it to affirm or reverse the judgment in whole or in part. Act Jan. 30, 1844 (amending such statute) § 4, authorizes a certiorari in all cases where an appeal is not allowed, and requires the justice to return all testimony in proceedings had before him. Held, that where defendant in an action before a justice pleaded the general issue and notice of set-off only, and at the trial plaintiff established the demand sued for, but judgment was given for defendant, on his being allowed to show before the justice the nonjoinder of a defendant liable with him, on certiorari, the district court properly reversed the justice's judgment and rendered judgment for plaintiff.—Clark v. Wood, 2 Pin. 29.

[w] (Wis. 1865) A judgment in justice's court, void for want of jurisdiction, will be reversed on certiorari; it being one of the principal objects of that writ to keep inferior courts and tribunals within their jurisdiction.—Combs v. Dunlap, 19 Wis. 591.

[x] (Wis. 1878) The judgment of a justice of the peace, however irregular, will not be reversed on a common-law certiorari, if he had jurisdiction to render it.—Lewis v. Larson, 45 Wis. 353.

§ 822. New trial in appellate court on reversal.

[a] (Ind. 1848) When the judgment of a justice of the peace is reversed on certiorari by the county circuit court, the cause is retained for trial on the merits, and the reversal extends as far back as is necessary to rectify the errors committed.—Brayton v. Freese, 1 Ind. (1 Cart.) 121.

[b] (Ind. 1851) Where a case is brought to the circuit court by a writ of certiorari, the court should reverse the judgment of the justices, if erroneous, but retain the cause for a new trial, as in cases of appeal.—Clark v. Dunlap, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 551.

[c] (Iowa, 1850) It is error to order a trial de novo in the district court, on reversing a judgment of a justice of the peace taken there by certiorari.—Davis v. Curtis, 2 G. Greene, 575.

[d] (N. H. 1838) Where a new trial is granted by the court of common pleas on petition of writ of review from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the trial should be brought in the court of common pleas.—Rigney v. Hutchins, 9 N. H. 257.

[e] (N. C. 1842) Where the appellate court on recordari orders the case to be put on the trial docket, this is tantamount to a refusal to dismiss the writ and granting a new trial.—Leatherwood v. Moody, 25 N. C. 129.

[f] (N. C. 1881) Where an award is enforced by a justice as a rule of court, and the party aggrieved obtains a recordari in lieu of a lost appeal, an order directing the docketing of the cause for trial in the superior court is not an adjudication in any sense upon the matters in controversy.—Moore v. Austin, 85 N. C. 179.

§ 823. New or final judgment.

Judgment on affirmance, see ante, § 819.

[a] (Ala. 1893) When, after judgment in a justice's court, the cause is taken to the circuit court on certiorari, it is proper, on entering judgment for the same party in the latter court, to add interest on the justice's judgment, though the sum exceed the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.—Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Hutto, 102 Ala. 575, 14 South. 875.

[b] (Ark. 1846) A judgment by the circuit court on certiorari on the transcript of a justice of the peace, where it does not appear of record that the case came properly before the court, is a nullity.—Wise v. Yell, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 11.

[c] (Ga.) Upon the hearing of a certiorari in the superior court, in which no issues of fact are involved, and the determination of the case depends entirely upon legal questions, it is the duty of that court to render a final judgment. —(1876) Hallett v. Blain, 56 Ga. 525; (1877) Id., 58 Ga. 142; (1891) Greenwood v. Furniture Factory, 86 Ga. 582, 13 S. E. 128.

[d] (Ga. 1887) Code, § 4067, provides that "upon the hearing of a writ of certiorari, the superior court may return the same to the court from which it came, with instructions; and in all cases where the error complained of is an error in law which must finally govern the case, and the court shall be satisfied there is no question of fact involved which makes it necessary to send the case back for a new hearing, * * * it shall be the duty of the said judge to make a final decision. * * *" Held, that when the case involves both law and facts, and there is no dispute as to the facts, the superior court, in its discretion, may make a final disposition of it, or may remand the case for a new trial.—Rome R. Co. v. Ransom, 78 Ga. 705, 3 S. E. 626.

[e] (Ga. 1888) Code, § 4040, providing that the judge on hearing a writ of certiorari in a possessory warrant case "may remand the case or give final judgment," gives a discretion to the judge, and should govern in possessory warrant cases, rather than section 4067, which treats of certiorari in general, and provides that only when no question of fact is involved shall the court make final disposition of the case.—Bush v. Rawlins, 80 Ga. 583, 5 S. E. 761.

[f] (Ga. 1893) Though, upon the hearing of a certiorari from the verdict of a jury in a justice's court, the judge of the superior court may be satisfied that the verdict was contrary to evidence, and should be set aside, and although a precisely similar verdict in the same case on a former certiorari had been set aside on this ground, yet, as there were issues of fact involved, the court erred in rendering a final judgment for more than was found by the verdict.—Joseph v. Continental Jersey Works, 92 Ga. 542, 17 S. E. 923.

[g] (Mich. 1878) On certiorari from a circuit court, bringing up a judgment of the justice's court, where the circuit court approves the justice's judgment, in entering up judgment against defendant and his sureties in certiorari, it is proper to compute interest to the date thereof, and give judgment for the gross sum, instead of merely affirming the judgment.—McDermid v. Redpath, 39 Mich. 372.

[h] (Mich. 1889) Where a cause before a justice of the peace is brought by certiorari to the circuit court, and the court enters judgment that the judgment of the justice be in all matters "affirmed, and stand in full force and effect," and that plaintiff recover "the amount of his damages and costs recovered by him in the court below," and "have execution thereof," the entry must be taken together, and the judgment of the circuit court is the only judgment to be enforced. The judgment of the justice is affirmed and merged therein.—Peterson v. Ringelberg, 76 Mich. 107, 42 N. W. 1080.

[i] (Minn. 1858) Under the statute, on certiorari from a justice, the district court only affirms or reverses or reverses in part. He cannot disregard all formal requirements in the proceedings before the justice, and finally settle the rights of the parties as the very right of the matter may appear, and thereupon issue execution as in cases of original jurisdiction.—St. Martin v. Desnoyer, 1 Minn. 41 (Gil. 25).

[j] (Pa. 1835) On certiorari to a justice of the peace, the supreme court reversed his judgment for the plaintiff in the suit and rendered judgment for the defendant.—Atkinson v. Crossland, 4 Watts, 450.

[k] (Tenn. 1833) Where a certiorari and supersedeas are granted in a case originating before a justice of the peace, and the only defense is usury, the county court cannot discharge the supersedeas and give judgment for the principal and lawful interest, and retain the case to try the plea of usury.—Officer v. Price, 13 Tenn. (5 Yerg.) 285.

[l] (Tenn. 1871) On a review by certiorari in the circuit court of the judgment of a justice, it is error to render judgment against a garnishee on the recitals in the justice's judgment, as a written examination, signed by the garnishee, is the only legal basis for a judgment against him.—Pickler v. Rainey, 4 Heisk. (51 Tenn.) 335.

[m] (Tex. 1854) Where a suit to revive a judgment was commenced before a justice of the peace, and carried by certiorari to the district court, it is proper for the latter court to render judgment for the balance due on the former judgment and issue execution therefor. —Hotchkiss v. Chevaillier, 12 Tex. 224.

[n] (Tex. 1881) A judgment in a justice's court against a garnishee for an amount exceeding the jurisdiction of the court is not void, and the county court on a certiorari may render judgment to the limit of the justice's jurisdiction.—Erwin v. City of Austin, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 1039.

[o] (Wis. 1849) On certiorari to a justice's judgment under the territorial statute, the district court had no power to render judgment "as the very right of the matter appeared" before the justice by the evidence returned, but could only reverse or affirm such judgment.—Phillips v. Geesland, 1 Chand. 57, 2 Pin. 120.

[p] (Wis. 1853) On a certiorari brought in the county court to a judgment of a justice in an action of replevin, ordering a return of the property, a judgment reversing the former one, and giving the plaintiff in error the value of the property and costs, is bad, and not authorized by Rev. St. c. 88, § 223.—Dykens v. Munson, 2 Wis. 245.

[q] (Wis. 1885) On certiorari the circuit court is only authorized to affirm or reverse the judgment of the justice, with costs, and it cannot give a new judgment for damages.—Starkweather v. Sawyer, 63 Wis. 297, 23 N. W. 566.

§ 824. Execution.

[a] (Pa. 1873) The decision of the common pleas on certiorari to a justice is final, and, if the judgment be reversed, an execution for costs may at once issue from the common pleas.—Long v. Shelly, 30 Leg. Int. 288, 21 Pittsb. Leg. J. (O. S.) 15.

§ 825. Restitution.

[a] (Ala. 1865) Where the city court on certiorari has rightly set aside and annulled the proceedings of a justice of the peace, awarding an order for the return to the claimant of property alleged to have been stolen, it has no authority to order further that the property be returned to the defendant in the writ by which the cause was brought before it.—Sullivan v. Robinson, 39 Ala. 613.

[b] (Ga. 1887) In proceedings on a possessory warrant, commenced by the executor of a deceased joint owner of the property, the magistrate having awarded possession of the property to the executor, held, that it was competent for the court, in reversing the magistrate's judgment on certiorari, to award possession to the purchaser.—Peebles v. Morris, 77 Ga. 536, 3 S. E. 89.

[c] (Mich. 1844) Under Laws 1841, p. 81, § 135, providing that on review by the circuit court of a judgment rendered before a justice, where it appears that the judgment has been collected, the circuit court may, upon reversal, award restitution of the amount so collected, it is within the power of the circuit court, on certiorari to review the judgment of a justice in favor of the plaintiff in replevin, to award upon reversal of the judgment a restitution of the property.—People v. Judges of Jackson Circuit Court, 1 Doug. 302.

[d] (Nev. 1865) The probate court may issue a writ of restitution on certiorari to review a justice's judgment in an ejectment action.—Paul v. Armstrong, 1 Nev. 82.

[e] (N. Y. 1813) Where a certiorari has been issued to return the proceedings before a justice, who dies before any return is made, and the supreme court on motion quashes the proceedings for irregularity, restitution may be awarded.—In re Shotwell, 10 Johns. 304.

§ 826. Remand and new trial.

Discretion of court on certiorari to give final judgment or remand the proceedings, see ante, § 823.

[a] (Ga. 1880) Under Code, § 4067, which provides that the superior court may finally dispose of a cause brought before it by certiorari to a justice's court when there is no question of fact involved, the judge of the superior court should not render a judgment finally disposing of a case before him on a certiorari where issues of fact are involved, but should remand the case for a new trial.—Sapp v. Adams, 65 Ga. 600.

[b] (Ga. 1880) A rule against a constable was erroneously dismissed by the justice upon a mere answer that he had been notified to hold the money to pay a claim put in therefor by a contestant. Held, on certiorari from such dismissal, that the proper judgment was to remand the case, with instructions to the justice to try it on its merits and decide it in conformity with the facts.—Smith v. Wade, 65 Ga. 753.

[c] (Ga. 1885) In an action against a railroad company for killing plaintiff's cow, it appeared on certiorari to the justice's court that the killing and value of the cow were proved, and that defendant attempted to show reasonable care and diligence on the part of its agents. Held, that it was proper for the superior court to order a new trial, instead of giving a final decision; the question involved being one for the jury.—Georgia R. R. v. Bird, 76 Ga. 13.

[d] (Ga. 1886) Code, § 4067, providing that the judge, on certiorari from a justice's court, "may return the same to the court from which it came with instructions," means that he may, if he has any instructions to give, and not that he must in all cases.—Akridge v. Watertown Steam Engine Co., 77 Ga. 50.

[e] (Ga. 1886) On certiorari to a justice's court, it being the duty of the court to remand for new trial on sustaining the certiorari, if the question is a mixed question of law and fact, a new trial should be ordered on sustaining the certiorari, in an action on a note, where one defendant pleaded that he was surety only, and that plaintiffs fraudulently procured him to sign, and the evidence was conflicting in reference to the question.—Holliday v. Poole, 77 Ga. 159.

[f] (Ga. 1892) Where defendant on a trial before a justice introduced no evidence, and a material part of the evidence for plaintiff was not admissible because it was parol, the court having erroneously excluded a writing which was indispensable to a recovery by plaintiff, the superior court, in sustaining a certiorari, ought not to render a final judgment, but should send the case back for a new trial, there being no presumption that the illegal evidence was not objected to.—Barfield v. McCombs, 89 Ga. 799, 15 S. E. 666.

[g] (Ga. 1893) When, on certiorari from the verdict of a jury in a justice's court, the case is remanded for a new trial, the new trial must be had by another jury, and not by the presiding justice; and if plaintiff refuses to try by jury, and the justice for that reason dismisses the case, no appeal on the judgment of dismissal lies to the superior court.—Hall v. Carlisle, 92 Ga. 318, 18 S. E. 293.

[h] (Ga. 1895) A judge of the superior court disapproving a verdict rendered in the magistrate's court, and sustaining a certiorari, should, when questions of fact are involved, send the case back to the magistrate's court for retrial.—Tison v. Savannah, F. & W. Ry. Co., 97 Ga. 366, 24 S. E. 456.

[i] (N. J. 1880) In the case of a mistrial of a cause below, the supreme court, on certiorari thereto, may, under Revision, p. 557, § 103, order a rehearing before the justice.—Drake v. Berry, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 60.

[j] (N. J. 1894) Where the return of a justice to a writ of certiorari shows the error of entering the judgment in figures instead of in words, the record may be remitted to the justice for amendment of the judgment.—Meirs v. Bussom, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 383, 30 Atl. 433.

[jj] (N. Y. 1841) A new trial will not be granted on certiorari because a justice of the peace unintentionally omitted to read certain parts of the testimony of a witness, which the jury had returned to hear; neither party calling the justice's attention to the omission.—Whitney v. Crim, 1 Hill, 61.

[k] (Pa. 1831) When a justice's judgment is removed into the common pleas, and the plaintiff becomes nonsuit in that court, the record must be remitted to the justice. Sci. fa. will not lie to have execution on the judgment before the justice.—Welker v. Welker, 3 Pen. & W. 21.

[l] (Tenn. 1890) On the compromise of a justice's judgment, the debtor agreed to pay the fee of plaintiff's attorney. The amount tendered for the fee having been declined, the debtor filed his petition in the circuit court for writs of certiorari and supersedeas, alleging that such tender and the previous payment of the balance due under the agreement operated as a full satisfaction of the judgment, and prayed that the execution might be quashed. The court overruled the motion to quash and remanded the cause without allowing any credit whatever on the execution. Held error, for, whether the payments made were in law an extinguishment of the entire judgment or only a satisfaction pro tanto, the debtor should have had relief in one review or the other; and that under Mill. & V. Code, §§ 3852–3854, the circuit court should have rendered such final judgment as the case required, without remanding the cause.—Thompson v. McMillan, 89 Tenn. (5 Pickle) 110, 14 S. W. 439.

§ 827. —— Procedendo.

[a] (U. S. 1857) Where a case has been improperly taken out of the hands of a magistrate through a writ of certiorari, on a motion presented to the circuit court for the District of Columbia by way of a writ of error coram nobis, such court will issue a writ of procedendo.—Blagden v. Broadrup, Fed. Cas. No. 18,238 [2 Hayw. & H. 278].

[b] (Ala. 1854) On trial of the right of property under the statute before a justice, where the case is removed by certiorari to the circuit court, and the property is condemned, the proper practice is to certify the judgment, with a procedendo, to the justice, who thereupon will issue execution.—Derrett v. Alexander, 25 Ala. 265.

[c] (Miss. 1835) The writ of procedendo lies only where there has been a neglect or refusal of justice by an inferior court.—McGilvry v. Jackson, 5 Miss. (4 How.) 245.

[d] (N. Y. 1805) Where, after joinder in error, it is discovered that the justice has neglected to make a return to the certiorari, and has quitted the state, the court will give leave to take out execution in the court below.—Ranney v. Crary, 3 Caines, 126.

[e] (Tenn. 1837) A petition for a certiorari and supersedeas stated that a judgment had been rendered by a justice of the peace against the petitioner, which judgment he had paid, notwithstanding which an execution had issued on it, and prayed that the execution might be quashed. The process was granted, and the fact of payment tried in the circuit court, and found against the petitioner. Held, that a procedendo must in such case be awarded, and that the circuit court could not give judgment for the debt, and the interest allowed by statute, against the petitioner and his security.—Kincaid v. Morris, 18 Tenn. (10 Yerg.) 252.

[f] (Tenn. 1859) In a case where a petition for certiorari and supersedeas was dismissed by the circuit court, the bond having been executed before the Code took effect, a procedendo was held to have been properly awarded to the justice, in lieu of the judgment directed in Code, § 3138, to be given by the circuit court.—Mallett v. Hutchinson, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 558.

§ 828. Costs.

[a] (Ala. 1826) The 15 per cent. damages given by the statute on the affirmance of justices' judgments that are carried up by appeal cannot be awarded on a certiorari bond.—Hudnall v. McCarta, Minor, 402.

[b] (Mich. 1862) On certiorari to a justice, the circuit court has no power to render judgment for plaintiff in error for the costs of the suit before the justice.—Berry v. Lowe, 10 Mich. 9.

[c] (Minn. 1858) In a case taken up from a justice by certiorari, the district court may render judgment for the fine, and for the costs of both courts, against the defendant and his sureties in the recognizance.—Baker v. United States, 1 Minn. 207 (Gil. 181).

[d] (Tenn. 1859) Where, on dismissing a petition for a writ of supersedeas, the higher court, under Code, §§ 3124, 3138, renders judgment for the amount of the justice's judgment, with interest, against the principal and sureties on the certiorari bond, it is proper also to include costs of suit.—Lownes v. Hunter, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 343.

[e] (Tex. 1857) The statute providing for the removal of actions before justices by certiorari to the district court (Hart. Dig. art. 1753), and that, "if the judgment be affirmed, 10 per cent. damages shall be added," means that damages are to be so added in case the amount found due shall be the same as that adjudged by the justice, or more.—Lane v. Brander, 19 Tex. 160.

[f] (Tex. 1857) If the judgment in the upper court on certiorari is for a sum equal to the previous judgment, less an intermediate payment by the defendant, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the debt, costs, and 10 per cent. damages.—Norton v. Walker, 19 Tex. 192.

LIABILITIES ON BONDS, § 829.
REVIEW OF DECISION, § 830.

§ 829. Liabilities on bonds.

Liability of sureties on certiorari bond for costs and damages, see ante, § 828.

[a] (Ala. 1854) Where a claim suit is removed by certiorari from a justice court, and the property is found subject to the attachment, it is erroneous to render judgment for the assessed value of the property against the sureties on the certiorari bond.—Derrett v. Alexander, 25 Ala. 265.

[b] (Del. 1840) It is not a breach of the recognizance on certiorari that the party abandons his certiorari before it is served on the justice and allowed by him, as it does not become a supersedeas till then.—Biggs v. Rickarts, 3 Har. 283.

[c] (Del. 1851) After the affirmance of a justice's judgment on certiorari, a scire facias may issue in this court on the recognizance to prosecute.—Register v. Layman, 5 Har. 349.

[d] (Pa. 1889) A recognizor on a certiorari to the judgment of a justice of the peace against husband and wife is liable on his recognizance, although the judgment is reversed as to the wife.—Erdman v. Hartman, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 609.

[e] (Tenn. 1858) On dismissal of a petition for a writ of certiorari to a justice, the proper judgment is against the defendant and his surety on the prosecution bond to the amount of the justice's judgment, with interest and costs.—Allen v. Wood, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 438.

[f] (Tenn. 1859) Where a bond has been given, with surety, to prosecute a certiorari and supersedeas with effect, and the party has, on notice from the surety under Code, § 3665, given counter security, this does not exonerate the prior surety from any legal liability which had been fixed on him before his discharge.—Kincaid v. Sharp, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 151.

[g] (Tenn. 1867) On a rendition of a judgment by a justice of the peace, a prosecution bond was given to remove the cause by certiorari to the circuit court, by which sureties agreed to pay "all such costs and damages as may be awarded by the court on failure to prosecute." It concluded: "We agree to pay the costs aforesaid, on failure aforesaid." Held, that the sureties were only liable for costs on the failure of their principal, and not for the amount of the recovery.—Maxwell v. Salts, 44 Tenn. (4 Cold.) 233.

Review of decisions of intermediate court on certiorari, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 2, c. 866, § 154; cc. 1378, 1379, § 812.

[a] (Ga. 1875) Where there are facts and circumstances from which it may be inferred that a partnership, after the accession of a new partner, with his knowledge or consent, acted upon and continued a prior course of dealing with certain customers growing out of an agreement that the separate debt of one of the partners due to such customers might be set off against purchases made by them from the firm, and a new trial has been granted on the hearing of a certiorari to a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace against such customers, the supreme court will not interfere with the discretion of the judge allowing the same, unless gross error appears.—Born v. Dallas, 54 Ga. 499.

[b] (Ga. 1886) The omission of the court, on sustaining a certiorari to a justice and remanding for new trial, to give instructions to the justice, is not reversible error.—Holliday v. Poole, 77 Ga. 159.

[c] (Ga. 1886) Where the return of the justice to a writ of certiorari shows conflicting evidence, and is sufficient to uphold the finding, and the superior court approves it, the supreme court will not interfere.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Cole, 78 Ga. 353.

[d] (Ill. 1859) A writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace is distinct and separate from an appeal; and, if the writ of certiorari should be dismissed in the circuit court, an appeal or writ of error should be prosecuted to reform that judgment.—Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 337.

[e] (Mich. 1871) A writ of certiorari, whereupon a judgment of a justice of the peace has been brought to the circuit court, is an essential part of the record, without which the supreme court will not take jurisdiction of the cause.—Zeller v. Harris, 23 Mich. 286.

[f] (Mich. 1874) Where a justice's judgment has been reversed in the circuit on certiorari, and the cause is brought up on error, if any of the objections taken to the proceedings before the justice were such as to warrant the judgment of reversal, the plaintiff in error cannot prevail.—Bigalow v. Barre, 30 Mich. 1.

[g] (N. C. 1877) No appeal lies from the refusal of the court below to grant a motion to dismiss a petition for a writ of recordari. An appeal lies from the order of the court either granting or refusing to grant such writ.—Perry v. Whitaker, 77 N. C. 102.

[h] (Pa. 1811) The jurisdiction of the common pleas, on certiorari, under the landlord and tenant law, is not final. It may be removed to the supreme court by writ of error.—Clark v. Yeat, 4 Bin. 185.

[i] (Pa. 1891) Act April 15, 1835 (Purd. Dig. p. 807, pl. 4), gives justices of the peace jurisdiction of all actions of debt for a penalty for breach of an ordinance, in the same manner, and subject to the same right of appeal, as debts under $100. Act March 20, 1810 (Purd. Dig. p. 708, pl. 30), provides that on certiorari to a justice of the peace in any civil suit or action the judgment of the court of common pleas shall be final, and no writ of error shall issue thereon. Held, that an action by a borough to recover a penalty prescribed by ordinance for a breach thereof is a civil action within the meaning of the act of 1810, and no appeal lies from a judgment of the court of common pleas reversing a judgment of a justice of the peace therein.—Borough of Mahanoy City v. Wadlinger, 142 Pa. 308, 21 Atl. 823, 28 Wkly. Notes Cas. 132.

[j] (Tex. 1874) No appeal from the district court lies in a case removed by certiorari from a justice's court.—Rice v. Rasbury, 41 Tex. 421.

[k] (W. Va. 1894) Defendant on a writ of certiorari may set up in the court of appeals that the writ was not taken within 10 days after judgment, though the record does not show a motion to quash or dismiss.—Morgan v. Ohio River R. Co., 39 W. Va. 17, 19 S. E. 588.

[l] (W. Va. 1894) Where a writ of certiorari is not applied for within 10 days, but within 90 days, after the judgment, under Code, c. 50, § 174, and the record shows no excuse for not sooner applying, no presumption arises from the mere grant of the writ that good excuse was shown.—Morgan v. Ohio River R. Co., 39 W. Va. 17, 19 S. E. 588.

[a] (U. S. 1880) Where one inveigled foreign-born children into the United States to serve him as street musicians for his profit, to the injury of their morals and subject to his control, they must be regarded as rendering him involuntary service, within the contemplation of Act June 23, 1874 (18 Stat. 251), for the protection of persons of foreign birth against being inveigled and kidnapped in confinement or to any involuntary service.—United States v. Ancarola, 1 Fed. 676, 17 Blatchf. 423.

[b] (U. S. 1880) Where arrangements were made in Italy to transfer children to defendant in this country to earn money for him as street musicians in a city, they being of an age able to do so, and influence was brought to bear upon them by their parents and uncles and by statements of defendant to induce them to consent, this is enticement and inveiglement.—United States v. Ancarola, 1 Fed. 676, 17 Blatchf. 423.

[c] (Cal. 1882) An information charged defendant and another with the crime of attempting to take and entice away two children under the age of 12 years, with intent to detain and conceal them from a person having their lawful custody; and it was objected that the information charged two offenses, and that there was no such crime as an attempt to take and entice away a child. Held, that the objections were not well taken.—People v. Milne, 60 Cal. 71.

[d] (Ga. 1884) Under Code, § 4368, to be guilty of fraudulently enticing and kidnapping a child against the will of its parents, it is not necessary that the person enticing have notice of the parents' unwillingness to part with the child.—Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191.

[e] (N. H. 1837) An indictment at common law for assault and false imprisonment, and for kidnapping, may be sustained.—State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550.

[f] (N. H. 1837) Where a person who had in his custody a mulatto boy of 6 years of age, who had been placed with him by the overseers of the poor of a town, sold him to a person residing in another state, with the intention that he should be carried into that state and held in servitude until he arrived at the age of 21 years, and he carried the boy into another town, and delivered him there, held, that he was guilty of kidnapping.—State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550.

[g] (N. Y. 1862) Procuring the intoxication of a sailor with the design of getting him on shipboard without his consent, and taking him on board in that condition, is kidnapping, under our statute (2 Rev. St. p. 664, § 28); and it is immaterial whether the offender did the acts, or any of them, in person, or caused them to be done.—Hadden v. People, 25 N. Y. 373.

[h] (N. Y. 1888) Where defendant induced a female voluntarily to take passage for a foreign port, under pretense that he had there obtained employment for her, but intending to place her in a house of prostitution, and it appears that she would not have consented to go but for such false pretense, he is guilty of the offense defined in 3 Rev. St. pt. 4, tit. 2, § 28 (Pen. Code, § 211), which provides that one who, without lawful authority, inveigles another, with intent to cause him to be sent out of the state against his will, shall, upon conviction, be punished, etc.—People v. De Leon, 109 N. Y. 226, 16 N. E. 46, 4 Am. St. Rep. 444, affirming (1888) 47 Hun, 308.

[i] (N. Y. 1890) Inducing a person to go to a foreign country by the promise of work at a specified compensation, when the person making the promise knows that such compensation will not be obtained, is not an inveiglement, within Pen. Code, § 211, providing that any person is guilty of kidnapping who willfully "seizes, confines, inveigles, or kidnaps another, with intent to cause him, without authority of law, to be secretly confined or imprisoned within this state, or to be sent out of the state, or to be sold as a slave, or in any way held to service, or kept or detained against his will."—People v. Fitzpatrick, 10 N. Y. Supp. 629, 57 Hun, 459, 8 N. Y. Cr. R. 81.

[j] (Ohio, 1885) Under Rev. St. § 6825, making the "intent unlawfully to detain or conceal" an essential element of the crime of child stealing, the intent must accompany the act of taking the child; and it is error to instruct that if the child was taken away from the mother without her consent, and against her will, such taking was unlawful, and any intention thereafter completed the crime.—Mayo v. State, 43 Ohio St. 567, 3 N. E. 712.

[k] (Va. 1829) 1 Rev. Code, c. 111, p. 427, § 28, prohibiting the "stealing" of any free person, is not invalid on the ground that there can be no larceny of persons.—Davenport v. Commonwealth, 1 Leigh, 588.

[l] (Wyo. 1896) A father, taking his child, who was of tender years, out of the state, with its consent and with the consent of its mother, who had been awarded the custody of the child in divorce proceedings, in order that the child may not be present in a criminal trial in which it had been subpœnaed as a witness, is not guilty of kidnapping.—John v. State, 6 Wyo. 203, 44 Pac. 51.

§ 2. Threats, fraud, and violence.

[a] (U. S. 1890) To inveigle another by false and fraudulent representations, or otherwise, with intent that such other should be thereby induced to leave the state of his apparent free will, is equivalent to causing him to be sent out of the state against his will, contrary to Comp. Laws Or. 1887, § 1746.—In re Kelly, 46 Fed. 653.

[b] (Ill. 1858) In an indictment for kidnapping, it is not necessary, to constitute the crime, that physical force or violence should be used on the person kidnapped. Falsely exciting her fears by threats, fraud, etc., amounting substantially to a coercion of the will, is sufficient.—Moody v. People, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 315.

[c] (Ind. 1894) On a prosecution for kidnapping one S., it appeared that defendant, while intoxicated, met S. in the evening, and, after giving her several drinks of whisky, made arrangements with her to meet him after the other members of her family had retired, for the purpose of taking a drive. They drove to a city, where they had sexual intercourse, and remained together for five days, when, at her request, he brought her back. Held not to constitute kidnapping, under Rev. St. 1881, § 1915, which provides that whoever kidnaps, or forcibly or fraudulently carries off or decoys from his place of residence, or arrests or imprisons, any person, with the intention of having such person carried away from his place of residence, is guilty of kidnapping, as the case is destitute of any element of fraud.—Eberling v. State, 136 Ind. 117, 35 N. E. 1023.

[d] (N. H. 1837) In order to constitute the offense of kidnapping a child under 10 years of age, it is not necessary that actual force and violence should be used.—State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550.

§ 3. Consent of parents and guardians.

[a] (Ga. 1884) Where a child having a parent or guardian is kidnapped, the offense may be complete, under Code, § 4368, if the parent or guardian does not consent, without regard to the consent of the child.—Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191.

§ 4. Age and consent of person taken.

[a] (U. S. 1880) The service of defendant by children as street musicians, for his profit, to the injury of their morals, subject to his control, is not the rendering of a voluntary service; they being incapable of exercising will or choice affirmatively on the subject.—United States v. Ancarola, 1 Fed. 676, 17 Blatchf. 423.

[b] (Ga. 1885) Under Code, § 4368, relating to kidnapping, one who persuades a child of prosecutor under 18 years of age to leave her parents, and, without their knowledge or consent, go with him to another county, is guilty of kidnapping, though the child consent.—Thweatt v. State, 74 Ga. 821.

[c] (Ga. 1892) Code, § 4368, provides that, if one shall forcibly, maliciously, or fraudulently carry away a child under 18 from its parents, without her or their consent, he shall be indicted for kidnapping. Held that, a female 14 years old being competent to contract marriage, and the validity of her marriage not depending on the consent of her parents, it is not kidnapping for a man to take her away from her parents, against their will, for the purpose of marrying her, which marriage is actually consummated; the girl herself freely consenting, and no force or fraud being used against her or her parents.—Cochran v. State, 91 Ga. 763, 18 S. E. 16.

[d] (Mass. 1862) A child of the age of nine years is incapable of giving a valid assent to a forcible transfer of him by a stranger from the legal custody of his father to the custody of his mother, who had no right thereto; and evidence of such assent is incompetent in defense to an indictment for an assault and battery upon him in making such transfer.—Commonwealth v. Nickerson, 87 Mass. (5 Allen) 518.

[e] (N. H. 1860) Where, upon a decree of divorce, the custody of a child of four years of age was assigned to the mother, and the father afterwards with a strong hand seized the child, then in the mother's custody, and against her will carried it out of the state, it was held that this constituted the statute offense of unlawfully and forcibly carrying the child out of the state, and that it was not necessary to prove expressly that it was done without its consent, inasmuch as in law the child was incapable of consent.—State v. Farrar, 41 N. H. 53.

[f] (Tex. 1890) To constitute the offense of "kidnapping," under Pen. Code, art. 513, the detention must be against the consent of the person detained, and the fact that the statute provides that, if the person kidnapped is a female under 15 years of age, force is not an essential element of the offense, does not dispense with her nonconsent.—Costillo v. State, 29 Tex. App. 127, 14 S. W. 1011; Olivarez v. Same (App.) 14 S. W. 1012.

[g] (Va. 1829) A defendant, stealing a child eight years old, is guilty under 1 Rev. Code, c. 111, p. 427, § 28, though the stealing was done with the child's consent.—Davenport v. Commonwealth, 1 Leigh, 588.

§ 5. Unlawful arrest.

[a] (Cal. 1889) Where it appears that defendant was a deputy sheriff and a deputy United States marshal, and a warrant of arrest was duly issued, directed generally to any sheriff, marshal, etc., authorizing and commanding the arrest of a certain person, and such warrant was put in defendant's hands for execution, his arrest of the person named therein in a county other than that for which he was deputy sheriff, and that in which the warrant was issued, will not justify his commitment on the charge of kidnapping.—Ex parte Sternes, 82 Cal. 245, 23 Pac. 38; Id., 23 Pac. 40; Ex parte Lee, Id.

[b] (Pa. 1884) A citizen of New York, having committed a crime in Pennsylvania, in order to avoid arrest, fled to New York. By artifice and fraud he was brought back into Pennsylvania and arrested, and, after hearing upon habeas corpus, was remanded by the court of common pleas to the sheriff. Thereupon the governor of New York requested the governor of Pennsylvania to cause the release of the prisoner, and the governor of Pennsylvania, in a communication to the court of common pleas, disclaiming executive power to order such discharge, requested the court to cause the release of the prisoner. Held, that the prisoner should be released.—Norton's Case, 15 Wkly. Notes Cas. 395, following In re Dows (1851) 18 Pa. (6 Harris) 37.

§ 6. Place to which transported.

[a] (Cal. 1860) Act April 16, 1850, denouncing the crime of kidnapping, provides that the abduction must be accompanied with a removal into another county, state, or territory, or a design to remove the kidnapped person beyond the limits of the state. Act April 19, 1856, amendatory of and supplementary to the act of 1850, contains no provision as to the removal of the kidnapped person; the intent to detain and conceal being the gist of the offense. Held, that the act of 1850 was not repealed by the act of 1856.—People v. Chu Quong, 15 Cal. 332.

[aa] (Cal. 1890) Pen. Code, § 207, declares that "every person who forcibly steals, takes, or arrests any person in this state and carries him into another country, state, or county, or who forcibly takes or arrests any person with a design to take him out of this state, without," etc., is guilty of kidnapping. The evidence on which a commitment was issued showed that defendant and others went on board a schooner moored at a wharf in Los Angeles county, and by force took two sailors and carried them to the island of Santa Catalina, 20 miles from the mainland, and detained them there. Held, that defendant was not guilty of kidnapping, as the island is in Los Angeles county, and hence there was no design to remove the sailors from the state.—Ex parte Keil, 85 Cal. 309, 24 Pac. 742; Ex parte Miller, 24 Pac. 743; Ex parte Erewaldsen, Id.; Ex parte Anderson, Id.

[b] (La. 1886) An indictment for the forcible seizure and carrying of a person from one part of the state to another is supported by proof that the carrying was from one part of the city to another.—State v. Buckarow, 38 La. Ann. 316.

[c] (Me. 1833) To incur the penalty under St. 1821, c. 22, § 2, for carrying or transporting "out of this state any person under the age of 21 years, to parts beyond sea, without the consent of his parent, master, or guardian" the carrying must be to some foreign port or place, and not merely from one state to another.—Campbell v. Rankins, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 103.

[d] (N. H. 1837) Transportation to a foreign country is not necessary to the completion of the offense.—State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550.

[e] (N. Y. 1862) Where the intent and expectation is that the seaman kidnapped will be carried out of this state, the offense is complete, although the ship on which he is taken be not in fact destined to leave the state.—Hadden v. People, 25 N. Y. 373.

§ 7. Confinement under claim of insanity.

[a, b] (N. Y. 1893) Where two reputable physicians, appointed by the county judge at the father's instance, certify to the daughter's insanity, and their certificate is duly approved by the county judge, as prescribed by Laws 1874, c. 446, relating to the confinement of the insane, the father, who took no steps towards her restraint and removal to the hospital before such certificate and approval were placed in his hands, cannot be convicted on proof that the daughter was in fact sane, since, under the above section of the Penal Code, the confinement must be "without authority of law."—People v. Camp, 66 Hun, 531, 21 N. Y. Supp. 741.

[c] (N. Y. 1893) Pen. Code, § 211, provides that one who willfully seizes, confines, inveigles, or kidnaps another, with intent to cause him, without authority of law, to be secretly confined or imprisoned within the state, is guilty of kidnapping. Held, that a father who honestly believed in the insanity of his daughter when he instituted proceedings culminating in her confinement in the state hospital for the insane is not guilty of the crime of kidnapping, though he did not exercise that care and discretion which an ordinarily prudent man would exercise under the circumstances, since malice and criminal intent are necessarily lacking.—People v. Camp, 66 Hun, 531, 21 N. Y. Supp. 741.

[d] (N. Y. 1893) The taking of the daughter to the hospital and her detention there being public, the father's conviction of the crime of kidnapping cannot be sustained under the above section, which requires the confinement to be done "secretly."—People v. Camp, 66 Hun, 531, 21 N. Y. Supp. 741, affirmed (1893) 139 N. Y. 87, 34 N. E. 755.

[e] (N. Y. 1893) Pen. Code, § 211, provides that one who willfully seizes, confines, inveigles, or kidnaps another, with intent to cause him, without authority of law, to be secretly confined or imprisoned within the state, is guilty of kidnapping. Held, that defendant was not guilty of such offense, where he procured an adjudication that the person alleged to have been kidnapped was insane, and, without using force, publicly conveyed her to a lunatic asylum, though she was not insane at the time.—People v. Camp, 139 N. Y. 87, 34 N. E. 755, affirming (1893) 66 Hun, 531, 21 N. Y. Supp. 741.

§ 8. Defenses.

[a] (Cal. 1891) On indictment for kidnapping, where it is shown that defendant, a constable, had a warrant authorizing him to arrest prosecutrix and bring her before a justice of the peace, and that he did not take her before the justice, but left her at a certain house, it is no defense that the warrant under which defendant acted was regular on its face, since his arresting prosecutrix, his taking her into another county, and his leaving her at the house instead of taking her before the justice, as directed by his warrant, constitute a continuous act, which was not within his authority under the warrant.—People v. Fick, 89 Cal. 144, 26 Pac. 759.

[b] (N. Y. 1888) Pen. Code, § 312, providing that the consent of the person kidnapped shall be no defense unless the person kidnapped was over 12 years of age, and the consent was not obtained by threats or duress, does not apply to cases of inveiglement.—People v. De Leon, 47 Hun, 308, affirmed 109 N. Y. 226, 16 N. E. 46.

§ 9. Persons liable.

[a] (Ga. 1894) A father cannot be charged with kidnapping his minor child, where he has not parted with his parental right to its custody.—Hunt v. Hunt, 94 Ga. 257, 21 S. E. 515.

[b] (Kan. 1889) A person who assists a mother in leaving her husband and taking away the infant child of herself and husband is not guilty of kidnapping, since she is as much entitled to the custody of the child as its father.—State v. Angel, 42 Kan. 216, 21 Pac. 1075.

[c] (Mass. 1846) Rev. St. c. 125, § 20, providing for the punishment of those who without lawful authority forcibly confine any person in this state, or carry any person out of the state against his will, applies to soldiers of another state, acting under martial law and under the military authorities of that state in time of civil war and insurrection there, who come into this state and seize and carry away the insurgent citizens of that state who are found here.—Commonwealth v. Blodgett, 53 Mass. (12 Metc.) 56.

[d] (Pa. 1876) One who harbors and conceals a child kidnapped by others is guilty as principal.—Commonwealth v. Westervelt, 11 Phila. 461, 32 Leg. Int. 346.

[e] (Pa. 1889) Act March 31, 1860 (P. L. p. 406, § 94; Purd. Dig. [Ed. 1883] p. 433), which declares that if any person shall maliciously, either by force or fraud, carry away any child with intent to deprive its parent or parents of the possession of the child, or with intent to steal any article of apparel on the person of the child, he shall be punished, etc., provided that no person claiming to be the father of an illegitimate child, or to have a right of possession of the child, shall be liable, has no application to the father of a legitimate child, who, having quarreled with his wife, has taken the child away from her.—Burns v. Commonwealth, 129 Pa. 138, 18 Atl. 756.

Sufficiency of indictment in language of statute, see "Indictment and Information," vol. 27, c. 601, § 294 [g].

Variance in name of prosecutrix, see "Names."

[a] (Cal. 1891) Though an indictment for kidnapping alleges that defendant forcibly took the prosecutrix "for the purpose and with the intent to feloniously employ her for the unlawful use" of certain named persons, the intent is surplusage, and need not be proved.—People v. Fick, 89 Cal. 144, 26 Pac. 759.

[b] (Ga. 1884) An indictment under Code, § 4368, for kidnapping a minor child, is not insufficient because it fails to state from what place and to what place the child was taken by defendant, and by what means it was enticed away.—Dowda v. State, 74 Ga. 12.

[c] (Ind. 1889) Rev. St. § 1915, provides that whoever kidnaps or forcibly or fraudulently carries off from his place of residence, or arrests or imprisons, any person, with intent to have such person carried away from his residence, unless in pursuance of the laws of Indiana or the United States, is guilty of kidnapping. Held, that a count in an indictment charging that defendant did carry away forcibly from his residence one K., and that the arrest was not in pursuance of the laws of Indiana or the United States, but not alleging that it was with the intent of having such person carried away from his residence, is bad.—State v. Sutton, 116 Ind. 527, 19 N. E. 602.

[d] (Ind. 1889) A second count, charging, in addition, that the felonious and fraudulent arrest was made with the felonious and fraudulent intention of carrying K. from his residence, is good.—State v. Sutton, 116 Ind. 527, 19 N. E. 602.

[e] (Ind. 1890) Rev. St. § 1915, provides that "whoever kidnaps, or forcibly or fraudulently carries off or decoys from his place of residence, or arrests or imprisons any person with the intention of having such person carried away from his place of residence, unless it be in pursuance of the laws of this state or of the United States, is guilty of kidnapping," etc. Held, that an indictment for kidnapping which fails to aver that the acts charged were not done in pursuance of the laws of the state or the United States charges no offense.—State v. Kimmerling, 124 Ind. 382, 24 N. E. 722.

[f] (Ind. 1890) An averment that defendant kidnapped the person named, "not then and there having first established a claim upon her * * * according to the laws of the state of Indiana or the laws of the United States," does not meet the exception of the statute.—State v. Kimmerling, 124 Ind. 382, 24 N. E. 722.

[g] (Ind. 1890) Under Rev. St. Ind. 1881, § 1915, which declares that "whoever kidnaps, or forcibly or fraudulently carries off, or decoys, from his place of residence, or imprisons or arrests, any person, with the intention of having such person carried away from his place of residence, * * * shall be guilty of kidnapping," an information which charges in one count a forcible carrying away of a certain female from her place of residence, and in another a fraudulent decoying of said female from her place of residence, need not charge a felonious intention in the commission of the acts alleged.—Boes v. State, 125 Ind. 205, 25 N. E. 218.

[h] (La. 1886) An indictment under Rev. St. § 805, prohibiting the forcible seizure and carrying of a person from one part of the state to another, or the imprisonment or secreting of any person, need not charge that he or she was forcibly imprisoned.—State v. Backarow, 38 La. Ann. 316.

[i] (N. C. 1885) An indictment for abduction, under Code, § 973, need not set forth the means by which the abduction was effected, nor that it was without the father's consent, nor negative the proviso as to defendant's not being a nearer blood relation to the child than the one from whom it was abducted.—State v. George, 93 N. C. 567.

[j] (Pa. 1892) Under Act March 31, 1860, § 94 (P. L. 405), inflicting a penalty for taking or decoying away a child under 10 years of age with the intent to deprive its parent or parents, or other person having the lawful charge of such child, of its possession, or with intent to steal any article of value about its person, an indictment omitting these essential ingredients of the offense is fatally defective.—Commonwealth v. Myers (Pa.) 23 Atl. 164, 29 Wkly. Notes Cas. 497.

[k] (Tex. 1848) At common law the offense of kidnapping is treated as an aggravated species of false imprisonment, and all the ingredients in the definition of the latter are necessarily comprehended in the former. The requisites in an indictment would seem to be an averment of an assault and the carrying away or transporting of the party injured from his own country into another, unlawfully and against his will.—Click v. State, 3 Tex. 282.

[l] (Wis. 1885) The intent mentioned in Rev. St. 1878, § 4387, defining the offense of kidnapping, is intended to qualify each preceding clause of the section to which it can be made applicable; and such intent must be alleged, or merely the common-law offense of false imprisonment is charged.—Smith v. State, 63 Wis. 453, 23 N. W. 879.

§ 11. Evidence.

[a] (Cal. 1891) On indictment for kidnapping, where it is shown that defendant, a constable, had a warrant authorizing him to arrest prosecutrix and bring her before a justice of the peace, and that he did not take her before the justice, but left her at a certain house, evidence is admissible that this was a house of ill fame; such evidence tending to show a motive for his failure to take her before the justice.—People v. Fick, 89 Cal. 144, 26 Pac. 759.

[b] (Ga. 1884) In a criminal prosecution for kidnapping a child, any precautions taken by the parent to prevent the decoying away of the child, and the fact that he was unwilling that it be taken away, may be put in evidence.—Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191.

[c] (Ga. 1884) In a prosecution for kidnapping a child, defendant cannot show that the parent treated his family harshly.—Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191.

[d] (Mass. 1862) Proof of entering a schoolroom and forcibly seizing a child of nine years old, placed there by the direction of his father, who had the legal custody of him, and carrying him away, without any previous knowledge on his part of the purpose in so doing, is sufficient to sustain an indictment for assault and battery upon and false imprisonment of the child, under Gen. St. c. 160, § 30, without proof that the defendants knew that they were violating the father's rights, and although the acts were done under the direction of the child's mother, and he, as soon as he knew the purpose of the seizure was to take him to her, was pleased and desirous to have the purpose carried out.—Commonwealth v. Nickerson, 87 Mass. (5 Allen) 518.

[e] (Mass. 1862) In an indictment under Gen. St. c. 160, § 30, for an assault and battery upon a child, and forcibly seizing him, with intent to send him and cause him to be sent out of the commonwealth, the intent must be proved as charged; and it is not enough simply to prove that the defendants, being employed by one who had such intent, of which they were ignorant, made the seizure, intending to put the child into the absolute control of their employer, to do as he pleased with him.—Commonwealth v. Nickerson, 87 Mass. (5 Allen) 518.

[f] (N. Y. 1848) The arrest, detention, and concealment, without legal process, of a colored person, on pretense that he is a fugitive slave, established a strong prima facie case against the party committing such violence of felonious intent under the statute against kidnapping, and justify the conclusion that an illegal disposition is designed to be made of him.—People v. Wolven, 7 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 89.

§ 12. Trial and review.

[a] (Ala. 1850) Under Clay's Dig. p. 415, § 20, making it a felony to forcibly take a child under 12 years of age, with intent to detain it from its parent, the intent is a fact to be inferred from the evidence, and falls within the exclusive province of the jury.—Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 587.

[b] (Cal. 1891) Evidence that at the same time defendant arrested prosecutrix, and, instead of taking her before a magistrate, took her to a house of ill fame and left her, another constable arrested her husband on a charge of which he was innocent, and confined him in jail for two days, is immaterial, and its admission is harmless error.—People v. Fick, 89 Cal. 144, 26 Pac. 759.

[c] (Ill. 1858) In determining the guilt or innocence of the accused, the jury should take into consideration the condition of the person kidnapped, her age, education, and state of mind at the time, the object of the defendants in removing her from the state, and all the circumstances surrounding the case, as detailed in the evidence.—Moody v. People, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 315.

[d] (Mich. 1889) Under How. Ann. St. § 9099, providing punishment for forcibly or secretly confining another against his will, or kidnapping or carrying another out of the state against his will, on a trial of the parents and grandfather of a child for taking her away from her foster parents, it is error to charge, inter alia, that defendants had no right to seek to estrange the child from her foster parents, and that if they induced her to consent to go away by allurements or promises as to the kind of clothes or home she would have, intending to destroy her love for her foster parents, or if they did anything of that kind, then they would be guilty; there being no evidence whatever of any such promises, or of any fraud, or duress, or flattery, or anything to warrant such a reference in the charge.—People v. Congdon, 77 Mich. 351, 43 N. W. 986.

[e] (N. H. 1837) An indictment alleged that the defendant kidnapped and sold a mulatto boy, etc., and detained him in imprisonment, in order to transport him to a place where slavery was tolerated, and to hold him in slavery during life. The verdict found that the defendant was guilty of selling the boy, with an expectation of his going into slavery. Held, that the verdict was imperfect, and a venire facias de novo was awarded.—State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550.

§ 13. Civil Liability.

See "Abduction," vol. 1, cc. 394–396, §§ 26–29.
Exemplary damages, see "Damages," vol. 15, c. 1899, § 195 [j].
Remedy in admiralty, see "Admiralty," vol. 1, c. 1696, § 217; cc. 1701, 1702, § 223 [c–e, g].

[a] (Mass. 1861) An action to recover damages for abduction is not maintained by proof that the defendant, by misrepresentations, threats of a criminal prosecution, and payment of money for expenses, but without using or threatening force, induced the plaintiff to go to another place and remain in concealment for a time.—Payson v. Macomber, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 69.

[b] (Mass. 1863) The defendant in an action for harboring and secreting the minor daughter of another, and persuading her to remain absent from her father's family and service without his consent, has no ground of exception to an instruction to the jury that if the plaintiff, by his cruel, abusive and improper treatment of her, had justly alienated her affections from him to such an extent that she would not continue to live with him, he had forfeited all claim to her service and society, and could not recover damages, although the defendant requested an instruction upon this point, which was not qualified by the insertion of the word "justly"; nor has he any ground of exception to a refusal to instruct the jury that, if the plaintiff's treatment of his daughter contributed in any degree to produce the wrong complained of, the action could not be maintained.—Stowe v. Heywood, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 118.

[c] (Mass. 1864) Defendant, in an action of tort for the abduction of plaintiff's minor child, cannot show that he acted in ignorance of plaintiff's rights, or that the child had expressed a desire to be removed, where plaintiff disavowed any claim against defendant on the ground of malice.—Rice v. Nickerson, 91 Mass. (9 Allen) 478, 85 Am. Dec. 777.

[d] (Mass. 1864) The defendant, in an action by a father for illegally abducting his minor child, is liable for reasonable and proper expenses incurred by the father in an attempt to regain possession of the child, although the defendant only obeyed the orders of a person who illegally assumed to direct the removal of the child from the father's custody.—Rice v. Nickerson, 91 Mass. (9 Allen) 478, 85 Am. Dec. 777.

[e] (N. Y. 1872) Where the agent of a children's aid society, being deceived by the false representations of a boy, 18 years of age, who gave a false name and pretended that he was an orphan, etc., sent the boy to a home in the West, held, that an action by the boy's parents to compel his return and for damages could not be sustained. The fact that the defendant had neglected to make inquiries as to the truth of the boy's story was not material in such an action, as the inquiries would have been fruitless; and the enticement to travel and find new homes which is held out by a children's aid society, being necessary to the conduct of the society and sanctioned by the statute incorporating it, is not an unlawful enticement or solicitation.—Nash v. Douglass, 12 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 187.

[f] (Pa. 1838) One in loco parentis may sue in case per quod servitium, etc., for the abduction of his daughter's illegitimate child.—Moritz v. Garnhart, 7 Watts, 302, 32 Am. Dec. 762.

[g] (S. C. 1809) The plaintiff had a verdict for damages, in an action of trespass vi et armis, for the "abduction" of his daughter, who was under 21 years of age; and on motion in arrest of judgment the action was held to be maintainable, although it was not laid in the declaration that thereby the plaintiff lost the services of his child, and although there was no evidence of a forcible taking.—Kirkpatrick v. Lockhart, 2 Brev. 276.
